Khalezov: He is so spiteful, our dear Mr Zeman... Have you ever seen such a spiteful personality? Well, Mr Zeman. See my answer above. Since I have never been really interested in architecture it is forgivable for me not to know some exact architectural details about the actual WTC construction. However, I could easily compensate for my lack of knowledge in that field by knowing, instead, what „ground zero“ used to mean before September the 11... And in any case, what do you think about these perimeter columns that are shown at the picture below? Do you think that they are really much different from the core ones in the sense that an empty aluminum plane could have penetrated them as easily as it was shown to us on TV?

Zeman: [here Mr Zeman comments on my claim that no plane could penetrate the WTC steel perimeter columns in its entirety, including even the very ends of its wings and the very top of its tail] Actually relatively long end sections of the planes wings didn't penetrated the outer wall - as one can find out if measuring exactly the dimensions of the holes at the numerous photographs.

Khalezov: Oh, really? Well done, Mr Zeman. Then let me compare these two photographs. One of them, Picture 1, shows the well-known hole made by a „plane“ in the concrete wall of the Pentagon (with a plane of a corresponding size superimposed by 9/11 researchers). And another one, Picture 2, – is the well-known photograph that shows the well-known hole made by a „plane“ in the steel perimeter of the North Tower of the WTC. Picture 3 (an “original” 9/11 picture, by the way, shows the “plane” which is about to penetrate the WTC) is optional – so that you can have a clue about the plane’s actual wingspan. So here we go:

A special note for the shills: yes, dear shills and debunkers, I know that the Picture 2 shows a hole in the North Tower, while the plane in the Picture 3 is about to penetrate the steel perimeter of the South Tower that is a different building. Don't try to catch me with this "contradiction". The "plane" is provided here not for the exact match, but merely for scaling purposes – so that the readers could imagine how the wing span of the Boeing 767 was and whether or not the ends of its wings were included in the hole made by the similar "plane" in the North Tower. I guess it is very clear that the very ends of the wings and of the tail were included. Do you want to argue with this? And, by the way, since we already began to talk about the Pentagon here, why wouldn't our dear Mr Zeman explain to us, stupid folks, why wouldn't the Boeing 757 (that supposedly hit the Pentagon) leave a similar hole in the Pentagon's wall? That was concrete, rather than steel-made? Would this mean that the Boeing 767 (a pair of which had supposedly hit the Twin Towers) has much greater penetration capability compared to the Boeing 757 (that supposedly hit the Pentagon)? When it comes to myself it appears to me that both – the Boeing 757 and the Boeing 767 – are made from similar materials which our Mr Zeman calls "duraluminium, steel and titanium"... Isn't it, dear Mr Zeman? And if so, why is there so big a difference in the shape of the holes made by similarly made aircraft in the cases of the Pentagon and of the World Trade Center?

Zeman: silence in response...

Zeman: [here Mr Zeman can not stop and he continues to comment on my claims that the planes could not penetrate such thick steel perimeter columns in its entirety. He continues my quotation, that in turn was a description of a photograph that showed steel core columns found on ground zero (make sure to notice the word "core" that I especially made bold here: Above: profiles of remaining core WTC columns found at "Ground Zero"; their comparative thickness could be easily estimated; actually they feature walls 2.5 inch thick; such thick columns made of steel constituted both – the cores and the entire perimeters of the Twin Towers. In this official sketch you can see how these thick core structures have been positioned in reality – not only in the Towers' middles, as believed by many people, but also on their entire perimeters. Does anyone seriously believe that the aluminum-made "Boeing" could really break in its entirety (including its tail, wings and large turbofan engines) through the above-shown steel perimeter columns?]

There actually are not shown the perimeter columns, but the core columns from below 30th floor of the WTC. See: <http://wtcmodel.wikidot.com/nist-core-column-data> . And t again shows how Khalezov is playing with the reader...

Khalezov: And after all he did with his various tricks, intentional miscalculations and outright cheating, Mr Zeman would dare to claim that I am "playing with the reader"... Well. I think it is Mr Zeman who is playing with my reader, not me. And especially if you read my own words in the above quotation of mine (words Above: in bold and all that follow) – I said that these are CORE columns, not the perimeter ones. Mr Zeman here resorts to the outright misquoting of me... And it is not even a simple cheap trick he used before. This time it is a crime called „perjury“.

Zeman: [here Mr Zeman continues to claim that my comparison of planes with armor-piercing shells is not fair] Why? Because the whole "penetration through steel" concept is a nonsense. The plane didn't penetrated the steel in terms of making a hole in it -like an armor penetrator, it just dislodged the columns from their position and broke it aside and apart by the tremendous kinetic energy of the impacting plane weighting many tens of tonnes and striking the outer wall with relatively small cross-section at very high speed of 500-586 mph. No penetration through steel was needed for the plane to get in the building, because actually the outer columns were on their connections just bolted by 4 bolts and so could be easily dislodged if the force would be perpendicular to the column – which it clearly almost exactly was.

Here again we see Khalezov is unable to understand quite simple physics and instead feeds the reader with a BS about penetrators.[BS is short for "bullshit" in case you don't understand Mr Zeman's scientific terminology]

Khalezov: Here Mr Zeman who represents the "planers' wing" of the "nano-thermitters' camp", at last, agrees with me and so he begins to contradict himself ... Before he claimed that providing the „kinetic energy“ was sufficient for the plane to allegedly „penetrate“ steel. He even compared that with water. But now he discarded, at last, his own ridiculous notion and conceded that the planes did not actually „penetrate“ the WTC steel, but merely „dislodged“ the columns... (maybe in his own former example with water that could allegedly “penetrate” steel he too meant that the water would rather “dislodge” it?) Well. But it will not work with me anyway. It is too cheap. And too late. Sorry, Mr Zeman. The planes could neither penetrate steel, nor “dislodge” anything in the sense you imply. If you take a closer look at the actual hole made by the “plane” in the North Tower (there are quite high-quality pictures showing details available on the Internet), for example, this one:

you will see that what Mr Zeman claims is a lie. The holes were made in such a manner as to imply that the “planes” allegedly „cut through” the steel. And it is especially notable because the „plane’s” orientation was not strictly horizontal at the impact. While the disposition of the joint-points of the steel beams claimed by Mr Zeman was apparently symmetrical and if you draw a horizontal line connecting these joint points such a line would be parallel to the Earth's surface. I hope no one would dare to argue against this? However, the hole made by the „plane“ is NOT parallel to the Earth's surface. Because the „plane“ that flew into a Tower has its right wing above its left wing and the hole made by it in the WTC perimeter was matching. And, by the way, what would Mr Zeman and those behind him say in regard to the case of the Pentagon? If in the case of the Pentagon there was the concrete wall (6 capital walls, actually, not just one)? What was there to „dislodge“ – in the Pentagon's case? Or they want to say that while the Boeing 757 „penetrated“ the Pentagon in a sense of „penetrating“, the Boeing 767 preferred not to penetrate the Twin Tower in a sense of the „penetration“ but rather „dislodged“ something in a sense of „dislodging“? And do you believe this pseudo-scientific method of explaining things? Besides, on the picture above it is clearly visible that the actual thickness of the walls of the H-shaped perimeter columns is much, much thicker than the 0.25” alleged by Mr Zeman above. You can use for scaling reasons the fact that a human figure is visible on the photo, so you can roughly estimate how thick were the actual walls of the perimeter columns (those that lack the outer aluminum coating).

Zeman: Here again we see Khalezov is unable to understand quite simple physics and instead feeds the reader with a BS about penetrators. [BS is short for “bullshit” – it is just in case someone has difficulties in understanding Mr Zeman's scientific terminology]

Khalezov: Unlike some, I have some basic understanding of physics. Don't worry. And I have even more understanding about elementary logic and common sense. For example – my common sense says to me that if it were true what you claim, then the „planes“ speed would at least decrease while breaking into the WTC bodies. Wouldn't it? Another point my common sense suggests to me is that the planes (I mean large passenger airliners) can not fly at their full cruise speed at an altitude of ~300 meters above the sea level. I hope Mr Zeman would not argue with this point? Because any aviation specialist will confirm this obvious fact: passenger airliners can only achieve their full cruise speed at their cruise altitude, that is, if my memory doesn't fail me, somewhere between 8 and 10 kilometers above sea level. And yet another point suggested by my common sense is this: the impacts of real planes would not cause any black-frames at the very moment of impact in various video equipment filming such an event. Now, would they?

Zeman: [here Mr Zeman wants to say something regarding my former explanation of why the holes made by the “planes” had the ridiculously “stepped” shape instead of repeating the silhouette of a plane exactly; as you remember, I explained it by the fact that the WTC perimeters contained not only steel perimeter columns, but also aluminum coating outside and this coating was arranged in short vertical segments, which were eventually blown out by the hollow-shaped charges intended to imitate the “planes” holes; here Mr Zeman continues my quotation: It could be clearly observed that perimeter bars were all cut by a few ridiculously straight lines, moreover parallel to each other, so a shape of the alleged “impact hole” does not match a silhouette of a plane even remotely.] The ends are actually the places where the columns were bolted together

Khalezov: Oh, really? But I thought they were aluminum coating that was distinctly different from the actual inner steel columns (as clearly visible on the above photo showing the details of such a hole)...

Zeman: [continues to insert his comments into my former explanation: Actually, explanation to this ridiculous phenomenon] It is not ridiculous, but a natural result of shearing and dislodging the columns from their connections [is quite simple. As you can see from this picture the Twin's perimeters were made not from steel columns alone. There was also additional aluminum coating fixed on outer sides of the steel perimeter columns. And, unlike the steel columns (which were more or less solid from bedrock up to the Tower's tops), the aluminum coating was arranged in much shorter vertical segments. If you look at the above picture's detail carefully you will notice certain horizontal lines parallel to each other repeating on equal intervals – that are slightly visible on undamaged parts of the Tower's façade. These lines that are nothing else than joining points of the aluminum coating pieces show what was an actual length of each piece of the aluminum coating. The problem of 9/11 perpetrators was that they needed to position their hollow-shaped charges of conventional explosives (that were designed to imitate the impact holes – the planes' silhouettes) not inside the Tower, but OUTSIDE the Tower – because their explosive energy should have been directed inwards to make the entire set up look plausible. If they would position these charges inside the Tower, then the entire section of the Tower that supposed to be “hit by a plane” would not fell inside the Tower as it suppose to be. It would be blown out of the Tower and, instead of the “landing gear” and the “plane's engine” simpletons would find on a sidewalk pieces of the Tower's own perimeters. Apparently, it was not an option. To attach the cutting charges outside the Twin Tower's facades was not an option either – they would be visible by people. Therefore, the tricky 9/11 perpetrators placed their hollow-shaped] Blah, blah, blah... Unbelievable ineptitude

Khalezov: it seems that here Mr Zeman has completely exhausted his argumentation and resorted to multiple repeating of such scientific terms as “blah” thinking that his own aptitude would be believable...

Zeman: [continues to insert his comments into my former explanation: The explosive energy of the charges was directed inwards – in order to precisely cut the steel bars in right spots. And, indeed, it worked – as you could see the inner steel bars (that appear to be of “rusty” color as opposed to the bluish-shining aluminum coating) were indeed cut in the right spots to imitate the complete planes silhouettes precisely. Moreover, cut ends of these steel bars additionally bend inwards – exactly as supposed to be. However, the 9/11 perpetrators miscalculated something. Even though most of the explosive energy of the hollow-shaped charges was directed inwards – towards the steel, some relatively minor part of the explosive energy was directed backwards – creating a kind of recoil effect. This managed to blow out the aluminum coating. However, instead of actually “cutting” this aluminum coating, the unruly explosion simply tore out the entire pieces of aluminum at their full lengths and threw them back to the sidewalks. Therefore, depending of vertical disposition of the hollow-shaped charges in some parts it was single vertical length of aluminum bars torn out, in some other places – double vertical length, in some other parts – triple vertical length, etc. Therefore these “impact holes” look so ridiculously stupid – being a kind of a “stepped” shape, instead of a perfect silhouette of a “plane” as supposed to be if there were only steel bars alone. , on this photo a woman could be clearly seen, desperately holding to one of the sticking up columns; she was recognized as Mrs. Edna Cintron, who was still hoping to get rescued at that last moment] In the photograph is also clearly visible the large columns are bent inward

Khalezov: here Mr Zeman wisely preferred not to explain to his gullible listeners why poor Mrs. Edna Cintron managed not to be affected by the so-called “nano-thermite” (capable of melting steel into fluffy microscopic dust) at the last moments of her life; he would rather prefer to draw their precious attentions to some other fact – about the columns bent inwards, thinking that by citing this obvious fact he would be able to “debunk” my explanation and to undermine my credibility. Poor chap... Yes, Mr Zeman, if you would only bother to read my own explanation (on which you are commenting) you will notice that this is exactly what I say – the inner steel columns (as opposed to the outer aluminum coating) are indeed bent inwards – because the hollow-shaped charges were directed inwards. So what did Mr Zeman say new to us here? He merely repeated what I have said.

Zeman: [my former explanation, interrupted by comments of Mr Zeman, nonetheless continues here as follows; unfortunately, she was killed in the North Tower collapse; but in that last moment of her life she demonstrated to the world (by her mere presence at that supposedly “hot” spot where steel columns supposed “to melt”) that the US Government was cheating the people.] wise silence on the part of Mr Zeman - he apparently does not want to comment on this; otherwise he would be obliged to explain the difference – if kerosene was not able to affect Mrs Edna Cintron in the last moments of her life, would it also mean that this poor woman was also capable of withstanding the unprecedented alleged effects of the so-called “nano-thermite”?

Zeman: [here Mr Zeman comments on my phrase from the NEXUS magazine's article which is: The laws of physics have never taken holiday on 9/11. But the common sense of gullible people watching the TV appeared to have taken that holiday instead... Nonetheless, the old English dictionaries printed before September 11 that define the peculiar nuclear term “ground zero” could serve as the best medicine to overcome the 9/11 illusion and to regain your common sense... Along with the old English dictionaries for the same reason could also be used these photographs showing molten rock after the underground cavities left by the nuclear explosions under the three buildings of the World Trade Center eventually cooled down and were, at last, cleared of all remaining radioactive materials; - and then the actual photo follows – exactly the same photo by Joe Woolhead used above in this Chapter that shows unprecedented deep underground cavity and clear signs of former molten rock on the cavity's walls] This is really ridiculous. The photos in fact show intact rock in the depth much more shallower than the Khalezov's “77 meters below the ground”, so the photos in fact directly disprove all his claims about the nuclear explosions under the WTC.

Khalezov: Do you comprehend what Mr Zeman is trying to say here? When it comes to me I did not quite comprehend his actual thoughts. I only understood that in his usual spiteful manner he “authoritatively” states that I am a liar and an impostor and nothing of what I claim could be true by default. Well. Perhaps Mr Zeman forgot to wear his glasses when looking at the disputed photo that shows clear signs of molten rock... And preferred “not to notice” how deep the cavity is. And preferred “not to notice” that the shape of the cavity exactly corresponds to the disputed “egged form with the sharper end facing upwards”... And when Mr Zeman states that the photo allegedly “disproves” my claims about the nuclear explosion under the WTC, what, then, does this photo prove, in an opinion of Mr Zeman? Does this photo prove that the WTC was demolished by so-called “nano-thermite”? Or does it rather prove that it was demolished by “kerosene”? Or maybe – by “laser-beams” from space? What will be your answer, dear Mr Zeman?

Zeman: silence in response...

Zeman: Among other interesting informations there were links to claims of certain Dimitri Khalezov, who besides believing there were no planes at WTC was confusing Uranium-235 with Depleted Uranium and at the same time asserting he's former soviet nuclear intelligence directorate man.

Zeman (one more similar claim in a letter to his colleagues that was eventually forwarded to me): Estulin prominently propagates Dimitri Khalezov on his web pages. Khalezov is known as the guy who (besides he self-promotes himself as being formerly in the Russian nuclear forces) confuses Uranium-235 with DU (see e.g. page 34 of his book Third Truth 911 ver 2.0)

Khalezov: Yes, Mr Zeman, you are right – indeed there was a mistyping on the page 34 of the free edition of the book ver.2.0. It should have been “238” when it comes to the usage of Uranium in armor-piercing shells, of course, not “235”, as it was typed there. It doesn’t mean, of course, that a man who is capable of explaining to you the physical properties of underground nuclear explosions and also designs of nuclear weapons, along with seismic signatures of nuclear explosions, and their radiation effects, indeed “confuses Uranium-235 with so-called DU” as you put it above. However, it definitely means that the level of your spite is indeed absolute, and your hysterical criticism does not contain even a grain of constructivism that should befit any true scientist, not to mention that it should befit any normal male who is traditionally called a “gentleman”. But just to make the things clear: this unfortunate mistyping on the page 34 in the ver.2.0 mentioned by you had been noticed a long time ago – almost immediately after the version 2.0 was published on July 15, 2010. This mistyping was corrected immediately in every new version of the free book that followed the version 2.0. However, it was too late to remove the actual ver.2.0 – because it has been immediately included into a DVD-image along with videos and it became also the most widely available version of the free book of mine in torrent downloads. I had no choice than to leave it “as is”, despite noticing this particular mistyping on the page 34. However, you can be certain, dear Mr Zeman, that you were not the first who noticed it – it was noticed long before you. Moreover, I have to disappoint you even more – by the time Daniel Estulin had gotten your hysterical letter with this particular comment, he had in his hands a version of my book where that mistyping had already been corrected. Thus Daniel had a chance to immediately check if your claims about my alleged “inability to distinguish between Uranium-235 and Uranium-238” were true or not. And in doing so Daniel had a good chance to duly appreciate the actual level of your unprecedented spite.

The end of the argument between the “famous physicist” Yan Zeman and the infamous impostor Dimitri Khalezov. I have no right to claim that I am a winner of this argument, because no judge has been appointed, so I leave the final judgment to you, dear reader. But I would like to repeat myself one more time, quoting what I have said in the foreword to the full edition of my book 2 years ago:

“As I have already warned above, the most of “professional” 9/11 conspiracy theorists, those who routinely spend their precious time chatting in various Internet forums and otherwise parasitizing on the 9/11 topic, without any doubt will be greatly annoyed by this book. They will be annoyed not because my claims in this book are inconsistent, but because of the diametrically opposite reason: because my claims are logical and consistent thus leaving no room for them to continue to parasitize on the 9/11 topic which they got already used to do during the last 8 years.

Try to understand them – they got used to chew on various conspiracy theories in regard to 9/11 and they routinely spend many hours per day sticking in various Internet forums and even sitting physically in various “truth-finding” 9/11-related societies. This became their life-style. It does not matter that during their 8-year long “research” they managed not to even come close to the truth. This apparent failure does not bother them – despite the fact those 8 years were enough to complete two additional university courses per each of them. What matters is the very process – to chew on conspiracy theories has become a self-purpose. Therefore when someone attempts to steal their favorite chews from their mouths by replacing it with a healthy, delicious, but one-time only meal, it understandably causes their displeasure and their displeasure could be in fact very intense. It is easy to understand them. Just try to imagine yourself in their shoes – imagine that you got used to spend all your time chatting with other 9/11 conspiracy theorists for the last 7-8 years, and now, at last, you have gotten the point and therefore beginning from tomorrow there is nothing else to discuss on 9/11-related Internet forums... The 9/11 battle is clearly over, the case is closed, and you have to come back to your normal life – and so to spend your future efforts on renovating your house, for example, or to devote some time to your kids, at last. Can you imagine your indignation in such a case?

Don’t be surprised, when this book will be attacked from every side. The government agents and shills will attack it with one (understandable one) reason in mind, while “professional” 9/11 conspiracy theorists (the absolute majority of whom are government shills too) will lash out at it with either the same reason in mind, or merely out of jealousy, or simply because of their annoyance that someone dared to steal their beloved toys and so to deprive them from their favorite pastimes...

But who cares about their problems? Dogs bark, caravan moves on. These folks had their sick fun for more than 8 years and that should be enough. Even they, themselves knew very well that they could not continue their cheating forever and one day their efforts would be flushed down the lavatory when the truth will be revealed. Now the time has come. The truth is available and you have a chance to get acquainted with it and judge it yourself. Just read the book and you will have your own idea.”

Sedition: how post-9/11 definitions of "ground zero" managed to appear in "pre-9/11" dictionaries.

I think before we move further, I have to draw your attention to the fact that after 9/11, the definition of "ground zero" in English dictionaries became so incriminating that the desperate U.S. Government had no choice other than to "broaden" the definition of this seditious term. In nearly all post-9/11 dictionaries "ground zero" had from 2 to 5 different meanings, in addition to its former sole meaning – "a place where a nuclear explosion took place". However, the U.S. Government went even further in its desperation. It ordered to concoct fake, backdated dictionaries with a "broadened" definition of "ground zero" and insert these dictionaries in all libraries around the world (including, of course, the U.S. Library of Congress – the legal depository for all existing books²⁷⁹). There are not so many of such fake backdated dictionaries, but even those few that are available could easily dupe the innocent observer who is not cynical enough.

I have no chance to debunk all those fakes here, because I wrote a book entirely devoted to this topic, and this book is something like 800 pages. It will be available as a separate item. Here I will only list those dictionaries that were backdated – those with "broadened" definitions of "ground zero" that were printed in 2004-2005, but appeared to be "pre-9/11" ones, plus, an exemplary debunking of one them – just to demonstrate that any backdated fakery, however professional it might be, could be exposed.

Please, make sure to remember, that there was no dictionary before 9/11 (and, actually, up to the year 2003) that could have any "broadened" non-nuclear definition of the expression "ground zero". Do not allow yourself to be duped if you encounter some dictionary that was supposedly printed "in 1993" and even "looks and feels old" that contains post-9/11 definition of "ground zero". Do not allow yourself to be duped even when you "accidentally" encounter some innocently looking "pre-9/11" fiction book or a magazine article that uses "ground zero" in a "non-nuclear", supposedly "colloquial" sense. If you encounter such a thing, do not believe your eyes – this is cheating. It is professional, high-class cheating, but it is cheating. In my new book on the dictionaries I managed to successfully debunk all known fakes of such kind and explain the phenomenon in detail in regard to any and every such fakery.

I honestly warn you that this chapter is quite boring, and it does not add much to the 9/11 picture, but rather "completes" it in a certain way. So you might wish to skip this chapter and I could not blame you for this. However, I suggest that you read at least a few first pages, and, as a matter of MUST – its last page.

Here is the "black list" of such fake backdated supposedly "pre-9/11" dictionaries that were printed in reality in 2003-2004 (all listed below were successfully proven being backdated; various methods of proving were used, but at the end, all of them were debunked):

The American Heritage Dictionary of the English Language. Fourth Edition; published allegedly on "September 14, 2000";

The New Oxford Dictionary of English First edition – the alleged "1998" edition;

The New Oxford American Dictionary – the alleged "September 2001" edition;

The Canadian Oxford dictionary – the alleged "1998" edition and its "later" editions;

Two-volume edition of "The New Shorter Oxford English Dictionary" "4th Edition"; allegedly of "1993";

Illustrated OXFORD DICTIONARY – the alleged "1998" edition;

The Random House Dictionary of the English Language. Second Edition. Unabridged – the alleged "1987" edition and all its "later" editions, some also on CD-ROMs intended for Windows 3.1 and for DOS;

Webster's Encyclopedic Unabridged Dictionary of the English Language, New Deluxe Edition 2001 – the alleged "August 1, 2001" edition;

Webster's Encyclopedic Unabridged Dictionary of the English Language – the alleged "1996" edition

(there are both – fake and genuine versions of this dictionary both dated by “1996”);

Random House Webster's College Dictionary – the alleged “1990/1991” edition and all Random House College editions (including also so-called “Concise College”) backdated by later dates;

Webster's Universal College Dictionary – the alleged “1997” and the alleged “July 2001” editions;

Harper's Dictionary of Contemporary Usage Second Edition – the alleged “1985” edition;

Webster's Dictionary of English Usage a Merriam-Webster by E. Ward Gilman – published allegedly “in 1989” by Merriam-Webster (there are both – fake and genuine versions of this dictionary both dated by “1989”, and only fake versions dated by “1993” and by “1994”);

Webster's Third New International Dictionary of the English Language Unabridged a Merriam-Webster of alleged “1993” edition and all its “later” editions, also on CD-ROMs;

Merriam-Webster's Collegiate Dictionary Tenth Edition – the alleged “1993” edition, and editions of alleged “1994”, “1995”, “1997”, “1998”, “1999”, “2000”, “2001”, “2002”, some on CD-ROMs, also some included with backdated sets of Encyclopedia Britannica on CDs or DVDs – all of them fake;

Webster's New World Dictionary of American Language, Third College Edition – the alleged “updated” edition published allegedly in “1988”, and several of its “reprints” backdated by “1992”, “1994”, “1996”;

Webster's New World College Dictionary Fourth Edition – the alleged “1999” edition, also alleged “2000”, alleged “2001”, and alleged “2002” editions, also on CD-ROMs;

Collier's Dictionary of alleged “1994”; two-volume edition printed allegedly in “1994”;

Microsoft Encarta College Dictionary – the alleged “July 2001” edition;

Encarta Concise Dictionary Student Edition – Microsoft Encarta concise version – the alleged “August 2001” edition;

The Penguin Slang Thesaurus (Penguin Reference) by Jonathon Green – the alleged “1999” edition;

The Dictionary of Contemporary Slang by Jonathon Green – the alleged “1984” edition;

The Cassell's Dictionary of Slang by Jonathon Green – the alleged “1998” edition and its “2000” re-print;

Barron's Dictionary of Business Terms By Jack P. Friedman, Ph.D., CPA; – the alleged “1987” edition, and all “later” editions.

I repeat myself once again – all those dictionaries mentioned above attempted to dupe the gullible by suggesting that “ground zero” allegedly had “broadened” definition prior to 9/11. However, either of the above fakeries was successfully debunked in one way or another in my new book (yet to be published) titled: D. A. Khalezov. “9/11thology: “ground zero” term and manipulations with it in post-9/11 dictionaries of the English language.”

There were not too many of such backdated dictionaries, fortunately. Almost all companies that produced dictionaries switched to the “broadened” definition of “ground zero” only in 2004-2005, the earliest – in 2003, and not too many companies went as far as to concoct backdated fakeries akin to those listed above. As of the beginning of 2003, all genuine English dictionaries, including the biggest unabridged ones, defined ground zero only as “a hypocenter of a nuclear explosion or its projection onto the earth's surface”.

It is important to remember that if some spot was officially (or even “unofficially”) called “ground zero” prior to the year 2003, it was nothing else than “the place where a nuclear explosion took place” – because this will be one of the important indications that we will routinely use in the next chapter.

However, not to jump right to the next chapter without adducing any proof, I will place here a couple of examples of how I managed to debunk such backdated fakeries as listed above. This is basically a bigger part of one of chapters from my second book on the dictionaries. It might be quite boring, indeed, so you could jump over it if you can't bear it, but as you probably know, proving something is always boring... Read a few first pages, and the last couple of pages of it, at least, if you can not bear the rest. However, I strongly suggest you to read it all – it is the very important part of the 9/11 inquiry, and it is interesting enough to be read in full.

*"He who controls the present, controls the past.
He who controls the past, controls the future..."*

- George Orwell, "Nineteen Eighty-Four".

Everyone who read Orwell's immortal book "Nineteen Eighty-Four" attentively enough remembers that his main character – a certain Winston Smith who lived in a country of the "victorious Ingsoc" – had a strange job: he used to produce backdated, "politically correct" old newspapers and to replace genuine old "politically incorrect" newspapers in libraries with the modified "old" ones.

When I was young and read this frightening book for the first time, I thought that this particular suggestion was merely grotesque (since in the then Soviet Union things were not as grim as implied by Orwell who blamed the "distortion of the past" on the Reds, while the Reds advocated studying of history in reality, believing that it is particularly the knowledge of history that defines the human as opposed to the slave). However, when I grew to be an adult and began to analyze the reality on my own, I understood that it was not "grotesque" at all. It was the very freemasonic modus operandi. First, they control your language, through your language they control your consciousness. They control the present information and through it they control your memory. And, in order to avoid someone diving into a library in a search for original meanings of words or for original news, the Freemasons work very hard to produce backdated copies of books, magazines and newspapers. That is how, for example, the Freemasons managed to convince you that the Reds, who were the most ardent religious fanatics craving to go to Paradise and who were headed by former seminarian Uncle Joe (who had the status of not less than "Moses of the 20th century" and the title of not less than "The Witness of Jehovah God"), were allegedly "ungodly atheists". That is how the Freemasons managed to convince you that their own lackey – Saddam Hussein, the fiercest enemy of Islam, who used the U.S.-supplied chemical weapons in his fight against the Islamic Revolution in neighboring Iran, was the most ruthless secular dictator wearing a neck-tie, could have anything to do with the so-called militant "Islamism".

Besides falsifying the old sources in archives and libraries, the Freemasons work actively on modifying your current language by inserting into it new words or sometimes old words that were ascribed in an entirely new sense. They do it because they know very well that the language is a "fuel for thought" (you actually THINK IN A CERTAIN LANGUAGE, formulating your thoughts in WORDING) and by modifying the language you think in, the Freemasons could directly influence and, moreover, manipulate your mentality. Do not believe? Here is just a little example. If at the end of the 19th century a notion stating that "a bitch that gave birth to a child out of wedlock should be punished" would be accepted without any hesitation, by men and women alike, at the end of the 20th century a notion stating that "a single mother should be treated with contempt" (lest "punished") would be strongly challenged by everyone – women and men alike. Why? Merely because the Freemasons replaced the former word "bitch" (used for thinking by the men of the 19th century) by a newly coined Newspeak neologism "singlemother" that is being used for thinking by the men of the 20th century. In the same manner the Freemasons managed to re-name former brave freedom fighters (highly respectable figures) into contemptible and supposedly "cowardly" "terrorists" (in addition to creating artificial so-called "terrorists" – both really existing and imaginary). The current attempt of the Freemasons to ascribe a negative connotation to the word "truther" (they indeed try very hard now to equalize the word "truther" to the word "terrorist") is just the most recent example.

"...society rests ultimately on the belief that Big Brother is omnipotent and that the Party is infallible. But since in reality Big Brother is not omnipotent and the party is not infallible, there is need for an unwearying, moment-to-moment flexibility in the treatment of facts. The keyword here is "blackwhite". Like so many Newspeak words, this word has two mutually contradictory meanings. Applied to an opponent, it means the habit of impudently claiming that black is white, in contradiction of the plain facts. Applied to a Party member, it means a loyal willingness to say that black is white when Party discipline demands this. But it means also the ability to believe that black is white, and more, to know that black is white, and to forget that one has ever believed the contrary. This demands a continuous alteration of the past, made possible by the system of thought which really embraces all the rest, and which is known in Newspeak as "doublethink". The alteration of the past is necessary for two reasons, one of which is subsidiary and, so to speak, precautionary..."

The above excerpt is from the "Nineteen Eighty-Four", in case you forgot it.

Please, remember the above statement, particularly, about the loyal ability to believe that the black is white, if the "Party discipline demands so". Just remember that the "Party discipline" often demands so from the members of the Freemasonic sect that pushes for the infamous "New World Order" and for the so-called "Globalization". I hope you understand why all U.S. officials so readily agreed that aluminum planes could allegedly penetrate steel thick as tank's armor and that kerosene could "melt" steel into fluffy microscopic dust...

The above were just a couple of examples of how the Freemasons control not only your memory, but also your actual consciousness and mentality by simply manipulating the language you use for your thinking and for formulating your concepts of good and evil (I mean apart from the abovementioned "loyal willingness" to say and to believe that black is white when the "Party discipline" demands so).

Here you will encounter just another attempt of the language manipulation – very similar to that described by Orwell in his immortal "Nineteen Eighty-Four" – an attempt to play with the past in order to control the future by influencing your language. It was done by the same freemasonic methodic, using their recipe, and apparently with a direct assistance rendered by the Freemasonic sect, but it seems that the actual job was done way more rudely by desperate spin-doctors of the desperate U.S. Government (what I mean to say is that the Freemasons are very careful and they usually work much "cleaner" than it was demonstrated in this particular case, which betrays either a degradation of the Freemasonic operatives, or, most probably, the fact that the job was performed only under a supervision of the Freemasons, but not by their own cadres).

This research of mine (I mean why I am actually writing the current chapter on manipulations with "ground zero" in the backdated "pre-9/11" dictionaries) started with a funny story.

One female admirer of mine (and that of my 9/11 research about the WTC nuclear demolition) went to a big library in her home city to check how the post-9/11 dictionaries were modified compared to the pre-9/11 ones in regard to "ground zero" definitions.

Apparently, she was diligent enough to check all available dictionaries one-by-one and she discovered one of the corner-stones in this 9/11-related linguistic cheating – the alleged "1987" "second edition" of the unabridged English dictionary by Random House, which defined "ground zero" as allegedly having more than one meaning. She made three photos of important parts of that discovery of hers and sent them to me along with her statement that the disputed dictionary looked "old enough" and "worn out enough" to be indeed of the "1987" edition and that by no means could it be backdated.

Moreover, it seemed from her reaction that she completely lost faith in my claims concerning the WTC nuclear demolition, because my claims about the post-9/11 manipulations with "ground zero" definition were supposedly "proven to be untrue" by her discovery. She sent these three pictures to me:

ground-to-ground (ground/'tə ground/), adj., adv. surface-to-surface. [1915–20]

ground' track', the path on the earth's surface below an aircraft, missile, rocket, or spacecraft. [1975–80]

ground' wa'ter, the water beneath the surface of the ground, consisting largely of surface water that has seeped down: the source of water in springs and wells. Also, ground' wa'ter. [1885–90] ground' wave', a radio wave that propagates on or near the earth's surface and is affected by the ground and the troposphere. [1925–30]

ground' ways', Shipbuilding. hardwood timbers laid end-to-end to form an inclined track on which the keel of a ship can slide during launching. [1705–15]

ground' wire', Elect. a lead from an electric apparatus to the earth or to a ground connection. [1890–95]

ground-wood (ground/'wʊd/), n. Papermaking. wood that has been ground for making into pulp. [1915–20; GROUND² + WOOD¹] ground/wood pulp', wood pulp consisting of ground-wood that has not been cooked or chemically treated, used for making newsprint and other poorer grades of paper. Also called mechanical pulp. Cf. chemical pulp.

ground-work (ground/'wɜrk/), n. foundation or basis: He laid the groundwork for an international conference. [1540–50; GROUND¹ + WORK]

ground' ze'ro, 1. the point on the surface of the earth or water directly below, directly above, or at which an atomic or hydrogen bomb explodes. 2. Informal. the very beginning or most elementary level: Some of the students are starting from ground zero. [1945–50] group (grʊp), n. 1. any collection or assemblage of persons or things; cluster; aggregation: a group of protesters; a remarkable group of paintings. 2. a number of persons or things ranged or considered together as being

It did not surprise me, actually, but it showed me how serious the cheating really was and how dangerous its impact on the innocent people could be.

In fact, unless you are a cynical person who understands the mechanics of the Freemasonic cheating with backdated fake books in general, you would indeed swallow this bait. Meaning that if you go to a big “reputed” library (without realizing that the libraries are the very first thing that must be controlled by those who aim at controlling your mind) and you find there a decently bound book, which looks and feels “old enough”, moreover bearing “old” library registration stamps – you would unlikely realize that you are being cheated. It would unlikely occur to you that to make a book look “old” would only require a couple of folks to continuously leaf through the book for a few hours in an intentionally “uncareful” manner and with dirty hands. So, those unscrupulous folks who produce these types of backdated concoctions know your psychology very well. That is why they know how to convince you by these types of tricks.

However, you should not be so gullible. If you want to understand either the possibility- or the actual mechanism of this type of cheating – all you have to do is to refresh your memory by reading the immortal book – the “Nineteen Eighty-Four” by George Orwell.

In fact, it is because of the incident described above I realized that to debunk all those backdated alleged “pre-9/11” dictionaries with the “broadened” post-9/11 definition of “ground zero” was my primary duty, which lead to the creation of the work you are reading now. Now you will see that I will indeed debunk it.

The Random House Unabridged Dictionary of the English Language (as well as its clone – “The Webster’s Encyclopedic Unabridged Dictionary of the English Language” by Gramercy Books, which, in turn, is a part of the Random House) is one of the biggest English dictionaries ever published and it is the main rival of unabridged dictionaries by the Merriam-Webster. It comes in a form of a huge, very thick single book, comparable in size with four-five volumes of a typical Encyclopedia Britannica. Of course, as we could sincerely expect, the so-called “good guys” could not avoid modifying “ground zero” definition in this famous and important unabridged dictionary, and indeed, we will not be cheated in our expectations.

The most important task is exposing of the most dangerous fakery of the lackeys of the U.S. Government – the alleged “1987” print of the alleged “second edition” of Random House Unabridged, because this particular dictionary is the corner stone of the entire fakery attempt (since the backdated Random House “College” and “Concise College” dictionaries are all based on this main fakery).

Luckily, now I have all needed dictionaries in my own possession (I was obliged to buy quite a few of them), so I could disprove this most dangerous fakery in the most successful manner.

The story is a bit complicated, but I will try to present it to you in the easiest possible way.

What shall be known about the Random House Unabridged Dictionary, is that it was first published in 1966 with Jess Stein, being its Editor in Chief, and Laurence Urdang, being its Managing Editor, and that it was the only competitor of the original Webster's Unabridged Dictionary that is being published by the Merriam-Webster company (Merriam brothers continued publishing the original work of Noah Webster).

Since 1966, the Random House Unabridged Dictionary was regularly updated and its new editions were published every year or two. In addition to the "Unabridged" version of it, Random House also published its abridged, a/k/a "College" editions – an equivalent of the "Collegiate" dictionaries by the Merriam-Webster. Updated versions of the "College" dictionary were published every three-four years usually.

Known editions of this famous dictionary titled "The Random House Dictionary of the English language, The Unabridged Edition" were published in 1966, 1967, 1969, 1970, 1971, 1973, 1979, 1981, and, for the last time – in 1983. Since 1983, this dictionary was no longer published under the abovementioned title, but was published, instead, under the title "Webster's Encyclopedic Unabridged Dictionary of the English Language". These were published five times – in 1989, in 1994 (two different editions), and in 1996 (two different editions) by "Gramercy Books" ("Gramercy Books" was a division of Random House Value Publishing, Inc.).

I am not quite sure why the change in the title took place, but it could be either because of the death of its Chief Editor (in fact, the exact time of the death of Jess Stein remains a mystery – no article exists on the Internet on this otherwise famous person, not even a Wikipedia article, which is highly suspicious, to say the least), with the copyright inherited by Random House, or it could have been because of the marketing advantages – the name of Noah Webster used in the title of the dictionary impresses the gullible and so increases the chances of such a product being sold.

When it comes to the "College" versions of the Random House dictionary, known editions of them were published in 1968, 1972, 1973, 1975, 1976, 1979, 1980, 1982, 1984, 1988, and, for the last time – in 1989. Of course, the "College" editions were based on the corresponding "Unabridged" editions.

In addition to the above, contents of "The Random House Dictionary of the English language, The Unabridged Edition" were used in one more dictionary – known as "Webster's New Universal Unabridged Dictionary" published in 1992 by "Barnes & Noble Books".

Above we talked about the genuine editions.

After "ground zero" designation awarded to the spot of the nuclear demolition of the World Trade Center was inadvertently leaked out to the plebs, desperate spin-doctors seeking to provide a "linguistic alibi" to the U.S. Government, decided to take advantage of the abovementioned schedule. They noticed that the title "The Random House Dictionary of the English language, The Unabridged Edition" was not published since 1983, and that the "College" edition of the Random House dictionary was not published since 1989.

So, around 2004-2005, they concocted the entire backdated series of the following Random House dictionaries with the "broadened" definitions of "ground zero" and inserted these fakes into all libraries around the world, including, of course, the U.S. Library of Congress:

1) "Random House Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, Second Edition" of 1987, 1993, 1994, 1996, 1996 compact edition with a CD-ROM, 1997, 1998, 1999 (also with a CD-ROM), 2001 (two different editions, one of them being the infamous "9/11 edition", also some of them with CD-ROMs), and of 2003.

2) Usual clones of the above under the title of "Webster's Encyclopedic Unabridged Dictionary of the English Language, Updated Revised Deluxe Edition" of 1996 and "Webster's Encyclopedic Unabridged Dictionary of the English Language, New Deluxe Edition" of 2001 ("August 1, 2001", to be more precise), and under the title of "Webster's New Universal Unabridged Dictionary" of 1996 by Barnes & Noble, Inc.

3) Allegedly based on the above alleged "Second Editions" of the Unabridged, the following "Random House Webster's College" editions (now also using Noah Webster's name in their titles): 1991, 1992, 1996, 1997, 1998, 1999, 1999 so-called "College Concise", 2000 (two different editions), and 2001.

4) Allegedly based on the above – Webster's Universal College Dictionary: 1997 and "July 2001" editions.

All of these backdated fakes included the "broadened" definition of "ground zero", of course.

To give the cheaters their due, it shall be mentioned also that they went into such great pains as to even concoct plausibly looking CD-ROM versions of their backdated dictionaries that were compiled to work under such antiquated computer operating systems as “DOS”, “Windows 3.1”, and “Windows 95”.

I do not even doubt that it would be impossible for us to satisfactorily prove (I mean to prove by technical means) that the actual CD-ROMs of that dictionary were compiled by programmers after 2001, thus being backdated fakes. It is because the programmers who were hired to compile the CD-ROMs were apparently educated enough to anticipate possible digital forensic analyses. Thus, they would not do any small stupid mistake – they would compile such a thing on a work-station with the installed OS (as well as the programming environment) indeed pertaining to the claimed year and with the system-time of such a work-station set to match that year. Because of this approach, even if such a CD-ROM was compiled in reality in 2004, since it was compiled on a work-station with an operating system, programming environment, and system-time pertaining to the year “1996”, all files on such a CD-ROM would have corresponding “true” properties showing that the files were “indeed” created in “1996” or earlier. However, you should understand that this trick is very cheap and anyone who has a basic understanding of computer technology could easily perform it on his personal computer.

Anyway, you will see now that since we manage to debunk the actual backdated books, all efforts of those programmers who concocted the abovementioned CD-ROM versions were in vain, being frustrated by the carelessness of those who concocted their paper source in such a reckless manner...

In order to expose the entire fakery attempt, it should be enough to successfully debunk only its alleged “1987” unabridged “second edition” alone, because the rest of the fakes (the CD-ROMs inclusive) claim to be based on it. Thus, if we manage to get the proof that the alleged “1987 Second Edition Unabridged” did not exist in 1987 as claimed, the rest of the proofs – in regard to its alleged “pre-9/11” reprints, as well as in regard to its abridged “College” versions would follow automatically. I hope you agree with this logic.

Let us begin. It will be a bit complicated, and it might look even boring for some, but if you follow attentively enough, you will be shocked.

Let us begin with the actual definitions of “ground zero”. I want you to keep in mind what were the original pre-9/11 ones and what were the alleged “pre-9/11” ones concocted in reality only in 2004. Here they are:

- (1) ground zero, the point on the surface of the earth or water directly below, directly above, or at which an atomic or hydrogen bomb explodes.
- (2) ground zero, 1. the point on the surface of the earth or water directly below, directly above, or at which an atomic or hydrogen bomb explodes. 2. Informal. the most elementary level
- (3) ground zero, 1. the point on the surface of the earth or water directly below, directly above, or at which an atomic or hydrogen bomb explodes. 2. Informal. the very beginning or most elementary level: *Some of the students are starting from ground zero [1945-50]
- (4) ground zero, 1. the point on the surface of the earth or water directly below, directly above, or at which an atomic or hydrogen bomb explodes. 2. Informal. the very beginning or most elementary level

I typed three levels of sophistication in different colors, so that it would be illustrative. Here we can see that there was the former, basic definition (black font) (let us call it “definition type 1”), then it was “broadened” by one step (red font) (let us call it “definition type 2”), then – broadened once again (blue font) (let us call it “definition type 3”), and then – slightly shortened (let us call it “definition type 4”). These would allow us to make some conclusions if we wish to trace the chronology of the crime (I will omit it here for the sake of brevity, but it is explained in full in the full edition of my book on the dictionaries).

Here is a list of various Random House dictionaries that use the abovementioned definitions (only the first of them is genuine pre-9/11 one, of course; the rest are various backdated fakes printed in reality only in 2004-2005 and distributed in the “backdated” manner):

“Type 1” – was used by all “Unabridged” and “College” Random House dictionaries of the first editions:
- by Random House Unabridged dictionaries of 1966 till 1983 inclusive;

- by its clone – Webster's Encyclopedic Unabridged Dictionary of the English Language of 1989, 1994, and 1996 (the genuine 1996 one, not to be mistaken for the “1996 fake”) editions;
- by its another clone – “Webster's New Universal Unabridged Dictionary” published in 1992 by “Barnes & Noble Books”;
- by Random House College dictionaries of 1968 through 1989;

“Type 2” – was used by the “latest” backdated Random House Webster's College dictionaries, namely:

- by Random House Webster's College Dictionaries of alleged “1997” through “2001” editions;
- by the genuine 2005 edition of the Random House Webster's College Dictionary;

“Type 3” – was used by all backdated Random House Unabridged dictionaries of the alleged “Second Editions”, namely:

- by Random House Unabridged Dictionaries of the alleged “1987” edition;
- by Random House Unabridged Dictionaries of the alleged “1993”, “1994”, “1996”, “1996 compact edition”, “1997”, “1998”, “1999” editions, as well as on their CD-ROM versions;
- by Random House Unabridged Dictionaries of the infamous “September 11, 2001” edition;
- by Random House Unabridged Dictionaries of the second “2001” edition, known as “black-blue”;
- by its clone – “Webster's New Universal Unabridged Dictionary” of “1996” by Barnes & Noble;
- by its another clone – Webster's Encyclopedic Unabridged Dictionary of the English Language, New Deluxe Edition 2001 (the alleged “August 1, 2001” edition);
- by the alleged “predecessor” of the above – the Webster's Encyclopedic Unabridged Dictionary of the English Language of the alleged “1996” “Revised and Updated” deluxe edition;

“Type 4” – was used by Random House Webster's College (as well as Concise College) dictionaries:

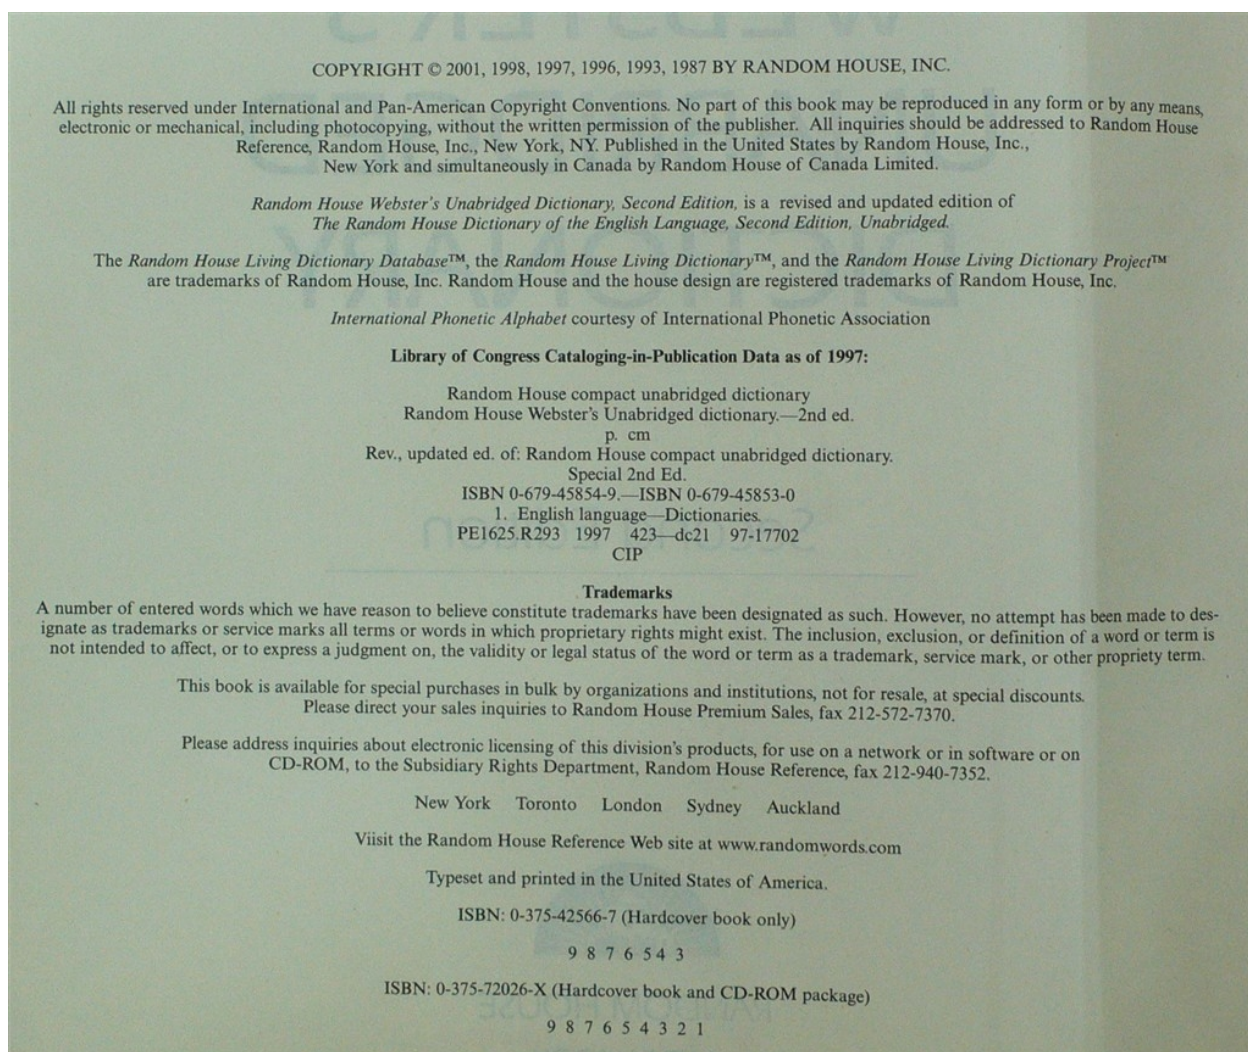

- by Random House Webster's College of the alleged “1991” through “1996” editions;
- by Random House Webster's Concise College Dictionary of the alleged “1999” edition;
- by Webster's Universal (that is even smaller than the “college concise”) College Dictionary of the alleged “1997” edition published by Gramercy, and in its alleged “re-print” of “July 24, 2001”.

As I have mentioned, it would be enough to prove that the alleged “1987” edition of the Random House Unabridged Dictionary did not exist in the year 1987 to expose the entire backdated series listed above. However, it is not so easy to prove it by looking at the alleged “1987” edition alone. In order to understand the whole affair, we have to take a look at several different dictionaries – both original and backdated ones, comparing several of their properties. To begin with, let us take a close look at the infamous edition of the Random House Unabridged Dictionary that was published right on the very day – the eleventh day of September, 2001, A.D. Here it is (it is my own copy):

Above – the infamous edition of Random House Webster's Unabridged Dictionary (ISBN 0-375-42566-7) published right on the very day September 11, 2001.

Here is its page with cataloging-in-publication data that claims the alleged existence of some “previous” editions, the very “1987” edition inclusive:

For those who might not believe the outrageous claim of mine that the Random House could publish a new dictionary right on the very day September 11, 2001, here its ISBN-13 number registered on that very day: 978-0375425660 (this is a so-called “ISBN-13”; its “ISBN-10” is 0375425667) and a link to the Amazon web page where you can verify it:

From Library Journal

Based on the Random House Living Dictionary Database, which strives to keep pace with the dynamic nature of the English language, this CD-ROM provides access to the complete text of the printed dictionary (315,000 entries). The definitions are supplemented by 2400 maps and illustrations (of average quality) and 120,000 American English pronunciations (both genders are represented). Searching is a breeze. It is possible to browse the alphabetical list or search by main entry, within the definition, or anagram. Searches can be limited to entries with pronunciation or a picture. Each word entry includes the definition, etymology, written pronunciation, date (or range) when a word or phrase entered the language, part of speech, synonyms, antonyms, and usage note, when appropriate. The words in the definition can also be searched with a right click of the mouse, and it is easy to save, sort, export, and print results. Unfortunately, the CD-ROM excludes several excellent and useful portions of the print dictionary, such as a separate section of new words, a list of words commonly confused, and a Basic Manual of Style. The Bottom Line: Libraries that can afford it should purchase the book and CD-ROM combination for $75. Patrons will find it comprehensive and easy to use. Random House Webster's Unabridged Dictionary is recommended to public, special, and academic libraries for its currency; the graphics are not the focus here. Perhaps, by the time you would read this book, those folks would modify this web page, removing the seditious reference to 9/11, but you could always remember it looking at the screenshot above, as well as at that below, which shows how the original web page used to look like as late as in August 2013:

The second one was just another screenshot that I made on August 13, 2013, shortly before completing this book. As you can see, the Amazon web page was slightly changed compare to the previous screenshot (made on 25 of March 2011), and yet, it still shows the seditious date "September 11, 2001".

Above – another edition of Random House Webster's Unabridged Dictionary ISBN 978-6-375-42599-8; 978-0-375-42605-6 (Deluxe Edition); 978-0-375-42609-4 (CD-ROM Edition), claiming to be published in "2001".

Intriguingly enough, apart from the seditious “9/11 edition” (which is in the red dust jacket), another alleged “2001” edition of this dictionary exists – in a black-blue dust jacket – similar to that shown on both web pages as the “newer edition of this item”²⁸⁰. On the above picture is shown one of these – from the personal collection of the humble author of these lines (I own both “2001” editions – the “red” one and the “black-blue” one). Here is the publishing data from the second “2001” edition – the “black-blue” one. It is notably different from the data page pertaining to the “red” 9/11 dictionary shown before. ISBNs are different, and here you can see that those uncaredful folks were so much in a hurry, that they even forgot to type a “space” between digits “1998,1997” when it comes to the copyright line:

In reality, there is no difference at all between the “black-blue” 2001 edition and the “black-blue” 2005 edition, which clearly points out that all these fakeries were in reality concocted around the end of 2004.

It shall be known that apart from the “Unabridged” dictionaries, Random House also concocts its “College” versions that are now called “Random House Webster’s College”, thus utilizing Noah Webster’s name. These “Random House Webster’s College” dictionaries in the most cases repeat the design of their “Unabridged” counterparts (which too utilize Webster’s name in their title). Thus, if the Random House Unabridged dictionaries of 2005 and 2001 were dressed in “black-blue” dust jackets shown above, their corresponding “College” editions were dressed in similar “black-blue” dust jackets.

Now you will see something really seditious.

The point is that the humble author of these lines, apart from the two Unabridged dictionaries of “2001” shown above, owns both of the Random House “College” dictionaries of that “black-blue” series – the genuine one of 2005, and its backdated “downgraded” copy of allegedly “2001”. The latter one proved to be a seditious item due to some unforgivable errors afforded by the cheaters.

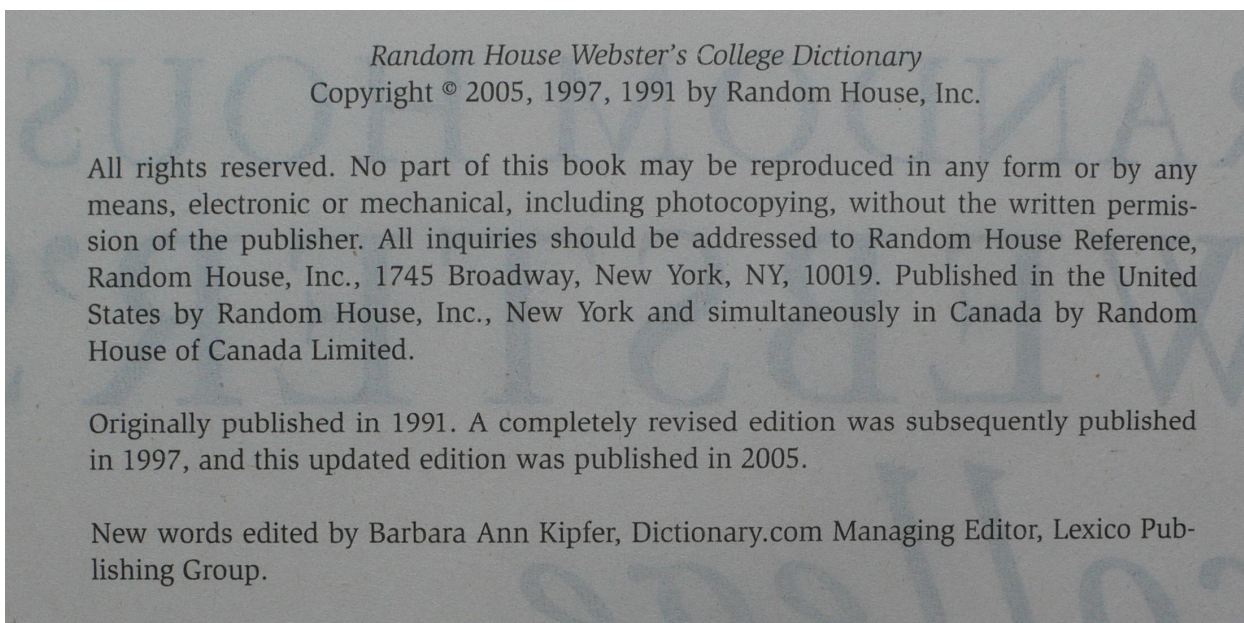

Here is the first one of them – the genuine 2005 edition. I bought it in a genuine manner around the year 2006 or may be 2007 in one of book stores in Bangkok. Its dust cover looks a bit different from the corresponding “Unabridged” black-blue edition shown above, but it is because I took pictures by different cameras, moreover, one with flash, and one – without flash. Therefore, their white balance was different, which resulted in slightly different look. In reality, their design is the same, since they pertain to the same series:

Above – Random House Webster's College Dictionary (2005; ISBN 0-375-42600-0; “with CD-ROM” edition). Below – copyright notice of the above dictionary, stating it is a continuation of the “original” – the alleged “1991” edition, that, according to the cheaters, was “originally published in 1991”.

Of course, this 2005 edition (as well as all those supposedly “original” editions of “1991” and later) contain the new, “broadened”, post-9/11 definitions of “ground zero” intended to provide the needed linguistic alibi to the poor U.S. Government. But the point of our interest in this case is not the “ground zero” definition. It is something else. I wanted to demonstrate to you that the newest Random House College dictionary was only published in 2005, while its alleged “2001” edition was merely a backdated concoction made out of the ready 2005 edition.

Even by looking at the above copyright statement, you can feel that no “2001” edition of the Random House College existed in 2005, because if it were available (or even planned to be concocted at the moment of publishing of the “black-blue” College dictionary of 2005) it would certainly be listed in the copyright notice shown above. However, the copyright notice only lists “1997” and “1991” editions.

Now let us compare the “2001” concoction with the genuine 2005 edition:

Here is the “naked” 2005 edition (my own), with its dust jacket removed:

Above – Random House Webster's College Dictionary (2005; ISBN 0-375-42600-0; “with CD-ROM” edition).

And here is the worst and the “dirtiest” fakery by the Random House cheaters. I managed to find this innocent looking book accidentally when this work was nearly complete. Most probably, it was by God's grace that I noticed it first in some university library and that I paid attention to its publishing data, and, secondly, that I managed to find it's copy on the very next day in an obscure book-shop in Bangkok's holiday market... The so-called “good guys” would definitely pay a very big money to redeem this seditious book – so much revealing it is...

These two dictionaries, which share the same ISBN and even wear the same “black-blue” dust jacket, look very similar. I would say they “look the same”; at least, outwardly, apart of a little difference in their titles: the “2001” edition claims to be “Revised and Updated”, while the 2005 edition – only “Updated”. Both of them have even CD-ROM included, although physically I have only the CD-ROM from my 2005 edition, because the “2001” edition I bought as a “second-hand” book and its CD-ROM was missing.

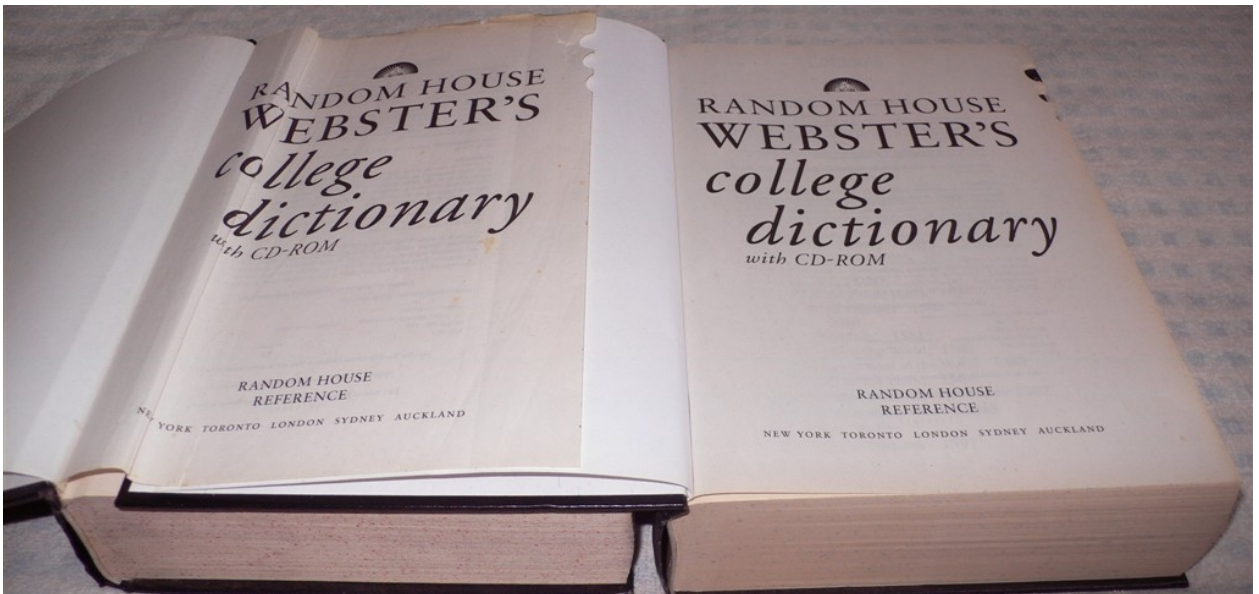

Here are two of these dictionaries – the 2005 and the “2001” – together, on top of each other:

And besides one other:

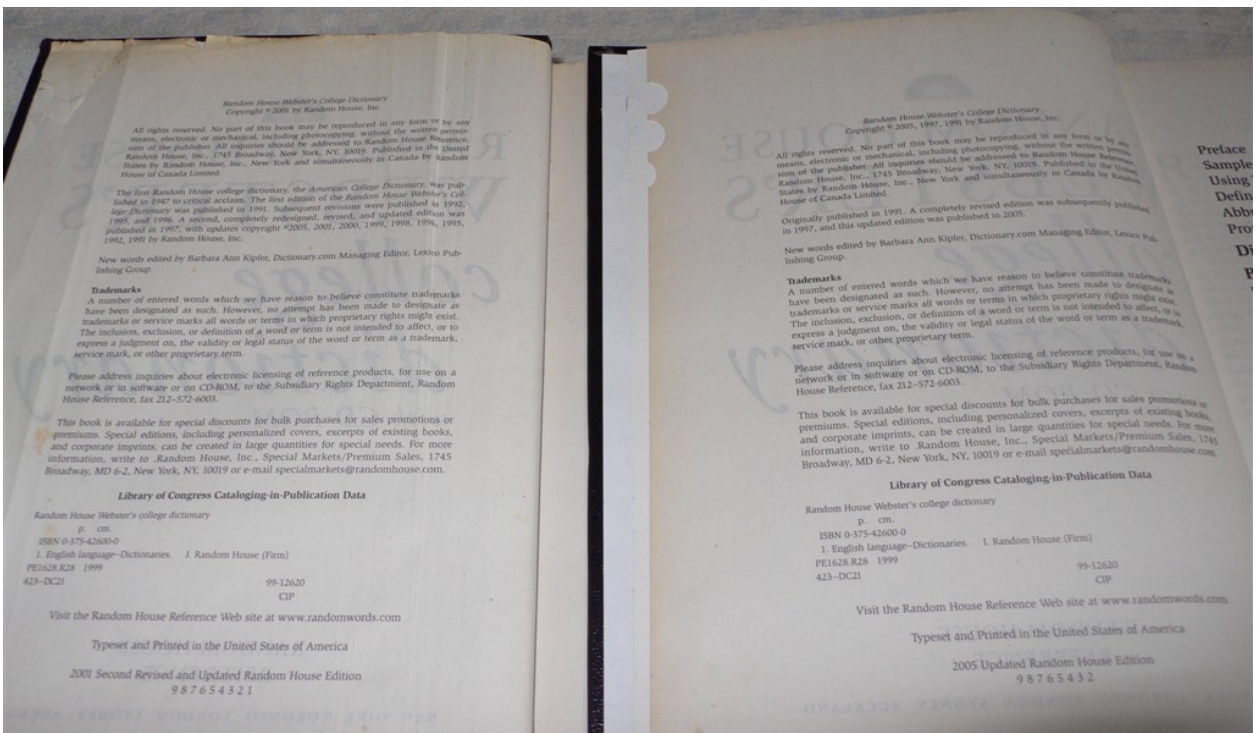

Here are their title pages:

Though, at this point their similarity fades...

This is how these two books look if their title pages are turned over and the cataloging-in-publication data pages are revealed:

I guess fonts on these photos are too small and the reader might have difficulties noticing any difference. However, it is still possible to notice if I point it out to you: in the lower left corners there is the difference. The book on the left claims to be published in "2001", while the book on the right – in "2005". The lowest line (just above the lowest line of digits) reads as follows:

2001 Second Revised and Updated Random House Edition (in the case of the book on the left)

2005 Second Updated Random House Edition (in the case of the book on the right).

You will be able to read these lines if you zoom-in the above photo using a zooming tool of your reader. But in any case, to make it easier for you, here are enlarged separate photos of these two pages in the two books, beginning with the genuine 2005 one:

2001 Second Revised and Updated Random House Edition

As you can see, the one who concocted the “2001” edition was really lazy. He did not really care (to say the least) about the infamous freemasonic “cleanness”. All he did – he simply took the ready page of some newer edition, and simply reset some words on it to be the alleged “2001” edition. However, he was not careful enough and he forgot to remove the “©2005” word that by no means could have been present in the copyright statement of a genuine 2001 edition. While another so-called “good guy” who was appointed to supervise the work and to double-check the result was negligent enough to miss such a thing... Actually, professional cheaters can not afford such a blunder; and in reality you almost never could have a chance to catch red-handed those who produce back-dated books, back-dated newspapers, or back-dated magazines. The Freemasons are careful enough not to give you any chance. But in this case we see the rarest exception to the rule. The cheaters afforded this mistake. And we noticed it.

However, the above one was not the last blunder that made this particular piece of work “very dirty” by the freemasonic standards. Here is another, probably, the worst one. If the presence of the “©2005” word in the copyright statement of 2001 edition could be somehow explained by “mistyping”, at least in theory, the fact that the death of ex-president Reagan in 2004 was mentioned in the 2001 edition of the dictionary could not be explained even by combined efforts of all political alchemists from behind the infamous “curtain” that specialize in production of backdated texts. The phenomenon that revealed itself on the page below is simply against the rules of the very alchemy:

From now on, we could, at last, establish the approximate time of those actual backdating attempts. They were made not earlier than in 2004. Because the earliest when the 2005 edition mentioned above could have been prepared was the previous year (especially considering that Ronald Reagan, whose death it mentioned, died on June 5, 2004). However, there are all reasonable grounds to suspect that it was prepared and published in 2005, rather than in 2004. And so, the alleged “2001” edition (that was based on the genuine 2005 edition) was manufactured in the year 2005 (if not 2006 or even 2007) as well. This could be indirectly confirmed by a library registration stamp on the above book (as I have told you, I have seen two copies of this seditious book – one in a certain university library in Bangkok and the second one – that I was fortunate to buy the next day in the book-market).

Here is that library stamp:

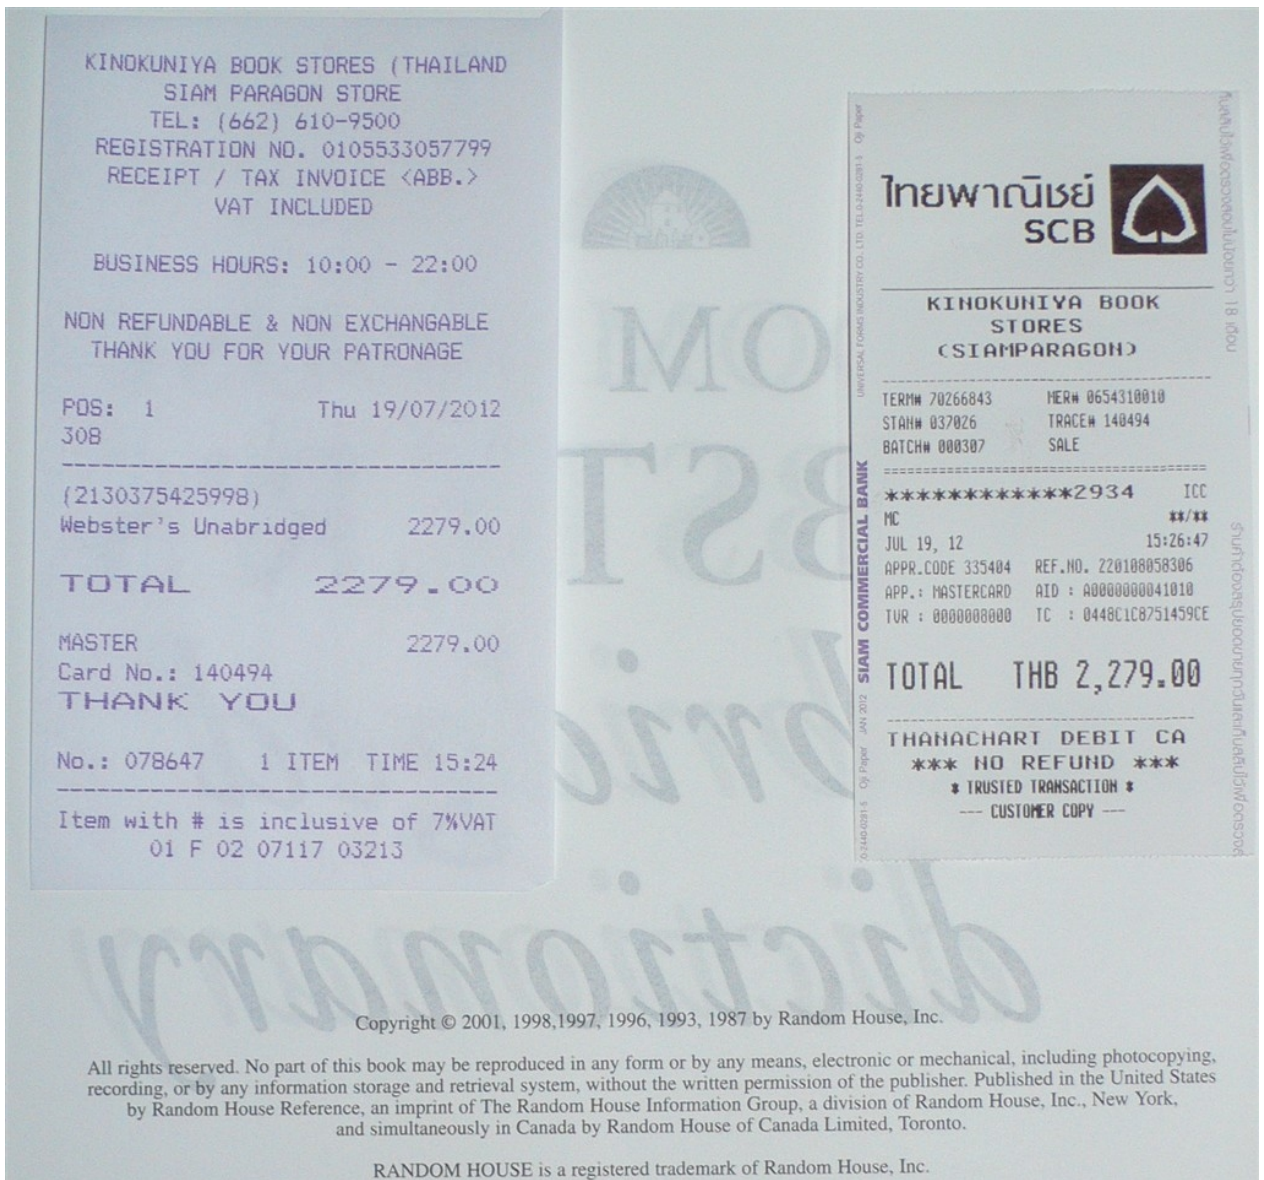

In the most cases you can not trust those “library registration stamps”, of course, since the library staff would register backdated books with the dates that the Freemasons would order them. However, I have feeling that in this particular case we can trust the above library’s stamp. This book of the alleged “2001” edition indeed arrived to the abovementioned library in September 2008.

I have to mention also that I made my own little criminal inquiry here in Bangkok by “innocently” inquiring of all those who used to sell the infamous “1987” edition of the Random House Unabridged Dictionary, the alleged “Second Edition” – when did they actually get this particular book? All of them, without any exception, honestly answered that as far as they could recollect, they got it in the year 2005 A.D. – just merely 18 (eighteen) years after the date of its alleged publication...

Another notable detail is that while in the copyright statement of the genuine 2005 “College” edition were managed allegedly “previous” editions of “1991” and “1997” only, the alleged “2001” edition of it in its copyright statement mentions (apart of the wrong “2005” edition) also alleged editions of: “2001”, “2000”, “1999”, “1998”, “1996”, “1995”, and “1992”. This allows us making further conclusions:

By the year 2005, only backdated concoctions of the Random House College of “1991” and “1997” were printed (or even “envisaged” rather than “already printed”). However, by the year 2006 (or even 2007), more backdated concoctions were either envisaged or actually produced: the alleged “1992”, “1995”, “1996”, “1998”, “1999”, “2000”, and “2001”. The same could be said in regard to the “Unabridged” Random House dictionaries. Its “black-blue” edition of “2001” was merely a backdated copy of the 2005 “black-blue” edition with corresponding backward changes. In fact, I bought my own “black-blue” Random House Unabridged of alleged “2001” in the brand new condition (moreover, being a “new arrival”) in one of the busiest Bangkok’s books stores ...guess when? in July 2012. Here is a photo of my purchase slips:

I have to mention that the “Kinokuniya” book store in Bangkok’s Siam Paragon Center is the busiest of all book stores of Thailand’s capital, always full of rich customers. Presumably, no book could remain unsold in such a busy shop for longer than a month. Indeed, this dictionary just arrived there around July 15 or 16, 2012 (because I regularly visited that book store and I monitored all new arrivals when it comes to English dictionaries) and I bought it on 19 of July 2012. I hope you realize that to continue distributing brand new “2001” editions of the dictionary while its 2005 editions are available for the last 7 years is a bit “strange” (if not to say “dishonest”) conduct? So, anyone is welcome with his conclusions...

However, the point of our interest now is not the “black-blue” edition of “2001”, but the “red” 2001 edition that claims to be published on the very day September the 11th.

Let us implement common sense first. First of all, it shall be understood that it would be impossible to prepare and to print such a thing as the unabridged dictionary in a single day. Thus, the stated day “11 of September, 2001” mentioned above does not mean that this dictionary was published right on that day. It means something else. It means that Random House editors applied for a new ISBN (or registered some vacant ISBN of their own as pertaining to this particular product), as well as applied for a new Catalog Card from the U.S. Library of Congress on the day September 11, 2001, while the actual product they could produce later. The actual dictionary was produced, perhaps, around the end of 2004, but since its ISBN and its Library of Congress Catalog Card were registered on the day of 9/11, this dictionary appears as such on the web page of Amazon shown above.

Let us, therefore, refer to this dictionary as “the 9/11 edition” – in order to be able to distinguish it from other editions, because in reality the infamous 9/11 edition would be even more important in our inquiry than the allegedly “earliest” edition of “1987” that serves a formal “ancestor” of the entire backdated series.

So, our common sense suggests that if the alleged “1987” edition with the “broadened” definition of “ground zero” were indeed existent prior to 9/11, than the Random House editors would not register their would be new dictionary right on the very day September the 11th. They would rather spend that fateful day on something else – for example, on joining others in prayers for the 9/11 victims, or at least on watching the TV that continuously showed the unprecedented events. The mere fact that these folks were busy on 9/11 obtaining registration data on their new unabridged dictionary is the hardest proof that no such dictionary existed prior to 9/11. Logic is a stubborn thing, as you probably know.

Anyhow, this type of proof although is indeed hard, is still not hard enough to be admissible in the modern judicial sense. Some harder proof is required therefore. Let us try to get some harder proof.

However, while getting this harder proof, let us remember something important. The unfortunate affair with registering the ISBN of the infamous 9/11 dictionary right on the very day September the 11th allows us to make some logical presumption (that would be successfully proven by below considerations and thus – elevated from the status of “presumption” to the status of “conclusion”):

The infamous “9/11 edition” of the Random House Unabridged Dictionary, the alleged “Second edition”, was the first edition of such dictionary, while its implied “predecessors” – such as the alleged “1987” edition – were merely “downgrades”, which contained certain backward changes when it came to some most recent entries in comparison with the “9/11 edition” that served the basis for such backward changes – in the same manner as the 2005 College dictionary served as the basis to concoct the backdated “2001” College edition.

Let us begin getting the “hard proof”. Just to remind you – we need to prove in a satisfactory manner that the alleged “1987” edition of the Random House Unabridged Dictionary, the alleged “Second Edition”, did not exist in the year 1987 as claimed.

In order to obtain such a hard proof, let us leave aside for a while those “2001” editions (that were printed in reality around the end of 2004) and review some genuine Random House dictionaries.

Here is the last genuine edition of the Random House Unabridged (also from my personal collection):

Above – the last edition of The Random House Dictionary of the English language The Unabridged Edition of 1983 (ISBN 0-394-47176-8; Library of Congress Catalog Card Number 74-129225) without its dust jacket.

It shall be mentioned that the 1983 edition of the Unabridged is different compare to its 1981 edition and to all previous editions only by its “leather-like” binding (the 1981- and all previous editions were bound using pale fabric), and by the fact that it was the first edition that had an ISBN (the previous editions only had Catalog Cards numbers of the Library of Congress, but no ISBNs). The contents of these dictionaries were the same.

Now you can also notice that by the design of its binding the 1988 edition of the “College” dictionary resembles the last unabridged edition of 1983 that it was actually based upon. Look, for example, how the genuine 1988 edition of the Random House College Dictionary looks like with its dust-cover removed:

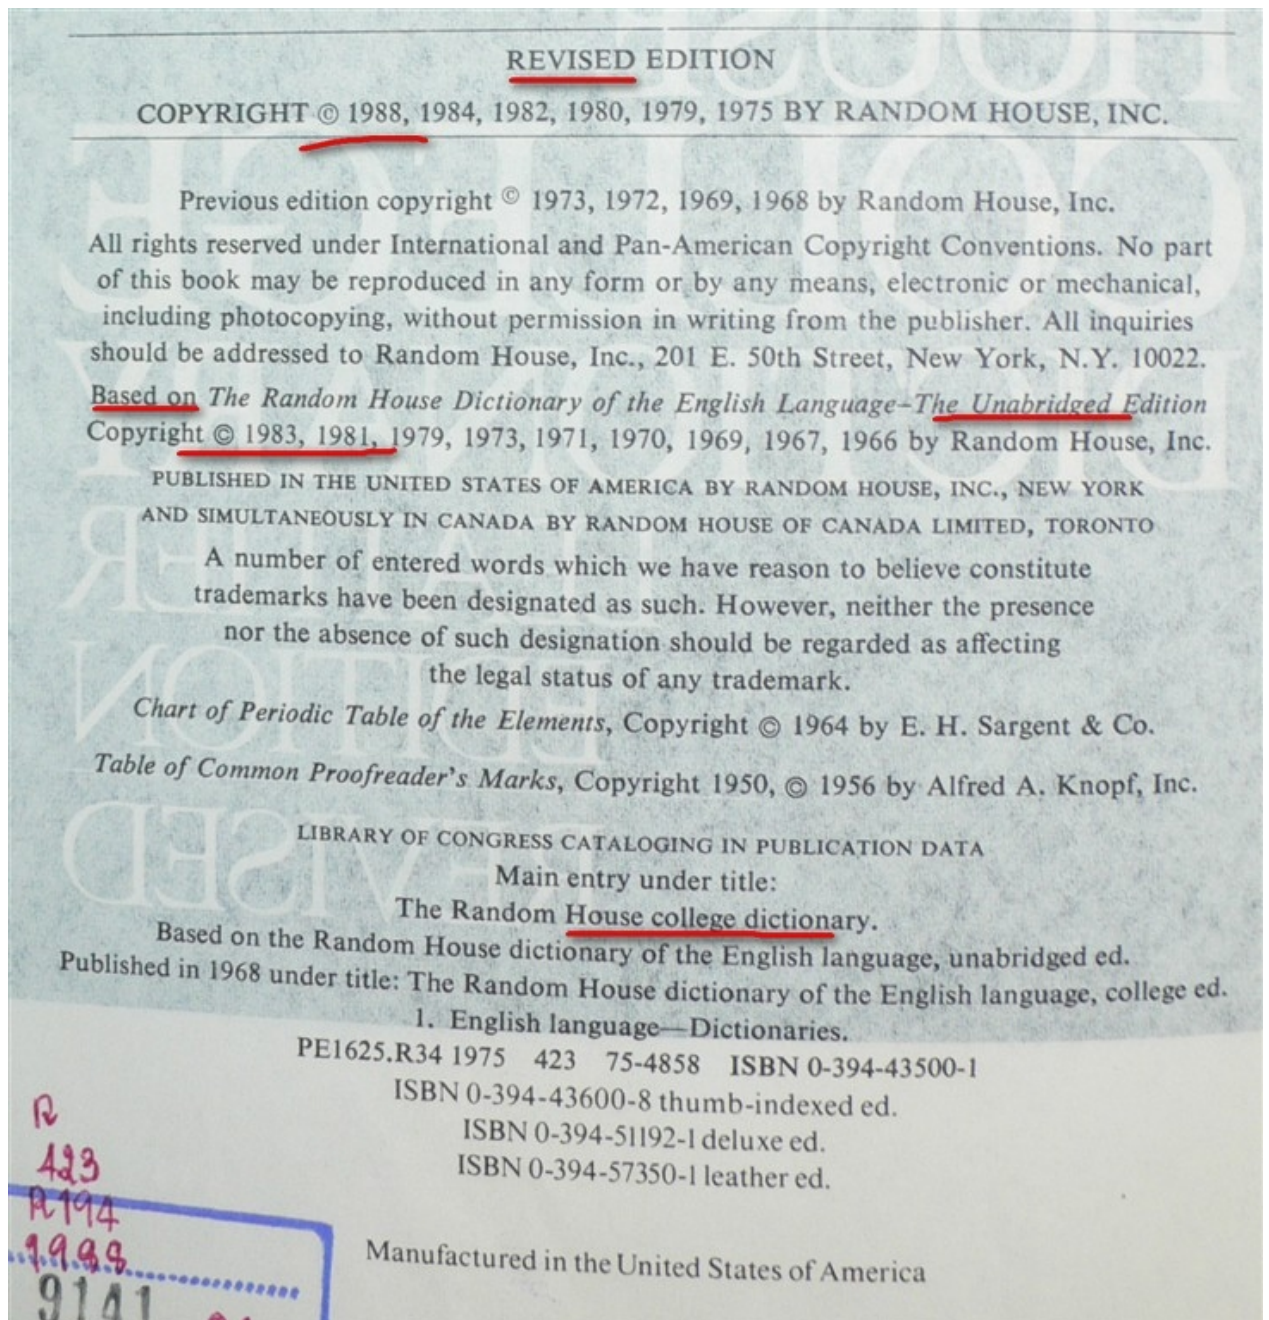

Above – The genuine Random House College Dictionary Revised Edition (1988; ISBN 0-394-43600-8) with its dust-cover removed. Below – the genuine Random House College Dictionary Revised Dictionary of 1988 with its dust-cover removed as compared with the genuine Random House Unabridged Dictionary of 1983 edition that it is based upon. (The two “College” books in these two pictures are different – the upper one is from a library, the lower one – is my own; it also had a dust jacket, but I removed it for making this comparison.)

This is just to confirm that the binding of the “College” of 1988 and that of the “Unabridged” of 1983 look very similar and is made from the same material. It is not actually “leather”, but some “leather-like” stuff.

Now let us get to the first “hard proof”. If the alleged “Second Edition” of the Random House Unabridged Dictionary were available in “1987” as claimed, than it is logical to presume that the Random House College Dictionary, Revised Edition of 1988 must have been based on it. However, contrary to our logical presumptions, the genuine 1988 edition of the Random House College Dictionary, moreover called “Revised” edition, is still based on ...the 1983 edition of the Unabridged – the one shown above.

Please, note in the below copyright statement of the Random House College Dictionary, Revised Edition of 1988, that the alleged “1987” edition of the “Unabridged” is not even mentioned...

Above – a page of The Random House College Dictionary Revised Edition of 1988 (ISBN 0-394-43600-8) with the cataloging-in-publication data.

From the above set of publishing data you can clearly establish that:

- 1) this Random House College Dictionary Revised Edition was published in 1988 (two previous editions of it were published in 1984 and 1982);

2) it is based on the Random House dictionary of the English language, The Unabridged Edition (meaning the First Unabridged edition, since the alleged “Second Unabridged edition” is not mentioned here);

3) the actual Random House dictionary of the English language, The Unabridged Edition (the source of the College edition of 1988), was published for the last time in 1983, and no alleged “1987” edition of the “unabridged” was mentioned despite the situation was taking place in 1988.

This is the first hard proof that the alleged “1987” “second edition” of the Unabridged Random House did not exist in 1987.

Let us look at the original “ground zero” definitions in the two above dictionaries (the “Unabridged” and the “College” ones):

ground-work (ground/'wŭrk/), n. the foundation, base, or basis of an undertaking. [GROUND¹ + WORK]
—Syn. bottom, substructure, footing; preparation, preliminaries, prolegomena.

Above left – “ground zero” definition in The Random House Dictionary of the English language The Unabridged Edition of 1983 (ISBN 0-394-47176-8; Library of Congress Catalog Card Number 74-129225; page 625). Above right – “ground zero” definition in The Random House College Dictionary Revised Edition (the genuine 1988 edition; ISBN 0-394-43600-8 / 0-394-57350-1; page 583).

As you can see, the “ground zero” definition in the 1988 Revised College edition does not differ from that in the last genuine 1983 edition of the Unabridged edition it is based upon.

Let us now take a closer look at the alleged “1987” concoction of the Unabridged of the so-called “Second edition”.

First of all, it shall be known that the alleged “1987” edition is available in three different bindings. One of them is the most common – it goes with a dust jacket.

The second one is smaller in size (matching that of the “compact unabridged”); it is very rare, because the first “unabridged compact” was officially produced only in “1996”, which automatically makes the “1987 compact” a seditious item, but I managed to find one of such seditious items in one university library in Bangkok.

The third one is the “deluxe”, leather-bound edition of the same fakery.

From the three photos below you could imagine how these three different bindings of the alleged “1987” concoction look like:

Above – two types of bindings of the alleged “1987” edition of the Random House Unabridged, Second Edition with their dust-covers removed. Despite the second of them (with the “round” binding) is actually a “compact” edition, much smaller in size than the “typical” dictionary on the first photo, both of these books share the same ISBN: 0-394-50050-4; their Library of Congress Catalog Card number is 87-4500.

The first of these is my own. I bought it in Bangkok from some guy who had plenty of them in stock as late as in August of 2012. When I asked them when and how he got these he told me that many of these were delivered to different book-shops of Bangkok in 2005, but after they were distributed to various libraries, some remaining ones ended up in his second-hand book-store.

The second one, the “seditions” compact edition (that strangely features the same ISBN as the “normal big” edition), was discovered in one of Bangkok’s university libraries. As you can see, it bears the library sticker with clearly visible digits “1987”.

Here it is the third kind of binding for this “1987” fakery, the “deluxe” one (this is my own too – I bought it in Amazon in 2012):

Above – the alleged “1987” “deluxe” leather-bound edition of the Random House Unabridged, Second Edition. ISBN: 0-394-56500-2; Library of Congress Catalog Card Number: 87-4500.

Finally, here it is the first of these alleged “1987” editions dressed in its “original” dust jacket:

Above – The Random House Dictionary of the English Language. Second Edition. Unabridged (the alleged “1987” edition); ISBN: 0-394-50050-4; Library of Congress Catalog Card Number: 87-4500.

Interestingly enough, the above dust jacket of the most common “non-deluxe” and “non-compact” edition of the “1987” fakery was manufactured with a view of matching a contemporary design of one of genuine 1988-1989 Random House College dictionaries. Luckily, although that genuine 1989 College dictionary is very rare nowadays, I managed to obtain one and added it to my own collection of the 9/11 evidence.

What is remarkable about this particular dictionary is that since it is a very expensive “Leather Edition”, moreover, with guilt edges, it correspondingly comes in a nice gift box that looks like this:

Above – original package of the genuine Random House College Dictionary Revised Edition (1989; ISBN 0-394-57350-1; Congress Library Catalog Card Number 75-4858). It is based on the Random House dictionary of the English language – The Unabridged Edition Copyright© 1983, 1981, 1979, 1973, 1971, 1970, 1969, 1966 by Random House, Inc. (its page with cataloging-in-publication data is identical to that of the 1988 edition).

The remarkable thing is that the dust jacket of the main fakery – the alleged “1987” “second edition” of the Random House Unabridged – obviously strives to repeat the abovementioned design, because this one was the only thing that was “vacant” of those years editions (the genuine “non-deluxe” 1988 Random House college edition repeats the design of the last genuine Random House Unabridged of 1983, so the “deluxe” one shown above was the only thing the “1987” fakery could try to mimic the design of). Please, take a close look at the “1987” fakery design shown below – it looks strikingly similar, doesn’t it? These two photos were made by different cameras and in different lighting situations, so their rendering of colors might look different, but in reality their colors are precisely the same, betraying the same design:

Above – The Random House Dictionary of the English Language. Second Edition. Unabridged, the alleged “1987” edition (ISBN: 0-394-50050-4) in its typical dust jacket.

Do you agree that if the "1987" "second edition" of the Random House Unabridged were available, as alleged, then the 1989 edition of the Random House "College" dictionary would not only "repeat its design", as suggested, but would be definitively based on it? Nonetheless, the 1989 college edition is still based on the First Edition of the Random House Unabridged, for the last time published in 1983... Look:

It shows this College dictionary as based on the Random House dictionary of the English language – The Unabridged Edition Copyright © 1983.

Below – the previous pages of the same “Leather Edition” of the Random House College Dictionary 1989.

Another seditious thing, which is yet to be investigated, is that in the genuine 1989 edition of the Random House College dictionary (as well as in the genuine 1988 edition of it that we reviewed shortly above), Jess Stein is not mentioned as the “late”, but quite to the contrary – as the “Editor in Chief” of the Revised College Edition of 1988/1989 (as opposed to the Editor in Chief of the First College Edition – Laurence Urdang, mentioned in the upper lines). However, on the disputed Unabridged “Second Edition” of alleged “1987” there is a certain dedication, implying that by 1987 Jess Stein was already late – this dedication is printed just in the upper part of the page with its cataloging-in-publication data:

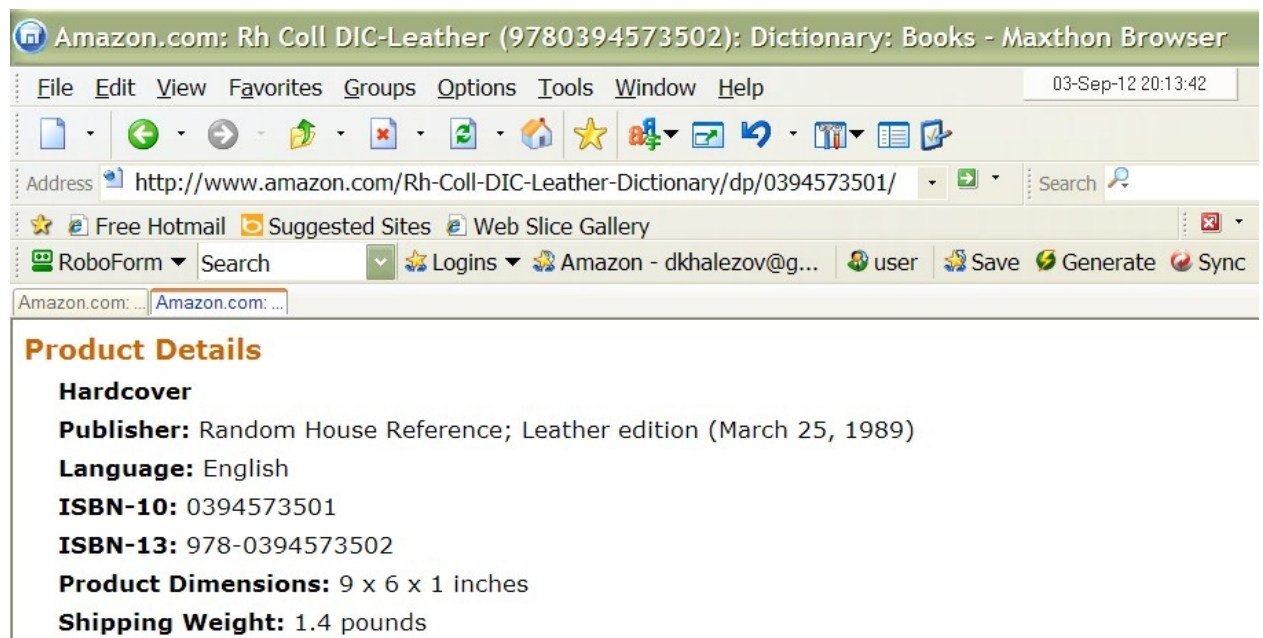

Above – the dedication from the Random House Dictionary of the English Language. Second Edition. Unabridged, the alleged “1987” edition (ISBN: 0-394-50050-4; Library of Congress Catalog Card Number: 87-4500).

As I have already mentioned, this matter is yet to be investigated, but so far it appears as yet another blunder. Perhaps, Jess Stein was still alive in 1987 (as well as in 1989), but those reckless folks copied everything “as is” from the infamous 9/11 edition to the backdated “1987” edition, including the dedication. Suspiciously enough, despite Jess Stein was famous (being the Editor in Chief of the only Unabridged English Dictionary comparable to and competitive with the traditional Webster’s since its original 1966 edition), no article on this person exists on the Internet. Not even the smallest article, or obituary, or photo, or even a brief mentioning in a third-party article. Jess Stein was relegated to an unperson – in the very Orwellian sense of this word. This is more than suspicious, to say the least.

Let us come back to the 1989 leather edition of the Random House College dictionary, which mentions its Editor in Chief Jess Stein as still alive and which fails to mention the alleged “1987” “second” unabridged edition as existing. If you don’t believe that the abovementioned college dictionary was indeed published in 1989, here is the Amazon web page where I bought it from. This web page claims that it was published in March 1989: <http://www.amazon.com/Rh-Coll-DIC-Leather-Dictionary/dp/0394573501/>

This 1989 edition of the Random House College dictionary is in fact a highly seditious item, because its mere existence refutes the claim that the main Random House fakery – the alleged “1987” “second edition” of their unabridged dictionary could allegedly exist prior to 1989 (not to talk about mentioning of the late “unperson” Jess Stein as being the live Editor in Chief of the Revised College Editions of 1988/1989). Therefore, it is quite difficult to find this dictionary today. I accidentally found one in a very obscure library and I was so impressed by this discovery that I decided to buy my own copy. So, I was lucky to find the above Amazon page and I have ordered one from there. Luckily again, my purchase was in the mint condition and even in the original gift-box. Now you can see it on the photograph above.

Here are two more web pages where you could confirm that the abovementioned Random House College dictionary was indeed published in 1989, as well as the fact that it is based on the Random House Dictionary of the English Language Unabridged (without specifying the “Second Edition” of the latter, which automatically means that it was based on its First Edition):

Perhaps, you will be interested in taking a look at a screenshot of the abovementioned web page, because besides publishing details of this seditious 1989 college dictionary, this web page also contains a mentioning that it could not be found in any library:

Now let us compare the “ground zero” definitions in these two dictionaries, as we did with the first pair:

ground/ track/, the path on the earth's surface below an aircraft, missile, rocket, or spacecraft. [1975–80] ground/ wa/ter, the water beneath the surface of the ground, consisting largely of surface water that has seeped down: the source of water in springs and wells. Also, ground/ wa/ter. Above left – “ground zero” definition in The Random House Dictionary of the English Language. Second Edition. Unabridged (the alleged “1987” edition; ISBN 0-394-50050-4 / 0-394-56500-2; page 844). Above right – “ground zero” definition in The Random House College Dictionary Revised Edition (the genuine 1989 edition; ISBN 0-394-57350-1; page 583).

As you can see, the definition of “ground zero” in the College edition of 1989 does not match that in the alleged “1987” Unabridged edition. It matches, instead, the definition in the First edition of the Unabridged of 1983 – the genuine pre-9/11 edition it is based upon.

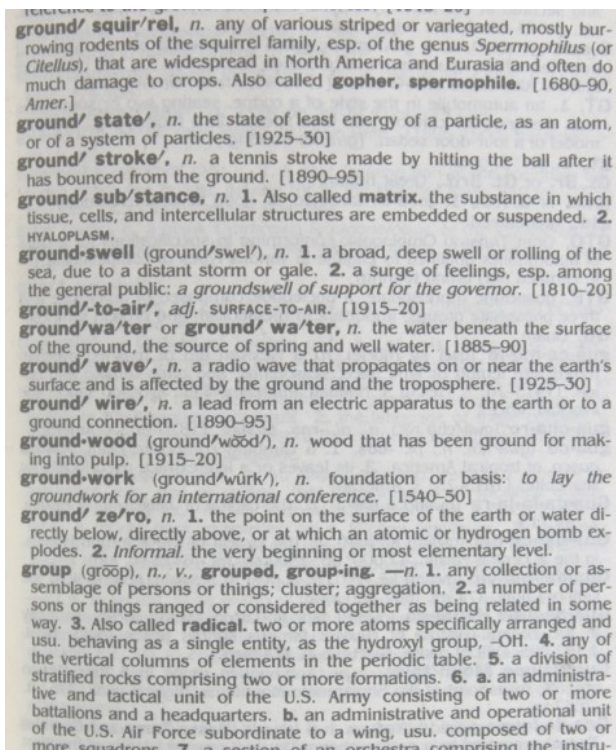

This is the second proof that he alleged “1987” edition of the Random House Unabridged with the post-9/11 type of the “ground zero” definition did not exist in 1987 as claimed, despite attempting to mimic the design of the really existing contemporary dictionaries.

Do not fail to notice also the cunning method of presenting this concoction to you. The former “atomic” and “hydrogen” bombs were long time ago renamed into “nuclear” and “thermonuclear” respectively.

Since the editors of the “Second Edition” of the Unabridged took good care to review the former definition of “ground zero” for its new dictionary and even upgraded it with an alleged “informal” meaning and even with an example of the latter’s practical usage, it would be logical to expect from them to modernize the first definition – by using words “nuclear” and “thermonuclear” instead of antiquated “atomic” and “hydrogen”. Otherwise, why to make a new dictionary, if not for using new words in them? But look – here the cheaters by using the obsolete words “atomic” and “hydrogen” wanted to imply that the definition is really antique, so that it would appear to “discerning” simpletons that the second, recently added, allegedly “informal” definition is allegedly as “antique” as the first one.

Moreover – the years in square brackets “[1945-1950]” (that were missing in the previous, genuine edition, by the way) were deliberately placed after the second meaning, instead of being placed after the first one, because it was the first, “atomic” meaning that supposedly entered the English language in that period. However, because the square brackets were placed at the end, the simpletons would think now that it was the second meaning that allegedly enriched the English language in between the 1945 and 1950... This is a real high class of cheating. You have to appreciate it.

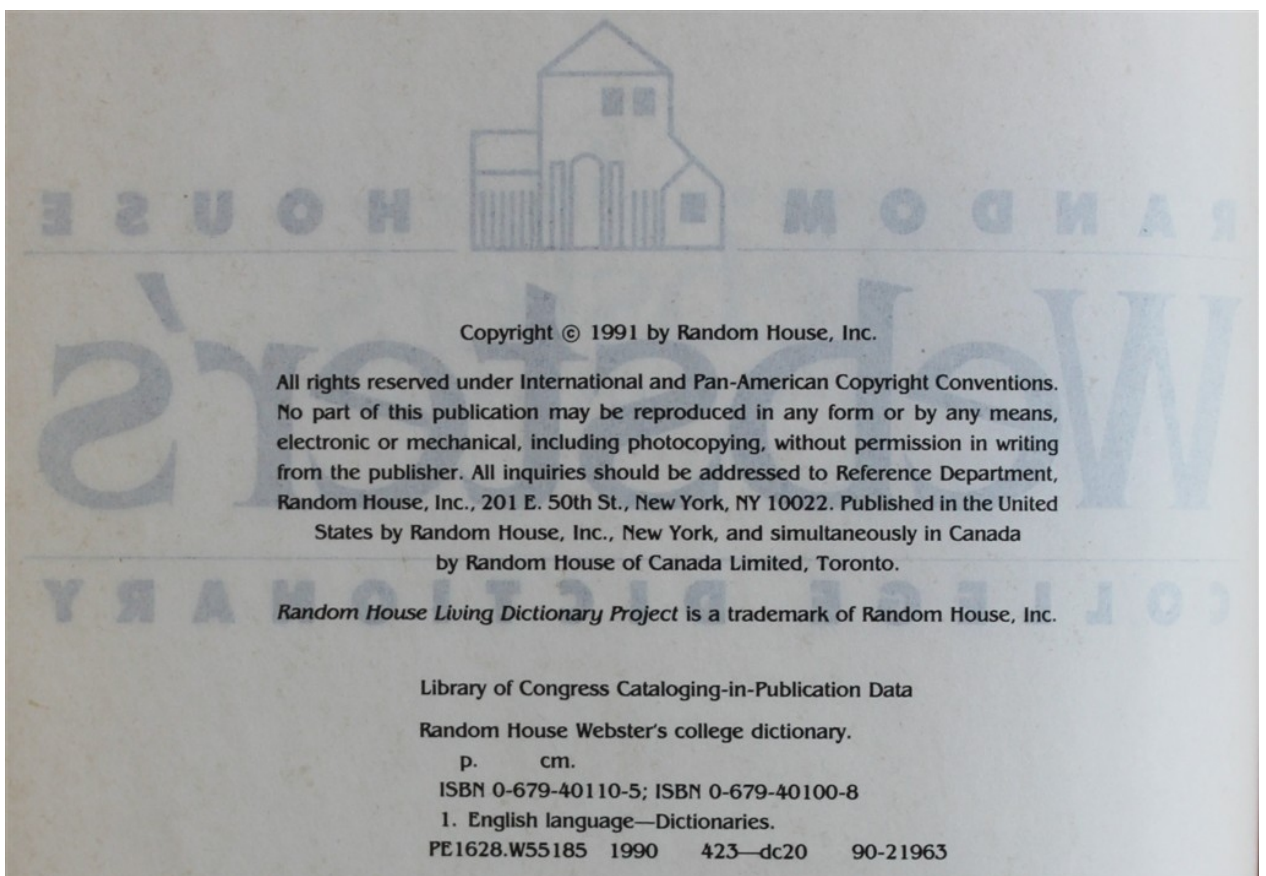

Some readers might, perhaps, think that the 1988 and 1989 editions of the “College” dictionary contained only the single “nuclear” definition of “ground zero” because they were naturally “abridged” in comparison with the “full” definition in the “Second Unabridged” dictionary of alleged “1987”. It is not so, indeed. Here is the definition of “ground zero” in the Random House College dictionary of alleged “1991” edition (i.e. in the “1991” backdated fakery allegedly based on the “Second Unabridged” of “1987”):

As you can see, even “College” editions of the Random House dictionaries contain “broadened” definition of “ground zero”. So, the point is by no means in the supposed “abridging” of the definition that could naturally occur when creating a “college” version of a dictionary out of an “unabridged” one. The point is that the 1988 and 1989 editions of the Random House College were genuine (and therefore based on the last genuine Unabridged edition – that of 1983), while the alleged “1991” and “later” were backdated fakes allegedly based on the main fakey – the alleged “1987” “second edition” of the Unabridged.

Above – Random House Webster's College Dictionary of the alleged “1991” edition; ISBN 0-679-40110-5 / 0-679-40100-8; Library of Congress Catalog Card No. 90-21963; and its page with copyright notice and publishing data, claiming it was allegedly copyrighted in “1991”.

Particularly unique feature of my own copy of the Random House Webster's College Dictionary of the alleged "1991" edition is that in a special form that is located on the page next after the front cover and is intended for "presentation inscription" there is a handwritten inscription that purports to serve as an "evidence" that this dictionary allegedly existed back in 1991. Here is how it looks like:

Above – “presentation inscription” on a special page of my own Random House Webster's College Dictionary of the alleged “1991” edition (ISBN 0-679-40110-5 / 0-679-40100-8; Library of Congress Catalog Card No. 90-21963) that purports to provide “evidence” that this book allegedly existed in “August 1991”.

I placed here the example of this cheap trick, because I want my reader to understand that this trick is really cheap, very cheap, indeed, so that such cheap tricks that the reader might encounter in the future would never be able to influence his judgment.

Please, try to understand, that those folks who print fake books and distribute them could perform any and every trick to make their backdated concoctions look less suspicious. For that reason they applied to them backdated library stamps, they mention these fake backdated books as a reference in other fake backdated books, so that various backdated fakeries “refer to each other” and in this manner might create an impression that they are “genuine”, they create backdated web pages (including backdated Amazon web pages) with backdated comments of “readers” and “reviewers”, etc. They could go as far as relegating some editors to “unpersons”, and they could concoct backdated obituaries of other editors, “honestly” crediting the late with his being “an editor-in-chief” of some backdated book²⁸¹...

The list of such potential tricks could be very long. However, there is something common among these tricks: they are VERY CHEAP. Because to make a backdated library stamp, to make a backdated web page with backdated comments and backdated reviews, or to publish a fake version of someone's obituary is INCOMPARABLY CHEAPER than to produce an actual backdated book (which has to be thoroughly verified as not to accidentally contain some reference to a new event or some new word that did not exist in the past – thus betraying the actual fakery). The example of a cheap trick with the handwritten note shown above is the cheapest of all of them. All you need in order to be able to perform such a trick is a ball-pen. And yet, such cheap trick could seriously confuse some innocent souls who might believe that this book “perhaps, existed in August 1991” since it was inscribed in the manner shown above allegedly “in August 1991”.

I repeat one more time: do not allow yourself to be duped by such cheap things. By cynical, please.

Now it shall be considered that we so far managed to collect at least two independent hard proofs (each of them being sufficient), and two more proofs of the secondary value – establishing that the alleged “1987” Random House Unabridged Dictionary of the alleged “Second Edition” did not exist in 1987. In my opinion, it is more than enough, but, just as a matter of principle, I will provide you with two more hard proofs. This time, it will be even more illustrative than with the “College” editions.

The point is that in addition to the title “The Random House Dictionary of the English language, The Unabridged Edition”, Random House used to produce its clones (moreover, its full unabridged clones, not the “college” ones). While the last genuine Random House Unabridged was published in 1983, its unabridged clones, titled “Webster’s Encyclopedic Unabridged Dictionary of the English Language”, were published at minimum five times: once in 1989, twice in 1994, twice in 1996 by “Gramercy Books” (a division of Random House), and once more – in 1992 under the title “Webster’s New Universal Unabridged Dictionary” by “Barnes & Noble Books”. Although I have all of these genuine dictionaries in my possession, for the sake of brevity I will refer here only to their latest editions – i.e. to the 1996 edition by “Gramercy Books” and to the only 1992 edition by the “Barnes & Nobles Books”.

This time, however, we will not only pay attention to cataloging-in data and to “ground zero” definitions in these dictionaries, but also to “Hong Kong” entry in each of them. The point is that Hong Kong was transferred from British to Chinese sovereignty in 1997 and this fact might be somehow addressed in the dictionaries, allowing us to make important conclusions.

Let us begin with the genuine 1992 edition by the “Barnes & Nobles Books”.

Now we just got yet another instance of “hard proof” that the alleged “Second Edition” of Random House Unabridged of “1987” did not exist in 1987 as claimed. The clone of the Random House Unabridged in the form of the 1992 edition of the “Webster’s New Universal Unabridged Dictionary” by “Barnes & Noble Books” was based, still, on the last genuine edition known to exist – i.e. on the Random House first edition ©1983. Of course, as we could sincerely expect, the “ground zero” definition in this genuine 1992 unabridged dictionary is single, “nuclear”, without any ambiguity whatsoever – exactly as it used to be in all other genuine pre-9/11 English dictionaries.

In addition, “Hong Kong” entry here does not mention the fact of it’s would be handover to China in 1997.

Let us take a look at another “unabridged” clone of the Random House Unabridged – this time published by Random House’s own subsidiary known as “Gramercy Books”. This is the most seditious edition of it – the genuine 1996 edition. It is particularly seditious, because a fake backdated “1996” edition is available too – so the genuine and the fake “1996” editions co-exist, blatantly contradicting each other. It is, in fact, very difficult, next to impossible to obtain the genuine 1996 edition of this dictionary; it is an exceptionally rare item. Nevertheless, I managed to obtain one, although without the original dust jacket. Here it is:

As you can see, even the 1996 “unabridged” clone, called “New Revised Edition”, is still based on the very same First Edition of Random House Unabridged of 1983. This is the hardest proof that the alleged “second edition” did not exist in “1987” as claimed.

Let us look at “ground zero” and “Hong Kong” entries in this genuine 1996 Random House dictionary:

As you see, “ground zero” definition here is genuinely pre-9/11 one, while the 1997 handover of Hong Kong to China is not mentioned. It is by no means surprising, considering that it was published in 1996.

In fact, I have another two editions of the Webster's Encyclopedic Unabridged Dictionary of the English Language by Gramercy Books – the 1989-, and the 1994 editions. You should remember the “gold” color 1994 edition – I used it at the beginning of this book in the Prologue, as well as in my video presentation about the WTC nuclear demolition. In both of these dictionaries “ground zero” and “Hong Kong” entries are identical to the above, and both of these dictionaries are based on the First Edition of Random House Unabridged Dictionary ©1983. Here is, for example, the lower part of the front cover of the 1994 edition:

Now let us take a look at another “1996” edition of the same unabridged dictionary – the fake backdated one, with the post-9/11 definition of “ground zero”. It is especially interesting to analyze it, because we have already seen the genuine 1996 edition. Here it is (it is also from my own collection):

Above – Webster's Encyclopedic Unabridged Dictionary of the English Language (alleged “1996” ed., so-called “OLD ISBN 0-571-11888-2” New Deluxe Edition: 0-517-15026-3). Alleged to be published by “Gramercy Books” (“Gramercy Books” was a division of Random House Value Publishing, Inc.). On the front cover you can clearly see words “Based on the up-to-date Second Edition of the Random House Dictionary of the English Language”, and a statement that this edition is “UPDATED REVISED DELUXE EDITION”. This dictionary is exact, to the word, copy of the Second Edition of the Random House Dictionary of the English Language Unabridged Edition, of the infamous “9/11 edition”. The so-called “OLD ISBN” in reality is the same ISBN that belonged to the genuine 1994 (“gold”) edition of this dictionary, that was, in turn, also “New and Revised”. Below – an enlarged lower portion of the front dust jacket of this dictionary.

To appreciate the abovementioned “1996” concoction properly, please, take a look at its publishing data:

Have you ever heard such an expression as "OLD ISBN"? Me neither. This is the first time in my life that I encountered such a thing in a data page of a book. And do you know what the "OLD ISBN" of "0-517-11888-2" is mentioned here? It is the ISBN of the genuine 1994 edition – the one in the "gold" dust jacket; the one with the genuine pre-9/11 definition of "ground zero". The point is that the genuine 1996 edition was so rare, that these folks believed that it would not constitute any problem. However, the genuine 1994 edition in the "gold" dust jacket was quite a common one. So, to address this trouble, the cheaters decided to use its original "old" ISBN in the new fake edition.

The so-called "good guys" have outdone themselves here. But the 1994 edition of that dictionary was such a seditious thing, that they had a little choice. That "politically incorrect" item must have been relegated to the "undictionary" status (by analogy with infamous Orwell's unperson) at any cost. And this cost was paid. Thus, its ISBN was assigned, at least "partly assigned" to the new "politically correct" edition. Due to this arrangement, if now someone would search for the ISBN 0-517-11888-2, the chances that he would find the genuine edition of 1994 are very low, while the chances that he would find, instead, the alleged "1996" edition with both – "old" and "new" ISBNs – are very high.

I have to repeat myself to stress this particular point: assigning an ISBN of a previous edition of a book to a newer edition of the same book in disguise of the so-called "OLD ISBN" is an absolutely UNPRECEDENTED STEP. Do not miss this point. And this unprecedented step would allow the cheaters to deliver to you a new edition of this book even if you order the book with the old ISBN.

In fact, it is how I discovered and obtained this fakery. I wanted to buy just one more genuine 1994 “gold” edition for one of my friends. So, I ordered it on Amazon. Instead, they sent me the above fakery, thanks to the abovementioned trick with ISBNs. I did not complain, of course, because I just loved it. Now I have a full set of “1996” Random House unabridged dictionaries to compare.

As you can see from the text on its dust jacket, as well as from its cataloging-in-publication data page, the alleged “1996” edition of the “Webster’s Encyclopedic Unabridged Dictionary of the English Language Updated Revised Deluxe Edition” is, at last, based on the disputed “Second Edition” of the Random House Unabridged of alleged “1987” – i.e. on the very fakery that caused me to undertake this investigation in the first instance.

Of course, on its page 844 this “1996” concoction contains the “broadened” definition of “ground zero” – exactly as does the “1987” fakery it is based upon. However, in this particular case we are less interested in the “broadened” post-9/11 definition of “ground zero”, but more – in the seditious “Hong Kong” entry:

As you can see, now “Hong Kong” entry began to include mentioning of its 1997 handover to China. The actual dictionary is backdated by the year “1996”, however, so that the would be 1997 handover could only be mentioned in the “future tense”.

So far there is something definitely wrong, but not too much seditious, because the fact of the would be reverting of Hong Kong to Chinese sovereignty was known since the year 1984 (to be more precise – since 19 of December 1984). So, there is nothing really incriminating when a certain “1996” dictionary mentions the 1997 event in such a manner as shown above. However, we have to remember that none of the genuine pre-9/11 Random House dictionaries – even those revised and updated and published as late as in 1996 (I mean “genuinely in 1996”) has mentioned the fact of the 1997 handover of Hong Kong in the corresponding entry.

To understand what the actual sedition is, let us first compare “Hong Kong” entry in the infamous “9/11 edition” of the Random House Unabridged Dictionary with that in its alleged “1987” edition (that we have already debunked by at minimum three various methods).

Here they are:

hon-ey-wort (hun/'e wurt/, -wört/), n. a plant, Cerintho retorta, of Greece, having bluish-green leaves and purple-tipped yellow flowers. [1590-1600; HONEY + wort², so called because its flowers yield much honey]

hong (hong), n. 1. (in China) a group of rooms or buildings forming a warehouse, factory, etc. 2. one of the factories under foreign ownership formerly maintained at Canton. [1720-30; < dial. Chin (Guangdong) hōng, equiv. to Chin háng row of shops]

hong-i (hong/'e), n. New Zealand. a Maori greeting in which noses are pressed together. [1840-45; < Maori]

Hong Kong (hong/' kong/), 1. a British crown colony comprising Hong Kong island (29 sq. mi.; 75 sq. km), Kowloon peninsula, nearby islands, and the adjacent mainland in SE China (New Territories): reverted to Chinese sovereignty in 1997. 5,761,400; 404 sq. mi. (1046 sq. km). Cap.: Victoria. 2. Victoria (def. 4). Also, Hong'kong'. Also called Xianggang. —Hong' Kong'er. —Hong'kong'ite, n.

hon-ey-wort (hun/'e wurt/, -wört/), n. a plant, Cerintho retorta, of Greece, having bluish-green leaves and purple-tipped yellow flowers. [1590-1600; HONEY + wort², so called because its flowers yield much honey]

hong (hong), n. 1. (in China) a group of rooms or buildings forming a warehouse, factory, etc. 2. one of the factories under foreign ownership formerly maintained at Canton. [1720-30; < dial. Chin (Guangdong) hōng, equiv. to Chin háng row of shops]

hong-i (hong/'e), n. New Zealand. a Maori greeting in which noses are pressed together. [1840-45; < Maori]

Hong Kong (hong/' kong/), 1. a British crown colony comprising Hong Kong island (29 sq. mi.; 75 sq. km), Kowloon peninsula, nearby islands, and the adjacent mainland bordering SE China: reverting to Chinese sovereignty in 1997. 4,380,000; 404 sq. mi. (1046 sq. km). Cap.: Victoria. 2. Victoria (def. 4). Also, Hong'kong'. Also called Xianggang. —Hong' Kong'er. —Hong'kong'ite, n.

Let us analyze these two “Hong Kong” entries. First of all, it shall be noticed, that the editors of the infamous “9/11 edition” of the Random House Unabridged dictionary were indeed very lazy. If they were really diligent, they must have written “a former British colony...” to begin with. Instead, they simply took the original 1983 definition and expanded it by updating population numbers and by adding the fact that it was reverted (in past tense, don’t fail to notice the “-ed” ending) to Chinese sovereignty in 1997.

Logically, there was nothing wrong in it. An updated and revised (mostly in order to broaden “ground zero” definition, but it does not matter in this case) edition of the dictionary published in 2001 (never mind that right on the very day of 9/11) enlightened the reader that Hong Kong was no longer British, but Chinese from 1997. Of course, the word “former” is apparently missing in the colony definition, but we could forgive those reckless Random House folks for this little negligence, since it is of a non-criminal nature.

It was not so simple with the “1987” concoction, however. If the cheaters were a little bit more careful, they should use in the “1987” concoction the original “Hong Kong” entry – exactly like it used to be in the genuine 1983, 1989, 1992, 1994, and 1996 editions that we reviewed above. To mention the event of the would be transfer of Hong Kong to Chinese sovereignty 10 years prior to this was apparently a wrong decision. Although technically it was still a non-criminal offence, thanks to the fact that the handover was announced in December 1984, the cheaters would better avoid mentioning it in their “1987” edition. For some not so clear reason, however, they decided to mention it even in “1987”. The reason, in fact, was not so “unclear”. Those who concocted the “1987” edition were simply lazy. They did not want to use their brains at all. They were instructed – not to mention anything that did not happen yet in 1987, and this they remembered. But they did not wish to apply any creative approach. So, when they were busy making backward changes to the basic “9/11 edition”, they decided that to change the ending of the word “reverted” – by making it “reverting” would suffice. Of course, they were careful enough to update the number of population – reducing it from “5,761,400” to “4,380,000” – just to be on the safe side.

However, this particular attitude finally destroyed their concoction, providing us with yet another piece of the solid proof that all these “updated” and “revised” “second editions” of Random House dictionaries were merely backdated fakes, published well after 9/11.

Look at this last concoction, which failed the cheaters from Random House in the worst possible manner:

Above – the actual book and cataloging-in-publication data page of Webster's New Universal Unabridged Dictionary of alleged "1996" edition by "Barnes & Noble"; ISBN 0-7607-0288-8. It too claimed to be based on the "second edition" of The Random House Dictionary of the English Language, the Unabridged Edition, copyright 1993, 1987.

As you can see from the blurbs on the book's jacket, this alleged "1996" fakery was not only based on the non-existent "Second Edition" of the Random House Unabridged; it was allegedly praised by various tools of the Western propaganda – such as "Newsweek" and "Washington Post Book World" – both of them endorsed the alleged "legitimacy" of this backdated concoction.

This cheap trick would not help the cheaters, however...

Let us take a look at the usual definitions in this alleged "1996" dictionary. Here they are:

ground' track', the path on the earth's surface below an aircraft, missile, rocket, or spacecraft. [1975–80]
ground' wa'ter, the water beneath the surface of the ground, consisting largely of surface water that has seeped down: the source of water in springs and wells. Also, ground'wa'ter. [1885–90] ground' wave', a radio wave that propagates on or near the earth's surface and is affected by the ground and the troposphere. [1925–30]
ground' ways', Shipbuilding. hardwood timbers laid end-to-end to form an inclined track on which the keel of a ship can slide during launching. [1705–15]
ground' wire', Elect. a lead from an electric apparatus to the earth or to a ground connection. [1890–95]
ground-wood (ground'wōd'), n. Papermaking. wood that has been ground for making into pulp. [1915–20; GROUND² + WOOD¹] ground'wood pulp', wood pulp consisting of ground-wood that has not been cooked or chemically treated, used for making newsprint and other poorer grades of paper. Also called mechanical pulp. Cf. chemical pulp.
ground-work (ground'wûrk'), n. foundation or basis: He laid the groundwork for an international conference. [1540–50; GROUND¹ + WORK]
ground' ze'ro, 1. the point on the surface of the earth or water directly below, directly above, or at which an atomic or hydrogen bomb explodes. 2. Informal. the very beginning or most elementary level: Some of the students are starting from ground zero. [1945–50] group (grōop), n. 1. any collection or assemblage of persons or things; cluster; aggregation: a group of protesters; a remarkable group of paintings. 2. a number of persons or things ranged or considered together as being hon-ey-wort (hun'ē wûrt', -wōrt'), n. a plant, Cerintho retorta, of Greece, having bluish-green leaves and purple-tipped yellow flowers. [1590–1600; HONEY + WORT², so called because its flowers yield much honey]

hong (hong), n. 1. (in China) a group of rooms or buildings forming a warehouse, factory, etc. 2. one of the factories under foreign ownership formerly maintained at Canton. [1720–30; < dial. Chin (Guangdong) hōng, equiv. to Chin hāng row of shops]
hong-i (hong'ē), n. New Zealand. a Maori greeting in which noses are pressed together. [1840–45; < Maori]
Hong Kong (hong' kong'), 1. a British crown colony comprising Hong Kong island (29 sq. mi.; 75 sq. km), Kowloon peninsula, nearby islands, and the adjacent mainland in SE China (New Territories): reverted to Chinese sovereignty in 1997. 5,761,400; 404 sq. mi. (1046 sq. km). Cap.: Victoria. 2. Victoria (def. 4). Also, Hong'kong'. Also called Xianggang. —Hong' Kong'er. —Hong'kong'ite, n.

Make sure to notice from the cataloging-in-publication data page shown above that copyright to this alleged "1996" concoction belongs to no one else than "Random House Value Publishing" and not to any third-party. This means that Random House incriminated itself by publishing this particular fakery.

This time the cheaters were caught red-handed in the full sense of this expression – not only because their "1996" concoction is allegedly based on "1987" dictionary that we successfully proved above to be post-9/11 backdated fakery, but because in the year 1996 they managed to mention the 1997 event of Hong Kong handover in the past tense – using the word "reverted", ending on "-ed" – exactly like it was in the basic "9/11" edition.

Even if the cheaters are very-very careful, one day they must do some stupid mistake that would expose them. This time they did the mistake.

So, this one is the last and the hardest proof that all those alleged "pre-9/11" dictionaries with the post-9/11 "ground zero" definitions were indeed backdated fakes produced well after 9/11 and inserted into all libraries (the U.S. Library of Congress inclusive) in the backdated manner.

If you think this is not a crime, but merely a kind of "dishonest PR-campaign", you are mistaken. It is a crime. The names of the actual criminal offense are "producing fake documents" (because an unabridged dictionary is a document, admissible in legal proceedings for definitions) and "falsifying public records".

I hope this time everything is clear with the Random House's concoctions.

Moreover, remembering how the Random House's cheaters manipulated their dictionaries would help us to understand similar attempts by other cheaters (from Oxford, from the Merriam-Webster, from Simon & Schuster, from the Cassell, from "Barron's", from Microsoft/Encarta, from the "American Heritage", from Harper, etc. who attempted to cheat us with their own versions of the backdated "pre-9/11" fakeries).

I believe I did a good job here by disproving such a dangerous concoction as the alleged "Second Edition" of the Random House Unabridged of "1987" in such a careful manner. Even though it might look "boring", it definitely had its benefits. From now on, the reader could realize, at last, how serious a cheating attempt could be and would not gullibly believe "innocently looking details" of a certain fakery – remembering that the alleged "innocent details" could have been especially manufactured by careful cheaters to "look innocent" and so to dupe you into believing their concoction.

I would like to repeat myself – all those supposedly "pre-9/11" dictionaries that featured the post-9/11 definition of "ground zero" are backdated fakeries. All of them were duly analyzed and debunked – not even a single dictionary listed at the beginning of this chapter managed to withstand the inquiry. It took me almost three years (and an enormous amount of cash to be spent on buying various rare dictionaries), but I debunked all known backdated dictionaries without any exception.

However, I was not able to provide all the data here. Thus, I limited myself to the exemplary debunking of the Random House faking attempt only. I think it should be enough, because even this little description of the debunking methods made this chapter excessively long and boring for most readers.

Before we move to the next chapter – about the Bali night-club "car"-bombing of 2002, which earned the name "ground zero" for that place, I just want to remind you one more time:

An attempt to re-define "ground zero" term in English dictionaries (as well as in Australian English dictionaries) was undertaken only in 2003, while the actual dictionaries with the "broadened" definition of "ground zero" were published only in 2004-2005, the earliest – at the end of 2003.

Here is a little example in regard to particularly Australian English:

ground staff /'graʊnd staf/ noun mechanics on an airfield responsible for the maintenance of aircraft; non-flying personnel on an airfield.
ground state /'graʊnd steɪt/ noun the lowest and most stable energy state of a particle, nucleus, atom, or molecule.
ground station /'graʊnd steɪʃən/ noun → earth station.
ground stroke /'graʊnd stroʊk/ noun a tennis stroke played close to the ground immediately after the ball has bounced. Also, ground shot.
groundswell /'graʊndswel/ noun 1. a broad, deep swell or rolling of the sea, due to a distant storm or gale. 2. a strong movement of public opinion: *the groundswell of public concern about petrol prices. – ADVERTISER, 1986.
ground water /'graʊnd wɔ:tə/ noun the water beneath the surface of the ground, consisting largely of surface water that has seeped down.
ground wave /'graʊnd weɪv/ noun that portion of a transmitted radio wave that travels near the surface of the earth.
groundwork /'graʊndwɜ:k/ noun the foundation, base, or basis of anything.
ground zero /'graʊnd zɪərəʊ/ noun the point on the surface of the earth directly below the point at which a nuclear weapon explodes, or the centre of the crater if the weapon is exploded on the ground. Also, surface zero.
group /gru:p/ noun 1. any assemblage of persons or things; cluster; aggregation. 2. a number of persons or things ranged or considered together as being related in some way. 3. Ethnology a classification more limited than a branch. 4. a number of businesses, companies, etc., administratively and financially connected. 5. Chemistry a. number of atoms in a molecule connected or arranged together in a particular manner; a radical: the hydroxyl group, –OH. b. a vertical column of the periodic table containing elements with similar properties. 6. Linguistics a. a subdivision of a family, usually the greatest. b. any grouping of languages, whether geographically, on the basis of relationship, or otherwise. 7. Functional grammar a word or set of words that constitute a syntactic unit in a clause, such as the participant (nominal group) or the process (verbal group). 8. Geology a division of stratified rocks comprising two or more formations. 9. Mil-

Above right – the first broadened post-9/11 "ground zero" definition in the Macquarie Dictionary of 2005 (Fourth Edition; first printed 2005; ISBN 1 876429 14 3; page 630).

The Macquarie Dictionary is the official dictionary of Australia. It is a full, unabridged dictionary, and therefore it is admissible in legal proceedings in Australian courts. Meaning if some place was officially called “ground zero”, you could easily prove in the court that it was a spot of a nuclear explosion by simply bringing this dictionary to the court-room and citing it’s definition.

However, as you could see, the Macquarie Dictionary officially switched from the pre-9/11 “ground zero” definition to the post-9/11 one only in 2005 (in the year 2005 both editions of it were published – the unfortunate Third Revised Edition with the still “seditious” definition of “ground zero”, and its first Fourth Edition – which fixed the sedition, at last).

The same could be said about another full dictionary of Australian language – published by Collins:

ground state or level n the lowest energy state of an atom, molecule, particle, etc. Compare excited (sense 4). ground stroke n Tennis. any return made to a ball that has touched the ground, as opposed to a volley.
groundswell (^ˈgraʊnd,swel) n 1 a considerable swell of the sea, often caused by a distant storm or earthquake or by the passage of waves into shallow water. 2 a strong public feeling or opinion that is detectable even though not openly expressed: a groundswell of discontent.
ground water n underground water that has come mainly from the seepage of surface water and is held in the soil and in pervious rocks.
ground wave or ray n a radio wave that travels directly between a transmitting and a receiving aerial. Compare sky wave.
groundwork (^ˈgraʊnd,wɜːk) n 1 preliminary work as a foundation or basis. 2 the ground or background of a painting, etc.
ground zero n a point on the surface of land or water at or directly above or below the centre of a nuclear explosion.

Above right – “ground zero” definition in the Collins English Dictionary 5th Updated Australian Edition – “21st Century Edition” (2002; ISBN 0-00-472532-8; page 681).

Collins, in fact, “fixed the sedition” earlier than the rest of dictionaries’ publishers – it did it in its “2003” full edition that was published in reality at the beginning of the year 2004. However, the previous Collins full edition, the “Updated 2002” one, still offered the original, “nuclear” definition of “ground zero” that was devoid of any ambiguity whatsoever, as you can perceive from the two pictures shown above.

Thus, if some place was called “ground zero” in 2002, as was the case with the infamous 2002 Bali “car”-bombing, that mostly affected the Australians, you do not have to doubt – those ABC folks from the Australian military who named that place “ground zero” really meant it.

Now, with this understanding, we could move further – to review so-called “car”-bombings, spots of which were almost always dubbed “ground zero”.

Modern mini-nuclear bombings masquerading as “car-bombings”. 2002 Bali bombing and 1995 Oklahoma bombing.

"The car bomb is the nuclear weapon of guerrilla warfare."

-- Washington Post columnist Charles Krauthammer

It is not so, dear Mr. Krauthammer. It is vice-versa.

This Chapter deals with some events that happened more than one year after 9/11 and one that was 6 years prior: however, these events have direct relevance to the entire 9/11 project.

I have to tell my reader that by the end of 1999, I learned a lot from one prominent person who had close ties with the Mossad. He informed me that the Freemasonic Order in the (then) near future had planned a major nuclear strike against Australia, perhaps, from its Papua-New Guinea secret naval base. That person told me that he thought it would be a high-yield strike against some middle-sized Australian city – so the event was supposed to look-like a “big Hiroshima” – probably with an airburst of something like half-megaton and with a near-total annihilation of its population.

When I asked why they chose Australia, he said that he did not know why, but most probably because of the isolation of this particular country from the rest of the world. In his opinion, it was a perfect choice – because no damage would be inflicted by the radioactive fallout on neighboring countries. This action, in his opinion, would serve as a major turning point (do not forget that it was before 9/11) in the war against “terror” and also as a good pretext for an unprecedented curtailing of remaining civil freedoms in all over the world. Lay population supposed to be shocked to such an extent that they would agree that surveillance video-cameras would be installed even in their private toilets and bedrooms, not to say about their acceptance of biometric passports and the rest of “security improvements”. He thought that people after that would be agreeable to having electronic chips, for identification reasons, riveted to their ears.

That man thought such a beautiful pretext for the long-craved “security improvements”, the thermonuclear strike against far Australia, would be definitely welcomed by leaderships of the United States and Europe – who would not even bother to challenge any investigation results over it and would all readily agree that it was indeed “Muslim terrorists” who delivered the actual strike. The Mossad, of course, supposed to be the main source of “information” and also the main “consultant” when it comes to the “Islamist” trail in such an affair.

Actually, since I am quite a cynical person, devoid of any slavish complexes whatsoever, and with a clear view of things, I have simply no reason to doubt this information. So, I am certain that the Freemasons had really planned the half-megaton thermonuclear strike somewhat after 1999. Most probably – it was one of the main “terror” projects that had eventually lost tender to the 9/11 project: the latter was good too, but obviously more beautiful and less cruel, while it could achieve near similar results in regard to the future enslavement of humanity. Eventually, the 9/11 project was approved, instead, as a “major turning point”, and that thermonuclear strike against an Australian city was shelved. Another option is that the “Australian project” was always kept as a “backup option” – should the 9/11 project fail (and, considering the extraordinary complexity of the latter, the chances that it might fail were indeed very high; while the Australian project was one of the simplest to carry out). It shall be known, that the Freemasons NEVER and UNDER NO CIRCUMSTANCES could stake all on the result of one single venture alone. It would be way too risky for the sect; and these folks are simply too serious to afford such a type of gambling. When the Freemasons do something, they do it with exactly 100% probability. Practically, they never fail. Therefore, as a matter of “must”, the Freemasons always plan 2-3 projects simultaneously, especially when we talk about major projects that suppose to have influence on society for decades to come.

Anyhow, the major “Australian project” was apparently shelved. However, you have to know those obsessed guys from the Freemasonic Order and those from the Mossad. If they once decided to nuke “Aussies”, they would not be able to sleep well unless they really did what they had in their minds. And so they did it. Twice. Though, in a slightly lower scale. They used less than 1 kiloton “mini-nukes” instead of a half-megaton stolen Soviet thermonuclear warhead.

To begin with, I wish to make some small warning. The mere fact that some nuclear munitions were used in the 2002 Bali bombing and in the 2004 bombing of the Australian Embassy in Jakarta, Indonesia, as well as in several other instances, might sound too odd, and therefore it might prompt someone to disbelieve this entire book. Thus, writing an additional chapter on a seemingly extraneous topic represents a certain danger for me. Nonetheless, I decided to write it. Since my intention is to reveal the entire truth about modern so-called “terrorism”, to avoid discussing these nuclear events would be an unacceptable omission.

The mere possession of these “mini-nukes” by “terrorists” and their widespread use in the disguise of so-called “truck-bombings” actually represent the main concept of modern so-called “terrorism” – blamed on the so-called “Al-Qaeda” and other alleged organizations – all of them being almost invariably “Muslim” ones. Without understanding the truth of these “mini-nuclear” bombings, it would be impossible to understand that idiotic zeal of the “patricians” who go on and on in their seemingly senseless fighting in Afghanistan and in Iraq – in pursuit of something known only to the “patricians” alone. Moreover, our careful consideration of the real use of “mini-nukes”, in a few practical cases, would additionally disprove the “second” so-called “truth” of the U.S. Government – that these tiny nuclear devices might have been allegedly used in the demolition of the WTC.

So, here it is.

2002 Bali nightclub nuclear bombing.

Was a nuclear weapon used in Bali case? Try to guess, yourself. Look at the possible motives first.

Did any so-called “Muslim terrorists” need that bombing? Apparently, they needed it not more than an attack on the World Trade Center a year earlier. The “Muslim terrorists” would be the last of all who might wish that thing to happen.

Obviously, it was some other folks, who needed to incinerate those poor Australian tourists. Those, who planned the Bali bombing, primarily needed to convince some doubtful guys responsible for making political decisions that it was really necessary to attack Iraq and to dismantle its regime which allegedly produced such nuclear weapons. Plus, this new nuclear perpetration supposed to serve as an additional confirmation of the “second truth” of the WTC demolition. Do not forget that the U.S. Government secretly claims that it was Saddam Hussein’s “mini-nukes” that brought down the Twin Towers, so it would be logical to presume that so-called “Muslim terrorists” possess more “mini-nukes” and would put them to use one day. There was simply no other sense to the Bali bombing.

Moreover, it was an “exclusive act of terror” purely designed to impress the “patricians” alone. It was not even intended for any consumption of the “plebeians” – it was barely mentioned for them and the “plebeian version” of the Bali bombing was not really elaborated. This most heinous perpetration received unbelievably little coverage in the mass media and the 2002 Bali Bombing itself is no longer being discussed among the “plebeians” – it was suspiciously quickly forgotten. Almost no photos and no videos of this particular act of terror have been released for public consumption and no witness’ accounts have been provided to impress the “plebeians” to the effect of an alleged brutality by those evil “Muslims”.

Judging by all these facts, it should be presumed that the 2002 Bali bombing was an “exclusive” kind of “terror” intended for some “exclusive” audience.

Now, let us use logic in order to understand that this bombing could have been “conventional” (I mean “non-nuclear”). Try to honestly answer this question: would it be reasonable for anyone (whose aim is to scare the “patricians” alone) to use an incredibly large amount (over 1 ton) of conventional explosives for that unprecedented event, and what is the most important – that unexplainable count of atrocity, which seemed to be totally devoid of any reason? Of course, it would not. Only a nuclear device could have been used in the case of the 2002 Bali bombing to serve all the abovementioned purposes.

That is exactly why it was the nuclear device that got critical and went off at 11 PM October 12, 2002, in a sewage tube near the famous Sari Night Club in Kuta Beach, Bali.

One of the first pieces of information about the Bali bombing, quoted by many news agencies, despite the fact that this particular piece of information represented one of the most unforgivable slips of the tongue was:

“..The place was packed, and it went up within a millisecond...”

I can’t resist placing here an example of what impression this particular word made on one of the earlier Bali bombing researchers. I am quoting²⁸²:

“...NEWS BRIEF: “Indonesian Nightclub Bombing, Called an ‘Act of Terror’”, by Fox News, October 12, 2002.

“The explosion went off about 11 p.m. ... Witnesses on the popular tourist island said that the flames spread to another club and burned several other buildings on the same block and a dozen cars. The place was packed, and it went up within a millisecond ...”

“This word, “millisecond” stuck in my throat, for that is a word normally reserved for nuclear explosions. Once a warhead goes critical, the chain reaction occurs in milliseconds, as does the resulting destruction. This blast seemed unusually huge and destructive...”

Actually, for a sensible person who is familiar with elementary logic, this slip of the tongue alone would be enough to establish that the Bali Island has suffered nothing else than a nuclear explosion. He would not need any further statements, or photographs, or chemical analyses of residue, or witnesses’ accounts. The mere word “millisecond” alone is enough. This word is, indeed, reserved for nuclear explosions – exactly as stated in the above quotation. Therefore, one would never, under no circumstances, use this highly tailored technical term while referring to any other explosion, than a nuclear one.

Here is another example of usage of the nuclear word “millisecond”; moreover, in this particular case, the usage of this highly-technical and by no means “colloquial” term, is ascribed to an apparent commoner (quoted from an article titled “The last dance”; published on October 19, 2002²⁸³):

“...Sari’s went up in a millisecond,” said Simon Quayle, one of 20 footballers from Kingsley Football Club in Perth who were in the bar...”

You could only wonder – why would a footballer use the word “millisecond” in such a context? Do you understand that no person would use such a word in such a phrase as the one quoted above? It is not a colloquial word, after all; it is the technical term. To be more precise: the highly tailored technical term from the lexicon of nuclear science. Even on an intuitive level, it would never occur to any footballer that any explosion might last a “millisecond”. Why not a “microsecond”? Why not a “half-second”? Why not a “split of a second”? Why not just “a second”? Why particularly the “millisecond”?

The answer to this puzzle is indeed very simple. This word was obviously leaked to a “plebeian” media to begin with. Apparently, a certain official discussed proceeds of the actual Bali explosion with some nuclear specialists. Those specialists, either automatically, or simply in order to impress him, used this specific word from their lexicon. Following that conversation, this “unconventional” word became simply a part of the Bali affair and then it understandably went further – to the mass media, intended to produce for the “plebeians” another, “conventional” version of the nuclear Bali bombing. Most probably, the footballer in the above sentence did not even pronounce the word “millisecond” – I would presume that a journalist who wrote the actual article (or his editor, who edited its final version) simply “beautified” the footballer’s account of events using the “fashionable” nuclear term that became associated with the Bali affair.

It is similar to the term “ground zero” oddly used to call the former site of the World Trade Center (and it, too, was used by apparent “commoners”, such as reporters, almost immediately after the Twin Towers collapse, as you remember). Yet the “millisecond” is much more incriminating than even “ground zero”. Theoretically, someone who wants to get a full use of descriptive language might employ such a “beautiful” term as “ground zero” even in case when there is no any nuclear stuff involved (since usage of “ground zero” after the 9/11 was intentionally promoted by hired English linguists for cheating reasons). By contrast, the word “millisecond” could not have been used in any “conventional” meaning in any case – it is simply too specific to be used as a metaphor. This incriminating word alone has betrayed that awful and “confidential” truth for the “patricians” in the most successful manner. With this particular slip of the tongue the cheaters have been caught red-handed.

However, since I presume, that the reader of this book might not be as tough as to become satisfied with this simple, yet exhaustive piece of proof alone, I would offer several more proofs.

Above – Abu-Bakar Bashir. An alleged Bali nuclear bomber, acquitted by the court. Photo courtesy my friend Voja Miladinovic, a freelance journalist who used to interview Bashir.

Well-known Muslim cleric Abu Bakar Bashir²⁸⁴, who was accused of being a “spiritual leader” of the so-

²⁸⁴ Abu Bakar Bashir, an Indonesian – a well-known vocal critic of anti-Muslim hysteria in general. He was accused of being a spiritual leader of “Jemaah Islamiah” by the Americans, who demanded his extradition to the U.S. The then president of Indonesia, Megawati Sukarnoputri, even though he gave in to the American pressure and agreed to arrest him, did not dare to transfer Bashir to the U.S. custody, given his popularity among Indonesian people. Instead, he was charged in the Indonesian court of law, where he eventually beat all these ridiculous accusations. Among the most brave of Bashir’s statements are these: “Al-Qaeda” was created by the CIA only for the reason of persecuting Muslims; “Jemaah Islamiah” does not exist at all; “September 11 was a false flag attack by America and Israel to provide an excuse to attack Muslims in Afghanistan and Iraq”; “Bali bombing” was the job of Israelis; and, what is the most shocking: that the initial “conventional” bombs – hand-made by some Muslim simpletons in the case of the Bali bombing – have been at the very last moment replaced by a very low caliber “mini-nuke”, supplied by some Mossad agents. It was his second statement. In his very first statement to this effect Bashir presumed that the micro-nuclear device was an American-made one and the perpetrators were the Americans. In addition to all of this, in reply to claims of the Australian Prime-Minister John Howard, who made it so bold as to claim so on behalf of all Australians and said that the Australians would be “extremely disappointed, even distressed” at the news of Bashir’s release, Bashir called on Howard to convert to Islam in order to save him from hell and receive God’s forgiveness. An utterly seditious thing could be concluded from the above portrait of Mr. Bashir. The point is that he conspicuously wears moustache. It shall be known, that typical moron so-called “Muslims” of the latest Wahhabi breed that was created by the Freemasons in the recent years, keep their long beards, but always shave away their moustache. It is because in one of stories about Prophet Mahomet, prior to a called “Jemaah Islamiah” terrorist organization and of inspiring the Bali bombing, claimed that it was a “mini-nuke” used in that bombing.

Why would this old man claim so, if he is not a nuclear scientist, not a counter-terrorism specialist, not a combat engineer, not an expert in explosives, and not even a lay conspiracy theorist (he apparently does not even know how to search Google or Wikipedia – to indulge himself in evolving those theories)? Where would he get such a strange notion from that certain “mini-nukes” exist in This World and that one of them was used to annihilate the Sari Night Club in Bali?

Try to use your logic. The answer is quite obvious. It is because under the pressure of the U.S. Government, Indonesian authorities were forced to arrest Bashir and put him on trial in the Indonesian court. However, an Indonesian court of law apparently differs from those clown-like productions of “U.S. military courts” at Guantanamo Bay (or even from similar clown-like productions held on the continental U.S. territory – akin to those court trials of 9/11-related criminal and civil cases, in particular).

In the case of the Indonesian court (even if the actual hearings were conducted behind closed doors) there would be true pieces of evidence brought to the trial. Therefore, it would not be possible to withhold the full truth of a “mini-nuke” used in Bali, in reality, from either – the court itself, from the defending party, or from the prosecuting party. Considering that it was a “confidential” matter, the accused might have been required to sign a non-disclosure contract in regard to the “awful nuclear Bali truth”, but there would be no way to avoid informing the defendant that he is actually being accused of the very nuclear bombing. I hope, the reader of this book understands this logic.

When the trial was over and Bashir was found to be innocent and was released, he continued to possess that “confidential and awful nuclear truth” intended for the “patricians” only – despite an apparent fact that he himself was not a “patrician”. Considering that this old gentlemen is obviously healthy enough as not to be morally bound by any “non-disclosure contract” (if there was one at all) imposed on him in such circumstances – he apparently feels free to talk about this Bali “mini-nuke” publicly. Otherwise, Mr. Bashir, considering his age, education, profession and other specifics (he is a Muslim cleric, primarily, who is more interested in studying the Holy Qur’an, instead of searching the Internet in pursuit of conspiracy theories), would never ever arrive at this thought – that a certain so-called “mini-nuke” might have been used. Most probably, he did not even know what that “mini-nuke” is and how it works.

Now, I guess, this second piece of proof is enough for you? Well, here is one more, in case the above one was not enough.

It is probably known to the reader that the Indonesian criminal court eventually found a certain crazy man named “Amrozi” guilty of being a Bali bomber. It seems that “nuclear” is the word that was apparently reserved for a confidential part of the sentence (if any). So that for the “plebeians”, Amrozi was found guilty of being a bomber, and for the “patricians” – Amrozi was found guilty of being a nuclear bomber.

Of course, some Indonesian politicians were not happy at all with such findings. For some really thinking “patricians” it would be indeed unacceptable. Where would an Indonesian citizen acquire a “mini-nuke”, if Indonesia does not produce nuclear weapons and nuclear weapons could only be foreign-made?

On Monday, 18 November 2002, Indonesian Parliamentary Speaker Amien Rais said that he questioned the validity of the police conclusion that “Amrozi” was the main perpetrator of the Bali bombings which claimed more than 187 lives. Rais was supported by Deputy House Speaker A.M. Fatwa, who stated, *“My conscience says that he is not a key actor. I don’t believe that Amrozi has the capability to make all kinds of the preparations for the bombings, like setting off a kind of micro nuclear bomb in Bali.”*²⁸⁵

If someone does not believe the author of these lines and might think that he is simply speculating on certain battle against unbelievers the Prophet told his warriors to shave off their moustache, so that during the battle, the “true Muslim could be recognized from the unbeliever by the absence of his moustache”. The modern so-called “Muslims” took this command of the Prophet literally (exactly like they do with the mentioning of “four” wives which they do not permit more than four, despite Prophet Mahomet used to have 13 wives) and demand that “true Muslim” must shave his mustache. It shall be presumed, therefore, that Mr. Bashir is by no means that kind of a moron and therefore he is not a “Wahhabi”.

some uncertainties, then I hope one would, at last, believe the real “patrician” – the Deputy House Speaker of a huge country with a population of over 200 million people. The big politician says about a “mini-nuke” and you would better believe him – it was a “mini-nuke”; do not even doubt it.

It shall be mentioned that although Indonesia is not an obedient puppet of the United States – like Australia – and so to convince Indonesian leaders to keep their mouths shut in regard to the nuclear truth of the Bali bombing, seemed not to be easy, there was one specific factor in favor of the official silencing of the Indonesians. It was because Bali was nothing else than a world-famous resort. Revealing to the “plebeians” the awful truth would almost surely wipe Bali Island from the map of resorts – it would be about the same as if to reveal the truth about the three nuclear explosions in Manhattan to ecology-obsessed yuppies who speculate on the stock-exchange a few blocks away.

It is well-known fact that lay civilians would never bother to calculate any “safe radiation doses” and whatever officials would later say in regard to the radiation safety, after a certain nuclear catastrophe, would never be accepted. There is simply no way of explaining to the plebs that some levels of radiation are safe and only some are dangerous, because the mere word “radiation” would scare them nearly to death in the first instance. Actually, the “mini-nuke” used in its “micro-mode”, in the Bali case, did not produce any long-lasting dangerous levels of radioactive contamination of surroundings (the petty 0.01 kiloton is very different compared to the three x150 kilotons that exploded in Lower Manhattan, as you could imagine). In only a few days, residual radiation caused by the Bali “mini-nuke” had subsided to very reasonable levels, and in a few weeks it disappeared altogether. Unfortunately, you would never be able to get the lay civilians to comprehend this obvious fact... The plebs would always remember that Bali Island and Chernobyl are something similar and the Bali resort would never be the resort again.

One has to be fair – the silence of the Indonesian officials in regard to this topic was understandable, because the nuclear weapons and the nuclear blackmail always travel together – hand in hand. However, even in these circumstances, the Indonesian Deputy House Speaker was brave enough to voice the matter.

There is one more important fact that deserves to be mentioned also. The then President of Indonesia – Megawati Sukarnoputri – immediately after the Bali bombing had some consultations with high-ranking U.S. officials. On her way back, she stopped in Bali and apparently gave some orders. Following her orders, the entire soil in the immediate vicinity of the hypocenter of the explosion, as well as around the area of the former Sari night club, had been promptly removed and buried in some unknown location (most possibly thrown into the deep sea). Indeed, the workers removed that soil to quite a great depth.

It could have been only done with one reason in mind: to prevent possible independent researches from collecting samples of the soil for studying them for typical radioactive isotopes found after nuclear explosions. In fact, many independent researchers promptly noticed that it was nothing but a nuclear blast, and such independent sampling collection could have been expected at any time. The general performance of the authorities after the 2002 Bali blast was not much different from that in the former WTC site: they promptly removed not only debris, but even the soil in order to prevent any possible investigation into this matter. This alone is actually more than enough to convince oneself that it was nothing, but a nuclear bombing, but, still, I would like to prove it more comprehensively.

Here are some technical details also – just to make sure that it was a nuclear weapon used, indeed.

An official – alias “open”, alias “plebeian” version of the Bali bombing says: it was about one ton of conventional explosives packed in a jeep-like vehicle, which exploded in the immediate vicinity of the Sari Night Club, causing immediate deaths of 187 people and fatal injuries to many others, huge fireballs – allegedly from cooking gas cylinders that happened to be nearby, demolition of buildings around the blast spot, and huge fires spreading around. There is a “confidential” version, of course – which says the half-truth: it was a “mini-nuke” that went off at the minimum possible yield (“mini-nukes” all have variable yield) – at about 0.01 to 0.015 kiloton in TNT yield (which is true) and that “mini-nuke” belonged to the so-called “Al-Qaeda” (which is not true, of course).

Unlike in the case with the WTC destruction, where we had to disprove the “second truth”, while disregarding the contemptible “first truth”, here we have another objective. We have to prove that the “second truth” (at least, from the technical point of view) is the true one and therefore we have to disprove here the “first truth” – alias its “plebeian version”. Putting it in a simple way: we have to prove here that it was indeed a nuclear explosion, and not an explosion of any conventional materials.

So, here it is.

1. An explosion of any amount of conventional explosives (however big – does not matter – even if it were 1 ton, or 2, or 5, or even 25 tons of these explosives) packed in any kind of car – be it a passenger car, a jeep-like, a lorry-like, or even a motorcycle-like – would NEVER leave any crater on the ground. It is because the energy of such an explosion would propagate to any direction, except the downwards – i.e. except the direction towards the earth.

You have to know, that explosives, loaded onto any vehicle, would be above the ground at least over half-meter, moreover, being separated from the earth's surface by a metallic bottom of the carrying car, in addition. All those gases from an explosion have an interesting "habit" – they "prefer" to propagate only to those directions where they meet the least resistance. They simply refuse to propagate downwards while being exploded in the car and would go anywhere else, but not down into the ground. As a result of such an explosion, the ground beneath the car would not feature any crater whatsoever – not even the smallest one. A crater can only be created by an explosive device buried (at least, slightly) into the ground. As a variety – a crater could be created by an aviation bomb, or by an artillery shell, which fell into the ground and due to its inertia managed to penetrate the earth's surface, at least a little bit, before actually exploding. In no other case, would (or could) a crater be created.

Here is one of the most seditious photos of the 2002 Bali bombing, which was not intended for the public.

And this is how a car prefers to explode.

The two photographs below show how scenes of car-bombings look like in reality: cars loaded with explosives do not leave any crater – not even the smallest one.

I hope now it is understandable why the tightly controlled mass media, which is intended to treat the "plebeians", was not eager at all to release this picture featuring the crater to the public?

Actually, the above one that shows the crater from the Bali explosion has never been released as a picture; it was just accidentally shown once on the TV and recorded by some nice guy. It has never been shown again, but sometimes, even a single TV frame, or even one slip of the tongue is enough. Here we can see a crater, a huge crater. I hope it is clear to everyone that this crater could not have been caused by an explosion of a jeep-like vehicle packed with one ton of explosives.

This crater alone proves that the “plebeian” version of the Bali bombing’s “truth” is a lie. Even if there were some alleged car at the scene – packed with some explosives, as claimed, it was not the main device that actually annihilated the Sari Night Club and its entire surroundings. It was something else – slightly buried into the earth (otherwise it won’t leave any crater) – and this “something” was much more powerful than one ton of cheap conventional explosives.

What is the most laughable (if this matter is only laughable at all) – when three years later a new bombing occurred in Bali, the then head of the anti-terrorist Indonesian unit, Major General Anshad Mbai²⁸⁶, plainly stated that since, that time, there were not any craters created by the explosions, it must be presumed that it was suicidal bombers, who wore the explosives on themselves, so the explosives were above the ground and could not make any craters...

The picture above shows the consequences of 2002 Bali bombing which are very typical for nuclear explosions. The car in front was subjected to thermal radiation from nuclear fireballs. That is why its color on its “shady” side managed to survive, while on all of its parts facing the actual nuclear blast have been completely burnt. It would never happen in a case of flames – because the flames would destroy the painting in every part of the car. However, in this particular case the car has been subjected to the irradiated heat (also called “thermal radiation”), but not to flames.

The indication that it was a mini-nuke blast is that the car’s wheels managed to retain rubber tires. It testifies that the actual fireballs continued to irradiate heat for too brief an amount of time to burn the thick rubber, but still being enough to completely burn the thin layer of blue painting.

Just behind the car on the above photo there is a fallen tree. It fell by the air-blast wave of the nuclear explosion. Note that an obvious direction of air-blast wave propagation (as shown by direction of the tree fall) coincides with the direction of irradiation of the heat – which damaged the car’s color (the latter’s direction is very easy to imagine looking at the “shady” parts now represented by the remaining blue color). The remains of the building behind managed to retain only those parts that were made of steel and concrete. However, it’s much weaker parts – such as walls, roof etc. – were completely destroyed by the air-blast wave. The back of the blue car was obviously hit “head-on” by air-blast wave – and this hit managed to deform even the car’s side to a certain extent.

Yet another revealing picture of the half-burned car after the 2002 Bali nuclear blast was shown in this book in one of the previous chapters – where the author of these lines attempted to disprove the “mini-nuke” Conspiracy Theory in regard to the WTC demolition. That picture of the half-burned green car is, perhaps, even more revealing than the picture of the blue car above. I recommend the reader to refresh his memory and to review that most incriminating photo right now.

Before we proceed to the next consideration, I guess you may need to get some basic data on mini-nukes’ explosions. Otherwise, it would be difficult to comprehend the consequences without having any basic premises to compare. Here it is²⁸⁷:

A regular 0.01 kt yield nuclear explosion, air ignition will make:

Fireball max light radius = 25.4 meters;
Max time light pulse width = 0.011 seconds;
Max fireball airburst radius = 10.6 meters;
Time of max temperature = 0.0032 seconds;
Area of radiation exposure = 0.12 sq. miles;
(probably, in this case the last parameter refers to the “lethal” exposure – with over 500 Roentgens)

Blast wave Effects:

Overpressure =
5 lb/sq. inch (160 mph) radius = 0.09 km;
1 lb/sq. inch radius = 0.26 km;

Underground ignition:

Crater diameter = 56 feet with a Richter magnitude of 3.52 (my note²⁸⁸).

Declassified data belongs to the U.S. Government.

In addition, I guess, someone might be interested in the actual effects of the overpressure. Here they are (please, note that “lb/sq. inch” is nothing else than “pounds per square inch” – otherwise called “PSI”):

At 1 PSI overpressure: Window glass shatters. Light injuries from fragments occur. Persons knocked down by blast wave. Typical houses made uninhabitable.

At 3 PSI overpressure: Residential structures collapse. Unreinforced masonry or brick walls are destroyed. Rupture of oil storage tanks. Serious injuries are common, fatalities may occur.

At 5 PSI overpressure: Most buildings collapse, except for concrete reinforced buildings. Injuries are universal, fatalities are widespread.

At 10 PSI overpressure: Reinforced concrete buildings are severely damaged or demolished. Severe lung and heart damage occurs. Many people are killed.

At 20 PSI overpressure: Heavily built concrete buildings are severely damaged and demolished. Limbs can be blown off. Fatalities approach 100%.

At 80 PSI overpressure: Even heavily reinforced concrete is heavily damaged. Skulls are crushed, fatalities are total.

Ironically, once I had looked at the overpressure effects, I remembered one interesting detail. It does not have any relevance to the current Chapter, though; so it is merely a lyrical digression from the main point: on orders of the then New York Mayor Rudolph Giuliani, his Emergency Operations Center (EMC) on the 23rd floor of now defunct building # 7 had been heavily re-enforced; in addition to the rest, it had been fitted with glass able to withstand winds of 200 mph^{289 290}.

²⁸⁷ This info was found on this webpage: <http://www.thepriceofliberty.org/06/09/25/ward.htm>

²⁸⁸ The author of these lines disagrees with the last particular digit – because 3.52 magnitude seismic signal belongs actually to 0.1 kiloton (100 tons of TNT), but not to 0.01 kiloton (10 tons of TNT) as claimed.

If you look at the above description of the “micro-nuke” data, you will notice that the 5 PSI overpressure, which collapses most buildings, except for concrete reinforced ones, and causes widespread fatalities, is equivalent to only 160 mph wind’s speed. This means that in WTC 7, of all the glass, only the glass in Mr. Giuliani’s emergency office could withstand the heavier overpressure of an air blast-wave.

Now you could probably guess how strong the actual building 7 was. Indeed, it was one of the strongest civil buildings in the world. It would apparently withstand even some nuclear explosion not far away. Obviously, if a Hiroshima-sized atomic bomb of laughable 13 kiloton yield exploded nearby, it would not be able to topple the WTC-7. Based on this premise, we can conclude that one must be completely insane to believe that it would be possible to collapse the WTC-7 by any ordinary explosives (not even to say about fires). However, it was just a lyrical digression. We now have to come back to the actual topic of this chapter – the “mini-nuke” used in Bali, where there were no buildings as strong as the WTC-7. Most of the buildings there are either made from wood, or from bricks, or, at best case – from the cheapest kind of concrete with primitive thin metal core that might constitute “skeletons” of the buildings. As everybody can imagine, these kind of buildings would be completely destroyed even by an air-blast wave with only 3 PSI overpressure.

Now we can try to calculate a size of the “kill zone” of such a “micro-nuke” – alias “mini-nuke” which was set to explode at the lowest possible yield – 10 ton or 0.01 kiloton of TNT equivalent. The term “kill-zone” is a traditional reference to a certain designated area where 99% of the people will be presumably killed.

Within the area of fireballs (which will have the double radius – i.e. $10.6+10.6\approx 21$ meters) everybody will be simply reduced to ashes or even vaporized. I hope you agree with this presumption.

Within the area of light (which is $25.4+25.4\approx 51$ meters) everybody would also be killed without any doubt – I think it is also an unquestionable and self-evident presumption.

Within the area of 90+90=180 meters in diameter there would be air-blast wave with an overpressure of 5 PSI – so, within this area, not all, but many people would be killed by the air-blast wave alone.

However, in the lesser radius – let’s say $50+50=100$ meters – the overpressure will be much higher, probably about double ~15 to 10 PSI (diminishing from a hypocenter to an external border of this imaginary zone, of course), so there, almost everybody would be killed.

Besides, all flimsy buildings of the Balinese style will be completely demolished. Even within the 5 PSI overpressure zone, all the Balinese style buildings will be destroyed, because the local people do not build heavily reinforced night clubs and Giuliani-bunker-type restaurants there.

Even in farther distances – within the 1 PSI overpressure zone – which will be in our case $260+260$ meters = over half-kilometers in diameter – many typical houses would be made uninhabitable.

Within an imaginary intermediate zone – closer than 260 meters to the hypocenter, but farther than 90 meters, the overpressure of air-blast wave will be over 1-, but less than 5 PSI. Please, look above at the typical damage inflicted by the 3 PSI – which is known to collapse residential structures.

Based on these primitive calculations, you could probably imagine that there will be definitely some zones with 4 PSI overpressure, with 2 PSI overpressure, with 7 PSI overpressure etc. – and all of them will cause corresponding injuries and corresponding damage to the structures (and corresponding fatalities as well).

Now let us try to calculate zones of dangerous radiation exposure: since it was the “0.12 square mile” zone mentioned in the above declassified U.S. data on the mini-nukes, then the radius of such a round area will be about 315 meters.

It should be known also, that even though a so-called “lethal” dose of radiation of 500 R is called “lethal”, it does not mean that everybody who would get this dose would necessarily die – modern medicine could still save some people by its intensive care – and particularly by a marrow transplantation; there are known cases that even people who were struck by over 1000 R was able to survive the initial sickness and to live for some time. On the other hand, there are many cases when patients die in only 10 days from heavy cases of radiation sicknesses caused by slightly over 200 R doses. Moreover, traditionally 50% of patients die in a 30-days dead-line from medium cases of radiation sickness – after receiving between 100 and 200 R doses. It is about the same as a bullet – it might kill you or it might not – in some case; especially if you have good luck and some good doctors happen to be nearby.

Note also, that the “nominally lethal” dose of 500 Roentgens is in accordance with the U.S. standards, while in accordance with the Soviet standards the “nominally lethal” dose is 250 Roentgens and I am not quite sure which one is closer to the truth. Anyhow, it must be understood, that any radiation dose over 100 R is considered already being dangerous for a man’s life, 250 R is considered to be extremely dangerous for a man’s life, and, at the same time, a nominally lethal dose of 500 R in some cases might not actually cause death – especially with appropriate medical help.

In case of such a 0.01 kiloton “micro-nuke” explosion, there is a big chance that someone would be fatally injured by ionizing radiation while standing 500 meters away from a hypocenter, and someone would somehow survive (mostly thanks to a modern medicine) while being only 120 meters away from the hypocenter.

There is still the third well-known destructive factor of a nuclear explosion – its radiation in the visible spectrum alias its “thermal radiation”, which is also an extremely dangerous thing – since it could instantly (in only 0.011 seconds – which is a maximal time of irradiation of light as claimed in the abovementioned data on “micro-nukes”) burn painting of passenger cars, like the one shown in the above photo. You can imagine what kind of burns it would cause to a man’s skin.

Here is another set of data on mini-nukes’ and micro-nukes’ explosions, as provided by the National Council on Radiation Protection and Measurements; this document could be downloaded from here: www.wnysmart.org/References/Radiological/MajorRadExposureNEJM.pdf .

This data shows in which distances (in meters) from a hypocenter any one of the three main destructive factors of a nuclear blast (air-blast wave, thermal radiation, and ionizing radiation), separately, would cause a 50% rate of fatality:

Yield (TNT)	Shock Wave (Air-blast wave)	Thermal Radiation (Radiation from fireballs in visible spectrum plus infra-red and ultra-violet rays)	Ionizing Radiation (Penetrating radiation - alias gamma-radiation and neutrons)
0.01 kt	60 meters	60 meters	250 meters
0.1 kt	130 meters	200 meters	460 meters
1 kt	275 meters	610 meters	790 meters
10 kt	590 meters	1800 meters	1200 meters

It shall be noted, that if you stand 60 meters away from a hypocenter of such a 0.01 kt “micro-nuclear” explosion, you will be killed with a probability of 50% by its air-blast wave; if you are lucky not to be killed (which is another 50% probability) – then you will be killed with a probability of 50% by thermal radiation (meaning you will be burned to death); so chances of survival would be decreased from 50% to only 25%. Then, if you won’t be killed even by thermal radiation, then you would be killed by ionizing radiation with a probability of another 50% – meaning that a finally calculated probability not to be killed by any of these three factors is decreasing to become only 12.5%.

However, this roughly calculated probability could be true if the killing zone of ionizing radiation in the above table would be also 60 meters – equal to that of the first two killing factors. However, considering that the killing zone of ionizing radiation is 250 meters, instead of 60, you could imagine that a man standing at a distance of 60 meters would have not much chance to survive – probably 1% or even less – against 12.5% as calculated above. At the very best case, one who is standing 60 meters away from the hypocenter and happened not to be killed, could be considered as “lucky” as to have from 30 to 45% of his body burnt to the extent that he would need a skin transplantation, and, in addition, he would need a bone marrow transplantation, because his chances to survive without it would be equal to zero. Certain mechanical injuries suffered from air-blast wave and, probably, from falling and flying debris could be considered negligible in comparison with the rest of injuries.

Thus, roughly, it shall be presumed that fatalities within a zone of 60-70 meters radius would be total, while in 70-90 meters – nearly total, and within 100 meters – still close to be total. And still even further – up to 350 meters – a great number of the people will be killed by ionizing radiation alone – especially considering that the summer-type Balinese housing does not protect from any penetrating radiation at all. Therefore there is no difference whether you are actually standing in the open or lying on your bed inside your house, being separated from the nuclear explosion by a couple of those thin walls.

Note also (considering data provided by the above table), that as lower is the yield of the “mini-nuke”, as greater is the disproportion in killing factors towards the supremacy of penetrating ionizing radiation. It is especially noticeable that in the lowest yield its danger exceeds almost five-fold the dangers represented by air-blast wave and by heat irradiating from the fireballs. However, when it comes to larger caliber nuclear weapons – especially ones exceeding 10 kiloton – the greatest killing distance belongs to thermal radiation. The light could kill even in farther distances than those gamma-rays and neutrons. For example, it is well-known fact that in Hiroshima, where they used slightly over 12 kiloton nuclear charge, the majority of casualties were because of burns, and much fewer (almost negligible in comparison) – due to ionizing radiation.

Please, take a careful look also at the 1 kiloton data. It is just an additional confirmation that the “second truth” of the U.S. Government – that the supposed “Osama bin Laden and Saddam Hussein Mass Murder, Inc.” could not have demolished the Twin Towers in New York by those alleged 1 kiloton “mini-nukes” as “confidentially” claimed. In such a case, the two, of 1 kiloton each, alleged nuclear explosions would kill too many people around the WTC site by ionizing radiation alone – which did not happen in reality.

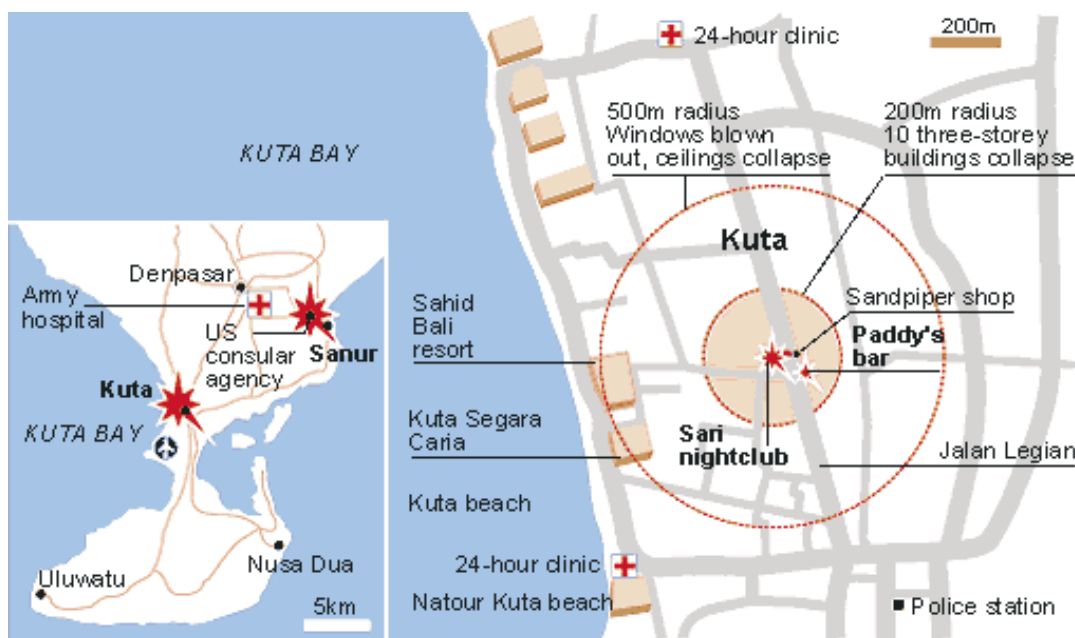

However, we are considering the Bali case now and what we need is the data on 0.01 kt. Please, look at it carefully. Here are killing distances of three main destructive factors of an atomic blast of 0.01 kiloton.

Yield	Shock Wave	Thermal Radiation	Ionizing Radiation
0.01 kt	60 meters	60 meters	250 meters

At least now, we have some basic data to base our future calculations upon.

Please, look at the crater first as shown in the above photo – inquirers depicted there are measuring its diameter with a measuring tape, because they were apparently trying to calculate the power of the actual explosion. This crater had the diameter, of course, less than 56 feet mentioned in the above set of data relevant to 0.01 kt “mini-nuke”. However, please, do not forget that the nuclear devise in the case of Bali was not buried too deep – so as to produce the maximal possible size of a crater and with a maximum of possible seismic signal. It was actually buried slightly below the roadbed. That is why the actual crater was reasonably small. Though, it must not deceive you into thinking that it was not a nuclear devise or into thinking that this nuclear devise was less than 0.01 kiloton in yield. The mere presence of the crater actually serves its main purpose – it proves that the “plebeian” version of the Bali bombing (which claims that it was a jeep-like vehicle packed with about 1 ton of conventional explosives) is a lie. That is the most important basic premise to begin with.

By the way – those guys who perpetrated the actual nuclear bombing could also place their “mini-nuke” above the ground. Let’s say, they could easily hide it into some building, perhaps, even on a second floor of it – in this case there would be no crater left at all and the damage could be much higher. But, apparently, the nuclear bombers did not want the effects of this nuclear explosion to be too obvious. It was primarily intended to impress the “patricians” alone, not to scare the “plebeians” to death. Would they detonate the “mini-nuke” above the ground – not only the “patricians” alone, but even the “plebeians” would understand at once that it was a nuclear explosion, but apparently it was not what the perpetrators really needed. That is why they had to hide it into the ground: this approach would minimize to a certain extent the visible factors of the nuclear explosion and also partly minimize damage inflicted by its air-blast wave and penetrating radiation. That is exactly why some crater has been left as evidence – not actually to prove to us that it was necessarily a nuclear bomb, but just to prove to us that it was not a car bomb and to prove to us that the official version is just a lie – to begin with.

It is well-known fact that the largest conventional aviation bomb is one of 10-ton caliber. When such a bomb explodes, it completely demolishes a block of a city street – if it is occupied by normal structures – cheap concrete-paneled or brick-walled housing etc. Though, it would not be able to cause the same damage if such a block is built-up by those modern concrete structures with steel reinforcement – the last ones might partly survive. Here (in the case of a largest conventional aviation bomb) we are talking about 10 tons of conventional explosives. This is exactly equal to 0.01 kiloton – the lowest possible yield of a modern “mini-nuke”.

The “plebeian” version of the “truth” claims that it was 10 times less – only 1 ton of conventional explosives used. Apparently, Australian cops – who initially concocted the “plebeian” version of “truth” – were reasonable enough not to insist that the bombers somehow managed to fit 10 tons of cheap conventional explosives into a small jeep-like vehicle and restricted their claims to only 1 ton. However, the actual amount of damage inflicted to surrounding buildings testifies that it could not have been done by a mere 1 ton of explosives. The radius of the zone where buildings were completely destroyed and the radius of the zone where buildings suffered certain damage to their walls, roofs etc., reveal to us that at least one typical aviation bomb of 10 tons must have been used to bomb the Sari Night Club (if not two of them simultaneously). The actual damage inflicted to the buildings clearly points to 0.01 kt yield. Does anyone seriously believe that 1 ton of cheap conventional explosives would cause 10, 3-story buildings to collapse at distances of 200 meters away from the blast? And further cause ceilings to collapse at distances of 500 meters away from the blast?

2. Amount of casualties and injuries inflicted. I think it is good to review some witnesses accounts – so it could be easily imagined what happened that night in Bali, so the injuries and damage could be also estimated. Here is one of the very first news releases about the bombing: Fox News, October 13, 2002²⁹¹:

“BALI, Indonesia — Two Americans were among the 188 clubgoers -- many of them foreign tourists -- killed in Bali Saturday night in a double terrorist bombing, the State Department has confirmed to Fox News. The island paradise was the scene of chaotic exodus after the bombing, possibly linked to Al Qaeda, which wounded more than 300. Three Americans were among the injured...”

When they talk about “double” – they must not deceive, especially considering that it was actually “triple”, not even “double”. Some two conventional bombs simultaneously went off in two other locations, one Suicide bomber in Paddy’s Bar(near to Sari Nightclub), and one near the U.S. Consulate, but they did not inflict any damage whatsoever: it was just a distraction from the main event – the bombing of the Sari Night Club. It is believed that some true Muslim simpletons who thought that they were fighting for a right cause had indeed prepared three bombs and planned to set them off in three different spots of Bali, but the Mossad agents in the case of the Sari Club managed “to add” the nuke. So when those simpletons were eventually caught, it appeared that it were “Muslim” nuclear bombers. To a certain extent, such a frame-up even looked “natural” – almost as “natural” as those “hijacked” planes that managed to penetrate steel perimeter columns of the former Twin Towers in New York. However, what we need here now is only technical details, not any background political intrigue.

The news release above put the death toll at 188 and another 300 wounded (of whom more than half would die in only a day or two and some more would die later). As everybody could see, the death toll is unbelievably high. It is tremendously high and totally unexplainable. I guess it is clear to everybody, that you would never be able to instantly kill a couple of hundreds of people plus injuring another three hundred of them even if you would have 1000 kg of the conventional explosives and a jeep-like vehicle. Even if you really try your best, it would never be possible to achieve such a performance rate.

It is clear that the death toll was due to a weapon of mass destruction, and by no means could such digits have been caused by any conventional weapons, especially self-made ones. Even the biggest possible conventional aviation bomb (factory-made one) of 10 ton dropped on the “packed” Sari Club would not kill and injure as many people as was the case – despite the fact that 10 ton and 0.01 kiloton are equal in a sense of the explosive energy. The problem with a nuclear device is that it kills not only by its actual explosion, but by at least three more destructive factors, which elevates it to a level of a “weapon of mass destruction”. It kills, in addition to an actual explosion, by its tremendous air-blast wave, by its penetrating radiation, and by its irradiated heat (alias “thermal radiation”).

Once you think about it, it would be easier to understand why the death toll was that high. It was because nuclear weapons feature their so-called “kill-zone” (where everybody would be killed with a probability of 99% - if not by air-blast wave, then by irradiated heat, if not by the heat – then by ionizing penetrating radiation); and so it was in the case in the Bali bombing. In a certain “kill-zone” everybody was killed, and slightly beyond the “kill-zone” even more people were killed. Yet even more people, who were not killed instantly, would die from lethal radiation exposure and from heavy burns (or, most probably, from the combination of the two) – during the next day or two. And even more people would die in a couple of week’s time. This is how the nuclear weapons work in general.

By the way – the figure of 188 provided by Australian cops is presumed to be inaccurate, because some independent investigators claim that there could be as many as 300 people instantly killed, but bodies of some of them were torn apart and burnt beyond any recognition. This is not counting those who were staying in close proximity to the hypocenter and could have been simply vaporized without any trace whatsoever. This is what was said, for example, by one of the most prominent independent investigators of the Bali “nuking” – late Joe Vialls²⁹², whose brave article about the Bali nuclear explosion was even once published by a certain major Indonesian newspaper on its front page (the entire edition of the newspaper on that day was taken off the shelves and destroyed by noon time on the Government’s orders):

“...Crude figures available at present indicate that a minimum of 40 Australians are still missing, 30 British, 7 German, 3 French and possibly 6 New Zealanders [one must not forget to add there several hundreds of native Indonesians – who supposed to have been in that vicinity as well.] I know this sounds gruesome, but if these figures are even close to accurate, then the authorities in Bali must have 86 x 120 lbs average weight of body parts in storage, before we make an allowance for dehydration and decomposition. Let us be generous and allow a full 30% deduction for dehydration and decomposition, meaning the authorities must currently have a minimum of 7,224 pounds [3.61 TONS] of body parts in storage awaiting identification...”

It is self-evident, that 3610 kg of charred (again: “c-h-a-r-r-e-d”) people’s remains could easily belong to a minimum of 100 different people, and in case of a maximum – the actual number of their respective late owners could be as high as a couple of thousand, if not more.

²⁹² Late Joe Vialls, who was, probably, a sole truth-seeker when it came to mini-nukes usage, maintained these web-sites which are still on-line (as of 2009): <http://vialls.net> , <http://joevialls.net> , <http://www.joevialls.co.uk> , <http://joevialls.lvo.info/> ; http://homepage.ntlworld.com/steveseymour/nuke/bali_micro_nuke.htm

Let us analyze some further scarcely published information about the 2002 Bali bombing – particularly in regard to the exact number of killed people. I guess it is obvious to the reader that the “plebeian” mass media would never update the initial number of the killed people, which on the day next after the initial perpetration was declared as being only “188”. However, even “188” + “300 wounded” was scary enough. These numbers are enough to suggest to a discerning reader that it had something to do with weapons of mass destruction. Of course, we have to presume the “patricians” were unhappy that the initial numbers had been published whatsoever. They would rather prefer not to publish anything at all, but it was, unfortunately, too late – by then the digits had been already published.

In any case, the final number of the killed has never been updated and it remains up to this date (10 years later) – only “188” killed and “over 300 injured”. It has never been added that most of those “over 300 injured” died in a couple of days to increase the first digit. It has never been updated in a sense that those initially “missing” were supposed to have been added to increase the first digit as well. The big number of killed and “missing” native Indonesians has never been added to the first digit either. It is clear that the final number of casualties could easily reach the “2000” digit and could even exceed it, but to expect the cowardly “patricians” to publish this awful number would be too much to expect from them.

It is because such published number of casualties, instead of showing the supposed “brutality” of “evil Muslims”, would prove to the “plebeians” exactly the opposite. However “evil” those “Muslims” could be, they apparently do not possess any weapons of mass destruction. While only the weapons of mass destruction could cause such heavy casualties as in the case of the Bali bombing.

Still, it would be a good idea to analyze some articles in this regard – so we could try to update the initial figure of the dead by calculating it on our own. Here is one: “Two New Zealanders confirmed dead in Bali bombings. 12:00 AM Wednesday October 16, 2002”²⁹³ (the actual article is quite big, so here are only some excerpts; words in bold highlighted by me especially for those who wish to practice their newly acquired ability to read between the lines):

“...Friends and families, including some from New Zealand, face the grim task of identifying loved ones killed in the blast. Many of the bodies are severely burned. Late yesterday relatives began arriving in the Bali capital, Denpasar. They face a Macabre scene at Sanglah hospital morgue, where for hours yesterday afternoon body bags were unloaded from refrigerated trucks and carried to be identified.

New Zealand diplomats from the embassy in Jakarta had the grim job of checking the procession of body bags for numbers or, where numbers had been torn off, opening the bags to check identities.

Envoy Nigel Alladyce, speaking generally about the hospital scene, said: “I think many will have to be identified by forensic means because from what I have seen so far many are charred beyond recognition.” Mr Alladyce said some bodies were not complete and some bags contained body parts. Australia has sent extra forensic teams and morgue services to Bali, but fears are growing that some bodies may never be recovered.

“There may still be more bodies - and I'm sorry to put it as crudely as this - but who were very close to where the bomb went off and the bodies have disintegrated,” Australian Foreign Minister Alexander Downer said yesterday after visiting the bomb site.

Most of the dead are Australian, but it is believed people from around two dozen countries were killed. The NZ Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Trade says no injured New Zealanders are left in Bali. Six were evacuated to Darwin by the Royal Australian Air Force, and others went to Singapore and Taipei.

The ministry is still seeking further information on 340 people believed to be in Bali who have yet to contact friends and relatives...

Some 769 New Zealanders staying on the Indonesian resort island have been confirmed as alive and well...

Mr. Parker was born in Timaru, but lived for a time in central Wellington where he worked as a sales representative for energy drink company Frucor Beverages. After the atrocity, Mr. Parker was admitted to Sanglah Hospital. He was listed on the official website of the Bali Crisis Centre at the hospital as one of

²⁹³ http://www.nzherald.co.nz/category/story.cfm?c_id=340&objectid=2999418

35 people who died there...

Let us read the above article with open eyes. What is said there could be easily re-phrased as something of this kind:

“After the initial collecting of the recognizable bodies of the dead people immediately after the blast, it could have been said that the confirmed number of dead was 188 people (probably, including those dead recognizable Indonesians).

However, considering that even by the October 16 (i.e. 3 and a half days after such an awful occurrence) there were still over 340 New Zealanders alone (not counting the Australians who are more numerous visitors to Bali than the New Zealanders, and not counting tourists from several other countries – such as Singapore, Taiwan, European countries, Russia, Japan, Korea, USA, Canada, and, of course, the Indonesians) who have not yet contacted their families.

So, it must be presumed that those poor 340 New Zealanders would never contact their families even later, because they were either completely vaporized, or reduced to ashes, or torn apart and burned beyond recognition.

The mortality rate among those injured was also extremely high – out of those over 300 injured, at least 35 quickly died while in only one of Balinese hospitals, many others died in other hospitals, and many more will die later – even after being transported to hospitals in Australia, Singapore and Taiwan, or on the way.”

One could probably estimate the potential number of the “missing” Australians who would never contact their families (apart from those who were found more or less complete and pronounced dead). If it were 340 of the missing New Zealanders, then it could be easily 1000 (if not more) of the Australians. The point is that the Australians are much more numerous and are more frequent visitors to Bali in comparison with the New Zealanders. Inside the actual Sari Night club alone (where everybody supposed to have been vaporized, not even “incinerated”), only on its dance floor there were, at minimum, 300 people, most of them Australians. Here is a confirming quotation from the same article “The last dance” where the footballer used the nuclear term “millisecond” when describing what happened with the Sari Night club:

So, we are talking here about at least 240 Australians that supposed to have been disappeared without any trace whatsoever because of being reduced to plasmatic condition being too close to the hypocenter of the nuclear explosion. Add here some few hundreds of Australians who were hanging around the Sari Club that supposed to have been simply incinerated (i.e. reduced to ashes, and so – to disappear without any trace as well). Now you could, at last, imagine that if it were 340 New Zealanders who “went missing”, it must have been, at the very minimum, 1500 Australians who went missing too (out of which, perhaps, some could later be “found” in a form of those “charred human remains” totaling “a minimum of 7,224 pounds [3.61 TONS] of body parts in storage awaiting identification”).

Add here corresponding numbers of apparently missing Taiwanese, Koreans, Singaporeans, Europeans, Americans, Canadians, Japanese, and others. Add here a corresponding number of the poor Indonesians, who permanently resided in some small islands (where there was no telephone system to contact their families) – those who came to Bali in order to earn some money working as unregistered hostesses, waiters, cooks, cleaners, etc.

After estimating the potential number of missing + confirmed number of dead + definite number of those who would die from among those “over 300 injured” (most of them would die in any case) – you could probably guess the final number:

It was well over 3000 people actually killed in the 2002 Bali bombing, and not just only “188” as claimed on the next day after counting recognizable dead bodies.

The 2002 Bali bombing by its casualty rate could be compared to 9/11. However, unlike the 9/11 project, which had been primarily intended for the public consumption, the 2002 Bali bombing had never been intended as such; so, nobody would report to the “plebeians” the exact numbers.

Anyhow, it shall be understood that you would never be able to kill that great number of people like shown in the Bali case and to cause even greater numbers to be completely “missing” if you only have at your disposal a jeep-like vehicle and only one ton of cheap conventional explosives. I think it is clear enough that it was the pure nuclear bombing and nothing else than that.

Let us review some more witnesses’ accounts.

*“All the buildings in the vicinity just collapsed, cars overturned and debris from the buildings fell on them, he [a bystander] said, without giving his hometown. I have never seen anything so horrible.”*²⁹⁵

– What do you think: could “all buildings in the vicinity collapse and car overturn” just because of 1 ton of explosives? Just try to be realistic. Of course, it was a nuclear explosion and nothing else.

*“Australia tourist Rachel Hughes, 18, said she and a friend had just arrived in Kuta when the blast ripped through the nightclub, smashing the window of their hotel room. “Looking outside ... people are yelling and screaming, they are all going: ‘They are all going to die,’ ” she said.... Standing in the foyer of the Bounty Hotel, ‘people were just walking in, blood dripping off them, burns to their face, skin coming off them,’ she told Australia’s Seven Network.”*²⁹⁶

This one is even clearer. All you need is just to be able to read “between the lines”. The problem is that a conventional explosion, no matter how big it might be – does not produce any heat or any flames. It produces only extremely overheated gases, which rapidly propagate to every direction from a center of an explosion and if anyone would happen in the explosion area, he would simply be torn apart by these gases. Though, those, standing farther, would not suffer from any heat – they would be struck by air-blast wave (any conventional explosion also features some air-blast wave). Thus, in the worst case they would be killed, in the intermediate case – thrown to the ground and might also suffer some shell-shock syndrome, and in any other case – they would be slightly hit by this air-blast wave without any serious consequences.

However, no one could be burned because of any conventional explosion.

Those things described above – like “burns to their face” and “skin coming off them” – while in the same time those poor people retained their ability to walk on their own – reveals that they were subjected to the very irradiated heat like those half-burned cars depicted in the picture of Bali bombing. It could only happen when there was a nuclear explosion in the open.

The above statement is the hardest possible proof of the “mini-nuke” being involved. But the most important is that this Rachel Hughes, being only 18, and apparently being not a qualified Civil Defense / military specialist, managed to establish a certain peculiar fact: all these people, who were visibly not injured seriously enough, since they were evidently walking in on their owns, were all, nevertheless, going to die, according to her. Why that 18-years old girl was so sure about that all of them were going to die? If she saw with her very eyes that they were able to walk? Try to guess why.

It is because someone at the first moment has told her that it was indeed a nuclear explosion and all those still able to walk were exposed not only to thermal radiation that made their skins coming off them, but also to lethal doses of ionizing radiation. Do you have any other explanation as to the supernatural shrewdness revealed in the statement of the 18-years old girl?

Apparently, the Australian cops decided to hide the truth of a nuclear explosion from the public only later and Miss Rachel Hughes managed to become one of those initially “initiated”. Hence her otherwise strange opinion, which, nonetheless, would prove to be right just in a few days only: those who have burns to their faces and to other parts of their bodies would have no chance to survive. Since, simultaneously with these light burns, they have received doses of ionizing radiation several times

²⁹⁵ <http://www.cuttingedge.org/News/n1715.cfm>

²⁹⁶ <http://www.guardian.co.uk/indonesia/Story/0,,811173,00.html> ;
http://findarticles.com/p/articles/mi_qn4155/is_20021013/ai_n12486107 ;
<http://www.wtaworld.com/showthread.php?referrerid=38048&t=41342>

exceeding nominally lethal ones. All of them would die despite being able to walk immediately after the explosion. Their deaths would start on the 2nd day after their exposure to ionizing radiation and would continue for the next two weeks – it would directly depend on how heavy the individual dose was received by each victim – 3000 R, or 2000, or 1000, or only a single nominally lethal one (which is 500 R)...

“Within 10-15 seconds of the first explosion at Paddy’s Bar, a devastating explosion was detonated in front of the Sari Club ... The explosion resulted in a tremendous release of energy in the form of gas, heat and light. This essentially caused a pressure wave, fragmentation and fire - all of which contributed to the devastation seen at the Sari Club. As a measure of the force of the blast, the sound from the explosion was heard up to 15 km away.”²⁹⁷

This particular one is nothing else, than the official claim of the cowardly Australian Government, which is afraid to scare the “plebeians” by the nuclear truth of the event. The Government is actually scared even more than the very “plebeians” whom it fears to scare... Just try to read this claim again and think about the “release of energy”, moreover, “tremendous”, the “pressure wave”, “heat” and “light” and “contributed”, and think – could it be caused by a conventional explosion of 1 ton of cheap conventional explosives supposedly used in Bali (I mean here claimed to be used in the “plebeian” version of “truth”)? Of course, it could not be – the mere mentioning of these very factors clearly points to a nuclear explosion. Moreover, it should be known that ordinary explosions do not cause any fires to surrounding buildings, neither – any burns to people’s skin. A “conventional” explosion (however huge it might be does not matter) does not feature any thermal radiation whatsoever. All those burns and fires are caused exclusively by thermal radiation of a nuclear explosion and by nothing else.

Intriguing words of a tourist in Bali, who had earlier survived attacks on London during the nineties:

“I felt my hotel shake violently and ran to look out of the window. In the distance I could see a large white mushroom cloud, and knew I wasn’t looking at an ordinary attack”²⁹⁸.

Here it is especially important to implement not only our ability to read between the lines, but our recently acquired ability to treat witnesses’ accounts of events properly, using our common sense, in addition to what we actually see and hear from a witness.

I think everybody knows what the mushroom form of a cloud means in reality. Explosions of conventional materials do not cause any “mushroom clouds”. This account of events is probably the most incriminating.

However, the most important is this: the guy continues to talk something really strange: he is talking about a “non-ordinary” attack – moreover, he is obviously connecting this “non-ordinariness” to the form of the cloud which he describes as a “mushroom cloud” – and it is pretty obvious in his statement. What does he mean? Have you ever heard that some bomb attack in the times of peace could be “ordinary”? Especially, if it is a bomb attack against a peaceful night-club in a peaceful tourist destination?

I think that any bomb attack against civilians in the times of peace is something “extraordinary” by default, especially in Bali, where it has never happened before, because Bali is not the same as Iraq, Kashmir or Lebanon. So, what kind of “extraordinariness” he is talking about if any bomb attack is already an extraordinary thing? Try to guess what. Obviously, some group of tourists in Bali were immediately informed of the nuclear explosion and that is exactly what he is talking about.

Why – you might ask, have those “plebeians” been informed about something “confidential” which has been intended exclusively for the “patricians”?

It is difficult to answer this question, but, as you can see, the fact remains – this particular guy had been informed, surely. Otherwise, he would not be able to connect the “mushroomness” of the cloud to the “extraordinariness” of the attack... (In fact, the abovementioned statement of this guy, as well as the previous statement of the 18-years old girl, remind me of the “witness testimony” of the Fire Department photographer Lieutenant Richard Smiouskas²⁹⁹ who upon feeling of a strong earthquake that knocked him down the floor seconds before the collapse of one of the Twin Towers, “thought” that it might have been a “bomb” and that the bomb might have been “nuclear”.)

To answer the actual question “Why were they informed?” It could be that at the first moment some Indonesian military specialists managed to discover that it was a nuclear explosion and rumors of it spread rapidly, before they could have been suppressed. Or, it could be another reason: probably, it was either necessary to convince some tourists to leave the resort immediately, because it supposed to become radioactively contaminated. Or, might be, in addition, it was necessary to convince them to undergo some preventive treatment – because even those tourists, who were quite far from the hypocenter to be affected by air-blast wave or by thermal radiation, could still receive certain doses of ionizing radiation (including light, medium, heavy and definitely lethal ones), as well as they could swallow radioactive dust immediately after the explosion.

In any case, all of those who had been informed about the “nuclear truth” have been forced to sign non-disclosure contracts later. There should be no doubt in this regard – because if not, now everywhere, people would talk about the nuclear bombing in Bali as a matter of fact. Contrary to this expectation, as you can see, there is no talking about it, whatsoever. Only a very few people dare to talk about it openly, but they would never be allowed to publish their views in any mass-media. The article by Joe Vialls in the Indonesian newspaper published 6th of November, 2002, was the only exception to a rule, and even that one caused a momentary panic among the “patricians”. The “patricians” were pissed off by that article to such an extent, that by the afternoon of the same day, the Indonesian police promptly declared that, at last, they “found the truth” – it was Amrozi, who allegedly bombed the Sari Nightclub using one ton of cheap conventional explosives. It shall be suspected that Amrozi was merely an actor – akin to Timothy McVeigh who was merely hired to play that role and that is exactly why he was “executed” (i.e. resettled with a new identity and a certain sum of hard cash sufficient to compensate his time behind bars).

3. Post-event coverage.

Considering the monstrosity of this unprecedented bombing, one could sincerely expect that it would be widely covered by the mass media for many years ahead, because the 2002 Bali Bombing was probably the most illustrative sample of the alleged danger of so-called “international terrorism” and that of the “evil Muslims”. Not to use this opportunity to continue scaring simpletons around the world for many years ahead would simply be the biggest miss for those contemporary rulers – such as Bush, Howard, Blair³⁰⁰ etc. – who seem to devote their very lives to the cause of fighting this so-called “Muslim terrorism”.

However sincere, such expectations would not come true: nobody is going to puff up the Bali atrocity any longer, which seems to be contrary to logic. Even immediately after the bombing, there were not so many articles describing the affair, and even those several articles that were published, did not contain much detail. Unlike in the 9/11 case, one would not find much material to study about the 2002 Bali bombing should he decide to undertake some private investigation... However, several more articles have been published. Let us read some of them.

Here is one typical sample: “Canadian burned in Bali bombing dies”³⁰¹. Wednesday, October 23, 2002 | 9:26 PM ET

“A man from British Columbia who suffered serious burns in the nightclub bombing in Bali has died from his injuries. Rick Gleason, 39, died in a hospital in Melbourne, Australia, on Wednesday, the Foreign Affairs Department said. Gleason, who worked as a financial adviser in Vancouver, had been airlifted to Australia to treat burns to 45 per cent of his body. Foreign Affairs said Gleason's body will be cremated in Australia and his ashes returned to Canada. Calgary engineer Mervin Popadyne, who was in or near the nightclub, is still missing and presumed dead.”

What could we notice here? Apart from that his body will be cremated to prevent any possible analyses later?

Firstly, it should be known, that ordinary explosives do not cause any burns – they could tear you apart, yes; they could kill you by air-blast wave, yes; but they would never ever burn you. People could be burned by napalm, but could not be burned by any TNT, C4, RDX, dynamite, or any other well-known ³⁰⁰ President of the United States, Prime Minister of Australia, Prime-Minister of United Kingdom correspondingly – at the time of 2002 Bali bombing. They were considered to be the three most hysterical proponents of that bizarre contemporary “anti-terror” campaign – unleashed against the so-called “Al-Qaeda” and against other imaginary terrorist organizations and individuals.

³⁰¹ http://www.cbc.ca/canada/story/2002/10/23/balideath_021023.html

conventional explosive materials. Apparently, it was not napalm that had been used to destroy the Sari Nightclub. So, what does it have to do with burns?

Of course, those folks, who prefer to obediently swallow the governmental propaganda and who routinely oppose any “conspiracy theorists” as a matter of principle – even in case the “conspiracy theorists” are obviously right, would oppose even in this case. They would probably argue: the burns could have been caused by secondary fires – because the primary explosion might cause fires to those alleged cylinders with cooking gas and also some fires to adjacent buildings. Well, there would be a counter-argumentation in this case.

Ordinary explosions do not cause fires to adjacent buildings, unfortunately. It is nuclear explosions that cause fires to adjacent buildings – due to their intense thermal radiation instantly emanating from their fireballs. Another fact is that cylinders with cooking gas (if you would prefer to believe those Australian cops, that there were indeed any of those cylinders, as claimed, in order to explain otherwise unexplainable nuclear fireballs) will not burn you also. The gas cylinders will simply explode and their burning time will be simply too short to burn. In the immediate vicinity such an explosion of the gas cylinders might kill people by an actual explosion, but those who would stay farther could only be struck by air-blast wave, but under no circumstances would anyone be “burned” in this case.

Try then to answer yourself – where from would this man receive the burns to as much as 45 percent of his body? From some burning buildings? It is not believable. If this man were unconscious and his body therefore remained in the burning building as if it were a funeral pyre for some time, then he would receive burns to 100% of his body, not to only 45%. If this man were aware, then he would try his best to escape the fires immediately and the first burns he would receive in such a case would be very minimal. It is pure logic: you can either get ~100% of your body burned if you are unconscious; or less than 10% – if you are in the conscious state.

It shall be known that those burns amounting to 45% of one’s body is a very typical thing to be suffered from a nuclear explosion. If you stand in the open and there is nothing that could shade you from the nuclear fireballs, you would be burned to the 45%. Not more and not less, but exactly 45%. Why? Just remember the geometry. This is the case.

In fact, another guy, who was mentioned in this article as being “missing”, was apparently much more fortunate – he was too close to the hypocenter of the nuclear explosion and was reduced to ashes, if not completely vaporized. At least, he did not suffer too long.

Now, let us look again at the abovementioned table kindly provided by the National Council on Radiation Protection and Measurements³⁰². As you see, the mortal danger of thermal radiation during 0.01kt nuclear explosion would be in distances of up to 60 meters. The mortal danger from penetrating radiation during the same nuclear explosion would be in distances of up to 250 meters.

This poor guy, if he was so badly burnt, should have been standing somewhere between 50 to 70 meters from the hypocenter, not closer, because otherwise, there would be a good chance for him to be instantly killed by air-blast wave. I think it is understandable. On the other hand, if he would stay from the hypocenter farther than 70 meters, the levels of thermal radiation would not be as dangerous as to burn him so badly. Our rude presumption is 50-70 meters, based on the type and the alleged danger of burns as described in the article. Note, that in the same time, this poor guy supposed to have been struck by the front of ionizing radiation as well. If at a distance of 250 meters from the hypocenter the strength of penetrating ionizing radiation would be 500 Roentgens – which is the nominally “lethal dose”, then what do you think about 50-70 meters? Obviously, this poor guy acquired somewhat well over 1000 Roentgens dose and the doctors could do nothing to save his life.

Of course, it is technically possible that someone could die from the burns alone – because burns covering 45% of the body is more than enough to cause death. But the problem is, as it was mentioned above, ordinary explosives do not cause burns, while ordinary fires do not cause burns to 45% of one’s body. However, modern medicine is capable of saving someone’s life even in case of burns to 45% of his body. Though, modern medicine was not capable, unfortunately, to save his life from fatal injuries caused by the tremendous radiation dose – such as double or triple the nominally “lethal” one. That is exactly why he was dead. It should be clear to every one who is familiar with elementary logic – this poor man did not die from burns alone, as claimed by the “plebeian” media, but from ionizing radiation. Another important detail is that, he died in exactly 10 days – it is the typical “dead-line” for heavy cases of radiation sickness – on 10th or 11th day of it over 90% of patients die (patients who suffer from moderate cases of radiation sickness normally die on 30th or 31st day and their rate of lethality is less – about only 50%).

There is yet another article – good to learn, especially if one knows how to read between the lines. “Woman dies from burns”, dated by October 15 2002.³⁰³

“...A woman severely burnt in the Bali explosions died today in a Perth hospital. A Royal Perth Hospital doctor said the burns unit team's hearts went out to the family of the woman, whose name has not been released. The woman's death came as 14 more victims were flown into Perth hospitals, including two Germans, a Scot, and a New Zealander hailed a hero for plucking his wife and several friends to safety..”

The notable thing here is not the death of severely burnt woman (because that is just normal). It is the fact that mentioned in the second part of the above passage: a certain man (who was hailed a hero) arrived to the hospital among the 14 patients with apparently the heaviest condition that required their prompt airlifting to Australia.

The notable thing is this. If that guy received heavy burns, he would not be able to immediately participate in the ensuing rescue efforts. It does not matter – how much you might love your wife and how much you might care about your friends – you won't be able to pluck them to safety if you just receive burns to 45% of your body, or even to only 15% percent of your body. Such amount of burns would render you useless for any rescue efforts in any case. On the other hand, if his actual burns were not life threatening and he did not suffer any mechanical injuries that might prevent him from the immediate participation in the ensuing rescue efforts, there would be no need to promptly airlift him to Australia among the victims with the heaviest condition. Would there? Logic is stubborn thing...

What happened? The answer is pretty obvious: this New Zealander was not burned at all. He suffered solely from radiation injuries. He was probably shielded from actual nuclear fireballs by some thin layer of material – probably by some wooden wall, which shaded him from the thermal radiation, so when he got out to the open, he did not suffer any burns at all, because by the time he got out, thermal radiation – capable of burning skin – had already ceased. However, such a thin layer of material that protected him from burns was not able to protect him from penetrating radiation – alias from gamma-rays and neutrons. He might receive as much as over 1,500 Roentgens, or could be even over 2,000 Roentgens – which is a guaranteed lethal dose, but he did not feel immediately sick. It is well known, that the first effects of such doses of penetrating radiation would only appear within a few hours after the actual explosion.

It is also possible, that this poor man stood in some distance much farther than 60 meters – which is the “dead-line” of thermal radiation, as represented by the abovementioned table, but closer than the “dead-line” of penetrating ionizing radiation. That is why while he did not receive any heavy burns (or no burns at all) – he still received a tremendous dose of ionizing radiation. This man apparently felt well enough for a first few hours after the nuclear explosion and therefore he participated in those rescue efforts. However, several hours later he began to feel sick, because those parts of the body responsible for regeneration of his blood were damaged beyond repair.

The article does not specify if this man was able to survive or not, but considering that he felt sick by that short time, it is very unlikely. In any case, the “patricians” tried really hard to cheat the “plebs”, but the way they presented the news in this particular article betrayed them.

Continuance of the above article:

“Seven burns victims arrive in Melbourne. The RAAF Hercules carrying seven victims of the Bali bomb blast arrived at Melbourne's Essendon airport this morning. A fleet of ambulances were on hand to ferry the badly injured seven people to hospitals in Melbourne. Most will be sent to the burns unit at The Alfred. The plane arrived about 10.45am (AEST). The Alfred's head of trauma surgery, Thomas Kossmann, said they were expecting patients with burns to between 15 and 50 per cent of their bodies, shrapnel wounds and injuries to the hands.”

Here the “patricians” betrayed themselves once more. Would it be reasonable “to expect” victims of a blast of an ordinary explosion to go mostly to the “burns unit”? Why? Are those Australian doctors mad? What did the explosion have to do with burns?

No, they were not mad – the problem is that they were simply expecting victims of some nuclear blast, not of an ordinary explosion. That is exactly why they were expecting patients with as much as 50% of their bodies (actually for the nuclear explosion it is a typical 45% for those standing upfront, or less if partly covered by some structures or while sitting, lying etc. – so it would be difficult to achieve exactly 50%, but, apparently, this doctor just did not bother to elaborate).

The next peculiar thing is “to expect” patients after the blast with “injuries to their hands”. Why to the hands? It is easy to answer also. Upon seeing a flash of a nuclear explosion, any well-trained soldier would do the following: he would instantly fall face down with legs facing the explosion and hands hidden under his body (it shall be known that there is a little time interval between the actual white flash and the orange-color fireballs emitting thermal radiation, thus, the soldier has a chance to turn away from the latter, if he is really quick). However, any lay civilian upon seeing such a flash will do exactly the opposite: he will instantly cover his face with his hands and continue to remain in the same position – until killed by either blast-wave or by thermal radiation (or both). So, if he happens not to be killed, then the heaviest injuries would be to his hands – because they are the least protected – i.e. being never covered with any clothes. That is exactly why those Australian doctors, who apparently knew about the most typical injuries caused by a nuclear explosion in general, were sincerely “expecting” those kinds of patients.

The article continues:

“Darwin hospital's Bali patients down to eight. Just eight people remained in the Royal Darwin Hospital today after many badly injured victims of the Bali bombings were flown to other capital cities. The hospital has treated more than 60 of the victims, most of whom had burns. RAAF Hercules aircraft are flying victims to Sydney, Melbourne, Brisbane, Perth and Adelaide. “We're down to four people in intensive care and four people in Ward 2A,” hospital medical superintendent Len Notaras told ABC radio. “Before the first person even arrived, we always knew we would treat people, we would resuscitate them, we would retain anybody who needed to stay here for any length of time “But on the same token, we would try to get the major burns to the two or three major burns hospitals around the country and get people as close to their home as possible so that they can be with their families.” More than 60 patients - including five Germans, two English, a Canadian, a Swede, a South African and a New Zealander - arrived from Denpasar aboard five Hercules flights yesterday in fewer than 12 hours. Two of the first 15 arrivals died.”

From here it could be easily estimated the mere number of casualties – it needed five Hercules flights to deliver only the most heavily injured to Australia. It shall be known that many of Bali victims were sent not to Australia alone, but also to Singapore and to Taiwan, so those five Hercules flights were not the only means of transportation during the first day after the bombing. Moreover, the mortality rate was so high that 2 out of 15 patients died immediately (and, without any doubt, many more, if not all, will die later). Besides those most heavily injured, who had to be airlifted immediately to Australian, Singaporean and Taiwanese hospitals, in the case of the Bali bombing there logically supposed to be also quite a lot of people who suffered medium burns and medium radiation injures. In fact, there could be so many of such victims that their actual numbers were simply never counted. Most of them were treated either in hospitals in Indonesia, or in other hospitals, though, since they were treated not in an urgent manner, no official has ever bothered to count and to reveal to the public their exact or even estimated numbers. Add here more people, who have suffered light radiation injures and who did not seek any medical treatment at all, recovering on their own – and you could probably imagine the real number of the victims and, correspondingly, the real scale of the Bali perpetration.

Here are some more news releases (most important excerpts only):

“Casualties 'very high', warns Downer in Bali. October 15, 2002³⁰⁴. Australian casualties would be “very high”, but not all those currently missing would be found to be dead, Foreign Minister Alexander Downer said today. Twenty Australians have been confirmed dead but with more than 160 Australians still missing; the final toll is expected to climb significantly. Mr Downer, speaking in Bali after laying a wreath at the site of Saturday's deadly bomb blast, said based on calls from families looking for relatives or friends, the number of missing Australians stood at 160 to 170. “But that's not to say that's the number of casualties, fatalities there will be," he told reporters. Mr Downer said the overall death toll, currently around 183, was likely to climb further. "There are likely to be others killed ... who were simply blown to pieces by the blast," he said. Mr Downer said the "appalling" scene of devastation outside the Sari Club was enough to break anyone's heart. He and Justice Minister Chris Ellison laid wreaths among the debris of the club, which was packed with Australians [note: with Australians, not with the New Zealanders, whose number of missing was over 340; imagine now what would be the number of the missing Aussies] when the car-bomb exploded on Saturday night. "It drives home to anyone the level of terrorism, of mass murder that we have seen in Bali on the evening of October 12," Mr Downer said. "We're now working on a list ... of around 160 Australians who we have reason to believe may have been in the area, so we are bringing the list down now to the people of more real concern to us," he said. Mr Mules said all the injured Australians had been evacuated from the island. "There are no Australian injured still in hospital; all of the ones who were in hospital have been evacuated to Australia now," he said. Australian Embassy official Kirk Coningham said 196 Australians had been evacuated with injuries suffered in Saturday's bombing, 16 of them in critical condition and 40 more on stretchers. Australia had also offered to evacuate injured Indonesians to Australia for treatment, Mr Downer said. AAP..."

I guess the real numbers of the "missing" and "critically injured" Australians in this particular article has been intentionally understated. It is impossible to believe that only 160-170 Australians were missing against the background of the 340 missing New Zealanders – it simply contradicts elementary logic. This discrepancy could be further confirmed by an additional calculation: it had been initially declared that over 300 people had been injured by the Bali blast. Now it was confirmed that out of these "over 300" – 196 were Australians – which was more than half. Simple logic would bring us to a reasonable conclusion that the Australians always constitute majority of tourists in Bali Island. It should be presumed that well over 1000 Australians must be "missing" in this case, considering their proportion in comparison with those missing New Zealanders.

The same method of calculation applies to the number of injured. It is simply impossible to kill 188 persons (with many more killed, but not actually found as whole recognizable bodies) and in the same time – to injure only slightly over 300. It is simply against logic. Normally, the number of injured is at least 10 times over the number of killed.

Anyhow, one must not be too much surprised at these digits – the "patricians" simply do not want to scare the plebs by publishing the awful true digits. Even during real war time it is a well-known practice – to understate your own casualties and to exaggerate those of the enemy. So what could you expect from spin-doctors in time of peace?

The author of these lines spent several hours in the Internet, trying to discover various information related to the Bali victims – in order to disprove those officially claimed digits. I was able to find, at least, the following information: as on October 15, 2002, it was claimed by different countries in regard to their respective citizens who were neither killed, nor died yet, nor missing, but only confirmed injured: Australia – more than 200 injured; Danes – 2 injured; Britons – many, but the exact number is not specified; Canadians – many, but the exact number it not specified; French – at least 5 injured; Germans – 10 injured; Greeks – 1 injured; Indonesians – at least 200 injured; Italians – 6 injured, Japanese – at least 7 injured; New Zealanders – at least 12 injured; South Africans – 1 injured; Swedes – 3 injured; Swiss – 5 injured; Americans – 3 injured; Hong Kong citizens, as well as Taiwanese, Koreans and Singaporeans – also many injured, but their exact numbers are not specified.

Now we have something to calculate: the very minimum that we could see above is at least 500 injured, while it could be easily more than this. Also, when they say "injured" in the above sense, means those who have been hospitalized. Apparently, those injured by medium and light doses of ionizing radiation were not even counted there, because they would not need any stationary medical treatment, at least not immediately. Add here also that quite a big number of the local Indonesians, even though injured, might not seek medical help in hospitals and have resorted, instead, to some folk remedies.

How come that when officially confirmed number of injured was at least 500 the mass-media reported to the public that it was just "over 300" injured in the Bali bombing? That is exactly the problem with the modern propaganda machine – one must simply not believe his eyes when he sees something written to him and must always try to read between the lines in order to find at least some traces of the truth.

It is good also to look at the proportion of the Australians and the New Zealanders – it was 200 injured Indonesians against 12 New Zealanders, while it was claimed that the New Zealanders had 340 missing and Australia reported 170. It simply can not be true, because it does not meet the true proportion. At the very minimum, over a thousand of Australians supposed to disappear in the nuclear blast without a trace – but the Australian Government simply does not want to admit it.

There is a further proof of the Australian Government's lie. For example, while 15 of October, 2002, PM Downer claimed that only 14 Australians were allegedly "confirmed dead", on Russian websites (the author of these lines is a Russian, just to remind you) it was reported soon after the bombing that 88 Australians were killed instantly – and this is not a kind of canard – it was confirmed info from Russian-language web-page of the following website: <http://usinfo.state.gov/journals/ites/0904/ijer/stapleton.htm> – this web site appears to belong to the U.S. Government. The same source, by the way, also claims that there were 7 Americans killed in Bali, while it had been initially claimed that only 3 of them were killed (the figure "3" is the official death toll of the U.S. citizens, as available until today).

Based on this officially published data, we could easily conclude that to understate casualties by five-fold is the very normal practice. That is exactly why one must have no doubt that at least over 2000 people have been actually killed in the 2002 Bali bombing, which due to the rate of casualties alone, could not have been "conventional", and was definitely a nuclear one. How many of them died later from radiation we could only guess – because nobody published any official data on how many people were exposed to the effects of the blast being on various distances from ground zero.

However, we could roughly presume that 99% of all of those who were at distances of 350 meters around the hypocenter would die, plus roughly 90% of those who were at distances of 450 meters, plus roughly 70% of those who were at distances of 550 meters, plus roughly 50% of those who were at distances of 700 meters, and plus roughly 10-15% of those who were in even greater distances. Plus some of those who rushed to ground zero immediately after the explosion and who inhaled some radioactive dust would die later – to increase the abovementioned digits. We could only guess how many people have really died in total. The author of these lines once encountered some information from a report of the Thai military intelligence, which collected its own data on the explosion. The report put the total number of victims of radiation of the Bali blast (means "dead victims") to over 10 thousand. Yes, I agree, it could have been an exaggeration, of course. Even military intelligence is prone to exaggerations. Especially that of Thailand. Perhaps, it was an exaggeration. But it could be true as well. The number of the dead simply depended on how many people were sitting around ground zero. And it appears that the place was really "packed".

The most important in the above article is not even their poor attempt to understate the casualties, but those epithets like "mass murder" and "the level of terrorism" used by Mr. A. Downer – an Australian Foreign Minister and one of the first lieutenants of the notorious "anti-terror fighter" of the 21st century – Australian Prime Minister John Howard (the latter is probably even more notorious in this particular sense than U.S. President George Bush Jr.). This is, for example, what John Howard himself has said in regard to the Bali bombing:

"The word terrorism is too antiseptic an expression to describe what happened," the Prime Minister, John Howard, told Parliament yesterday³⁰⁵. "What happened was barbaric, brutal mass murder with no justification."

It is really strange – to use such a terminology a few days after one of the most heinous (truly heinous) perpetrations of the 21st century – comparable only to 9/11 and to the 1945 Hiroshima bombing – and not to puff up the same thing any longer, as to this day. One could probably be surprised – how come, that those folks like Howard and Bush, whose very positions in the society directly depend on how loudly they would cry about the alleged dangers of the "Muslim terrorism", managed to totally discard the Bali case from their propagandist agenda and no longer cry about it today? This is something really unexplainable.

The case of the 2002 Bali bombing is the best case to continue to scare simpletons, because it was the absolutely cruel, barbaric, and cowardly mass murder – much more cowardly than the supposed terrorist attack against the Pentagon and even more cowardly than the supposed suicidal aerial attack against the Twin Towers. If the Twin Towers, in theory, could represent a high-priority target to the so-called "terror" because of being a symbol of the American capitalism, while the Pentagon was a purely legitimate target, being the military headquarters, the obscure Sari night club, frequented by lowly tourists, had not any significance whatsoever. Exactly as Mr. John Howard claimed, the Bali case has no justification. Yet, the perfect 2002 case of the most atrocious high-scale mass murder is clearly put out of use by today's propaganda machine. Do you have any explanation for this particular irregularity?

³⁰⁵ Indonesia blames al-Qaeda for blast. By Mark Riley, Matthew Moore and Mark Baker in Kuta. October 15 2002; <http://www.smh.com.au/articles/2002/10/15/1034561103777.html>

If you don't have, let me offer you mine: as I have said above, the nuclear bombing of the Sari Night club had never been intended for public consumption. It had been an "exclusive" kind of terror "exclusively" tailored to scare the "patricians" alone, and not the "plebeians". The real reason behind it was that some "patricians" at that moment were not so eager to approve that ridiculous war against Iraq. So the "mini-nuke" used in Bali had served its sole purpose: those hesitating "patricians" stopped hesitating and, at last, have approved the war against evil Saddam Hussein. It was reported to them that it was Saddam, who supplied the "mini-nuke" to the so-called "Al-Qaeda" and the so-called "Jemaah Islamiah". Moreover, the "mini-nuke" used in Bali, one more time confirmed the "confidential" second "truth" of the U.S. Government: that it was supposedly three other "mini-nukes" – perhaps, even from the same stock – that brought down the Twin Towers on September 11, 2001. Thus, as long as the Bali bombing has served its only purpose, it is no longer necessary to puff it up. That is exactly why it seems to be forgotten today (at least, forgotten by the "plebeians").

I guess after reading all of the above you would not be surprised at one more detail: the spot of the 2002 Bali bombing was dubbed "ground zero" the next day. Most probably, it was ABC officers from the Australian military who first introduced such a unique name. But it proved to be sticky and until today it is still "ground zero"... These seditious English words enriched even Indonesian- and Balinese languages. If you tell to an Indonesian taxi driver who scarcely speaks any English: "ground zero" – he would bring you right to the spot of the former Sari night club, without even asking you what you really meant.

If you think that in 2002 the "ground zero" expression has already acquired its "broadened" definition (typical to the post-9/11 era), you are mistaken. The U.S. Government, in reality, came round and ordered the "ground zero" expression to be re-defined in all newer English dictionaries only in 2003; and it was not earlier than the beginning of 2004, when its spin-doctors began to manufacture fake "pre-9/11" dictionaries with the "broadened" definition of "ground zero". When it comes to Australian English, the post-9/11 modifications of "ground zero" reached it even later. The official source of Australian English – the full Macquarie Dictionary – switched to the "broadened" definition of "ground zero" only in 2005; while Australian editions of full Oxford and full Collins English dictionaries did it in 2004 and 2003 respectively. The 2002 editions of all full Australian English dictionaries (the Macquarie, the Collins, and the Oxford) defined "ground zero" only as a "place where a nuclear bomb exploded" with no secondary meanings. Thus, when Aussie military called the spot of the Bali bombing "ground zero", they really meant it.

I think this is enough to talk about the 2002 Bali nuclear bombing. If for someone even all of it is still not enough to understand what exactly happened in Bali, then the author of these lines can not help. If someone prefers to believe that all the damage, casualties, injuries, burns, and "ground zero" names could have been caused by one ton of fertilizer, converted to explosives by Amrozi, who had been supposedly "inspired" by fire-brand Muslim cleric Abu Bakar Bashir – then this is a really heavy case for me to treat. It is almost the same as to believe that "late" Timothy McVeigh was the real nuclear bomber of the Oklahoma Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building on April 19, 1995 – one of the most heinous perpetrations of the previous century.

If incriminating evidence represented by the seditious words "ground zero" in connection with the 2002 Bali bombing could still be somehow challenged by professional spin-doctors (who might claim that after 9/11 "ground zero" could have been allegedly used in a certain metaphorical sense), it would not be possible to challenge the same thing when "ground zero" words were used to describe the bombing site in Oklahoma City. Due to the fact that they were from the pre-9/11 lexicon.

1995 Oklahoma nuclear bombing, The United States of America.

To begin with, I think it is good to mention that certain U.S. professionals, who understood very well about explosives (as well as about nuclear explosives), did not see much difference between the 1995 Oklahoma bombing and the two infamous 1983 nuclear bombings in Lebanon, places of which were called "ground zero" even back in 1983. It shall be reminded, in this connection, that the earliest backdated dictionary with the "broadened" definition of "ground zero" was back-dated by the year "1987" only. Thus, you can rest assured that back in 1983, "ground zero" expression could not have meaning other than a spot of a nuclear explosion, even if you prefer to believe those backdated Freemasonic concoctions such as their infamous "Second Edition" of the Random House Unabridged dictionary of alleged "1987", which was successfully proven to be the post-9/11 fakery.

Here is one of such characteristic quotations³⁰⁶:

An Army Special Forces officer with explosives experience seconded this opinion, mentioning that nearly identical damage was done in the two 1983 Lebanon incidents, in which truck bombs were used to collapse the U.S. Marine barracks and the U.S. embassy.

Before we proceed further, I feel obliged to address well-known claims of various loony conspiracy theorists who claim that traces of “demolition charges” were alleged found in debris of the destroyed (and yet not completely collapsed) Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building in Oklahoma city. Such claims are indeed wide-spread and, unfortunately, they mislead many sincere people.

The point is that you have to employ your own common sense before believing any lunacy. Let us imagine that the evil intent was to “demolish” the building with people still inside and for that reason some typical demolition charges were used – as alleged by conspiracy theorists.

The first question that immediately comes to mind is this: but why the targeted building did not actually collapse if the alleged “demolition charges” were used? Why did the major part of the actual building manage to stand even after the explosion? Is it not a goal of a demolition process to actually collapse a building that is being “demolished”?

The second question: why would typical “demolition charges” destroy or damage other buildings (324 in total, just to let you know) in such a large radius as 16-block (s-i-x-t-e-e-n-block) radius? Has anyone ever heard about any “demolition” that destroys neighboring buildings?

Of course, you do not have to believe all those loony conspiracy theorists. You have to trust your own common sense only. Look at the definition “ground zero”, widely used to refer to the spot of the destroyed Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building in Oklahoma City, and would you no longer need to listen to any lunacies about the “unexploded demolition charges” and other crap. I hope this suggestion of mine helps.

This is official information on the Oklahoma bombing (provided by the corresponding Wikipedia article³⁰⁷):

“...At 9.02 AM (CST), April 19, 1995, the Ryder truck, containing about 5,000 pounds (2,300 kg) of fertilizer and nitromethane mixture, detonated in front of the north side of the nine-story Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building. At 9.45 AM (CST), Governor Frank Keating declared a state of emergency and ordered all non-essential workers located in the Oklahoma City area to be released from their duties for their safety [guess why?]. The blast destroyed a third of the building and created a thirty-foot (9 m) wide, eight-foot (2.4 m) deep crater on NW 5th Street next to the building. The blast destroyed or damaged 324 (!) buildings in a sixteen-block radius, destroyed or burned 86 cars around the site, and shattered glass in 258 nearby buildings. The destruction of the buildings left several hundred people homeless and shut down multiple offices in downtown Oklahoma City. Minimum of 168 people were killed and another 853 injured; majority of the injuries were burns. The effects of the blast were [allegedly] equivalent to 4,000 lbs (1,814 kg) of TNT, and could be heard and felt up to fifty-five miles (89 km) away. Seismometers at the Omniplex Museum in Oklahoma City (4.3 miles/7 kilometers away) and in Norman, Oklahoma (16.1 miles/26 kilometers away) recorded the blast as measuring approximately 3.0 on the Richter scale ...”

Remember about 3.0 on the Richter scale, please, it is very important.

When it comes to the “deep crater” mentioned in the above Wikipedia article, there are practically no photos of it available today – because the U.S. authorities were very quick to fill up this seditious piece of evidence and did not allow any good quality photos with it to circulate. However, I was able to accidentally discover one small, low-resolution photo with the crater still visible. From this photo you can, at least, perceive where the actual position of the nuke was (please, do not mistake the crater with the red spot; the crater is in the lower part of this AP photo – right in front of the “eaten” part of the building):

Besides the official claims, there are also some published testimonies of witnesses, actually, “seditious” enough. Among them these: several cars located on the above-ground car park had electronic ignition computers completely burnt out by the event; many nearby office computers went down with burnt-out circuit-boards. Since the reader of this book by the time of reaching this Chapter supposes to become educated enough when it comes to nuclear explosions, I guess, it won’t be difficult to understand that the described effects could only be caused by one “phenomena”: Electromagnetic Pulse (EMP).

One of such articles describing EMP is available here: <http://webfairy.org/haarp/beamweapon.htm>

There was one more detail, which the Wikipedia article failed to mention: in the aftermath of the bombing

³⁰⁷ http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Oklahoma_City_bombing

some local media in Oklahoma City used to refer to the place of the explosion by a peculiar name: “ground zero”.

One of such mentioning could be found, for example, in an article by G.Z Heuston transparently titled “The Oklahoma Bombing Part 2 – A Walk Trough Ground Zero” that is available on the Internet here: <http://www.ci.hillsboro.or.us/police/documents/Argus/OkBombPart2AWalkThroughGroundZero.pdf>

Another of such mentioning of the “ground zero” term could be found in the “New York Times” article named “TERROR IN OKLAHOMA CITY: AT GROUND ZERO; In Shock, Loathing, Denial: This Doesn’t Happen Here” by Rick Bragg (publication date: April 20, 1995). An Internet-version of the said article is located here: <http://www.nytimes.com/1995/04/20/us/terror-oklahoma-city-ground-zero-shock-loathing-denial-this-doesn-t-happen-here.html>

In fact, these odd words “ground zero” have become a part of the Oklahoma bombing – the same as they later become a part of 9/11. If you try to search the Internet by keywords “Oklahoma bombing ground zero” you will be surprised at how many articles a search engine will offer you in reply to your request...

The above were the official ravings in regard to the infamous 1995 Oklahoma bombing.

However, “unofficial” comments are these:

- 1). Car-bombs (or Truck-bombs) do not leave any crater; craters could only be left by some charges buried into the earth. Even if you place a nuclear bomb on a truck and detonate it – even in this case it won’t make any crater. If you want to make some crater – you have to bury this bomb under the ground – at least, slightly.
- 2). Conventional explosives do not burn cars around their explosion; this is a typical feature of the thermal radiation of a nuclear blast-- to burn cars.
- 3). Conventional explosives, even as huge as two tons of TNT, do not cause mass casualties on a scale shown in this case. One would probably be able, at the very best case, to kill a couple of dozens of descendants of Adam – if he only has two tons of conventional explosives alone (nothing of shrapnel was added in this particular case – so casualties could have been caused only by the sole actual explosion).
- 4). Conventional explosions do not cause burns to their victims. It is a typical feature of nuclear explosions – because those burns are caused by thermal radiation and by nothing else.
- 5). Conventional explosives do not cause any EMP that could burn-out circuit boards in computers around.
- 6). Conventional explosives in an amount of less than two tons in the TNT equivalent would never be able to cause the damage shown to the extent of the huge reinforced building and a few more buildings around. The mere amount of damage in that case was typical to at least 10 pieces of 10-ton modern aviation bombs, or to a “mini-nuke” set to explode at the corresponding yield – i.e. at 0.1 kiloton.
- 7). Spots where conventional explosions occurred are never called “ground zero”; especially before 9/11.
- 8). Seismometers could not detect explosions of car-bombs, moreover at 3.0 the Richter-scale magnitudes – because car-bombs do not communicate to our Planet Earth any energy at all; they send all their energy to its atmosphere, going by the way of the least resistance. Only buried or, at least, partly-buried charges could cause a detectable seismic signal.
- 9). Moreover, as we have already studied, a deeply buried charge would create the following seismic signals when exploding: 4.6 tons of TNT – 2.5; 29 tons of TNT – 3.0; 73 tons of TNT – 3.5, and a “mini-nuke” at full yield – 1 kiloton – 4.0. It is known that 3.52 on the Richter scale is typical for a 0.1 kt “mini-nuke” – which is an equivalent of 100 tons of TNT; however, if such a charge is not buried too deep, the seismic signal produced by its explosion will be much lower.
- 10). 2,300 kg of fertilizer (which is an equivalent of 1.8 tons of TNT), even if buried, would apparently never be able to create 3.0 seismic signal (and when packed on a truck such a charge won’t produce any seismic signal whatsoever). Neither 0.01 kt, nor even 0.015 kt – i.e. the lowest variable “mini-nuke’s” yields – would be enough to cause 3.0 magnitude seismic signal. It should be presumed then, that it was a slightly buried “mini-nuke” that went off of at least 0.1 kt – which actually destroyed the Oklahoma Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building (and another 324 buildings in a 16-block radius), 86 burned cars by its thermal radiation, burned circuit boards by its EMP, caused the unprecedented mass casualties by all its destructive factors in combination, dug the crater (by throwing radioactively-contaminated soil around), and produced that seismic signal of 3.0 magnitude on the Richter scale (and also caused the local Governor to undertake the evacuation due to a logically expected radioactive contamination).

Actually, the fact that a part of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building managed to survive the explosion shall not dupe an observer (because our “intuitive impression”, that is always wrong, might suggest to some people that the building must have been reduced to dust by a nuclear explosion). Do not forget, that it was a kind of heavily reinforced building, so it could survive even such a small nuclear explosion as only 0.1 kiloton (only 100 tons of TNT). However, if it were made from bricks alone, not to say concrete panels, it would collapse instantly and completely like a house of cards. It is good to remember in this case that for the demolitions of the WTC in New York three huge thermonuclear charges had been deployed; so what is a laughable 0.1 kiloton in comparison with those 150 kiloton ones? For many people who tend to think independently, it is absolutely clear that it was a “mini-nuke”, but many simpletons until now prefer to believe the bizarre governmental conspiracy theory – that all the abovementioned damage, injuries and other effects (including seismic) could have been caused by the 2 tons of fertilizer...

I can't resist placing here a blast overpressure chart related to that explosion of “fertilizer”. I discovered it a few years ago on some official web site dealing with the 1995 Oklahoma bombing; it claimed to be from General Ben Partin's Report. Here it is:

I hope you still remember expected effects of various levels of overpressure – since we reviewed them shortly above – when studying the 2002 Bali bombing. So, you can now make your own conclusions, whether or not any “truck bomb” with “fertilizer” could cause such overpressure levels as revealed by the above map.

Culprits:

The U.S. officials initially attempted to blame the Oklahoma bombing on some “Muslim terrorists” from Palestine (despite the funny fact that the Palestinian terrorists were actually atheists, not “Muslims”). Later, the attempt was abandoned for some unknown reason, and the perpetration had been blamed on a certain Mr. Timothy McVeigh – an apparent scapegoat, who promptly confessed to this crime and finally was executed by a lethal injection. It is widely believed that he was just an actor and after that broadcast on the close-circuit TV of theatrical production with an allegedly “lethal” injection, he was simply resettled with a new name under the witness protection program. Plus he received some financial reward, of course, for his kind help in the cover-up, which also included staying 6 years behind bars prior to his supposed "execution".

The FBI in this case did its real best to mess up evidence and to create one of the most incredible cover-ups in U.S. legal history, comparable only with the ridiculous cover-up of 9/11 five years later.

Understandably, such an approach of the FBI caused multiple conspiracy theories to appear, though, none of them being even remotely plausible. The utterly ridiculous common component of the most of these conspiracy theories in regard to the Oklahoma bombing is this. The conspiracy theorists claim that there were unexploded "charges of conventional explosives" (a/k/a unexploded "demolition charges") allegedly discovered in the debris of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building by recovery workers, but those folks who allegedly discovered the unexploded "demolition charges" were silenced by the authorities. These conspiracy theorists try to additionally emphasize the "plausibility" of their ridiculous claims by the fact that the famous company "Controlled Demolition Inc." was hired to finally demolish the building and to remove its debris. This, in their opinions, allegedly constitutes a "proof" of the conspiracy to demolish the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building.

This is, by the way, a good example to show how loony the conspiracy theorists actually are. It did not occur to them that the "Controlled Demolition Inc." was hired to demolish the destroyed building (the major part of which was still standing after the bombing) simply because this company was the biggest demolition company, and it was actually its specialty – to demolish buildings. It did not occur to these loony conspiracy theorists either that if there were a conspiracy to demolish the building by demolition charges, then the building should have collapsed as a result. Contrary to this logic, the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building remained standing even after the explosion (that was so huge that it destroyed 324 other buildings in the sixteen-block radius, just to remind you). Finally, it did not occur to them that the demolition charges cause neither 3.0 seismic signals, nor feelings of ground shaking that could be felt 55 miles away, nor burns to people and cars around, nor craters, nor "ground zero" names.

Intriguingly enough, despite the trial of Timothy McVeigh was held behind closed doors (and no citizen seemed to express his or her objections – why, the __ck, this trial must be held "behind closed doors" if it did not concern any state secrets, but merely an act of terror???), his indictment was publicly available.

Here is the beginning of his indictment, I quote:

The Grand Jury charges: [end of the quote]

Please, do not fail to notice what the “Count One” was about.

Anyway, thanks to the FBI that completely messed up all evidence, it would be indeed very difficult for any conspiracy theorist, especially the typical, the loony one, to figure out who did it and why he did it (especially considering that typical conspiracy theorists did not even bother to notice those typically “nuclear” levels of overpressure, or definitions such as “ground zero” and “Conspiracy to Use a Weapon of Mass Destruction” despite such definitions were publicly available).

However, there are several interesting details in the Oklahoma case, which might easily suggest the real motives behind the perpetration. Moreover, these details might also shed some light on the attack of the Pentagon which would happen slightly over 5 years later after the Oklahoma nuclear bombing.

1. The Oklahoma nuclear bombing, which seemed to be totally devoid of any motive, and which occurred in the middle of nowhere, was initially designed to be blamed on the Palestinians. In this regard I will abstain from voicing any conclusions, but a discerning reader could probably make conclusions of his own – based on potential motivations. I think it is obvious what particular group of people would be the main beneficiary when some perpetration is being blamed on the Palestinians.

2. “Scapegoat” Timothy McVeigh had been executed (not necessarily “put to death” as I have mentioned above, but at least – “caused to cease to exist in This World as Mr. Timothy McVeigh”) suspiciously fast. He was “executed” just one month before September 11, 2001. It seems that his speedy “execution” was a mere matter of precaution – if still in prison, he might comment something inappropriate on the upcoming 9/11 affair, or after it. Moreover, since both – the Oklahoma bombing and the Twin Towers bombings (in a version of the “confidential” second “truth”) – were nuclear, and the actual instruments of the perpetrations supposed to be “mini-nukes”, it would be reasonable to expect that after the Twin Towers’ collapse and establishing of the second “truth”, some people would have a lot of additional questions to ask Mr. Timothy McVeigh, who would be still available for comment. Thus, it was vitally important to make him unavailable before 9/11.

3. The most important detail: when Mr. Timothy McVeigh was arrested, a certain outrageous neo-Nazi book was supposedly found in his possession. Moreover, this very book was used as a kind of evidence in his trial – supposedly to prove his “motivations” in regard to the bombing. The name of that book was “The Turner Diaries” – by William L. Pierce, writing under the pseudonym “Andrew MacDonald”. The most important features of that book are:

3.1. The book is extremely anti-Jewish. It features not just an anti-Semitic tone alone – typical to the most of “conspiracy-theoretical”, nationalistic, pseudo-religious, neo-Nazi, and pro-Arabic works. It features much more than just that. Indeed, this book casually describes a total extermination of Jews and even half-Jews as a matter of a daily routine.

Thus, it should be presumed by default, that any one, who reads or even possess such a book, under no circumstances could be associated with the state of Israel. This book is anti-Semitic to such an extent, that even Adolph Hitler himself would be ashamed to publish such a poor concoction. This alone leads to a reasonable suspicion that only some Israeli officials, or some scribblers on the latter’s orders could have written such a grotesque work, because no person exists in the real world who might hate the descendants of Jacob to this particular extent.

Actually, Hitler attempted to get rid of those old Jews, who refused to integrate into a modern society, only because he considered them as being basic carriers of the then extremely dangerous Red ideology, while Arabs (and Muslims as a matter of solidarity) hate the Jews primarily because of their attitude towards the Palestinians. It shall be known, that in Hitler’s times the Jews in Germany were real official dissidents, who refused to join the civil society and to accept the constitution of their respective state; while in the eyes of the Arabs, the Jews are nothing else than occupants.

However, in modern European countries and in the United States the Jews are no longer official dissidents. So, when it comes to the rest of the people today, they generally do not make any distinction between a Jew and a non-Jew whatsoever, because the Jews have long ago completely integrated into a modern society and nowadays are nothing else than ordinary citizens of their respective countries. The Jews work, study, pay taxes, donate blood, carry identification documents, have license-plates on their cars, wear neck-ties, register their fire-arms, register their marriages, register their new born children, bring their arguments to be settled in a local court of Justice, and even serve in the military – exactly as any other ethnic nationals do. Nowadays, all the Jews abide by the constitution, rather than by the Law of Moses – which they continue to practice (to a certain extent) only in privacy of their modern kitchens. Technically, for the last 60-70 years there is no more difference between the two citizens – the one whose ancestors were Jews, and the one whose ancestors were Goyim.

To summarize it, we could say that a modern “Jew” in the United States is no longer a Jew – he is an obedient American citizen; an ancient habit of not eating pork or that of abstaining from switching electric lights on Saturdays apparently does not make him a real Jew. Even Adolph Hitler would abstain from prosecuting this particular breed, because he would be reasonable enough to realize that such a Jew is nothing else than just an ordinary, moreover, obedient citizen. Even during Hitler’s time not all Jews were actually persecuted – those Jews who used to serve in the German army during World War I were excluded, while those Jews who were decorated during the WWI were even bestowed a status of an “Honorary Aryan”³⁰⁸. Of course, those Jews who agreed to cooperate with the Nazi regime and to serve in its army or in SS forces were welcome either. It shall be known that Hitler used to prosecute the Jews particularly because they were against fascism and were inclined to support the Communists; when it comes to the Jews that were willing to support fascism they were definitely welcome. Thus, it is good to remember that Hitler was against the Jews not because of any racist sentiment. It was because of the ideological differences only.

However, it is not so with the abovementioned book by William L. Pierce. Its author does not talk about any ideology at all, but presents to its reader such an unprecedented and, moreover, unreasonable hatred towards the Jews, that it must be suspected right away that only scribblers at the pay of Israel could offer a gullible reader such a concoction. This book was clearly intended to cause an outrage of reasonable citizens and psychologically it should have no other effect on its readers than to cause them one more time to take pity on the poor oppressed Jews.

So, it was exactly this book that was “found” in Timothy McVeigh’s possession – after an initial attempt of the FBI to blame that nuclear bombing on the Palestinian terrorists had been abandoned for some unknown reason, and the FBI had finally decided to blame it on McVeigh.

3.2. This book contains also a lot of outrageous nuclear ravings – which is a very unusual thing. Because generally to discuss topics such a usage of nuclear weapons in actual bombings, especially those on an apocalyptic scale (such as in this book) – is a kind of taboo, at least outside of military strategic plans. I mean it is not common to encounter such a colorful description of routine usage of nuclear weapons in belles-lettres. However, this particular book not only routinely describes extermination of the Jews and half-Jews, but even routine massive nuclear strikes against various civilian targets, supposedly “in a course of a revolution”, not to mention nuclear strikes against some enclaves, allegedly used to harbor the Jews who do not want to be shot by an ordinary gun.

The mere fact that routine usage of nuclear weapons in a course of the “revolution” is being described in this book with such a sadistic gusto, and the mere fact that exactly this book and nothing else was found in McVeigh’s possession and, moreover, was used as a piece of evidence in his trial, leads to a reasonable suspicion. It seems that both – the investigation and the trial for the Oklahoma bombing in reality contained two parts and two “truths” correspondingly:

- an open one for the general public consumption,
- and
- one more – “awful”, “confidential” and nuclear one – for the “patricians” alone.

It does not seem that the case of the 1995 Oklahoma bombing has really suffered that idiotic cover-up in a well-known sense (I mean that provided for the public consumption, a “fertilizer conspiracy theory”). It seems that a “confidential” part of the case (if any) suffered only a cover-up in regard to the true supplier of the “mini-nuke”, while the “mini-nuke” itself supposed to be a part of the case in the court (at least, a part of its “secret” part), was never revealed.

³⁰⁸ http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Honorary_Aryan

3.3. This book of McVeigh’s, contains also an episode with a certain “revolutionary” attack on the Pentagon, using stolen nuclear warheads. This is not particularly important for now, but it is good to remember. You will probably find it funny later – at the end of this book, where the 9/11 attack against the Pentagon is described in detail.

Interestingly, the Oklahoma bombing was not as devoid of any reasons as it might appear. Indeed, there were some reasons behind it. It is well-known that in the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building certain incriminating documents were kept. The actual story dates back to the ‘80s – to the infamous Iran-Contra scandal.

An airstrip in a small city of Mena, Arkansas, was illegally used for extensive illegal shipments of weapons to Nicaraguan Contras. In reality, however, that illegal gun-running business was nothing else than a semi-official/semi-criminal front for a truly criminal business. The planes that arrived to the United States back from Central America were not actually empty. They were full of cocaine. And, interestingly enough, full of heroin too. It was really a big business, and continued for many years.

Understandably, some inevitable inquiry has followed. Certain DEA and IRS officials were apparently not happy with that business (in which also several top U.S. political figures were directly involved). The ill-fated inquiry, publicly known as the “Mena investigation” – conducted by both DEA and IRS, has never been completed. All materials of that inquiry were kept, oddly enough, in the very Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building and were all lost after it was destroyed in the mini-nuclear bombing. The main supplier of drugs from Central America and the main beneficiary of the Iran-Contra affair was a man, who was a personal friend of President Bush Senior. In addition, he was also a second-in-command in the criminal government of Panama (overthrown by U.S. forces in 1989 – primarily because of its narcotics business). This man’s name was Mike Harari.

These two were exemplary mini-nuclear bombings: one pertaining to the pre-9/11 era, and one – to the post-9/11 era. In fact, there were many more similar mini-nuclear bombings – in either before 9/11 and after it. Moreover, these mini-nuclear bombings continue as up to this day. Even during the last few months – while the author of these lines was busy writing this book, there were a few more of the “mini-nukes” that went off in Iraq and even in some other countries – including, a recent nuclear bombing of the UN Office in Algeria, an outrageous nuclear bombing of Kurds in Kirkuk, Northern Iraq, a nuclear bombing of a famous Khillani Shi’a mosque in Baghdad, and an unprecedented quadruple nuclear bombing of Yazidi sect near Mosul in Iraq (the latter set a new record in casualties – over 550 dead and several thousands injured). However, I do not think it is good to continue describing all of such bombings here. This book is primarily about 9/11 and we have to spare our attentions in order to grasp its primary topic. Thus, for now, I wish to stop, presuming that the reader has at last understood several basic points in regard to these “mini-nuclear” bombings, alias “car-bombings” and “truck-bombings”.

These basic points are as follows:

- 1) There are “mini-nukes”.
- 2) These “mini-nukes” are “confidentially” blamed to belong to various terrorist organizations, almost invariably – to the so-called “Muslim” ones.
- 3) These “terrorist organizations” do not hesitate to use these “mini-nukes” against various targets, mostly civilian.
- 4) These “mini-nukes” produce unusually powerful blasts – equivalent to unreasonable amounts of TNT or other conventional explosives that could scarcely fit even into the biggest truck, not to say into a passenger car.
- 5) These “mini-nukes” are being usually hidden into sewage in order to minimize an initial nuclear flash, and the rest of well-known and clearly visible destructive factors of a typical atomic blast – such as its air-blast wave, thermal radiation, and penetrating radiation. However, because these “mini-nukes” are being exploded underground, they always throw out huge amounts of soil, creating craters, while craters could not be created by any blast if it happened above the ground – such as in a case of a true car-bombing. Moreover, because they explode underground, those “mini-nukes” produce extremely huge amounts of deadly radioactive dust – the fourth destructive factor of any typical atomic blast; such radioactive dust, grounded to microscopic particles by an explosion, is normally being brought upwards by a heat of explosion, and then after blown away by wind it descends to the ground as a “radioactive fallout” – which, in fact, represents the mortal danger to the people in distances of up to several kilometers around.

- 6) Besides an actual explosion, the “mini-nukes”, even slightly buried, additionally kill and injure people around by its unusually strong air-blast wave, and by its thermal radiation – causing burnings of up to 45% of victims bodies, plus they invisibly injure them by ionizing radiation – which could cause deaths immediately in 1-2 days if in very huge doses, in about 10-11 days if in heavy doses (with rate of lethality close to 90%), and again – in about 30 days – if in medium doses and with insufficient medical treatment or in case of poor health (with a lethality rate of up to 50%). Besides burning people, “mini-nukes” also burn passenger cars around their explosions – in a very typical manner – i.e. not by flames, but by irradiated heat; and such “half-burned” cars representing an unmistakably recognizable signature of an atomic blast.
- 7) All modern mini-nuclear bombings are routinely blamed by authorities on “truck-bombings” or on “suicide truck-bombings” – because it is the only way to explain to the plebs the total absence of captured bombers, as well as the only way to explain unusually huge yields of explosions. The well-known to the authorities mortal dangers, represented by radioactive fallouts, are never honestly informed to the “plebeians” – who are always free to inhale those deadly microscopic particles of radioactive dust to their pleasure. (Just try to remember that those FBI agents, who used to visit “Ground Zero” in New York wore not just full haz-mat suits, but also sealed them with some duct tape – apparently they knew very well what was the typical size of a particle of deadly radioactive dust; the problem is only that they do not want to explain it to others.)
- 8) Typically, all those so-called “truck-bombings” caused many more deaths than even the most “honestly” reported digits – because scores of people die from acute radiation sickness caused by penetrating radiation, by residual radiation, and because of inhaling of radioactive dust – 90% of patients who got doses of over 200 R die on 10th or 11th day, and up to 50% of the remaining patients who got doses of 100-200 R die on 30th- 31st day. However, as a matter of fact, these additional casualties are never reported by authorities – so the officially acknowledged number of casualties typically remains as reported on the second, or at maximum – on the third day after such a “truck-bombing”.
- 9) Since the killing distance of ionizing penetrating radiation in the case of a mini-nuke’s explosion exceeds that of its thermal radiation by at least three times, practically no victim, who receives any serious burns, has any chance to survive – because he automatically receives an over-lethal dose of ionizing radiation.
- 10) Any typical modern bombing with mass-casualties, especially if it left a crater, must be suspected to be a “mini-nuclear” bombing; you could bet that you won’t be mistaken if you presume so right away. If you hear that such and such blast was allegedly caused by a few hundreds kilograms of TNT (or even by a couple of tons of it) and it killed over 20 people and injured over 50. It was a nuclear blast – do not even doubt, because conventional explosives do not cause mass casualties and bombs made in cars or trucks do not leave any craters.
- 11) Most of modern “mini-nuclear” bombings, with the very rare exception, are intended to scare and to impress only the “patricians” alone – and so to cement their determination to fight the so-called “terror” and to continue their military campaigns in Iraq and Afghanistan – despite an obvious fact that no alleged weapons of mass-destruction belonging to the regime of Saddam Hussein has been captured there so far.
- 12) These “mini-nukes” could only be manufactured by a couple of the most developed countries. Since these “mini-nukes” are actually prohibited – in the same manner as any chemical and bacteriological weapons are – those few countries that produce the “mini-nukes”, can not afford to let these “mini-nukes” out of their hands. It means they could not really pass them to any “Al-Qaeda”, “Islamic Jihad”, or to any other proxy organization of this kind. It could definitely cause a tremendous public scandal and a lot of international repercussions if it is revealed that such and such country continues to develop “mini-nukes” and, moreover, lets them end up in the hands of terrorists. If such a country decides to go as far as to use the “mini-nukes” in real bombings, it would never dare to issue them to any terrorist proxy, because it would be simply too dangerous for the country’s reputation if any information leaks out (not even to say about an awful possibility that some “terrorist” could be caught red-handed with such a “mini-nuke” and could testify in a local court as to who is his real master). Such a country could only afford to issue these “mini-nukes” to some highly-reliable secret agent of their own. Most probably (but not necessarily) such an agent will have a diplomatic immunity – to minimize possibilities of being accidentally caught with such a devise. It shall be also presumed that an end-user – who actually slides such a “mini-nuke” into sewage – supposes to be also a highly-trusted secret agent too, and not any proxy, because to let a “mini-nuke” out of the trusted hand is still too dangerous even at the very last stage before its actual use. In any case, a possibility that someone (who is not ultimately trusted) could be arrested with such a devise in his hand must be absolutely excluded.

- 13) Almost all these modern “mini-nuclear” bombings, with probably only a couple of exceptions, are performed by the very same group of perpetrators, who have absolutely nothing to do with Islam. Moreover, even those that constitute the abovementioned “couple of exceptions”, have nothing to do with Islam either – the alternative the mini-nuclear bombings were just performed by some alternative secret services.
- 14) In all modern “mini-nuclear” bombings, again with probably only a couple of exceptions, they use the latest 3rd generation “mini-nukes”, which are small enough to be secretly hidden into sewage.
- 15) These “mini-nukes”, however dangerous, were apparently not powerful enough as to inflict such damage to the Twin Towers, as shown in the real 9/11 case. While “mini-nukes” could obviously destroy a huge area built-up by ordinary houses, they can not topple a modern heavily reinforced building even if they explode in its immediate vicinity – as it was demonstrated in the 1995 Oklahoma bombing case, as well as in the case of the 1996 Khobar Towers bombing. However, gullible “patricians”, who obviously think that they are much more clever than the plebs, sincerely believe that the three WTC buildings were indeed demolished by the same group of perpetrators and by using the same kind of “mini-nukes” – as have been used by the “terrorists” to destroy the Sari night club in Bali in 2002, barracks of the U.S. Marines and French paratroopers in Beirut, Lebanon in 1983, the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building in Oklahoma and the Egyptian Embassy in Islamabad, Pakistan in 1995, Khobar Towers building #131 in Dhahran, Saudi Arabia in 1996, the American Embassies in Kenya and Tanzania in 1998, two synagogues and the British Consulate in Istanbul, Turkey, the UN Office in Baghdad, Iraq in 2003, the Australian Embassy in Jakarta, Indonesia in 2004, in a nuclear assassination of the former Lebanese Prime-Minister Rafik Hariri in Beirut in 2005, and on several other instances (the latest noticed by author of these lines was a nuclear police school bombing in Algeria on 19 of August 2008, after which I lost count, to be frank with you). This vain belief of the gullible “patricians” does nothing else than distract their due attentions from the true causes of the WTC collapse in particular and from the true nature of the so-called “international terrorism” in general.

From now on, I guess, the discerning reader will be able to always recognize a typical mini-nuclear explosion even if (and especially “if”) the official propaganda claims that it was a regular “truck-bombing”.

The Pentagon attack. Disproving “conspiracy theories”.

Before I explain what exactly happened with the Pentagon during the 9/11 attacks, I am obliged first to disprove all other conspiracy theories circulating over the Pentagon affair – exactly the same way I did this with the case of the WTC nuclear demolition. Otherwise, there would be a big chance that I might be mistakenly taken for just one more theorist, who merely speculates on some uncertain facts without actually knowing anything. I would like to confirm that I indeed know what exactly has happened with the Pentagon on 9/11. Moreover, I know for sure not only what, but also why it has happened. Nonetheless, before I proceed with any further explanation, I’ll make a brief overview of the existing conspiracy theories.

So here it is:

Unlike in the case of the WTC demolition, where there were so many “unexplainable” things to be explained – fine dust, “long-lasting underground fires”, molten steel bars, actual speed of the WTC falling, abnormal amounts of radioactivity, the absence of dead bodies or body parts, etc., in the case of the Pentagon everything was more or less clear. All truth-seekers, of course, have simply rejected the bizarre government-approved interpretation of the attack. Just to remind you, the latter claimed that the Pentagon was allegedly struck by American Airlines Flight 77, which was allegedly flown by an able hijacker – Mr. Hani Hanjour in an altitude which was lower than the one with fully retracted landing gears (i.e. with the plane’s turbofan engines plowing the lawn in front of the Pentagon). Understandably, no one could be satisfied with such ravings, especially considering that there was no sign of a crash in the lawn and it was, even after the impact, as pristine as a golf-course.

Since there was nothing much to be explained (except only to disprove the weak official “theory” – which was not so difficult to do) there are actually only two main conspiracy theories in regard to the Pentagon affair. Both suggest that the Pentagon attack had been nothing else than an “inside job” and the Pentagon had been struck not by any passenger Boeing, but by a certain missile. The missile hit the Pentagon under about 45 degrees angle and managed to penetrate through its several concentric building rings – namely Rings E, D and C. Plus it penetrated one perpendicular row of buildings – in between Rings D and C. The missile punched entry- and exit- holes in each building row and ended its journey somewhere in an open space in between Pentagon’s Rings C and B, falling short of penetrating the entire Pentagon and ending the “journey” at the central yard of the Pentagon – mockingly named “Ground Zero” in advance³⁰⁹. Both theories also suggest that the suspected missile belonged to the U.S. Government – which was supposedly the main culprit that had staged this unprecedented attack on its own Department of Defense.

Conspiracy Theory No.1: the Pentagon has been struck by a certain Boeing AGM-86C³¹⁰ Air-launched Cruise Missile.

Conspiracy Theory No. 2: the Pentagon has been struck by a certain BGM-109 “Tomahawk” Land Attack Cruise Missile.

Since both conspiracy theories do not differ much in principle, I will proceed to disprove both of them simultaneously – without considering either of them separately like I did in the above cases with the WTC conspiracy theories.

Oh, I forgot about “witnesses”, who “saw” the Boeing with American Airlines insignia; I have to say sorry. Those “witnesses” are liars hired by the FBI. We have to disregard their Conspiracy Theory No. 3.

Our considerations in regard to the two abovementioned conspiracy theories will be as follows:

³⁰⁹ Since the Pentagon was presumed to be the first and foremost target of the possible Soviet nuclear strike, its middle yard had been in advance dubbed a “Ground Zero” – which meant then a hypocenter of a nuclear explosion.

³¹⁰ Actually, it supposes to be in this case AGM-86D, which has much greater penetration capability in comparison with its “C” variety (because of its specially designed payload), but the Conspiracy Theory No.1 – at least as that presented by <http://www.serendipity.li/wtc.htm> categorically states it was AGM-86C missile and nothing else. However, there are some other claims in the Internet that it was allegedly AGM-86A and even AGM-84 “Harpoon” – but since the AGM-86C is the most common “suspect”, other “suspects” will be omitted here – just to save paper.

1. Moral aspect. Does anyone seriously believe that the U.S. Government would really go as far as to organize a missile attack on its own Department of Defense? What about my humble self? – I don't think so. However malicious the U.S. Government might be, at least outwardly it still looks like a government, rather than like a kind of lunatic asylum or a cult of psychotics.

2. Logical aspect: let us presume that the U.S. Government was indeed the one who attacked the World Trade Center, which caused the desired effect – an unprecedented public outrage directed against the supposed “Muslim terrorists”. The job has already been done. Wasn't that enough? Why would the U.S. officials in this case (when they have reached the desired goal already) undertake such a stupid step as to launch an unexplainable missile attack against the Pentagon, attracting undue attention and ensuing suspicions of innocent rank-and-file military officers working in the Pentagon building and thus risking the entire 9/11 project? Would the Pentagon attack really enhance the picture? Especially, considering that the attack on the Pentagon was really the hardest thing to be explained to the American public... Well, one might think that the U.S. Government was so malicious, but why do we have to think that the U.S. Government was so stupid?

3. One more logical consideration (independent from the above): as you probably understand, the Pentagon was definitely the worst choice for the “terrorist” attack whose primary aim was to anger the lay American population and to attract sympathies from the rest of the simpletons around the United States, for the very United States. Why? It is because the Pentagon was nothing else than the headquarters of the American military. Thus, for anyone, who claims to wage an alleged “war” against the United States, the Pentagon would be the legitimate target No.1 – even before the White House.

Try to understand that an attack against any legitimate target won't really attract much of the needed sympathies towards those who suffered such an attack. It would rather attract sympathies to the attackers. If someone has chosen to wear a military uniform (and to get salary double or even triple in comparison with an ordinary citizen, not even to say about early retirement and other well-known benefits) then he has automatically chosen a perilous job. Hasn't he?

When someone wearing a military uniform is killed (unless he was killed outside of his service duties) it is not even considered being a case of murder, actually. Nobody normally says that such and such soldier has been “murdered in Iraq”, or that “56 thousand U.S. soldiers were murdered in Vietnam”. It might sound odd, but probably only because you did not think about this technicality. The problem is that all soldiers, besides their much bigger salaries, enjoy a very different civil status in comparison with the rest of the population: by declaring themselves soldiers, they have gone on the war path... You simply can not “murder” a soldier, because it is technically impossible. You can kill a soldier, but never murder one. When applied to your own soldiers, for example, it is normal to use such terms as: “were killed”, or “were lost”, or “perished”, or “fallen”.

On the other hand, the same thing also applies to enemy soldiers – you can not “murder” an enemy soldier and in the same time you can not accuse an enemy soldier of being a “murderer” because he simply fights you back. Captured enemy soldiers – irrespective of whether they have killed any soldiers of your own or not – are supposed to not be considered criminals; they shall enjoy a special status – “prisoners of war”. All those well-known so-called “war criminals” are in reality nothing else than some high-ranking military or political officials who had committed various crimes against the civilian population only – because even though, technically, you can not “murder” a soldier, you can still technically “murder” a civilian.

What I am trying to say is this: suppose it was the U.S. Government, who attacked the World Trade Center and also the Pentagon. Then the Pentagon would be really a bad choice. Such an attack against the Pentagon could not be dubbed a “murderous attack” – simply because of the technicality described above. You can carry out a “murderous attack” against the civilian Twin Towers, but definitely not against the military establishment. Moreover, if the Pentagon would be indeed attacked by certain “warriors of Islam” – such a feat of arms would never be counted against them. Try to be fair. To successfully attack the supreme military headquarters of the main adversary, which is, moreover, being cowardly hidden behind the Atlantic Ocean, and, nonetheless, is still being protected not by only NORAD alone, but even by its own additional anti-aircraft missiles battery, would never be counted as a “cowardly act”. Even though the propaganda machine is trying hard to present the Pentagon passenger plane attack as “cowardly”, in reality those who supposed to carry it out would have the status of “heroes” as a matter of fact. Undoubtedly, if the Pentagon passenger plane's attack were a true thing, it should have been perceived as an exceptionally heroic deed. Let us call a spade a spade.

Therefore, if someone in the U.S. Government had really planned a bogus attack against the Pentagon in order to blame it later on some Muslims, then such a person shall be accused of treason. Indeed, he was doing nothing else than promoting the very Islamic cause – and he did so much more efficiently, than the Muslims themselves could even dream of.

What I am trying to say is this: if it really were the U.S. Government, who attacked the Twin Towers, then it would most likely become satisfied and would abstain from any further attack. And even if the WTC was not enough, and the third attack was really needed, the Pentagon would never be a choice of the U.S. Government. The U.S. Government would rather chose a school or a kindergarten, or at least – the Harvard University – to be the third target, because in this case an attack would really look “cowardly” and could technically be called “murderous”. From all possible targets of such a bogus attack, the Pentagon would undoubtedly be the worst one, because it would attract the least of the much needed sympathies. Please, try to be realistic – it is self-evident that it was not the U.S. Government who stood behind the Pentagon attack. Nobody can fight against logic.

4. However, there is another “conspiracy theory”, which claims that: in the USA there were allegedly two “shadowy” groups of politicians, who pulled strings behind the curtain – one “pro-Jewish” and another one – “anti-Jewish”. While the first “shadowy” group managed to stage successful aerial attacks on the Twin Towers, successfully blame on Muslims and was preparing to claim laurels, the second group, which was caught by this act with their pants down, still managed to respond in a worthy manner. It used some missile, belonging to the U.S. military, to fire at the Pentagon – only in order to make it impossible for the first group to come up with any “beautiful” public explanation for all of these three attacks together. According to this “conspiracy theory”, the Pentagon attack has been nothing else than a profanation of the attacks against the WTC.

Actually, even though I despise conspiracy theories in general, I love this particular conspiracy theory very much – just because it was really a beautiful way of thinking so.

Let us consider this theory – because it looks reasonable enough to be considered. The main point of this theory, which is self-evident, is that the Pentagon attack was indeed a profanation of the WTC attack. Indeed, the WTC attack alone would look much better. This, by the way, one more time clears the U.S. Government from any complicity – apparently, the U.S. Government was not so stupid to plot such a doubtful thing as the Pentagon attack. Still, unfortunately, this beautiful theory is not true. I don't think I would be able to disprove the political aspect of this particular conspiracy theory; but, I will still be able to disprove this conspiracy theory by disproving its technical aspect: this theory claims that the American missiles – either the abovementioned BGM 109 “Tomahawk” or AGM-86C – must have been used.

5. Technical considerations.

5.1 According to some air-traffic controllers, testifying before the 9/11 Commission, and giving various interviews later, that flying object, which headed towards the Pentagon shortly before the impact, by its speed and by its maneuverability resembled nothing else than a supersonic jet-fighter. Therefore, its appearance on radar-screens was interpreted exactly as “a supersonic jet-fighter” by air-traffic controllers, who obviously had an experience in distinguishing any and every commonly known flying object.

“...I noticed the aircraft. It was an unidentified plane to the southwest of Dulles, moving at a very high rate of speed ... I had literally a blip and nothing more...” “... the speed, the maneuverability, the way that he turned, we all thought in the radar room, all of us experienced air traffic controllers, that it was a military plane...” “...I was yelling ... 'We've got a target headed right for the White House!' At a speed of about 500 miles an hour, the plane was headed straight for what is known as P-56, protected air space 56, which covers the White House and the Capitol...” “...The plane was between 12 and 14 miles away ... and it was just a countdown. Ten miles west. Nine miles west ... Our supervisor picked up our line to the White House and started relaying to them information, [that] we have an unidentified very fast-moving aircraft inbound toward your vicinity, 8 miles west...”

³¹¹ http://www.historycommons.org/entity.jsp?entity=danielle_o_brien

[At that moment, Vice President Cheney was rushed to a special basement bunker. White House staff members were told to run away from the building.]

"...And it went 'six, five, four', And I had it in my mouth to say, three, and all of a sudden the plane turned away. In the room, it was almost a sense of relief. This must be a fighter. This must be one of our guys sent in, scrambled to patrol our capital, and to protect our president, and we sat back in our chairs and breathed for just a second..." [But the "plane" continued to turn right until it had made a 360-degree maneuver.] "...We lost radar contact with that aircraft. And we waited. And we waited. And your heart is just beating out of your chest waiting to hear what's happened ... and then the Washington National [Airport] controllers came over our speakers in our room and said, 'Dulles, hold all of our inbound traffic. The Pentagon's been hit.'..."

Let us consider that account of events very carefully.

5.2. Maneuverability of the unknown object that struck the Pentagon.

According to the abovementioned account of Ms. Danielle O'Brian, its maneuverability was that high that shortly before it set itself to the final path of attack, the object managed to execute a certain unbelievable maneuver which allowed it to completely disappear from radar screens. It had never appeared on the radar screens again and had never been heard of – until it had struck its intended target. I would like the reader to notice that such a maneuver was something pertaining to a really high-technology. To be able to disappear from the radars is a feat. Be sure, that neither "Tomahawk", nor AGM-86 missiles could ever be able to come up with such a performance. Only because of this fact alone both of them shall be automatically excluded from a list of suspected kinds of missiles.

6.3. Speed of the unknown object which struck the Pentagon in reality.

The air-traffic controllers put it at 500 miles an hour [~805 km/h]. Both suggested American missiles mentioned above – BGM-109 "Tomahawk" and Boeing AGM-86C – could technically fit into these speed frames, since both of them boast cruise speeds of ~550 mph. However, there is a question in this case. If the speed of that object was really only about 500 mph (while an actual cruise speed of the Boeing 757 is more – 530 mph) why then did the traffic controllers so unmistakably pick it up that by its speed, that flying object resembled a military jet? Why then – not a commuter jet?

Apparently, the speed of that object was much, much higher than 500 mph, but, unfortunately, typical eye-witnesses often try to "adjust" evidence to something they've gotten used to. It is difficult – to explain the unexplainable and it is quite understandable that witnesses always try to add their unasked-for own opinions to the real facts. Try to consider this fact: by the time they have come up with their testimonies, the air-traffic controllers have been already prejudiced by a false premise – that the Pentagon has been allegedly hit by "AA Flight 77". So, due to this false premise, they simply could not accept any facts which might contradict that premise... For example, many other eyes-witnesses claim "to see with their very own eyes" nothing else than the Boeing 757 flying over the lawn before the Pentagon and hitting the Pentagon's wall... They claim even to be able to see faces of its passengers in the alleged plane's windows... However, it is well-known that many witnesses were ordered to lie by the FBI.

You have to know, that whatever witnesses say definitely must be considered, but it does not mean that you have to be as gullible as to believe everything they claim "to see" or "to hear". Witnesses' accounts are prone to various "beautifications", witnesses would always try their best to "adjust" real facts to already established versions of events, and this has to be always kept in mind. By the way – truly professional inquirers and professional judges in law courts know these specific peculiarities of witnesses' testimonies very well and always treat such statements with a great amount of care.

Therefore, instead of looking at the figure "500 miles an hour", mentioned by Danielle O'Brian, we would rather look carefully at her other phrases: "...moving at a very high rate of speed ..." and "... I had literally a blip and nothing more..." and this: "... the speed, the maneuverability, the way that he turned..." and this: "...very fast-moving aircraft inbound toward your vicinity..." – these observations of hers would be apparently closer to reality.

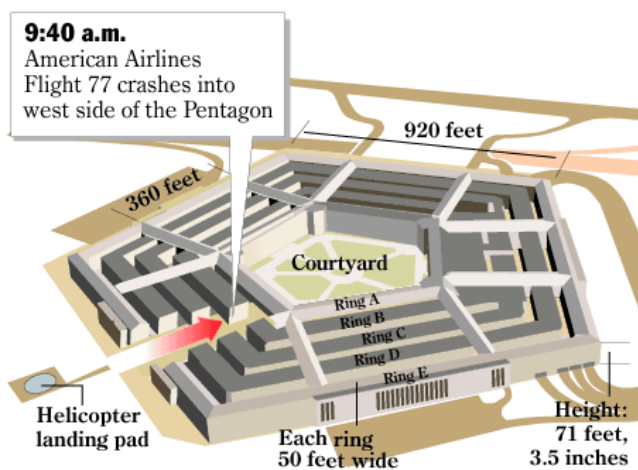

For an air-traffic controller such a speed as 500 mph is not "very fast" and it is not even "fast". It is just nothing else than a normal speed with which all passenger planes are usually moving around. It is even slower than normal, because passenger planes are actually moving a little bit faster. If you get used to such a speed as 530 mph as being normal, you would never call a speed of 500 mph "very fast" and such a speed would never attract your attention at all as being anything unusual. It is pretty obvious that the discussed object was flying at a speed typical to supersonic jet fighters (jet-fighters are all supersonic, by the way, for the last 40 years, at least). That was the only reason why all the air-traffic controllers, who, by the way, maintained that all of them were “experienced air-traffic controllers”, unmistakably took it for a military plane.

For our particular investigation the important thing is that both suspected American missiles are sub-sonic with their cruise speeds equal to a speed of a typical passenger jet and under no circumstances would any experienced air-traffic controller ever mistake any AGM-86C or “Tomahawk” missile for a military jet-fighter. This is absolutely clear.

5.4. Penetrating capability of the object, which struck the Pentagon.

Both above-mentioned American missiles, which are suspected to be the instruments of the 9/11 perpetration, are made from exactly the same kind of materials as any ordinary plane. Neither of them would be capable of penetrating the Pentagon’s thick walls, simply because of being too fragile for such a deep penetration. What kind of thing managed to break through the four (!) Pentagon buildings’ rings (each 50 feet wide) under the 45 degrees angle, and before even reaching the first Pentagon’s wall, managed to throw aside a huge electric generator, that happened to be on its way?

This diagram displays the official claim...

It is not exact, because in reality the angle of the penetration was 45 degrees, not 90 degrees as shown here.

By the way - the Courtyard in the middle of the Pentagon is exactly what was known to those working military officials as “Ground Zero”.

Above – the generator thrown away by the missile that hit the Pentagon.

The picture above shows what the real damage to the Pentagon was. Does it look like the “Tomahawk’s” job? Or does it look like a damage inflicted by the AGM-86C? Or does it look like damage inflicted by that Arabic ass Hani Hanjour, who had flown to this feat the aluminum “Boing-757” – allegedly “hijacked” by his accomplices?

BGM-109 “Tomahawk” cruise missile.

Boeing AGM-86 cruise missile.

BGM-109 “Tomahawk” is about to hit its target.

AGM-86C is about to hit its target.

Look at the pictures above that show typical attacking behavior of the two suspected U.S. missiles – the BGM-109 and the AGM-86C.

From all various armament available in the United States, that kind of damage to the Pentagon as shown above might have been inflicted by only one kind of projectile: some low-class old main-battleship (like the USS “Missouri”) would fire its main 16-inch cannon using an armor-piercing shell. Then, and only then, would the damage inflicted to the Pentagon by such a shell look like that one. Sorry to say so, but in the United States there were no other weapons capable to achieve such a penetration.

It is known, however, that none of the U.S. main-battleships had ever fired at the Pentagon on 9/11 (moreover, it seems that all four remaining U.S. main battleships have been de-commissioned following the First Gulf War in 1991 and were not available on that date). This is just a funny consideration for those who believe that the U.S. Government was allegedly able to find some American-made weapon to be used in the Pentagon attack.

Just to look more “democratic” and allowing pluralism of opinions, the author of these lines would like to make a quotation from an interesting Internet site, seriously dealing with the Pentagon attack. The article is available here: <http://pagesperso-orange.fr/jpdesm/pentagon/pages-en/th-cruism.html>

Below are arguments the website owner brings against the “Cruise missile theory” (practically, also against the AGM-86 theory):

Arguments against the "cruise missile" theory

- The plane which has hit the pentagon had a long approach trajectory, flying along a quasi perfect 270 degree turn over the city, followed by a linear final approach. None of the witnesses has described a cruise missile, except some of them saying that it finally ran straight into the pentagon as if it was electronically locked onto it's target.
- The witnesses can be divided into two groups : those who have seen a Boeing 757 (or even an airbus 320 said one of them), some of them saying they had recognized the markings of American Airlines, and those who have seen a small commuter jet (the necessary size for a dozen people on board).
- If my knowledge of military art are up to date, it seems to me that cruise missiles don't need a landing gear.
- Cruise missiles have very thin wings. The hit lamp poles would have cut the wings off and the missile would have crashed on the lawn before reaching the pentagon's front.
- A cruise missile doesn't make a descent with a 270° turn a few seconds before arriving on it's target : it would make it less precise.
- A cruise missile couldn't have done the damage described on Ron Harvey's web site on the lamp poles around Washington Boulevard.
- The damage on the electrical generator, fence, and on the low wall on the south of the ventilation structure couldn't have been done by a cruise missile.

As you can see, the above argumentation is quite convincing. It is true, that those winged cruise missiles could not perform in such a manner, as was shown in the real attack against the Pentagon. Indeed, there is some logic and a lot of reason in the abovementioned considerations. However, let us take a close look at how their author constructs his argumentation in general.

For example, he implies that since a “thinly winged” cruise missile could not have done the damage such as toppled lamp posts, then it shall be presumed that it could have been a winged plane? A simple thought that the lamp posts might have been toppled on the orders of the U.S. officials as a part of the cover-up story seems not to occur to the author of the above... On the other hand, he seems to believe that because it was technically impossible for any American cruise missile to damage the fence and the electrical generator, then it might have been a plane? Is that really reasonable? If it were proven that it was not the BGM-86 missile, should then it be “automatically proven” that this was indeed a “Boeing 757” - as the FBI claims? This would be really some very strange kind of logic...

1 second after the impact

Actually, everything is more or less clear on those two frames – the “flying object”, according to the FBI’s spin-doctors, was simply “too fast” to be captured in a frame. It is not seen even in the intermediate frame (which is omitted here) – the one dated by the “0” second – i.e. by the very second of the impact. This is understandable. But it seems that nobody has ever asked himself: hey, what are these odd pink-colored smokes, which I can see on the right top corners against the blue sky – in both frames – 1 second before and 1 second after? They look really peculiar... Maybe these have been left by exploded shells shot by anti-aircraft artillery in a desperate attempt to defend the Pentagon? No, the Pentagon is being defended by a battery of anti-aircraft missiles, not by any artillery. Besides, it is well-known that it did not open fire at the approaching object; the poor Pentagon did not even attempt to defend itself because things happened too fast... So, where did those interesting pink-colored smokes did come from?

³¹² The Pentagon (actually “FBI”, not “Pentagon”) released the two videos for the first time only 16 May, 2006, in response to a Freedom of Information Act request and related lawsuit by the public interest group “Judicial Watch”. It previously refused to do so because, it claimed, the tapes were allegedly a “part of an ongoing investigation involving Zacarias Moussaoui” – which is the most common pretext not to release to the public any controversial evidence about 9/11 (even the long-demanded passenger-lists of the allegedly “hijacked” flights are not being made public because of the alleged “trial of Zacarias Moussaoui”). However, not all frames of this video were released, but only some chosen ones where you for sure can not recognize an actual object that struck the Pentagon.

Definitely, it will do no harm to ask oneself this very reasonable question... Do you have any answer?

I will answer this question. Those contrails did not belong to the “Boeing 757”, and they belonged to neither the “Tomahawk”, nor to the AGM-86 missiles. Both of these missiles are known to reach their targets by straight trajectories, so they won’t leave any trace in the blue sky like that one.

These oddly configured pink smokes seemed to be nothing else than contrails, left by an engine of a certain highly-sophisticated missile that had executed its last automatic maneuver intended to avoid a potential anti-aircraft defense fire at the last stage of its attack. Intriguingly enough, the smokes’ position in the sky matches the direction where the missile came from. If you care to remember, it approached the Pentagon exactly from that direction – under the approximately 45 degrees horizontal angle from the right side (I mean if facing its wall it would be the right side of the observer).

The main problem of all those “conspiracy theorists” is this: they understood that it was a missile that hit the Pentagon, so their first basic premise is correct. However, they could not get a second correct basic premise because they managed to convince themselves that it must be necessarily a missile which belonged to the U.S. Government and therefore it must be necessarily an American-made missile. They just “locked” themselves onto this false premise. But why are they so sure of this? It shall be known that any kind of a false premise does nothing else than prevent you from understanding the truth.

In order to be able to dig to the Truth, one has to be a little-bit free-minded – I mean he has to be free from various complexes, from clichés, and from false premises. Then it will be really easier for him...

We have already used our logic and made these conclusions:

- 1) It was not the U.S. Government, who organized the attack against the WTC; so it should be presumed that it was not the U.S. Government who organized the attack against the Pentagon.
- 2) It was apparently another group, who organized the WTC attack; so it would be logical to presume that the Pentagon attack was organized by the very same group of the rogue guys.

If so, why should this group of the rogue guys, the majority of whom were not even Americans, necessarily select an American-made missile for their attack? Do you think that in our big-big world there are only American-made missiles available and nothing else?

Probably, not many people paid close attention to this “peculiar”, but, nevertheless, well-known fact: most of the U.S. jet-fighters scrambled in response to the Pentagon’s “plane’s crash” were oddly diverted over the Atlantic Ocean.

Here is one of the interesting accounts of events (note, it was stated before the 9/11 Commission in 2004, i.e. well after the 9/11 attacks; therefore, no mistake was possible):

“...the pilots of these fighters were never briefed about why they were scrambled. As the lead pilot explained, “I reverted to the Russian threat... I’m thinking cruise missile threat from the sea. You know, you look down and see the Pentagon burning and I thought the bastards snuck one by us... ...You couldn’t see any airplanes, and no one told us anything.” The pilots knew their mission was to identify and divert aircraft flying within a certain radius of Washington, but did not know that the threat came from hijacked planes...”³¹³

Obviously, one has to teach himself how to read between the lines... It is helpful in times of cheating...

Please, look first at the comparative table below and you will probably understand now what that “literally a blip” – “moving at a very high rate of speed” was in reality, and why the U.S. Government would rather prefer to lose its face lying to the public, than to lose its face by honestly admitting the truth:

Missile name:	Boeing AGM-86 A/B & C/D modif-s.	BGM-109 “Tomahawk”	P-700 “Granit”/ SS-N-19 “Shipwreck”
Country of origin:	The United States	The United States	Former Soviet Union
Warhead:	Nuclear-capable; practically – only conventional warhead.	Nuclear-capable; practically – only conventional warhead.	Practically – only 500 kt (0.5 Mt) in TNT yield thermonuclear warhead.
Missile type (function) and its speed class:	Air-to-ground strategic subsonic cruise missile.	Long-range, all-weather, subsonic cruise missile.	Long-range anti-ship supersonic cruise missile.
Cruise speed:	~553 mph / 890 km/h	~546 mph / 880 km/h	~1854 mph /2983 km/h
Cruise speed (Mach):	0.74 Mach	0.73 Mach	2.5 Mach
Speed on the line of attack:	Has no practical importance.	Has no practical importance.	1.5 Mach / ~1112 mph
Weight:	1,429 kg / 3,150 lb	1,440 kg / 3,175 lb	7,000 kg / 15,432 lb
Armor (if any):	None.	None.	Heavily armored.
Penetrating capability:	None. (The “D” modification boasts a certain penetrating capability, but only due to its special payload).	None.	Shows an unprecedented penetrating capability – breaks a destroyer ship in two halves even if without any warhead at all.
Possible ability to attack the Pentagon as a pre-designated target in a fully autonomous mode:	Not possible.	Not possible.	The Pentagon was the Priority Target No.1 as being the Defense Ministry of the Main Adversary of the former USSR and as such it was pre-loaded in the missile’s inertial guidance system.
Pattern of attacking its target (typical missile’s behavior on its final stage of attack):	Simply reaches target by straight trajectory; may hit its target into any spot, most likely – from the above, rather than selecting a parallel-to-the-ground trajectory.	Simply reaches target by straight trajectory; may hit its target into any spot, most likely – from the above, rather than selecting a parallel-to-the-ground trajectory.	Necessarily makes some pre-designated bizarre maneuver in order to avoid any potential anti-aircraft defense fire and disappear from radars, descends to a sea-skimming altitude and always hits target slightly above its water-line level.
Possibility to misguide the missile:	Could be misguided by conventional radio-electronic equipment.	Could be misguided by conventional radio-electronic equipment.	Could be “misguided” in theory only by EMP of an anti-missile equipped with a nuclear warhead – and exploded nearby.
Possibility to intercept the missile:	Could be shot down relatively easy – in the same manner as any subsonic plane – by various kinds of anti-aircraft weaponry.	Could be shot down relatively easy – in the same manner as any subsonic plane – by various kinds of anti-aircraft weaponry.	Claims total impunity from any anti-aircraft defense, as well as from any radars; even if hit by another missile or an artillery shell (which is very unlikely) it will re-gain its direction and still reach its target due to its tremendous inertia. To shoot this missile down is as impossible as to “shoot down” a typical armor-piercing shell fired from 16-inch cannon of a main-battleship.
Potential availability for any “terrorists” or other rogue groups:	Not known.	Not known.	22 pieces – each with the 0.5 Mt nuclear warheads – stolen from sunken “Kursk” submarine in August 2000.

Barbarian truth: the Pentagon attack; introducing the true “attacker”.

I hope now it is clear to the discerning reader what exactly that odd “flying object” that struck the Pentagon during the 9/11 events was? It was nothing else than the most dreadful piece of the inheritance of the Cold War Era. A heavily armored, and deemed to be invincible, Soviet-made supersonic “Granit” missile, equipped with its usual 500 kiloton in TNT yield, thermonuclear warhead. The warhead, by the way, was enough to level the entire Washington D.C., considering that the Hiroshima bomb was merely 13 kiloton. Since the 9/11 event, perpetrators still had in their possession, 22 “Granit” missiles. To stage an attack on the Pentagon, they decided to spare one... With a broken detonator...

“Granit” missile being fired; probably the one launched against the Pentagon on September 11, 2001, might have had a similar sight...

This missile does not need any sophisticated equipment to be launched and can be relatively fired easily from almost any kind of launching tube – similarly to any RPG ammunition (you do not actually need to have an RPG-rifle to launch an RPG-grenade; in theory, it could be launched under various angles from virtually any kind of primitive self-made equipment).

This missile has a maximum range of 625 km (388 miles). Apparently, it was fired from some innocently-looking small ship taking position just outside of the U.S. territorial waters. In only a few seconds it gathered its cruise altitude, easily penetrated the U.S. airspace at the supersonic speed of 2.5 Mach, and in only about 10 minutes reached Washington D.C. The American anti-aircraft defense system was totally helpless against such a weapon.

Since the Pentagon (as being the military headquarters of the Main Adversary of the former USSR) was a Priority Target No.1³¹⁴, it had been already pre-designated in the missile's inertial guidance system. Those rogue guys, who launched the "Granit" missile, had no need to bother entering into its guidance system the Pentagon's coordinates manually – they had been already pre-loaded....

When it approached Washington, the "Granit" executed a certain pre-designated maneuver that was especially designed to increase the missile's invincibility from any potential anti-aircraft defense fire. That was exactly that very unbelievable maneuver, which allowed it to completely disappear from the radar screens of the Dulles' air-traffic controllers. After its "disappearance" from the radars, the missile took that unbelievable "sharp descending curve", which allowed it to reach the location of the Pentagon in a remarkably short time (considering its actual cruise altitude). When the missile descended low enough to get very close to the Pentagon, it apparently executed one more bizarre pre-designated maneuver – designed to increase the missile's invincibility on the last stage of attack. This last one, I presume, left those oddly configured pink smokes visible on the infamous FBI's frames from the security camera.

Immediately after executing its last maneuver, the missile descended once again – this time to a "sea-skimming" altitude, decreased speed to only 1.5 Mach, and set itself to its final (direct) path of attack – over the Pentagon's lawn. It managed to throw aside a huge electric generator, that happened to be in its way, and hit the Pentagon just slightly above its "water-line" level. The "Granit", first of all, is an anti-ship missile; so its behavior is typical to anti-ship missiles – it always hits targets slightly above water-line levels.

The photo above shows the typical behavior of an anti-ship missile in the case of the Pentagon strike. On this photo it is also interesting to notice all the standing lamp posts. In the ensuing cover-up some of them would be toppled to imply that it was allegedly caused by the wings of the "terrorist Boeing 757". Note how close to the fence the missile descended before taking the straight, parallel to the ground course. Note also two different sources of smoke: one from a generator, and one – from the building. An entry punch hole in the Pentagon's façade is located at the spot of the 2nd source of smoke.

³¹⁴ That is exactly why in the Pentagon there is a middle yard mockingly named "Ground Zero" in advance. Those witty military officials, who actually worked in the Pentagon building, were always aware of the imminence.

The speed of 1.5 Mach is still nothing else than 500 meters a second – i.e. a typical speed of a bullet or of an artillery shell. So, you could easily imagine why this heavily armored missile (which could be compared to a giant bullet or to a supersonic flying tank) managed to penetrate the Pentagon's several rows of the buildings. That is exactly why the "Granit" managed to punch those several "unexplainable" entry- and exit- holes in the walls of the Pentagon's Rings "E", "D" and "C", and to end up not so far from the Pentagon's inner yard, mockingly dubbed "Ground Zero" in advance. In reality, as you can see, everything is explainable.

What about its 500 kiloton thermonuclear warhead? Luckily, it did not go off, because if it did, it would prove that a cafeteria in the middle of the Pentagon's so-called "Ground Zero Plaza" – also mockingly named a "Ground Zero Café" – had truly deserved its name. In such a case, not only the Pentagon, but the entire city of Washington would be missing on today's maps.

That is exactly why the U.S. Government was scared nearly to death, when such a thing was found unexploded in between the Pentagon's Rings "C" and "B". That is exactly why the most peculiar plane – the "Boeing E-4B" ("Advanced Airborne Command Post"), known as a "doomsday plane" (since it could be engaged only during a real nuclear war) – had been noticed by some people making circles around the White House. That is exactly why the anti-atomic doors of NORAD's mountain were closed for the first time in history. And that is exactly why at that moment, President Bush had changed the official name of the 9/11 perpetration from an "Act of Terror" to an "Act of War". The two supposed planes, flown by amateur Arab "pilots", who had supposedly rammed into the Twin Towers, apparently, did not constitute any act of war. Though, the half-megaton thermonuclear warhead, which rammed into the Pentagon, definitely did.

Why did the U.S. Government not say honestly to the public that the Pentagon had been struck by the "Granit" missile belonging to the terrorists, but, instead, resorted to the most incredible story, which blamed the Pentagon attack on the "Flight 77"?

Try to guess.

The Pentagon attack indeed was another pure sample of the "Nuclear and Other Blackmail" – exactly as the Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld had prophetically predicted just a few seconds before something had hit the very building where he was prophesying³¹⁵. And, besides, the nuclear component of the attack, the perpetrators have further humiliated the U.S. Government by the mere fact that by the time the "Granit" had penetrated the U.S. airspace, the United States itself was in its highest alert. All its services were trying to figure out where were the rest of the planes supposedly hijacked by the terrorists, were trying to prevent any further air traffic, and, moreover, were supposedly "ready" to immediately intercept any unauthorized airborne object...

One might probably wonder if it were only Dulles air-traffic controllers alone, who noticed that supersonic cruise missile on the attacking course towards the White House? Or did NORAD, whose primary duty was to protect the United States and Canada from any airborne attack – be it adverse aircraft, ballistic or cruise missiles – had detected the "Granit" missile too, before it hit the Pentagon?

Try to be realistic in answering this question... Of course, NORAD did detect the missile. Not only had it detected it as an uncertain "odd unidentified plane traveling with its transponder off". Do not even doubt that NORAD immediately detected that:

- it was an enemy missile,
- that the name of this enemy missile was nothing else than SS-N-19 "Shipwreck" (this is the NATO classification for the P-700 "Granit"), made in the Soviet Union,
- and that it was with its usual thermonuclear warhead (since it is the only possible warhead this missile could be equipped with).

³¹⁵ It is claimed by a Representative Christopher Cox who was at meeting with Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld in the Pentagon building discussing missile defense, that both of them were completely oblivious of the upcoming attack. Watching television coverage from New York City, Rumsfeld says to Cox: "If we remain vulnerable to missile attack, a terrorist group or rogue state that demonstrates the capacity to strike the US or its allies from long range could have the power to hold our entire country hostage to nuclear or other blackmail. And let me tell you, I've been around the block a few times. There will be another event." All his words were proven to be prophetic just a few seconds later. It should be known that a modern fully computerized detection system (and NORAD's is apparently one of the best) have pre-loaded details of any and every existing stuff that could fly – irrespectively of its country of origin. The “Granit” missile, which has been in use since the end of the '70-s, despite being top-secret in the Soviet Union and Russia, was apparently well-known at least by its outward characteristics – such as its speed, shape, length, mass etc. – to NATO specialists. It was the most feared of all Soviet missiles, due to its superior capabilities, and therefore it was simply impossible if NORAD didn't have the exact data on this particular missile, pre-loaded in its detection system. You can be sure that at least 4 to 6 minutes before it hit the Pentagon, the “Granit” missile had been identified as such by NORAD.

Do you need proof? Here is it:

Pentagon was hit at 9.37 AM. The missile was badly damaged by the impact and it would take at least some time to recognize it by studying its remains found between the burning building rows of the Pentagon. Moreover, the Pentagon was in a great panic, trying to evacuate and to save those people who happened to be in the damaged part of the building which sustained the impact. Apparently, it wouldn't occur to any reasonable person to undertake an immediate study of the extremely hot remnants of the missile amidst such a great panic and amidst a necessity to extinguish the fires and to save those whose life was endangered. Add here, that it would be just logical to presume, that the supposedly “unknown” missile, might have been fitted with a conventional highly-explosive warhead and therefore the actual explosion could have been expected any time. In this situation, it would be simply too dangerous to even approach such a thing. Therefore, the earliest you could expect such a study of the projectile, that actually hit the Pentagon, took place at least 20 minutes later. The study could take place after the missile cooled down a little bit, the initial scare that it might explode had subsided, and appropriate specialists who deal with unexploded munitions were called onto the scene. I hope it is clear to everybody.

However, it is well known fact that General Ralph Eberhart, the then Commander-in-Chief of NORAD, had departed from his unprotected (peaceful) Command Post (NORAD headquarters office at Peterson Air Force Base, Colorado) to a protected one (inside the Cheyenne Mountain, Colorado) at approximately 9.36 – 9.37 AM. By some estimates, he had departed even at 9.35 AM. Therefore, his departure could not be linked to a potential report that some enemy missile had hit the Pentagon. It could only be linked to a potential report that such an enemy missile had been detected approaching Washington D.C.

The BBC screen at 10.51 - 10.53 AM showing the “Doomsday Plane” making slow circles over Lafayette Square. CNN actually reported at 9.54 AM that it was first seen “10 minutes ago” (i.e. it was first seen over the White House at 9.44 AM)

The Second Proof: The so-called “Doomsday Plane” – the “Boeing E-4B” (Advanced Airborne Command Post) had been scrambled at 9.37 AM. Seven minutes later – i.e. at 9.44 AM it had been already seen making circles over the White House. Thus, we have to presume that it had gotten an actual order to scramble at least a few minutes earlier. Therefore, it also could not have been logically connected to a potential report that the Pentagon had been already hit by an enemy missile. It could only be linked to the report that a certain enemy missile (namely the SS-N-19 “Shipwreck”, with its usual thermonuclear warhead) was detected approaching Washington D.C.

We could safely conclude, therefore, that NORAD was well aware of what exactly that odd flying thing was, and it must believe that that “thing” was about to strike Washington D.C. and to instantly incinerate it. Do not even doubt that NORAD believed exactly like that, because it could not be believed otherwise.

Now, I think, it should be a little bit easier for you to understand why the U.S. Government had immediately preferred to cheat the people, rather than to honestly tell the truth.

The “Granit” missile did not steal surreptitiously into sleeping America during some quiet Sunday night. It, indeed, proudly entered the sovereign U.S. airspace in broad daylight, moreover, amidst the highest possible alert. Nevertheless, proving that it was truly invincible, the missile managed to reach the very Heart of America – the White House and the Pentagon. Do you remember what the air-traffic controllers had claimed in their testimonies? That so-called “very fast-moving aircraft” had turned away from the White House just only being three miles short of reaching it, and seemed to re-direct itself onto the Pentagon in the very last moment.

Why the missile did not hit the White House and hit the Pentagon, instead? Since here I do not have any 100% proof, I could only guess why.

You don’t have to doubt that in the missile’s guidance system, there were both targets preloaded – the White House and the Pentagon. Perhaps, for those who launched the missile, it was possible to manually adjust its flight mission – by making sure it would strike particularly the White House, or that it would strike particularly the Pentagon. However, it seems that they did not bother – they simply launched the missile “as is” hoping that it would find the best target on its own. Judging by the logic of the 9/11 setup, it would not matter – if the missile would hit the Pentagon or the White House – because the amount of scare it could cause in either case would be the same. The 9/11 perpetrators were seeking to create a pretext: a certain enemy missile with an unexploded thermonuclear warhead must be found by the U.S. officials. This would prompt them to demolish the Twin Towers (due to the notion suggested by some “friendly” secret service, that two more of such warheads were allegedly inside the planes). Judging by this logic, it would not matter in this case – if the unexploded warhead were found somewhere inside the White House or somewhere inside the Pentagon.

Therefore, I think, the missile was simply fired towards Washington D.C. On its flight, it reconnoitered the underlying territory; its on-board computer “understood” that it was flying above the main enemy’s city – called “Washington”. Thus, it figured out the best target – the “White House” – and caused the missile to fly towards it. However, after a while, it noticed the second high-priority target – the “Pentagon”. After a little “thinking”, the on-board computer “decided” that the Pentagon should have more priority than the White House. Therefore it “preferred” to change its course and re-direct the missile onto the Pentagon. This was exactly what we could observe in the actual missile’s behavior: first, it flew towards the White House, then, suddenly, it decided to re-direct itself onto the Pentagon.

In any case, when it came to the people, it does not matter – whether the missile would hit the wall of the White House or that of the Pentagon before its explosion. The caliber of its warhead (half-Megaton in TNT yield) was so high that it would effectively destroy the city of Washington – irrespective of the actual hypocenter of its thermonuclear explosion. In fact, it would be much better for one to be not so far from the hypocenter (a/k/a “ground zero”) and to become annihilated instantly, than to occur a bit farther away and so to die while being buried under some building’s debris, and in a couple of hours later die due to some heavy burns and due to some 10-fold lethal dose of radiation.

Did NORAD order to fire, and did they actually fire, at the approaching “Granit” missile before it hit the Pentagon? It is difficult to answer, because those guys did not make any report open to the public in this regard, leaving to us only an option to guess. However, it shall be presumed that they did not fire. What kind of weapons could they use if they only had a couple of minutes to react?

Standard weapons intended to intercept incoming warheads of ballistic missiles falling from space (which are supposed to be kept in the highest possible state of combat readiness, always) would be useless in the case of the “Granit” missile. Those things are normally intended to strike nuclear warheads of the enemy by exploding their own nuclear warheads in over-atmospheric areas – so that the attacking warheads could be destroyed by Electromagnetic Pulse-- of such, a “friendly” nuclear explosion. I guess it is clear that an anti-ballistic missile component could not have been used in atmospheric conditions right above the U.S.’s own territory: especially, considering that the calibers of those “friendly” thermonuclear warheads are being measured in megatons, not in kilotons.

Then, it shall be presumed that only an anti-aircraft component of NORAD could have been used to fire at the approaching “Granit” (do not forget, that it was not a ballistic missile, but a cruise missile that resembles a typical plane by the majority of its flight characteristics).

What is the anti-aircraft component?

In general, it is long-range and short-range surface-to-air missiles, anti-aircraft canons, including small-caliber rapid-firing ones, and intercepting aviation – namely jet-fighters armed with their air-to-air missiles and their rapid-firing cannons (such as 20-mm and 30-mm in caliber).

How about the combat readiness of this component? If the anti-ballistic missiles component of the air-defense is (to be exact “supposes to”) being kept in more or less constantly alert status – because the enemy ballistic missiles represent a major danger and in theory could arrive at any given moment, it is not so when it comes to its anti-aircraft component. Let us consider the anti-aircraft defense judging by logic:

When it comes to the rapid-firing anti-aircraft artillery, it could only defend a very limited range from its position. Besides, it is not being kept in a constant combat-ready state – mostly it goes to the combat-ready state only during a real war. Moreover, nowadays such rapid-firing anti-aircraft artillery is usually being used on war-ships only, and normally it is not deployed in defense of stationary objects.

When it comes to the surface-to-air missiles – they are usually kept in a “lax” state of alert in comparison with the anti-ballistic missiles component. It is because the United States is protected by the two Oceans and everybody is expecting to get advanced warning of any upcoming aerial attack by enemy aircraft or that by cruise missiles. Therefore, everybody presumes that they would have at least 5 minutes (probably even more than that) to react – meaning to prepare for firing their anti-aircraft missiles. Definitely, nobody expects that a supersonic cruise missile could be fired at the United States from the immediate vicinity, for example, from a submarine positioned very close to the U.S. territorial waters.

Most probably, when it was decided to fire at the approaching “Granit” and the order has finally reached those surface-to-air missile batteries, it was simply too late to fire (especially considering that the “Granit” itself is flying very fast and however fast an intercepting surface-to-air missile could be, it would still spend a considerable amount of time to chase its target).

When it comes to the jet-fighters – they are in even a more pitiable state of affairs. It will take a couple of minutes when a hastily prepared command to scramble them would eventually pass down the chain of command and reach the jets’ pilots. Plus a couple of minutes more – to actually take off and to reach their cruise altitude. Then it will also take some time for a pilot to “digest” the order to intercept such and such airborne target in such and such vicinity, and plus some more time to actually reach that vicinity.

Now, please, imagine also that it would not be possible for the jets to chase the “Granit” missile, because it is simply flying faster than any jet. A maximum possible speed of an F-16 fighter is Mach 2+ (1,500 mph /2,414 km/h); and a maximum possible speed of an F-15 is Mach 2.2+ (1,650 mph /2,655 km/h); while the “Granit” boasts its cruise speed equal to Mach 2.5 (1854 mph /2983 km/h)³¹⁶. Even if you would be really fast to order to scramble the jets, what could their pilots do? Especially considering that the flying time of the “Granit” missile is very limited – it would probably strike its target in merely 5-6 minutes since first being noticed? You would not be even able to intercept this missile by sending jets against it on the opposite course, simply because your time to invent such an interception scheme would be too short.

³¹⁶ Actually, there is also a modification of the “Granit” with another engine – which could fly at maximum cruise speed of Mach 4.5, but it is considered an “expensive” one. So, the majority of those “Granites” are equipped with the “cheap” engine which enables them to fly only at Mach 2.5. In case of the 9/11 attack against the Pentagon, it was apparently the “cheap” modification of this missile used.

Even if to imagine the unimaginable, and presume that you have time enough, you will not be able to implement such an interception scheme, still. It is because the “Granit” boasts not only the high speed, but also highly sophisticated avionics, which allows the missile to constantly change its course and to execute various unpredictable maneuvers in order “to cheat” the enemy defense.

Add here that the “Granit” is heavily armored – it is almost as thick as a tank; while the majority of anti-aircraft weapons are designed to be used against aircraft, presuming that aircraft are made of aluminum. Thus, even if such a heavily armored missile is hit by some shrapnel of an exploding missile or by an artillery shell exploded nearby, it would not be damaged, and it can not be even beaten out of its course – the missile would quickly recover its direction and continue its flight, thanks to its huge mass and its tremendous inertia.

Adding here that the “Granit” counteracts radars during its flight, and you will probably have a full picture: NORAD was able to realize that the United States came under a nuclear attack, but could do absolutely nothing to protect the United States from such an attack.

A maximum of what NORAD was able to do was to ring the atomic alert – and so it did. This resulted in the Secret Service agent’s quick action – they burst into Vice-President Dick Cheney’s office and promptly dragged him (and also Condoleezza Rice) into the underground anti-atomic bunker under the White House. The rest of the American people were just left to wait their imminent thermonuclear incineration. That was the maximum of what they could do in a sense of the United States’ protection.

I think it would be interesting to try to establish when, exactly, Vice-President Dick Cheney was rushed by his Secret Service guards into an underground anti-atomic bunker under the White House. As you remember, at the beginning of this book, in the Chapter named “Real events in a chronological order”, I put this event as occurring at 9.32 AM EST. I connected the actual atomic alert to the telephone call of the Dulles air-traffic controllers to the White House when they reported that “fast-flying” unidentified aircraft moving towards the White House. That telephone call occurred at 9.32 AM – at least, in accordance with the official 9/11 time-line. However, we have to presume that NORAD should have detected the upcoming attack much earlier than the Dulles air-traffic controllers, because it would be just logical to presume so.

First of all, NORAD has better detection capabilities compared to the civil air-traffic controllers. For example, while the Dulles’ radars cover some apparently limited airspace around its actual area of operation, the radar system that belongs to NORAD definitely covers the entire U.S. airspace and also additional areas lying far beyond the actual U.S. airspace. Besides, unlike the civil air-traffic controllers who primarily look for multiple legally flying objects, NORAD ignores those multiple legally flying objects and looks only for illegally flying objects which are very rare. Therefore a probability that the civil air-traffic controllers would notice an illegal flying object before NORAD is equal to zero.

Of course, NORAD should notice such a thing way before it would become obvious to be noticed by the civil radars. Logic is a stubborn thing. And you don’t have to doubt that NORAD had indeed detected the “Granit” missile before it had flown into the Dulles radar zone and was noticed by its air-traffic controllers.

What time had NORAD detected the missile? Considering that the Dulles air-traffic controllers detected it at 9.32 AM, it would be logical to presume that NORAD detected it a couple of minutes before that, at least. Let us review some available sources and to try to figure out what time the atomic alert was actually rang. For example, CBS news article published on Sept. 10, 2003, “The President’s Story. The President Talks In Detail About His Sept. 11 Experience.” by David Kohn,³¹⁷ puts the event of Cheney’s evacuation to the anti-atomic bunker as occurring at 9.30 AM EST. I quote:

“‘Ladies and gentlemen, this is a difficult moment for America,’ he [President Bush] said in the speech. ‘Today, we’ve had a national tragedy. Two airplanes have crashed into the World Trade Center in an apparent terrorist attack on our country.’ It was 9:30 a.m. As he spoke, Mr. Bush didn’t know that two more hijacked jets were streaking toward Washington. Vice President Dick Cheney was in his office at the White House when a Secret Service agent ran in. ‘He said to me, ‘Sir, we have to leave immediately’ and grabbed, put a hand on my belt, another hand on my shoulder and propelled me out the door of my office,” recalls Cheney. ‘I’m not sure how they do it, but they sort of levitate you down the hallway. You move very fast.’ ‘There wasn’t a lot of time for chit-chat, you know, with the vice president,’ says

³¹⁷ <http://www.cbsnews.com/stories/2002/09/11/60II/main521718.shtml> The President's Story. By David Kohn.

Secret Service Director Brian Stafford, who was in his command center ordering the round-up of top officials and the First Family. He felt that he had only minutes to work with. “We knew there were unidentified planes tracking in our direction.” Cheney was rushed deep under the White House into a bunker called the Presidential Emergency Operations Center. It was built for war, and this was it. On her way down, National Security Advisor Condoleezza Rice called Mr. Bush. “It was brief because I was being pushed to get off the phone and get out of the West Wing. They were hurrying me off the phone with the president and I just said, he said, ‘I’m coming back’ and we said, ‘Mr. President, that may not be wise,’” recalls Rice. “I remember stopping briefly to call my family, my aunt and uncle in Alabama and say, ‘I’m fine. You have to tell everybody that I’m fine’ but then settling into trying to deal with the enormity of that moment, and in the first few hours, I think the thing that was on everybody’s mind was how many more planes are coming.” The Capitol was evacuated. And for the first time ever, the Secret Service executed the emergency plan to ensure the presidential line of succession. Agents swept up the 15 officials who stood to become president if the others were killed. They wanted to move Vice President Cheney, fearing he was in danger even in the bunker. But Cheney says when he heard the other officials were safe, he decided to stay at the White House, no matter what.”

If you know how to read “between the lines”, you will get the point. The abovementioned scare had nothing to do with any Flight 93 or Flight 77. I hope it is clear for the discerning reader that the actual scare described above was caused by an “unidentified” plane (or even multiple planes as feared). However, it is self-evident that Flight 77 was always tracked even after being allegedly “hijacked”. In any case, it does not matter, actually, because the discerning reader knows that there were no planes involved in 9/11 – neither in the WTC attacks, nor in the Pentagon attack, so it is useless to talk about the “planes” now.

All we need to establish is this:

- the actual atomic alert that resulted in the execution of contingency plans to ensure the presidential line of succession in case of the U.S. leadership’s physical destruction took place at least two minutes before the Dulles air-traffic controllers noticed the missile approaching the White House.

If Cheney was rushed into the anti-atomic bunker at 9.30 AM EST, we could presume that NORAD has detected the upcoming missile attack at least a few minutes before that. To realize that the attack is under way and to ring an actual atomic alert takes at least a half-minute. At least another half-minute will pass before this actual signal reaches the Secret Service’s agents in the White House. Plus some time will be definitely required for them to “digest” the signal, to react to it, and to run into the Vice-President’s office in order to evacuate him to the anti-atomic bunker. Add here that the NORAD staff are also men, rather than robots, and they also needed some time (at least, a minimal amount of time) to realize the situation, to actually “digest” it, to make a decision to ring the atomic alert, to reach to the signaling equipment, and to finally press the needed button.

Let us make calculations.

If the Secret Service’s agents burst into the office of the Vice-President at 9.30 AM, then it shall be presumed that the signal of the atomic alert actually reached them not later than 9.29 AM. In this case, we should presume that NORAD made a decision to ring the atomic alert not later than at 9.28 AM.

Considering that the operational officers serving in the duty shift of NORAD had to actually “digest” the situation and to make such a decision and if we “allotted” them at least a minute on doing so (it could consume more than a minute in reality, but a minute will be the very minimum required to react), we will have 9.27 AM.

This means that the latest NORAD must have detected the approaching “Granit” missile was 9.27 AM EST. Though, most likely the missile was detected by NORAD at 9.26 AM, because it is a more realistic scenario. Therefore, it is safe to presume that NORAD actually detected the “Granit” missile at least 4, perhaps, even 5 minutes, before it was detected by the civil air-traffic controllers from the Dulles airport. I think this is pretty self-evident, not to mention that it is simply logical.

Considering that the missile would actually hit the Pentagon’s wall at 9.37 AM, we could presume that NORAD had detected the upcoming attack at least 10 or, perhaps, even 11 minutes before the actual strike. This was not bad from the military point of view. To detect the nuclear strike by the fast flying cruise missile shot from the close proximity and to do so 10 minutes before the missile hits the intended target is surely a very good performance. NORAD, by no means, should be blamed for it, but only congratulated.

Add here that by 9.37 AM the Doomsday Plane had been already airborne. Imagine that the “Boeing 747”, even if it is being kept in the most ready state, still needs at least a few minutes to prepare its flight, to taxi to a runway, and to actually take off. This means that the actual command to scramble it must have been sent down the chain of command at something like at 9.30, the latest. Perhaps, it was sent even at 9.29 or 9.28, which will be much more realistic.

Another interesting detail in the above quotation is this (I repeat): “*They wanted to move Vice President Cheney, fearing he was in danger even in the bunker.”

Why would the U.S. officials responsible for the governmental security fear that a man could be in danger even when he is inside the anti-atomic bunker that is actually designed to protect him even from a nuclear explosion, not to say from aluminum planes? Does it sound realistic to you? Nevertheless, it is realistic if you have a clue about what the contingency plans actually are and if you are familiar with the actual Soviet nuclear striking capabilities.

The problem is that this White House bunker would, of course, save Cheney from a half-megaton thermo-nuclear explosion with ground zero at the Pentagon. However, it would not save him if the largest available Soviet-made ballistic missile’s warhead would fall from the space and strike Washington with a 10 (not to say about 25) megaton ground burst – as should be expected in an event of a real nuclear war.

If the Soviet Union/Russia has 10 megaton- and even 25 megaton nukes (and they do have them in reality), there should not be any doubt that one of them will be used against Washington with an intention to destroy all anti-atomic underground structures of the United States’ Capitol. Otherwise, why have such huge nukes in the first instance, if not to use one of them to strike the enemy’s capitol? Do you agree with this logic? Those U.S. officials who prepare contingency plans knew this obvious fact very well. Since they believed that it was a real nuclear war (and it was indeed the real nuclear war on 9/11), the top U.S. officials should have been moved to secret locations and hid in the deepest underground bunkers, which provide a much better protection compared to the relatively shallow and well known to the main adversary anti-atomic bunker under the White House. This is the answer to this mystery.

Do you still believe that the situation described above had anything to do with any “third” aluminum plane hijacked by the so-called “terrorists”?

Yet another account of events is available here³¹⁸:

“Secret Service agents burst into Cheney’s West Wing office. “Sir,” one said, “we have to leave immediately.” Radar showed an airplane barreling toward the White House. Before Cheney could respond, the agents grabbed the vice president under his arms-nearly lifting him off the ground - and propelled him down the steps into the White House basement and through a long tunnel that led to the underground bunker.... Other Secret Service agents hustled Rice and several other senior White House officials included in an emergency contingency plan into the bunker with the vice president...”

All you have to do is to disregard the word “plane” in the abovementioned account of events. It was added there just for “adjusting” of this account to the official “plebeian” version of the 9/11 “truth”. In reality, when the atomic alert is on the way, no one is going to talk about “planes” or “missiles”. They will only talk about how many seconds remain at your disposal to reach the anti-atomic bunker and so to survive the actual nuclear strike. Therefore, if we are to be realistic (and I indeed struggle here to make my reader to be a kind of realistic person), we should presume the following, after reading the abovementioned account of events:

Those Secret Service agents, who burst into the office of vice-president Cheney (as well as those who burst into the office of Condoleezza Rice) because of the atomic alert, could not afford indulging into any silly conversations about the “planes” or even about the “missiles”. All they could do is to burst into the office, either shouting “Atomic Alert!” or even doing so in a total silence, grab the client and propel him/her as quickly as they could towards the underground anti-atomic bunker, without allowing the client to take any of his/her belongings, without allowing him/her to ask any question, or otherwise to lose even a single second of the most precious time that remains before the actual nuclear strike.

It will be easier for you to understand the logic of my claims here if you imagine that since the moment the actual signal of the atomic alert reaches the staff that is to save the top U.S. leadership, and till the time the Soviet nuclear warhead arrives to incinerate Washington D.C., there are merely 4-5 minutes at the best case, and only 1-2 minutes in the worst case. When the missiles are launched from submarines that are taking positions not too far from the U.S. territory (and, considering that Washington and New York stood almost on the shore), they are expected to arrive in merely 5-7 minutes. Deduct from these "5-7" minutes some time that is required for the actual strike to be detected, deduct some time that is required for the men who detected the strike to "digest" the situation, deduct some time that is required to reach the buttons to ring the atomic alert, deduct some time that is required for the Secret Service Agents to get and to "digest" the signal, and you will see that there is almost no time remaining. So, the Secret Service contingency plans for the physical evacuation of the top U.S. leadership from their offices to the bunker shall be based on the presumption that the remaining time is anything from "none" to a "couple of minutes only". So, judge yourself: if you were a trained Secret Service agent – would you in such a situation indulge into any lengthy conversations with the clients trying to convince them that the missiles (or even aluminum planes of the so-called "terrorists") are coming? When you are trained to understand that every second, in the very literal sense of this word, is precious? Of course, you would not. And neither did the actual Service Service's agents who burst into the offices of Cheney and Rice.

Actually, I have to mention that there are conflicting accounts of events when it comes to the actual time of the Pentagon strike. Some 9/11 timelines claim that the Pentagon was hit at 9.37 AM. Some others say it was 9.39 AM. In this book I presume that the Pentagon was hit at 9.37 AM and also the Doomsday Plane took off at 9.37 AM and also that the Commander-in-Chief of NORAD, General Ralph Eberhart, has departed from his unprotected command post to his protected command post at 9.37 AM. If we presume that the other digit is right and the missile in reality hit the Pentagon at 9.39 AM, rather than at 9.37 AM, it will be even more obvious that NORAD detected the upcoming attack well in advance. But even counting that the actual Pentagon strike took place at 9.37 AM (and by variety of reasons this digit appears to be the right one), we can conclude that NORAD had detected the attack quite in time to save the precious lives of the top U.S. leadership, at least.

However, it is not so clear why the atomic alert was not rung to the rest of the residents of Washington D.C., but only to the "big guys" alone?

I can not answer this question, because I do not know the contemporary American contingency plans in details. However, I remember that I read some old ones (not the actual "contingency plans", but the civil defense instructions to the general population on how to act in a situation of the atomic alert) and it appeared to me that an atomic alert in the United States had to be rung for the entire population, and not only for its Government alone. At least, so it was in the old good times. Though, perhaps, now it has been changed – since the U.S. Government does no longer look like a part of the U.S. nation, but as something rather "alien" to the nation it rules and rips off.

Now we, at last, could come back to the question – why the U.S. Government does not want to admit honestly that the Pentagon was hit by the "Granit" missile and why it preferred to lie for many years ahead, instead of saying the awful truth once and forever. Let us put ourselves into the U.S. Government's shoes in order to understand them.

When already humiliated by the WTC nuclear demolition, what could the poor U.S. Government do? Tell to the American public the full truth? That the United States indeed had been attacked, not just by some amateurish Arab "pilots" who transformed the "hijacked" planes into primitive weapons, but by the very hydrogen warhead, which was about 35 times the size of the atomic bomb dropped on Hiroshima? And that the warhead had been delivered by some armored supersonic missile which had not even bothered "to notice" that there had been some "anti-aircraft defense system", codenamed "NORAD" – on its highest possible alert, that was supposedly "protecting" the sovereign United States' airspace at that moment? And that Washington D.C. owed its current existence only to the grace of the Jesus Christ's late mother? By whose miracle did that 500 kiloton hydrogen warhead not go off? And that the perpetrators still have in their possession yet another 21 "Granit" missiles? Each equipped with the same half-Megaton thermo-nuclear warhead? And that the American anti-aircraft defense system is absolutely helpless against those remaining 21 missiles, which could arrive at supersonic speed to any spot on America's East Coast (or might be even to its West Coast as well) any time soon?

To expect such a truth to be revealed would probably be too much to expect from the poor U.S. Government...

One could probably imagine what kind of hysteria would follow the news and what kind of consequences would result from such a “revelation of truth” to the rate of the U.S. dollar and to the U.S. economy in general...

Even if the revelation of the truth about the nuclear events in Manhattan might probably scare only the Wall Street’s lazybones, the U.S. Government still did not dare to go ahead with the truth. What would you expect in regards to missiles with half-megaton loads flying at will all around the United States? This would apparently scare the population to death... Maybe, the entire U.S. economy might have collapsed at once. Of course, the U.S. Government was quick to invent some other story – that the Pentagon was hit by the allegedly “hijacked” Flight 77, which for this reason, had been promptly “re-assigned” from the WTC to the Pentagon³¹⁹.

Add here that the U.S. Government (to be more precise, Dick Cheney), in panic, ordered to shoot down passenger aircraft and at least two of them – United Flight 93 and American Flight 77 – were indeed shot down. It would be reasonable to expect that one of such planes could be used in the Pentagon cover-up story, because it was lost anyway and its passengers were dead anyway. Why not assign this lost plane to the Pentagon in such a situation? So the U.S. Government made its choice...

The rest you probably could guess. The FBI promptly confiscated the remnants of the missile – along with its unexploded thermonuclear warhead, and (to make sure that there would not be any leakage of the dangerous news) also quickly confiscated all existing videos which might have accidentally captured the “Granit” missile approaching the Pentagon³²⁰. Of course, the videos have never been released (does any one sincerely expect them to be released?).

In reality, however, the 9/11 perpetrators did not intend to level Washington D.C. in its entirety by a half-megaton thermonuclear explosion. Apparently, they made sure that the warhead of that missile would not go off. If they had really wanted it to explode, it would definitely explode. The “Granit” missile is quite an expensive thing itself, and it features also an expensive thermonuclear warhead; nobody would equip the warhead with a detonator which was as unreliable as to fail in the last moment. One could be absolutely sure that all existing nuclear weapons are highly reliable and would never fail accidentally. The nuclear warheads themselves and the modern means of their delivery are both too expensive to afford even the slightest unreliability of their detonators...

The true intention of the 9/11 perpetrators was totally different than to make another “ground zero” out of Washington.

Firstly, they wanted to use the fact of the Pentagon nuclear attack as a “convincing tool” (as the author of these lines found out later, after sending the first addition of this book to appropriate specialists) – to convince the U.S. officials in New York to bring down the Twin Towers by claiming that there were two more similar warheads on the upper floors of the Twin Towers, which were allegedly “about to explode”.

Secondly – the perpetrators wanted to make sure that Russian President Vladimir Putin would not voice any objections concerning the nuclear demolition of the World Trade Center by its inbuilt emergency nuclear demolition scheme, despite learning of this fact very well from his own intelligence services.

The weak point was that President Putin had already declared to the world in August 2000 that in the sunken “Kursk” submarine there weren’t any nuclear weapons. Of course, he could not then take back his noble presidential words and admit that he was only “joking” and that in reality all the 22 highly sophisticated supersonic “Granit” missiles – each equipped with a 500 kiloton thermonuclear warhead ³¹⁹ As you probably remember, until very late evening, September 11, 2001, Flight 77 was claimed to be the second plane which allegedly struck the WTC in New York and only late at that evening the “honor” to strike the WTC had been transferred to United Flight 175; while Flight 77 had been “re-assigned” to “strike” the Pentagon.

³²⁰ It is well-known that the FBI has confiscated all videos recorded by CCTV cameras belonging to at least: the Pentagon itself, The Sheraton National Hotel (its roof-top camera); the gas-station of Mr. Jose Velasquez which served the Department of Defense’ personnel; Virginia Department of Transportation (which had several cameras filming Route 27). None of these videos have ever been released, except only one – FBI was forced by the Court to release one video, made by CCTV cameras at the Pentagon’s parking – which somehow shows the very moment of impact, but on that camera you can’t recognize the actual flying object – it was moving too fast to be captured by any slow CCTV camera’s frame. That is why even after releasing this video, the FBI continues to maintain its claim: that the released video allegedly shows us a “Boeing 757” flying over the Pentagon’s lawn...

(and also with a pre-loaded list in their guidance systems of the most important NATO targets) – were simply missing.

When confronted with the remains of the “Granit” missile which hit the Pentagon, President Putin was simply forced to shut up in regard to the WTC nuclear demolition, despite the fact that he knew about it very well from reports of his own intelligence. Therefore, instead of voicing his objections, he obediently took the side of the U.S. Government in its so-called “War against Terror”.

These were the real reasons behind the seemingly “unexplainable” 9/11 attack against the Pentagon. Indeed, this attack was very well calculated and it was quite explainable.

Now the odd behavior of the Russian President immediately after the 9/11 attacks becomes also “explainable”. Actually, everybody was sincerely expecting Putin to pull the Americans up in their bizarre and totally outrageous anti-Muslim claims, and everybody was surprised when that did not happen.

The true problem, however, was that President Putin was simply blackmailed into this pitiable condition by the 9/11 perpetrators – almost as easy as they managed to blackmail the U.S. Government into the most incredible cover-up of 9/11 and into a declaration of the “War against Terror”.

In fact, a position of the poor Russian President after 9/11 was reduced to such a lowly extent, that Putin was forced to supply the biggest ever quantities of various Russian weapons – including tanks, carriers, artillery, light weaponry and a huge number of munitions (enough to fully arm a couple of standard infantry or tank divisions) to the Northern Alliance in Afghanistan. He did it totally free of charge.

Moreover, Putin did not even dare to voice any objections when the Americans unilaterally decided to quit the 1972 ABM Treaty (undoubtedly, the most impudent and the most aggressive step of the “Main Adversary of Russia”) when the decision of pulling out of the Treaty was announced by G.W. Bush on December 14, 2001.

President Putin was humiliated even further, when he failed to come up with any appropriate public response to the most impudent statement of G.W. Bush, who claimed exactly as follows:

"Today I am giving formal notice to Russia that the United States of America is withdrawing from this almost 30-year-old treaty," Bush said in the White House Rose Garden. "I have concluded the ABM treaty hinders our government's ability to develop ways to protect our people from future terrorist or rogue state missile attacks....Bush said he and Russian President Vladimir Putin "have also agreed that my decision to withdraw from the treaty will not in any way undermine our new relationship or Russian security."..³²¹

Was Russian President Putin personally guilty in that stolen “Granit” missiles affair?

Most probably, he was not. He was, probably, a victim – misinformed by his subordinates in regard to exact details of the “Kursk” affair. It seems that he was informed the situation was under control, all missiles with their warheads were in their places, and the defined water area around the sunken “Kursk” was being properly guarded by other warships. He was probably made to believe that some attempt to salvage the sunken submarine would be undertaken soon.

When the Americans confronted him with one of the “Granit” missiles found in the Pentagon – the Russian President most probably answered that he was not guilty. It is obvious that he became the President of Russia relatively recently, while those Soviet-made missiles could have been sold out of Soviet Union or Russia (or Ukraine) well before his term.

It is not known what was said exactly, of course, because that conversation was apparently confidential. But it seems that both sides agreed that some evil guys from either Russian, or Ukrainian, or from the former Soviet Government had sold those “Granit” missiles to evil Saddam Hussein. It looks exactly like that.

As I have mentioned above, I can not be sure 100% why the U.S. Government didn't want to honestly blame the Pentagon attack on the enemy missile from the very beginning, because such a solution would definitely spare the U.S. officials a lot of headaches in the future. I could only guess why. However, it appears to me that shortly before the Pentagon strike, the U.S. Air Force, or, possibly, the U.S. Air National Guard, had shot down Flight 77 somewhere. Thus, the arrival of the “Granit” missile to the inner yard of the Pentagon was considered by some folks as a “good excuse” to “nicely sign-off” the otherwise unexplainable demise of the Flight 77...

³²¹ The full news is available in the Internet: <http://archives.cnn.com/2001/ALLPOLITICS/12/13/rec.bush.abm/>

For those who doubt that the U.S. authorities had indeed shot down passenger planes during the 9/11 events, please, read the chapter of this book devoted to Flight 93 that is known to crash somewhere near Shanksville, in Somerset County, Pennsylvania. You will understand that Flight 93 was shot down by the U.S. Air National Guard, and you will no longer doubt that shooting down of passenger flights indeed took place during the 9/11 events.

There is yet another question: “Why the U.S. Government until now, even when ten years have passed since the 9/11 attacks, does not want to admit the awful truth about the Pentagon attack? Wouldn't it be better for the U.S. Government to at last admit the truth, to apologize before the public, and thus to justify for once and all its former awkward cover-up of the Pentagon attack, the actual reasons for the otherwise unexplainable decision to demolish the Twin Towers, as well as its otherwise unexplainable war against Iraq?”

Unfortunately, you can not expect such an admission from the U.S. Government, even today. There was yet another sensitive problem intertwined with the actual Pentagon missile attack: those high-ranking U.S. politicians – namely Dick Cheney and Condoleezza Rice, as well as NORAD Commander General Ralph Eberhart – rang the atomic alert only to themselves, but not to the entire Washington D.C....

It was an exclusive atomic alert; it was intended to save in anti-atomic bunkers only those exclusive guys and gals alone. Nobody invited to any anti-atomic bunker any ordinary person, either from among those who worked in the Pentagon, or from among those who worked in the White House (not even to say about the rest of Washington D.C. residents). All of those “commoners” were left behind following that exclusive atomic alert – to their imminent thermonuclear incineration that supposed to follow only 3-4 minutes later.

Surprisingly, even the very U.S. Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld, being in his Pentagon office at that time, was not informed about that atomic alert. It is a well-known fact that “unsuspecting” Rumsfeld, upon learning of the missile strike, got out of his office and sped to the spot of the crash to see what exactly happened. However, since this case does not look “genuine” to me to any extent, more details on this, in particular, are in a separate chapter devoted entirely to Rumsfeld.

Coming back to the actual question. In theory, the American public might “forgive” the initial lie of the U.S. Government that followed the actual Pentagon attack if the U.S. Government would honestly confess and earnestly explain the true causes of such a cover-up. However, you could never expect the public to forgive the U.S. Government for that exclusive atomic alert intended to save the skins of high-ranking officials, because the alert was not extended to save the precious lives of ordinary Washington D.C. residents.

For a better understanding of what I am talking about, please, try to compare the known circumstances of the attack on the Pentagon with a Russian-drawn “Instruction on actions during an atomic strike” – which was made into a separate chapter of this book. This chapter is the next one. After reading it, you will probably have the exact answer to the above question.

Instruction on actions during an atomic strike.

I found this instruction in Russian language here: http://iteach.arpteka.ru/forum/forum_focus/m_964f.html around December 30, 2007.

Disclaimer: I can not be sure about its origin and I have no clue whether or not it is a real thing, since it was found on the Internet where anyone could publish anything. Nonetheless, I found this information interesting enough to be translated and added to this book; it is especially interesting, taking into consideration the fact that the web page where it was initially published no longer exists – apparently being taken down by the Russian authorities.

Instruction

Arrangements in a situation “Atomic alert”

Moscow Civil Defense Headquarters. Departments of Services of the Emergency Situations Ministry. Leaderships of firefighting, emergency, rescue and recovery, and medical services.

§1. Preliminary information.

1.1. Expected time of a nuclear strike against Moscow – is about 18 o'clock Moscow time. This is determined by the following factors:

- a) 10 AM Washington time allows to prepare and to deliver the strike during a working morning of the corresponding power structures, without attracting prematurely any undue attention of our intelligence services to the activities of the departments of the potential adversary during non-working hours;
- b) all types of in-city- and inter-cities- communications are overloaded at the end of the working hours and any coordination of emergency defense measures is more difficult;
- c) attention of services on duty exactly at this time is decreasing;
- d) considerable part of the population at this time is on their ways between their places of work and that of residence, which additionally complicates any coordination of measures and actions;
- e) through-passages are paralyzed by traffic-jams and people in them are least protected from the destructive factors [of an atomic blast].

1.2. Expected yield of thermonuclear munitions – is from 2 to 10 megaton. An overpower of the munitions is limited by the abilities of the means of delivery and is determined by a large area of Moscow megalopolis and by concentration in it of central intelligence and defense departments and enterprises, and on its perimeters – belts of anti-missile and anti-aircraft defense complexes, but primarily – by increased survivability of the bunkers of the presidential and the governmental apparatuses and those of governing services of the Defense Ministry, which are the main targets.

1.3. Expected time from the moment of giving of an emergency signal “Atomic alert!” till the moment of an actual destructive strike is:

- a) about 14 minutes in case of starting of silo-based launch-vehicles from the American continental territory;
- b) about 7 minutes in case of starting of submarine-based launch-vehicles taking their positions in the Northern Atlantic and in the Arctic Ocean.

This corresponds to the arriving time of ballistic missiles traveling in an over-atmospheric space on ballistic trajectories with an approximate speed of the 1st cosmic velocity, i.e. 7.9 km/sec or about 28.000 km/hour [4.9 mile/second or about 17.400 mph]. Practically, in combat conditions certain possible fails and communication shortages shall be presumed, which could in reality shorten the notification time to only a few minutes.

§2. A signal “Atomic alert!” will be given by voice on all channels of TV and radio-transmission and will be dubbed by sirens of rail-way locomotives and water-craft – one long beep and two short, repeating several times.

§3. Persons, who are provided with bunkers due to their positions, shall immediately begin to act in accordance with the evacuation plans in case of the atomic alert under the guidance of representatives of civil defense, or superintendents, or leaders of working collectives, or on their own. They shall act without panic, in an organized manner and without even the slightest delay. Any case of panic must be immediately suppressed – right up to use of physical force and use of firearms. Not later than 6 minutes (or earlier – in accordance with orders of a person-in-charge of a bunker – who is satisfied with the presence in the bunker of all registered groups with their full complement) counting from the first signal of “Atomic alert!” all entrances to the bunker must be cut off and shut down according to a combat regime, disregarding any cases of the people who had not enough time to get in and irrespectively of quantities of the people remaining outside. Any attempts to block closing the entrances from the side of any persons must be immediately neutralized at any cost – right up to use of firearms.

§4. At receiving the signal “Atomic alert!” persons not provided with bunkers, shall act on their own, depending on actual situations, without delay and without panic undertaking all necessary measures on their protection and hiding from the [destructive] factors of an atomic blast. It is required to act calmly, competently, judging by the actual conditions of your current location, orally and by your actions prompting others to follow your example and to instill confidence in them. At first it is required to take care of safety for children and women and elderly persons.

4.1. If there is a basement in the building, you shall take cover in the basement. Leakages in the door-frames must be stopped up by any material, which is better to moist first. It is advisable to take with you some drinking water.

4.2. If you are in the building, it is better to take shelter in some enclosed premise – in an inner corridor, a bathroom, a storage room – which is separated from outer walls by an additional wall and does not feature any windows. It is advisable to stop up any leakages in the door-frames and to stock-pile some water.

4.3. In premises with windows, lie down legs towards outer wall, hands covering your head. Take place beneath or at a side of a window – ensuring that light falls on you as less as possible. It is better to protect yourself from light by taking place behind some heavy object – cupboard, sofa, table.

4.4. If you are on the streets, you are ought to immediately take cover in some building, at least in their doorways, or to use some other natural shelters, which are represented by:

- a) the subway – the best of all possible shelters;
- b) any basement-located premises, boiler-houses, underground garages;
- c) sewage wells and tunnels of any underground communications;
- d) foundations and lowest premises of new building projects;
- e) underground passages and automobile tunnels;
- f) warehouses, underground toilets, etc.

4.5. If you are in some public conveyances, you are ought to immediately get out and to take cover (see above).

4.6. If you are in a car, you are ought to immediately get out and take cover (see above). If the car is inside a tunnel, you shall remain in it. If it is impossible to get out of the car while in a traffic jam or in case of the absence of any shelter in its immediate vicinity, you shall lie down between sits hands covering your head, trying to protect yourself from outer radiation.

4.7. If it is not possible to take cover in any premises, lie down on the ground besides a building under its wall – which is opposite to the city-center, where the hypocenter of the blast would be. Try to choose some closed from every direction yard-well or narrow passage between buildings.

4.8. If you are in some park-zone or far from any possible shelters – determine some thick tree, or a knoll, or a ditch, or any surface imperfection, or a monument, and lie down legs towards it, face away from the city-center, where the hypocenter of the blast would be. This will protect you from thermal radiation which will be the main destructive factor.

4.9. All entrances to the subway upon receiving the notification [the signal “Atomic alert!”] must be closed immediately. Any manifestations of panic among the population and any attempts to prevent the immediate closure of the entrances must be immediately suppressed by the officials of station and pickets of the police accordingly – right up to use of firearms to kill.

In addition to this:

- a) all escalators must be switched to descend; after descending of all citizens onto the stations’ platforms all escalators must be stopped;
- b) stations personnel must switch energy supply of all station’s equipment into the emergency mode with an economical regime;
- c) trains from stations must not depart; trains being in tunnels between the stations continue to move until nearest stations and remain in them or as close to them as possible;
- d) trains being in open spans must reach entrances to tunnels and to get deeper in them as much as possible.

§5. In fair cloudless weather summer time an approaching of a descending warhead could be determined by a white inversion contrail – similar to contrails left by aircraft in high altitudes – ark-wisely descending from upper layers of atmosphere towards Moscow-center at a high speed. Note: you will not be able to hear any sound of approaching warhead due to its supersonic speed.

§6. Considering an accuracy of modern means of guidance, the hypocenter of the blast will be in between “Bulvarnoe Kol’tso” [Boulevards Ring], you can orient on the area: Kremlin-Lubianka-Arbat.

§7. In Moscow a ground blast shall be expected. It will decrease to a certain extent the radius of the general destruction in comparison with an air-blast, but it will increase a power of its seismic wave, which will lead to shearing of the ground akin to tectonic distortions of a character, similar to that of a strong earthquake in upper layers, which leads to crushing and the destruction of even fairly deeply buried underground bunkers of the increased strength within a radius of ten-fifteen kilometers [6-9.5 miles].

§8. Thermal destructive factor.

8.1. In the hypocenter of the blast there will be a light-flash, with its brightness many times over surpassing that of visible sun-light. In a course of 0.03-0.04 seconds the flash will be formed into a blinding shining sphere of 1.5-2 km [0.9 – 1.25 miles] in diameter, with temperatures about 10-20 million degrees Celsius. It will cover the city center in the radius “Bulvarnoe Kol'tso” [Boulevards Ring] – Kremlin – “Polianka”, while everything within this space will momentarily cease to exist, being transformed into the plasmatic condition.

8.2. Within a radius of 3-4 km [1.8-2.5 miles] all objects of organic descent, immediately opened to direct thermal radiation of the blast (people who failed to take cover, animals, plants, wooden parts of buildings facing the blast) will be instantly vaporized or incinerated. Asphalt-coated roads; metallic fences, roofs and parts of buildings constructions; concrete- and bricked walls, including those with stone- and ceramic incrustations – those opened to direct thermal radiation; as well as those hidden up to several meters deep – will all melt, vaporize, or instantly burn up. All substances – such as organic protected, as well as non-organic heat-resistant ones, in a radius of “Sadovoe Kol'tso” [Garden Ring] immediately following the blast will burn up in only a few seconds with temperatures of several hundreds degrees [Celsius].

8.3. Within a radius of 20-25 km [12.5-15.5 miles] will take fire everything that faces the blast which is being opened to its direct thermal radiation: wooden, plastic, painted surfaces, plants; metallic roofs will be burned through, concrete, bricks, glass, metal, stone will be fused, window frames will be burned up, window-panes – vaporized, wires – melted, asphalt – blazed up. The conflagration zone will momentarily overtake the entire city within MKAD [Moscow perimeter ring road]. Beyond MKAD there will be circular forest fires. Fully build over housing estates and forest park zones will all blaze up. Reservoirs of the Moscow-river and Yauza [river] will be evaporated; upper layers of water in the Khimki Reservoir will be boiled up. Remember: direct thermal radiation continues from splits of a second to several seconds and even up to several tens of seconds – depending on the yield of the blast and it propagates only by the direct line, i.e. any obstacle between you and the blast – providing a shade for you – might save your life in a situation when you find yourself in a sufficient distance from the hypocenter of the blast.

9.1. An effect of air-blast wave begins immediately at the moment of the blast and follows in step its thermal radiation, however, being delayed correspondingly in farther distances from the blast hypocenter in comparison with the instant effects of its thermal radiation. Within the second zone of destruction the velocity of air-blast wave reaches 1-5 thousands m/sec [2.000-11.000 mph], i.e. all within this zone, already being subjected to the effects of thermal radiation, is blown off by the powerful blast directed from the hypocenter towards peripheries, being reduced to a kind of even surface of milled debris, burning with high-temperatures (so-called “blowing off of landscape”). Those milled debris of substances from between the radiuses of “Bulvarnoe Kol'tso” [Boulevards Ring] and “Sadovoe Kol'tso” [Garden Ring] will be thrown outwardly by ever enlarging concentric zone into the [destruction] zone [number] three.

9.2. In the [destruction] zone [number] three, i.e. within Moscow inside MKAD [Moscow perimeter ring road], the velocity of blast-wave slightly decreases, especially near to the very surface, however, it remains supersonic – i.e. up to 300-500 m/sec [670-1120 mph] at the boundaries of MKAD – which causes the instant destruction of all above-ground structures, both – high-rising and low-rising ones. Scorching and burning parts of surfaces that are facing the hypocenter, being mixed up during the destruction with the rest of materials, produce the so-called “fiery carpet” featuring temperatures high enough to ensure burning of metals and melting of ceramics. In the process of passing through of blast wave some separated parts and details fly in the mid-air with velocities comparable to those of artillery shells, thus intensifying destructive processes of everything that rises above the ground. All plantations of trees are being uprooted, water from all reservoirs is being “pressed out”.

9.3. Forests being nearest to the MKAD [Moscow perimeter ring road], inhabited localities and airports are also subjected to the full- or to the primary destruction, to the partial- or to the full demolition, and to the burning up.

9.4. Inside the entire zone of destruction an area of sharply reduced atmospheric pressure appears resulting from both – burnout of oxygen, and because of concentric “outward pushing” of air masses. As a result of all of it, soon after passing through of blast wave there appears a so-called “return blast wave” directed towards the hypocenter. This one is characterized by a much slower velocity, comparable to that of an ordinary hurricane, but it brings to the entire area of ignition masses of fresh oxygen which creates an effect of “forge bellows”, creating a so-called “fiery storm” on the entire area of destruction. A zone within boundaries of MKAD [Moscow perimeter ring road] becomes like a made even surface of scorching coals inside a furnace.

§10. Seismic impact of the ground blast causes an “effect of an earthquake” with compressing and displacing of surface layers. All underground structures of the subway within its Ring Line [“Kol'tsevaya Linia” in Russian] and those of stations nearest to it will be destroyed and heaped up completely. All air-raid shelters within boundaries of “Sadovoe Kol'tso” [Garden Ring] will be destroyed completely. All basement premises within boundaries of MKAD [Moscow perimeter ring road] will be destroyed completely. All sewage and ventilation underground structures within frames of [subway stations] “Prospect Mira”, “Zoopark”, “Serpukhovskaya”, “Ploschad Ilyicha” will be crushed, destroyed and heaped up. All entrances and exits of the subway, as well as its ventilation shafts, emergency- and service- exits will be heaped up, or crushed, or completely blocked by scorching masses on the surface.

§11. Outward picture of the blast will look normally and will be very characteristic of a thermonuclear explosion of a huge yield. White plasmic sphere covering, akin to a two-kilometers cap, the center of Moscow and surpassing by its height by four-fold the Ostankino TV Tower, during a few seconds will begin to grow dim, getting drowned by a crimson shroud, and will begin to separate itself from the ground “surfacing up”. Burning city “falls” to every direction – similar to the ring of domino, getting covered by swirling smoke and streams of smokes and fires rush from peripheries of ring of MKAD [Moscow perimeter ring road] towards the ascending sphere, creating a typical “mushroom stipe”, which expands below up to the boundaries of the zone of destruction, and converges farther upwards toward the sphere, that begins to be wrapped up with a cloud representing a “mushroom cup”. Swirling smoke at the mushroom foot reaches a height of a kilometer; the diameter of the “stipe” converges to 800-1000 meters right beneath the “cup”. The “mushroom” continues to ascend, and, though its ascending might look slow – due to its giant size, in only 3-5 minutes its height reaches 25-35 kilometers. In case of a blast of a big yield this picture might stay up to several hours.

§12. The conflagration itself might continue, taking into consideration the area of destruction of the Moscow megalopolis, up to several days – preventing any kind of rescue efforts.

§13. High levels of ionizing radiation background will not allow to begin any kind of rescue works in the megalopolis any earlier than after 15-20 days, save for certain operations of special importance. Conducting of any kind of rescue operations deems to be worthwhile within areas not closer than 5-10 km beyond the line of MKAD [Moscow perimeter ring road]. “

I believe that some readers might become truly upset by reading the above “Instruction” – so cynical and so ruthless it sounds. But what could we do? Behave like an ostrich that hides his head into sand? That is how this kind of instructions usually sounds...

I guess that the U.S. instruction on actions on an atomic alert sounds as cynical and ruthless as the Russian one. But in any case it is better to know the full truth about nuclear weapons in advance, than to learn it when it is too late. This kind of instructions has to be learned by heart. In the Soviet times they used to publish such things in thin books intended for children and named: "This is the thing everyone must know".

Anyhow, I would like to apologize in advance if I upset someone by publishing such a cruel thing here. Though, there is an apparent benefit from it as well. At least, from reading the above instruction, you could presume that the U.S. Government supposed not to make the "exclusive" atomic alert intended to save the precious skins of the top politicians from the White House alone. The atomic alert should have been rung to the entire population of Washington D.C. and even beyond it.

On the other hand, by reading this instruction you could better perceive the true extent of the nuclear hysteria of the U.S Government, which will be described in more detail in an especially devoted chapter.

Donald Rumsfeld and his true role in the 9/11 events.

I decided to add this chapter to the final edition of this book in the very last moment – about the same time when I added the chapter on defending Larry Silverstein. As I have told you, it luckily occurred to me in the last moment that Larry Silverstein was probably innocent in regard to the 9/11 perpetration. In the same time it also luckily occurred to me that it might not be so with another prominent personality often mentioned in connection with 9/11 – a certain Mr. Donald Henry Rumsfeld, the then U.S. Defense Secretary.

Initially, I thought that Rumsfeld must have been innocent in regard to 9/11, because I believed that he was merely a part of the U.S. Government and I was sure that the U.S. Government (as a “government”, not as some separate vicious individuals within it) was innocent. This initial impression of mine in regard to the supposed Rumsfeld’s innocence was further strengthened by the fact that Rumsfeld in an apparently silly manner managed to blab out at least two embarrassing secrets of the U.S. Government. At one point he mentioned that the “plane was shot down over Pennsylvania”³²². In another case, in a statement, transcript of which was publicly available on the Pentagon’s official web site till as long ago as the end of 2006, he claimed that it was the missile that hit the Pentagon³²³. Of course, judging by that infamous “intuitive impression”, such a poor babbler as Don Rumsfeld could not be anything but completely innocent. Rumsfeld’s face also looked silly enough to suggest to any physiognomist that its owner could not be involved in any evil enterprise (at least, Rumsfeld’s physiognomy does not look as “evil” as that of Larry Silverstein). This infamous “intuitive impression” (that was proven to be totally wrong so many times before) was finally strengthened by the fact that instead of cowardly hiding in an anti-atomic bunker like Dick Cheney and Condoleezza Rice, immediately after the Pentagon’s strike, Donald Rumsfeld sped outside of his office – to see what actually happened and even participated in helping some victims of the explosion (he indeed helped to load stretchers with injured into ambulances – as did anyone else around).

³²² Aired by CNN on December 24, 2004 -12:00 ET: <http://edition.cnn.com/TRANSCRIPTS/0412/24/nfcnn.01.html>
DONALD RUMSFELD, SECRETARY OF DEFENSE: “And to change that way of living, would strike at the very essence of our country. And I think all of us have a sense if we imagine the kind of world we would face if the people who bombed the mess hall in Mosul, or the people who did the bombing in Spain, or the people who attacked the United States in New York, shot down the plane over Pennsylvania and attacked the Pentagon, the people who cut off peoples' heads on television to intimidate, to frighten -- indeed the word "terrorized" is just that. Its purpose is to terrorize, to alter behavior, to make people be something other than that which they want to be”.

³²³ “Here we're talking about plastic knives and using an American Airlines flight filed with our citizens, and the missile to damage this building and similar (inaudible) that damaged the World Trade Center.” – said Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld, October 12 2001, while sitting down inside the Pentagon with his interviewer Lyric Wallwork Winik of Parade magazine to go on the record for the one-month anniversary. It was available as late as at the end of 2006 on the web page: http://www.defenselink.mil/transcripts/2001/t11182001_t1012pm.html but it seems to be no longer available today. Notable also is Rumsfeld’s claim about “plastic knives”, not “box-cutters”.

It was only very recently when I caught myself with this thought: “Hey, Dimitri, are you really that gullible to fall victim of such cheap tricks? Where is your usual healthy cynicism that helped you to establish the truth so many times before? And do you forget, you moron, that you actually had a military education? How could you have been as stupid as to believe that the top military commander would spend his precious time, during the confirmed warning of the nuclear attack against his capital, on “observing the damage” and on “helping the injured”?”

Well. I concede that I was wrong. I forgot to “switch on” my usual cynicism when contemplating the true role of Mr. Rumsfeld in the 9/11 events. His silly face expression, his silly actions during the 9/11 events, and his silly statements after 9/11, in combination, indeed managed to cheat me.

On the famous photo above, Rumsfeld is shown as returning to the Pentagon (to be more precise – being ushered back to his work place by his desperate subordinates who finally managed to discover their missing boss on the Pentagon’s lawn) quite sometime after the actual strike. On that photo you could see that fire-engines have already arrived and were at work at the moment, trying to extinguish the fires. This means that Rumsfeld has spent on the Pentagon’s lawn, at minimum, 20 minutes. It was especially strange, because at that moment there was the atomic alert, and there was an apparent nuclear war unfolding. Moreover, even if to presume that Rumsfeld was indeed that silly as to run outside “to see what hit the Pentagon”, upon his arrival to the spot of the event, he must have been fully satisfied by learning that it was a missile, and not anything else. And this realization alone must have prompted him, the U.S. Defense Secretary, to quickly run back into the Pentagon, to descend to his special, war-time office, located deep underground in a special anti-atomic bunker, and to start working in accordance with his actual duties. I hope you agree with this logic?

Contrary to this logical expectation, Rumsfeld preferred to spend 20 precious minutes (if not more) on the Pentagon’s lawn, supposedly “observing the damage” and “helping the injured”. During this entire time, Rumsfeld was not in any contact whatsoever with the rest of the U.S. leadership; neither was he in any contact with his own subordinates inside the Pentagon who were obliged to act on their own, putting in motion contingency plans designed for an event of a nuclear war (including scrambling the “Doomsday planes” and preparing a retaliatory thermonuclear strike against Russia). Do you realize that, judging by the standards of war-time justice, for such an action, which is otherwise called “dereliction of duty during the time of a [nuclear] war”, the U.S. Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld could have faced being executed by a firing squad instead of being praised for his “helping the injured”?

Do you sincerely believe that Rumsfeld was indeed that much silly to act like this in such a situation and his intentions were indeed “genuine”? When it comes to me, I do not think so. At least, my usual cynicism, coupled with my own military education, prohibits me from believing so. I do admit that some folks could be genuinely silly, of course, but not to this particular extent as demonstrated by Don Rumsfeld, and not those who occupy a position of Secretary of Defense of a nuclear-armed country with a population of several hundred million heads. What I am trying to say is that from these several hundred million bipeds inhabiting the United States, it was possible to choose one relatively serious and a bit responsible guy who would occupy the position of the Secretary of its Defense. Wasn’t it?

From the previous two chapters we know what an atomic alert is, how serious it is, and how serious is an actual situation in which such an atomic alert could ring. We also know, that the U.S. vice-president (Cheney) and the Assistant to the President for National Security Affairs (Rice), as well as several other top political figures from the Capitol and from the White House were rushed to anti-atomic bunkers. We know that once the U.S. President Bush landed somewhere following his hastened departure from Sarasota, Florida, he too was rushed into some secret anti-atomic bunker. We know that the Commander of NORAD immediately headed to his war-time protected command post, too (I am talking about the anti-atomic Cheyenne Mountain where he ordered to shut its anti-atomic doors for the first time in history). We know, at last, that all responsible Pentagon staff rushed to their own anti-atomic bunker under the Pentagon as well (moreover, as you will see from our conclusions later, these folks rushed into the anti-atomic bunker before the missile hit the Pentagon, not after this event).

Now, what do you think about the person of the U.S. Secretary of Defense? Could it be that he personally was such an unimportant boy, or that his actual position within the U.S. system was so lowly, that it was not even necessary to ring the atomic alert for him, thus, informing him about the imminent thermonuclear strike on the U.S. capital? Try to be realistic when answering this question.

Do not even doubt that the U.S. Defense Secretary was the most important person in this situation, next only to the acting U.S. President. Since nuclear war is apparently a “military event” and the nuclear strike by the adversary apparently required a military response, Mr. Rumsfeld was more important than all those Cheneys, Rices, Clarkes, Muellers, Tenets, Powells, and the rest combined together. I hope you realize that an actual system of transmitting the signal of the atomic alert to the high-ranking U.S. officials was organized in such a manner as to make sure that the U.S. Defense Secretary would be one of the first who would learn about the alert.

So, how come that, following the atomic alert, while all high-ranking U.S. officials were rushed to their anti-atomic bunkers, the U.S. Secretary of Defense rushed to satisfy his curiosity onto the Pentagon's lawn? Does it sound realistic to you?

Let us implement elementary logic when contemplating Mr. Rumsfeld's behavior. You receive a signal of an atomic alert. You are "initiated" and you are, in addition, educated enough to know that there are no jokes with such things, because as a matter of principle there are no "drilling atomic alerts" – the atomic alert could only be the real and the final one. Thus, you know for sure that the enemy missiles with multi-megaton thermonuclear warheads are on their way and in only five-six minutes (or, perhaps, even in three-four minutes) they will incinerate your location.

So, you have choices:

1) If you are a reasonable man who does not have much responsibilities, and you do not want to continue living in an "a-la Mad Max" environment after getting out from your anti-atomic bunker several years later, you might wish to spend these last couple of minutes for your last prayer (or for drinking your last, really last, glass of whisky in This life – depending on your preferences).

2) If you have responsibilities, you have no choice – you have to spend those seconds that are numbered on rushing into the assigned anti-atomic bunker, because the state has entrusted to you the job of retaliating on its behalf with the reciprocal thermonuclear strike.

The suggested "third option" – i.e. to run into the open to satisfy your curiosity – simply does not exist.

Considering this, we can conclude with dead certainty that the U.S. Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld could run outside the Pentagon in such a situation only in one case: when he knew for sure that the atomic alert would not be followed by the actual destructive thermonuclear strike.

This automatically means that Mr. Rumsfeld knew in advance that there would be the false atomic alert. Logic is a stubborn thing...

In this view, the abovementioned infamous "prophecy" by Donald Rumsfeld sounds particularly sinister. Let me remind you of it.

I am quoting³²⁴ (of course, you have to read it "between the lines" or, speaking in other words, read it with your eyes OPEN):

"Chairman Cox's Statement on the Terrorist Attack on America

by Christopher Cox

Rep. Cox website

September 11, 2001

<http://cox.house.gov/html/release.cfm?id=33>

At 9 a.m. EDT Tuesday, as a hijacked Boeing 767 slammed into the World Trade Center, I was in the Pentagon in the private dining room of the Secretary of Defense. Don Rumsfeld, the Secretary, and Paul Wolfowitz, the Deputy Secretary, and I were discussing how to win votes for the Bush defense plan that is now pending in the House and Senate.

When minutes later, the Pentagon itself was hit by a Boeing 757 loaded with civilian passengers, virtually the entire building was immediately evacuated. I escaped just minutes before the building was hit. Most of those who remained were huddled in the National Military Command Center in a basement bunker of the building. From there, America's military response is being directed even now.

When minutes later, the Pentagon itself was hit by a Boeing 757 loaded with civilian passengers, virtually the entire building was immediately evacuated. I escaped just minutes before the building was hit. Most of those who remained were huddled in the National Military Command Center in a basement bunker of the building. From there, America's military response is being directed even now.

Ironically, just moments before the Department of Defense was hit by a suicide hijacker, Secretary Rumsfeld was describing to me why America needs to abandon its decade-old two-major-war strategy, and focus on the real threat facing us in the 21st century: terrorism, and the unexpected.

"When I worked on the ballistic missile threat commission [the 1998 bipartisan group popularly known as the Rumsfeld Commission], there was an 'event' every few months that focused the attention of those in denial," he told me. "For example, India shocked the world when it detonated a nuclear device. Then Pakistan. Then North Korea launched a two-stage ballistic missile over Japan.

"Terrorist groups, some state-sponsored, are developing these same missile capabilities as we meet here. They are developing the chemical, biological, and nuclear weapons to go with them.

"They do not have all the pieces yet, but they will. That is why Congress has got to give the President the tools he needs to move forward with a defense of America against ballistic missiles, the ultimate terrorist weapons.

"If we remain vulnerable to missile attack, a terrorist group or rogue state that demonstrates the capacity to strike the U.S. or its allies from long range could have the power to hold our entire country hostage to nuclear or other blackmail," he said.

"And let me tell you, I've been around the block a few times. There will be another event." He repeated it for emphasis: "There will be another event."

Within minutes of that utterance, Rumsfeld's words proved tragically prophetic..."

How do you like such a "prophesy"? The above article continues (I decided to quote it here in full):

"..Both he and Wolfowitz emphasized the recent partisanship that has made military planning near impossible. Whereas during the Clinton administration the congressional votes to deploy a missile defense were overwhelmingly bipartisan, now that President Bush has made it clear his commitment is more than rhetorical, there is significant backsliding.

As the Senate armed services subcommittee met in secret to work on details of the defense authorization bill for fiscal year 2002, which begins Oct. 1, Sen. Carl Levin (D-Mich.) threw down the gauntlet last week, threatening to derail any actual deployment of a missile defense that would violate the 30-year old ABM Treaty with the former Soviet Union. That is tantamount to killing any missile defense that works, as both the President and Secretary Rumsfeld have made clear repeatedly.

In the House, as the defense committee worked in open session to complete the spending bill for the Defense Department and defense work of the Energy Department, Rep. Ike Skelton (D-Mo.), the Armed Services Committee's top Democrat, said Tuesday he would seek to divert $860 million from missile defense to other Pentagon needs when the bill hits the House floor. The committee rejected that on a party-line vote last month.

Rumsfeld also implored the Congress to provide all the money the President has requested for his budget -- not just the 2% earmarked for missile defense. "We need every nickel of it," he said.

But not all Democrats have been playing the partisan game. "I saw the attack on Pearl Harbor. I remember June 25, 1950, when the North Koreans attacked," said Sen. Daniel Inouye (D-Hawaii), the Armed Services panel chairman, at last week's hearing. "There is one lesson I will never forget: If we want to prevent war, we must be prepared for war."

The war for which we must be prepared will not be fought with the Soviet Union, nor governed by the outdated rules of the Cold War. We got the first glimpses of its ugly face in Tuesday's "event."

Perhaps now we will listen, and unite.

Regarding the copyright stated above. I believe that the abovementioned account of events represents nothing less than an important piece of evidence in a criminal investigation and therefore it is not covered by the concept of the “copyright”. Moreover, Representative Christopher Cox does not make any profit from selling this particular article; therefore quoting it could not cause him any financial damage. Besides, the actual web page where it was initially published, no longer exists; apparently, it was taken down by the authorities. Therefore, quoting the article “as is”, in its entirety, is the only possible way to get the general public acquainted with Representative Cox’s memoirs; thus, Mr. Cox must only be glad that someone remembers him and quotes his sayings; otherwise, they would fall into oblivion. In addition to all of this, I would like to remind everyone about the concept of so-called “Fair Use”, which is in accordance with the U.S. copyright laws, Section 107 that lists various purposes for which the reproduction of a particular work may be considered fair, such as criticism, comment, news reporting, teaching, scholarship, and research. In this particular case, the reproduction of the copyrighted work is apparently permitted by default because here you encounter “criticism”, “comments”, “teaching”, and “research” (if not to add “accumulation of the necessary evidence in a criminal case”).

Let us take a closer look at the above memoirs of Representative Cox.

First of all, as you could see, Mr. Rumsfeld is not actually as silly as he tries hard to appear to the public. He is much cleverer than that. Look – his actual statement is full of logic and of common sense. Secondly, we could see that Mr. Rumsfeld has a very good sense of humor. Moreover, he uses his sense of humor to make a sheer mockery of the gullible interlocutor: knowing that the bogus nuclear missile strike would follow in only a few minutes, he goes as far as to utter the supposedly “prophetic” utterance quoted by Cox (who apparently took it for the genuine “prophesy”). This betrays in Rumsfeld that he is not just one of the 9/11 perpetrators. It betrays him as a high-ranking member of the Freemasonic sect. To make mockeries, especially “prophetic” ones – of the kind mentioned above, is the favorite pastime of high-ranking Freemasons, in case you didn’t know. Low-ranking and young Freemasons, bound by subordination to rules of conduct, even when they have a good sense of humor, would not dare to utter such things out of fear to betray the sect, while the high-ranking Freemasons feel they are high enough as not to care.

Another thing that betrays a typical high-ranking Freemason in Rumsfeld is his manner to pose as a “knowledgeable initiated teacher” whose words shall be treated by lowly, unworthy listeners (even those holding a rank of the Congressman) as nothing less than “revelations from the Above”. If you read Cox’s account of events carefully, trying to get the actual feeling behind his words, you will feel it – Cox apparently treats Rumsfeld as nothing less than a “teacher”. Trying to behave like “teachers” even when dealing with mature adults, is a very typical manner of the high-ranking Freemasons, in case you didn’t know.

The original governmental web page <http://cox.house.gov/html/release.cfm?id=33> where Representative Christopher Cox has published his memoirs just a few days after the 9/11 events, no longer exists, as you may sincerely expect. The Freemasons were apparently not happy at all with Rumsfeld’s lax manners that betrayed them so effectively. Nonetheless, many 9/11 researchers managed to copy that info and now it exists on the Internet in a variety of different web sites³²⁵.

I have to remind you also about the actual position of Christopher Cox, because without knowing it, it might be difficult to adequately perceive some technicalities described further. Mr. Cox was not just an ordinary Congressman. He served in the House Majority Leadership as Chairman of the House Republican Policy Committee, which was the fifth-ranking elected leadership position (behind the Speaker, the Majority Leader, the Majority Whip, and the Chair of the House Republican Conference).

Let us re-read the some important passages from Cox's memoirs, because we could make quite a few interesting observations from them:

"...At 9 a.m. ... I was in the Pentagon in the private dining room of the Secretary of Defense. Don Rumsfeld, the Secretary, and Paul Wolfowitz, the Deputy Secretary, and I were discussing..."

What could be concluded from this? I think the conclusions are very obvious:

1) Rumsfeld provided an alibi for himself in advance. He scheduled the "breakfast party" in a location that would allow him to pretend that he "did not hear" the atomic alert (perhaps, the signalization of the alert was not extended to the "private dining room" and was limited to his actual office and to the room of his immediate bodyguards; or, may be, Rumsfeld was able to invent some other pretext for "not being able to hear the signal" because of being in the private dining room rather than in his office). Moreover, to enhance his alibi, Rumsfeld called to the "breakfast party" independent witnesses – in a person of Representative Cox, as well as his own Deputy – Paul Wolfowitz. I could bet that in order not to be disturbed by his bodyguards (who would surely convey to him the warning of the nuclear attack if they were near him) Rumsfeld sent them away under some pretext.

2) Despite the unprecedented occurrence in New York (the aluminum plane penetrated the steel North Tower of the WTC) at 8.46 AM EST, Rumsfeld did not interrupt his "party" in order to rush to his office, and as of 9 AM was still enjoying his breakfast, conversing with Cox and Wolfowitz and prophesying. He was not in any hurry at all. If he goes to his office, he would be bound by the atomic alert that would follow soon. If you think that the rest of the high-ranking U.S. officials were equally "oblivious", you are badly mistaken. Just to remind you: "Many high-ranking U.S. officials, especially from secret services and from the military, who learnt about the explosion before the very first news report released by CNN two minutes later were initially inclined to believe that it was either a cruise missile or even some surface-to-air missile which struck the WTC Tower accidentally". Nonetheless, the very Defense Secretary of the United States seemed to sincerely believe that it was the "aluminum plane" and the occurrence was not serious enough to interrupt his breakfast.

3) Moreover, the U.S. Defense Secretary did not interrupt his "breakfast party" even when the second aluminum plane penetrated the second steel Twin Tower at 9.03 AM in an apparent terrorist attack on his country. He and his guests continued to enjoy their breakfast (that took place during the working hours, just to remind you), having a nice conversation, watching the unprecedented events on TV, while Messire Rumsfeld also used this unique opportunity to exercise in the art of prophesying.

Let us analyze another sentence from Cox's memoirs:

"...When minutes later, the Pentagon itself was hit by a Boeing 757 loaded with civilian passengers, virtually the entire building was immediately evacuated. I escaped just minutes before the building was hit. Most of those who remained were huddled in the National Military Command Center in a basement bunker of the building. From there, America's military response is being directed even now..."

What can we conclude from this part?

1) The Pentagon was evacuated in its entirety. Only those who were directly concerned with the nuclear war, remained in it. However, those hid in the Pentagon's underground anti-atomic bunker. This is just one more confirmation of the atomic alert and of the fact that it embraced not only the highest officials in the White House, but also concerned officials in the Pentagon (yet, Mr. Rumsfeld, being the highest of those officials, pretended to ignore the atomic alert).

2) Representative Cox escaped the Pentagon building before it was hit, not after. This is the confirmation of the fact that the atomic alert, which rang definitely prior to the missile's impact, managed somehow to reach even the room where Rumsfeld held its "breakfast party". Otherwise, Cox would have no reason to "escape" just "minutes before the building was hit". The two planes impacts in New York apparently did not prompt him to abandon that nice breakfast; so why would he bother to escape it eventually?

We could only guess where exactly Cox headed when he escaped "the building", because his account of events does not specify his escaping destination. It shall be presumed, though, judging by common sense, that Representative Cox could only escape in one direction – towards the Pentagon's anti-atomic bunker. It would be just silly of us to presume that the honorable guest of the Pentagon's hierarch (who was, moreover, himself holding the fifth-ranking elected leadership position) would be shown an escaping route towards the Pentagon's parking lot or towards the Pentagon's lawn – as if he were a lowly commoner doomed to meet his imminent thermonuclear incineration in the open.

I am certain that Cox was rushed into the Pentagon's anti-atomic bunker, because it is just logical to presume so: being the fifth-ranking elected U.S. official, moreover, the Republican one, Cox must have been embraced by the procedures of the Continuity of the government³²⁶ in any case. An additional confirmation of this suggestion of mine could be drawn from this quotation of Cox: "...Most of those who remained [in the Pentagon] were huddled in the National Military Command Center in a basement bunker of the building. From there, America's military response is being directed even now..." Where on earth would Cox learn about this if not from his being an eye-witness of the event of "huddling" inside the Pentagon's basement bunker?

I think, in order to avoid being criticized by the skills for being "intentionally superficial" and for "not studying the subject deep enough" before advancing my claims, I am obliged to go a bit deeper into analyzing Cox's 9/11 claims, as well as his actual behavior. Let us review a few alternative pieces of information in this regard:

"...Representative Christopher Cox will later claim he is still meeting with Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld at this time. They are still discussing missile defense, apparently completely oblivious of the approaching Flight 77. Watching television coverage from New York City, Rumsfeld says to Cox: "Believe me, this isn't over yet. There's going to be another attack, and it could be us." According to the Daily Telegraph³²⁷, Flight 77 hits the building "moments later."...

... There will be another event." Rumsfeld repeats this sentence for emphasis. According to Cox, "Within minutes of that utterance, Rumsfeld's words proved tragically prophetic." Cox also claims, "I escaped just minutes before the building was hit." [Office of Representative Christopher Cox, 9/11/2001³²⁸]....

However, Rumsfeld will claim that this meeting with Cox ended before the second World Trade Center crash, which occurred at 9:03 a.m. Cox himself will say that after being told of that crash, "[Rumsfeld] sped off, as did I." Cox will say he immediately headed to his car, making it impossible for him to still be in the Pentagon "just minutes before" it is hit. [Associated Press, 9/11/2001] ...³²⁹

As you can see from the quotations above, even those obedient servants of the New World Order from the Associated Press managed to notice discrepancies in conflicting accounts of Cox (not to mention that either account of Cox blatantly contradicts the account of Rumsfeld). For some not so clear reason, instead of honestly saying that he was rushed into the Pentagon's anti-atomic bunker (which is logical and almost evident), Cox decided to claim later that he allegedly "immediately headed to his car" (which is technically impossible, considering that there was the real atomic alert while Representative Cox was the fifth-ranking persona in the elected U.S. hierarchy). In any case, it is clear that Rumsfeld deliberate lies when he claims that his meeting with Cox allegedly "ended before the second plane's hit". Apparently, it ended at the moment of the atomic alert in reality. Though, from this point, Cox and Rumsfeld, obviously, went separate ways: while Cox rushed into the Pentagon's anti-atomic bunker (where he had the chance to observe all those "huddled in the National Military Command Center" with his very eyes), Rumsfeld went elsewhere and in this way he managed to temporarily disappear (until, at least, the moment of the Pentagon's hit).

³²⁶ Quote from the Wikipedia article on the subject http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Continuity_of_government : Continuity of government (COG) is the principle of establishing defined procedures that allow a government to continue its essential operations in case of nuclear war or other catastrophic event. COG was developed by the British government during World War II to counter the threat of Luftwaffe bombing during the Battle of Britain. The need for continuity-of-government plans gained new urgency with nuclear proliferation. Countries during the Cold War and afterwards developed such plans to avoid (or minimize) confusion and disorder in a power vacuum in the aftermath of a nuclear attack. In the US at least, COG is no longer limited to nuclear emergencies; the Continuity of Operations Plan was activated following the September 11 attacks and has been in effect ever since.

³²⁷ Daily Telegraph, 12/16/2001: <http://www.telegraph.co.uk/news/worldnews/northamerica/usa/136545/Revealed-what-really-went-on-during-Bushs-missing-hours.html>

At minimum, we have the confirmation now that Cox indeed learned about the Pentagon strike some time in advance and this advanced knowledge prompted him to "escape somewhere". However, the fact that Cox managed to learn of the upcoming nuclear missile attack and escaped the private dining room of Rumsfeld, did not prompt Rumsfeld to follow his guest's example and to rush either to his office or to his underground anti-atomic bunker. Rumsfeld apparently played "stupid" and waited [either in the very dining room or elsewhere] till the very missile's impact – so that he would have a nice pretext to "run outside to see what happened" and so to be absent while the most painful decisions were made by other U.S. officials.

3) The third important thing that we can notice from the above passage of the Cox's memories is that he mentions the so-called "National Military Command Center" or "NMCC". I have to remind you that the NMCC is responsible for generating Emergency Action Messages (EAMs) to launch control centers, nuclear submarines, recon aircraft and battlefield commanders worldwide. This is the main purpose of the NMCC that is primarily intended to conduct a nuclear war. Notable thing is that immediately after the "plane's" attack on the Pentagon, nothing else than the NMCC (assembled in an underground anti-atomic bunker) has assumed a leading role in coordinating "the response" (by the way, just think over these very words "coordinating the response"). Yet, even this fact did not prompt the U.S. Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld to rush into the underground bunker to join the emergency body designed to conduct a nuclear war. Elderly Rumsfeld clearly preferred a physical work to the mental one: to help loading stretchers with injured into ambulances on the Pentagon's lawn – being completely out of reach by other U.S. officials...

I hope I got the point: Donald Rumsfeld was, firstly, not afraid of the nuclear missile attack that scared the rest of the U.S. officials nearly to death (because he knew in advance it would be false). Secondly, he clearly attempted to concoct an alibi, moreover, supported by genuine witnesses. Thirdly, he did really his best to keep his hands off making the most painful 9/11 decisions during the first, most important hour.

In fact, even though it is not widely known (except for dedicated 9/11 researchers), Donald Rumsfeld was severely criticized by his colleagues and by other U.S. officials for his performance during 9/11. There are quite a few statements criticizing Rumsfeld's behavior rather severely – you could easily find them on the Internet if you search it by appropriate keywords. I think it will do no harm if you review here several of such critical points. It might help to understand true motives behind Rumsfeld's behavior.

Unfortunately, most of these critical accounts "intuitively" concentrate on establishing the supposed role of Rumsfeld in shooting down the passenger planes during the 9/11 events, while the primary subject of our interest is, of course, the decision to demolish the Twin Towers, plus irregularities in Rumsfeld's behavior that point to his definite prior knowledge of the Pentagon missile attack in particular and that of the 9/11 project in general. Nonetheless, I hope that with a certain amount of assiduousness we will be able to sift through the garbage and to find some nuggets of information we are looking for.

Let us begin with this one: "On 9/11, Rumsfeld Fiddled While Cheney Ran the Country"³³⁰ by James Ridgeway | Wed Feb. 9, 2011. I am quoting:

"...In her interview last night with former Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld, author of a new autobiography, Diane Sawyer asked him about a tough decision he had to make on the morning of 9/11. Was it not difficult, she asked, to order military pilots to shoot down passenger jets that the government believed to be hijacked and headed toward targets in Washington – maybe the White House, maybe the Capitol. For a moment, Rumsfeld dropped his generally arrogant stance, and instead looked as if he were about to cry as he recalled the agony he went through in making the decision.

It might have been a poignant moment, were it not for the fact that Rumsfeld didn't make the decision. It was Vice President Dick Cheney who made it. And it was Cheney who was running the country that morning, with a confused Rumsfeld watching from the sidelines..."

³³⁰ <http://www.motherjones.com/mojo/2011/02/911-rumsfeld-fiddled-while-cheney-ran-country>

What could we conclude from the above passage? Firstly, that despite trying hard to look silly and “generally arrogant”, Donald Rumsfeld is an actor. He merely plays his role. This is just another feature that betrays him as a member of the Freemasonic sect – the Freemasons are generally good actors, since they are especially trained to perform. Moreover, in general, the Freemasons never behave naturally when they are dealing with “profanes” – they play a certain role all the time; they could become their own selves only when they occur among other members of their sect. Secondly, it is obvious that despite his being so “knowledgeable” and even “prophetic”, Rumsfeld pretended to be silly at that moment, he played “confused”, and he intentionally distanced himself to the so-called “sidelines”.

We continue reading:

“...When the nation is threatened, it is the President, the Commander-in-Chief, who must make the decision to engage the military. Under the law, he orders the Secretary of Defense to implement his commands down through the military chain of command. While President Bush was being shuttled around from bunker to bunker on the morning of September 11, 2001, supposedly out of cell phone contact at times, Rumsfeld was next in line. But Rumsfeld’s role on 9/11 has always been a mystery. In his new book, on page 339, the former secretary of Defense casts a little light on what he did that morning.

Feeling the Pentagon shake when American Airlines Flight 77 hit at 9:38, and seeing the smoke, Rumsfeld, by his own report, rushed into the Pentagon parking lot, which was in chaos amid frantic rescue efforts and treating the wounded. Then he returned to his office. He spoke briefly to Bush, who was on Air Force One flying around somewhere in the southeast, who wanted to know about the damage to the Pentagon. From there Rumsfeld went to the military command post in the basement. And there, he writes, heeding the advice of General Dick Myers, the vice chairman of the Joint Chiefs, who was also in the room, he raised the threat level to a state of alert, and launched fighters to protect Air Force One. Rumsfeld was supposed to be removed to a secret site, but he says he was “unwilling to be out of touch during the time it would take to relocate me to the safe site.” ...”

What could we conclude from the above, besides noticing one more confirmation that Rumsfeld indeed waited till the actual hit took place at 9.38 AM instead of rushing to the anti-atomic bunker?

First of all, Rumsfeld was indeed next to the U.S. President G. W. Bush on the morning of September the 11th. Do not make any mistake: it was not the U.S. Vice-President Dick Cheney who was next in line to the actually missing U.S. President (since the latter was effectively missed in action somewhere in Sarasota, Florida, that morning). It was the U.S. Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld who was supposed to run the United States that morning. Nonetheless, Rumsfeld decided to follow the actual U.S. President and to pretend to be “missing in action” too – somewhere on the lawn of the Pentagon.

Secondly, we could notice here the most ridiculous discrepancy: later, when Mr. Rumsfeld was found by his subordinates and brought back to action, he, being the next in line after the U.S. President, of course, must have been shifted to a certain alternative command center, situated deep underground somewhere in a secret location.

Do not forget, that the United States was in a state of nothing less than the nuclear war at that moment. Therefore for the second most important state person to remain in its capital was simply not an option. To expect the miracle with the broken detonator to be repeated in regard to the next thermonuclear warhead (that supposed to fall from space right on the Pentagon’s infamous “Ground Zero” cafeteria at any moment) would be too much to expect, at least, judging by mathematical laws governing probability. Nonetheless, Rumsfeld flatly refused to go to any alternative command center. He preferred to remain in the U.S. capital – apparently, not fearing the prospect of being hammered into the ground by the very next expected thermonuclear strike (i.e. by the presumable 10 megaton ground burst with a hypocenter somewhere near the geometrical center of the Pentagon).

What does this decision of Rumsfeld mean for the discerning reader?

I think the sensible answer is this: Mr. Rumsfeld did not believe that he was in any danger of the thermonuclear incineration simply because he, being the part of the 9/11 project, knew that the affair with the missile that hit the Pentagon was not genuine. The nuclear missile attack was intended to scare the rest of the U.S. officials, but not Mr. Rumsfeld. Logic is a stubborn thing, as you know.

Please, pay special attention to the scoffing pretext used by Mr. Rumsfeld for his refusal to be shifted to the alternative command post: "unwilling to be out of touch during the time it would take to relocate me to the safe site". How do you like it? Considering that at the most important first moment following the warning of the nuclear attack, Rumsfeld preferred to be out of touch despite being right inside the Pentagon? This ridicule betrays Rumsfeld in the most obvious manner: only high-ranking Freemasons are capable of displaying that type of behavior, moreover, without any fear of being punished.

Thirdly, we can see from the above quotation that the perception of "Rumsfeld's role on 9/11 has always been a mystery" is not only peculiar to us, the Barbarians. Even the lowly Plebeians perceive Rumsfeld's role in the 9/11 affair as nothing less than a "mystery". However, his true role no longer appears so "mysterious" when we apply common sense to analyzing Rumsfeld's behavior and his possible motives.

The above article continues, quoting Rumsfeld's account of events (please, try not to take close to your heart the matter of shot-down planes, when reading it, because it is not the point of our interest here; we are primarily interested in the structure of the chain of command and in how Rumsfeld managed to withdraw himself from this chain):

"..Shortly afterwards, he writes, "the Vice President reached me by phone." Cheney reportedly told Rumsfeld, "There's been at least three instances here where we've had reports of aircraft approaching Washington... A couple were confirmed hijacked. And pursuant to the President's instructions I gave authorization for them to be taken out."

In fact, there is considerable doubt as to when Cheney actually received "the President's instructions," and considerable evidence that he acted on his own volition, as even the timid 9/11 Commission report makes clear. But in any case, his orders clearly violated the military chain of command – something Rumsfeld failed to point out, according to his own account of the subsequent conversation.

"Yes, I understand," I replied. "Who did you give that direction to?"

"It was passed from here through the [operations] center at the White House," Cheney answered.

"Has that directive been transmitted to the aircraft?"

"Yes, it has," Cheney replied.

"So we've got a couple of aircraft up there that have those instructions at this present time?" I asked.

"That is correct," Cheney answered. Then he added, "[I]t's my understanding they've already taken a couple of aircraft out."

"We can't confirm that," I told him. We had not received word that any US military pilots had even contemplated engaging and firing on a hijacked aircraft.

"We're told that one aircraft is down," I added, "but we do not have a pilot report..."

As it turned out the only other aircraft that crashed had not been shot down [sic]. It was United Airlines Flight 93, a hijacked plane that went down in a field near Shankville, Pennsylvania.

This from the man directly charged under the law with putting into action the orders from the Commander-in-Chief. The Vice President is nowhere listed in the chain of command and has no authority to act. In the above passage, Rumsfeld himself describes how he essentially was a bystander that morning, with little or no input in the crisis. Our multi-billion-dollar Defense Department and its chief were unprepared, incompetent, and ignored as Cheney seized the reins and ran the country..."

From the above description, it is clear, that Vice President Dick Cheney indeed had no duty to order any actions during the 9/11 crisis and he indeed was listed nowhere in the official chain of command. It was Donald Rumsfeld who was required by law to make all important decisions. However, the latter intentionally played fool and thus "essentially became a bystander" with "little or no input". Though, as you may expect now, after analyzing his actions, his real input into the 9/11 affair was in its planning and in its preparation. The Freemasons, of course, must have appointed one of their guys to such an important position as the U.S. Secretary of Defense on the eve of 9/11, because without having someone of their own at the top of the U.S. military structure, the so-called “good guys” would never be able to schedule and to adjust various military plans to so timely correspond with the “H-hour” of the 9/11 execution.

By the way – do you know when Rumsfeld was actually appointed to his position? And how old he was at that moment? You will be surprised, indeed, if you learn it. Let us read the Wikipedia article on Donald Rumsfeld. I am quoting³³¹ (just read all this with your eyes OPEN):

“..Donald Henry Rumsfeld (born July 9, 1932) is an American politician and businessman. Rumsfeld served as the 13th Secretary of Defense from 1975 to 1977 under President Gerald Ford, and as the 21st Secretary of Defense from 2001 to 2006 under President George W. Bush. He is both the youngest and the oldest person to have served as Secretary of Defense. Additionally, Rumsfeld was a four-term U.S. Congressman from Illinois (1962–1969), Director of the Office of Economic Opportunity (1969–1970), Counsellor to the President (1969–1973), the United States Permanent Representative to NATO (1973–1974), and White House Chief of Staff (1974–1975).

Born in Illinois, Rumsfeld attended Princeton University, graduating in 1954 with a degree in political science. After serving in the Navy for three years, he mounted a campaign for Congress in Illinois' 13th Congressional District, winning in 1962 at the age of 30. He was a leading co-sponsor of the Freedom of Information Act. Rumsfeld was reluctantly appointed by President Richard Nixon to head the Office of Economic Opportunity in 1969; appointed Counselor by Nixon and entitled to Cabinet-level status, he would also head up the Economic Stabilization Program before being appointed Ambassador to NATO. Called back to Washington in August 1974, Rumsfeld was appointed Chief of Staff by President Ford, and soon successfully urged Ford to veto an expansion of the Freedom of Information Act, though the veto was easily overridden. He recruited a young one-time staffer of his, former Congressman Dick Cheney, to succeed him when Ford nominated Rumsfeld Secretary of Defense in 1975.

When Ford lost the 1976 election, Rumsfeld returned to private business life, and was named president of G. D. Searle & Company, a noted pharmaceutical company, during which time he led the legalization of Aspartame³³². He was later named CEO of General Instrument from 1990 to 1993, and chairman of Gilead Sciences from 1997 to 2001.

*Rumsfeld was recommended for the position of Defense Secretary by incoming Vice President Dick Cheney in late 2000, and was appointed in January 2001 by President George W. Bush. His tenure has been noted to be one of the most pivotal in recent history; as one of the key individuals responsible for the restructuring of the military in the new 21st century, Rumsfeld was crucial in planning the United States' response to the September 11, 2001 attacks, which included two wars (one in Afghanistan and one in Iraq). Highly popular with the media for his outspokenness and candor, he gradually lost political support as the wars continued and resigned in late 2006. He has since published his autobiography Known and Unknown: A Memoir...”*

From the brief Wikipedia description above you can perceive that Rumsfeld had a very typical career of an energetic Freemasonic agent pushed by the sect into various commanding positions within the U.S. Government, as well as into those in the general business (most importantly in the pharmaceutical one). The sect pushed him into such positions starting from his very young age, despite the notable reluctance of contemporary presidents to appoint him. This is a very typical career for the would be outstanding Freemason – the Freemasons in general believe that the life is quite short and therefore if someone is indeed promising, it is just the loss of precious time to wait when he grew old in order to fit some important position. That is why they often push into such positions very young adepts of the sect. It is not surprising therefore, that Rumsfeld was the youngest 13th Secretary of Defense from 1975 to 1977, despite being only 43 years old at the time of appointment.

What is surprising, however, is that he was appointed to the same position once again – when he was too old for that. He was appointed [shortly before the 9/11 events] when he was 69 years old! Do you think that the United States at that moment faced a certain “lack of human resources crisis”, so that there were no good candidates for the position of its Defense Secretary available? You are badly mistaken if you think so. Rumsfeld was pushed into this office despite his old age shortly before 9/11 events, merely because the sect needed someone of their own, experienced and highly trusted members to occupy this important position. Therefore Rumsfeld instructed his younger protégé (all important Freemasonic figures have some promising younger protégés as a matter of “must”) Dick Cheney “to recommend” him to the then incoming U.S. President G. W. Bush. In this way, though, the Freemasons almost suffered a fiasco – when the team of Cheney - Bush Jr. lost the actual elections, thus endangering the entire 9/11 project. Thus, the Freemasonic sect was obliged to venture into an open space and to perform a bit of a scandalous thing – “fixing an error” during the 2000 presidential elections³³³. Eventually, the sect got what it needed to successfully execute the 9/11 project: a figure such as George W. Bush as the U.S. President, and a highly trusted operative of their own – Donald Rumsfeld – as his second-in-command when it comes to the military affairs.

It is pretty obvious that the Freemasons must have some of their members at such a position as the one occupied by Donald Rumsfeld as a matter of “must” – at least, for the reason of “adjusting the schedules of the U.S. military to the 9/11 project”, as mentioned above. However, I have a second thought. There must have been an additional reason for the Freemasonic sect to have one of their trusted guys at the position of the head of the U.S. military. I will try to explain what I suspect. Let us consider my explanations below as a little lyrical digression from the main topic – the true role of Mr. Rumsfeld in the 9/11 affair.

The point is that the 9/11 project was designed to create an impression that the United States came under a nuclear attack; and this attack was represented not by those 1 kiloton mini-nukes that could only be brought in by hand or at the worst case – delivered by a car. It was represented by half-megaton thermonuclear warheads flying at supersonic speed and being able to penetrate the U.S. air defense as if the latter was non-existent.

Considering the sheer enormity of the planned attack by the Russian nuclear-tipped missile against the U.S. capital, the Freemasons must have anticipated the worst possible scenario. They had to presume that such an attack might cause an inappropriate response by certain U.S. officials tasked with conducting a retaliatory nuclear strike against Russia. To cause the scared U.S. military officials to launch the entire U.S. nuclear arsenal towards Russia (and thus – to cause Russia to reciprocate) was apparently not what the so-called “good guys” wanted to get from the 9/11 project’s execution. I hope you agree with my logic. The matter was simply too serious to allow any uncontrollable person to occupy such a position as the one occupied by Donald Rumsfeld. I will explain further what I mean.

To begin with, I have to provide a rather lengthy (yet, I hope still interesting enough) explanation intended to challenge a certain widespread notion. The notion that I am going to disprove is this: many people (I would even say nearly all people) mistakenly believe that it is allegedly impossible to launch a nuclear strike (even a retaliatory nuclear strike) unless authorized to do so by the President (either the Russian or the American one). It is because, in the popular opinion, such a nuclear strike requires the knowledge of certain “codes” that are supposedly kept by the corresponding President in his special briefcase and are available supposedly “nowhere else”.

This notion is completely wrong. In reality, the infamous “presidential briefcase” (otherwise known as the “nuclear football”, the “atomic football”, the “president's emergency satchel”, “the button”, “the black box”, or just “the football”³³⁴) is a merely symbolic thing – akin to an obligatory sword still carried by today’s monarchs.

Do you know, by the way, why a modern king or a prince still carries his damn heavy and otherwise inconvenient sword while some well-trained folks from his entourage are obviously armed with automatic pistols that are more than enough to protect their majesties? He carries his sword because of its symbolism. The king and the prince are still technically “free humans”; they are the survivors of the good old feudal times where true Christians and true Muslims were free, while unbelievers were slaves³³⁵. The monarchs are not a part of the modern secular capitalist system where everyone is technically a slave of police and requires the latter's permission to possess and to carry any weapon. In fact, the monarchs' existence and their status are contradictory to the modern structure of the society, where all slaves are constitutionally equal to each other. The few remaining kings and princes are still "sovereigns", a/k/a "free", a/k/a "direct slaves of God"; they are by no means "slaves of the police" like the rest of the bipeds. Therefore, as the technically free humans, those kings and princes are obliged to carry a weapon that symbolizes that they are indeed free. The sword is indeed heavy and inconvenient, and, moreover, totally useless in a sense of a weapon, but they must carry it, still. Perhaps, the majority of modern people have never even thought over the abovementioned technicality, though, it is apparently worth contemplating. The king does not need his sword in reality. It is merely a symbol of his personal sovereignty that in an old-fashioned, "politically incorrect" language of the Barbarians means personal freedom ("sovereignty" was a 100% synonym of "freedom", at least, before the introduction of the Orwellian "Newspeak")³³⁶.

³³³ http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/United_States_presidential_election,_2000

Let us consider the narration above as a little lyrical digression, and return to the "presidential briefcase". The president does not need his "briefcase" in reality and neither does his state need it. It is merely a symbol – akin to that heavy and inconvenient sword of the king in the 21st century. The "presidential briefcase" carried around by the President's entourage, in full view of the crowd, does nothing, but symbolize that the man in the center of the entourage is indeed a President of a country capable of destroying the Earth by pressing the button. Contrary to public opinion, the said "briefcase" has no other function (though, technically, of course, it works – but do not forget that the modern king's sword most probably is kept sharpened and he too could also use his symbolical weapon to thrust it into someone).

Do you not believe that the "presidential briefcase" has no other function than the symbolical one? Well. I will illustrate to you that the "briefcase" with the supposed "exclusive launch codes" could not be used in the situation of a real nuclear attack as the "only means of the retaliatory nuclear strike".

You have already read the chapter that contained the Russian instruction on the action during the atomic alert. So, you have at least some clue in regard to the seriousness of such a situation and you could imagine the related time-frames (that are measured in single minutes and in tens of seconds). Let us imagine that a massive nuclear strike is planned by the Russian side with a view to incapacitate the United States. How could it be conducted? There are could be many different ways, of course, but let us imagine the most effective ones.

The following is merely a fiction created by me – I am not evil. Some others are beyond evil.

If I were to plan such a strike, I would, probably, do this: I would position as many as possible submarines armed with ballistic missiles close to the U.S. territorial waters. In addition, I would deploy several submarines armed with "Granit"-type supersonic nuclear-tipped missiles towards the U.S. aircraft-carrier battle groups everywhere around the world. Plus, a few spare submarines I would deploy against all U.S.

³³⁵ The latest example of classic implementation of the feudal freedom, accorded by the Holy Scripture, could be seen from the history of the United States – a relatively young country that was founded by religious pilgrims who escaped the ungodly capitalism in Europe. Once in the New World, the Christians began to regard themselves as "free humans", while considering the unbelievers – native Indians and slaves bought in Africa – as "unhumans". Of course, all those free Christians were armed and they did not need any "permission" from any so-called "police" to possess and to carry their weapons. American citizens were deprived of their unconditional rights to possess and to carry weapons without any license only after they were equalized to their former slave status.

³³⁶ Modern "politically correct" English dictionaries describe "sovereignty" as something like "1. Supreme power or authority. 2. The authority of a state to govern itself or another state." However, it is not the true definition of this word, course. "Sovereignty" means "freedom", while "sovereign" means "a free person", or "the slave of God, not the slave of any earthly authority". The title "Sovereign" (that was accorded to monarchs during the times of the so-called "Reformation" and of the so-called "Age of Enlightenment") supposed to signify that only the monarch was free, being directly subordinated to God, while the rest of inhabitants of his country were his subjects, rather than God's. By contrast, all citizens of medieval Christian countries (i.e. in the pre-Reformation era), as well as all citizens of the United States in the antebellum period were technically "sovereigns". Ironically, today, "sovereigns" are only Pashtuns from the so-called "lawless" Tribal Area of Pakistan – who still did not join the so-called "United Nations Organization" (that might impose on other "sovereigns" so-called "international laws") and who still do not need any permission from any cop to carry their unlicensed weapons and to drive their unlicensed vehicles.

military bases overseas. If any spare submarines armed with the “Granit”-type missiles would remain at my disposal, I would send them to take positions as close as possible to the U.S. territorial waters as well, from both coasts of North America. If I had any chance to do so, I would additionally send several of those outdated mammoth 25-megaton warheads (which could not be lifted by a ballistic missile anyway; the biggest missile could only carry a maximum of 10-megaton warhead), in disguise of something else, in marine containers to a few of the most important ports on both U.S. coasts. Of course, I would secretly prepare all inter-continental ballistic missiles that are to be launched from the Russian continental territory. Additionally, I would order to load as many as possible air-launched cruise missiles with thermonuclear warheads into strategic bombers and would schedule some “military exercise” for those bombers. This “military exercise” would be advertised, so their massive departure would not be a signal alerting the adversary. Perhaps, if I knew for sure that the “H-hour” would not be postponed in any case, I would additionally send a couple of 25-megaton bombs loaded into regular passenger planes to at least the U.S. capital, and, if the aircraft schedule allows – to a couple of more important U.S. cities. I am “evil”, do not forget it; and I am planning to wipe the United States off the map in this case, so what are those passenger planes to me? If I have any chance to do so in advance, I would also order to deliver several disassembled thermonuclear charges in disguise of diplomatic mail into the Russian Embassy and into Russian consulates everywhere in America and to assemble the actual nukes (of something like a half-megaton or even a couple of megaton yields) in diplomatic premises and to set them into the “stand-by mode” by some highly-trusted agents.

At the “H-hour”, I will just press the buttons. Without any advance warning of the upcoming missile attack, the most important U.S. cities, the U.S. capital city inclusive, will be destroyed by a few multi-megaton thermonuclear explosions. The entire U.S. leadership will be wiped out at once. Speaking in the nuclear jargon, it will be “gone in milliseconds”. In only a couple of minutes, a few thermonuclear warheads launched from submarines will explode somewhere in the stratosphere above the United States, creating an enormous EMP that would at once render useless all electronic and electrical equipment in the entire U.S. territory. In a couple of more minutes, multiple thermonuclear warheads of roughly half-megaton yields each, delivered by ballistic missiles launched from submarines 5-6 minutes before that, will begin to arrive to their targets – destroying various command posts, U.S. ballistic missiles’ positions, airports’ runways, airbases, naval bases, etc. In only a few more minutes, intercontinental ballistic missiles launched from the Russian territory 15-16 minutes ago will begin to arrive to their targets as well. Some of these will deliver multiple half-megaton thermonuclear warheads designed to incinerate various U.S. cities by airbursts. Some others will deliver larger single warheads – up to 10 megaton each; perhaps, I would design some of these for ground bursts – trying to destroy some deep underground installations. Not to lose any opportunity, I will arrange also that all nuclear-tipped torpedoes of submarines will be launched towards the remaining U.S. ports and navy installations; so I will try to destroy as many of them as I could. In the mean time, the rest of the nuclear warheads launched as supersonic cruise missiles, against the U.S. battle-groups and against U.S. military bases overseas, would do their part of the job. In another few minutes, the strategic bombers would reach their “firing line” and would launch their nuclear-tipped cruise missiles towards the remaining targets. Finally, after being fully satisfied that the U.S. defense capabilities are destroyed, I will order the remaining 25-megaton aviation bombs to be simply dropped from the bombers on the most heavily protected underground installations that managed to survive the previous strikes.

Of course, the scenario offered above is rather simplistic and might appear to some a bit fantastical and not entirely “professional”, but I guess it is, nonetheless, feasible. At least, those responsible military officials whose duties are to draw the contingency plans and to design retaliatory nuclear strikes must count on various possible scenarios, the one described above inclusive.

Now, please, answer honestly to this question: is there any chance that the U.S. President would reach to his “nuclear football” in order to transmit the actual commands and corresponding codes to the concerned U.S. military installations tasked with conducting a retaliatory nuclear strike? Of course, not. The U.S. President would simply disappear together with his luggage. Even if I (as a potential Russian aggressor) would not be able to arrange the “momentary” nuclear explosions (such as by the nukes delivered in disguise) and would resort to the warheads delivered by the missiles only, still, the chances that the U.S. President having enough time to toy with his “nuclear football” are very slim.

Let us imagine, that the U.S. President is going from his office to his residence at this moment (and I might choose this particular moment for my H-hour).

Situation 1. The U.S. President is in his presidential limousine (or in his helicopter) being delivered from his office to his home; the “briefcase” is, of course, with him – carried by one of those folks who always escort the President. While the presidential motorcade is somewhere in the middle of the road (or the helicopter somewhere in the air) the presidential bodyguards receive the signal of the atomic alert. The latter was rung because NORAD detected launches of several ballistic missiles from submarines not so far from the U.S. territory. What they would do? Apparently, they have some contingency plans drawn in advance for such a situation. Their plans are apparently designed with the primary intention to save the presidential persona. So, the bodyguards will either try to deliver the President into the nearest anti-atomic bunker (depending on the actual situation), or will try to divert his helicopter/airplane to the safest possible destination – as far away as possible from any potential target of the Russian missile strike. I think it is logical to presume so. Add here that in no later than 2 minutes since NORAD has first noticed the first ballistic missiles launches (if it notices it at all), a few of them would explode in the stratosphere with a view of creating the enormous EMP – and would destroy all electrical and electronic equipment in the United States. So, the chances are that the presidential motorcade will suddenly stand still, because the car engines will stop working, while his helicopter might, at best case, descend in an “auto rotating” mode because its engine will suddenly stop functioning as well. In any case, the President himself will be shit-scared at least for the first few minutes, the presidential entourage will be in a complete mess-up, and no one in this situation will even remember about that “presidential briefcase” before it is too late. Because by the time they will recollect that they had to use “the button”, their location will be incinerated by one of the very first thermonuclear explosions, targeting the U.S. leadership, in an order of priority.

Let us now imagine a more or less “conventional” situation:

Situation 2. The U.S. President is in his Oval Office; the “briefcase” is, of course, with him – somewhere in the adjacent room. While the President enjoys his morning coffee (or enjoys something else from some female intern, as a variety), the presidential bodyguards receive the signal of the atomic alert. What do they do? Luckily, in this case we no longer need to guess, because we know it for sure (from the example of what happened with Dick Cheney at 9.32 AM on September the 11th). They would burst into the Oval Office and without even talking to the President, would grab him by his belt, causing him the feeling of “levitation”, and propel him towards the underground anti-atomic bunker. The poor chap who is sitting in the adjacent room with the president's “emergency satchel”, at the best case, would grab his valuable luggage and rush after the presidential bodyguards towards the anti-atomic bunker. At the worst case – they would forget to inform him of the actual atomic alert whatsoever. But in any case, the moment when all these folks will remember about the “nuclear football”, will not occur until the next 5-7 minutes; at least, not earlier, when they will run into the bunker, shut down its doors, and start breathing normally. Unfortunately, by the time they recollect “the button”, the city of Washington will apparently cease to exist, being reduced to plasmatic conditions by some 10 megaton ground burst – designed not to only incinerate the U.S. capital, but also to destroy its underground structures. If the hypocenter of that ground burst will be somewhere around the Pentagon's “Ground Zero” cafeteria, then the presidential bunker under the White House will probably survive (though, I am not 100% certain, still, considering that the two buildings are not that far from each other). However, if the hypocenter will be the White House itself, I don't think that the presidential bunker has any chance to survive.

Add here that Russia has so many nuclear warheads, that those who might plan such a strike would not feel so stingy as to allocate only one warhead for the Capital City of the main adversary. They may as well allocate 3-4 or even 5 warheads that could strike different parts of the city of Washington either simultaneously or in quick succession – making sure that all underground structures under the U.S. capital are destroyed completely.

This supposes to mean that if the aggressor manages to strike first, the United States would not be able to retaliate with the nuclear strike, because the first strike will incapacitate the U.S. President, effectively rendering useless his “exclusive” luggage. Doesn't it?

Do you realize, at last, that the widespread notion about the alleged “exclusivity” of the President and the alleged “necessity” of his “briefcase” in regard to the retaliatory nuclear strike is a great misconception?

It shall be clear to any logical person, that the retaliatory nuclear strike could be conducted on Presidential orders, on some other high-ranking officials' orders, on some duty commander's orders, and even without any orders whatsoever. There is a special mechanism and special instructions, governing the issue. If a commander of a nuclear submarine (designed primarily for the reasons of the retaliatory nuclear strike, in case you don't know it) learns that his country no longer exists and no order could be therefore expected from anywhere, he is entitled to carry out the retaliatory nuclear strike on his own. Therefore, such a commander of the nuclear submarine does not need any “codes” from anywhere, except from his personal safe. However, I am not quite sure in this regard about commanders of stationary nuclear missile installations. I do not think that they are capable of carrying out the retaliatory nuclear strike entirely at their own discretion. These might need to get some launch codes from their superiors, still.

Since I hope I have successfully disproved the notion about the alleged “necessity” of the “presidential briefcase”, let us come back to our subject of interest – the U.S. Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld.

The point of my suspicion is that when Rumsfeld was hiding from his subordinates on the Pentagon’s lawn during the confirmed warning of the nuclear attack against the U.S. capital, he did it for some special reasons. These reasons had apparently nothing to do with the shoot-down passenger planes orders, and, almost certainly, they had nothing to do with Rumsfeld’s reluctance to participate in the painful decision-making in regard to the Twin Towers’ demolition. The true reasons were, probably, more serious than just these two. I think Rumsfeld was the second person, besides the actual U.S. President, who was entitled to keep and to issue those launch codes to the stationary ICBMs for the reason of the retaliatory nuclear strike. Of course, judging by logic, there must have been a third such person as well – most probably, a certain Duty Shift Commander, sitting in some deep underground bunker all the time, but I presume that Rumsfeld and other so-called “good guys” took good care of that “third person” as well.

I could be mistaken, of course, by presuming so, but I think that I am not. In any case, it is logical to presume that the Freemasons (who value their precious lives at the highest possible value) could not afford any nuclear strikes exchange between the United States and Russia. Therefore, they must do all they could to prevent such a development. On the other hand, judging by the seriousness of the situation in the case of the confirmed warning of the nuclear attack, it shall be presumed that the retaliatory nuclear strike must be carried out at once, quickly, and in an almost “automated” manner. The United States’ military will have only 4-5 minutes at its disposal (since it notices the incoming Russian missiles) to be able to prepare the retaliatory nuclear strike. You have to understand that the America’s own ISBNs must be on their way towards Russia by the time the Russian warheads would begin falling from space onto their positions (otherwise, these missiles might be destroyed before they could be used). It means that the U.S. military officials will have only a few minutes to transmit the corresponding Emergency Action Messages (EAMs), followed by the necessary codes, to launch control centers. After that it would be too late. The United States would be destroyed together with its stationary missiles’ positions and the only limited retaliatory nuclear strikes could be carried out by the submarines’ commanders, acting out of their own sense of duty.

Therefore, the Freemasons must have arranged the actual 9/11 setup in such a manner, that those few U.S. officials who were holding the necessary launch codes, would be blocked, in one way or another, from carrying out their duties in accordance with the prescribed procedures. These officials must have been blocked for a few minutes following the missile attack on the Pentagon – at least, till the moment when it would be decided that the attack was carried out only by a single, possibly “stray” missile that luckily failed to detonate and there are no other missiles in the air. I hope the reader agrees with this logic.

This suggestion explains, by the way, why the 9/11 planners arranged the U.S. President to be on a trip to Florida during that morning. The U.S. President was the first person who is supposed to authorize (and to technically enable) the retaliatory nuclear strike. By sending him away, moreover, having him sitting with children in a class-room, the so-called “good guys” created a reasonable delay with conveying to the President the notice of the upcoming nuclear attack in the first instance. There was an additional delay with the President’s response, of course, in such a peculiar situation. Therefore, by the time G. W. Bush supposed to reach to his “nuclear football” in order to conduct the retaliatory nuclear strike, the situation in the Pentagon had somehow “normalized” and the necessity of the strike against Russia could have been re-considered on a cool head. Moreover, if you carefully review available accounts of 9/11 events, you will surely notice that things were arranged in such a manner, that the U.S. President in Florida was held nearly “incommunicado”; at least, during the most important moment. He was using a petty cellular phone most of the time when he needed to call others. This suggests that those who arranged his trip to Florida that morning did not only create the “reasonable delay” described above; the so-called “good guys” went a bit farther than that – by actually cutting the U.S. President from any communication whatsoever.

When it comes to the “third person” (next after the U.S. President and his second-in-command – the Defense Secretary) who could act in the same capacity, I have no clue how the Freemasons managed to render him harmless. I was not in his underground bunker, after all. However, it shall be presumed that he was incapacitated somehow. Maybe the Freemasons arranged the schedule of duty shifts in a way that their own guy would be on duty that morning. Maybe they neutralized that duty official in some other way (that could have been anything right up to the most primitive solutions – such as drugging him or locking him away in a toilet). But surely they must have taken good care of him. To think otherwise would be to sin against logic.

And when it comes to the “second person” – our Donald Rumsfeld, you already know what happened. He simply ran away and was hiding on the Pentagon lawn, pretending to “observe damage” and “helping the injured” during the time he was supposed to conduct the retaliatory nuclear strike against Russia. He only came back to the Pentagon building when the scare of the nuclear strike subsided and the retaliatory strike was postponed. I think this is pretty self-evident.

Oh, we almost forgot to finish the article by James Ridgeway we were reading. Here is its continuation:

“...Later, before the 9/11 commission, Rumsfeld provided a rather astonishing explanation for his behavior:

The Department of Defense...did not have responsibility for the borders. It did not have responsibility for the airports...And the fact that I might not have known something ought not to be considered unusual. Our task was to be oriented out of this country...and to defend against attacks from abroad. And a civilian aircraft was a law enforcement matter to be handled by law enforcement authorities and aviation authorities. And that is the way our government was organized and arranged. So those questions you’re posing are good ones. And they are valid and they ought to be asked. But they ought to be asked of people who had the statutory responsibility for those things.

In his book, Rumsfeld laments the fact he did not resign after Abu Ghraib.

In truth, he should have resigned or been fired for failing to protect the nation in the face of the worst attack since Pearl Harbor...”

Well. I guess we could discard the matter of shooting down the civilian aircraft, since it is not the point of our interest here; moreover, it was not the responsibility of Rumsfeld as the Secretary of Defense, as he correctly pointed it out. But when it comes to the very last sentence, I can not agree with its author, because he does not actually understand what was the actual guilt of Donald Rumsfeld, who should have not resigned on account of what he did, and not even “been fired”, but been fired at by the firing squad.

Let us review a few more published accounts on Rumsfeld’s behavior during that fateful morning of 9/11.

Here is an interesting compilation that goes by the name “Point MC-5: Secretary of Defense Rumsfeld’s Behavior Between 9:00 and 10:00 AM”, published on the “Consensus 9/11” web site³³⁷.

Unfortunately, this one is full of contradictory statements by various U.S. officials, so I do not even want to spend precious time cutting through all of them and confusing the reader. I will only make general conclusions. The main point of all those contradictions is that the then national counter-terrorism coordinator, Richard Clarke, who apparently made that painful decision to demolish the Twin Towers, is not happy with the fact that he is going to bear the full responsibility for his decision, alone. Therefore Clarke tries hard now to present things in such a manner that it would appear that Rumsfeld allegedly was engaged in a video-conference with him immediately after the second aluminum plane hit the South WTC Tower and allegedly was on the video conference room right up to the time the Pentagon was hit, and even after that. In the same time, the 9/11 Commission tries to “defend” Rumsfeld (if establishing the fact of his dereliction of duty could be called “defense”) by establishing that he was indeed on the Pentagon’s lawn, helping the injured and observing damage, and did not join the NMCC until ~10.30 AM.

“Secretary Rumsfeld was not in the NMCC [National Military Command Center] when the shutdown order was first conveyed. He went from the parking lot to his office, where he spoke to the President [shortly after 10:00], then to the Executive Support Center, where he participated in the White House

video teleconference. He moved to the NMCC shortly before 10:30, in order to join Vice Chairman Myers.³³⁸

Apparently, some events described by Clarke have indeed taken place in reality; however, they took place at a different time than claimed in his book. Nevertheless, some of his claims are worth quoting:

“...Reporting about his video conference, which evidently began at roughly 9:10,³³⁹ Clarke wrote: “As I entered the Video Center, . . . I could see people rushing into studios around the city: Donald Rumsfeld at Defense and George Tenet at CIA.”³⁴⁰ So, whereas Rumsfeld and the Commission say that Rumsfeld went from his breakfast meeting to his office for a CIA briefing, where he remained until the Pentagon attack, Clarke said that, shortly after the second WTC attack, Rumsfeld went to the Pentagon’s teleconferencing studio.

Clarke indicated, moreover, that Rumsfeld continued to participate in the videoconference: After the Pentagon attack, Clarke could “still see Rumsfeld on the screen.”³⁴¹ A little later, Clarke wrote, “smoke was getting into the Pentagon secure teleconferencing studio,” and “Franklin Miller urged him [Rumsfeld] to helicopter to DOD’s alternate site,” but Rumsfeld replied: “I am too goddam old to go to an alternate site.” So “Rumsfeld moved to another studio in the Pentagon.”³⁴² ...”

However, here is the contradicting evidence, established by the 9/11 Commission:

“...Rumsfeld in particular, as the summary shows, was not involved in Clarke’s video conference until a few minutes after 10:00. Moreover, Rumsfeld also could not have had anything to do with the crash of United 93, which occurred at 10:03, for two reasons:

Rumsfeld, as the summary shows, did not enter the NMCC until 10:30.

“By the time the military learned about [United 93’s hijacking], it had crashed.”³⁴³ ...”

Of course, we are not much interested in how these folks will divide responsibility for shooting down Flight 93, which always seems to be the main point in all these post-9/11 quarrels. We are interested in facts:

1) Rumsfeld, who was the second-in-command, did not enter the NMCC until 10:30, despite the fact that his country was in the state of a nuclear war starting from 09:32.

2) Clarke personally heard and seen on the video that when Rumsfeld, as being the second-in-command in a country of almost 400 million people was urged to move to the war-time command post because his country was in the state of the nuclear war, he answered: “I am too goddam old to go to an alternate site.”

Please, do not do any mistake when analyzing the above: it is not like an old man has politely refused a certain convenience offered to him for his own safety. It is like a top military commander refused to go into his war-time command post, prescribed by contingency plans, thus deserting his commanding duties; moreover, doing so during the moment of the confirmed nuclear attack against his country.

I can’t abstain from mentioning that Rumsfeld’s behavior during 9/11 was strangely reminiscent of the behavior of those freemasonic actors who performed during the Chernobyl production in 1986. What Rumsfeld did during the last minutes remaining before the atomic alert and of the nuclear missile strike is reminiscent of the behavior of Anatoly Diatlov during the last minutes before the explosion under the 4th reactor on the Chernobyl nuclear power plant; however, Rumsfeld’s performance in the immediate aftermath of the Pentagon's strike is strangely reminiscent of the performance of the two main Chernobyl charlatans – Legasov and Pikalov. Neither of those two were personally afraid of any "radiation", while at the same time scaring the entire world by this very "radiation". Likewise, Rumsfeld was personally not afraid of any nuclear strike at all, and at the same time doing all his best to scare simpletons around him with the alleged "danger" of the so-called "terror" allegedly armed with missiles, nuclear, chemical and biological weapons.

In this respect, I can't resist quoting one more article dealing with the same issue: "Signs Supplement - A Scary Tale for Halloween"³⁴⁴. I especially loved its author's sense of humor as well as his sense of reality. Unlike the majority of gullible plebs, who seem to swallow the impudent freemasonic "prophesies" by "prophet" Rumsfeld, this author seems to duly appreciate them:

"...Rumsfeld foresaw how such an attack would "galvanize the nation and cause the Atlantean Government to act." It seems he then proceeded to organize said "disabling attack."

Rumsfeld returned to the Pentagon as Secretary of Defense under George the Second. He formed what he referred to as "The Cabal", made up of his cronies from the Ford years. As happened then, two teams were set up to produce evidence for an invasion of Iraq, one of CIA experts, the other of the same group who had formed Team B under Ford. And guess what? The same thing happened again. The Cabal produced a long list of lies and manipulations in order to convince the Atlantean public that Saddam Hussein was 1) involved in 9/11, 2) was an immediate threat to the security of Atlantis, 3) was the possessor of a large cache of Weapons of Mass Destruction.

The morning of September 11, 2001, Rumsfeld was in his Pentagon office discussing the best ways of making a profit on killing people. Just minutes prior to the first plane hitting the first tower of the WTC, he remarked:

Inside, Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld had some people in to talk about missile defense and the risk that terrorism seen in the past would happen again. "Let me tell ya," he said, "I've been around the block a few times. There will be another event." Two minutes later, a plane smashed into the first World Trade Center tower and proved him right. »³⁴⁵

Not bad. Give the guy an A for his intelligence. Continuing on, he made the following prediction:

"If we remain vulnerable to missile attack, a terrorist group or rogue state that demonstrates the capacity to strike the U.S. or its allies from long range could have the power to hold our entire country hostage to nuclear or other blackmail," he said. "And let me tell you, I've been around the block a few times. There will be another event." He repeated it for emphasis : "There will be another event." Within minutes of that utterance, Rumsfeld's words proved tragically prophetic."³⁴⁶

Two for two! Way to go, Donald! This guy really knew something! But that's not all. The prophetic Mr. Rumsfeld continued with his predictions:

Donald Rumsfeld, the Secretary of Defence, was in his office on the eastern side of the building, in a meeting with Christopher Cox, the defence policy committee chairman of the House of Representatives. Mr Rumsfeld, recalls Mr Cox, watched the TV coverage from New York and said : "Believe me, this isn't over yet. There's going to be another attack, and it could be us."³⁴⁷

Give the man a cigar, Boy! If they only had intelligence this good prior to going into Iraq...

A month later, after the preparations for the invasion of Iraq were underway, Rumsfeld made the following comment in an interview:

Secretary Rumsfeld Interview with Parade Magazine, Friday, Oct. 12, 2001

They [find a lot] and any number of terrorist efforts have been dissuaded, deterred or stopped by good intelligence gathering and good preventive work. It is a truth that a terrorist can attack any time, any place, using any technique and it's physically impossible to defend at every time and every place against every conceivable technique. Here we're talking about plastic knives and using an American Airlines flight filled with our citizens, and the missile to damage this building and similar (inaudible) that damaged the World Trade Center. The only way to deal with this problem is by taking the battle to the terrorists, wherever they are, and dealing with them.³⁴⁸

Is this a Freudian slip? Rumsfeld admits that the Pentagon was hit by something other than a commercial jet.

How does this scary tale end? We don't know. Legend has it that Atlantis was involved in a great war with the "Athenians" who narrowly won. However, afterwards they were both subjected to a great cataclysm that wiped all traces of their great civilizations from their planet..."

Perhaps, some reader might ask this question: so, if it were proven that Donald Rumsfeld was indeed a Freemason, does it mean that his protégé – Dick Cheney is also a proven Freemason?

Well. It is not easy to answer this question precisely. I would not dare to state that Dick Cheney is a proven Freemason. It could be, of course, but I can not be certain about it. Judging by his [visible] personal qualities [though, he could actually play "stupid", "greedy", and "cowardly"; you can not discount this possibility], Cheney does not look like a member of the Freemasonic sect (the sect is actually the knights order; it is militant, soldier-like, not merchant-like, do not forget it). The fact that Cheney was a younger protégé of some elder Freemason does not constitute a proof of itself. You should know that people could join their sect in a few different ways. If someone was born into the Freemasonic family, he would most probably (yet, still not necessarily) follow in step with his father and join the sect when he would be something like over 20 years old (sometimes even later than that, yet, sometimes – earlier than that). Other suitable candidates could be spotted by the sect while they are still in a primary or in a secondary school and then – "indirectly guided" for many years by some specially appointed "mentor" from the sect. At some point, a potential candidate will be either put to some hard test, or put into a serious personal trouble – and then offered to join the sect (that in the second case would help him out of the trouble, of course). Once he joined the sect, he would be appointed a mentor (before that moment, his former Freemasonic mentor supposed to provide only an "indirect" guidance, but since the novice joined the sect officially, the guidance becomes "direct" – it will resemble a typical apprenticeship). However, often, Freemasons simply "cultivate" some useful folks – in the same manner potentially useful folks are "cultivated" by intelligence services.

Therefore, we can not know for sure if the relationship between Rumsfeld and Cheney was like an apprenticeship between an older and a younger adepts, or it was rather a so-called "friendship" between an adept and a profane who was merely "cultivated" for some future use in disguise of a "younger friend" and a "protégé".

When almost I finished this chapter, I remembered one more intriguing detail. When I was reviewing all 9/11 news footage several years ago, it noticed that one of the reporters permanently attached to the Pentagon mentioned he was warned in advance that something might happen to the Pentagon. I began to review those videos and I indeed found that piece. It was NBC reporter Jim Miklaszewski. At ~09.38 AM, the NBC interrupted its topic to let Miklaszewski describe the Pentagon's explosion (he did not even talk about any "plane", as you may expect). However, at the end of his brief report, Miklaszewski said the following intriguing phrase:

³⁴⁸ http://www.defenselink.mil/news/Nov2001/t11182001_t1012pm.html

“...but interestingly enough, one intelligence official here in the building said when he saw what appears to be a coordinated attack on the World Trade Center, his advise was to stay away from the outside of the building today, just in case...”

Do you believe in “coincidences”? Especially, after considering those “true” Rumsfeld’s “prophesies” and his corresponding behavior? Do not be so naïve, please.

That unnamed “one intelligence official” who was so kind to warn nice fellow Jim Miklaszewski (who was always in the Pentagon, being permanently attached to it) to stay away from the outside of the Pentagon building “today”, knew what he was warning him about. Obviously, Rumsfeld did not work alone there. He must have some other Freemasons working with him on the same project.

I uploaded this video here: <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=5BbNmID2sNM> and here: <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=KadRQrXiEKY>

Otherwise, you may try to search the Internet for the file named:
“911_NBC_09.38-09.40_AM_Jim_Miklaszewski_was_warned_in_advance_about_Pentagon_attack.mpg”

Unfortunately, we do not know the exact name of that “one intelligence official”; though, I sincerely hope that one day Jim Miklaszewski will reveal his name to some special tribunal, created to prosecute the 9/11 perpetrators...

Anyhow, now we managed to discover at least one confirmed 9/11 perpetrator whose guilt could be established for certain. His name is “Donald Henry Rumsfeld”.

Barbarian truth: the “Kursk” submarine. One year before the Pentagon attack.

Now, since I presume that some people would not believe that the 22 “Granit” missiles might have been really stolen from the sunken Russian “Kursk” submarine, I am obliged to prove that they were indeed stolen. And not just that they were only stolen, but also that each of these 22 “Granit” missiles featured not conventional, but exactly thermonuclear warheads. So that all together there were 22 warheads, which were all missing accordingly. Actually, to be exact, only the 21 of them are still missing today, because one has been already found in between the Pentagon Rings “C” and “B” – and now is in possession of the American FBI.

Since the Russian Government has put forward a double false claim – that:

1) There were allegedly no nuclear weapons whatsoever on the sunken “Kursk” submarine;

and

2) All the remaining “Granit” missiles (22 pieces in total) have been allegedly “recovered” one year later – when the Russian Government, at last, managed to organize an expedition to salvage the sunken “Kursk” submarine,

I am obliged to sub-divide my proof into two parts accordingly – in order to disprove both of the lies of the Russian Government separately.

1. Addressing the lie that the 22 “Granit” missiles on the sunken “Kursk” submarine might have been allegedly equipped with “conventional” warheads.

What is actually the “Granit” missile and what is its tactical earmarking?

The “Granit” missile was conceived in the late ‘60s and designed in the ‘70s as the most important part of a larger concept of a so-called “asymmetrical response” to a growing aggressiveness of the American imperialism (I am talking about the then Soviet doctrine, not about my personal feelings, so do not be offended by the wording, please, if you feel that the term “American imperialism” is inappropriate to use). The point is that the American imperialism at that time had attached a great importance to its carrier battle groups. It was a supposedly vain belief, which was, nonetheless, exaggerated after the American aircraft-carriers’ seemingly successful use in an aggression against Vietnam, Laos, and Cambodia.

What was the “asymmetrical response”?

According to their “defensive” and quite rational military doctrine, the Soviet leaders have never planned to attack any third-world countries. Actually, the 1979 Afghanistan adventure was just a tragic exception to a rule – it is widely believed that the USSR was driven into that unfortunate war by a clever set-up of the American CIA who had then a strategic objective to destroy the USSR itself; if fact, nowadays Zbigniew Brzezinski³⁴⁹ does not even hide this any more and boasts it openly.

Since the Soviet military doctrine did not contain any imperialist agenda, especially in regard to the third-world states, the Soviet strategists had never wanted to have any aircraft-carriers in the Soviet’s own navy. Ironically, even countries like Spain or Thailand could boast to have some aircraft-carriers in their Navies, but not the Soviets – they have never had even one. It was a matter of principle. The Soviet military experts sincerely believed that aircraft-carriers were weapons of imperialists only and they were intended to carry out strikes exclusively against poorly defended third-world countries. They held a belief that in no case would an aircraft-carrier enjoy an impunity if deployed against a seriously defended adversary.

In their opinions, in case of any war against a more or less serious country, any aircraft-carrier would not survive any longer than a couple of hours and that is why to build such expensive and huge “floating coffins” for the Soviet’s own navy was simply not an option. Still, while rejecting to have their own aircraft-carriers, the Soviet leaders had somehow to balance the situation with the existing American carrier battle groups – on whose existence was supposedly based the American maritime supremacy.

Out of this concern the idea of the “asymmetrical response” was born. The idea was that all existing American carrier battle groups, irrespective of how well such a group might be protected, would be quickly destroyed by massive pre-emptive nuclear strikes. The main weapon in such nuclear strikes should have been the very “Granit” missile. It was to be deployed on a special kind of submarine, which was presumably about 10 times cheaper than an approximate aircraft-carrier, yet alone capable of destroying, almost instantly, two entire carrier battle groups and yet, after re-loading the missiles, capable of destroying even more targets. One of these submarines was named “Kursk”.

The full official description of the “Kursk” submarine: a nuclear-powered cruise missile submarine K-141 “Kursk”, (project 949A, or “ANTEY-II”, NATO codename “OSCAR-II”). Designed by the Central Design Bureau “Rubin”, under the chief designer I. L. Baranov. The main role: a fighting submarine, deployable against enemy carrier battle groups, capable of delivering massive long range nuclear missile strikes against selective targets from a submerged position. Diving depth: 600 meters. Displacement: 14,700 t surfaced, 24,000 t submerged. Length 155 m, beam 18.2 m, draught 9.2 m. Speed: 32 knots submerged; 16 knots surfaced. Double-hull construction. Nuclear main propulsion: two OK-6506 reactors (2x190 MW). Crew: 107 men (including 48 commissioned officers). Weapons: 24 long-range supersonic cruise missiles P-700 (“Granit”); 4x650-mm and 2x533-mm torpedo tubes with 28 torpedoes or ASW rockets. Estimated cost: 226,000,000 Russian rubles. Commissioned: December 1994.

So, what is the “Granit”? This is a heavily armored (it resembles virtually a flying tank, which can not be damaged by any kind of conventional anti-missiles or artillery shells) long-range supersonic cruise missile with a unique guidance system and built-in advanced means to withstand various anti-aircraft weaponry, as well as to counteract various radars. The missile, moreover, could be fired from under water. One special submarine (such as the defunct “Kursk”) is able to carry 24 of these missiles, which could be all fired in two salvos, independently attacking two different carrier battle groups (in different directions) in two missile “swarms” – 12 missiles each, in a fully autonomous mode.

While attacking in such a “swarm”, the “Granit” missiles would demonstrate an exceptionally high level of virtual intellect. Their designers really did their best to embed the most advanced intellectual systems into these missiles.

Left: “Granites” being fired from under water.

Typically an attack of one of such missile swarms would look like this. Immediately after being fired, all the 12 flying missiles would establish a kind of protected radio-communication network with each other and would exchange various tactical information during their flight. One of these missiles would assume the role of a “leading” missile. However, nobody would know in advance which one exactly – only the missiles would “decide” among themselves who would be their “leader” and such a “decision” would be made only after the missiles had already been fired.

The majority of the “missile swarm” would fly in a very low altitude towards the carrier battle group – in order to increase as much as possible their invincibility from possible interception. However, the “leading” missile would fly at the highest altitude – which would allow it to observe much more of the operational theater, to reconnoiter it, and to relay information on the detected targets to the rest of the swarm. If such a “leading” missile for any reason would be intercepted, the remaining 11 missiles would immediately “appoint” a new “leading” missile from among themselves and this new “leader” would climb up to replace the intercepted “leader”. During such a communication, the missiles would gather all required information on the targeted battle group during approaching it and would automatically “distribute” between themselves their final roles. I.e. they will “assign” each of themselves to each of the intended targeted ship in a ship order, definitely observing targets priority in accordance with an actual value of ships in that ship order.

The highest priority would be, of course, given to the aircraft-carrier itself, which would have to be targeted first. None of the “Granit” missiles would proceed to attack any secondary targets in the ship order assigned to them unless they would “make sure” that the main target (the aircraft-carrier) had been already destroyed by their sister-missile which had been “assigned” to attack the main target. If the main target had not been destroyed by the missile “assigned” to this task, for any reason, the intellectual network of the missile swarm would “assign” this role to another missile – and would direct it to destroy the main target. If not – they would “assign” a third missile to the same task etc. – until the aircraft-carrier is surely destroyed.

Only after the main target has been already destroyed, the rest of the missiles would proceed to attack secondary targets in the group, again, making sure that the remaining targets are being destroyed in accordance with the priority order and also making sure that none of the remaining ships in the group would accidentally come under a simultaneous attack by two missiles instead of one. Until the very last moment, the missiles in the swarm would retain a technical possibility to distribute and to re-distribute targets among themselves and nobody would ever know which one of the missiles would be assigned to attack any primary or any secondary target in a targeted ship order.

Of course, the “Granit” missiles could be also fired one-by-one and their advanced intellectual guidance system would still allow them to effectively attack either single naval targets, or single stationary ground targets (such as demonstrated in the case with the Pentagon). They as well could be used to strike entire cities – in case of a retaliatory strike (specifically for a reason of destroying the cities, a detonator of its thermonuclear warhead could be set for an airburst, which will increase the zone of destruction and the casualties). However, striking the stationary targets and the populated cities was not what the “Granit” was really meant for – these targets are intended to be dealt with by ballistic missiles, not by the cruise ones. Although, the submarines armed with the “Granit” missiles are, in fact, considered a strategic “back-up” of the Russian main strategic nuclear forces (represented by submarines armed with the ballistic missiles), and the “Granit” missiles in this capacity could be used to destroy all U.S. cities and other important objects on both U.S. coasts, it is definitely not their main role. They were designed primarily to attack carrier battle groups in “swarms” – exactly in a manner described above.

Due to their original pre-destination, the “Granit” missiles could not be equipped with any conventional warheads, but only with the nuclear ones. I guess everybody understands that such a thing as an aircraft-carrier as an adversary, considering all these four factors – its size (hundreds of meters), its cost (billions of dollars), its “population” (thousands of people), and its danger (any aircraft-carrier has, besides its actual airplanes, a lot of nuclear weapons) – could only be attacked by nuclear weapons. To attack an aircraft-carrier by any conventional weaponry is simply not an option. It would require at the best case a minimum of 8-10 conventional missiles with big warheads (at least 2-3 times bigger than those of “Harpoon”³⁵⁰ or “Exoset”³⁵¹) to strike the aircraft-carrier in order to effectively put it out of order, and even more than that – to destroy it completely. Nobody could afford such a luxury in an event of a modern nuclear war. An aircraft-carrier could only be attacked by nuclear weapons and that’s it. This is the ³⁵⁰ UGM/RGM/AGM-84 “Harpoon”- a standard and the most common American-made anti-ship missile also being widely used abroad; it features 222 kg conventional warhead and could fly over 110 km at roughly 855 km/h.

³⁵¹ MM-38/40; SM-39; AM-39 “Exoset” – a standard and the most common French-made anti-ship missile, it is also being widely sold around the world and therefore being widely used by many other countries; it was an “Exoset” missile fired by Argentina pilots that struck a British destroyer – the HMS “Sheffield” in the famous case in 1982 (which failed to explode, by the way); it features 165 kg conventional warhead and could fly up to maximum 65 km at roughly 1000 km/h.

indisputable military rule. The axiom. Actually, any and every aircraft-carrier should be dubbed in advance as a “floating Ground Zero” – exactly as the Pentagon’s central yard was – and there would not be any mistake in this sense.

We could now make a logical conclusion. Considering the described above typical tactic of attacking carrier battle groups in swarms, no one could predict which one of the 12 “Granit” missiles fired in a salvo towards the ship order would be assigned the role of attacking the main target in that group. It could be any one of the 12 missiles that would be assigned the main role – the actual nuclear strike against the aircraft-carrier. Moreover, this assigned main role could at any time later be re-assigned to another missile shortly before the actual strike. That is exactly why, absolutely all “Granit” missiles, without any exception, are equipped only with nuclear (to be exact – with “thermonuclear”) warheads and under no circumstance could their warheads be conventional.

Another consideration is this. The Americans routinely use their “Tomahawks” for purely imperialistic reasons – for example, for “punishing” various third-world countries. Therefore they need their missiles to be equipped with conventional warheads. Unlike them, the Soviet (as well as the Russian) military due to its specific “defensive” military doctrine and near total absence of any imperialist agenda, has never even planned to use such kind of advanced cruise missiles against any one, except the Main Adversary in case of a major (i.e. nuclear) war. Thus, the Soviets/Russians simply do not need the “Granits” to be equipped with any conventional warheads. What could they use them for? That is a secondary reason why all those extremely expensive supersonic cruise missiles could only be equipped with nuclear warheads.

To be completely fair, it shall be also mentioned, that technically, the “Granit” missile could be equipped with a conventional warhead (featuring about one ton of conventional explosives). Such an “optional” warhead has been apparently designed also by the missile’s designers. However, it was simply a tribute to a fashion – there was a kind of détente on the way during its construction and the designers had to pay their respect to it. In reality, the “Granit” missile is simply too expensive to be used with any conventional warheads, so the “conventional warhead” exists only theoretically. Unlikely they have ever been actually produced and it should be presumed that despite being declared as available, the conventional warheads for “Granit” missiles exist only on blue-prints. Practically – to equip the “Granit” with any conventional warhead would be almost as illogical as to equip with a conventional warhead some Inter-Continental Ballistic Missile (ICBM). Has anyone ever heard about any ICBM that is allegedly “conventional”? I guess the answer is “No”. The same consideration is applicable to the “Granit” missiles. They are all nuclear, absolutely 100%, without any exception.

There is also some engineering consideration as to why all those “Granit” missiles, on the now defunct “Kursk” submarine, could not have been equipped with any conventional warheads. You probably know that any conventional explosive material (such as C4, RDX, or TNT, not even to say about older ones – such as dynamite and nitrate of ammonia) is prone to a detonation. There is simply no explosive material which could not be easily detonated, because if so – how then would you set the very explosion off? The main feature of any and every explosive material is that it could be easily detonated by a detonator. It could be also easily detonated by an explosion of any similar (or another) explosive material in its close proximity. What I mean is this: if, for example, you place very close to each other two aviation bombs – one with a detonator, and one – without a detonator and you set off only one of such bombs, you could be sure that the second bomb would explode also – because its detonation would be triggered by the first bomb’s explosion. That is exactly why an entire huge arsenal of any conventional weaponry could be blown up at once by an accidental explosion. And this could happen, despite the fact that during their storage all explosive munitions are kept separately from their detonators.

Please, note two important things: 1) that all "Granit" missiles were located quite close to the head of the submarine as it is clearly seen from the sketch above; and 2) that the submarine was designed to have its inner "hard" hull – which is to maintain the intended inner pressure and to sustain living conditions for its crew; and, it was surrounded by another "soft" hull (the latter one was nothing else than a thin outer casing that protects neither from the underwater pressure, nor from any other destructive factors – such as an explosion of an anti-submarine bomb in close proximity). Outlines of the inner hull could be clearly seen on the above sketch – as a relatively dark line surrounding almost 90% of the submarine internals – except only some machinery located inside its head and except the very end of its tail.

All the torpedoes of the "Kursk" submarine have been designed to be kept inside its inner "hard" hull, of course (a torpedoes compartment is where the figure "2" is pointing; while actual torpedo launching tubes extend to outside of the inner hull – into an "unprotected" head of the submarine). This is a typical solution in case of any submarine in general. This particular solution is indeed understandable – because most of the torpedoes are typically equipped with conventional warheads which could be easily detonated and such a detonation could be, for example, triggered by an explosion of an anti-submarine bomb nearby.

"Surprisingly" enough, the 24 launch-tubes which were intended to host the "Granit" missiles (12 on each side of the submarine) have been designed to be OUTSIDE of its inner "hard" hull. The 24 launch-tubes were all positioned in between the "Kursk's" inner and outer hulls – being practically unprotected from either the hostile environment, from any possible mechanical accident (such as colliding with a rock or with another submarine), or from a possible explosion of anti-submarine munitions in close proximity.

Above – the "Kursk" submarine; along each of its boards, closer to the submarine's head, there can be clearly seen 6 square hatches in the outer hull of the submarine – each of the hatches covering 2 "Granit" missile's silos.

These pictures show silos of the “Granit” missiles situated along the right board of the “Kursk” submarine. On the right picture there are two middle hatches opened – revealing closed silos of the missiles No. 9, 11, 13 and 15. It is clearly seen that these missiles have been designed to be positioned outside of the inner hull of the submarine – i.e. between its “soft” (outer) and “hard” (inner) hulls. The inner hull of the submarine was less than 50% of its entire 18.2 meters beam – the diameter of the inner “hard” hull was only 8.5 meters; it is very clear here that the missiles have been positioned simply too close to the submarine’s board to be inside the “hard” hull. Below: the “Kursk” submarine with its nose torn off by the explosion after it was salvaged. The largely undamaged silos with closed lids are clearly visible here.

Now try to think: if the designers of the “Kursk” submarine and those of the “Granit” missile would really believe that the missile might be equipped one day with a conventional warhead, whose explosion could be so easily triggered – would they ever dare to position those missiles outside of the protected inner hull of the submarine? Do not even doubt it: they wouldn’t design it like that in such a case. This particular design of the submarine has been dictated by only one presumption: that its main weapons, which the “Kursk” has been actually built for – the “Granit” missiles, intended to be used against carrier battle groups, would always be equipped with nuclear warheads only, which could not detonate accidentally.

Here is another engineering consideration in the same regard.

As it was reported and as it appears from the above picture, the “Kursk” has been destroyed by a huge, really huge, explosion, which has torn off the entire submarine’s head and has also supposedly caused a detonation of its entire torpedoes’ arsenal. In reality, of course, all torpedoes (including those tipped with nuclear warheads) had been stolen prior to the explosion, but the official version of events claims that the torpedoes have all detonated. Thus, we have to base our logic in regard to disproving the Russian Government’s lie on the Government’s alleged premise: if those torpedoes had indeed exploded, why then had the “Granit” missiles not exploded?

At least 4 of the front launch-tubes of the “Granit” missiles (2 on each side) appeared to be within a zone of the total destruction, caused by the supposed explosion of the entire torpedoes’ arsenal, as claimed by the Russian Government. Yet probably another 2 launch-tubes, located further backwards, appeared to be heavily damaged too. And yet another 2 tubes – located further backwards, appeared to be damaged to a lesser extent.

What do you think: if the “Kursk” would have been really armed at that moment with the 22 “Granit” missiles equipped with conventional warheads (each of such conventional warheads featuring about a ton of explosives), wouldn’t they follow the alleged torpedoes’ detonation and also detonate? Especially considering that at least 6 of the front launch-tubes with the missiles had been apparently within the zone of the initial explosion? Try to guess. Of course, they would. But in reality they did not detonate. Why? Such a failure to detonate in regard to the “Granit” missiles can only be because of either reason:

- 1) All the “Granit” missiles have been equipped not with conventional warheads, but with nuclear ones (a nuclear warhead can not detonate accidentally – so even if it rammed through the several Pentagon’s rows of buildings, it would not detonate in a sense of an accidental detonation – as you can see, fortunately, the city of Washington still appears on today’s maps).
- 2) None of the “Granit” missiles had been present in their launch-tubes at the moment of the actual explosion which destroyed the “Kursk” submarine.

In reality, however, both of the abovementioned reasons were applicable at the same time:

- 1) All the “Granit” missiles were equipped with their typical 500 kiloton thermonuclear warheads – without any exception.
and
- 2) None of the “Granit” missiles had been present in their respective launch-tubes during the submarine’s destruction. Because all of them, along with the nuclear-tipped torpedoes, had been unloaded and stolen prior to the “accidental” explosion, which supposedly sunk the “Kursk”.

How exactly did they manage to steal the nuclear-tipped missiles and the nuclear-tipped torpedoes? Was anyone from the Russian leadership or from the top navy commanders involved with this perpetration? Has the entire crew of the “Kursk” submarine run away with the perpetrators or only a few of them had escaped and the rest were shot and left behind?

I am not going to answer these questions, because it is simply not my business. If anyone would like to investigate these technicalities – let him to proceed with his own inquiry. My intention here is not to reveal the entire picture of the perpetration with the “Kursk”, but merely to prove logically that all its nuclear weaponry had been indeed stolen and partly used one year later – in the 9/11 perpetration, which is the topic of this book. I simply do not want to go beyond this point, since my current work here is about 9/11, and not about the “Kursk”. I hope you get my point.

Later, at the end of the next paragraph, there will be one more, just an extra proof, that all the missiles from “Kursk” were indeed with nuclear warheads and by no means with conventional ones.

2. Answering the lie that the 22 “Granit” missiles from the sunken “Kursk” submarine had been allegedly “recovered” (i.e. that they were allegedly “not stolen”).

Disproving related Conspiracy Theories:

As I already took habit of disproving prevalent conspiracy theories in the case of the WTC demolition and in the case of the Pentagon attack, let me briefly mention here one conspiracy theory in connection with the actual case of the sinking of the “Kursk” submarine. This particular conspiracy theory claims as follows:

“...It was the presence of these Chinese buyers [who supposed to watch how the new Russian torpedo would perform during practical firing] that [allegedly] drove the American submarines shadowing the Kursk - the Toledo and the Memphis - to take disruptive measures, as a result of which one of the American submarines collided with the Kursk. The Kursk, being far bigger than the two American submarines, was hardly affected, but it began to launch its torpedoes, in response to which the other American submarine pre-emptively torpedoed it instead. The incident could have led to world war. But Putin and Clinton did a deal in which American responsibility would be denied, and the US would pay billions of $ in debt-forgiveness. The sailors of the Kursk may have been allowed to die, so that they could not tell the story³⁵²...”

The abovementioned conspiracy theory implies that the two American submarines – the USS “Memphis” and the USS “Toledo” (which allegedly routinely “shadowed” the “Kursk”) were allegedly the culprits of its destruction. Actually, I do not even need to disprove this particular theory – because by the considerations below it would be disproved automatically. Why I mentioned it here is only for the sake of fairness: not only do my claims have the right to exist; so let some alternative opinions be expressed also. But what I particularly liked in this “theory” was the claim that “Putin and Clinton did a deal...”. Yes, the Russian and the American Presidents indeed “did a deal” which had some direct relevance to the defunct “Kursk”, but at that time it was not longer Clinton. It was Bush Jr. who secured that “deal” from the American side. And the nature of that “deal” was slightly different than the one suggested in the abovementioned conspiracy theory...

Now we come back to the now defunct submarine, which supposedly sunk 12 of August 2000 in the Barents Sea. The first publicly available version of events was this: on August 12, 2000, during maneuvers of the Northern Fleet, the Russian nuclear-powered Antey-II class cruise missile submarine “Kursk” experienced malfunction and hit the seabed at the depth of 108 meters, just outside the coast of the Kola Peninsula in the Barents Sea. Rescue vessels were sent to the disaster area in the evening of the next day. The accident was made public on Monday, August 14, by the press center of the Russian Navy. On Saturday evening, August 19, 2000, it was announced in Russia that the “Kursk” submarine crew was probably dead. Later this story became surrounded by a lot of additional “details” – most of them doubtful enough to be believed.

The submarine was armed as usual with its 24 “Granit” missiles – 22 of them with their usual 500 kiloton thermonuclear warheads, and with a lot of torpedoes of two different calibers. Some of the torpedoes were nuclear-tipped. The torpedoes were actually deemed auxiliary weapons, but, considering their unprecedented speed – 300 km/h or 186 mph, and the fact that some of them were nuclear-tipped, they were also capable of effectively destroying carrier battle groups. Two of the 24 “Granit” missiles had their warheads removed, because they were intended to be fired in the course of a naval exercise.

Intriguingly, there were several other exercises planned in the same time, among them the following ones (lovers of conspiracies and potential inquirers, do not miss the point): emergency shut-downs of the “Kursk’s” nuclear reactors (presuming that the submarine “sunk”), an emergency underwater unloading of missiles in the “sunken” position, an evacuation of its crew while in a submerged position, and some other related emergency practices.

Both “Granits” without warheads had been fired as intended, along with a couple of practical torpedoes, and the rest of the “Kursk” arsenal supposed to remain on board – including the 22 fully combat-ready

³⁵² This particular “Conspiracy Theory” was found in the Internet on: <http://www.centurychina.com/cgi-bin/anyboard.cgi/plaboard?cmd=get&cG=33732343738343&zu=33373234373834&v=2&gV=0&p=>

“Granit” missiles. Soon after firing of the two practical missiles, some “unexplainable explosion” allegedly occurred and the submarine had severed its radio-contact with a flagman ship.

However, such turn of events was only alleged afterwards. Practically, at the time of the supposed “explosion”, nobody had noticed any explosion at all.

In reality, at about 18.00, August 12, 2000, there had been a scheduled radio-contact between the “Kursk” and its base, but the submarine failed to contact. Another version of events claims that the problems on the “Kursk” began much earlier than its scheduled 18.00 communication séance – i.e. the problems started precisely at 12.00 Noon.

Thus, as my cynical mind suggests, the very minimum of what those, who planned to steal the missiles, had at their disposal, was at least 6 (six) hours of precious time.

Yet another version of events, apparently more realistic, claims that problems on the “Kursk” started one day earlier³⁵³ – i.e. on August 11, 2000. The submarine was already in its sunken position, while explosions registered the next day – on August 12, and had been intended to emphasize the alleged deaths of its crew.

After some time, there had been some efforts undertaken to trace the lost submarine. However, it was not earlier than August 13, 2000, at about 4.30 AM, when a sonar station of the flagman ship involved in that search, managed to discover some alleged anomaly on the seabed. Though, only at about 18.30 (i.e. 14 hours later) it had been authenticated as the sunken “Kursk”. Following this search, the submarine had been discovered lying on the seabed, being torn by a huge explosion, with both nuclear reactors fortunately being shut-down and with its entire crew presumably dead inside. There were also rumors circulating that some crew members inside were still allegedly “alive”, but later it was proven to be false.

In one of the earliest TV interviews (which has never been repeated, of course) there had been voiced an alternative version. One navy diver, whose squad had been quickly airlifted from the Black Sea Fleet to the Northern Fleet – in an attempt to save some possibly alive crew members of the “Kursk”, had confessed the following story. His squad was the first to arrive to the scene; despite stormy weather, several divers attempted to immerse – to get to the sunken submarine immediately. Once submerged, they had noticed several other busy divers already doing some manipulations with the sunken “Kursk”. Those unknown divers apparently belonged to other two submarines, lying on the seabed besides the “Kursk”.

Since the divers who attempted to immerse from a stormy surface had a lot of difficulty working, they rightly presumed that the divers from the submarines were in a much better position to work and therefore they surfaced – leaving the salvaging work to the others.

Oddly enough, it was later reported that there were no submarines near by the sunken “Kursk” and all these rumors about the abovementioned submarines slowly died – giving the floor to the official propaganda machine.

³⁵³ The author of this book is also certain about this date, because it is well-known to him that those people, who had actually stolen the “Kursk’s” nuclear weaponry, simply could not afford to do it on any other day than “11th”. The figure “11” in their permanent belief has some important significance: it is associated in their sectarian tradition with “drumsticks”. Therefore all important operations of this sect are always carried out exclusively on 11th dates – even the bogus arrest of so-called “Hambali” had been made on the 11th, not even to say about the very 9/11 attacks. In the same time, those folks, who are mad on numerology, are extremely afraid of the figure “13”. Therefore, to begin any operation on the 12th would be too risky for them. It could be easily extended over to the 13th – which in their belief is absolutely unacceptable. Stealing nuclear weapons from the “Kursk” was too an important operation for them to conduct it on any other day than the 11th. You do not have even to doubt these claims of mine. It is better to believe the author of these lines in this particular aspect – he definitely knows what he is talking about. Just to illustrate how serious this is, I would say that my former friend Mike Harari was superstitious to such an extent, that he never works and not even signs any document on an ordinary 13th, unless it is particularly the Friday 13th, he would never even step out of his room. By contrast, the figure “11” – which in their apocalyptic beliefs represents “drumsticks” – is considered to be the best for any action.

14 of August, 2000, the Russian Government officially informed the public through the mass media that due to some “emergency” situation, the crew of the “Kursk” had decided to “lay on the seabed”; and that there had been no nuclear weapons on board the submarine.

After several days of poor and absolutely unintelligible explanations for what had really happened with the submarine, the Russian leadership solemnly declared that the “Kursk” was destroyed by a huge unexplainable explosion, the nature of which was yet to be determined, every member of its crew was dead, unfortunately, but, fortunately, there was nothing else to worry about, because there were allegedly no nuclear weapons on board the sunken submarine.

Ironically, the Russian Government did not cheat the public in this case – it only omitted relatively unimportant words “no longer”, which should have been included into that particular statement.

It was true: there were no longer any nuclear weapons indeed on board the sunken submarine. All of the 22 “Granit” missiles, each with its 500 kiloton thermonuclear warhead, along with all of its torpedoes, including the nuclear-tipped torpedoes, had already been stolen. Of course, everything was stolen before the “Kursk” actually “exploded”. Within only a few hours – before the Russian Northern Fleet commanders had become suspicious that something had gone wrong with the submarine, its entire nuclear arsenal was gone.

One of the most important indications that the “Kursk” had been indeed armed with the nuclear weapons, which for some unknown reason went largely unnoticed, was this: on Friday, August 25, 2000, the then Prime-Minister of Russia Kasyanov made an official statement concerning the sunken “Kursk”:

“...”The background radiation condition is normal now and we have no anxiety,” Prime Minister Mikhail Kasyanov said Friday in Sarov, where he was visiting one of Russia's main nuclear research facilities...³⁵⁴

The important thing, which nobody had even bothered to notice, was that Kasyanov made this statement while “strangely” visiting the small restricted town of Sarov (also known as “secret” town of “Arzamas-16”). This town was nothing else than the Russian Federal Nuclear Center where most of Russian (and former Soviet) nuclear weapons were being designed. Sarov is a very small and a very “special” town, which is “highly tailored”: its entire population (which is less than 85,000 in total – including children and general municipal service personnel) works on designing nuclear weapons.

Why was Prime-Minister Kasyanov visiting such a small town in the immediate aftermath of the “Kursk” catastrophe? What he was doing there – amidst the massive public outcry, while the actual development with the sunken “Kursk” was still unfolding at that moment?

Try to guess: the Russian Prime-Minister was there apparently for only one reason: he wanted to consult with those specialists, who had designed the thermonuclear warheads of the “Granit” missiles (and those of the nuclear-tipped torpedoes as well), in connection with their being sunken. There is simply no other explanation. Kasyanov had plainly nothing to do in Sarov especially amidst the public outcry related to the “Kursk” because it was believed by many simpletons that its crew was still alive inside and could have been salvaged and the simpletons demanded from the Russian Government some decisive actions in this regard.

Considering that according to the official claims there were allegedly no nuclear weapons on board of the sunken submarine, the Prime-Minister of Russia would really have no business to do in Sarov at that particular moment. Logic is a very stubborn thing... Isn't it?

By this piece of information, we got the main point now. Many people do not even suspect one of the main “secrets” of successful intelligence work: about 90-95% of intelligence gathering – including truly top-secret findings, come not from stealing of highly-classified documents directly from enemy's safes, and not even from buying such highly-classified documents from enemy's corrupt officials, and not even from intercepting of enemy's unprotected communications... 90-95% of such top-secret findings come from simply reviewing regular press-releases and from careful reading of “normal” non-classified books, newspapers and magazines: one should only be capable of reading between the lines...

³⁵⁴As reported by Angela Charlton, Associated Press Writer, Friday August 25 [2000] 2:24 PM ET; found on http://members.fortunecity.com/omegatimes/moral_old_15.htm

The above mentioned press-release is one of the purest samples that confirms the above rule: even a school-boy could simply read between its lines and draw his conclusions right-away: the “Kursk” was apparently armed with the nuclear weapons and the Russian Prime-Minister Kasyanov has only confirmed it – by his peculiar visit to the peculiar town of Sarov...

What is the proof that the 22 “Granit” missiles were indeed stolen and am I speculating by using some uncertain facts? Unfortunately (for the skills), there is proof. Here is it:

Everybody could find in any open source (such as former news-releases in the Internet or by re-viewing old newspapers in a library) that the Russian leadership had begun its operation to salvage the sunken “Kursk” submarine soon after September 11, 2001. It doesn’t mean, of course, that the salvage operation was because of 9/11; apparently it was planned well before the Pentagon attack, so the time was just a coincidence. However, the operation to salvage the “Kursk” and its supposedly “intact” missile armament began shortly after 9/11. It was widely covered in various mass-media. If anyone really wants to dig to the truth – let him review those related news articles carefully. The incredible cover-up will be self-evident even from those open sources. One does not need to have access to the official inquiry files or to any secret sources in order to understand the nature of that cover-up. Even the mere news articles intended for the plebeians are more than enough...

Not only was the U.S. Government alone forced into their most incredible cover-up over 9/11, the Russian Government was forced into their most bizarre cover-up, too. The Russian Government had an onerous task. It had to prove to its own people and to the rest of the world, that all the 22 “Granit” missiles had been indeed “recovered”. Moreover, this burdensome task had been, in turn, subdivided into two actual tasks:

1). They had to “prove” to the general gullible public – mockingly including those poor inquirers from the Attorney-General’s Department, who were charged with the inquiry over the “accidental explosion” – that all the actual “Granit” missiles had been allegedly “recovered”;

2). They had to “prove” to some more discerning people – including specialists from among naval officers and from among officials of the 12th Chief Directorate, as well as to some foreign military intelligence services (who knew for sure that all the 22 “Granit” missiles, without any exception, were equipped with 22 thermonuclear warheads) that the very warheads had been allegedly “recovered” too – along with the missiles.

Similarly to the 9/11 cover-up, the so-called “truth” of the Russian Government has been served up in two different versions – one for the “plebeians”, and another one – for the “patricians”.

However, unlike the U.S. Government, which served up its concoctions on two different dishes: on one dish for the “plebeians”, and on the other dish – for “patricians”, the Russian Government decided to play more “democratic”. It managed to serve both versions of the “truth” on the very same dish. Apparently, the Russian Government believed that the “plebeians” would pick up from the dish only that part of the concoction which they would be able to digest and would not even notice the gourmet’s part intended exclusively to treat the “patricians”.

How did they manage to achieve this?

Read the next Chapter.

Nuclear Madness 2 (or “Nuclear Madness à la Russe”).

I like the term “nuclear madness”, taught to me by the not unknown Mr. William Tahil B.A. Therefore, I decided to name this Chapter by this new term which seems to me to be very appropriate for that purpose. What Russian spin-doctors did to the gullible public when reporting the “Granit” missiles’ affair was incredible to such an extent that the plebeians’ silly belief in the horrible official story can not be described as anything else than the very “nuclear madness”. Surprisingly, some “patricians” seemed to believe this incredibly mad story, too. Therefore, the term “nuclear madness” in this regard is equally applicable to both parties.

How did those specialists in that notorious “nuclear madness” manage to cheat both – the “plebeians” and the “patricians” alike to the effect that both – the declared “Granit” missiles, and their undeclared thermonuclear warheads had been allegedly recovered, despite their being actually stolen a long time ago?

Firstly, before starting the salvaging operation, they had sent some divers with a peculiar task – to fill empty launch tubes (where the 22 “Granit” missiles were supposed to have been loaded) with certain special fast-setting “foam”. It was “explained” to the gullible public that such an odd “solution” would supposedly “ensure safety during the ensuing salvage operation”. This implied that the missiles won’t be damaged or even accidentally exploded during an actual lifting of the submarine from the sea-bed and during its being towed to the dock where the submarine had to be utilized.

This kind of “solution”, however ridiculous, has been, nevertheless, readily accepted by the gullible public. One might only wonder – what might happen with such a heavily armored missile that is as strong as a tank and even deems to be invincible from direct hits by enemy anti-missiles and artillery shells? What kind of “safety” were they talking about – if the “Granit” has proven its enormous strength by penetrating several building rings of the Pentagon at 45 degrees angle (not counting the huge electric generator, which it simply threw out of its way during its approach to the Pentagon)? What kind of “safety” with those missiles were they talking about if the “Kursk” submarine was intended to be nothing else than a combat ship, which supposed to be able to dive into several hundreds meters depths and to endure enormous amounts of underwater pressure, not counting its ability to sustain possible explosions of anti-submarine bombs in its close proximity? Especially considering that all those launch-tubes had been designed to be located along the submarine’s case, being outside its main inner hull, being almost unprotected from the outer environment?

If those “Granit” missiles were indeed so fragile and unreliable in a sense of an “accidental explosion” during the salvaging operation, how come that they managed not to go off when the “Kursk” itself had been destroyed by an explosion, which was so enormous that it managed to completely tear off the submarine’s head? If those remaining “Granites” were so “unreliable” – how then did they manage to survive at all? One should not forget also, that while being loaded in their launch tubes, the missiles do not have much chance “to dangle” inside the tubes, because they are being fitted in quite precisely. If the “Kursk’s” and the “Granite’s” designers definitely believed that it would be safe – to position the launch tubes outside the main protected (inner) hull of the submarine, why did those, who designed that salvage expedition, “believed” that such an unprecedented measure of “safety” should have been undertaken? And they hoped that the specialists should “believe” their “honest” intentions?

Still, their unprecedented “idea” to fill the launch-tubes with the “fast-setting foam” for the “safety” of the missiles (which supposedly managed to survive that enormous explosion which had destroyed the “Kursk” itself) had apparently worked out. A lot of gullible people managed to swallow this concoction without any suspicion. Even the inquirers from the Russian General Attorney’s Department had apparently believed that the “Granites” had been recovered... In reality, as everybody might guess, it was the cheapest possible trick, intended to conceal from the rest of the people involved in the salvage operation and into the ensuing official inquiry that the launch-tubes, where the “Granit” missiles were supposed to be, were, in fact, empty...

Secondly, after the “Kursk” submarine had already been lifted from the seabed and had been towed to the dock, those involved into this cover-up proceeded to further cheating – even more incredible than the above one. They shamelessly claimed to the gullible public that those supposedly “recovered” missiles now must be necessarily “destroyed”. Their ravings, interestingly enough, have never been challenged and all the allegedly “recovered missiles” (means the empty launch-tubes filled with the set foam) have been indeed destroyed.

Technically, however, their actual removal from the submarine’s body was even more incredible than their theatrical “salvation”. Officials responsible for invention of the cover-up story, have undertaken nothing else than cutting these entire missiles’ launch-tubes out of the outer hull of the “Kursk” using some steel-cutting apparatus – similar to a welding machine. Such an incredible action, nevertheless, was widely covered in the mass-media. So, if anyone doubts – let him check the former news about the “Kursk” salvation and he would be satisfied to learn that it was indeed so. Intriguingly enough, at the moment of their lifting by crane out of the submarine’s main body, those cut launching tubes (in Russian language they called it “launching containers”) were photographed and filmed, and as such they have been shown to the TV and other kinds of mass-media.

Above – one of such pictures (widely circulated over various mass-media) shows a launch-container with fast-setting foam inside cut from the “Kursk’s” body.

Following this appearance of these launch-tubes filled with the “fast-setting foam” being unloaded from the “Kursk” on various mass-media both home and abroad, the Russian Government did not hesitate to publicly reprimand those responsible for such an “unprecedented breach of security regime”. Seemingly “angry” Russian Government officials declared that these launch-tubes, supposedly containing the “Granit” missiles, have been indeed the top-secret stuff and as such they should not have been shown on the TV. If you are cynical enough, you probably understand that it was nothing else than a cheap publicity stunt. It was designed by the Russian spin-doctors to one more time attract attention of the people both – home and abroad to the fact that these “secret” missiles have been indeed returned to the Russian Government and there should not be any slightest doubt about it.

However, the next step was not so reasonable. It had been decided, at last, to “destroy” these “missiles”, after such a severe test had befallen them – despite their being apparently intact, as everybody could see at the above picture of one of its launch-containers...

After being so cut out, the alleged “missiles” were delivered to be destroyed into some destruction ground, which was chosen to be somewhere 58 km away from Murmansk city. It was publicly announced by no one less than by the Russian Chief Directorate on Civil Defense affairs and Emergency Situations (which to a certain extent resembles the American FEMA) that on the 58th kilometer of Murmansk-Tumannyi highway tomorrow (means 29 of October, 2001), from 12.00 till 14.00 by specialists of the Russian North Fleet there would be conducted some hazardous explosion works intended to “utilize” complexes of missile weaponry from the APL³⁵⁵ “Kursk”.

Here, I would like to explain what was supposed to have been noticed here by the “plebeians” and what the “patrician” part of the concoction was.

The “plebeians” were supposed to notice that all those “Granit” missiles that had been supposedly “recovered”, now, at last, have to be utilized. For the “plebeians”, apparently, it should look reasonable – to “utilize” all those extremely expensive supersonic armored missiles by destroying them with explosives, instead of simply disassembling them.

The “patricians”, who suppose to be more discerning, were supposed to pick up another part of the dish. In the former Soviet Union, as well as in Russia now, the organization mentioned above – the Chief Directorate on Civil Defense and Emergency Situations – does not deal with any explosive works. It deals (apart from earthquakes and other natural disasters) exclusively with the ABC stuff. This organization (if not to count, for now, its role as a main tool of the New World Order – exactly as the American FEMA) is nothing else than Civil Defense, which purports to protect lay citizens from different weapons of mass destruction. The mere fact that such an organization was announcing these incredible “utilization” works as “hazardous”, supposed to automatically “reveal” to the “patricians” the “awful truth”: all 22 thermonuclear warheads of the salvaged “Granites” were being destroyed along with the missiles. Poor “patricians”...

I will make a simplified explanation for those poor guys who thought that they are really “higher” than the ordinary plebeians. This explanation might seem to some people boring due to its being excessively lengthy; but, still, I recommend you to finish reading it. This is not a small matter – when some guys who had already proven to be as rogue as firing one missile into the Pentagon, still have in their possession another 21 “Granit” missiles... It is definitely worth reading further, despite being boring. Do not forget that this last part of the book is not about the past – it could be also about the future. It is really important to understand and to become certain that those missiles, along with their thermonuclear warheads, were indeed stolen and that I am not joking at all.

One might ask a reasonable question – just for the sake of logic: well, we suppose that the Russian Government was indeed cheating the people claiming that the 22 “Granit” missiles had been allegedly “recovered”, while in reality, recovered were only the empty launch-tubes filled with the fast-setting foam. Why should then the Russian Government undertake such an incredible step as that the publicly declared “destruction” of these “missiles” – which would apparently attract some doubts? Won’t it be better to declare to the public that these recovered “missiles” (means empty-tubes) have been put back to commission, and then to quietly and secretly write them off – both the missiles and their warheads? At least, in such a case there would be much less headaches for the Government and much less possible suspicions, wouldn’t there?

Well, I will answer this reasonable question. Indeed it seems to be a better solution. But, unfortunately, it only seems so. One has to take into consideration many technical and legal problems involved in such a solution. Let us just compare this possible solution (the proposed show with the “return” of the non-existent missiles to commission and the proposed “secret” writing them off later) with the chosen solution (i.e. the “utilization” by explosives of those empty launch-tubes without opening them).

Let us consider the first possible solution first. How would it look in case if both the missiles and their warheads were recovered in reality?

Probably, it would look like this. To begin with, there would have been a special commission appointed. This commission would have to acknowledge in writing that such and such missiles (quantity) and such and such warheads (quantity) had been indeed recovered. Before acknowledging it in writing, the members of this commission, of course, would have to take a look at the recovered items with their very eyes in order to be certain in regard to what they were certifying.

Secondly, this, or maybe even a separate commission have to examine both – the recovered missiles and the recovered warheads. This would be in order to establish the condition of both and also to establish whether these missiles and these warheads shall be simply cleaned, or they need to undergo some more thorough checking, any additional maintenance, or even a disassembling. Findings of such a commission would have to report to various top-level Northern Fleet and Russian Navy commanders, to missiles' and warheads' manufacturers, and most probably – to the political leadership of Russia, at least to those from the Defense Ministry.

Let us imagine that such a commission found out that both items: the missiles and the warheads could no longer be used due to their being extremely damaged. Then such a commission would have to describe in exact detail their findings: which parts of the items have “suffered the extreme damage”, what was the cause, the exact nature of this “extreme damage”, and many other details. Then all members of such a commission shall add to their final report their proposals concerning the future handling of these “so badly damaged” missiles, that of the warheads, and send this report up to the top commanders of the Russian Armed Forces.

Then it shall be one more commission created – to decide how to utilize (without quotation marks) those missiles and those thermonuclear warheads.

Apparently, all these commissions would not only contain spin-doctors of the Russian Government alone. They would include specialists: from missiles' manufacturers, from missiles' engines manufacturers, from missile's fuel manufacturers, from several different electronic equipment manufacturers, from thermonuclear warheads manufacturers, from financial directorate of the Defense Ministry, from GRAU³⁵⁶, from the 12th Chief Directorate³⁵⁷, from the Navy's missiles department, it would include, in addition, some Navy officers serving in similar submarines, and also some people from various controlling organizations.

Just try to imagine how many different people would have been involved in such a case? It would have been hundreds of different people belonging to various organizations, which have nothing to do with each other. That means that news of the stolen missiles and of the stolen warheads would be widely spread. Do you think there were any guarantees that the Russian Government would be able “to convince” all of these different officials to agree to participate in such a tremendous cheating? And what if not? What if a hundred of them agree, but only one opposes?

Do not forget to add here some rank-and-file servicemen. All those chief engineers, professors, admirals and generals, who these commissions would be composed of, would not unload those missiles personally. They supposed to let some smaller guys do the physical job. Moreover, during all these proceedings described above, the missiles (I mean their absence) should be “kept” somewhere, at least temporarily, and those people responsible for their temporary safe-keeping, suppose to have been involved also in all this cheating. Obviously, all of these low-ranking servicemen who will unload, keep, and guard the “missiles” should have been also included into such a conspiracy, not only the generals and admirals alone...

Just try to be realistic – to put these non-existent missiles and non-existent warheads back to commission with a prospect to quietly write them off later – was simply not an option. It apparently won't work and the Russian Government had to realize it. In the case of the chosen solution (I mean the “utilization” described above) the Russian Government could minimize the number of the people initiated into the secret awful truth (that the missiles were stolen) just to a very few. Let's say that only two or three navy divers (who filled the empty tubes with foam and sealed them after), plus their immediate commander, only a couple of high-ranking admirals (whose orders could not be challenged), and maybe a couple of middle-ranking, but highly-trusted navy officers appointed to supervise the so-called “utilization” works, plus a couple of government’s spin-doctors – appointed to create a story for mass-media and to perform other related publicity stunts. Altogether the number of “initiated” into the full truth could be as little as 10-12.

³⁵⁶ “GRAU” stands for “Glavnoe Raketno-Artilleriyskoe Upravlenie” – “Chief Directorate of Missiles and Artillery” of the Russian Ministry of Defense – an agency responsible for all missile weaponry of Russian Army and Navy.

That is exactly why the Russian Government decided in favor of the abovementioned solution. “Someone” (apparently, a certain admiral – most probably the chief of the Northern Fleet’s Missiles and Artillery Department, or someone holding a similar position) concocted a report where he claimed that both – the missiles and their warheads – were in the “emergency” condition and their further handling was allegedly “extremely dangerous”. That is why he proposed the following “solution”: to send the Navy divers to fill the launch tubes with fast-setting foam (allegedly to prevent the missiles from dangling while being transported) and also to seal the lids (in order to prevent various unauthorized people, especially foreigners participating in the “Kursk” salvaging operation, from seeing the top-secret missiles inside the tubes). To make it look “logical” that official proposed to destroy these entire launch-tubes by “mini-nukes” without opening the actual tubes.

Of course, the Navy Commander and the Russian leadership readily agreed with this beautiful proposal. At least, such a “solution” allowed them to exclude from the list of the involved people the most dangerous and the most stubborn folks from the Nuclear-Technical Service – with whom the Government supposed to have the most headaches. People, who serve in the 12th Chief Directorate of the Defense Ministry (i.e. in the Nuclear-Technical Service of the Armed Forces) are known to be extremely stubborn and are considered to be very serious also. These two personal qualities are usually the main criteria in selection of the military officials to be appointed to their particular positions – as guardians of the nuclear arsenal of the State. It is generally considered being an impossible task – to make any sinister deal with this kind of people; they are simply too honest for that.

But, at the same time, these people do not really care about any nuclear warhead that has been already issued to an end-user – such as warheads issued to the Navy and attached to its missiles. These pieces of nuclear weaponry are no longer in the custody of the 12th Chief Directorate and its officials do not care what happens with such weapons next – even if such a warhead is lost or stolen, it is no longer their business, as long as it was not stolen from under their own custody. In the same time, if those recovered “Granit” missiles were to be put back to commission, their thermonuclear warheads should have been returned first to the 12th Chief Directorate – to undergo some maintenance works. So in such a case the warheads would have to come back to the custody of those knowingly stubborn people, with whom no one could make any deal.

Moreover, any utilization of the nuclear warheads supposed to be conducted not at the facilities of any end-user, but only when these warheads are returned to the 12th Chief Directorate. This organization is the one responsible for any utilization of nuclear weapons (actually, besides them, there must be a certain inter-departmental commission appointed to supervise any utilization of nuclear weaponry – so the participation would be even wider than by only the people from this particular Service alone). Anyhow, to write-off any nuclear weapons without the direct participation of the 12th Chief Directorate was not possible and the Russian Government simply could not afford this turn of events. Those tough guys from the Nuclear-Technical Service must be excluded for sure. And they indeed had been excluded with the abovementioned solution.

The only remaining part of the above question was this: that such a solution as to “utilize” those empty launch-tubes right away, without opening them, might attract a lot of doubts... Logically, you may expect so. But, as you can see, this “solution” has attracted doubts only of the author of this book alone. The rest of the descendants of Adam managed to digest this story as if it were truly eatable and there have been not any doubts at all (at least, publicly – of course, it might be that some discerning guys were quietly expressing their indignation in front of their wives in their kitchens, but these possible facts are not known to me). So, even in this particular sense the Russian Government and its spin-doctors did not make any miscalculation – they calculated the level of gullibility of the people quite precisely. Both Russian and foreign “patricians” alike managed to swallow this solution without any slightest doubt. For them it apparently looked “normal” – to “utilize” not only these extremely expensive supersonic missiles, but even their thermonuclear warheads by [nuclear] explosions... I guess, I have successfully answered the above reasonable question.

Coming to the alleged “utilization”: the main problem is that nuclear weapons can not be “utilized” by this way. When nuclear weapons become outdated or otherwise obsolete, they are always being utilized in a sense that their most valuable parts are removed in order to be used in other, modernized weapons. The majority of outdated nuclear warheads are not even utilized; they are simply re-made into newer ones. At the worst case, when there is a decision not to make new warheads out of the old ones, their expensive nuclear materials must be removed first – since they could be used in some other processes; but never, under no circumstances, would any nuclear materials be just simply reduced to dust by some explosion and thrown away. I will try to explain why:

1. Economical aspect:

Cost of Uranium.

Any nuclear warhead, even the cheapest possible one, in reality, is still an extremely expensive thing. Even the smallest one contains about 50 kg of highly enriched Uranium-235. It is quite difficult to estimate the true cost of pure Uranium 235, because nobody sells it in a full sense of this word and therefore the market price is simply absent. But, for example, in 1993³⁵⁸ American Oak Ridge National Laboratory (ORNL) supplied (only to authorized consumers, of course) 93% enriched Uranium-235 for 53 USD per gram. Let us calculate what would be the cheapest possible nuclear charge based on that old price: 1 kg of weapon-grade Uranium would cost about 53,000 USD, 50kg (since critical mass of Uranium-235 is ~50 kg) would cost you at least 2,650,000 USD.

However, the problem is that such enriched Uranium-235 is not only costly, it is also RARE material.

When calculating the true cost of ready enriched weapon-grade Uranium, one must consider at least two factors: 1. its actual price; 2. its apparent deficiency. Enriched Uranium is never enough. Even if someone possesses more than enough to build weapons, he would still never throw its surplus away – because even “unneeded” Uranium-235 could be successfully used to dilute natural Uranium in order to enrich it to be used as a fuel for nuclear reactors. What do you think: in such a situation when you want to destroy some unneeded nuclear charge – wouldn't it be better to get the purest Uranium-235 out of it first, and to use it to build other nuclear weapons? Or, at least, to use it in the enrichment of Uranium fuel for nuclear reactors? I hope it is clear that no person, unless he suffers from extreme madness, would destroy a nuclear charge – considering the mere cost of Uranium-235...

Note that the abovementioned idea is just a general consideration, because I am not very sure if in those warheads of “Granites” there was any Uranium whatsoever. I am not familiar with their particular design – it is a secret, after all. There is a big chance that there is no Uranium at all used in their construction, but only Plutonium alone.

Cost of Plutonium.

Plutonium-239 is more expensive than Uranium-235 and it is even more deficient. Why? There is a variety of reasons why. Firstly, unlike Uranium, Plutonium is absent in nature. You simply cannot find it anywhere in our planet Earth. It can only be acquired in some industrial processes and only in very little quantities. It is believed that until the year 2000 everywhere in the world, there had been produced not more than 300 tons of weapon-grade Plutonium.

One might ask – why then do we need this Plutonium-239, if there is Uranium-235 available, which is being used in creating nuclear charges quite successfully?

The problem is the critical mass of Uranium-235 (i.e. its minimum quantity required to make an atomic blast) is ~50 kg. While the critical mass of Plutonium-239 is only 10 kg. You would not be able to make any nuclear charge unless you have: 50kg of Uranium-235, or 10 kg of Plutonium-239.

Moreover, because Plutonium could have several different crystallization phases, critical mass of it (in some other phases stabilized in various alloys) could be even lower. The minimal one would be between 5 and 6 kg only. Recently, de-classified by the U.S. Government, information puts this figure to only 4 kg. This means that only 4 kg of Plutonium in certain conditions could be enough to make a really workable nuclear device. See the difference? Let's say you want to make some “mini-nuke”, which one could carry by hand, or a small caliber artillery atomic shell. It is obvious that you would be able to create quite a small nuclear charge container if you have Plutonium, but you won't be able to create any small stuff if you have only Uranium. In case of Uranium a total weight of such munitions would be at least over 50 kg, ³⁵⁸ Unfortunately, I wasn't able to find any fresh data, so a price published in 1993 was the only one available to me.

even if to disregard the weight of a joining mechanism. That is why Plutonium is extremely deficient and very valuable material. Even rich industrial countries accumulate its quantities very slowly – let's say, from only tens of kilograms per year to a maximum of several hundreds of kilograms per year.

There is another reason why Plutonium is so deficient – you can not make any reasonably small thermonuclear charge if you do not have any Plutonium. Typically, any modern thermonuclear charge (old-name “hydrogen bomb”) contains at least two nuclear charges inside. One, “normal”, called “fission primary” or “fission primary trigger”, which could be made also from Uranium-235, is intended to “ignite” the initial high-temperatures required for its actual thermonuclear reaction. The other one, hidden in the middle of the cylinder with the thermonuclear fuel and is called the “fission spark plug” – it is intended to function as a kind of “fuse” to “ignite” the thermonuclear reaction itself.

While the first one could be in theory made from either – Uranium or Plutonium, the second one is always made only from Plutonium. It is because Plutonium has much smaller critical mass (at least 5 times) in comparison with that of Uranium. Only “fission spark plugs” made out of Plutonium allow “miniaturizing” modern thermonuclear warheads to the reasonable sizes that allow them to fit into modern relatively small missiles (such as the “Granit” for example). You might probably remember that the first thermonuclear charges had a weight of at least 15 tons, while modern ones could easily fit into a relatively small cruise missile. Certain modern thermonuclear charges could even be so small that one man could carry them by hand. However, unless you have Plutonium-239, you can not afford to make these small things.

What is the price for Plutonium-239? The price for Plutonium-239 in 1998³⁵⁹ as set by the same Oak Ridge National Laboratory was 4.65 USD for 1 mg (do not be mistaken – this price is per “milligram”, not for a “gram”). We could imagine how much, let's say, 10 kg of Plutonium-239 would cost. It would cost 4,650,000 USD (four million six hundred fifty thousand US dollars). And, again, do not forget that besides an actual price you have to consider its extreme deficiency.

What do you think now? – if for some reason you do not need anymore 22 warheads which contain at least over 220 kg of weapon-grade Plutonium-239 (about $143 Million)– would it be really a good idea to simply destroy it? Or it would be better to get that Plutonium out of those warheads first and use it for some other reason?

Well, now try to imagine how mad must be that person (and not just a “person”, but an official person), who made such a decision: to “utilize” the 22 thermonuclear warheads by the above mentioned means – considering the mere cost of Plutonium...

Cost of other materials inside a thermonuclear warhead. You could probably imagine that besides actual nuclear materials (such as Uranium-235 and Plutonium-239), there are quite a lot of other expensive stuff hidden inside any modern nuclear, not to say about a thermonuclear charge.

Any modern nuclear charge contains precisely wrought detonation lenses, which are quite expensive also, various synchronization and protection devices, precisely wrought micro-second level detonators etc. plus just simply expensive protection materials. All these materials, which cost hundreds of thousands of US dollars, could have been also re-used, even if the actual warheads came to an irreparable condition. Why do you need to destroy them by an explosion?

2. Logical aspect:

Durability and strength of a thermonuclear warhead in general.

Many people, probably, have never even bothered to think about how strong and how reliable should be any modern nuclear warhead. Obviously, it will do no harm if you think about it a little bit. You can not compare any combat-ready warhead with a simple thermonuclear charge just molded in some laboratory and intended for a test-explosion underground. It is something much more serious. Since any modern warhead is primarily intended to be a part of ICBMs, or that of ballistic missiles intended to be launched from submarines – SLBMs³⁶⁰ (in the “Granit” missile there is a standard warhead used – which typically is used in common ballistic missiles deployed on SSBM³⁶¹ submarines), it shall meet the following requirements, at least:

³⁵⁹ I was not able to find any fresh data concerning the price, so the one published in 1998 is the latest available.

³⁶⁰ “SLBM” stands for “Submarine-Launched Ballistic Missile” – a primary weapon of nuclear deterrence (along with ICBMs).

- 1) Such a warhead shall have its outer heat-resistant shell to protect its whole internals – because at the moment it enters the lower atmosphere from space, the warhead supposes to experience those high temperatures which are being experienced by ordinary space-crafts returning to the Earth.
- 2) It shall have an additional heat-resistant shell surrounding an actual nuclear charge; this must withstand a heat of at least 1,000 degrees Celsius [1,832°F] for at least a few hours – this is just an overprotection in case of emergency, such as an accidental fire at a launch-pad.
- 3) It supposes to be mechanically strong enough to withstand tremendous accelerative forces – since the ballistic missiles do not differ much from any ordinary space-crafts – they have roughly the same speed and use similar acceleration.
- 4) It supposes to be solid enough to withstand an impact at a speed of several hundreds meters per second without either – the nuclear material inside, or its precise detonation mechanisms – being damaged, even to the slightest extent. Such a warhead still has to be in workable condition – i.e. capable to produce its intended nuclear explosion even after hitting a wall of the Pentagon or a board of an aircraft-carrier.

You can probably continue this list of requirements if you wish. I am only trying to say this: any combat-ready thermonuclear warhead is not only extremely expensive; it is also an extremely durable thing.

Durability and reliability of the “Granit” missile with such a thermonuclear warhead in particular.

To all mentioned above, you could also add the following considerations: a typical modern atomic submarine supposes to be able to remain in a submerged position for up to six months, at least. What do you think about its missiles, which are situated outside of its inner hull and shall remain in their places all that time – interacting with such a hostile environment?

Of course, nothing could really happen with them even in case they accidentally stay under water a year longer than expected. You don't even have to doubt it. What wrong could have happened with those “Granit” missiles that managed to survive an actual explosion – which had destroyed the submarine itself? Nothing at all could happen to any of these very durable missiles, or to their thermonuclear warheads – especially considering all mentioned above. That is exactly why it was not necessary even to disassemble those supposedly “recovered” missiles and their warheads. All these missiles supposed to be just only slightly wiped clean outwardly and then put into service again. A maximum of what could have been expected in excess of this – the inner parts of those missiles might have been slightly wiped clean as well.

Try to be realistic in answering this question: who could go as far as to “destroy” these extremely expensive and extremely durable things after so much effort had been made to recover them (in case, of course, if these very things were indeed available)?

Of course, nobody in sound mind would ever do that. If you really get back these 22 “Granites”, you would only thank those who managed to salvage them for you, and then you would wipe the missiles clean and put them back to commission.

I hope it is clear to everyone that there were neither “Granit” missiles, nor their 500 kiloton thermonuclear warheads during that described above so-called “utilization” process. Only the “fast-setting foam” alone was “utilized”, unfortunately. In this case both – the “plebeians” and the “patricians” – have been cheated alike.

However, just to complete the picture of the incredible cover-up in regard to the “Granit” missiles theft, and to make it completely clear, I would like to bring to your attention several more facts. Several deputies at the local legislative body – the so-called Murmansk’s Oblast³⁶² “Duma³⁶³” – had been “advised” to make a little noise in support of the “patrician” part of the abovementioned dish. These deputies brought the “doubtful” question of the so-called “utilization” of the “Granit” missiles from the “Kursk” submarine to one of the local Duma’s session. However, it was “doubtful” not in a sense of its logic and reason, but in a sense of its supposed “danger to ecology” of the area (it was similar to the discussions in the U.S. Congress after 9/11 – instead of asking how would aluminum penetrate steel, the “concerned” U.S. senators asked “why NORAD was unprepared”). Moreover, several deputies went as far as even to voice their seemingly “reasonable” objections in the local mass-media as follows: they claimed, no more and no less, that the supposed destruction of those “Granit” missiles by explosions would allegedly “cause a great damage” to the region’s ecology and, moreover, might even endanger the main business of local deer-breeders – who usually earn money by selling deer-meat to Norway.

Any “discerning” people capable of “reading between the lines” supposed to immediately suspect that some nuclear stuff was apparently involved. Conventional explosions apparently do not cause any danger to ecology, and, moreover, would never be able to contaminate any deer-meat. Allegedly “worried” local deputies concocted a kind of interpellation – whereby they requested the Northern Fleet Commander to officially explain to the supposedly “worried” local legislature all potential dangers to the ecology which might arise from the “Kursk’s” weaponry utilization. Such a concoction of various ingredients supposed to additionally “ensure” the “patrician” spectators that the “awful” and confidential “truth” about this incredible “utilization” was indeed “well-grounded”: all the 22 thermonuclear warheads seemed to be really intended to be destroyed along with the actual missiles. However, it apparently had yet another implication: it appeared that the actual explosive works intended to “utilize” the tubes with the fast-setting foam inside were not “conventional”, but nuclear. It seemed that nothing less than portable nuclear munitions (a/k/a “mini-nukes”) would be used in this case and this fact was not even hidden by the Russian Government.

It was indeed “mini-nukes”, you do not have to doubt it.

It would not be possible to destroy the launch-tubes with [supposedly] incredibly strong “Granit” missiles and with even stronger thermonuclear warheads inside of them by any kind of ordinary explosives, irrespective of their quantity. If ordinary explosives of any kind would be used, they would still leave some parts of the tubes thrown around and people who witness that would be able to see that no missiles and no warheads were present inside the tubes, but only the fast-setting foam alone...

Moreover, it is not possible from the medical point of view to destroy Plutonium (that is the very material inside the warheads) by ordinary explosives. Such a solution would only crush the Plutonium to extremely dangerous microscopic dust – suitable to be inhaled and ingested – and it will endanger lives not only of those destroying the missiles in such a ridiculous manner, but also lives of many generations of people living in this area and this danger will hang there for centuries. Plutonium crushed to microscopic dust is one of the most hazardous materials known – it is far more dangerous than typical radioactive dust from a nuclear explosion.

Considering that it would not be possible to destroy the supposed “Granit” missiles and their supposed thermonuclear warheads by ordinary explosives due to the variety of reason described above, it should be presumed that only a nuclear explosion will ensure their complete destruction. In the case of nuclear explosions neither mechanically crushed Plutonium (if it only were present inside the tubes), nor any scattered around pieces of empty launch-tubes (that would betray the absence of the missiles) would be left. It is only a “mini-nuke” that could destroy the launch-tubes completely without leaving behind any evidence whatsoever. In addition to all of it, after such a “mini-nuke’s” explosion the people would be afraid to come near and to touch any debris (if any remained), because it is very dangerous to approach a spot of a recent nuclear explosion.

To conclude: only “mini-nukes” could do such a job flawlessly and this is exactly why it was to be the “mini-nukes” in the case of the destruction of the launch-tubes cut out of the “Kursk” submarine.

³⁶² “Oblast” – in Russian language means “area”, but in a sense of administrative division of Russian Federation it is something higher than district and approximately equal in stature to a State in the United States of America.

³⁶³ “Duma” – pre-revolution name of a legislative body in the Czarist Russian Empire. After the dissolution of the Soviet Union it was adopted as a new term to replace the term “Soviet” which literally means a “council” – since the word “Soviet” in an opinion of many had acquired some kind of a “communist” savor after 70 years of hated socialism.

However, even the abovementioned farce was not enough to make mockery of those poor “patricians”. Next after it, the Russian Government undertook even a more unprecedented step (and also well-publicized one). The new count of farce was so unbelievably shameless, that if I only refer to it, someone might simply refuse to believe me. For this reason I decided to quote that entire news here – both in Russian first and its English translation below. So, if anyone would not believe, he could verify it from independent sources. Moreover, this is such a masterpiece of lying art that it simply deserves to be mentioned in full:

Мурманская область. Оленеводам ловозерского кооператива "Тундра", в районе которого проходит утилизация ракет с "Курска", рекомендовано принимать йод

Как сообщил в интервью "Эху Мурманска" председатель совета ветеранов войны и труда Ловозерского района Николай Грошев, оленеводам кооператива "Тундра", которые работают в районе утилизации ракетного вооружения с атомохода "Курск", рекомендовано принимать йод. Население района, как заявил Н.Грошев, связывает это с вероятной радиационной угрозой. Ранее официальные представители Северного флота и управления ГО и ЧС по Мурманской области категорически отвергали возможность радиационного заражения территории, где производится утилизация ракет с АПЛ "Курск".

Murmansk's Oblast. Deer-breeders from Lovozersk's Cooperative "Tundra", in whose location the utilization of missiles from the "Kursk" is being conducted are advised to take iodine.

In his interview to "Murmansk Echo" the chairman of the council of war and labor veterans of Lovozerski District Nikolai Groshev, has informed that deer-breeders of Cooperative "Tundra", who work in the area of utilization of missile armament of the atomic-powered vessel "Kursk", are recommended to take iodine. Population of the district, as claimed by N.Groshev, link this [advice] to a potential hazard from radiation. Earlier, official representatives of Northern Fleet and those of Directorate of Civil Defense and Emergency Situations of Murmansk Oblast used to categorically deny any prospect of radioactive contamination of a territory where the utilization of missiles from APL "Kursk" is being conducted.

Since for a reader who does not know any specifics of the former Soviet Union the article above does not reveal much, I am obliged to make some little excursus back into the recent Soviet history – which would also enable even a non-Soviet reader to get clear understanding of the above farce. The history of taking iodine as a remedy against radioactive hazard traces its roots back to the Chernobyl "nuclear disaster" which happened in 1986. That is exactly why a concept of "taking iodine" supposes to immediately touch the very heart of a former Soviet citizen.

The idea of taking iodine as a remedy against radiation was wrought out in 1986 out of the following fact: during any nuclear reaction one of its by-products – the radioactive isotope "Iodine-131" – represents an extreme danger to people's health. It is believed that the man's thyroid gland would immediately consume and deposit whatever quantity of this Iodine isotope is available in the atmosphere. After such a deposition this radioactive isotope would continue to irradiate from inside the body.

In order to avoid such a development, it is believed that once such a danger occurs, one should not hesitate to take whatever ordinary iodine he could find around (usually many people simply keep it in their homes – in their first-aid kits) and swallow as much of it as possible. This ordinary iodine would also be immediately consumed and deposited in one's thyroid gland, so it is believed that there would simply be no room for radioactive isotope Iodine-131, since all available cells in the thyroid gland would already be occupied by the "normal" iodine. Perhaps, such an idea could be challenged by appropriate specialists, who might find in it some inconsistencies, but the general public believes that to swallow iodine as a kind of a "first aid" against radiation is exactly the right thing to do.

During the Chernobyl so-called "disaster" taking of iodine was such a common thing, that all former Soviet citizens still remember it up to this day and the abovementioned "advise" to "take iodine" in regard to the "utilization" of the "Kursk's" missile armament was more than just a "transparent" hint – not only to the "patricians", but even to the "plebeians". The only difference supposed to be that the "plebeians" (since they were presumed not to possess any logic at all) supposed to link that ridiculous "iodine taking" to a mere fact that the "Kursk" was an atomic submarine. The "patricians", who presumed to be more "discerning", supposed to link that ridiculous "iodine taking" to the "awful" and "confidential" fact that the thermonuclear warheads are being "secretly" destroyed together with those "Granit" missiles – which for the "plebeians" have been declared to be "conventional"...

Now we will try to consider that "idea" – about the public declaration of "iodine taking" more seriously. The idea was not in the actual "iodine taking", as I hope everybody with more or less cynical turn of mind has already understood, but in the public declaration of such a thing.

The Russian Government did not really care about any stupid deer-breeders, neither it cared about their deer-meet being sold to Norway (otherwise it would "advise" to feed iodine to deer stock as well). Russian Government cared about only one thing – to make the people to believe in an indirect manner that not only the "Granit" missiles, but their thermonuclear warheads have been really returned to the Russian Government. The problem was this: the Russian Government in August 2000 had already declared to the world (and to the "plebeians" within Russia by default) that the "Granit" missiles on the sunken "Kursk" submarine were not equipped with any nuclear warheads. But in the same time there were still a lot of the "patricians" who knew for sure that it could not be true and the Russian Government was lying: all the "Granit" missiles were with their usual thermonuclear warheads on.

At the moment of that unprecedented "utilization" of the non-existent "Granit" missiles, the Russian Government could not officially declare that the thermonuclear warheads were being destroyed along with the actual missiles. Such an admission would be tantamount to the admission of its lying one year back. No government can afford to be caught lying – I guess it is very clear to everybody. Neither could the Russian Government afford this. Still, considering that there was quite a big number of the “patricians” (both home and abroad), who knew for sure about the existence of the thermonuclear warheads, the Russian Government should satisfy them as well.

That is exactly why such an unprecedented decision had been undertaken – to feed to the mass media in the most transparent form that even though the Russian Government didn’t admit it openly, “secretly” it was “utilizing” those thermonuclear warheads, which it at last “managed to recover”. Such a “transparent” hint supposed to be properly “understood” by everybody who knew for sure about those warheads’ existence. And indeed, it was “understood” by those gullible “patricians”. After such a step, the Russian Government managed to write-off all these 22 thermonuclear warheads in the simplest way – without creating any necessary inter-departmental commission, without returning these warheads to the 12th Chief Directorate, which supposed to keep them in its registrar, and without having any headache at all. I hope, however, the reader of my book is not as gullible as those poor “patricians”?

Let us consider the “iodine taking” from the technical point of view. Firstly, swallowing of ordinary iodine is nothing else than a folk remedy – it is definitely not a professional solution. People in radioactively contaminated areas are supposed to resort to such a step only in case of real emergency – when there is an actual hazard present, but there are no specialists around who could provide you with any professional assistance/advice. Secondly, if there is such a prospect of an imminent radioactive contamination, any governmental official (unless he suffers from some extreme madness) must undertake nothing else than the evacuation of the population, not issuance to it any kind of remedies.

To make it easier to comprehend, I would put it this way: let’s imagine that the U.S. Government wishes to conduct an atmospheric nuclear test in a certain sparsely populated area. However, instead of evacuating its population (which is not so numerous), the Government issues to the population dark glasses, haz-mat suits, gas-masks (with a few extra tanks per mask), and special liquids – to proceed with future deactivation works. Do you like the idea? Does it sound reasonable for you?

Now you can add to it this factor: the Soviet (and the Russian by inheritance) Government was known to be far more conscious when it comes to any nuclear hazards than the American Government. At least, to demolish buildings in the middle of Moscow by underground nuclear explosions would never be an option for it. Just try to imagine how illogical this would be: instead of evacuating the population well in advance before those supposedly “hazardous” works even began, to advise the population to resort to the folk remedy?

Is your intelligence insulted yet? Not yet? Well, I continue.

Thirdly, such a remedy as swallowing of iodine in case of emergency would apparently help you only against one particular isotope – namely against “Iodine-131”. But it doesn’t help against other radioactive isotopes (such as Strontium, Barium and others). What about the hazardous effects of other isotopes on those poor deer-breeders and their live stock which are supposed to end up in ecological-safety-conscious Norway? Why did those “specialists” from the Civil Defense not propose any remedy against the rest of isotopes? You might try to guess why...

The reasonable question is: why then “advise” those poor deer-breeders to “take iodine”, moreover, not just to advise, but to publicly advise them to do so? Do you see any logic in such a step? No? But there is some logic, apparently...

Logic is this – to “hint” to the people as “transparently” as possible that those 22 non-existent thermonuclear warheads have been allegedly under the process of the “utilization” at that moment. In order to achieve this wrong impression among the “patricians”, the Russian Government even decided to “suffer” and to “survive” a certain minor “nuclear scandal”: a little intentional radioactive contamination of lands of those poor deer-breeders, who knew nothing about either nuclear weapons, or about the public cheating, and who apparently believed that those clever guys deputized to sit in the local “Duma” knew better what is good and what is bad for their constituencies...

Now I guess your intelligence is insulted, at last. But wait a little bit; it will be insulted even more.

Now, if you believe that those 22 empty launch-tubes (where the 22 stolen “Granit” missiles were supposed to have been) have been indeed “utilized” and such a solution was indeed “logical” and defensible, what do you think about the nuclear reactors of the sunken “Kursk”? Do not forget that the “Kursk” was an atomic-powered vessel, so it had its nuclear reactors too. What about them? Would it be logical to expect that its nuclear reactors would also be "utilized" – in the same manner as its 22 supposed missiles with their 22 supposed thermonuclear warheads?

Indeed, considering all "logic" of the above, to "utilize" the nuclear reactors of "Kursk" by explosions would also be very logical. If not the "plebeians", at least, the "patricians" would not be mistaken to expect such a logical "solution" from the Russian Government.

Unfortunately, their rightful expectations were proven to be wrong...

Челябинская область: Ядерное топливо с подлодки "Курск" поступило на ПО "Маяк"

На предприятие ПО "Маяк" поступили официальные документы, уведомляющие, что спецшелоном, отправленным 12 мая 2003 года с Кольского полуострова, вывезено отработавшее ядерное топливо реакторов ракетного подводного крейсера "Курск". 17 мая спецшелон прибыл на "Маяк". Топливные сборки находятся в исправном неповрежденном состоянии. Это свидетельствует о том, что при аварии на АПЛ "Курск" повреждение реакторных установок не произошло основательно, радиационных последствий авария не имела.

English translation:

Cheliabinsk's Oblast: Nuclear fuel from the submarine "Kursk" has arrived to the industrial association "Mayak".

There have been some official documents arrived to the industrial association "Mayak", which notified it that there have been waste nuclear fuel from the reactors of the missile-armed submarine cruiser "Kursk" sent by a special train, which departed 12 of May 2003 from Kola Peninsula. 17 of May the special train has arrived to the "Mayak". Fuel assemblages were found to be intact. This fact testifies to that during the wreck of the APL "Kursk" there have been not any serious damage inflicted on its nuclear power stations, and there have been not any radiation consequences of that wreck.

Apart from the fact that it has been admitted at last, the actual explosion which sunk the "Kursk" was not serious enough even to damage its nuclear reactors (and what about its armored "Granit" missiles? – one might ask), there is nothing really strange in this information. It sounds very reasonable: some waste nuclear material, removed from the "Kursk's" nuclear power reactors, has been sent to a special plant which routinely deals with such nuclear waste. This was indeed a logical step to do. And there is nothing really wrong to inform the general public of such an action.

There had been nothing wrong in this, considering the actual date of that news publication: it was May 2003 – more than one and a half years after the "Kursk's" salvation and its missile armament "utilization".

The problem of those modern propaganda specialists is this: they believe that the memory of their auditorium audience is too short now and people can not properly remember what was just a few years ago. Indeed, it is true to a certain extent: the memory of a typical modern "homo economicus"³⁶⁴, who is being constantly duped by the TV, by the radio in his car, by the newspapers, by the Internet, by music, and even by his mobile phone, has indeed become too short in comparison with the memory of people who lived on our planet just only 50 years ago and who did not know what was hard-rock music or a discothèque. It is quite understandable that today only a very few people can remember details of World War II, and not many people can still recollect some true details about Saddam Hussein – the staunchest ally of the United States, friend of Daddy Bush, and the mortal enemy of Islam, who fought against Islam with chemical weapons (supplied by the Americans). So it is quite understandable indeed that many folks nowadays can not sincerely link in their brains such different phenomena as secular Saddam Hussein and so-called "Islamists"...

Yes, memories of many indeed became too short; this is the sad fact. But this sad fact should not be used as shamelessly as it was used in the case of the "Kursk" submarine. Look, only in November 2001 it was fed to the gullible public that all its missiles with all the warheads had to be necessarily "utilized" – without any possibility to disassemble the warheads and to utilize without quotation marks their pure and extremely expensive nuclear materials. And only in May 2003, they dared to feed to the very same public that, unlike extremely expensive armored supersonic missiles with their thermonuclear warheads, those absolutely useless (and much more dangerous in their handling, in comparison with the warheads) nuclear reactors must be disassembled and, moreover, their absolutely useless nuclear materials must be utilized in a full sense of this word.

Actually, in this particular case the most insulting is not even the fact that spin-doctors presumed that the bipeds supposed not to possess any logic or expected to be totally devoid of any reason. The most insulting is that the propaganda specialists sincerely believed that they presumably managed to shorten the active memory of the "plebeians" (and the "patricians" alike) to less than two years only. This is really insulting, because before that it was believed that the plebs were capable of holding in their active memory events for at least 10 to 15 years and that no abrupt changes in any kind of official information should occur before these 15 years have passed. But, in this particular case, by their actions, those spin-doctors have explicitly implied that not only the active memory of "plebeians", but even that of the "patricians" was shortened to less than two years. Times are changing, unfortunately...

I guess now your intelligence is insulted, at last? But even this is not all.

³⁶⁴ This is a new derogatory term – as opposed to "homo sapience" – which implies that such a creature can no longer live without electricity, without washing machine, without refrigerator, without telephone, without TV, etc.

Мурманская область. На полигоне Северного флота взорван первый контейнер с ракетами атомохода "Курск"

Спецподразделение морской инженерной службы Северного флота произвело сегодня подрыв первого контейнера с корпусом крылатой ракеты "Гранит", вырезанного из корпуса АПЛ "Курск".

"Одна тонна взрывчатки в тротиловом эквиваленте была заложена под каждый из предназначенных к уничтожению блоков", - сообщил "Эху Мурманска" помощник начальника Главного управления по делам гражданской обороны и чрезвычайным ситуациям Мурманской области Владимир Гриднев. Он уточнил, что официально эта операция называется "уничтожение приборов ракетного комплекса "Гранит" различного назначения". В.Гриднев отметил, что "до 4 ноября будут уничтожены все семь контейнеров с техническим оборудованием ракет". Местом уничтожения ракетных контейнеров выбран полигон Северного флота, который называется "58-й километр".

Murmansk's Oblast: The first container with missiles from the nuclear-powered vessel "Kursk" detonated today at the polygon [Russian term for "testing-ground"] of the Northern Fleet.

Special detachment of naval engineering service of Northern Fleet has conducted today an explosion of the first container with the body of winged [cruise] missile "Granit" cut out of the APL "Kursk". "One ton of explosives in TNT yield have been placed under each block destined for the destruction", - told to "Murmansk Echo" Vladimir Gridnev, an assistant of the Head of the Chief Directorate of Civil Defense and Emergency Situations of Murmansk's Oblast. He specified that officially this operation bears name of "the destruction of instruments of various appliances of missile complex "Granit"". V. Gridnev noted that, "before November 4 [2001] there would be destroyed all seven containers with technical equipment [possibly he meant "avionics"] of the missiles". As the spot of the missiles' containers' destruction there has been chosen testing grounds of the Northern Fleet, which are known as the "58th kilometer".

I guess that for a person who possesses elementary logic, and especially capable of reading between the lines, the above article does not need to be commented...

The "special detachment" of the engineering service (especially considering that the entire engineering service is actually "special" compared to the infantry, for example) means only one thing: it was the special engineering detachment that worked with mini-nukes – nuclear engineering devices intended for atomic demolitions. There is simply no other sense in the word "special" in the context of the above said.

As for my humble self, I only feel sorry that the abovementioned operation was not named "Operation Black Magic" or something of a similar kind. An appropriate name was apparently missing.

Do you think that in accordance with the abovementioned news it was really a "Granit" missile (I mean the "supposed missile") from the "Kursk" submarine destroyed as described? By exploding an alleged "one ton of explosives in TNT yield" under each block (meaning there were several times "1 tons in TNT yield") they supposed to destroy the first "Granit" missile from the "Kursk" submarine as claimed. Do you think it was really a cause? You are badly mistaken if you think so. A mini-nuke (described as "one ton of explosives in TNT yield have been placed under each block destined for the destruction") has been spent for some other reason in the above-mentioned case...

Here is news, which is even more interesting (again with the original screenshot from the web page):

In Russian. From: www.regnum.ru/news/61382.html

Мурманская область. Вчерашний взрыв ракеты с атомохода "Курск" был опытным.

В Мурманской области накануне была уничтожена не боевая ракета с борта АПЛ "Курск", а учебная. Таким образом была проверена надежность предложенной специалистами экологически безопасной системы полного уничтожения аварийных крылатых "Гранитов", сообщил представитель МЧС. Место для подрыва ракет выбрано в Ловозерской тундре в старом песчаном карьере, неподалеку от моста через реку Териберка. Там флотские саперы вырыли яму, в которую положили контейнер с ракетой. Сверху на них уложили бревна, засыпали их песком и залили все это водой, чтобы сделать взрыв "рабочим", способным полностью уничтожить изделие и не навредить окружающей среде. За ходом операции наблюдали не только военные, но и специалисты различных проектных и конструкторских организаций, занимающихся созданием комплекса ракетного оружия для атомных подводных лодок. Вместе с ними на месте операции были представители природоохранных и других заинтересованных служб Мурманской области. Местное население, в том числе и пастухи оленеводы, заранее были оповещены о предстоящей операции. Как сообщает tirman.ru, опытный взрыв получился удачным. В ближайшие дни здесь приступят к уничтожению ракет с боеголовками. Полностью операция, по расчётам флотских специалистов подрывного дела, должна завершиться в октябре.

Murmansk's Oblast: Yesterdays' blast of the missile from the nuclear-powered vessel "Kursk" was only an experimental one.

In the Murmansk's Oblast the day before there has been destroyed not a combat missile from board of the APL "Kursk", but a practical one. By such an action there have been tested the reliability of that offered by specialists ecologically safe scheme of the total destruction of those winged [cruise] "Granites" being in the emergency condition - said MChS's [Emergency Situations Ministry in Russia] representative. Spot of the explosion of the missiles has been chosen in Lovozerski tundra in an old sand quarry, not very far from a bridge over Teriberka river. There navy sappers dug a pit, in which they placed a container with the missile. On top of it they placed logs, filled it up with sand and then filled it up with water, for a reason of making this explosion "working", capable of totally destroying the 'article' [that is how in the Soviet military they used to "politely" refer to nuclear warheads – they called them "articles" – so the "patricians" will get the point, along with foreign military intelligence services] and not to endanger the environments. The course of the operation has been observed not only by the military, but also by specialists from various projecting and designing organizations, which are involved in the creation of complex of missile armament for nuclear submarines. Together with them in the spot of the operation there were present representatives of conservancy organizations and other concerned services of Murmansk's Oblast. Local population, including also shepherds – the deer-breeders, all has been warned in advance about the upcoming operation. As the murman.ru [means website www.murman.ru] informs, the experimental blast was successful. In the next few days they will begin destroying the missiles with their warheads here. The operation, according to the calculations of naval specialists in explosive works, should be entirely completed by October [2002].

Вчерашний взрыв ракеты с атомохода "Курск" был опытным". The article text states that a non-combat missile from the APL "Kursk" was destroyed in the Lovozerski tundra. It describes the experimental setup: a container with the missile was placed on logs, covered with sand, and then water. The article mentions that the operation was observed by military and specialists from various organizations, and that the local population, including deer breeders, was warned in advance. The article concludes that the experimental blast was successful and that the operation to destroy the missiles with their warheads should be completed by October 2002.

As everybody could observe, the unprecedented operation of the destruction of the empty tubes (“transparently” called “missiles with their warheads” and even “articles”³⁶⁵) was so seriously planned, that the Russian Government was not even sure whether to begin to destroy those actual launch-containers with the fast-setting foam, cut off from board of the “Kursk” or not.

What if the set yield of the “mini-nuke” (apparently set it to the smallest possible yield) would not be enough and some torn parts of empty containers would be thrown around? And observers could notice that only the “fast-setting foam” alone was inside the tubes? Without any “Granit” missiles and also without any expected thermonuclear warheads, a/k/a the “articles”?

Of course, such an awful possibility should have been absolutely excluded. And it was indeed excluded.

For such a reason, the Russian Government had even decided “to spare” one extremely expensive “Granit” missile, designated as “practical” to destroy it first – only to make sure that “special” naval sappers have not been mistaken in their calculations...

Do you know, by the way, how expensive is one “Granit” missile? It is expensive to such an extent that since the Soviet times there have been produced slightly over 300 pieces of those “Granites” only and it is also being considered too expensive to use any single “Granit” missile against any ship smaller than a cruiser. Even to fire one single “Granit” against one single destroyer is considered to be “wasteful”. A situation when the 12 “Granites” are fired in one swarm against a carrier battle group is another story, because there an aircraft-carrier is a target which must be destroyed at any cost. After that, the rest of the missiles, since they can not come back anyway, could be used to attack even smaller ships remaining in the ship order. However, to fire one single “Granit” against a destroyer is definitely not an option – it is too wasteful, since any destroyer could be sunken by a much cheaper missile.

Considering that to spend an extremely expensive “Granit” missile on firing it against an enemy destroyer is not an option, would it be reasonable to presume that it could be an option – to destroy such an expensive missile (and also spending an expensive “mini-nuke”, in addition) just “to test the reliability of the destruction method offered”? What about elementary logic?

What do you think, how serious must have been the position of the Russian Government in regard to those stolen “Granit” missiles that the Government had to venture into such an unprecedented step to even spare one of these expensive missiles for the incredible test-destruction?

In any case, you have to understand that the abovementioned “destruction operation” was an extremely idiotic thing to do and it shall not mislead any discerning observer into believing that such a thing could have been “genuine”. It could not.

I think this will be the end of my boring explanation. I hope the logical facts provided above were more than enough to assure a discerning person that the entire nuclear arsenal of the “Kursk” submarine was indeed stolen and there should not be even the slightest doubt in this regard.

Those who stole these 22 “Granit” missiles – each with 500 kiloton thermonuclear warhead – still have 21 more pieces in their possession after they decided “to spare” one for firing it against the Pentagon. And “those” who possess the stolen missiles are definitely not Arabs and not even Muslims. It is useless to look for these remaining nuclear weapons in Afghanistan or in Iraq. They are hidden in some other place and those simpletons from the so-called “Al-Qaeda” or “Taliban” do not even suspect that such things exist in the hands of those who exploit their stupid story about the so-called “jihad”.

Do you still refuse to believe the author of this book and prefer to believe the Russian Government, which claims to have “destroyed” those armored supersonic cruise missiles in the manner described above?

Well, it is up to you: everybody is entitled to entertain his own beliefs. Then it is also better to believe the report of the official “9/11 Commission” that claimed that the Pentagon was struck by hijacked Flight 77, flown on a hedge-hopping flight by that Arabic Ace – Hani Hanjour... In this case I think I can’t help. I really tried to do my best in explaining everything in this book by using as much of my knowledge and as much logic as I could... Unfortunately, I couldn't do more.

³⁶⁵ A word “article” (in Russian “изделие”) was a standard “polite” term used to refer to a “nuclear warhead” in the Soviet 12th Chief Directorate, in the Soviet Strategic Missiles Forces, and in other Soviet organizations dealing with nuclear weapons. This “polite” word is well-known to the “patricians” as well as to foreign intelligence services.

A few more mini-nuclear bombings masquerading as “car-bombings”.

At first, my idea was not to include this chapter into the original edition of my book and to develop it into a separate book. But after some hesitation, I decided to include it into its current edition. I believe the reader deserves to get acquainted with such an important aspect of the so-called “terrorism” that is being routinely kept secret from him by unscrupulous rulers and their security officials.

In the course of my narration, I have already acquainted the reader with at least three “mini-nuclear” bombings – the 1983 Beirut Barracks double nuclear bombing, the 1995 Oklahoma nuclear bombing, and the 2002 Bali “micro-nuclear” bombing. In fact, there were so many of these nuclear bombings for the past 25 years, that to mention each of them individually would require at least a 3-volume encyclopedia that should be called something like the “Unabridged encyclopedia of nuclear terrorism”. Of course, to mention all of such nuclear bombings here is not feasible. But, nonetheless, I decided to mention here a few more so-called “truck-“ and “car-“ bombings – especially those few that could demonstrate to us some clear motivations behind them, or just to show some outstanding “nuclear” details.

As you probably remember, the most outstanding of all of the nuclear bombings of the ‘80s was the 1983 Beirut Barracks double nuclear bombing. There, not only “ground zero” words were first used to describe it, but also a hitherto unheard of organization bearing the idiotic name “Islamic Jihad” surfaced for the first time with its anonymous claims of responsibility. Just to remind you of the so-called “Islamic Jihad”, I will first describe a couple of well-known mini-nuclear bombings of the ‘90s, which slowly but surely extended the tradition well into the new millennium. So, here they are:

1992 Israeli Embassy nuclear bombing, Buenos Aires, Argentina.

Do you think that the so-called “Islamic Jihad” would spare its native Embassy and would abstain from bombing it with another “mini-nuke”? You are badly mistaken, if you think so.

Official information (as provided by the Wikipedia³⁶⁶):

“...The Israeli Embassy attack in Buenos Aires (as it was officially dubbed) was a bomb attack against Israel's embassy in Buenos Aires, Argentina on March 17, 1992. A pickup truck, driven by a suicide bomber and loaded with explosives, smashed into the front of the Israeli Embassy located on the corner of Arroyo and Suipacha, and detonated, destroying the embassy, a Catholic church, and a nearby school building. Several Israelis died, but most of the victims were Argentine civilians, many of them children. The blast killed 29 and wounded 242...”

Culprits: A group called “Islamic Jihad”, allegedly a front for Hezbollah, claimed responsibility. Their stated motive for the attack was Israel's assassination of Hezbollah leader Sayed Abbas al-Musawi.

This was a really well-calculated two-step combination. The first step – Israeli helicopters attacked a motorcade of the then Hezbollah leader – killing him, his wife, his son, and four others. In the second step – in supposed “retaliation” for this unprecedented murder “someone” (allegedly “Islamic Jihad” – in the name of obviously pro-Iranian “Hezbollah”) set-off a “mini-nuke” at the Israeli Embassy in Argentina.

Not many Israelis were killed (if any at all – actually, the Israelis could report anything, but nobody could independently verify if any of them were really killed or not; as for my humble opinion, I am absolutely convinced that none of the Israeli were killed in the Embassy premises, because all of them must have been warned in advance – in the same manner as on 9/11). Most of the victims of this nuclear blast were innocent Argentineans who had nothing to do with Iran, with Hezbollah, or with Middle East problems.

Motives. The real motives can be easily understood from this piece of official history³⁶⁷:

“...In May 1998, Moshen Rabbani, (the Cultural Attaché in the Iranian Embassy in Argentina until December 1997) was detained in Germany, and the Argentine government expelled seven Iranian

³⁶⁶ http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/1992_Israeli_Embassy_attack_in_Buenos_Aires

³⁶⁷ http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/1992_attack_on_Israeli_embassy_in_Buenos_Aires

diplomats from the country, stating that it had "convincing proof" of Iranian involvement in the bombing (the "convincing proof" itself was apparently fed to gullible Argentines by the Mossad – by whom else could it be fed?). In fact the attack occurred when Iran and Argentina were hoping for a resumption of nuclear cooperation, although Argentina had announced the suspension of the shipments of nuclear materials to Iran a couple months before the bombing...³⁶⁸

Of course, as anyone could sincerely expect, after such a nuclear bombing in the middle of its own capital – supposedly made by those crazy Iranians (since nobody could believe, apparently, that the Mossad would go as far as to use the "mini-nuke" against its own Embassy) – the Argentinean Government would not be so eager to continue any nuclear cooperation with the Iranians. These were the motives.

Not too many "revealing" articles are available on that bombing, unlike, for example, in the case of the 1995 Oklahoma bombing. Partly, it was so because it happened too long ago and the Internet was not developed by then, and partly because it occurred not in the English-speaking part of the world. Therefore you could unlikely expect to find an article where "ground zero" words were used to describe the site of the destroyed Israeli Embassy in Buenos Aires. Perhaps, you could find some revealing details on it if you go to a big library in Buenos Aires and review contemporary newspapers, but virtually nothing seditious exists on the Internet.

However, I found one interesting piece of information related to this bombing. The article is not neutral, unfortunately, because a clear anti-Israeli position of its authors is apparent; but it does not matter – there is an extremely important piece of information inside. And this piece of information is especially valuable, because the authors of the article even though knowing that it was an Israeli-made false-flag attack, nonetheless, had no clue that it was indeed a NUCLEAR bombing. And this makes that particular piece of information especially valuable. So, here it is: "Debunking the Islamic Trail. False Flag Attacks in Argentina: 1992 and 1994."³⁶⁹ by James Fetzer*, Adrian Salbuchi*. I quote (word is bold highlighted by me, as usual):

"...However, the case for a car bomb melted away when the State Prosecutor and the Court hearing on this case invited technical specialist surveyors from the Argentine National Engineers Academy to determine what caused the Israeli Embassy building to collapse. Their conclusion was that the explosion took place from inside the building and was not caused by an alleged car-bomb. To make matters worse for Zionist pressure groups, a passer-by had filmed from several blocks away the mushroom cloud that rose from that explosion, a characteristic effect that also pointed to an internal [sic] explosion.

The embassy building was in a very densely populated part of Buenos Aires and, although the shock wave broke glass windows and plaster of practically all the buildings across the street from the Embassy – even blowing-in a vitreux of a church across the street, which sadly fell on a priest and killed him – the only building structurally affected was the Embassy itself. Clearly, we either had a car bomb with an unrealistically selective shock wave or the explosion took place inside the building and there was no car bomb.

*There are many other signs that point to this conclusion. Probably, for this reason, the case of the Embassy was mentioned less and less frequently by the media, especially after strong rumours surfaced that what actually blew up was an arsenal that the Israelis apparently had housed in the building's basement. At the time of the explosion, a group of Israeli Labour Government officers were meeting to discuss matters pertaining to the recently initiated Madrid Peace Conference process, but "luckily" left the building just before the explosion. The same occurred with the Ambassador himself who, fortuitously, also happened to depart the premises before the blast.

A very different situation altogether has arisen with the circumstances surrounding the Second and more deadly attack on the AMIA building, which has always received very high profile coverage in the local and even some international media to this very day. In contrast with the Embassy, this building housed a private, Argentine organization AMIA, and its sister political organization, DAIA. Those killed were all Argentine citizens, and the whole tragedy fell strictly under Argentine jurisdiction. And yet, on the very same day the explosion took place, then President Carlos Menem officially requested the assistance of the FBI and CIA from the United States and the Mossad intelligence service and the armed forces of

³⁶⁹ <http://www.voltairenet.org/article166428.html>

Israel.

[here you have just to read “between the lines” – such a request for “assistance” points to an unusual physical nature of the actual explosion; because if it were TNT/fertilizer, the Argentinean police and its army’s experts on explosives would cope with the inquiry alone, without any “assistance” from “nuclear” states]

In the ensuing chaos amidst the rubble, tempers ran very high with local police when Israeli Army intelligence officers planted an Israeli flag in the rubble. Almost immediately, those same Israelis “luckily” found a piece of the alleged car-bomb – a white Renault ‘Trafic’ van – that “luckily” just happened to have the manufacturer’s serial number on it. This was reminiscent of other highly unlikely but “lucky” finds, such as the FBI’s locating alleged suicide bomber Mohammed Atta’s intact passport in the rubble of the World Trade Center just after 9/11!...”

1994 AMIA nuclear bombing. Buenos Aires, Argentina.

Official information + motives - all-in-one^{370 371}:

“...The AMIA Bombing was an attack on the Asociación Mutual Israelita Argentina (Argentine Israelite Mutual Association, or AMIA) building in Buenos Aires on July 18, 1994, that killed 85 people and injured several hundreds. Carried out under Carlos Menem's presidency (1989-1999), it was Argentina's deadliest bombing. A high-explosive bomb made of ammonium nitrate was driven in a Renault Trafic van through the front gates of the AMIA building in the Once district near downtown Buenos. The 7-story building was the headquarters of Argentina's Jewish community.

According to the police, the bomber detonated the bomb, leveling the building following an implosion and reducing it to rubble, along with nearby buildings. Over the years, the case has been marked by incompetence and accusations of cover-ups. All suspects in the “local connection” (among whom many members of the Buenos Aires Provincial Police) were found to be not guilty in September 2004. In August 2005, federal judge Juan José Galeano, in charge of the case, was impeached and removed from his post on charge of “serious” irregularities and of mishandling of the investigation.

On October 25, 2006, Argentine prosecutors Alberto Nisman and Marcelo Martínez Burgos formally accused the government of Iran of directing the bombing, and the Hezbollah militia of carrying it out and calling for the arrest of former President of Iran Rafsanjani and seven others, including some who still hold official positions in Iran. Speaking on state radio, Iranian foreign ministry spokesman Mohammad Ali Hoseyni described the accusations against the country as “a Zionist plot.” Both Hezbollah and Iran deny any involvement in the bombing.

*According to the prosecution's claims in 2006, Argentina had been targeted by Iran after Buenos Aires' decision to suspend a nuclear technology transfer contract to Tehran. This however, has been disputed, because this contract was never terminated, and Iran and Argentina were negotiating on restoration of full cooperation on all agreements from early 1992 till 1994, when the bombing occurred. ...”

I will not comment, because it is very clear from the above description, who did it, and what were the true motives.

It should be noted also that this particular nuclear bombing somehow contributed to the growing of the so-called “internal nuclear awareness” inside Argentina and attracted a certain amount of the international “attention” to Argentina’s own nuclear weapons program. As a result, Argentina was forced to completely abandon its own nuclear aspirations and to sign the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT) in 1995.

1995 Egyptian Embassy nuclear bombing, Islamabad, Pakistan.

³⁷¹ <http://mideastconflict.tribe.net/thread/25767fb5-3f94-4ae8-af86-78843fba9da9>

“...Egyptian Islamic Jihad cell in Pakistan bombed the Egyptian Embassy in Islamabad, Pakistan. This November 19, 1995 bombing served as a prototype for future attacks by its sister organization al-Qaeda, such as the 1998 bombings of American embassies in Africa. A pickup truck loaded with a 250-pound bomb created by an EIJ operative and former Egyptian cab driver named Abu Khabab broke into the compound. The driver/suicide bomber set off the bomb and the embassy crumbled. Many other buildings within a half-mile radius of the bomb were severely damaged. Sixteen people died, not counting the two suicide bombers, and sixty were wounded. It was EIJ's first success under Ayman al-Zawahiri's leadership but Bin Laden [allegedly] had not approved the operation, and was not happy about it...”

Osama was supposedly “not happy” because it “allegedly” alienated Pakistan who deemed to be the main supporter of the bogus Wahhabi ideology – aimed as the Adat's replacement in neighboring Afghanistan.

In the excerpt above, make sure to note the combination of two words “Islamic” and “jihad” – do not miss the hint.

Contemporary news releases - by Steve Macko³⁷³:

“Fifteen people were reported killed and 59 others were injured in an apparent suicide bomb attack at the Egyptian Embassy in the Pakistani capital of Islamabad. A pickup truck filled with explosives rammed into the gate at the Embassy and exploded. Islamic militants in Egypt have claimed responsibility for the attack. Most of the dead victims were said to be Pakistani security guards and people who were applying for visas to Egypt. It was reported that at least one Egyptian diplomat was also killed.

Sardar Aseff Ali, Pakistan's Foreign Minister said that the bombing was a "dastardly attack." He also said, "It was a terrorist attack perpetrated by a suicide bomber who may have blasted his way through the gate and exploded his pickup truck." The powerful blast tore the entire side off the Embassy building, according to witnesses. There was said to be two explosions about three minutes apart. The bombing attack happened at about 9:30 a.m. Pakistan time, when the Embassy was open for business. Sunday is a regular working day in that part of the world.

The second explosion was reported to be more powerful than the first explosion and was probably designed to kill and/or hurt rescuers. The explosion could be felt from several miles away. A police constable, who is a security guard for the Egyptian ambassador said, "I was standing outside the gate and the body of a police officer came flying over the wall and landed beside me."

The Egyptian ambassador was stunned by the explosion, but was unhurt. The police constable who witnessed the bombing said that the first explosion appeared to happen outside of the Embassy compound and the second, much larger explosion, came from within the walled area. Body parts of victims were said to have been scattered on the street around the Embassy. An Embassy worker said, "It was a massive explosion." Many people were reported to be trapped in the rubble of the 3-story building. A hole ten feet deep was reported outside of the Embassy building. Many other buildings inside of the compound, including offices and apartments, were said to have also suffered severe damage."

By reading between the lines it shall be understood as follows:

- 1) Car-bombs do not explode twice – especially with 3 minutes interval.
- 2) Car-bombs do not create holes, especially as deep as 10 feet.
- 3) 250 pound (100 kg) of ordinary explosives can not create an explosion that could be felt several miles away.
- 4) Casualties could have been understated – for example, there could be quite a few people, who disappeared without a trace, plus many more people injured by penetrating radiation and by radioactive dust (but not visibly injured as to be bleeding or burned) could die later, but it was not reported.
- 5) Since the second explosion had apparently nothing to do with the first explosion, and its hypocenter was located inside the Embassy compound, yet outside the Embassy building, it shall be presumed that a “mini-nuke” was hidden in sewage – as it is usual for this type of nuclear bombings. Probably, some local Pakistani sewage worker was bribed by “someone” to help a certain operative to place the “mini-nuke”. I guess when such a worker was helping installing it, he was made to believe that it was merely a kind of eavesdropping device, allowing “someone” to “only” monitor conversations in the Egyptian Embassy – and nothing more sinister than this. Of course, I could be mistaken, but I think I am not.

6) It is also very suspicious that there was any truck at all involved in the bombing. All those people who could testify later about exact details of the attack were apparently killed because of being too close to the hypocenter of this nuclear explosion. The supposed “truck” should have been annihilated by the same nuclear explosion. Therefore, it is quite possible that there was no truck at all involved in this bombing, because the truck was not actually needed. The first explosion could have been merely a small bomb packed into a passenger car or even onto a motorbike, parked near to the Embassy’s gates – in order to attract attention.

Culprits: culprits of this kind of mini-nuclear bombings are always the same.

Motives: unknown, due to its being too long ago. Probably, it was just a routine measure, designed as a part of a larger project to get the due attentions of governments of Muslim countries such as Egypt and Pakistan, and to force them and their secret services to cooperate closer with American and Israeli secret services. Another possibility is that since the so-called “good guys” had not hit upon an idea to use their former ally Osama bin Laden in a role of the new global nuclear bomber by the year 1996, it seems that they initially decided to stake on the newly created so-called “Egyptian Islamic Jihad” headed by their shill – Dr. Ayman al-Zawahiri. In this view, the Egyptian Embassy bombing supposed to serve as the first “show-action” of the new candidate to the role of the “new global enemy”. Of course, an additional effect of this bombing was the promotion of the newly invented so-called “Muslim terrorism”/“Militant Islamism”. By extension, it would also serve for promoting the so-called “Al-Qaeda” (since the so-called “Egyptian Islamic Jihad”, under Dr. Ayman al-Zawahiri, would soon [allegedly] be united with the so-called “Al-Qaeda”, under Osama bin Laden – into one bigger entity).

It seems that this one was the first mini-nuclear bombing that was no longer blamed on the Islamic Fundamentalists (old, genuine enemies of the Freemasons). From the very beginning, this bombing was blamed directly on al-Zawahiri and his new organization bearing the old idiotic name “Islamic Jihad” – instead of being blamed, as before, on Iran, Hezbollah and other kinds of Islamic Fundamentalists.

It, therefore, appears that this particular nuclear bombing had opened a new page in the book of the so-called “terror”.

1996 Khobar Towers nuclear bombing, Dhahran, Saudi Arabia.

This is the official information on the Khobar Towers bombing (re-phrased by me for better perception):

Al Khobar Towers were a part of a housing complex, which in 1996 was being used to house foreign military personnel, including Americans. The “terrorists” were alleged to have smuggled “explosives” into Saudi Arabia from Lebanon [don’t miss this point – from Lebanon]. In Saudi Arabia, they supposedly purchased a large truck used for sewage treatment, called a “honey pot” by U.S. troops in the area, and converted it into a “bomb”.

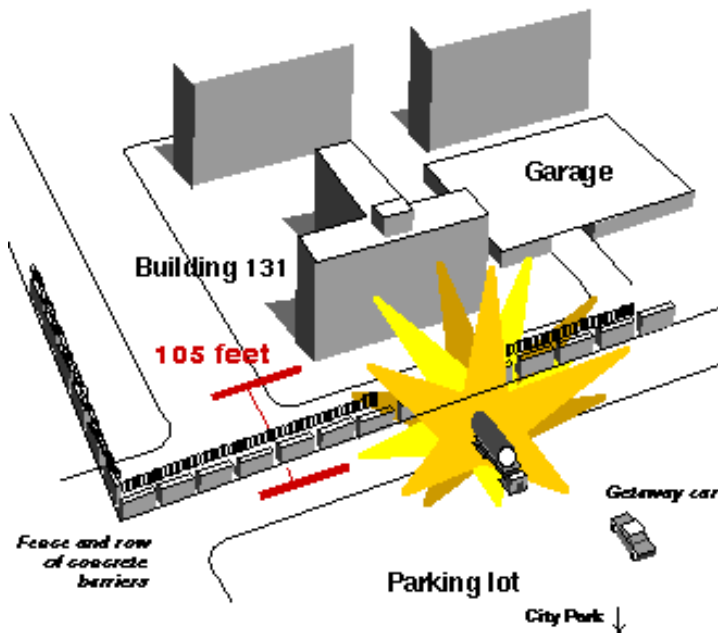

It was originally estimated by U.S. authorities to have contained 3,000 to 5,000 pounds (1360 to 2270 kg) of explosives. Later, the General Downing report on the incident suggested that the explosion contained the equivalent of 20,000 to 30,000 Pounds of TNT. [When it became to look a little bit ridiculous – especially in the eyes of the military personnel – those who produced the cover-up story had decided “to increase” the alleged amount of the “explosives” by 6-fold against the initially stated digit].

The target was building #131 – an eight-story building housing United States Air Force personnel from the 4404th Wing, primarily from a deployed rescue squadron and deployed fighter squadron. The car-bomb exploded at approximately 9.50 PM local time, June 25, 1996.

The alleged “truck-bomb” was said to be parked at the parking lot adjacent to building #131, being separated from the building by a distance of 72 feet (22 meters).

The force of the explosion was enormous. The size of the charge created an intense dust storm as the forces of the high pressure blast wave and the subsequent vacuum forces caused considerable damage in their own right. Several military vehicles parked to the left side of building #131 suffered no direct impact from debris, but were heavily damaged by the sheer intensity of the shock wave. It also heavily damaged or destroyed six high rise apartment buildings in the complex. Windows were shattered in virtually every other building in the compound and in surrounding buildings up to a mile away.

Khobar bombing according to official claims.

An enormous crater, 85 feet wide and 35 feet deep, was left where “the truck” had been. In all, 19 U.S. servicemen and one Saudi were reported killed [please, note, that terms “killed” and “reported killed” are not the same – as has been successfully proven above] and 386 were injured (according to unofficial sources, the number of injured was 515), of the many nationalities reported wounded included 147 Saudis. The blast was felt 50 miles (80 km) away in the Persian Gulf state of Bahrain. The numbers of those who died later from among those reported injured has never been made public. The types of injuries has never been specified, but could be easily guessed by a discerning observer. Seismic records of the explosion have never been made public, but could be easily guessed by seeing the mere size of the crater.

The above is the official picture of the 1996 Khobar Towers bombing as provided by an official U.S. military website. You would probably be surprised to know what the file-name was of this “*.jpeg” photograph – that a U.S. military photographer (or maybe a U.S. military web-site designer) had assigned to this picture before placing it onto the website.

The file name was: “Khobartowersgroundzero.jpg”

This is how that JPEG file used to be named when I attempted to save it on my computer (by right-clicking it with my mouse and selecting “Save as...” option) from the Wikipedia article in February 2011:

Above – a screenshot (top) and an enlarged portion of the same screenshot (bottom) from the author’s computer made during his attempt to save a scaled-down photograph of the crater of the Khobar bombing from the contemporary Wikipedia article, located at http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Khobar Towers bombing , on 10 February 2011. It shows its file-name as “220px-Khobartowersgroundzero.jpg”.

The full version of this photograph (1470x965 pixels, 518Kb size, MIME type: image/jpeg) was located on a separate Wikipedia web-page here: <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Image:Khobartowersgroundzero.jpg> and referred to (I am quoting): “...a work of a U.S. Military or Department of Defense employee, taken or made during the course of the person’s official duties. As a work of the U.S. federal government, the image is in the public domain...”

In fact, I noticed this photo of such a seditious thing with such a seditious file-name on the Wikipedia article for the first time around the end of the year 2007, or beginning of 2008, but I did not bother to make the screenshot at that time. I simply saved the photograph to my collection, keeping its nice name-file as is. At the same time, I also went directly to the U.S. Department of Defense's official web site and found that seditious photo in its database by searching its site for "groundzero.jpg" keyword. It was indeed there, but I did not bother to make any screenshot of that D.O.D. web page either (for which I feel very pity now). However, in February 2011, it luckily occurred to me that this seditious photo might not survive on the Internet for a long time, so I decided to make a screenshot of it direct from the Wikipedia page that is shown above. My intuition did not fail me that time – because when I went to review the Wikipedia article shortly before completing this book at the end of 2012, the seditious photo with the seditious file-name was no longer included in the "updated" Wikipedia article on the Khobar Towers bombing. If you go there now, you will see that the current layout of the Wikipedia article is different compared to what is shown on the above screenshot of the same article as on February 2011. The separate page that used to host the actual full-size photograph was completely removed. Wikipedia's log on the replacement of the removed page indicated that the photo was removed by a certain "Wikipedia user Fastily", an apparent paid shill, on 23 August 2011, 00:22. Here is how that page looks today:

Above – a recent screenshot from the <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Image:Khobartowersgroundzero.jpg> web page that used to host the seditious DOD photograph prior to August 21, 2011.

Luckily, the actual seditious words "Khobartowersgroundzero" used in the name of the seditious crater's photo are still present on the deleted page and you can still get the point (see the screenshot above).

This photograph was also removed from the U.S. Department of Defense's database and is no longer available on any official web site. The so-called "good guys" realized their mistake, at last.

However, you could still find that seditious photo of the crater, together with its seditious original file-name, here: <http://picasaweb.google.com/lh/photo/FoUNQPGwUlwhHjRvITPhf9g> A description under the photo on the picasaweb.google.com site reads as follows: "960626-N-00000-004? U.S. and Saudi military personnel peer into the crater caused by the explosion of a fuel truck outside the northern fence of Khobar Towers on King Abdul Aziz Air Base near Dhahran, Saudi Arabia, at 2:55 p.m. EDT, Tuesday, June 25, 1996."

As you probably remember – it has been discussed at the beginning of this book that before September 11, 2001, the term "ground zero" was used exclusively in regard to nuclear or thermonuclear explosions. The U.S. military specialist did not make any mistake in choosing such a seemingly queer name for this particular graphic file. The spot of the "truck-bombing" in Khobar was obviously called "ground zero". That is why the photographer, who took this photograph (or, probably, a person who scanned the actual picture into a digital format, considering that in 1996 almost all photos, especially high-quality ones, were taken using the old film technology), named its JPEG file accordingly.

This, by the way, is another illustrative sample of how sometimes confidential information is being “innocently” leaked to the “plebeians. It is the same as that “millisecond” slip of the tongue – which initially attracted undue attention to the nuclear bombing in Bali. It is good to remind the reader one more time that this file-name was assigned to this photo before 9/11. The photograph of the Khobar crater existed on the U.S. Department of Defense’s web site since 1996 (i.e. five years before the WTC nuclear demolition) and ever since it bore the file-name “khobartowersgroundzero.jpg”.

Actually, the funny thing is that the shills always use this opportunity to accuse the author of these lines of “creating a theory on alleged WTC nuclear demolition based solely on the fact that the spot of the former WTC is called by Ground Zero words”. The shills prefer “not to notice” another claim of mine: that I used to be a commissioned officer in the Soviet Special Control Service, responsible for nuclear explosions’ detection and I knew about the nuclear demolition plan of the WTC more than 10 years prior to 9/11. In the case of particularly “Khobar Towers bombing”, however, I do admit that I indeed base my claims that the bombing was nuclear, primarily on the fact that its hypocenter was called “ground zero” and the abovementioned unfortunate photo is used to serve as my primary evidence to this effect. Notable thing is that in this case the shills preferred not to argue with me – trying to prove that “ground zero” was an allegedly “idiom” or a “colloquialism” – instead, they preferred to remove the seditious photograph.

The rest of the considerations, applicable to the Khobar bombing case, are the same as those mentioned in the previous cases, of which primary ones are these three:

- car-bombs and truck-bombs do not make craters;
- two tons of conventional explosives could cause neither the heavy damage, nor the heavy casualties;
- spots of conventional explosions are never dubbed “ground zero”.

Conclusion: one must be completely insane to believe that the crater shown above could have been produced by any conventional explosives loaded onto a truck. This crater could not have been created even by a “mini-nuke” loaded onto a truck. Such a “mini-nuke” must have been buried quite deep into the ground to cause such an excavation effect. The very minimum that could have been buried into sewage near the building #131, was a “mini-nuke” set to explode at 0.2 kiloton yield (meaning 200 tons of TNT equivalent). Certainly a lot more than the measly 15 Tons “estimated” by the “authorities”—Ya think?

One might probably ask this question: why did they bother to bury that “mini-nuke” so deep and did not explode it just on the surface? Answer: to minimize the damage as much as possible and to hide those obvious effects of a typical nuclear explosion as much as possible from those lay civilians – leaving only the military specialists alone to understand that it was a nuclear weapon. In other words: they did not want to make a kind of a “mini-Hiroshima” out of the Khobar housing complex.

The “Khobar Towers bombing” was apparently intended from the very beginning as an “exclusive” kind of “terror” – designed only to impress the “patricians” alone, without scaring any plebs. Why? – someone might ask. I do not know why – probably, “someone” needed to “prove” to his American patrons that those “evil” Islamic Fundamentalists in Iran were still dangerous even after the death of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini (despite the fact that the Islamic Fundamentalism as an anti-masonic and anti-NWO ideology went to its internal rest simultaneously with the demise of its elderly founder in 1989). It also might have been an attempt to denigrate Hezbollah – which represented the major danger to the Israeli occupation of Southern Lebanon. It could be some other political intrigue behind it, which is difficult to guess now when more than 15 years have passed. Therefore, I do not know.

Culprits: the U.S. officials initially attempted to blame this perpetration on a certain hitherto unheard of Saudi organization named “Hezbollah-al-Hijaz” – supposedly a Shi’a organization, ostensibly linked to the well-known Lebanese Hezbollah. This hitherto unheard of organization was seemingly connected to that militant branch of Islam which used to be practiced in Iran during the Islamic Revolution, otherwise known as the “Islamic Fundamentalism”. This claim has been also supported by the Saudi Interior Ministry – because it was convenient for the Saudis to pretend believing that a tiny Shi’a minority in this country (that was in constant opposition to the Saudi ruling family) was the only culprit.

Interestingly, the American FBI in this case suffered the most humiliating setback. The FBI made a deal with one Shi’a Muslim of Saudi origin, who was supplied by the Saudi colleagues. That man initially agreed to be extradited to America and plead guilty immediately in exchange for something. He was supposed to play roughly the same role as Timothy McVeigh played during that infamous trial on the Oklahoma bombing or the same role as infamous clowns Khalid Sheikh Mohammad at al and Zacarias Moussaoui would play in the corresponding clowneries purported to represent “court trials” on the first WTC bombing and on the 9/11 perpetration. Upon his arrival to the United States, however, the man pleaded not guilty and claimed his complete innocence based on his alibi. He was not even present in Saudi Arabia at the time of the bombing.

Nearly five years after a powerful truck bomb ripped through a U.S. military housing complex in Saudi Arabia – killing 19 Americans and wounding 372 – terrorism charges have been brought against 13 members of the pro-Iran Saudi Hizballah, or "Party of God." Another, as yet unidentified, person who is linked to the Lebanese Hizballah has also been charged in the attack.

According to the indictment returned today by a Federal Grand Jury in Alexandria, Virginia, nine of the fourteen are charged with 46 separate criminal counts including: conspiracy to kill Americans and employees of the United States, to use weapons of mass destruction, and to destroy U.S. property; bombing; and murder. The five others are each charged with five conspiracy counts. The indictment alleges that the conspiracy was driven by the motive to expel Americans from the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia.

From the seditious screenshot of the FBI's web page (that no longer exists, of course) shown above, you can see that even very shortly before 9/11, the U.S. officials did not even try to link any Sunni "Al-Qaeda" to the Khobar bombing. As of June 21, 2001, that perpetration was solely blamed on the old-type Islamic Fundamentalists of the Shi'a creed – "pro-Iranian Hizballah" a/k/a "Lebanese Hizballah". Make sure to notice also what kind of offence these folks were actually accused of according to the text of the indictment. Read carefully the second paragraph from the above. Do not fail to notice words "weapons of mass destruction" so negligently leaked by the careless FBI's folks to the plebeians...

As you probably remember, in 1996, the so-called "Al-Qaeda" (which was obviously a Sunni "Wahhabi" organization and by no means – the "Islamic Fundamentalist" one) had not been elevated to be the main enemy of the so-called "democracy", yet. It was even vice-versa: the "Al-Qaeda" was still considered being a kind of ally of the United States till then. In fact, Osama bin Laden and Co. helped the Americans to fight the Soviet "infidels", who invaded Afghanistan (and, simultaneously – helped the Freemasons to exterminate the real Islamic Fundamentalist ideology, the followers of the Adat in Afghanistan and elsewhere, and replace the Adat law with annoying so-called "Shariah laws", thus, paving the way for the future abolishment of Islam whatsoever, due to this annoyance, and so paving the way for instillation of "secular laws").

The so-called "Al-Qaeda" had been elevated to the status of the "new main enemy" of the West only after the final demise of the Islamic Fundamentalism. This would happen a couple of years after the Khobar Towers bombing (of course, the Islamic Fundamentalism was nominally dead by 1989, but some of its remnants continued to hang around and to haunt the so-called "good guys" even a few years after that). Anyhow, since the so-called "Al-Qaeda" had been elevated to its new status, the U.S. officials almost immediately attempted to blame the "Khobar Towers bombing" on Osama bin Laden. Those folks who claimed such a thing, clearly disregarded an obvious fact: the Sunni wahhabis, (who were always considered being cowardly products of the former colonialism and obedient watchdogs of the current Western imperialism) and the Islamic Fundamentalists (who were considered being true revolutionaries with the real anti-imperialist, anti-masonic, and anti-NWO agenda), were mortal enemies of each other. Under no circumstances could the so-called "Militant Islamists" and the genuine Islamic Fundamentalists come to any terms – in order to jointly plot such a thing as the bombing of the American servicemen in Khobar. Nonetheless, despite this logic, as early as in the end of the 1999, Osama bin Laden had been already blamed for this particular perpetration – first unofficially, but after 9/11 – officially.

For example, in 2004, the notorious “9/11 Commission” noted that:

“Osama Bin Laden was seen being congratulated on the day of the Khobar attack”, and this raised the possibility that “he may have helped the group, possibly by helping to obtain the explosives or the sophisticated timing device used to enable the escape of the perpetrators”³⁷⁴.

This was in a sharp contrast with the previous position of the U.S. Government and its FBI on this issue. Just shortly before the final elevation of Osama bin Laden and his guys to their new roles, and especially before 9/11, the U.S. officials used to claim that *“classified evidence suggests that the government of Iran was the key sponsor of the incident, and several high ranking members of their military may have been involved”*³⁷⁵.

Apparently, no reasonable person had been around to enlighten those American officials to the fact that such a nuclear beginner as Iran could not produce any “mini-nukes”, especially back in the mid-’90s, and that such a precise device as a modern “mini-nuke” could have only been supplied by a handful of the developed countries (the USA, Russia, France, Israel, possibly, the UK – even China and India were then not developed enough to produce those “mini-nukes”, not to say Pakistan, Iraq and the rest). Moreover, no specialist on the Islamic world has ever bothered to enlighten those U.S. officials that the kind of Islamic agenda that existed in Shi’a Iran and that of the so-called “Al-Qaeda” were so far apart from each other, that the “Al-Qaeda” would more likely make some agreement with the Jews, than with the Iranians.

Probably, the most bizarre notion is the belief that Islamic Fundamentalism – as was practiced in Iran during the 1979 Islamic Revolution and Ayatollah Khomeini’s rule, and the modern so-called “Militant Islamism” as practiced by the so-called “Al-Qaeda” – are allegedly the same thing. In fact, these two ideologies are as far from each other as were the Communist ideology and the Nazi ideology half-century ago. Unfortunately, the majority of people do not even bother to understand this. Probably, the reader will be enlightened a little bit if he gets to know the beliefs and workings of the Islamic Fundamentalists (I mean a branch of real Islam with the real revolutionary and the real anti-imperialist agenda) as opposed to those bogus “Islamists”, created at the expense of the CIA, its Pakistani, and Saudi Arabian lackeys – such as the so-called “Al-Qaeda”, “Taliban”, “Egyptian Islamic Jihad”, etc.

Here is, for example, what Sheikh Hassan Nasrullah – the Hezbollah’s Secretary-General – says about the “Made in the USA” Afghani Taliban:

*“The worst, the most dangerous thing that this [so called] Islamic revival has encountered ... was the Taliban The Taliban state presented a very hideous example of an 'Islamic state’.”*³⁷⁶

This was uttered not because Hezbollah belonged to Shi’a and Taliban – to Sunni branches of Islam. This particular attitude had nothing to do with any sectarian differences between Shi’a and Sunni. It was because the Taliban, as well as the so-called “Al-Qaeda”, had nothing to do with Islam at all.

The Taliban, even though it was seemingly created by the CIA through its “wahhabi” lackeys in Saudi Arabia and Pakistan, in reality, was conceived by the Freemasonic sect. The Taliban was cunningly intended from the very beginning as a very special tool of the so-called “good guys” to destroy the Adat Law (that was an equivalent of the Mosaic Law in Afghanistan – a free, technically feudal country that has never been a colony of the West) and it apparently served its purpose. After all those ridiculous Taliban’s “legal innovations” in Afghanistan, which continued for 6 years, Afghani people grew so annoyed with its interpretation of “Islam”, that when the Taliban was eventually kicked out, all these people wanted was a secular state. Now they do not want back the Adat Law that used to make them free for centuries; they do not even want to hear about any Islam at all – they are pretty fed up with it, thanks to the Taliban. And this was exactly what the Freemasons wanted when they created the Taliban in the first place. It helped them to colonize the last feudal country on the Globe without any fighting whatsoever – they did it by simply replacing its basic ideology. For example, to do the same thing in regard to the United States in the 19th century (I mean converting the United States from the formerly free feudal country into a modern “secular” society where a citizen need a “license” from the cop to carry a weapon and even to drive a vehicle) required 5 years of heavy fighting in the Civil War. In today’s Afghanistan the Freemasons did it without firing a single shot – by simply annoying people with the “Shariah laws” for the period of 6 years.

For an ordinary Westerner, who did not even bother to read the New Testament, not to say about the Old Testament, and who knows about religion virtually nothing, it might look “logical” that “Hezbollah” and “Al-Qaeda” might plot something together. However, unlike the Westerners, educated people in Muslim countries, have quite a clear understanding of things. It would not take them too long to understand who created the Taliban or “Al Qaeda” or to understand why they were created. Do you remember what was said by that alleged “nuclear bomber” (who won the case against him in court) – Abu Bakar Bashir, an elderly Islamic cleric from Indonesia and the alleged “god-father” of the so-called “Jemaah Islamiah” terrorist organization? He said that “Al-Qaeda” was created by the CIA only for the reason of persecuting Muslims; while “Jemaah Islamiah” (of which he was supposedly a patron) does not exist at all³⁷⁷. Indeed, educated Muslims have a much clearer view of things and a much better grasp of reality than an average Westerner, duped by his TV-set, mass media propaganda, by his i-Pod/i-Pad/i-Phone and by the rest of his gadgets, could even imagine. Make sure to notice that unlike Sheikh Hassan Nasrullah of Hezbollah, who is Shi’a, Abu Bakar Bashir is Sunni – just to make sure that the latter’s comments on the true origins of the Sunni “Al-Qaeda” could not have been conditioned by supposed “sectarian difficulties”.

Considering all described above, you can be absolutely sure that if some “Muslim terrorist” of the so-called “Militant Islamism” creed would approach an educated Islamic Fundamentalist (of either Shi’a or Sunni creed, it does not matter) with a proposal to bomb something together, he would be immediately recognized as an agent provocateur of the Freemasonic sect. In the best case, such a provocateur will be shot or stabbed on the spot, but in the most probable case – he will be tortured to death, because the serious good guys are very much interested in hunting and exterminating the so-called “good guys” and so they will try to extract as much as possible from such an agent-provocateur before sending him to Hell.

It will be good to understand once and forever that organizations such as “Jemaah Islamiah” or “Islamic Jihad” exist only in the sick imaginations of uneducated Western politicians (who did not even bother to read the Bible in their entire lives, despite visiting Church every week; because if they read the Holy Scripture, they would surely notice that the Islamic Fundamentalists do nothing else but promote the Old Testament as the “fundament” of Islam, hence their very name; while the so-called “wahhabis”, at the pay of the Freemasonic sect, do exactly the opposite – they deny the Old Testament by claiming that it is a “Jewish book” and allege that the “fundament” of Islam is the Quran alone).

It shall be mentioned also, that unlike most of the U.S. politicians, not all U.S. military specialists seem to be obedient lackeys of the Freemasons (and, by extension, of that branch of the Freemasonic sect that goes by the name “Israeli secret services”). The overwhelming majority of U.S. military specialists, of course, agreed with the ridiculous leads “helpfully” provided by the Mossad to the effect that the Saudi and the Lebanese Hezbollah were allegedly responsible for this heinous perpetration, and that they were allegedly funded by Tehran, Iran. Nevertheless, some of those U.S. military experts were not so gullible.

For example, U.S. bomb experts found “residue” from the “explosives” used in the Khobar bombing *“that were only available to the U.S. Military and Israel”*³⁷⁸. This utterance if translated from the Plebeian into the Patrician- or into the Barbarian languages, should mean that the U.S. nuclear weapons experts by studying the residue left by the nuclear explosion in Khobar managed to establish that the mini-nuke used to excavate that crater with the “khobartowersgroundzero” name was not “made in USSR”, but made in either the United States or in Israel.

Many of the more innocent U.S. military personnel (probably, they were not even told that it was a nuclear bomb) argued that the mere level of sophistication of the attack, points out that the “terrorists” were well-acquainted with the lay-out of the entire Khobar housing complex. It would be impossible for them to so easily pick-up their final target. They argued that only Israeli advisors, who were allowed to freely move around the complex, might have such exact knowledge. Of course, all of those military dissidents who could voice such seditious suspicions were quickly ordered to shut up.

1998 double nuclear bombing of American Embassies in Kenya and Tanzania.

By the year 1998, the so-called “Al-Qaeda” had been already elevated in its status as being the new “main enemy” of the so-called “democracy” – as the replacement of the then defunct Communists and the virtually defunct Islamic Fundamentalists. Therefore, unlike previous “car”-bombings of this kind, both bombings of the U.S. Embassies in Africa must have been intended for public consumption from the very beginning. The newly set up global enemy needed to be promoted, to begin with. Nonetheless, since their original pre-destination, the obvious nuclear truth of these two 1998 “car”-bombings had to be hidden from the “plebeians”. The plebs were supposed to believe that both of these acts were “conventional”. That is why in the officially publicized accounts of events of the 1998 bombings the nuclear truth was not as obvious as it was in the case of the 1996 “Khobar Towers bombing”.

Nevertheless, since I believe the discerning reader of this book is becoming more and more educated and increasingly advanced, even in this case, one would be able to unearth the truth without quotation marks.

Official claims (quoted original Wikipedia article, text of which has been changed since)³⁷⁹:

“...In the 1998 US Embassy bombings (August 7, 1998), hundreds of people were killed in simultaneous car bomb explosions at the United States embassies in the East African capital cities of Dar es Salaam, Tanzania, and Nairobi, Kenya. The attacks, linked to local members of the al Qaeda terrorist network headed by Osama bin Laden, brought bin Laden and al Qaeda to international attention for the first time, and resulted in the US Federal Bureau of Investigation placing bin Laden on its Ten Most Wanted list. Car bombs in vehicles adjacent to the embassies were detonated almost simultaneously before 10.45 am local time (3.45 am Washington time). In Nairobi, about 212 people were killed and an estimated 4,000 injured; in Dar es Salaam, the attack killed at least 11 and wounded 85 (it was a holiday in Tanzania and the US Embassy was closed, that is why casualties were unexpectedly low)...”

And that’s it.

U.S. Embassy, Tanzania.

Since official information this time does not want to reveal to us any seditious data, such as “craters”, seismic signals, and other “odd” effects (not counting the incredibly huge number of mass casualties such as 212 killed and 4000 (!!!) injured only by the Nairobi bombing), we have no choice than to sift through some contemporary news releases (thanks to the Internet, which keeps in its incredible memory even those seditious pieces of evidence which suppose not to be kept at all).

³⁷⁹ http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/1998_United_States_embassy_bombings

Here is one of the perfectly seditious news releases – it was found at this Internet address:
<http://www.travelpages.com/kenya/nairobi/guides/97191.html> ; I quote here some excerpts from it:

“...the van's cargo of 800kg of TNT exploded, gouging a deep crater in the ground, setting fire to the asphalt and propelling the vehicle 10m into the air, where it remained stuck to the side of the embassy in a cloud of black smoke and flame. The force of the explosion was so intense that it was felt over 10km away...”

I guess for the newly educated reader this piece of information is enough? If not, then I am obliged to elaborate: car-bombs do not leave any craters when exploded – neither “deep”, nor even shallow ones. Car-bombs do not set fire to asphalt. Car bombs do not propel cars 10 meters up into the air – they do exactly the opposite – they press cars to the ground. 800 kg of TNT could not produce such an intense explosion that it could be felt over 10 km away. You get it, so far?

The article continues:

“In the embassy itself - the intended terrorists' target - some forty people perished (twelve of them Americans) despite the reinforced concrete walls. The brunt of the blast, however, was borne by the adjacent four-storey Ufundi Cooperative House, a commercial building that also housed a secretarial and computer college. It was reduced to a mound of burning rubble. Next to it, the 22-storey Cooperative Bank Building skyscraper had black smoke pouring out from its shattered windows. Altogether, some forty buildings within a 150-metre radius were seriously damaged by the blast. In the packed streets below, thousands of people were showered with flying glass and masonry, as were the buses and cars that were snared up at the roundabout. In their panic, many fled the city on any transport they could find, believing that World War III had started...”

What we could say? 800 kg of TNT packed near some concrete reinforced building (American Embassies worldwide are as strong as ICBMs silos, by the way – they are not just “reinforced” – they are “heavily reinforced”) can not damage such a building. A mere 800 kg of TNT can not topple a modern building which stands next to the actually targeted one. An explosion of TNT or whatever explosives could indeed shatter windows in some buildings, but it could not set fires to the building's internals behind those shattered windows; only thermal radiation of a nuclear explosion could cause such an effect. The 800 kg of TNT can not “seriously damage” some forty buildings in a 150 meters radius – because the 150 meters radius (300 meters diameter) is a damage zone of an explosion of at least 15 tons of TNT, not that of 0.8 ton. Civilians, even though extremely stupid and cowardly ones, could never mistake a single conventional explosion of 800 kg of TNT for “the starting of the World War III”, which is being routinely associated in the civilian's brains with nuclear weapons – primarily with a blinding flash of a nuclear explosion and with its visible destructive factors. OK?

The above description was for Nairobi, Kenya. The article continues about the second bomb – in Dar es Salam, Tanzania:

“...A few minutes later, a second car bomb exploded outside the US Embassy in Tanzania's capital, Dar es Salaam, killing eleven people. In Kenya, the final toll stood at 263 dead and over 5000 injured, almost all of them Kenyans. Sixty people lost their eyesight, many more were partially blinded, and the material damage was estimated at around $500 million...”

Let us read this one with open eyes: do you really believe that some conventional explosion of 800 kg of TNT is able to instantly kill 263 persons? And injure over 5000 (over five thousand)??? And Blinding 60?

Just try to be realistic. A maximum of what you could kill in the very best case if you only have 800 kg of TNT and a car – is a couple of dozens of people, providing, however, that they stood tightly around your car. You would scarcely be able to kill any more people – even if they stand only a few meters away from the actual explosion. Try to imagine – how it would be possible to instantly kill more people than were killed in Bali? And to injure 15 times (fifteen times) as many as were claimed to be injured in Bali? It would never be possible, unless by some nuclear explosion.

Another slip of the tongue in this article was this: 60 people lost their eyesight and many more became partially blind. What do you think – why would a conventional explosion leave people blind or partially blind? Actually, we have to be thankful to the gross negligence of spin-doctors who were supposed to censure this article: to say that someone has lost his eye-sight is the most incriminating evidence proving that it was indeed a nuclear explosion and nothing else. However, in the case of the 1998 American Embassies bombings they afforded such an unforgivable leakage: the reported loss of eye-sight is much more solid proof of a nuclear explosion than anything else – more than a crater and more than the size of the damaged zone. Even the most skeptical person should have no doubt in this particular case: it was nothing else than two “mini-nukes” that destroyed the U.S. Embassies in Kenya and Tanzania. By the way – the unprecedented number of injured that ran to “over 4000” in the Nairobi, Kenya bombing, coupled with the fact that many people lost their eyesight, suggests that those who were tasked with hiding the mini-nuke into sewage did not hide it deep enough, thus causing the nuclear explosion in the open. It is very obvious.

I hope it is to you, now.

Motives: since it was a relatively recent crime with well-known political consequences, its motives were pretty obvious. “Someone” needed to drive the United States into a new war against imaginary enemies – a new breed of so-called “Muslim terrorists”/“Militant Islamists” (invented by the Freemasonic sect as a convenient, “pocketable” replacement of the genuine Islamic Fundamentalists). It was practically the first major perpetration immediately blamed on their former ally Osama bin Laden and on his so-called “Al-Qaeda”.

The timing for this particular action was chosen perfectly – it was nothing else than the Anniversary of the Hiroshima atomic bombing. It was well known to many people (and without any doubt – known to all, without exception, security officials and high-ranking politicians) that in one of his earlier sermons Osama bin Laden [allegedly] mentioned that it would be fair to use against the Americans even nuclear weapons, because the Americans used an atomic bomb to annihilate peaceful civilians in Hiroshima in 1945. So to use an atomic bomb against America’s own civilians was justifiable, according to him. Of course, it would be just stupid not to use such a convenient statement of Osama bin Laden – especially if you want to transparently “hint” that this time a button of the nuclear terror has been passed from the so-called “Islamic Jihad” and the former fundamentalist “Hezbollah” to the newly created so-called “Al-Qaeda”. That is why you could find no better date than the anniversary of the Hiroshima bombing...

1999 Volgodonsk apartment building nuclear bombing. Russia.

You can not find much information about that unprecedented nuclear bombing anymore. Even an original CNN article that is quoted below has been removed and it no longer exists on the Internet – it was so thoroughly cleaned out that it does not exist even in caches of search-engines and in even in “time-back” web services. It comes as no surprise that the so-called “good guys” do not want such a seditious article to be available to the public’s scrutiny.

Nonetheless, the author of these lines was lucky enough to copy and save in his computer the original CNN article when it was still available on-line. I have its complete, original version saved in a CHM format, so I could make it publicly available if someone requests it, but it is also available from my friend Daniel Estulin, who published its copy here³⁸⁰. Here is the text of the actual article (all you need to know about this nuclear bombing are only two “interesting” points – both made in bold-red in the below text):

“MOSCOW (CNN) -- Russian Prime Minister Vladimir Putin ordered government agencies to increase security and appealed to citizens to protect themselves following a deadly blast Thursday in southern Russia, the fourth explosion at an apartment building in two weeks.

At least 17 people were killed and more than 115 injured when explosives hidden in a truck or an underground pipe blew off the front of a nine-story apartment block in Volgodonsk, about 800 kilometers (500 miles) south of Moscow, Russian security officials said.

Volgodonsk is close to the volatile North Caucasus Mountains region, where Russian forces have been battling separatist militants since early August.

³⁸⁰ <http://www.danielestulin.com/wp-content/uploads/1999.pdf>

Rescue workers and volunteers sifted through the wreckage, peeling off chunks of reinforced concrete and hunting for survivors. Shocked neighbors and weeping relatives looked on.

Meanwhile, firefighters battled a blaze that engulfed several floors of the building.

Traces of explosives were found in the wreckage, the Federal Security Service (FSB) said. The force of the blast was equivalent to about 100-300 tons of TNT, it said.

Russian authorities blamed terrorists for the attack, saying it was linked to a series of explosions in Moscow and the Caucasus region that have killed nearly 300 people.

"This explosion bears the criminals' signature. I think when the experts report what explosives were used, we're going to be able to say that with a high degree of certainty," said FSB spokesman Alexander Zhdanovich.

Government vows to 'wipe out terrorism'

In the wake of the Volgodonsk blast, Putin gave government agencies three days to elaborate plans for strengthening security in industry, transport, communications and energy installations, as well as in residential areas.

During a meeting of his Cabinet, he turned to the television cameras and urged Russians to help prevent attacks.

"I want to turn to military veterans, police veterans. Take the initiative on yourselves," he said.

Russian President Boris Yeltsin tried to calm fears, insisting he has "the strength and resources to wipe out terrorism."

In response to the recent attacks, Russian riot police and soldiers have launched a massive, nationwide security sweep, named "Operation Whirlwind," combing train stations, subways and city streets and detaining anyone they deem suspicious.

In their latest discovery, FSB detectives found 3.5 tons of explosives at an address in southeast Moscow.

But police said they had previously interviewed residents and checked the bombed apartment building in Volgodonsk for possible explosives, and they believe no one could have stored explosive materials inside.

Police suspected a truck that pulled up in front of the building 15 minutes before the explosion could have been involved.

Attack near nuclear plant

Thursday's attack was eight miles (13 km) from an unfinished nuclear power station -- but an atomic energy spokesman said it posed no danger to the plant.

The spokesman said the plant had never used or stored nuclear fuel and was not affected by the bomb.

Some of the power station's workers who lived in the apartment block were injured in the blast, the spokesman said by telephone.

Kremlin denounces speculation as 'wickedness'

The Kremlin reacted angrily to media speculation linking the state security service to a terrorist campaign that has killed nearly 300 people.

It denied reports in a Moscow daily newspaper suggesting the security service engineered the blasts to allow for the declaration of a state of emergency -- and the cancellation of planned elections.

"Here we are up against obvious wickedness," Kremlin spokesman Dmitry Yakushkin said in a statement, referring to the newspaper's allegations.

"By printing such lies, the newspaper effectively assumes for itself a role which has nothing to do with journalism. This is the role of the instigator and the provocateur," he said.

Moscow Bureau Chief Jill Dougherty, The Associated Press and Reuters contributed to this report."

The copyright (if any) over this particular piece shall be deemed null and void due to the fact that this piece of news was elevated from the status of an "article" to the status of a "documentary evidence in the criminal inquiry" (that was, moreover, suffered an attempt to conceal it by the criminals from the due inquiry). I guess it is clear that no proceeds of any crime shall be covered by the concept of "copyright" in order to hide the actual proceeds of the crime from the criminal inquiry.

There is nothing much to comment on in this unprecedented piece of information by CNN. If you are familiar with elementary mathematics, you could probably imagine that it would be possible to pack neither 300 tons, nor even 100 tons of TNT into anything, except, maybe, a cargo train of 20 carriages or so. Do you agree?

In any case, even if such a train exploded, it would not leave any crater... In order to make a crater you need to hide your explosive charge below the earth's surface – which has nothing to do with any “car-bombing”.

Our conclusion would be very simple: the actual devise, which was transparently dubbed in the above article “100-300 tons TNT equivalent” (the expression “TNT equivalent” was the standard Soviet military jargon term – used to refer to yields of nuclear weapons in general) was hidden into sewage opposite the targeted building. This was nothing new, but the standard approach of the modern nuclear terrorists. While the “equivalent” itself was nothing but a “mini-nuke” set to 0.1 kiloton or even a higher yield. Perhaps it was 0.2 kiloton – considering that the explosive experts were even thinking that it might have been the equivalent of 300 tons of TNT.

Motives: motives were pretty clear. The so-called “good guys” needed to drive Russia into the new war against de-facto independent Chechnya. This so-called “car-bombing” was immediately blamed on Chechen “terrorists” that supposedly “went nuclear” (exactly as their alleged patron – the so-called “Al-Qaeda” did a year ago with the nuking of U.S. Embassies in Africa on the anniversary of the Hiroshima bombing). Besides, the so-called “good guys” badly needed to attract sympathies of Russian officials to their main cause – secretive (means unknown to the general gullible public) fight against the “nuclear terror”, which for some reason was almost invariably blamed on Muslims. It was successful. The Russians started a new war against Chechnya that continues even up to this day.

It so happened, that I used to personally know at least two people who were closely acquainted with the results of that bombing. Both of them saw the crater in the earlier minutes – before it was filled with water (as shown on the above picture). None of them believed in any “car-bomb”. They said that it was obvious that the explosive device was hidden into the sewage system deep underground because they could clearly see remnants of torn piping at the edges of the crater. One of these acquaintances of mine was a commander of a firefighters' shift who was on duty at that moment. He said that at the very moment of the actual explosion (that shook the ground and could be felt at a minimum of 15 kilometers away) he looked out of his window in the fire station and was astonished by the form of the cloud of smoke: it was of the perfect “mushroom” form. He was a professional firefighter and he got used to seeing various forms of smoke-clouds. This was a unique one – it at once reminded him of nuclear explosions (though, nobody ever told him that the explosion was indeed nuclear – he learned it only from me several years later).

Earlier news reports in Volgodonsk mentioned quite a peculiar thing: the town officials were very much concerned with the “cloud” and were very glad that the “cloud” was luckily gone with the wind towards a huge water reservoir located nearby, instead of being flown towards populated areas.

Considering that the explosive yield of the Volgodonsk bombing was inadvertently revealed to us by the specialists through the above CNN article, and we can see the size of the crater, we could now imagine how much were the explosive yields in other similar cases where photos of craters are available – such as in the Khobar Towers bombing and in the Oklahoma bombing, as well as in the case of Rafiq Hariri's assassination in Beirut.

2003 May Riyadh compound triple nuclear bombing. Riyadh, Saudi Arabia.

Official claims on this triple bombing that goes by the official name “Riyadh compound bombings” (re-phrased by me for a better perception; the actual info was taken from the former Wikipedia article³⁸¹ on the subject; the text of the article has been changed since):

The Riyadh compound bombings took place on May 12, 2003, in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia. These suicide attacks, attributed to al-Qaeda, were the first of several “spectacular attacks” carried out by that group in 2003, and the deadliest attack on Americans that year. Altogether, some 35 people were killed [unofficial estimates – 91 killed], and over 160 wounded [unofficial estimates put that number as a few hundreds].

The former text of the Wikipedia article³⁸² (as of 2009) provided the following narration:

“...Late on May 12, while much of Riyadh was asleep, four vehicles drove through Riyadh; two cars, a pickup, and a SUV. Two carried heavily armed assault teams and three of them were packed with

³⁸¹ http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Riyadh_compound_bombings

³⁸² Ibid. (the Wikipedia article's text has been changed since 2009 and no longer contains this information)

explosives. Their targets were three compounds: The Dorrat Al Jadawel, a compound owned by the London based MBI International and Partners subsidiary Jadawel International, the Al Hamra Oasis Village, and the Vinnell Corporation Compound, a compound owned by a Virginia-based defense contractor that was training the Saudi National Guard. All contained large numbers of Americans and Westerners.

Around 11:15 PM, a car packed with explosives and five or six terrorists, quietly attempted to gain entry to the Jadawel compound's back gate area. As the guards approached to inspect the vehicle, the terrorists suddenly opened fire, immediately killing one Saudi Air Force policeman and one unarmed Saudi civilian security guard. The attackers sprayed gunfire wildly as they assaulted the inner compound gate, wounding two other unarmed security guards, one of whom managed to secure the gates before fleeing. While the terrorists were still attempting to get inside the compound, their massive explosive charge suddenly detonated, killing all of the attackers and a Filipino worker.

At the Al Hamra Oasis Village and the Vinnell Corp. compound, the assault teams shot at the security guards outside the compound gates and forced their way through the gates. They then detonated both of their bombs, devastating the compounds. Besides the Westerners – main residents of the compound, around nine or ten Saudis were killed, including the son of the Deputy Governor of Riyadh, who lived at Al Hamra. Many of the compound guards were Saudis, and their losses were particularly heavy.

US President George W. Bush called the attacks "ruthless murder". Saudi Crown Prince Abdullah condemned the attacks as the work of "monsters" and vowed to destroy the terrorist group that ordered them. After the attacks, Saudi Arabia began a harsh crackdown on the insurgency, arresting more than 600 terrorist suspects and seizing bomb equipment, guns, bomb belts, and thousands of weapons meant for a terrorist campaign around the kingdom..."

This is the "truth" for the "plebeians": it was allegedly "car-bombs", which destroyed (of course) the supposed cars-carriers, and all those "terrorists-bombers" as well. All of the "bombers" were presumed to be killed in blasts of their own bombs, some of which were so primitive that they could even detonate "suddenly" and "accidentally". The alleged "attackers" were "identified" later allegedly only by some DNA sampling – extracted from their charred remains

Here is one witness account³⁸³. Here we probably will need to use our ability to read "between the lines" also – because this account of events clearly unmasks the official lie about "cars" and "live terrorists":

"...although I missed one of the bombings, the one at the Al Hamra Compound, by only about 45 minutes. This report is based on my conversation with a friend who lived at Al Hamra and on information I have received from the American Embassy and other sources. The Cordoba compound (where I used to live) was NOT attacked. The news reports that said it was are wrong. However, Cordoba did suffer some blast damage -- broken windows and doors blown open -- even though it was about a mile away from the explosion at the nearest compound that was attacked, Al Hamra.

In addition to the Al Hamra compound, which is located close to Cordoba and the Imam University, terrorists also attacked the Jadawel compound (which is about three miles southeast of Al Hamra) and the Vinnell compound (which is another two miles southeast of Jadawel). Reports that terrorists also attacked a small defense-related US-Saudi joint venture business establishment have turned out to be false. Since I know several people who live at Al Hamra and had a long talk with one of them right after the attack, I will focus on the attack there.

My friend is a teacher at the British School and had quite a story to tell. He was awakened by the shattering blast. His apartment was about two blocks away from Ground Zero, which was near one of the compound swimming pools. The terrorists had evaded the security at the front gate of the compound by following a resident's car in after it had been checked through. There were two vehicles – one with four terrorists armed with assault rifles and hand grenades and the other with two terrorists and the bomb. When the guards attempted to stop the terrorists in the first car, they were shot. Several were wounded and at least one was killed.

Both cars proceeded to the swimming pool, firing all the way at whoever was standing in their way. At the pool, where a resident's party was in progress, the terrorists in the first vehicle pulled about 100 feet away and the second vehicle with the bomb was blown up. When he [his friend] emerged, he saw that his block of apartments was still standing, but the apartment block between his block and the swimming pool was missing a wall and the second floor had partially collapsed onto the first. There were many bodies of dead or seriously injured people scattered around the swimming pool, including those of several children.

There were something like 15-20 villas and about a dozen apartment blocks that were destroyed or seriously damaged and a gigantic crater where the vehicle with the bomb had detonated.

As it turns out, the four terrorists in the first car, whose intentions were undoubtedly to murder as many residents as they could after the bomb exploded, were all killed by the force of the blast about 100 feet away. Their charred bodies were found in their vehicle, and the shots and grenade explosions were caused by the “cook-off” of their ammunition detonating due to the fire that started in their vehicle. The bodies of the two terrorists in the bomb vehicle were not found and may never be.

As for the other two compounds, the damage and loss of life was far greater at the Vinnell Compound, which houses civilian expatriate workers employed by the Saudi Arabian National Guard. The terrorists managed to get a car bomb through the gate there also, along with a car with 4-5 terrorists in it. This car was blown up alongside one of the four story dormitories housing the single men working there, completely destroying it and badly damaging another dorm.

The Jadawal Compound, where many American expatriates who work for defense companies live, was the least damaged. The terrorists did not succeed in getting the car with the bomb into the compound, and there was no loss of life among the residents, although several security guards were murdered. There was only one vehicle involved with this attempt, and it attempted to crash through the back gate of the compound, after shooters in the vehicle murdered two guards at the gate. However, it got hung halfway into the compound, thanks to effective vehicles barriers and the quick thinking of guards at the main gate, who noticed the action on TV cameras and shut off the power to the gate so that the terrorists could not open it. Five terrorists jumped out of the vehicle and did manage to get into the compound before they detonated the bomb, seriously damaging several villas nearby. Again, it appears that the terrorists were too near the scene of the blast when they detonated it, as they were all killed in the blast before they had a chance to commit any further carnage. One of my sources tells me that one of the terrorists accidentally detonated a grenade and all five were killed in the subsequent explosion. This is a great story, but it seems more likely that they were simply too close to the massive explosion. Obviously, the resistance put up by the guards and their quick thinking saved the lives of many Jadawal residents...”

1) There were no live terrorists in either of three cases – because it is difficult to imagine that all three (out of three existing) terrorist teams were killed by their own bombs. This would be simply too much – to allow oneself to believe the gibberish of this kind. Moreover, in the first case (an alleged attempt to slaughter as many people as possible at the party by the pool) the “terrorists”, being supposedly armed to the teeth with automatic weapons, could machine-gun as many people as they wished without any need to use such a giant bomb at all. Logic is stubborn thing, as you probably know. If it were not enough automatic weapons, the “terrorists” allegedly had grenades also – which could be used very successfully against unarmed residents who were completely unable to defend themselves.

Conclusion: after promptly evacuating terrified residents, the authorities (probably acting on the “friendly” advice of the local representatives of the American FBI – who had pretty good experience in cover-ups since the Oklahoma- and the 9/11 cases) brought in all those “terrorists” from a nearby morgue (or even from some secret prison). Their remains were charred by blow-lamps and put in some car – already charred by a recent nuclear explosion. Of course, they also supplied these charred corpses with some firearms and ammo as well – to make it look more believable. It could have been also that they did not even bother to bring any charred remains at all and simply invented them for the gullible press (who is going to question the accuracy of the police report?). All those described shoot-outs and grenade blasts were nothing else than false statements, intended to hide the nuclear truth from the “plebeians”.

2) There were no cars involved in any of these three bombings, because, as we already know – under no circumstances may any car-bomb leave any crater, not even to say about a “giant crater”. There were three “mini-nukes” buried in the sewage – as usual. One was hidden in sewage near the swimming pool, in the middle of the residential area – that is why it left that “giant crater”. Another “mini-nuke” was hidden in sewage near the dormitory. And in the third case the culprits were not able to get into the compound, so they succeeded placing the “mini-nuke” into sewage near the compound entrance. So, the “terrorists” only managed to kill the guards near the gates and slightly damaged the few nearest villas – causing less damage in comparison with the first two compounds.

3) The American Embassy's officials again proved that they do not know how to keep their mouths shut properly: they managed to leak to the "plebeians" the most seditious nuclear term "ground zero" – and the "plebeians" continued to use it and passed it to their friends and further – to the wilderness of the Internet.

Culprits: the bogus "car-bomb attacks" were understandably attributed to the so-called "Al-Qaeda", but the real culprits were the same as in any other modern nuclear bombing.

Motives. It is believed that there were general motives behind this nuclear bombing:

- to tie up Saudi Arabia to the cause of fighting the so-called "terrorism";
- to cause the Saudi regime to brutally persecute some religious dissidents, thus causing internal tensions in the Kingdom;
- to scare various "patricians" one more time by "proving" to them that the so-called "Al-Qaeda" still possesses more "mini-nukes";
- and to prove once more that the so-called "international terrorism" does not hesitate to use them – even in a Muslim country, and even against innocent residents – whose private villas, unlike the Twin Towers in New York, do not represent any symbolism in regard to American capitalism.

Thus, the "patricians", one more time, got their chance to see the "true" ugly face of the so-called "Muslim terrorism" and that of the so-called "Militant Islamism".

Moreover, this particular action followed the recent invasion of Americans in Iraq – so it was necessary to show to some Muslims (who might be not so happy with the Americans killing Muslims, moreover, Sunni Muslims in Iraq) that the invasion was really necessary.

2003 November Riyadh housing complex nuclear bombing. Riyadh, Saudi Arabia.

Official claims (as reported in most of the official contemporary news releases^{384 385}):

"...This suicide car-bombing attack against Riyadh housing complex occurred late at Saturday night, November 8, 2003.

At least 17 people were reported killed immediately and more than 220 wounded. Gunmen - possibly disguised as police - shot their way into the 200-house compound, trading fire with security guards. The attackers, believed to be in a police car, then drove into the compound and blew themselves up...

The blast, not far from diplomatic quarters and the king's main palace, left piles of rubble, hunks of twisted metal, broken glass and a large crater.

It still wasn't clear how many attackers there were or if they were listed as among the dead.

The victims included Lebanese, Egyptian, Sudanese and Saudis. The Interior Ministry said most of the wounded were Arabs as well. Most of the compound's residents were Lebanese, but some Saudis, German, French and Italian families also lived there...

An Interior Ministry official told the official Saudi news agency late Sunday that the death toll rose to 17 - including five children - after search crews pulled six more bodies from the rubble. At least 13 were Arabs, with the others as yet unidentified, the official said.

U.S. Deputy Secretary of State Richard Armitage said he was "personally quite sure" al-Qaeda was behind the Saturday night attack "because this attack bears the hallmark of them." Such attacks appear to be directed "against the government of Saudi Arabia and the people of Saudi Arabia," he said, adding that he expected more to follow. Al-Qaeda "will prefer to have many such attacks to appear bigger than they are," he told a news conference shortly after arriving in the Saudi capital. Such attacks showed that "all of us have to work together.".."

Even from this information it is clear that no car was found in an identifiable condition and no bodies of the supposed attackers were found in the identifiable condition either.

Bodies of some of those residents killed in the blast were burned beyond recognition – so that it was not even possible to establish if they were Arabs or not. Despite the fact that no culprits' bodies were found and there was no clue as to the potential culprits, the U.S. officials promptly declared that it was a "hallmark of Al-Qaeda", apparently implying that only the so-called "Al-Qaeda" was allegedly capable of carrying out nuclear bombings and no one else.

"...The rubble has now been bull-dozed away at the site of the blast. The crater left by the massive car bomb - five metres (16 feet) across and three metres deep - has been filled in. The area is still sealed off. Dozens of Saudi Interior Ministry special police are milling around. A jeep with a heavy machine gun stands guard outside. Residents of the compound are seen carrying away their belongings in carrier bags - even those buildings not destroyed are too badly damaged to live in. The reaction of most Saudis to this attack has been angry and emotional - especially as the bombing killed Arabs and Muslims. And during Ramadan. "The royal family is both livid and nervous," was the assessment of one senior western diplomat. What, perhaps, makes the Saudi establishment most nervous of all is the attempt by al-Qaeda to exploit the piety of most Saudis and portray themselves and the true guardians of Islam. So the country's top Islamic cleric here, Sheikh Saleh al-Sheikh, also the minister of Islamic affairs, has issued guidance in the wake of the bombing. "The devil shouldn't drag us to sympathise with those who speak in the name of Islam but whose actions are against Islam," he said. The billionaire investor, Prince al-Waleed ibn Talal, told Saudis on Monday to abandon "stupid conspiracy theories" which blamed foreign hands for every bad event in the kingdom. This was not the work of the Mossad or the CIA, he said. Prince Waleed also said that the kingdom had yet to ask itself honestly why 15 or the 19 hijackers on 11 September 2001, were Saudis..."

Interestingly, while rushing to the defense of the CIA and the Mossad, this "investor" [try to guess where exactly he invests? In the Saudi Holy Land or in the ungodly secular America?] failed to mention that out of those 19 allegedly "suicidal hijackers", 9 had been found alive in only two or three days since the FBI's announcement and all Arabs know of this fact very well. A positive thought that aluminum could not penetrate steel seemed not to occur to this "investor" either.

I hope it is clear for a discerning reader even without any further explanation that car-bombs do not leave craters. So this, fourth in a row, nuclear bombing in one relatively small city (moreover, this time even on Ramadan – while all pious Muslims, even if they are fighting, suppose to stop any fighting during the Holy month) understandably attracted suspicions that it was not Muslims who made this new nuclear bombing of the residential area. Even in such a pre-dominantly pro-American country as Saudi Arabia, there are quite a lot of people who immediately came up with "conspiracy theories" – that if it were not the Muslims, who did that, then it should be the Mossad or the CIA. However, as you could see – all of those "conspiracy theories" were promptly dubbed "stupid". So, that I could only hope that the readers of this book are not.

2003 Baghdad Hotel nuclear bombing. Baghdad, Iraq.

Almost nothing was reported about this odd bombing – probably, it is the least reported of all of them.

Scarce official news³⁸⁷:

*"Monday, October 13, 2003. BAGHDAD, Iraq (CNN) -- Six Iraqis died and 32 people, including three U.S. soldiers, were wounded Sunday in a suicide car bombing near the Baghdad Hotel, which houses Americans and members of the Iraqi Governing Council, U.S. and Iraqi officials said... At least one car exploded about 100 meters from the Baghdad Hotel about 12:50 p.m. (5:50 a.m. EDT). A Pentagon official in Washington said two cars were involved and both exploded. Two suicide bombers -- whose nationalities remain unknown -- died, the Coalition Provisional Authority said, although by early Monday it was still unclear how many vehicles were involved in the attack. Whether or not both cars had explosives in them has yet to be determined. That will have to be the result of some forensic investigation," said Lt. Col. George Krivo, a spokesman for the U.S.-led coalition occupying Iraq. The hotel houses members of the Coalition Provisional Authority, the U.S.-led administration in Iraq, spokesman Charles Heatley said. It also houses members of the U.S.-appointed Iraqi Governing Council, the nucleus of the Bush administration's hopes for a future Iraqi government. The attack reduced nearby structures to rubble and shattered windows blocks away, but the hotel itself was not damaged.....In Washington, the State Department condemned the attack "in the strongest terms possible...."

The main consideration is as usual: car-bombs do not leave craters. Moreover, when cars explode, it is possible to immediately establish, judging by their remains, how many cars were actually loaded with the explosives – so that officials do not need to guess as to “how many cars might have been involved”. Of course, car-bombs do not reduce to rubble nearby structures. And, what is the most important, ordinary explosives do not leave any Uranium-238 in their residue.

This particular nuclear bombing was really unique. Unlike the rest of mini-nuclear bombings, it was in this one somebody used a very different type of the “mini-nuke” (residual analyses later revealed Uranium-238 was used in its reflector³⁸⁸). The knowledgeable guys have apparently noticed the difference between this case and the rest of “car”-bombing cases, so that is why they preferred not to talk about this particular bombing at all. It seems that unlike the rest of “mini-nukings” that are being routinely reported to the “patricians” to cement their determination to fight in Iraq, this one was not reported even to the “patricians” – so unusual it was.

It was unique for many reasons. Firstly, it “oddly” coincided with the First Anniversary of the 2002 Bali bombing. Actually, the “mini-nuke” was hidden in sewage 100 meters away from the Baghdad Hotel and went off right at the moment, when in Indonesia, Bali, Australian Prime-Minister John Howard was delivering his speech to mark the anniversary of that mass nuclear murder in the Sari night club. Secondly, this time, the type of “mini-nuke” used was totally different. Thirdly, the perpetrators this time oddly selected some hotel loved by the CIA spooks (all previous nuclear bombings were intended to scare the “patricians”, but to spare those CIA’s guys). It was really, really a peculiar event. That is why it went largely ignored – the mass media was apparently instructed to ignore this event.

Culprits: this time culprits were obviously different than usual – it seems it was Russian secret services.

Reasons: obviously – to “mark” the first anniversary of the Bali nuclear bombing (people, who work in the Russian secret services are not so stupid, actually, and they know very well who bombed the Sari night club and why). In addition – to “beautifully” retaliate for the unprecedented April 2003 provocation, when

³⁸⁸ <http://www.vialls.com/transpositions/lebed.html>

American planes deliberately attacked the convoy of the Russian Ambassador to Iraq, killing some of his people and nearly killing the Ambassador himself. Most likely, it was also a tacit retaliation for the 1999 nuclear bombing of the apartment building in Volgodonsk. In any case, it seems that this hint (more than a transparent one) was duly understood – at least, it was swallowed by the so-called “good guys” without much noise. The “good guys” had apparently gotten the point.

P.S. The humble author of this book would never even notice this minor nuclear bombing – since it was largely ignored by the mass-media. Thanks to late Joe Vialls – the prominent researcher of mini-nuclear bombings – that this particular information found its way into this Chapter. You can read more about this particular bombing on Joe Vialls’ web page <http://www.vialls.com/transpositions/lebed.html> .

Please note, however, the author of these lines, though deeply appreciating the investigative efforts of the late Joe Vialls, partly agrees with his analysis as to the exact end-perpetrators (in most cases it is indeed the Mossad), in the same time disagrees with Mr. Villas’ when it comes to any deeper analyses. The author of these lines, for example, by no means shares views of those who use words such as “Zionists” and “Zionism” trice in every sentence pronounced, while the late Joe Vialls had apparently that classic “anti-Semitic” and “anti-Zionist” stance. For example, Mr. Vialls believed that nuclear bombings against the Australians were intended to “punish” them for their disobedience in regard to Israel for their supposed refusal to adhere to a general line of fighting against the so-called “terror”. However, the humble author of these lines believes that Australia was selected just because it was firstly an isolated continent, and secondly – because it was governed by an obedient group of America’s lackeys. Therefore, since all those “mini-nuclear” bombings were designed primarily to impress the “patricians” alone, they could probably have the best effect on particularly the Australian “patricians” – if comparing the latter with their French, German, or Italian counterparts, for example.

2004 Saudi Arabian government buildings nuclear bombing. Riyadh, Saudi Arabia.

Official claims (as reported in most of official news releases³⁸⁹):

“...Terrorists launched a suicide car bomb attack April 21, 2004 against Saudi Arabian government buildings in Riyadh. At least 9 people were killed and 148 were wounded in the attack. Powerful car bomb devastated buildings of special security forces and the traffic department. The vehicle exploded at a protective barrier outside the buildings, destroying dozens of other vehicles, damaging shops and property in a building across the road, and shattering windows over a wide area. The explosion resulted from two car bombs that were parked about 50 feet away from the building. The blast was heard and felt more than 3 miles (5 km) away. The explosion occurred during a visit to Riyadh by US Deputy Secretary of State Richard Armitage, on a tour of Gulf states...”

The last was most probably the main cause – however, general causes as described above must also be applicable, in addition.

Here are more detailed witnesses’ accounts³⁹⁰:

“...The bomber was charred beyond recognition. “Cars parked near the site had their windows shattered or cracked as were the windows of apartments in nearby buildings,” one witness said...

...Palestinian President Yasser Arafat and Lebanese Prime Minister Rafik Hariri condemned the attack [ironically, soon, Rafik Hariri would be killed by another “mini-nuke” – produced by the same factory]...

...I was in the office when the blast happened,” said one bloodied and bruised man before breaking down in tears. Fires raged long after the blast, which left a deep crater and a street carpeted in debris from the shattered building. Dozens of blackened and twisted cars smoldered for hours and glass shards and concrete debris covered the tarmac...”

Since we already know how to read between the lines, we can easily make our own conclusions: “charred beyond recognition” supposed “nuclear bomber” was probably delivered from a nearby morgue. What about the rest of the evidence? – it is clear enough: car-bombs do not make any craters, especially deep ones; and ordinary explosions do not burn cars. All of it is just an indication of yet another mini-nuke's job.

Culprits: culprits are always the same – those who are able to produce small modern “mini-nukes” – small enough to secretly slide them into some sewage near the intended target.

2004 Australian Embassy nuclear bombing, Jakarta, Indonesia.

Official claims (they were also quoted in an initial version of the Wikipedia article³⁹¹ text of which has been changed since):

“...September 9. 2004 a one-ton car bomb, which was packed into a small Daihatsu delivery van, exploded outside the Australian embassy at Kuningan District, South Jakarta, at about 10.30 local time, killing 11 people including the suicide bomber, and wounding over 161 others, plus several more disappeared without a trace. It gutted the Greek Embassy on the 12th floor of an adjacent building, where three diplomats there were slightly wounded. Damage to the nearby Chinese embassy was also reported. Numerous office buildings surrounding the embassy were also damaged by the blast, which shattered windows in buildings 500 meters away. The blast was heard and felt 15 kilometers away...”

Just in case you missed the point, or think that some joker has made this mushroom cloud using some computer graphic software (in the same manner as were the “planes” on 9/11), here is another photo of the same event, shot from another part of the city:

³⁹¹ http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/2004_Australian_Embassy_bombing_in_Jakarta

Culprits: this bombing was officially blamed on the so-called “Jemaah Islamiah” terrorist organization, which was supposedly an affiliate of the so-called “Al-Qaeda” in South-East Asia (and which, as you probably remember, does not exist at all, according to its alleged “patron” Abu Bakar Bashir). Soon after the bombing, the so-called “Jemaah Islamiah” purportedly released some fatuous statement, published on “its” website www.islamic-minbar.com (I am quoting):

“We decided to settle accounts with Australia, one of the worst enemies of God and Islam, ... and a mujahideen brother succeeded in carrying out a martyr operation with a car bomb against the Australian embassy in Jakarta...It is the first of a series of attacks. ... We advise Australians in Indonesia to leave this country or else we will transform it into a cemetery for them. The lines of booby-trapped cars will have no end.”

Considering, however, that the “Jemaah Islamiah” has never existed in reality – exactly as the so-called “Islamic Jihad” – the true culprits of this nuclear bombing are officially “unknown”.

Since official information on this particular bombing is unreasonably scarce, we have no choice than to refer to some extra sources in order to find the nuclear truth of this bombing.

Immediately after this nuclear bombing, Mick Keelty, an Australian Federal Police Commissioner, flew to Jakarta and hurriedly came up with a public statement intended to calm down the “plebeians”, officially claiming that this new nuclear disaster was allegedly caused by a “car bomb packed with 200 kilos [500 pounds] of Potassium Chlorate”. What was especially notable that Keelty managed to come up with this public claim before any forensic tests could have been carried out on the crater or its residues, and so he absolutely shamelessly lied to both – the Australian and the Indonesian public.

Later, of course, after studying of the crater’s size and amount of damage inflicted, it was decided to claim further that it was 1 ton of explosives allegedly used, increasing the initially stated digit by “merely” 5-fold. Actually, it supposed to have been increased to 10 tons, considering that a “mini-nuke” obviously went off at 0.01 kiloton, causing corresponding damage, but it won’t be believable to claim that 10 tons of ordinary explosive could fit into a “Daihatsu van”. Even the Australian cops apparently realized that this would be technically impossible and therefore limited their claims to only 1 ton. Poor Indonesians had no choice than to keep silence. What they could do? The nuclear blackmail is first of all the nuclear blackmail. It obviously works as such.

Here is one of the seditious news releases: “Eleven killed in embassy bombing; September 9, 2004 -

7:51PM³⁹². I hope that by now you are discerning enough and can duly appreciate tokens such as “all the hallmarks” and “post-blast analysts” (as opposed to “bomb experts”), not counting expressions such as “serious”, “size”, and “crater”. I quote:

“...The death toll in the bombing at the Australian embassy in Jakarta is believed to have risen to 11, Australian Foreign Minister Alexander Downer has said. Before leaving Adelaide for Jakarta tonight, Mr Downer said it was believed 11 Indonesians were killed in the bombing - one who was a guard at the embassy, four Indonesian police and the rest civilians. The Associated Press quoted the Indonesian health ministry as saying 161 people were wounded. Three of the dead were policemen guarding the building, police said. Mr Downer left with AFP Chief Mick Keelty on a flight from Adelaide at about 6.30pm (CST). Mr Downer's opposition counterpart Kevin Rudd is also expected to travel to Jakarta tonight. "It's the view of the Indonesian National Police that this bombing had all the hallmarks of a Jemaah Islamiah operation," Mr Downer said. Mr Keelty said AFP bomb experts and post-blast analysts were also being flown to Jakarta. "Obviously we know from the Bali Bombing and the Marriott bombing that early evidence, once it's secured, provides the best evidence," Mr Keelty said." Prime Minister John Howard said Australia would not be intimidated by terrorism after the car bomb explosion..."

From now on, please, try your best to extract the implied meaning that is hidden between the lines:

“...Opposition Leader Mark Lathan said terrorists who bombed the Australian embassy in Jakarta were evil and barbaric and must be hunted down." The news that the embassy staff, the Australian embassy staff, have been accounted for is obviously good, it's encouraging," he said. "It's been a serious incident. The size of the bomb and the crater is obviously of concern and we'll have to wait for the fuller details as the matter is investigated in full."

As you can see, the Australian “patricians” themselves are not as stupid as they thought their “plebeians” are. The “patricians” are obviously aware that when there is a crater reported after a so-called “car bombing” it is indeed serious. And, of course, when it is established that none of the diplomats had been vaporized without a trace – it is really “encouraging” as they put it.

The article continues:

“...The bomb, which exploded around 1.15pm AEST about four meters from the entrance gate of the embassy, left a crater three meters deep. All front windows of the building had been blown in from the blast, which came from what appeared to be a large car bomb..." AAP.

Of course, we have to believe them about the “large car bomb”, especially because we already know what a “car-bomb” means when it is translated from the Plebeian language into the Patrician or into the Barbarian (car-bombs do not leave craters, as you probably remember)...

The “mini-nuke” in Jakarta left a crater, because it was traditionally hidden into sewage deep beneath the road. As a result, the heavily-reinforced building of the Australian Embassy was so badly undermined by a subterranean shock wave that it had to be demolished later. Moreover, people around felt such a tremendous ground shake that they initially thought it was an earthquake. This means it was an underground explosion (though not deep enough to be considered “contained”) with close to a maximum of energy communicated to the earth. Of course, as you can probably guess, ordinary explosions do not create typical “mushroom clouds” – such as those shown in the above photographs.

The very same website, that published the first photo with the atomic mushroom cloud over Jakarta, contains also some witness accounts. Here is one of them³⁹³:

“...Most of our staff are busy calling loved ones and friends who happen to live or work in the area. Two of our staff are lucky to be alive, they missed ground zero by a mere 5 minutes (considering Jakarta's traffic jams this is indeed very lucky). Several of our staff have to stay at hotels tonight because they cannot go home as they live in an apartment complex behind the embassy and the police have cordoned off the entire area. One Dutch client I met tonight told me that he was just several hundred meters away from ground zero when the bomb exploded, he was just getting out of his car. The windows in Menara Imperium where he was at shook violently as the shockwave hit them. His children at the Australian school were sent home early...” says Ben Koesmoeljana...”

³⁹³ <http://www.smh.com.au/articles/2004/09/09/1094530767885.html>

Note that “ground zero” is routinely used in description – in a relatively short text, it was even used twice.

Do you think that all Australian citizens of Indonesian birth really have this odd combination of the two words in their every day lexicon? And they routinely refer to any explosion hypocenter as “ground zero”? And could even repeat it twice? I do not think so. Normally, ordinary citizens could pick up such a unique terminology only from specialists – as it has been demonstrated in the case with the demolition site of the former WTC in New York.

Probably before September 11, 2001, evening, ordinary American citizens did not even suspect that such term as “ground zero” might exist whatsoever. The same thing applies to the Australians – they just picked up this peculiar term from some ABC specialists of the Australian military who came to Jakarta to minimize radioactive contamination of surroundings and to conduct precautionary measures in regard to potential health hazards. Those poor guys around could easily swallow some radioactive dust – so they had to be somehow treated to get their organs to get rid of it, at least, to some extent. Do not even doubt that those ABC guys simply used the “ground zero” term when they work at ground zero, because it is just very normal for them. The rest of the folks simply imitated the specialists.

Here is another account³⁹⁴ – belonging to the man who actually took the first photo of the atomic mushroom cloud:

“Around 10.30 am this morning there was a loud but dulled sounding boom, the building shook, and the local people in the office all realized immediately that it was a bomb and rushed to the windows. A large “mushroom” cloud was rising from the low buildings about a couple of kilometers away as the crow flies. I took the photo [the one that appears at the top of this page] not knowing which building had been attacked until about 10 minutes later when reports started screening from the local stations on the office television screens with unconfirmed reports that the target had been the Australian Embassy. The scene unfolding on screen was very graphic and disturbing, and some of the young women in the office were crying on seeing the pictures. One of the clients told me that the majority of the people in the office are Muslim, and no one can understand why terrorists will stop at nothing including injuring people of their own faith...” - says Gavin Wong...”

This was really a good idea to think about it – why would Muslims use nuclear bombs to bomb their own country, if there are such relatively legitimate targets as ungodly secular Australia or the United States?

Here is one more account of events from the same website³⁹⁵; quite interesting for some details:

“I was sitting at my desk at my office in Kebayoran Baru (about 7 km from the embassy), when a single thunderclap rang out and our building shuddered. For an instant, I welcomed the sound, thinking it was the prelude to much-needed rain. Within moments, though, it was obvious that the sound was a bomb.

The sky was cloudless. Moreover, the sound was identical to the one that interrupted a meeting at the Canadian embassy two years ago: the blast at the Marriott [actually, the Marriott bombing in Jakarta was suspected to be nuclear also, but I did not really study it deeply and am afraid to be mistaken to confirm it for sure – however, there are indications that it was also a nuclear one]. I walked into my colleague's office and said “that was a bomb”. Within minutes, confused text messages flooded in; was it Wendy's, a hamburger joint? The Russian embassy? No.

After 20 minutes, all sources indicated the blast was in front of the Australian embassy. I have several friends at the embassy who quickly confirmed that they were unharmed. As usual, the victims were the “little people”, as Indonesians call them; guards, stall owners, pedestrians. The Indonesian television stations were generally slow to pick up the news, but had gruesome footage screening about an hour after the blast. Bloodied guards hobbled off to a nearby hospital (mercifully, the MMC hospital is only 100-200m from the embassy). Journalists had been let into the emergency ward, and were interviewing mangled wrecks of people lying on gurneys. A few covered bodies lay on the ground. The most heart-rending sight was a toddler, wearing nothing but nappies, lying motionless, eyes closed, on the footpath. No blood, no obvious injuries, but clearly in terrible trouble.

One thing struck me: the physical damage to surrounding buildings was dramatic. So how was it that guards and police so near to the blast were not killed instantly? Given the great scale of the physical damage, the death toll seems low. The bomb experts will have to tell us whether that is a consequence of luck or amateurish bombmaking. One of the strange, incongruous sights was the carpet of green leaves that had settled on Jl. Rasuna Said, having been blown off the branches of the large trees that run down the median strip." - says Roderick Brazier..."

Here there is an interesting effect described – the defoliation, which is very typical for low-caliber nuclear explosions, where the thermal radiation does not last long enough to burn the trees, but the air-blast wave is intense enough to effectively shake down all the leaves off their branches. This particular guy wonders that the bomb making in this particular case might have been “amateurish” or that those nuclear bombers might suffer some “bad luck” because the amount of casualties did not correspond to the amount of physical damage.

What we can say to answer him? Only 11 killed and 161 others – wounded? Is that really little? Do not forget also, that several people disappeared without a trace – it could be easily another 20 victims or so. Now, please, try to imagine how bad must have been the physical damage inflicted to the building to let this man wonder that there were “only” 11 killed and 161 injured – in an apparent contradiction to the supposed power of the blast?

Remember, that in the nuclear bombing of the US Embassy in Dar es Salaam, Tanzania, in 1998 the attack killed only 11 and wounded only 85. But at the very same time, a simultaneous nuclear attack against the U.S. Embassy in Nairobi, Kenya, killed 263 and injured over 5,000. However, in both cases of the 1998 African bombings, the actual amount of physical damage inflicted to the surrounding buildings was the same.

Thus, you can safely presume that the number of casualties has absolutely nothing to do with either any “professionalism” of bomb-making or with any “bad luck” to the bombers. Nuclear bombs do not provide any “luck” at all; they have only a kill-zone, which is of a fixed size. The matter of “luck” in this case could only be applied to the positioning of the targeted Embassy building, and, probably, to a certain extent – to working hours of the Embassy; maybe – to a day of the week (maybe the day of the bombing was a holy day, or maybe at the exact time of the bombing people went to pray, or to lunch, or did not arrive to their work yet, or something like that). I hope it is clear, that some Embassy building could be located in a very densely populated area or in a very busy business area, while some other Embassy building could be located on some quiet street, where few pedestrians might pass by within an hour.

In the case of the Australian Embassy bombing there was another factor, that may have saved a few guards even within the kill-zone – the “mini-nuke” was buried very deep in sewage and when it went off, its air-blast wave and other destructive factors from deep underground propagated upwards at some angle – so several guards who stood too close to the hypocenter, managed to appear within a certain “dead-space” – being spared by the actual explosion and not instantly killed. Sometimes people have really good luck. However, there was no information that those guys, who might have still received lethal doses of ionizing radiation, and secondly – might swallow lethal doses of radioactive dust on top of the first, eventually survived. I would guess, they eventually died, but the “patricians” just forgot to report their deaths to the “plebeians”.

Anyhow, let it be understood that if there were 10,000 people staying or walking around the kill-zone of the Australian Embassy at the moment of the explosion – the death toll would be exactly 10,000. What about the “amateurish bomb-making” as this guy suggested – how then did such an “amateurish” bomb manage to inflict such heavy physical damage and manage to shake buildings as far as 7 kilometers away – as in the case with this particular guy, who felt the explosion even being 7 km away from it? I think it is clear enough, that a modern highly-sophisticated “mini-nuke” can not be “amateurish” in any case – it could only be wrought by the most advanced nuclear weapons industries of only a few highly-developed countries.

Motives: it was close to the time of elections in Australia. The incumbent Prime-Minister John Howard – one of the most hysterical proponents of the war against the so-called “terror” – was about to lose the elections. Howard was increasingly unpopular and had absolutely no chance to win. Another person, who had the best chance to win the elections, had promised to withdraw the Australian troops from Iraq. As a result of the bombing of the Australian Embassy, an unprecedented anti-Muslim hysteria followed – boosted by Howard’s hysterical promises “to defend the nation” from those “evil Muslims”. Howard was re-elected, and the Australian troops remained in Iraq.

Moreover, elections in the United States were also nearing and these elections were heavily influenced by the Jakarta “car”-bombing. In addition, there were elections in Indonesia itself and the Indonesian elections were also heavily influenced by that bombing – a former Indonesian security chief was elected the country’s President. These were the motives. Seem pretty clear to you?

Who bombed the Embassy in Jakarta? It was bombed by the same gang, which previously bombed the Sari night club in Bali, American Embassies in Kenya and Tanzania, Khobar Towers in Saudi Arabia, and American Marines with French paratroopers in Beirut. The gang of mini-nuclear bombers is the only one in the world. And only this gang is responsible for all those mini-nuclear bombings.

2005 nuclear assassination of former Prime-Minister Rafiq Hariri. Beirut, Lebanon.

Official claims (as from the corresponding Wikipedia article³⁹⁶):

“...Rafic Baha El Deen Al-Hariri (1 November 1944 – 14 February 2005) was a business tycoon and the Prime Minister of Lebanon from 1992 to 1998 and again from 2000 until his resignation, 20 October 2004. He headed five cabinets during his tenure. Hariri dominated the country's post-war political and business life and is widely credited with reconstructing Beirut after the 15-year civil war.

Hariri was assassinated on 14 February 2005 when explosives equivalent to around 1000 kg of TNT were detonated as his motorcade drove past the St. George Hotel in the Lebanese capital, Beirut.

The investigation, by the Special Tribunal for Lebanon, into his assassination is still ongoing and currently led by the independent investigator Daniel Bellemare. In its first two reports, UNIIIC indicated that the Syrian government may be linked to the assassination. Hariri's killing led to massive political change in Lebanon, including the Cedar Revolution and the withdrawal of Syrian troops from Lebanon ...”

“...On 14 February 2005 Hariri was killed, along with 22 others, when explosives equivalent of around 1,800 kilograms (4,000 lb) of TNT [the initial version of the Wikipedia article had a digit of 1,000 kg of TNT here] were detonated as his motorcade drove near the St. George Hotel in Beirut. TNT detonated inside a parked Mitsubishi van as his convoy passed. Among the dead were several of Hariri's bodyguards and his friend and former Minister of the Economy Bassel Fleihan. Hariri was buried along with his bodyguards, who died in the bombing, in a location near Mohammad Al-Amin Mosque.

A 2006 report by Brammertz has indicated that DNA evidence collected from the crime scene suggests that the assassination might be the act of a young male suicide bomber. A UN backed tribunal issued four arrest warrants to members of the Hezbollah. Hezbollah blamed the assassination on Israel.

According to a Canadian Broadcasting Corporation news investigation, the special UN investigation team had found strong evidence for the responsibility of Hezbollah in the assassination...”

“...Hezbollah has accused Israel of the assassination of Hariri. According to Hezbollah officials, the assassination of Hariri was planned by the Mossad as a means of expelling the Syrian army from Lebanon. In August 2010, Hezbollah leader Hassan Nasrallah presented evidence, consisting of intercepted Israeli spy-drone video footage, which he said implicated Israel in the assassination of Hariri...”³⁹⁷

I have to mention that besides those 22 killed instantly, more than 135 people around the blast area were severely injured and many of them died later.

Even from the brief piece of information above, you could conclude with ease who was that interested party that stood behind this unprecedented count of atrocity, considering that it led to the withdrawal of Syrian troops from Lebanon, and yet, contrary to any logic, it was still blamed on the formally pro-Iranian Hezbollah...

³⁹⁷ Hezbollah chief: Israel killed Hariri, by CNN Wire Staff

An initial claim, according to this seditious CNN page³⁹⁸, which no longer exists, was this:

“Hariri and at least nine others were killed Monday when a massive bomb ripped through Beirut's chic seafront boulevard, leaving rubble, burning vehicles and twisted metal and glass strewn across the road for blocks...

...The powerful bomb blast took place just before 1 p.m. (11 a.m. GMT), in front of the five-star hotels St. George and Phoenicia-Intercontinental in the Lebanese capital's famed Corniche district overlooking the Mediterranean Sea.

The explosion left a 5-meter (15-foot) crater in the street and spread thick dust and ash over the debris. Aides to Hariri said the bomb was believed to contain about 320 kilograms (700 pounds) of explosives...”

Above left – a huge crater left by a bomb buried deep into sewage beneath the road that destroyed the entire motorcade of Rafiq Hariri and destroyed several buildings around. Above right – an “unexplainably” burned body at the site of the “truck-bombing”.

The burned body on the right photo above represents the most classical example of what can be done by the intense thermal radiation of a nuclear explosion to a dressed descendant of Adam. Note that his shoes are still more or less intact, while his clothes are gone in the most part. This particular picture, by the way, answers the question why doctors after a nuclear explosion usually expect patients with particularly 45% of burns. Note also the trail in the dust left by the victim's shoes – it clearly indicates that this poor chap was dragged quite far from the actual spot of the explosion before the photo was made.

³⁹⁸ <http://www.cnn.com/2005/WORLD/meast/02/14/beirut.explosion/index.html> (this web page no longer exists).

On the photo above, make sure to note the undamaged tires of the burning car. In fact, it represents the most classic example of a typical victim of a low-yield nuclear explosion. The car was smashed by the air-blast wave quite naturally – compared to those poor FBI’s concoctions of the nicely “half-burned” passenger cars around the WTC on 9/11... Note also a relatively distant seat of fire to the left of the burning car that had apparently nothing to do with any explosion. That inflammation was caused by thermal radiation. The ground zero was on the right of this smashed car in reality – the crater was located below the low right corner of this photograph, slightly ahead; you can feel it also by the direction of the air-blast wave (that, in turn, could be easily figured out by the way the car was smashed).

Here is more from CNN as reported by Robert Fisk, correspondent for the London-based Independent newspaper in Beirut, who lived nearby and who was enough “lucky” to immediately visit the bombing site (while being apparently unaware that he had to wear a respirator, or better – a full gas-mask – in order to avoid inhaling deadly radioactive dust):

“It’s a scene of great carnage. I saw several bodies on fire inside cars. I climbed inside the crater that was at least 15 feet deep so this was a huge blast. At least 22 cars were on fire: one of them was blown three floors up into the annexe of an unopened hotel. Another seems to have been blown over the wall of the St. George hotel...”

“...Certainly there were a lot of body parts but there were at least five bodies I could identify as human beings who were either on fire and were blown across the road. And if I saw five I assume there must be more. That’s what I saw at the scene and it was about 15 minutes before the army arrived and began to clear people away...”³⁹⁹

Do you still believe that all this mini-Hiroshima-like horror was caused by a car-bomb packed with 1 ton of TNT as claimed?

If you believe the official propaganda, let me enlighten you:

- 1) Car-bombs do not make any craters.
- 2) A crater as huge as shown on the above photo and described in the news releases could not have been caused by 1 ton of TNT even if such an incredible TNT charge were buried deep in the middle of the asphalt road; one ton of TNT was simply not enough to cause such an excavation effect.
- 3) One ton of TNT detonated in one spot can not damage the entire motorcade. In the very best case, it could damage a maximum of two cars at once, but most probably – only a single car. In this particular case there were at least 22 cars badly damaged (and also an unspecified number of the cars damaged to a lesser extent). Considering that those cars were on the move and were apparently observing at least some required distance between each other, you can easily imagine what was the true radius of the kill-zone pertaining to that explosion.
- 4) It is said that at least two cars were blown three floors up. If it is true (it could be also untrue), then it shall be presumed that it were the two cars that happened to be right above the position of the “mini-nuke” when it went critical and began to bring up the road above itself before the actual fireballs burst out of the road. Note that car-bombs can not send any cars around their explosions to fly upwards – it contradicts obvious dynamics of the explosion. The car-carrier itself supposes to be pressed down by the explosion and the rest of the cars in its close proximity – could be thrown away, but never upwards.
- 5) Ordinary explosions do not burn cars – cars are usually being burned by thermal radiation of a nuclear explosion.
- 6) Ordinary explosions do not burn people. However, in this case, the Independent’s correspondent describes “human bodies burning” even 15 minutes after the blast. Only thermal radiation of nuclear explosions can burn people. Of course, it could also be napalm, but in Rafiq Hariri’s assassination, napalm was never reported to have been used – it was allegedly only the “conventional explosives”.
- 7) Finally, explosions of conventional explosives never prompt any “foreign assistance” in investigating

³⁹⁹ <http://edition.cnn.com/2005/WORLD/meast/02/14/beirut.fisk/index.html>

I guess it is enough. Are you getting sick of the carnage? Are you learning anything?

Culprits: hitherto unheard of “Muslim” organization with the most idiotic name “Victory and Jihad” stepped forward to claim responsibility for this assassination in anonymous telephone calls to the news agencies.

Since this time it was clear even to consummate morons that such an organization as “Victory and Jihad” could not exist in reality, suspicions immediately fell on the secret services of either Iran or Syria, eventually resting on the Syrian ones. The real culprits, of course, have never been found (at least, up to this day – being said in December 2012).

Motives: “someone” badly needed to at last remove from Lebanon the Syrian peacekeeping forces, which were stationed there for many years and served as a kind of deterrent against a full-scale Israeli invasion, and also as a counter-balance re-enforcement during the Lebanese civil war. Since the Israelis supported the Christian side, the Syrians troops somehow protected the obviously losing Muslim side, despite being actually invited by the Lebanese Christians in the first instance.

Contrary to a popular belief, the Syrian forces had never behaved in Lebanon as a kind of “occupational forces” – similar to the roles of the Soviet forces in Afghanistan, the Israelis – in South Lebanon, or the Americans – in Iraq. The Syrian forces in Lebanon were nothing else than simply the largest part of the combined armed forces of the Arab League sent to Lebanon as peacekeepers at the Lebanese Government’s request.

However, “someone” was extremely unhappy with the Syrian peacekeepers’ presence and wanted them to be withdrawn. Using the fact that Rafiq Hariri was at odds with some other politicians who favored the continuing presence of the Syrian forces in Lebanon, “someone” had invented the most vicious plan. The plan was to assassinate Hariri as loudly as possible, make the most silly claim of “responsibility” for it (by an organization that could not exist even in theory), and such an assassination would be blamed on the Syrians automatically. Considering the total absence of any visible motives, it would appear that among all potential suspects only the Syrians would have some possible interest in such an assassination.

In reality, Rafiq Hariri had never been an opponent of Syria even to the slightest extent (moreover, he was actually a Muslim, not a Christian), but nobody even bothered to investigate it. Almost immediately after the assassination, all world news agencies came up with hysterical claims that only Syrian secret services could have been behind such an atrocity, because no other country or organization might have any interest in this affair. A tremendous public hysteria followed immediately; it was especially stirred up in Beirut and everywhere in Lebanon. The Syrian Government, of course, promptly denied the charges, but the damage was done. The Syrian troops could stay in Lebanon no longer and soon had been withdrawn completely. “Someone” could feel free to attack Lebanon once again on a full scale.

The new aggression against Lebanon followed soon after the departure of the Syrian contingent. Actually, the strategic objective of the Israelis in this regard was to force the Syrians out of Lebanon and to have a free hand in smashing Hezbollah (which heavily relied on the Syrian presence for supply of weapons and ammunition). Soon after the departure of the Syrian troops, Israel invaded Southern Lebanon again in order to supposedly “clean it of Hezbollah terrorists”.

However, this time, the Israelis had badly miscalculated their military might and underestimated their adversary. Despite killing over a thousand Lebanese civilians and inflicting serious damage to the Lebanese civilian infrastructure, the Israeli armed forces were not able to cope with the Hezbollah militia. The Israelis suffered a humiliating defeat. They lost hundreds of tanks and even a navy destroyer, seriously damaged by the Hezbollah’s Chinese-made anti-ship missile. Moreover, they suffered some civilian casualties too – because Hezbollah retaliated by firing thousands of missiles across the border into the Israeli civilian targets. After realizing that this time they could do really nothing, the Israelis withdrew from Lebanon. Thus, the nuclear assassination of Rafiq Hariri, instead of giving any expected advantages to the Israelis, has resulted in an unexpected and totally unprecedented humiliation of the latter.

Nonetheless, the majority of simpletons around the world did not even notice the further development of the Lebanese intrigue. Until now they continue to believe the unbelievable: that non-nuclear Syria, which always tried its best to be on good terms with the international community, was allegedly behind this heinous nuclear mass murder.

Lone alternative opinion, in a brief article properly named “Political Suicide”⁴⁰⁰:

“If Syria killed Rafik Hariri, Lebanon's former prime minister and mastermind of its revival after the civil war, it must be judged an act of political suicide,” Patrick Seale, a 30-year veteran British correspondent on the Middle East, wrote shortly after Hariri was killed when a unexplained explosion struck his motorcade on February 14, 2005.

“Why would Syria murder Hariri, the main architect of Lebanon's post-war reconstruction and prosperity?” American Free Press asked when Hariri was killed. “And why would anybody murder Hariri in such a spectacular way?” “Attributing responsibility for the murder to Syria is implausible,” Seale wrote.

“Hariri was not a diehard enemy of Syria. For 10 of the past 12 years he served as Lebanon's prime minister under Syria's aegis. To kill Hariri at this critical moment would be to destroy Syria's reputation once and for all and hand its enemies a weapon with which to deliver the blow that could finally destabilize the Damascus regime, and even possibly bring it down,” Seale wrote.

Seale is the author of several books on Syria including, The Struggle for Syria, Assad of Syria: The Struggle for the Middle East, and Abu Nidal: A Gun for Hire.

“The murder is more likely to be the work of one of its many enemies,” Seale wrote. He named Israel as being a likely suspect. “Israel's ambition has long been to weaken Syria,” Seale wrote, “sever its strategic alliance with Iran and destroy Hezbollah.” The U.S. and Israel are trying to rally international support against Iran, Syria and Hezbollah, Seale says, because they stand up and resist U.S. and Israeli hegemony over the region. Hezbollah forced Israel out of south Lebanon and has a deterrent capability, which prevents Israel from attacking Lebanon with impunity. “Israel has great experience at ‘targeted assassinations,’ not only in the Palestinian territories but across the Middle East,” Seale wrote. “Over the years, it has sent hit teams to kill opponents in Beirut, Tunis, Malta, Amman and Damascus.”

Nobody, of course, has paid any heed to the abovementioned opinion of an apparent specialist in Middle-Eastern affairs; as well as nobody seems to be eager to engage his common sense coupled with elementary logic in order to understand the obvious.

International “investigation”.

The nuclear bombing of the motorcade of Rafiq Hariri was probably the first case that resulted in ignominy for the United Nations Organization. All previous lousy acts of the so-called “terror” were mostly covered-up by one government, sometimes by joint efforts of several governments and their respective secret services, leaving the United Nations “warm-and-fuzzy”. But this particular case was covered up directly by the UN Organization.

It shall be mentioned first, that, unlike several hysterical local politicians at the pay of the Mossad, and unlike major news agencies, seemingly “responsible” governments of the United States and the United Kingdom, as well as the UN itself, have “decently” abstained from directly accusing Syria of organizing this assassination (and “politely” preferred “not to notice” that the actual weapon used in the assassination was a nuclear one). All of these three preferred, instead, to demand “only” the Syrians pullout from Lebanon and an open and international “investigation” of the actual assassination.

Their first demand was met – the Syrian troops withdrew. They withdrew mainly not because of the demands of these above three, but more as just a matter of principle. The Syrian leaders, however “evil” they might appear to simpletons, apparently did not feel as impudent as the U.S. counterparts – to afford to remain in a country that no longer welcomes them.

However, when it comes to the second demand – in regard to the “open” international “investigation”, things quickly proved themselves to be not so easy for the U.S. and the U.K. governments and to their lackeys from the United Nations. Apparently, it was not so easy to “openly” investigate the obvious underground nuclear explosion at well over 10 tons in TNT yield and then – to “openly” present its results as if it were a surface explosion of a “car-bomb” with only 1 ton of TNT. This was not really easy, and they had to lose their face badly in order to achieve this.

⁴⁰⁰ <http://www.facts-are-facts.com/news/sne-231105-syrian.ihtml>

The United Nations Security Council adopted Resolution 1595 to send an investigative team to look into Hariri's assassination. This team was headed by a German judge Detlev Mehlis and presented its initial report to the Security Council on 20 October 2005. The Mehlis Report implicated Syrian and Lebanese officials, with special focus on Syria's military intelligence chief, Assef Shawkat and Syrian President Bashar al-Assad's brother-in-law. The Mehlis commission did not even bother to consider the most likely (actually, the obvious) culprit – the Israeli Mossad – as being one of the potential perpetrators. The State of Israel and its notorious secret services were excluded, as being above any suspicion by default.

The U.S. President Bush Jr. had called for a special meeting of the UN to be convened to discuss the international response "as quickly as possible to deal with this very serious matter." Detlev Mehlis had asked for more time to investigate all leads. A second report, submitted on 10 December 2005, upheld the conclusions from the first report. On 11 January 2006, Mehlis was replaced by the Belgian Serge Brammertz. However, "findings" of this "investigation" even after appointment of a new chief "inquirer" became in no sense better than the findings of the notorious "9/11 Commission".

The Wikipedia article on Rafiq Hariri mentions also this piece of information:

"...Major General Jamil al Sayyed, then head of Lebanese General Security, Brigadier General Mustapha Hamdan, Major General Ali Hajj and Brigadier General Raymond Azar were all arrested in August 2005 at the request of German prosecutor Detlev Mehlis, who was carrying out the UN investigation about the assassination.

Jamil al Sayyed was stated to be one of the persons who decided to assassinate Rafik Hariri in a leaked draft version of the Mehlis report along with other Syrian high-rank intelligence and security officers and officials, namely Assef Shawkat, Maher al Assad, Hassan Khalil and Bahjat Suleyman.

*However, later reports about the assassination did not repeat the allegations against Jamil al Sayyed and other three Lebanese generals. Four Lebanese generals were held in Roumieh prison, northeast of Beirut from 2005 to 2009. Four Lebanese high-rank officials were released from the prison due to lack of evidence...

The most shocking in the above report is that the shameless German so-called "judge" Detlev Mehlis, appointed by the UN to interfere into the internal affairs of Lebanon, went as far as to hold four Lebanese generals in prison for 4 years, knowing that they were completely innocent.

The point is that unlike the gullible plebeians, that German so-called "judge" was apparently informed by his handlers of the fact that the actual job was done by the mini-nuke. It is obvious, because without knowing the actual truth, Mehlis would not be able to effectively cover it up. Moreover, if Mehlis were not informed of it in advance and set free to investigate the affair, he would quickly come to an unwanted conclusion that it was indeed the mini-nuke. I hope you realize that for this so-called "judge" to conduct this investigation for several years, being in constant communication with various experts on explosives, and yet to miss the point regarding the nuclear nature of the explosion was simply impossible. These folks from the so-called "UN investigative team" knew their mission very well from the beginning: it was not to actually "investigate" the perpetration; it was to try to cover it up to the best of their abilities. So, as to their part of the cover-up, they decided to arrest four innocent Lebanese generals and keep them behind bars for four years...

Well, maybe you can find proper words to describe this particular affair, but when it comes to me, I am simply lost for words. I do not even know what to say...

Despite ridiculous lies included in this commission's reports, the UN decided to proceed further: on 6 February, 2006, both the United Nations and the government of Lebanon had agreed to a proposal establishing a Special Tribunal for Lebanon⁴⁰¹. It will be the first time that any international court would try individuals for a "terrorist" crime committed against a specific person.

Interestingly, in October 2010, the Hezbollah demanded that the Lebanese government should stop all cooperation with the so-called "UN Special Tribunal", claiming the tribunal was an infringement on Lebanese sovereignty by western governments. I can not but agree with the Hezbollah's interpretation – since it apparently stated the self-evident truth.

⁴⁰¹ http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Special_Tribunal_for_Lebanon

Probably, the United Nations Organization has never ever during its entire history discredited itself to such an extent. At least, the humble author of this book has never seen from the UN's side anything as shameful as its "open" investigation and its so-called "special tribunal".

2005 Sharm el-Sheikh double nuclear attack. Sharm el-Sheikh, Egypt.

Official claims (from the corresponding Wikipedia article⁴⁰²):

"...The 2005 Sharm el-Sheikh attacks were a series of terror attacks on July 23, 2005, perpetrated by a Wahabi organization, targeting the Egyptian resort city of Sharm el-Sheikh, located on the southern tip of the Sinai Peninsula. Eighty-eight people were killed, the majority of them Egyptians, and over 200 were wounded by the blasts, making the attack the deadliest terrorist action in the country's history. The attacks took place in the early morning hours, at a time when many tourists and locals were still out at restaurants, cafés and bars. The first bomb blast, at 01:15 local time (22:15 UTC), was reported in a market in downtown Sharm; shortly after, another was reported to have hit the Ghazala Gardens hotel, a 176-room four-star establishment in the Naama Bay area, a strip of beachfront hotels some 6 km from the town centre. The blasts were powerful, shaking windows miles away. Fire and smoke could be seen rising from the explosion sites. The majority of dead and wounded casualties were Egyptians. Among those killed were 11 Britons, two Germans, one Czech, six Italians, one Israeli, and one American. Other casualties, dead and wounded, included foreign visitors from France, Kuwait, the Netherlands, Qatar, Russia, and Spain. ..."

Seditious details – such as craters etc. were not mentioned by the above article. All what could suggest that it was a nuclear bombing was only the unusually high number of casualties stated.

Most of the news releases were censored – not to allow any "nuclear" details to be leaked to the public. But, thanks to the Internet, many details could be discovered even a few years later. Fortunately, not all news releases were censored. Here are some excerpts from one of such "seditious" news-releases⁴⁰³:

"...Egyptian officials, giving their first detailed account of a deadly terror strike at this Red Sea resort, says that all three bombs are suicide attacks and suggest that they have been intended to explode at two hotels and a busy nightlife strip packed with Western tourists. But police checkpoints in this heavily guarded city appear to have prevented two bombers from reaching their desired targets July 23. They still managed to set off their bombs, but most of those killed were Egyptians. Sixty-four people died in the attacks, and at least 44 were from Egypt, said the governor of southern Sinai, Mustafa Afifi. Up to 17 foreigners were killed, most of them Europeans. One American was among the dead, according to the US Embassy in Egypt. The nationalities of three of the dead have not been determined, though they are believed to be Egyptian, according to the governor...

*A senior security official, speaking on condition of anonymity because of policy restrictions, said the police believe the bombers drove to Sharm el Sheik on mountain roads in two pickup trucks...

While the three attacks appear to have been well planned, only one seems to have hit its target. The police believe the first bombing, in which a small pickup truck exploded in the middle of a wide street just outside the town's Old Market, was actually intended for a nearby hotel filled with European guests. About three to five minutes later, a second bomber crashed a similar pickup truck into the lobby of his intended target, the Ghazala Gardens Hotel, and detonated his explosives, destroying much of the front of the hotel, which has 220 rooms and was fully booked, mostly with Europeans. The last of the three explosions, about three minutes after the second blast, was detonated by a bomber on foot in a parking lot, and caused relatively few fatalities...

The bomber was driving through the market on his way to the [second] hotel and probably stopped when he saw the police checkpoint, according to the governor, Afifi. The police speculate that the bomb may have been on a timing device, set to explode when the truck reached the hotel. Bungled or not, the attack was brutally efficient, killing and wounding dozens of Egyptians as many were drinking tea at outdoor cafes. The explosion dug a yawning crater in the road, incinerated nearby cars and buses..."

Actually, the official claims plus one news release like the one quoted above, is more than enough for one who knows how to read between the lines. Here is what we know:

- 1) Car bombs do not leave craters.
- 2) Ordinary explosions do not kill on a mass scale.
- 3) Ordinary explosions do not incinerate cars and buses.
- 4) Claims that it was car bombs were nothing more than guessing; even the police admit that they were merely speculating.
- 5) Victims were burned beyond recognition – so that even their nationality could not have been established: it is known to everybody that ordinary explosives do not burn people.
- 6) Casualty rate was most probably understated – because initially it was reported only 64 people dead, but hospitals almost immediately reported figure 88. As expected, people, who were not mechanically injured or burned, could have been “silently” injured by penetrating radiation or by residual radiation and died in a couple of days or in a couple of weeks later. This was not counting people who were reduced to aches or completely vaporized – from among those who might have been very close to the hypocenters.
- 7) “Wahhabi” branch of Islam does not maintain any independent militant organizations. It shall be known that the really militant branch of Islam was only one – the Islamic Fundamentalism, which emerged under influence of late Ayatollah Khomeini’s revolutionary ideas (particularly under his most seditious idea that the fundament of Islam was the Old Testament and not the Quran). The actual “Wahhabi terrorist organizations” – such as the “Muslim Brotherhood”, the “Al-Qaeda”, the “Taliban”, and the rest – were all created by joined efforts of the American CIA and their Saudi Arabian, Pakistani and also Iraqi flunkies as bogus “militant” alternatives to the then extremely dangerous anti-masonic ideology emanating from revolutionary Iran. Neither of these Wahhabi organizations has ever operated independently from the CIA since their creation.

The mere fact that someone officially blamed such a heinous action on a certain “Wahhabi” organization, is the clearest indication that this bombing had nothing to do with any “Islam” at all. The most important consideration is that even if some CIA officials would resort to such a mini-nuclear bombing in order to keep afloat the general line – even in such a highly improbable case, they would never trust their “Wahhabi” clients enough to issue them the actual “mini-nuke”. It would be too dangerous because of many reasons (possible leakage of information, not to say the deliberate denunciation and surrendering the “mini-nuke” to the local police, or possible stealing of it, etc.). A maximum of what such CIA officials could really do – is to secretly install such a “mini-nuke” by themselves without involving any “Muslims” whatsoever. But I do not think that it was really the CIA, who did this particular job. In my opinion, it was the very same group of guys who did the rest of the nuclear bombings: a special group of the Freemasons that operates under the aegis of the Israeli secret services.

Motives: probably, the motives were general: to scare once again those silly European “patricians” by a new “confidential” mini-nuclear bombing. This was to make sure that they would not withdraw their troops from Iraq or, at least, would not complain much about American etc. troops being there, despite an obvious fact that there have been no nuclear weapons found in Iraq so far. “Someone” needs always to prove that the so-called “international terrorism” still has more “mini-nukes” and their supposed nuclear arsenals have not been exhausted yet. Thus, this “someone” needs to continuously maintain this proof.

There were a lot more mini-nuclear bombings that were reported as “car-bombings” or “truck-bombings” to the gullible general public. Most of them occurred in Iraq, but some also in Afghanistan, Pakistan, Algeria, Saudi Arabia, Philippines, Sri Lanka, India, Colombia, Peru, Russia, Egypt, and, of course, in Lebanon. I might easily miss a few, so it could be that I failed to mention some country that fell victim to this nuclear “terror”. But, to be frank with you, nuclear bombings are simply too numerous today to keep record on them being a private individual. Let secret services do the record.

For us it should be clear that any so-called “car-bombing” that manages to kill too many people, and especially if it left a crater, or if it burned people or cars around, shall be presumed to be a mini-nuclear bombing. Terrorists often do bombings, but if some bombing causes an intense hysteria in mass media coverage it shall be suspected as nuclear. All you have to do then is to study its details – how many kilograms (or tons) of TNT the terrorists managed to fit into a passenger car/truck, how did they manage to dig a crater, how “TNT” or “fertilizer” managed to burn people, and so on.

I hope you got my point; so, I think the abovementioned 16, or so, bombings were sufficient as examples.

Somebody, perhaps, would ask this question: why does the author of these lines believe that the majority of these nuclear “car”-bombings is being perpetrated by the Israeli secret services? Why not by the American ones? Is the CIA less evil than the Mossad?

Since this good question apparently deserves a good answer, and this good answer can not be short, I decided to develop this answer into a separate chapter.

However, due to that chapter being too “politically incorrect”, I decided to exclude it from this book and make it entirely separate. Otherwise, I am afraid, some shifty folks might use it as a pretext to declare my book on 9/11 “extremist literature” and prohibit it whatsoever. So, in order to avoid such a development, I decided to separate my views on the so-called “terrorism” into two parts. One part – deals with the acts of the so-called “terror” and its technical aspects, such as demolitions of steel-framed buildings using kerosene, penetrating capabilities of aluminum, “car”-bombings that leave craters and “ground zero” names, anthrax-letters, Pentagon missiles, falsifications of dictionaries, and so on. This is the book you are reading now. The other, optional part deals with the ideology, which forces the so-called “good guys” into the actual “terror” production. If the first part of the book is more “technical”, the second one is abound in ideology, sociology, history, and history of religion (thus, helping us to understand the supposedly religious motives of the so-called “terrorists”) – i.e. the second part is more “humanitarian”. However, just because of its being “humanitarian”, rather than technical, I am afraid that it could be declared the “extremist literature” (as you probably understand, it is difficult to declare “extremist” someone’s views on the nuclear technology or on the strength of aluminum cutting tools, but it is quite easy to declare “extremist” someone’s views on the religion and on the social order). That is exactly why these views of mine are separated from the main body of the 9/11thology book.

The optional portion is titled “A Big Lyrical Digression” and is distributed free of charge – so it must be freely available on the Internet at the moment you are reading these lines.

Nuclear hysteria of the US Government and some reasons behind it.

Sometime in April 2007, I accidentally encountered on the Internet one very unusual link, which was published in one of the Internet forums, presided by these words: “There is a certain degree of fatalism associated with the following: Web address:

<http://www.sciencedaily.com/releases/2007/03/070320103821.htm> “

When I looked at the suggested web link that hosted a scary article named “Study Details Catastrophic Impact Of Nuclear Attack On US Cities” (adapted from materials provided by University of Georgia⁴⁰⁴), I was truly surprised. It was obvious that the hitherto hidden nuclear hysteria of the U.S. Government had indeed elevated from its former fear of “mini-nukes” alone to a fear of some real nuclear devices. However, when I studied that article deeper, I was surprised even more, because I understood that it was in fact me, the humble author of these lines, who was the main source of that particular alarm.

The problem was that once I learned about the 22 stolen “Granit” missiles from the sunken “Kursk” submarine, I believed first that their warheads were 550 kiloton in TNT yield, rather than 500 kiloton. In the former Soviet Union there were two typical medium-caliber warheads intended for smaller ballistic missiles – 550 kt and 500 kt. The first ones were traditionally used for land-based ballistic missiles, the second ones – for submarine-based ballistic missiles. Since “Granit” missiles were not ballistic, but cruise, and, moreover, they were top-secret stuff, it was not known for sure which kind of warheads was used in them. Today you can easily find some details on the “Granit” missile, because the matter became widely discussed after my video was published and people began to pay serious attention to this missile, to search for its details and to publish their findings. It was not so, however, in 2005 or 2006. Those days the “Granit” was still top secret stuff and little was known about it. Nowhere could you get any exact and, moreover, reliable data on this secret weapon those days (unless, of course, you were the actual designer of its warhead or handling the “Granit” missiles was part of your military duties).

I was initially informed that it was a typical 550 kiloton warhead used in the “Granit”, so I believed it, because I had no reason to doubt this information. However, later I found out that the initial information was wrong and it was another warhead – the 500 kt used in this missile. This was logical because the second one was typical for the Russian Navy – since it was typically used in the submarine-based ballistic missiles. So it would be just easier for the Navy-attached Nuclear-Technical Service units to deal with uniformed warheads intended for the Navy.

However, before I came to realize my mistake, I had already discussed the 9/11 affair with some FBI officials from the local U.S. Embassy – explaining to them in detail who actually bombed the World Trade Center and the Pentagon. I explained to them also the true source of the 22 “Granit” missiles in the hands of the 9/11 perpetrators (it seems the FBI folks did not know that the missiles were actually stolen from the “Kursk”), as well as the potential dangers of their future use (because at that moment I had some extra information about future plans of the perpetrators in regard to these remaining warheads). During that particular conversation I mentioned the exact yield – 550 kiloton (0.55 megaton), which I later found to be wrong.

I guess it is clear enough that the U.S. experts by studying an unexploded warhead that hit the Pentagon could not determine whether it was 550 or 500 kt. It is simply impossible to establish such a precise detail for sure by simply studying the hardware, while 550 and 500 kt do not really differ much. On the other hand, if the Russian Government would officially inform the Americans about the true properties of the stolen warhead, they would not have any reason to lie and would honestly inform them about its true yield which is indeed 500 kt. Judging by logic, if the U.S. officials now believe that “terrorists” might possess some stolen Soviet warheads of 550 kiloton (rather than the 500 kiloton ones) it could only be because of that conversation of mine, whereby I myself was mistaken. There is no any other reasonable explanation for this particular phenomenon.

Here is the actual article (only some excerpts). Try to read it attentively and also between the lines, as usual: “Study Details Catastrophic Impact Of Nuclear Attack On US Cities

⁴⁰⁴ http://www.uga.edu/

ScienceDaily (Mar. 21, 2007) — A new study by researchers at the Center for Mass Destruction Defense (CMADD) at the University of Georgia details the catastrophic impact a nuclear attack would have on American cities...

“...“The likelihood of a nuclear weapon attack in an American city is steadily increasing, and the consequences will be overwhelming” said Cham Dallas, CMADD director and professor in the UGA College of Pharmacy. “So we need to substantially increase our preparation.”

Dallas and co-author William Bell, CMADD senior research scientist and faculty member of the UGA College of Public Health, examined four high-profile American cities – New York, Chicago, Washington, D.C. and Atlanta – and modeled the effects of a 20 kiloton nuclear detonation and a 550 kiloton detonation. (For comparison, the nuclear bombs dropped on Hiroshima and Nagasaki were in the 12 to 20 kiloton range). Bell explained that a 20 kiloton weapon could be manufactured by terrorists and fledgling nuclear countries such as North Korea and Iran, while a 550 kiloton device is commonly found in the arsenal of the former Soviet Union and therefore is the most likely to be stolen by terrorists...

“...Among the study’s findings:

A 20-kiloton detonation would leave debris tens of feet thick in downtown areas with buildings 10-stories or higher. Roughly half of the population in downtown areas would be killed, mainly from collapsing buildings. Most of those surviving the initial blast in downtown areas would be exposed to a fatal dose of radiation.

While the main effects from a 20-kiloton explosion would be from the blast and the radiation it releases, a 550-kiloton explosion would create additional and substantial casualties from burns. Such an explosion would superheat the blast zone, causing buildings to spontaneously combust. Mass fires would consume cities, reaching out nearly four miles (6.3 km) in all directions from the detonation site.

A 550 kiloton detonation in New York would result in a fallout plume extending the length of Long Island, resulting in more than 5 million deaths.

A 550 kiloton detonation in Washington, D.C. would destroy hospitals in the District, but its fallout plume would also incapacitate hospitals in Baltimore, nearly 40 miles away.

The researchers note that in all four cities studied, hospitals are concentrated in the area most likely to be destroyed. Another weak link is the inability of the nation’s hospital system to treat the burn victims a 550-kiloton detonation would create. A 550-kiloton detonation in Atlanta, the least densely populated of the four cities studied, would result in nearly 300,000 serious burn victims.

“The hospital system has about 1,500 burn beds in the whole country, and of these maybe 80 or 90 percent are full at any given time,” Bell said. “There’s no way of treating the burn victims from a nuclear attack with the existing medical system.”

Dallas acknowledges that the consequences of a nuclear attack would be grim, but stresses that there are ways that tens of thousands lives could be saved.

“If a nuclear detonation were to occur in a downtown area, the picture would be bleak there,” Dallas said. “But in urban areas farther from the detonation, there actually is quite a bit that we can do. In certain areas, it may be possible to turn the death rate from 90 percent in some burn populations to probably 20 or 30 percent – and those are very big differences – simply by being prepared well in advance...”

Please, note that this particular “550 kiloton” is definitely not a “round digit” – unlike “500”. So, there is no way for those specialists to simply speculate over uncertainties, unless they knew for sure that exactly “550 kt” and not any other stuff were stolen by the “terrorists” from Soviet nuclear arsenals. This is just to confirm that they could not obtain this wrong digit from any other source than that mistaken information by the humble author of this book as mentioned above.

What is peculiar in all of that? The peculiar thing is this: I made a minor mistake in regard to the exact yields of those 22 stolen thermonuclear warheads, but I did not make any other mistake – in regard to the true ownership of the stolen things. I explained to the FBI guys that the warheads were stolen by Mike Harari and his group. And this the FBI now knows for sure. Do not even doubt it! The question remains: how come, that they informed some relevant U.S. authorities about the dangers – to the extent that even a special study was undertaken, moreover, based on this particular 550 kiloton yield – and in the same time the true “terrorists” who might deliver such a 550 kt thermonuclear strike were not mentioned?

I have no answer to this question; except, by suggesting that the United States of America as a country and each of its numerous security organizations are run by the very same folks who actually possess those “scary nukes in the hands of terrorists”. It does not mean that each and every high-ranking U.S. official is a member of the Freemasonic sect, of course. Freemasons are many, indeed, but not so many are the high-ranking ones pulling the strings. However, as you could see in the example of Donald Rumsfeld’s performance during the 9/11 attack, or in the examples of performances of Legasov and Pikalov in the case of the Chernobyl production, even a single Freemason who occupies a carefully chosen position in a certain organization, can really do a lot. It is possible, though, to distinguish a planted Freemasonic operative from a gullible, genuinely hysterical politician or from a gullible, genuinely hysterical security official, if you observe them carefully enough. The Freemasons always perform and it is quite obvious for a careful observer. They are generally more or less good actors (they have an obligatory course on acting technique in their sect), but still, they are not perfect – if you are observant and cynical enough, you will still notice that they are acting. Moreover, elder, and especially high-ranking Freemasons believe that they are big enough and their impunity is guaranteed in any case; so they grew lazy with their age and they became simply too lazy to dramatize in a convincing manner. So, you could notice that the Freemasons are not actually afraid of the nukes. By contrast, those whom they want to scare are genuinely hysterical. This is a way to distinguish them.

There is yet another colorful depiction of a potential nuclear explosion in the United States. This time it is only 150 kiloton exploded on a surface level – as if, for example, one of the WTC thermonuclear demolition charges were lifted up to the surface and detonated there:

<http://www.atomicarchive.com/Example/Example1.shtml>

New York City Example

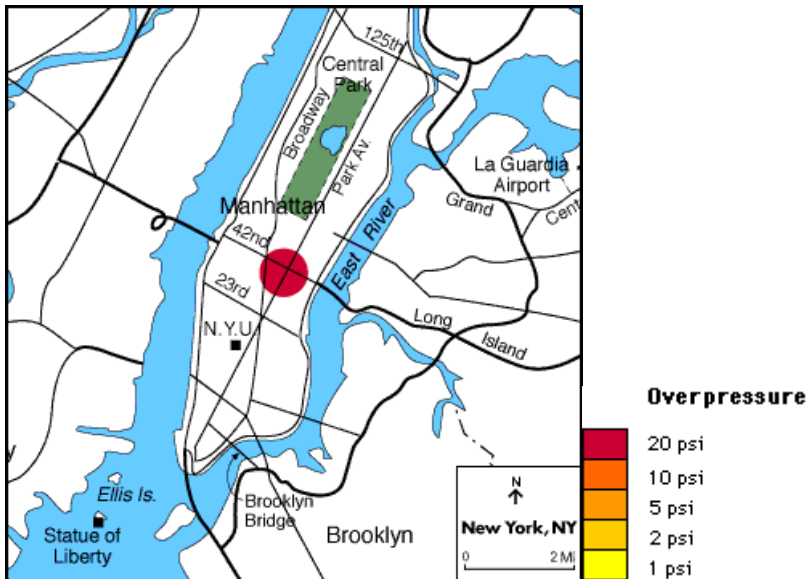

A 150 kiloton bomb constructed⁴⁰⁵ by terrorists is detonated in the heart of Manhattan, at the foot of the Empire State Building. The bomb goes off without warning at noon time. It’s a clear spring day with a breeze to the east.

Assumptions

1. There is no warning. The population has not been evacuated nor sought shelter. Both measures could reduce casualties.
2. There is clear weather, with visibility of 9 miles (16 km).
3. This is an isolated attack, leaving the rest of the country free to respond.
4. A large percentage of the day time population is outside - 25%.
5. The daytime population density is roughly uniform and about 125,000 per square mile.
6. The shock wave will spread out uniformly in all directions, being minimally affected by structures.

New York City Example: 1 second after detonation

⁴⁰⁵ Please, note that the so-called “terrorists” can not “construct” a 150 kiloton hydrogen bomb; they lack scientific and technical potential for that; at the best case they could only use the ready one.

Blast Wave

At the end of the first second, the shock wave will have an overpressure of 20 psi. at a distance of four tenths of a mile from ground zero. Even the most heavily reinforced steel and concrete buildings will be destroyed. These buildings include the Empire State Building, Madison Square Gardens, Penn Central Railroad Station and the New York Public Library. Most of the material that comprises these buildings will remain and pile up to a depth of hundreds of feet in places, but nothing inside this ring will be recognizable.

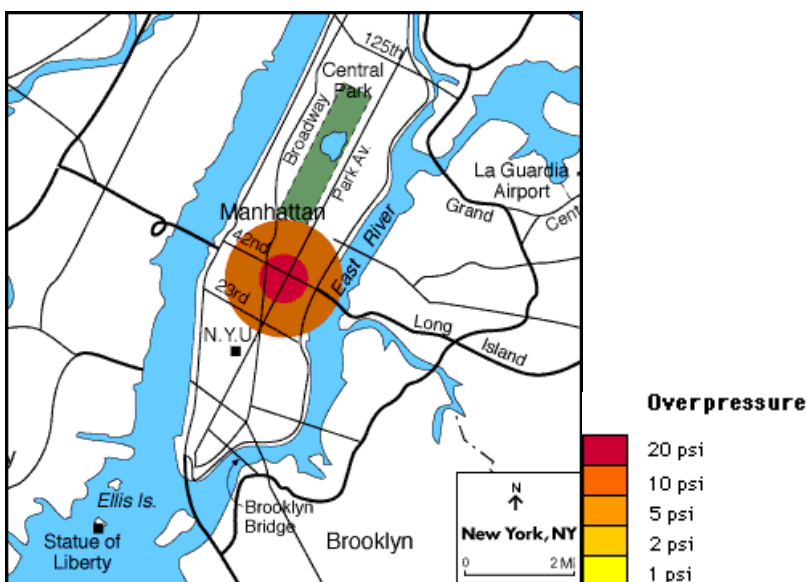

Casualties

This circle contains a daytime population of roughly 75,000. There will be no survivors. Those caught outside will be exposed to the full effects of the blast, including severe lung and ear drum damage and exposure to flying debris. Those in the direct line of sight of the blast will be exposed to a thermal pulse in excess of 500 cal/sq.cm., causing instant death. Those inside, though shielded from some of the blast and thermal effects, will be killed as buildings collapse.

Fireball

The fireball will have a maximum radius of 1,023 feet (0.2 miles). However, the blast effects will greatly outweigh any direct thermal effects due to the fireball.

New York City Example: 4 seconds after detonation

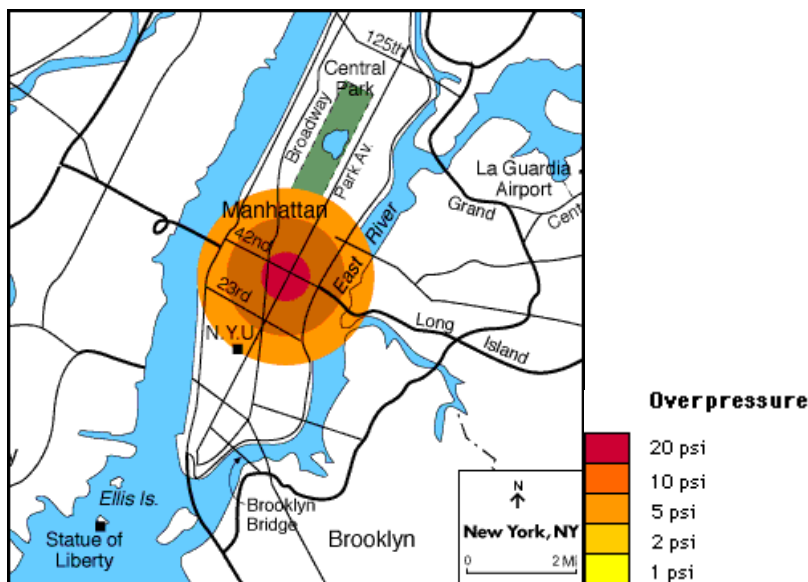

Blast Wave

An overpressure of at least 10 psi. extends out for 1 mile. Concrete and steel reinforced commercial buildings will be destroyed or severely damaged out to the edge of this ring. The few buildings that remain standing on the outside edge of this ring will have their interiors destroyed. Though the thermal pulse is intense enough to ignite most materials, the shock wave will likely extinguish most fires in this ring. Landmarks affected by the blast at this distance include the Chrysler Building, Rockefeller Center, the United Nations, and four hospitals. All of these buildings will be totally destroyed or so severely damaged that they will be unusable and will have to be demolished in the clean-up.

Casualties

Most people inside buildings will be killed by flying debris or die as the buildings collapse. Almost all those outside and not in the direct line of sight of the blast will receive lung and ear drum injuries to varying degrees. Those in the direct line of sight will be killed instantly by the thermal pulse. Fatalities are estimated at 300,000 with many of the remaining 100,000 receiving some form of non-fatal injury. Those people in this ring making use of New York's subway system will escape with few injuries, though they may be trapped for days by debris blocking entrances and exits.

New York City Example: 6 seconds after detonation

Blast Wave

In the next two seconds the shock wave moves out another half mile, extending the destruction out to a 1.5 mile radius. The overpressure has dropped to 5 psi. at the outer edge of this ring, which covers an area of 4 square miles. Reinforced structures are heavily damaged and unreinforced residential type structures of brick and wood are destroyed. Affected structures include Carnegie Hall, the Lincoln Center and the Queensboro Bridge. All the named structures are near the outside edge of this ring. All windows in these structures will be shattered and many interior walls will collapse.

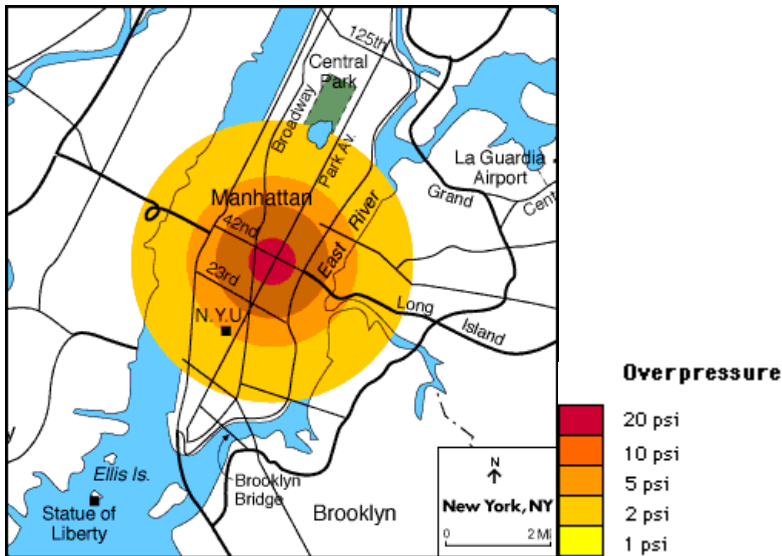

Casualties

This ring contains 500,000 people during the day. About 190,000 will be killed inside buildings by flying debris. This is roughly half of the assumed indoor population. The other 190,000 will suffer varying degrees of injuries. Most of those outside and not in the direct line of sight of the explosion will escape direct injury from the blast, but may be injured by flying objects. The thermal pulse is still sufficiently intense (40 cal/sq.cm.) to kill anyone in the direct line of sight; approximately 30,000. Those people fortunate enough to be under ground will escape with no injuries. The total number of injured will be approximately 220,000, leaving roughly 60,000 uninjured.

Thermal Effects

This region contains the most severe fire hazard, since fire ignition and spread are more likely in partly damaged buildings than in completely flattened areas. Perhaps 5% of the building would be initially ignited, with fire spread to adjoining buildings highly likely. Fires will continue to spread for 24 hours at least, ultimately destroying about half the buildings.

New York City Example: 10 seconds after detonation

Blast Wave

This band extends out to a 2.5 mile radius and has an overpressure at the outside edge of 2 psi. Reinforced structures will receive varying amounts of damage, with those buildings at the edge being almost completely undamaged. Wood and brick buildings will receive moderate amounts of initial damage, with the damage becoming less significant at the outside edge of the ring.

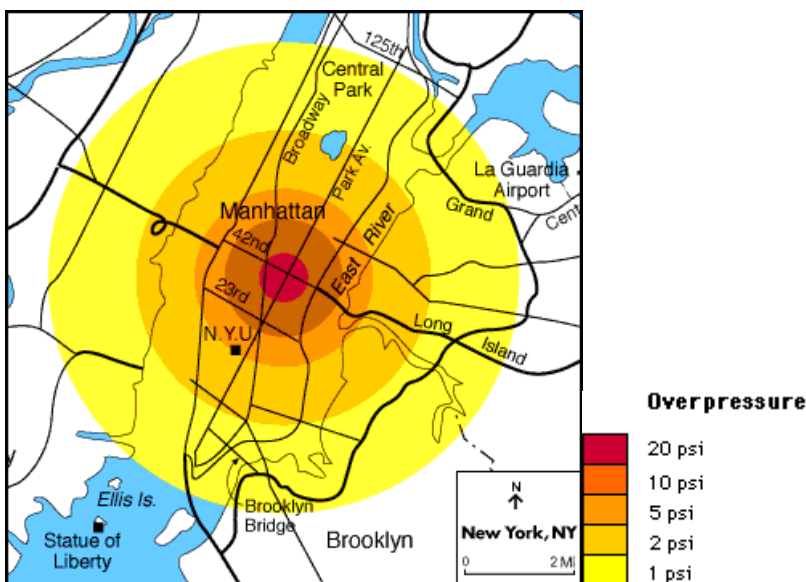

Casualties

An estimated 235,000 people (15%) will be fatalities in this ring, with another 525,000 injured to varying degrees. No injuries will be due directly to the blast overpressure. However, the thermal pulse will still be sufficient to kill or incapacitate those not indoors or otherwise protected. The degree of injury from the thermal pulse will depend greatly on clothing and skin color. Darker clothing and skin will absorb more of the energy, giving a more severe burn. The material type and thickness will also determine the severity of burns from the thermal pulse.

Thermal Effects

The possibility of delayed damage due to fire is very real in this band. The energy in the thermal pulse will still be sufficient to start combustible materials on fire, yet the overpressure and accompanying wind will be less likely to put out these fires. If only a small percentage of the buildings start on fire many may be damaged as the fire spreads out of control since the capability to fight fires will be non-existent. It may be 24 hours or more before the resources are available to even begin to fight fires.

New York City Example: 16 seconds after detonation

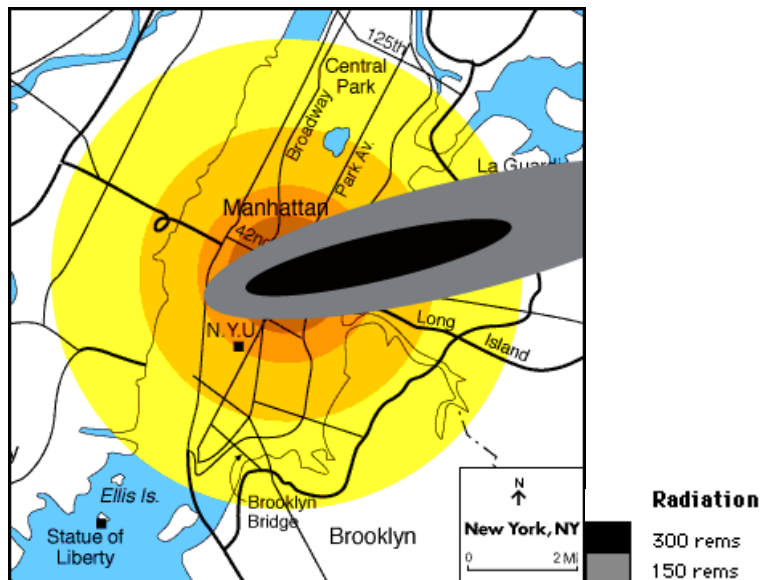

Blast Wave

This band extends out for almost 4 miles and has an overpressure of 1 psi. at its outside edge. At the inner edge there will be light to moderate amounts of damage to unreinforced buildings of brick and wood. Reinforced structures and commercial buildings will receive light damage at most. This band extends out to the site of the former World Trade Center and the Statue of Liberty in the south, across the East River into Queens in the east, and across the Hudson River to New Jersey.

Casualties

Though this ring covers an additional 30 square miles, much of this area is over water or less densely populated areas. The affected population in this ring is estimated to be 500,000. There will be almost no fatalities in this ring and only a small percentage, roughly 30,000, will receive injuries from the thermal pulse. Flashblindness and permanent retinal injuries from the blast will extend out beyond 20 miles. Since this is a ground level explosion, the number of people who will be looking in the direction of the blast and have a clear view, will be much less than if the explosion had taken place several thousand feet above the city.

New York City Example: Long-Term Fallout Pattern

Radioactive Fallout

A surface explosion will produce much more early fallout than a similarly sized air burst where the fireball never touches the ground. This is because a surface explosion produces radioactive particles from the ground as well as from the weapon. The early fallout will drift back to earth on the prevailing wind, creating an elliptical pattern stretching from ground zero out into Long Island. Because the wind will be relatively light, the fallout will be highly concentrated in the area of Manhattan just to the east of the blast. Predicting levels of radiation is difficult and depends on many factors like bomb size, design, the ground surface and soil type.

Fallout Effects [as I have already mentioned the lax US standard differs from the stricter Soviet one by ~ two folds]

Dose-rem	Effects
5-20	Possible late effects; possible chromosomal damage.
20-100	Temporary reduction in white blood cells.
100-200	Mild radiation sickness within a few hours: vomiting, diarrhea, fatigue; reduction in resistance to infection.
200-300	Serious radiation sickness effects as in 100-200 rem and hemorrhage; exposure is a Lethal Dose to 10-35% of the population after 30 days (LD 10-35/30).
300-400	Serious radiation sickness; also marrow and intestine destruction; LD 50-70/30.
400-1000	Acute illness, early death; LD 60-95/30.
1000-5000	Acute illness, early death in days; LD 100/10.

New York City Example: Recovery

In this simulated attack we have assumed that New York is the only city attacked and that there is nothing to prevent state and federal agencies from concentrating their resources on bringing aid to the devastated area. Though the cleanup and decontamination of the most severely damaged and radioactive areas would take years, much immediate aid could be obtained from the outside.

Access

Manhattan is an island connected to the rest of New York and New Jersey by tunnels and bridges. Many of these access points will be affected to some degree by the blast. The Lincoln and Queens Midtown Tunnels are both in the 10 psi. ring and would likely be damaged or blocked by debris. The Queensboro Bridge is in the 5 psi. ring and would likely be damaged. The remaining tunnels and bridges all fall in the 2 or 1 psi. rings and might receive some light damage but would likely be usable. The rescue effort from outside would be further hampered by people trying to flee the area. In general, help from the outside would be slow in coming.

Medical Effects

With almost 900,000 people injured to various degrees, the task of caring for the injured will be beyond the ability of the medical system to respond. All but one of Manhattan's large hospitals lie inside the 5 psi. ring and would be completely destroyed. There aren't enough empty hospital beds in all of New York and New Jersey for even the most critically injured. The 1 psi. ring alone has an estimated 30,000 burn victims that will need specialized care. The entire country has a total of 3000 beds in burn centers. In the days to follow it is likely that many of the injured will die from lack of any medical care.

Utilities

Most of Manhattan will be without utilities (electricity, gas, water, sewage). Out to the edge of the 2 psi. ring, damaged buildings and the resulting debris will make repairs very difficult, if not impossible, for several weeks. It is likely that the stress to the power system will temporarily knock out power to an area much larger than that directly affected by the blast.

Rescue and Recovery

Transportation of the injured and the ability to bring in the necessary supplies, people and equipment will be dependent on the condition of the tunnels and bridges that connect Manhattan to New York and New Jersey. As discussed in Access, these points will be blocked or damaged to varying degrees, except at the far north and south tips of the island. The main train station lies in the 10 psi. ring and would be completely destroyed. Once access is established then true rescue work can begin.

It is likely that many tens of thousands of people would become homeless. Creation of temporary shelter would be among the first recovery tasks after all the trapped and injured had been found and cared for. True recovery for New York would take many years. Some areas would remain dangerously radioactive and would have to be cleaned up at tremendous cost or be abandoned for many years to come. Even without the radioactivity it is likely that New York City would never fully recover to its present status as one of the country's leading financial and cultural centers.

Distance from ground zero (mi.)	Population	Fatalities	Injuries	Uninjured
0 - 0.4	75,000	75,000	0	0
0.4 - 1.0	400,000	300,000	100,000	0

New York City Example: Summary

While this simulation of a 150 kiloton nuclear explosion contains many assumptions, and the uncertainty associated with any of the estimates is large, a number of points stand out:

1. 20 square miles of property destruction (2 psi.),
2. Eight hundred thousand killed, nine hundred thousand injured,
3. Additional damage from post blast fires,
4. Coordinated national rescue and recovery effort necessary.

Another example of the nuclear hysteria in the "patrician" stratum of the Western society is represented by this article (pertaining to the pre-9/11 era): "Russia's 'Lost' Luggage Could Be Deadly"⁴⁰⁶, by Eric Margolis, November 1, 1998. Here are a couple of quotes from it:

⁴⁰⁶ The article used to be published on this web page: <http://www.foreigncorrespondent.com/archive/suitcase.html> , which no longer exists in the Internet.

“...Last year, Gen. Alexander Lebed, Russia's former National Security Advisor, claimed more than 100 suitcase-sized nuclear weapons had disappeared.’ Another senior Russian security official, Alexei Yablokov, backed Lebed's allegations.

Lebed, now a presidential candidate, asserted Russia's military had lost track of the portable nuclear weapons, each of which can produce a 1 kiloton explosion, equivalent to 1,000 tons of TNT. A single suitcase nuke, placed in an urban area, could kill up to 100,000 people and cause enormous physical damage...”

“...The Soviet mini-nukes, described as the size of a golf club bag, were designed to destroy vital targets, such as military command and control centers, air defense headquarters, missile bases, communications nodes, power stations, bridges, dams, airports, and the St. Lawrence Seaway.

If one such weapon, hidden in the back of a delivery van, were detonated outside the Pentagon, America's military leadership would be decapitated...”

“...US security officials, who have been nonchalant about hidden suitcase nukes, should bear in mind the stranger- than-fiction case of a GRU ‘sleeper’ agent who settled in Edmonton, Canada, the late 1940's as a supposed refugee from Ukraine. A decade ago, he turned himself into the RCMP, and showed them a large, trunk-bomb he had hidden in his basement. His orders: when a coded signal comes in from GRU, transport the conventional bomb in his truck to a main oil pumping station north of Edmonton, and destroy it. He had been waiting nearly 40 years.

How many other such sleepers are out there? How many have nuclear devices? This is pretty scary stuff. Not just for North America, either. Rumors have circulated for years that Israeli agents may have hidden suitcase nukes in Moscow, St. Petersburg, Kiev, Odessa, Sevastapol, and Kharkov, not to mention Arab capitols, Tehran, even Pakistan...”

As you see, before 9/11 some U.S. security officials (I mean those specialists in nuclear weapons and in military affairs, not specialists in the Freemasonic intrigue) did not take the warning about the “hidden suitcase nukes” too seriously; so scribblers akin to the one who wrote the above article even felt that they should increase the vigilance of the U.S. security officials.

Just not to allow the reader to entertain any misleading belief, I feel obliged to remind that General Lebed was (to be more exact “is”) a Freemason. Lebed was instrumental in crushing the 1991 attempt of the Communist die-hards to overthrow Gorbachev's Government and to prevent the collapse of the Soviet Union. At the height of the 1991 crisis, Lebed, then a relatively low-ranking paratroopers' commander, ordered his paratroopers to switch sides and to provide guard to the besieged Yeltsin's headquarter. This particular move of Lebed proved to be vital in securing Yeltsin's survival as well as the destruction of the Soviet Union. Of course, as a gratitude for his invaluable service, Yeltsin promoted him through the ranks and made him a deputy commander of the paratroopers' forces. That is how Lebed actually became a general. Moreover, the scandalous personality of Lebed was intensively promoted those days by the Russian media and he eventually became about as popular as Monica Lewinsky in America. His notoriety (the Russians see little difference between popularity and notoriety – almost like the Americans) even enabled him to run for the presidency with 14.5% of vote in the first round of voting in the 1996 Russian presidential election. During this production Lebed provided his second invaluable service by preventing the Communists from winning the elections. He endorsed Yeltsin in the runoff election and Yeltsin won the runoff. Actually, being a paratrooper, Lebed knew little about nuclear weapons in general and absolutely nothing – about Soviet nuclear weapons in particular. However, the Freemasons managed to make the third good use of this guy, utilizing the fact that he was politically active. They ordered him to do the last job – by crying out loudly about the “stolen Soviet mini-nukes”. Lebed's cries were quite effective (especially because they were duly re-translated by the Western media). Indeed, many simpletons both in Russia and abroad took them for genuine. After he did his last job, Lebed, of course, “died a mysterious death” – like many other Freemasons in similar circumstances. It is believed that he now lives in the United States under a new identity within the frames of the notorious “witness protection program”.

Of course, since I touched this topic, I can not skip mentioning some books that one may purchase on Amazon or in books-stores, where their hysterical authors try their best to scare a gullible plebeian (and, by extension – a gullible patrician) with the “inevitable” prospect of a nuclear attack by evil Islamic (of course, “Islamic”, do you doubt it?) terrorists. It is difficult to say with 100% certainty whether the shameless “initiated” scribblers are merely trying to cash in on the hot “exclusive” issue, or they rather support the general cause of the so-called “good guys” by increasing the nuclear hysteria, but it appears to me that the second presumption is more probable.

The first of such books is a shameless concoction by a certain Dr. Hugh Cort titled “The American Hiroshima: Osama's Plan for a Nuclear Attack, And One Man's Attempt to Warn America”. You can take a look at this product on a dedicated Amazon web page here⁴⁰⁷.

The author of this book, Dr. Hugh Cort is described as the “President of the American Foundation for Counter-Terrorism Policy and Research, a nonprofit counter-terrorism think tank”, and also as *“...the author of “Saddam's Attacks on America.” Dr. Cort ran as a presidential candidate in the 2008 Republican Presidential Primary in order to get the warning out about Osama bin Laden's plans for a nuclear attack on America. He is a psychiatrist practicing in Alabama...”*⁴⁰⁸ An interesting piece of info regarding this man, dated by January 9, 2012, is available on this web page⁴⁰⁹:

“...4. Hugh Cort (Republican)

Cort's website has “2008” in its URL and Google tells me it may harm my computer, so I'll let that one remain a mystery, but I'm guessing it has a lot to say about Iran and bin Laden and nuclear terrorism, because that's pretty much all he talks about. He runs an organization called The American Foundation for Counter-Terrorism Policy and Research, and he wrote a book called The American Hiroshima: Osama's Plan for a Nuclear Attack, And One Man's Attempt to Warn America. The entirety of his platform, as far as I can tell, is that we need to destroy Iran before Iran destroys us. So he's like Newt Gingrich, but with a more sensible approach to judicial review.”

Contrary to my habit, I will not quote the actual text of his book, but will quote, instead, a few opinions of its readers, published on the abovementioned Amazon web page. So, judging by the readers' opinions, you may get an opinion of your own in regard to the contents of the actual book:

“An American Wake Up Call - Ignore at your own Peril. December 12, 2009

By M. Jerome Ennis

This book is powerful and is a must read if you truly want to know why we need to increase the fight against Islamic Terrorism. These Terrorists are not your ordinary enemies and the only way to stop them is to expose and destroy them, and for this nation to begin to take World Affairs and Terrorism serious.

Granting Terrorists the same rights as U.S. citizens or ordinary war criminals is a huge mistake, and unfortunately, we now have a U.S. President and Congress who are asleep at the wheel and living in La La Land, as in Hollywood Mentality.

This book has been thoroughly researched and Dr. Cort has presented the Facts about why we need to Have a Real War On Terror and Terrorism. Stamping out this threat will prevent a Nuclear Holocaust. After 9-11, can anybody seriously doubt how dedicated these terrorists truly are? These people have no consciences and they have no boundaries or fears. Treating them like Common Criminals and Having Show Trials in the USA is Treason on the part of our leaders. This book is a must read.

Jerome Ennis, MA

Tuscaloosa, Alabama”

This reader's comment goes first on that Amazon page. How do you like it? Note that this comment was dated by December 2009, when the war with the so-called “terror” has been already in a full swing. Still, for a shocked simpleton, who was so much impressed with that book, the intensity of the war against the so-called “Islamic Terrorism”, as on December, 2009, seemed not to be enough. He demanded for more. Moreover, he seemed to believe that the American citizens were not completely deprived of their former rights yet and more deprivation of the rights was required. Thus, granting typical legal rights to the defendants in the law court appears to that guy nothing less than “Treason” from the Capital Letter and a “huge mistake”.

"PURE TERROR December 15, 2009

By Sam Spade

TOSS ASIDE ALL YOUR BOOKS BY THE LEGION OF COUNTER-TERRORISM EXPERTS WHO HAVE NEVER MET A TERRORIST. DR. CORT IS A SEASONED INVESTIGATOR WHO PLAYED A PART IN EXPOSING THE TORONTO 18 AND JIHADI TRAINING CAMPS THROUGHOUT THE U.S. HIS NEW BOOK DEALS WITH THE VERY REAL THREAT OF NUCLEAR TERRORISM - - A THREAT THAT HAS BEEN VERIFIED BY REAL TERRORISTS - - INCLUDING KHALID SHEIKH MOHAMMED AND OSAMA BIN LADEN. THIS IS A MUST-READ. BRAVO, DR. CORT."

I hope you already educated enough to know who the chief 9/11 clown Khalid Sheikh Mohammed is? Now you can see that this scribbler was not ashamed to use even such a moth-eaten argument as "KSM" in his concoction. Well... I could only confirm the above eulogy by saying: "Yes, bravo, Dr. Cort! A simpleton was indeed cut to the quick by your book..."

The third and the last reader's comment on that Amazon page:

"A well researched shocker December 14, 2009

By M. Rash

Dr. Cort presents a compelling and well researched expose' of Osama bin Laden's plan to detonate nuclear devices in American cities.

*I recommend this book to every citizen who has concerns about US foreign policy and the War Against Terror."

I hope this is enough and you got the point. The War against the so-called "Terror" can not be stopped. It must be continued at any cost – even at the cost of shocking not only the Patrician, but even the lowly Plebeian with the prospect of the so-called "nuclear terror". The actual book, by Dr. Cort is not so big, by the way – it is merely a paperback of 132 pages. Though, as you could see, its readers perceive this poor concoction as nothing less than "a well researched shocker" and the "powerful book".

The second of such works on the so-called "nuclear terror" called "The Nuclear Bible" by a certain David Chase Taylor is very different in nature. Mr. Taylor apparently represents an alternative school of thought. His views on the so-called "nuclear terror" almost coincide with those of the humble author of these lines. "The Nuclear Bible" is distributed in a form of e-book, free of charge. The book is described as *"The Nuclear Bible is composed of over 1,000 news articles which ultimately connect the dots of an upcoming false-flag nuclear terror attack."*⁴¹⁰ Let us take a look at some of quotations from it; they were found on this web page http://alexanderbackman.com/nuke_terrorism_quotes.htm (the quotes are so many, in fact, on that page, but here I quote only a chosen few):

"...Excerpt from The Nuclear Bible by David Taylor:

Introduction: The following quotes regarding nuclear terror, Pakistan, and the end of America come from politicians and scholars from every walk of life. Interestingly, they are all singing the same tune in that nuclear terror will happen, Pakistan is to blame, and America will exist as a free nation no more.

~The World "The era of nuclear terrorism has arrived. ~Liam Fox, Current Shadow Defense Secretary and Member of British Parliament

—Unless the world community acts decisively and with great urgency, it is more likely than not that a weapon of mass destruction will be used in a terrorist attack somewhere in the world by the end of 2013. ~Study by the Commission on the Prevention of Weapons of Mass Destruction Proliferation and Terrorism Regarding nuclear terrorism.

—My greatest fear is the Iranians acquire a nuclear weapon and give it to a terrorist organization. And there is a real threat of them doing that. ~John McCain, Unites States Senator (Arizona).

"I don't believe it is a question of if it will happen. It is a question of when." ~Deborah A. Wilber, Director of the Office of Emergency Response at the Energy Department's National Nuclear Security Administration.

⁴¹⁰ <https://sites.google.com/site/nukebible/>

—The only certain way for terrorists to achieve bona fide mass destruction would be to use a nuclear weapon. ~Gilmore Commission —Nuclear proliferation - the proliferation of WMDs altogether - is one of the greatest dangers of our time.

—For the risks that the leaders of a rogue state will use nuclear, chemical or biological weapons against us or our allies is the greatest security threat we face. ~Madeleine Albright, United States Secretary of State (Former) —Nuclear terrorism is still often treated as science fiction. I wish it were. But unfortunately we live in a world of excess hazardous materials and abundant technological know-how, in which some terrorists clearly state their intention to inflict catastrophic casualties. Were such an attack to occur, it would not only cause widespread death and destruction, but would stagger the world economy... [creating] a second death toll throughout the developing world. ~Kofi Annan, Former UN Secretary, A Global Strategy for Fighting Terrorism (March 10, 2005).

"The prospect of terrorists detonating a nuclear device on American soil sometime within the next quarter-century is real and growing. Such a calamitous attack would represent a game-changing event far exceeding the impact of 9/11 on the nation." ~Gary Anthony Ackerman, Research Director of the U.S. Homeland Security Department-Funded National Consortium for the Study of Terrorism and Responses to Terrorism.

—The greatest threat now is a 9/11 occurring with a group of terrorists armed not with airline tickets and box cutters, but with a nuclear weapon in the middle of one of our own cities...there's a high probability of such an attempt." ~Dick Cheney, Former Vice President of the United States.

"Sooner or later there will be a nuclear 9/11 [by Islamic terrorists] in an American city or that of a US ally... A terrorist nuclear attack against an American city could take many forms. A worst case scenario would be the detonation of a nuclear device within a city. Depending upon the size and sophistication of the weapon, it could kill hundreds of thousands or even millions of people." ~David Krieger, Nuclear Age Peace Foundation.

—No greater fear than a terrorist who is inside the United States with nuclear weapons. ~Thomas Kean & Lee Hamilton, Chair and Vice-Chair of the 9/11 Commission.

—I'm absolutely convinced that the threat we face now, the idea of a terrorist in the middle of one of our cities with a nuclear weapon, is very real and that we have to use extraordinary measures to deal with it. ~Dick Cheney, Vice President of the United States (Former).

"The greatest threat to U.S. and global security is no longer a nuclear exchange between nations, but nuclear terrorism by violent extremists and nuclear proliferation to an increasing number of states." ~Barack Obama (Barry Soetoro), President of the United States.

One of our gravest concerns is the entry of a nuclear device or materials into the U.S." ~ Charles E. Allen, Undersecretary for Intelligence and Analysis and Chief Intelligence Officer at the Department of Homeland Security.

—Al Qaeda has tried to acquire or make nuclear weapons for at least 10 years [...] and continues to pursue its strategic goal of obtaining a nuclear capability. ~The 9/11 Commission.

—One mushroom cloud would change history. My deepest fear is that this is exactly what they [Al Qaeda] intend. ~George Tenet, Director of the CIA (Central Intelligence Agency).

—Al-Qaida wants a nuclear weapon to use." ~Charles E. Allen, United States Department of Homeland Security's Office of Intelligence and Analysis.

—An Al-Qaida nuclear attack would be in the planning stages at the same time as several other plots, and only Al-Qaida's most senior leadership will know which plot will be approved." ~Rolf Mowatt-Larssen, Director of Office of Intelligence and Counterintelligence for the Department of Energy.

—There are 18 million potential delivery vehicles that could be used to smuggle a nuclear device into the United States. That is the number of cargo containers that arrive in the country annually. Of them, only 3 percent are inspected, and bills of lading do not have to be produced until the containers reach their destination, according to current regulations. Radioactivity is invisible, as was the case in the Chernobyl disaster in 1986. There is no way of knowing in advance the impact on health 10 years hence. It is more a weapon of mass disruption than mass destruction. An unidentified former chief of Pakistan's Inter-Services Intelligence (ISI) agency is believed to be the man who coordinated bin Laden's nuclear ambitions. One local intelligence source speculated that before September 11, a dirty bomb could have been smuggled out of Afghanistan in a truck all the way to Karachi and then shipped out in a cargo container. ~Arnaud de Borchgrave, The Washington Times (December 10, 2001).

"If one bomb goes off, there are likely to be more to follow. This fact, that nuclear terrorism will appear as a syndrome rather than a single episode, has major consequences." ~Ashton Carter, Senior Defense Department Official

—If those [Nuclear] Bombs go off, there will be no fucking Constitution. ~FBI Agent, —Nuclear weapons kill Americans - they don't kill Republicans or Democrats - they kill Americans. ~Joe Wilson, United States House of Representatives (South Carolina)

—A nuclear weapon reaching a terrorist group, which will not hesitate to use it immediately. They will send it in a container with a GPS to a leading port in the U.S., Europe, or Israel." ~Ehud Barak, Israeli Defense Minister Conclusion: Should a nuclear attack occur in America, the aforementioned individuals should be immediately questioned as potential suspects tried in a court of law accordingly. It is still a mystery how certain politicians are so privy to the inner working of Al Qaeda and their top-secret plan to nuke America, unless they actually are Al Qaeda! ..."

This was just to illustrate that the U.S. Government and other U.S. officials indeed suffer from the intense nuclear hysteria and that they indeed take a possibility of a nuke being used by the so-called "terrorists" very seriously.

However, the main problem of the American FBI and the CIA is that their bosses know everything for sure, but they intentionally mislead their own Government in regard to the true possessors of such destructive things as those described above. They know it very well that all of those "mini-nukes" routinely used nowadays for the "car-bombings" and the "truck-bombings" belong to the so-called "good guys" who usually use the Israeli Mossad as their main proxy. Moreover, the FBI and the CIA bosses know that some larger devices belong to the so-called "good guys" too – including the very "Granit" missile with an unexploded half-megaton thermonuclear warhead that was fired at the Pentagon at 9/11. Though, they do not want to supply this information honestly to their own Government, or to the People.

As a result of this cheating, the "patricians", instead of quickly taking action against the true nuclear- and even thermonuclear perpetrators, continue to spend the taxpayer's money on unexplainable wars against Iraq and Afghanistan – to the accompaniment of the so-called "truck-bombings" that happen in today's Iraq, with a maximum of possible pace the infamous Dimona reactor producing Plutonium-239 can cope with.

Nuclear Madness 3. The first 1993 WTC bombing and the last 9/11 conspiracy theory.

Now as you have already learned about how intense, in fact, this hidden “nuclear hysteria” of the U.S. Government is, and about true reasons that stand behind this hysteria, it would be easier to understand what really happened with the World Trade Center on 9/11.

The initial version of this book did not contain this chapter. In fact, I myself did not even think that in reality everything was as simple as being beautifully explained by this ultimate “patrician conspiracy theory”. This idea was brought to my attention not so long time ago. After I completed the first edition of this book, I printed several copies of it on my laser printer, self-bound them, and sent them to several officials.

It so happened that a certain person (whom I can not name here, but can only mention that he was from the FBI) provided me with the most invaluable piece of information that would otherwise never be available to me. In fact, it would never occur to me that things in reality were quite different compared to what I initially thought. This person apparently knew something I did not know (because I was not an insider, unlike him). He, therefore, pointed to a couple of my mistakes, while confirming the rest of my findings. He confirmed that yes, three WTC buildings – the Twin Towers and the WTC-7 were brought down by their built-in nuclear demolition scheme in which each thermonuclear charge was much more powerful than a typical mini-nuke usually used in so-called “car-bombings”. And he confirmed that yes, the Pentagon was indeed hit by the Soviet “Granit” missile with its usual thermonuclear warhead attached. Of course, he also confirmed everything that was claimed by me in regard to the 2002 Bali- and the 1995 Oklahoma nuclear bombings. Basically, he confirmed all of my claims in regard to all important things related to 9/11. However, he pointed out that I was mistaken in two of my initial assertions.

The first of my mistakes, according to him, was that I stated the ridiculously wrong reason behind the U.S. officials’ decision to press the “red buttons” to execute the WTC nuclear demolition scheme. As you remember, I suggested above that the U.S. officials were tricked into demolishing the Twin Towers by claims of some unscrupulous WTC on-site construction managers (probably, hired by the Mossad) who managed to convince the Department of Buildings’ gullible officials that the Towers were allegedly so badly damaged by fires and so much structurally weakened that they were about to collapse, and so it was better to demolish them intentionally rather than to allow them to collapse in an uncontrolled manner.

Of course, I was not personally present during these events and while I knew for sure about the existence of the actual nuclear demolition scheme of the WTC from my former military service, to figure out why would the U.S. officials actually press the “red buttons” during the 9/11 events was quite a task for me. Guessing at the best of my abilities, I could only figure out two possible options that would be compliant with elementary logic:

1) The gullible U.S. officials were stupid enough to press the “red buttons” because they sincerely believed ridiculous claims of the WTC on-site construction managers that the WTC was allegedly about to collapse and if not demolished intentionally it might collapse accidentally (thus, causing more damage compared to its well calculated controlled demolition).

2) The wicked U.S. officials were brutal enough to press the “red buttons” because they were simply a part of the 9/11 conspiracy – they wanted to demolish the Twin Towers and blame this demolition on “terrorist planes” while hoping to employ their formidable propaganda machine to bulldoze any doubts.

Being a reasonable person, though, with limited knowledge, I could not find any other explanation as to why would the U.S. officials demolish the WTC (and so to voluntarily put themselves in such an awkward situation they found themselves in, after the site of the WTC was named by an odd nuclear name “ground zero” – with all the consecutive headaches arising from that fact). Since I did not believe (for a variety of reasons) that the U.S.’ own officials stood behind the 9/11 project, I simply discarded the second option from those two mentioned above. Therefore, I had no choice than to think that the first option was the only possible reason to solve this particular puzzle. However, even though I had no other reason in hand and therefore suggested that the gullible U.S. officials were tricked into pressing the “red buttons” by the claims about the WTC alleged structural damage, such a reason did not sound compelling enough to me from the beginning. This suspicion of mine was totally unproven.

Actually, I have to admit, it was the weakest point in my entire explanation about the WTC demolition at the time I finished the first edition of this book. I simply could not explain why would the Department of Buildings' officials press or allow others to press the "red buttons" in such circumstances. Apparently, the suggested reason that the WTC might (not even necessarily "would") collapse on its own due to the terrorist planes' impacts was not adequate enough to demolish these buildings by 150-kiloton thermonuclear explosions in the middle of the populated city...

This mistake of mine was corrected by that person who offered another explanation that would never ever come to my mind otherwise. He virtually opened my eyes. I will explain what he put as a true reason for the actual pressing of the "red buttons" a little bit further, please, just be patient for a little while and you will be soon surprised at how much their reason sounds legitimate and logical.

The second mistake of mine according to that person was that I wrongly stated the reason behind the missile attack on the Pentagon (while rightly stating that it was the "Granit" missile with a thermonuclear warhead, detonator of which was set in such a way that the actual thermonuclear blast was impossible).

I initially suggested that the 9/11 perpetrators fired the Soviet-made missile at the Pentagon in order to prevent the Russian President from blaming the Americans for demolishing the Twin Towers by their own thermonuclear charges. Understandably, Russian President Putin found himself in a terribly awkward position after he was confronted with remnants of the Soviet-made "Granit", found in the Pentagon (moreover, equipped with the Soviet-made 500 kiloton hydrogen warhead that "luckily" failed to produce the intended thermonuclear blast and so to incinerate Washington in its entirety). Thus, he at once lost his right to open his mouth and to blame the Americans for either demolishing the WTC or for their wars against the so-called "terror" that followed 9/11.

That initially suggested reason of mine to explain the otherwise unexplainable Pentagon missile strike sounded quite plausible in fact, and I sincerely believed that it was the true reason, or, at least, one of a few true reasons (the Freemasons, as I have told you many times, always do everything for a minimum of two-three different reasons and almost never – for a single reason alone). Today, of course, I no longer believe that it was the main reason, thanks to the abovementioned FBI person who suggested the main reason behind the Pentagon attack. However, I do believe, still, that my initial reason was one of a few reasons and it worked out as intended in this sense. As anyone could see, the Russian President did not complain about the WTC nuclear demolition or about the U.S.-inspired war against the so-called "terror", while he apparently had no reason to protect interests of the United States (which still treated Russia as its main enemy despite of the Soviet Union's collapse and despite prohibition of the Communist ideology in modern Russia).

However, the abovementioned FBI person told me that the true reason behind the Pentagon attack initially suggested by me was dead wrong and the true reason was entirely different. Moreover, it was directly related to the otherwise unexplainable decision of the Department of Buildings' officials to press the "red buttons" of the nuclear demolition scheme of the WTC in New York. You will be surprised, indeed, when you get to know the real reason as secretly claimed by the FBI. Just be patient for awhile and soon you will get the point.

As I have mentioned above, it was said to me that if not for these two mistakes, my claims in this book were all correct, thus, rating the "level of correctness" of my work at some 98%. Thanks to that fortunate FBI's clarification, now the remaining wrong 2% represented by the abovementioned two mistakes could be corrected bringing the "level of correctness" to 100%. Of course, I can not independently verify if those claims by the abovementioned person were correct or it was simply a product of his imagination, or if he was intentionally planted on me in order to mislead me, so I could still be mistaken in regard to these two points.

However, they sound logical enough to me to believe that they are at least more probable than my previous guessing. Therefore, I decided, at last, to add this new Chapter to the final version of my book. It is up to you – whether to believe it or not. But when it comes to me, I am inclined to believe these claims obtained from the FBI person, despite the fact that they indeed might look odd at the first glance. They are logical, after all, and this is the main point. As you know, logic is a stubborn thing...

So, here it is:

The first mini-nuclear bombing of the WTC also known as the 1993 WTC “car-bombing”.

First of all, we have to establish whether the 1993 WTC bombing was yet another typical “mini-nuclear” bombing as the most of the so-called “car-bombings” and “truck-bombings” were, or it was a conventional one.

Of course, it was a nuclear bombing, and though it is quite difficult to prove it today, you will see proof of this fact.

Unfortunately, not too many details are now available in regard to the first WTC mini-nuclear bombing. The point is that the 1993 mini-nuclear bombing was overshadowed by the second WTC maxi-nuclear bombing. The situation with our inquiry is additionally aggravated by the fact that the Twin Towers are no longer available and their former spot bears the precisely same nuclear name Ground Zero it supposed to bear beginning from 1993.

If for the “nuclear” proof of the 1995 Oklahoma “car”-bombing you could simply begin by searching the Internet entering these three keywords, “Oklahoma ground zero”, you can not do it for the “WTC ground zero”. You can not hope to find that “ground zero” was used in relation to the WTC for as long time ago as back in 1993. All results you will get in such a case from the Internet search engine will be related exclusively to 9/11 ground zero that proposed to be written with the capital letters...

Another difficulty in finding the nuclear truth behind the first WTC “car-bombing” is that in 1993 the Internet was not yet developed. Those days they did not get a habit of publishing news on the Internet, thus, you can not hope to find anything related to the 1993 event by searching the Internet as you could do for the events of the later ‘90s and those of the new millennium. Therefore, a maximum of what you could find on the Internet in relation to the first WTC “car-bombing”, is only information the so-called “good guys” want you to know and nothing more than that.

Of course, if you are a real researcher you could go to some public library and to sift through a variety of contemporary newspapers. However, in my particular case (considering that I live in Bangkok) it was not an affordable option. Besides, in 1993 I was not actually interested in political news and I did not care about any bombings whether nuclear or conventional. By then, I had already discharged from the Soviet military, while the Soviet military itself, along with the entire Soviet Union, ceased to exist. Those days I was busy with other things, trying to start some business of my own and so to survive and I was not interested at all in any politics or in military affairs – not to say in the so-called “terrorism”. Thus, unlike the infamous 1983 Beirut Barracks bombing that was knowingly nuclear for nearly every officer of the Soviet Special Control Service, the 1993 WTC bombing managed to miss my attention when it occurred. I simply did not know that it was yet another typical “mini-nuclear” event until very recently. Even during my endless discussions with Mike Harari on various nuclear- related topics, the 1993 WTC bombing had never been a subject (unlike the 1995 Oklahoma bombing that seemed to be the very pride of Harari he liked to talk about).

Therefore, the first WTC “car”-bombing remained quite an obscure event to me until my FBI acquaintance virtually opened my eyes on its true physical nature, and, what is the most important – on its true significance. Of course, the first WTC bombing was the most significant event. It was the first instance when the so-called “terrorists” brought the nuclear device right into the United States’ sovereign territory and detonated their nuke right in the heart of America. As you could probably guess, the infamous 1995 Oklahoma nuclear bombing was only the second event of such a nature in the United States. Thus, the most significance in this sense belonged to the first WTC bombing that occurred two years earlier. And, of course, such a significance of the 1993 WTC “mini-nuking” attempt was used by the 9/11 perpetrators in their planning and it proved to work flawlessly, as you will see later.

Before we move further, I feel obliged to provide some proof that the 1993 WTC bombing was indeed a nuclear event. We need to formally establish that the first WTC bombing was indeed a nuclear one.

Even though information of this bombing is very scarce on the Internet, we could still find some. I hope the discerning reader has already trained himself how on to “read between the lines” and so to be able to distinguish a real mini-nuclear explosion from a conventional one. Here you will have a good chance to use some of your abilities.

To begin with, as it has already become our good tradition, let us look at the Wikipedia article⁴¹¹:

“...The 1993 World Trade Center bombing occurred on February 26, 1993, when a car bomb was detonated below Tower One of the World Trade Center in New York City. The 1,500 lb (680 kg) urea nitrate-hydrogen gas enhanced device was intended to knock the North Tower (Tower One) into the South Tower (Tower Two), bringing both towers down and killing thousands of people. It failed to do so, but did kill six people and injured 1,042.

The attack was planned by a group of conspirators including Ramzi Yousef, Mahmud Abouhalima, Mohammad Salameh, Nidal Ayyad, Abdul Rahman Yasin and Ahmad Ajaj. They received financing from Khaled Shaikh Mohammed, Yousef's uncle...”

I hope this piece of information is enough to realize that the official interpretation of the event (I mean not the official interpretation intended for the “patricians”, but the official interpretation intended for the gullible general public- the “plebians”) is nothing but the most blatant lie. The mere fact that the chief 9/11 clown popularly known as “KSM” (a/k/a “Khaled Shaikh Mohammed”) claims to be an “uncle” of Ramzi Yousef and a “financer” of the first WTC bombing, says a lot. That only means that the real culprits behind the first WTC bombing were not found and therefore the supposedly “bad guys” are represented by a bunch of actors hired to act as such by the “good guys”. I hope you still remember that another infamous “nuclear terrorist” Timothy McVeigh was hired by the FBI to play a “bad guy” in the 1995 Oklahoma bombing trial [held behind the closed doors in case you care to remember this strange fact]. There was absolutely no difference between these two attempts because the hiring of the “bad guys”, who would dramatize in the court-room, was performed by the very same American officials. Therefore, it shall be suspected right away that it was not a conventional, but a nuclear device used in the first WTC bombing – simply because of an apparent similarity in handling this case compared to that in Oklahoma, where the bomb was proven to be nuclear.

However, even we have our right and duty to suspect that the 1993 WTC bombing was nuclear by simply analyzing the first few sentences of the above Wikipedia’s article, we still need some solid proof that it was indeed nuclear. As I have mentioned above, it is not easy at all to find such a proof of the remote 1993 event today, in 2013, but we will try. Here is one of the rarest pieces of information that was still available on the Internet:

<http://www.nytimes.com/learning/general/onthisday/20090226.html>

I will not quote the entire article here, just to save paper, but only its most revealing “nuclear” details that I made in a bold font. Of course, as usual, we have to read this article “between the lines”. We remember, of course, that ordinary explosions of TNT, C4 or anything of this kind do not “ignite fires”, do not “burn” cars or people, do not cause feelings of “small earthquake” that could be felt miles away, and do not cause any Electromagnetic Pulse that could at once render useless all electrical and electronic equipment around – plunging the entire surroundings into the total darkness, and so on. And what is most important – they do not kill or injure people on a mass scale. Unlikely you would ever be able to kill and injure more than 20 persons in the typical conditions even by the biggest truck-bomb – especially in a near empty car-parking, rather than in a packed football stadium (unless your “truck-bomb” is merely a pseudonym for a “mini-nuke”, of course). So, here it is: “Blast Hits Trade Center, Bomb Suspected; 5 Killed, Thousands Flee Smoke in Towers”, by Robert D. McFadden.

“Many Are Trapped for Hours in Darkness and Confusion

An explosion apparently caused by a car bomb in an underground garage shook the World Trade Center in lower Manhattan with the force of a small earthquake shortly after noon yesterday, collapsing walls and floors, igniting fires and plunging the city’s largest building complex into a maelstrom of smoke, darkness and fearful chaos.

The police said the blast killed at least five people and left more than 650 others injured, mostly with smoke inhalation or minor burns, but dozens with cuts, bruises, broken bones or serious burns. The police said 476 were treated at hospitals and the rest by rescue and medical crews at the scene.

⁴¹¹ http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/1993_World_Trade_Center_bombing

The explosion also trapped hundreds of people in debris or in smoke-filled stairwells and elevators of the towers overhead and forced the evacuation of more than 50,000 workers from a trade center bereft of power for lights and elevators for seven hours.

No Bomb Fragments Found

The blast, which was felt throughout the Wall Street area and a mile away on Ellis and Liberty Islands in New York Harbor, also knocked out the police command and operations centers for the towers, which officials said rendered the office complex's evacuation plans useless.

James Fox, an assistant director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation in charge of the agency's New York office, said that no bomb fragments were found but that a joint terrorist task force of Federal agents and city detectives had examined the wreckage and believed that a car bomb had caused the explosion....

...Some law-enforcement officials said an explosion of such size, without a claim of responsibility in advance, might suggest that it went off accidentally...

...As the day ended, a series of investigations began – into the cause of the explosion and its possible perpetrators, and into what went wrong in what many called a botched evacuation, with no alarms and no instructions for thousands caught in dark, smoky stairwells, in stark contrast to carefully laid plans.

Mayor David N. Dinkins, visiting in Osaka, Japan, was notified by City Hall and, in a telephone news conference, called the Fire Department response the largest for any non-natural disaster in the city's history. He said he had spoken with President Clinton and had thanked him for the cooperation of Federal investigators.

The effects of the blast radiated outward, disrupting most non-cable television transmissions throughout the metropolitan area, halting traffic in most of lower Manhattan and PATH train service under the Hudson River from the trade center to New Jersey, and transforming an ordinary Friday in the financial district into an afternoon of turmoil, death and destruction.

On a day of high drama, tragedy and heroism, there were a thousand stories: rescuers digging frantically for victims in the collapsed PATH station under the towers, soot-streaked evacuees groping for hours in the city's tallest buildings, a woman in a wheelchair carried down 66 stories by two friends, a pregnant woman airlifted by helicopter from a tower roof, and the tales of many others stumbling out, gasping for air, terrified but glad to be alive...

...Many of those who walked down scores of flights from the upper reaches of the trade center towers said there had been no alarm bells and no instructions from building personnel or emergency workers. While little panic was reported, witnesses said confusion reigned in the darkness of crowded stairwells where smoke billowed and unknown dangers lurked below.

Many put moist towels or handkerchiefs to their faces against the smoke. Others, frightened, remained in their offices, hoping for rescue. As smoke seeped in under the doors, some broke windows to get air. Dozens of people, meantime, were trapped for hours in elevators frozen between floors, among them another class of kindergartners from P.S. 95.

The worst fires were extinguished by midafternoon. By then extensive efforts to assist those caught on the upper floors were already well underway. But the trade center, with 250 elevators and miles of corridors and stairways, posed a major challenge and long after dark last night rescue workers continued to search the labyrinth for stragglers and others still trying to get out...

...The blast, which erupted at 12:18 P.M. on the second level of a four-story underground parking garage beneath the trade center's 110-story twin towers and the complex's Vista Hotel, sent cars hurtling like toys, blew out a 100-foot wall and sent the floor collapsing down several stories, creating a crater 60 feet wide that reached deep into the bowels of the parking complex...

...It also collapsed the ceiling of a mezzanine in the adjacent Port Authority Trans-Hudson train station, leaving dozens trapped under rubble on a concourse one floor above the platforms where hundreds awaited trains. Witnesses and rescue workers told of a blast of incredible force – of bodies hurtling through the air, of cars wrapped around pillars, of people burning and scores trapped.

'We crawled under pipes when we arrived and everything was on fire,' said Edward Bergen, a 38-year-old firefighter who was one of the first to reach the scene of the blast. 'Suddenly, a guy came walking out of the flames, like one of those zombies in the movie, 'The Night of the Living Dead.' His flesh was hanging off. He was a middle-aged man.'

Fire Capt. Timothy Dowling, of Engine Company 6, recalled a ghastly scene of fires lapping in the darkness, illuminating a smoking hell of twisted cars and broken concrete. 'It looked like a bomb had exploded because of the amount of fire and damage to the floors. All we could do was put water on the flames.'...

...The five victims – three men, one woman and one unidentified – were all believed to have been killed by the blast. They were not immediately identified but the Port Authority said that they were all believed to be authority workers or people working under contract to the agency. The authorities said that more bodies might be found in the rubble as the search went on.

The police said 420 workers and visitors at the trade center were treated at hospitals, along with 44 firefighters, 11 police officers and one Emergency Medical Service worker..."

What could we say?

Just to remind you: conventional explosions do not cause fires. They could do vice-versa: extinguish the existing fires by the force of their blast-wave, rather than starting new ones...

Of course, conventional explosions do not burn people. How could they burn them? To burn people is a property of a nuclear explosion that has well-known thermal radiation – from among its other well-known destructive factors. Of course, only a nuclear explosion could cause the well-known effect of someone's "flesh hanging off". Of course, only a nuclear explosion could burn bodies beyond recognition – so that it was not even possible to immediately identify if the charred corpses were "authority workers" or "people working under contract to the agency". Not to mention those who were charred to such an extent, that even their sex could not be determined – as in the above quotation.

And, of course, 44 firefighters would never be treated in hospitals after their routine work on extinguishing fires, unless, of course, the firefighters received doses of ionizing radiation that caused acute radiation sickness. Or, at least, unless they were rightly suspected to inhale or ingest deadly radioactive dust which shall be promptly cleaned off from their intestines/ lungs in hospital conditions.

Needless for me to mention again and again that ordinary explosions do not cause power outages and "total darknesses", by rendering useless all electrical and electronic equipment around. It could only happen because of the fifth well-known destructive factor of a nuclear blast – Electromagnetic Pulse (EMP).

Of course, the first 1993 WTC bombing was nuclear.

However, from the above article we established that it was a nuclear bombing in a manner of reading "between the lines". I.e. we established it by using an approach of typical intelligence services' analysts – who read and make right conclusions for their intelligence services (usually they do it exactly by "reading between the lines"). In this way it is possible to establish the true state of affairs when it is classified or simply hidden, but evidence obtained in such a way, unfortunately, is not admissible in the court of law. Meaning that, for example, a General, a chief of an intelligence department, would accept this conclusion from his analyst, but a judge, in a court of law, would not. It is legally inadmissible – to present to the court information obtained by "reading between the lines".

Therefore we need, perhaps, some solid proof – of the type admissible in legal proceedings – in order to formally establish that the first WTC bombing was indeed nuclear. And only after that it could be treated as a proven fact. Luckily, we can do it. After a long search for various old articles, I found at least a few where the nuclear term “ground zero” was mentioned in relation to the 1993 bombing.

As you already know, “ground zero” obtained its “broadened” definition, along with possibilities to be used in any metaphorical sense, only after September 11, 2001. Before 9/11, “ground zero” was not used as a metaphor, neither was its “broadened” definition available even in the biggest unabridged encyclopedic dictionaries. Before 9/11, “ground zero” was a pure military definition or, as a variety, an ABC/Civil Defense’s designation of a place of a nuclear explosion.

Therefore, if the “ground zero” term was used in pre-9/11 documents, or even attributed to officials quoted in pre-9/11 news articles, this constitutes a legal proof that a certain nuclear explosion had indeed taken place. And this is admissible in the court of law. Because it is no longer “reading between the lines”. It is reading of the very lines.

If you read a document/news article and you encounter words: “place of a nuclear explosion” you should not doubt that they are talking about a place of a nuclear explosion, should you? Because the phrase “place of a nuclear explosion” is not known to be used in a metaphorical sense and as such it could only have its lone direct meaning. Since “ground zero” in pre-9/11 English language had only one meaning (at least from the mid-’50s), it should be presumed that once you see that some place is called “ground zero” in a pre-9/11 document it only means that it was indeed “ground zero” with no other possible sense. It is, by the way, one of the reasons why the so-called “good guys” bothered to re-print all English dictionaries after 9/11. Otherwise, “ground zero” words could have been used in the court of law in relation to 9/11 by some “truthers” wanting to sue the U.S. officials.

Let us, at last, review a few articles where the most revealing term “ground zero” has been mentioned before September 11, 2001, in relation to the spot of the first WTC bombing. Actually, if you reside in any English-speaking country, you could simply go to a library and find “ground zero” mentioning in newspapers’ articles covering the 1993 bombing. It will be the best. However, in my own case, because I live in Bangkok where old English newspapers are not available even in the National Library, I had no chance to use such a luxury. The best I could do was to search the Internet in a hope to find some old articles using these seditious words. Below are 5 instances that I managed to find using Google search:

From now on, we could not only be sure that the first WTC bombing was indeed nuclear, but we could even prove this fact in the court of law. Because it was admitted as such by the mass media quoting some officials who clearly stated that the spot of the 1993 WTC bombing was indeed a spot of a nuclear explosion. I hope it is clear to every logical person that “ground zero” could not have any other sense.

Of course, I sincerely expect that some hysterical zombies (perhaps, paid shells playing “concerned citizens”) would cry loudly accusing me of misinterpreting the “ground zero” words and manipulating with their “wrongfully ascribed” sense to my supposed “advantage”. However, this book was not written for zombies; I hope you realize it. It was written for people who could use elementary logic and make their own conclusions.

Now we come closer to the main point of this Chapter. The first 1993 WTC nuclear bombing was nothing else than the very first nuclear bombing inside the United States. Understandably, it caused the desired effect: the U.S. officials began to realize for the first time that the so-called “terrorists”, at last, crossed the borders of Lebanon and have reached the very United States with their nuclear stuff and they no longer hesitated to use their nukes against the American civilians, right in the middle of the U.S. cities.

According to the abovementioned FBI’s acquaintance of mine, the U.S. officials took that incident very seriously. Their main concern was this. The “terrorists” proved capable of delivering their nukes into the U.S. territory. Moreover, they proved determined to put them to the actual use. So, what if the next time the “terrorists” would not opt for an underground parking lot, but would, instead, detonate their nuke on a roof of some building? Could you imagine what kind of damage could be inflicted in such a case – if some one would bring a nuclear suitcase into, let’s say, a roof of 30 stories high building, set its dial at a full 1 kiloton, rather than at 0.1 kiloton yield, and detonate it? Just imagine that in the 800 meters radius all people in the open would receive guaranteed lethal radiation doses of 500 Roentgens. Furthermore – up to 1,200 meters, those who stand in the open would receive doses of penetrating radiation that would cause the deaths of something like half of them? Add here potential damage caused by thermal radiation, consequent fires, by air-blast wave, and by radioactive contamination and you will get the full picture.

Now imagine that a nuke of 40 kilotons by its size does not differ much from a mini-nuke of 1 kiloton – simply because the critical mass of fissionable material is the same in both cases and so a 40 kiloton nuke that is at least trice as powerful as the Hiroshima bomb could easily fit into a medium-sized suitcase? Imagined? Make your own conclusions.

It comes as no surprise then, that the nuclear hysteria among the high-ranking U.S. politicians and its security officials was at its highest point following the first WTC “car”-bombing. They were naturally shit-scared and all of them envisaged that next time the “terrorists” would probably place their nuke into the observation desk of the Twin Tower and set it at its full yield... In fact, their hysteria was so intense that such a “nuclear prospect” reached Hollywood, which timely responded with a nice Freemasonic movie bearing a truly mocking Freemasonic-style name “True Lies”. In case you forgot that incredible movie, just look at the pictures below and you will certainly recollect it.

I guess that most of the readers still remember that peculiar 1994 movie directed by James Cameron and starred by Arnold Schwarzenegger and Jamie Lee Curtis. In that movie, which was seemingly inspired by the contemporary nuclear hysteria of the U.S. Government, following the first WTC “car-bombing”, a certain terrorist organization, named “Crimson Jihad”, led by a certain “Salim Abu Aziz”, managed to smuggle a few Soviet-made nuclear warheads into the United States and was planning to detonate one of the warheads on a rooftop of a certain high-rise building. The rest of the movie plot is unimportant for our research. I hope you got the main point. This movie, in turn, added even more to the nuclear hysteria of the U.S. security officials and riveted even more attention of high-ranking U.S. guys to such a possibility. At least, so it was confided to me by the abovementioned person; just to remind you that it is not my own opinion, but that person’s (to be more precise – the FBI’s.)

As a result of all of this (hysteria caused by the abovementioned Freemasonic movie inclusive) there was a special commission appointed by the U.S. Government that was tasked with analyzing such a possible scenario and with working out counter-measures should such an emergency really occur in the United States.

Of course, the commission rightly presumed that the “terrorists” would undoubtedly make their choice of one of the tallest buildings (to increase the radius of the destruction). Moreover, it was rightly presumed that should the “terrorists” attempt to strike America in such a manner, their first choice would be the WTC Twin Towers. It would be so because, firstly, the Twins were the tallest buildings in New York, and, secondly, because they were the undisputed symbol of American capitalism (and for all “terrorists” – that of the American imperialism). The commission, based on the fact that there had been already one nuclear explosion in the basement of the WTC, had to deal with the possible scenario that one day another nuclear explosion (perhaps, mightier than that of a typical “mini-nuke”) would take place on the roof of the WTC Twin Towers or on its higher floors. At this point, it was luckily “remembered” by someone about the original nuclear demolition scheme of the Twin Towers that was their built-in feature. After some hesitation, it was decided to draw contingency plans taking into consideration the WTC in-built nuclear demolition scheme. Someone in the commission had noticed that such a “friendly” thermonuclear explosion, in case of a real emergency, would greatly minimize the risk of the “hostile” nuclear explosion intended to be high above the ground.

The contingency plans were drawn in such a manner that should the security officials know for sure the “terrorists” have planted a nuclear device either on the high floors or on the roof of the Twin Towers and there is a real possibility that it might explode, the officials must counteract by setting off the in-built demolition scheme of the WTC immediately. It was presumed, that in case of really “good luck”, the hostile nuclear device would be rendered useless by the destructive wave of the underground nuclear explosion of their own, so that the enemy nuke would not produce any intended nuclear explosion whatsoever. And even in case of “bad luck” (that the nuclear charge of the “terrorists” would still survive and remain in the workable condition) it would at least fall to the ground first and would produce a nuclear explosion at the surface level, rather than several hundred meters above – thus, greatly minimizing its zone of destruction.

However strange it might sound, the commission had drawn and sealed a special instruction for the case of a terrorist nuclear emergency that prescribed something like mentioned above (as I have already said, I have gotten this particular piece of info after I completed this book, not before it, and as such it can not be blamed on my own guessing – it came from the FBI source and indeed it sounded very logical to me).

That is why long before the actual September 11, 2001, contents of this tough instruction that prescribed to demolish the WTC should any terrorists plant any nuke in its high floors, were known not only to the U.S.’ own security officials, but to some rogue guys as well. Particularly to those from the Mossad (needless to mention that the Mossad folks always claimed to be “friendly” and “cooperative” to foreign secret services and as such they could always have a good pretext to put their noses into some “friendly” secret services’ real secrets). However, since as I have mentioned that the Mossad is in fact quite a small organization with limited capabilities and it was used merely as a 9/11 tool, the most important was not that this instruction was known to the Mossad. The most important thing was that it was known to the Freemasonic sect (who actually inspired the instruction by its clever 1993 setup and its “timely” 1994 movie brilliantly titled “True Lies”).

The 9/11 planners knew very well in advance what exactly to plan. They only needed to create a situation where the U.S. security officials would sincerely believe the so-called “terrorists” had already planted nuclear warheads in the high floors of the Twin Towers and the job was done. The rest would be processed in accordance with the 1994 instruction that, in turn, was worked out on motifs of the WTC “car-bombing” and those of the “True Lies” movie. The 9/11 planners needed to create an impression that it was nuclear devices planted into the WTC Twin Towers and so to provoke the U.S. officials into demolishing the WTC on their own. The 9/11 plot, in fact, was as simple as this. For that reason, the 9/11 planners needed some real nuclear device that could fall into the hands of the U.S. security officials and could serve as a “proof” that there was no joke in regard to the other nuclear devices supposedly delivered into the WTC upper-floors...

Someone might ask – is there any piece of 9/11 information publicly available that could support this new theory? You might be surprised if I answer “yes!”

Just go back to the Chapter “Technicalities of the WTC-7 collapse and the rest of the WTC collapse from the logical point of view”, to its fourth page, and you will find there a mentioning of one of the most important pieces of 9/11 evidence discovered by the author of these lines (I feel proud discovering it on my own):

Soon after the second Twin Tower’s collapse, NBC’s Pat Dawson quotes Albert Turi, the chief of safety for the New York Fire Department:

“... he thinks that there were actually devices that were planted in the building. One of the secondary devices he thinks that took place after the initial impact was, he thinks, may have been on the plane that crashed into one of the towers. The second device, he thinks, he speculates, was probably planted in the building...”

Just to remind you, this unprecedented video evidence, as of January 2012, was available on YouTube:

If it has been deleted by the time you are reading these lines, you can try searching the Internet for this file:

“911_NBC_Albert_Turi_on_'secondary-devices'_planted_in_the_buildings_and_on_the_planes” with a few different file’s extensions: “.avi”, “.flv”, “.mov”, “.wmv”, “.mpeg”, “.mp4”, “.mp3”, “.3gp” ; it is supposed to be available on my own web hosting <http://www.911-truth.net> as well as on some other web sites, because people were urged to re-upload this file everywhere possible and keep it available for those who might fish to download it after my book is published.

This video clip was also used in my video-presentation. The solution to this puzzle has been found...

From now on, as the discerning reader might guess, the true motive behind the otherwise unexplainable 9/11 Pentagon nuclear missile attack becomes quite understandable.

The 9/11 perpetrators got a Soviet “Granit” missile, stolen from the “Kursk” submarine. After that, they rendered useless its detonator (not so difficult job, indeed). This was to ensure that no nuclear explosion would really follow the Pentagon strike, as well as to ensure that the “luckily” unexploded 500 kiloton thermonuclear warhead found in the middle of the Pentagon would create the exact impression needed on the gullible U.S. security officials. In the midst of the 9/11 confusion, they fired it into the Pentagon (not too difficult a job either, because the Pentagon itself as the main target, was preloaded in the missile’s inertial guidance system and it found its target automatically.)

At this point, some so-called “good guys” began to spread “reliable information” (perhaps, supported by some allegedly “authentic” documents obtained by the Mossad from a certain “terrorist organization”) that the two devices (planes, or missiles, or whatever) that allegedly smashed into the WTC-1 and WTC-2 were also allegedly loaded with half-megaton thermonuclear warheads of similar kind. Of course, these were “about to explode” and so to incinerate New York City. And as the best proof that it was by no means a joke, was offered the very “Granit” missile with a thermonuclear warhead found in the middle of the Pentagon. The 9/11 plot was as brilliant as this.

The shills would interrupt my narration at this point, of course, and accuse me of “contradicting myself”. They would say something like this: Hey! Look at this Russian liar, at this disinfo agent! Before he told you that aluminum could not penetrate steel, but now he is changing his own story to tell you that the U.S. officials were allegedly made to believe that the alleged thermonuclear warheads were loaded into those very aluminum planes, that, according to this liar Dimitri Khalezov allegedly “could not penetrate steel”! How it could be? He clearly contradicts his own story! Khalezov’s lie is clearly intended to shift the blame away from the evil U.S. Government that planned to demolish the WTC with nano-thermite, which was described by so many reliable scholars in so many respectable scientific publications!

Do not be duped by such cries as the one described above. When a certain shill cries out loudly about so-called “nano-thermite” and about the “evil U.S. Government” supposedly using that previously unheard of substance, he does it with a pretty self-evident reason in mind. The shill merely tries to protect the “evil” U.S. Government, which will be otherwise accused of sending something like a hundred thousand of unprotected gullible ground zero responders to their certain deaths – to clean ground zero without proper haz-mat suits. I.e. if not protected by the shills who pretend to accuse it of using so-called “nano-thermite”, the U.S. Government would stand genuinely accused of the premeditated mass-murder that it committed in cold blood. I hope you always keep in mind this particular point.

Coming back to the actual accusation of allegedly “contradicting myself”. No, I did not contradict myself. The one who claims that aluminum could not penetrate steel is me, Mr. Dimitri Khalezov. While the one who was made to believe that aluminum planes allegedly managed to penetrate the steel Twin Towers and, moreover, to bring with them the alleged 500 kiloton thermonuclear warheads was not me. It was another person – the U.S. Counter-terrorism Coordinator Mr. Richard Clarke. Where do you see any contradiction? Mr. Khalezov believes that aluminum could not penetrate steel. Mr. Clarke, I guess, today also does not believe that it could, but during the 9/11 fever he simply had no time to contemplate over the suggested armor-piercing capabilities of aluminum.

I hope you realize (by imagining yourself in the shoes of Mr. Clarke) that when you are reported by your own- and also by some “friendly” secret services, that the terrorists launched a nuclear attack against the United States and such a message is followed by a genuine enemy missile with a genuine thermonuclear warhead penetrating the airspace of your country and striking the Department of Defense, an urge to contemplate about whether or not aluminum planes could penetrate steel would probably be the last thought that might come to your mind? Of course, do not even doubt it, Mr. Clarke realized that he was duped by the Mossad in regard to the “planes” – I guess, it occurred to him in the very next morning, when he ordered that the lists of passengers and flights’ routes were delivered to him. But, by then, it was simply too late – the WTC had been already reduced to the pile of radioactive rubble and all what could have been done in this situation was to Capitalize the ground zero definition, so making it less suggestive to the crowd. However, at the moment of making a decision to demolish the Twin Towers, Mr. Clarke indeed believed that aluminum could penetrate steel, or, probably, he simply did not even think in that direction. He was only concerned with the reports of the nuclear warheads in the Pentagon and in the Twin Towers’ higher floors.

I guess, by the above considerations, I have successfully refuted the abovementioned assault of the skills and the reader no longer sees any alleged “contradictions” in my narration? So, let us come back to the actual 9/11 planning.

Of course, for the 9/11 planners, a very important step was to get rid of the knowledgeable specialized anti-nuclear-terror unit named “Nuclear Emergency Search Team” (“NEST”). The specialists from this unit might doubt the abovementioned claims about the alleged “thermonuclear warheads” delivered by the armor piercing aluminum planes into the thick steel Twin Towers. Due to such potential doubts, the entire 9/11 project might fail. I hope you realize that those who invested in the 9/11 project could not afford even the slightest possibility of doubt that might lead to the failure of the entire scheme. Therefore it was a matter of “must” – to get rid of this potentially dangerous unit first. No, not by gunning them down, of course, do not get me wrong. It was done by sending the unit out of the United States on some pretext, so that it won’t be available in New York during the planned events.

However, the point is that unlikely the small Mossad with its limited capabilities would be able to cope with such a task as luring the entire NEST out of the United States on a specific day. But the Freemasonic sect was apparently powerful enough to arrange this. I just repeat here one of the most important pieces from the official 9/11 timeline:

“...The Department of Energy’s nuclear bomb squad, known as the Nuclear Emergency Search Team (NEST), is in Europe for an exercise called Jackal Cave⁴¹⁷. The “exercise” is scheduled to last till September 15, 2001. The unit was created in 1975 following an extortionist’s threat to detonate a nuclear device in Boston if not paid a ransom. Since then, the group has been responsible for evaluating nuclear threats and, if the threat is judged credible, by searching for and disabling a nuclear device...”

Thus, when after the Pentagon nuclear strike someone would claim that it was allegedly a “nuclear strike” against the Twin Towers too and the two alleged thermonuclear warheads supposedly stuck in the Towers’ upper floors and were about to annihilate New York City by 500 kiloton explosions, there would be no appropriate professionals present in New York who could evaluate this particular claim of this nuclear threat...

The U.S. security officials had no choice than to believe such claims (if you were them – would you doubt such claims of the “friendly” Mossad colleagues – considering that you have already gotten a report from your own military that the missile fired into the Pentagon was indeed nuclear?). Thus, the U.S. security officials simply followed the instruction that prescribed to demolish the WTC should such an emergency occur. The security officials pressed the “red buttons” not because they were malicious, and not because they were stupid, and not because they were gullible (the missile with the real thermonuclear warhead was a tough means to convince even the most skeptical security official in such circumstances). They pressed the “red buttons” because they were obliged to do so by the instruction. And this instruction, in turn, was prepared a long time ago.

The point of this chapter is that the actual instruction (of which I learned from that FBI’s person for the first time) owed its existence to particularly the 1993 “car”-bombing (that awarded the ground zero name to the WTC for the first time), and to the timely 1994 Freemasonic movie “True Lies”.

The problem now is that there is no responsible U.S. official to blame for the actual WTC demolition. Apparently, everybody was acting not only in good faith, but also precisely within the scope of his duties, that were prescribed by the abovementioned instruction.

That is what my abovementioned acquaintance told me. I do not know if it is true or not, but it is what I was told after I released the first, initial version of my book. Indeed, this point was the weakest part of my former explanation. I could not find out any convincing motive why the U.S. officials would really demolish the Twins? Now, at last, I have found it. And I decided to add this Chapter.

One might ask – but why did they demolish the WTC-7 by the third underground nuclear explosion? Was it really an emergency of the same kind?

I do not have any exact answer to this question, since that person did not pass any information in regard to this one. But, judging by logic, it was merely an attempt to hide evidence of the actual nuclear demolition scheme, and so, I presume. Someone might find more sinister reasons behind demolishing the WTC-7 – alleging that some incriminating evidence was kept in that building occupied mostly by various law-enforcement agencies. I do not know what to say. Maybe. However, this suggestion does not sound compelling enough to my cynical mind. If there were some incriminating evidence that was expedient to destroy, then those who might be interested in it were definitely not the actual law-enforcement agencies that accumulated and kept that evidence, were they? While the decision to demolish the WTC-7 was apparently made by some folks from law-enforcement. So, I do not see any logic in this – especially, considering that the amount of their own property the law enforcement agencies lost as a result of the WTC-7 collapse was tremendous and unlikely such losses could have been compensated for by the suggested “destruction of certain incriminating evidence”.

Therefore, being a cynical person, I cynically presume that the WTC-7 was demolished merely because some folks who demolished the Twin Towers felt that they committed such an irreparably awful thing, that the evidence of the nuclear demolition scheme must be destroyed at any cost – even at the cost of demolishing the offices occupied by their own agencies.

In any case, I am not a judge, but merely a researcher. That's it.

Nuclear Madness 4 (or “Nuclear Madness à la Española”). Maxi-nuclear bombings masquerading as “car-bombings”, and other interesting nuclear events in Spain.

Interestingly enough, not only “mini-nuclear” explosions occur in This World in the disguise of so-called suicide- and non-suicide “car-bombings”. Sometimes it also happens with much larger nuclear explosions that have absolutely nothing to do with “mini-nukes” (another example – is the second “truth” about the “vans” in the WTC underground parking on 9/11). Some peculiar nuclear events that occurred in Spain obviously have some relevance to the WTC nuclear demolitions, so not to mention them here, at least briefly, would be a lapse. On the other hand, I do not know much about these events, because their exact technical details were completely hidden from the general public. In such circumstances to claim any truth about these events would be merely a speculation over uncertainties, which I can not afford. Still, I believe that it is good to mention these events here in order to complete an overall picture of the so-called “nuclear terrorism”, as well as methods being routinely used by governments in covering it up. Moreover, it seems that these two nuclear events have even more significance than those routine mini-nuclear “car-bombings” that occur in today’s Iraq almost once a month. It appears that one of these nuclear events in Spain might serve as an additional “confirmation” of the “second truth” for patricians in regard to the Twin Towers collapse, while the other one could be even more sinister – it seems that it was, in fact, designed as a cover-up for a theft of some much more powerful nuclear weapon. In any case it will do no harm if I mention these events here; quite the contrary – it would extend the education of readers, which is the main purpose of this book, after all.

We have to take into consideration the near total absence of any reliable information in regard to these nuclear events in Spain, so it would not be possible for us to reconstruct any exact picture of events – as we did quite successfully in the cases with the WTC 1, 2 and 7 demolitions and in the case with the 2002 Bali bombing. A maximum of what we could do in this case is only to disprove weak official claims in regard to these bombings, and to prove, of course, that both events were nuclear explosions, and not conventional ones, as claimed. In addition, we will disprove a confidential “patrician” version of “truth” – which implies that a “mini-nuke” was supposedly used – by proving that in reality it was a much larger nuclear device that did the job in one of the events. Unfortunately, that is all what we could do today; but in any case it is better than nothing. So, here it is.

2006 Madrid Barajas International Airport “car” bombing.

It was a major nuclear bombing that had nothing to do with any “mini-nukes”. Still, it was officially blamed on a “car-bomb” since it became a tradition. Of course, it was “confidentially” blamed on a “mini-nuke” for various “patricians” – in the same manner as in regard to the WTC Twin Towers’ collapse. However, it was not a “mini-nuke” (and neither conventional explosives packed in a van as claimed) that did the job in regard to the complete demolition of a huge newly built car-parking attached to the Barajas Terminal 4 – because neither of these could be powerful enough to cause such unprecedented damage.

Let us begin with an official story first. Here is an account of events as provided by Wikipedia⁴¹⁸:

“...On the morning of December 30, 2006, an explosion took place in the carpark building attached to Terminal 4 of Madrid Barajas International Airport in Spain. It was first reported by Time Warner employee Samantha Graham via phone on CNN around 8:34 GMT. Reuters also distributed a wire story on the event, but with sparse details. The article stated that a bomb threat was phoned in at approximately 8:15 local time (7:15 GMT), with the caller stating that a bomb would explode at 9:00 local time (8:00 GMT). After receipt of the warning, police were able to evacuate part of the airport. Responsibility for the explosion has since been claimed by an anonymous caller claiming to represent ETA.

The explosion took place in the terminal's carpark, and the interior minister has stated the almost brand-new carpark was damaged (three of four stories were demolished by the explosion, 60% of the building destroyed). The terminal also received some damage. Two were killed and 26 other people sustained injuries, mainly with damage to the ears because of the shock wave.

⁴¹⁸ http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/2006_Madrid-Barajas_Airport_bombing

The explosion was from a van bomb, a Renault Trafic containing 500 to 800 kilograms of explosives stolen from a Spanish national in France, who was abducted and released shortly after the bombing. A similarly charged ETA Renault Trafic van bomb was intercepted by the police going towards Madrid 11 days before the 2004 Madrid train bombings...

What could we conclude by reading this article “between the lines”, which is the only way to find the truth in case of cheating?

Firstly, we could see that information about this absolutely unprecedented bombing was “sparse”. And even today it remains sparse. This unprecedented bombing received unbelievably little coverage, which is already highly suspicious in itself. Normally, events of such scale should receive much more attention; at least, you may expect so. Newspapers and news agencies actually make money out of news, so they would be all glad to pounce on such a sweet event at once and to continue to grumble on it as long as possible. They suppose to squeeze out of such events as much as they can – you could easily compare it with 9/11, that was puffed up by mass media for a half year, at least. Considering its mere scale, the 2006 Barajas bombing well deserved to be attended by mass media for at least a few months. However, oddly enough, the mass media was obviously not too eager to enlighten the gullible public on that particular bombing – despite the fact that it was the main Madrid airport targeted – an important public structure that was obviously more important than any skyscraper in Madrid’s business district. Just try to imagine that some “terrorists” would use an enormous amount of TNT to completely destroy, let’s say, a good quarter of the main New York’s airport. And this unprecedented event would be scarcely mentioned by the mass media, except by Reuters, which would provide certain “sparse details” on the terror action. What would you think in such a case? Wouldn’t it look to you that something was very badly wrong behind that imaginary New York’s airport bombing? So, this is exactly the case with the 2006 Barajas bombing.

Secondly, we could see that it was not ETA⁴¹⁹ that claimed responsibility. It was a certain “anonymous caller claiming to represent ETA” – even an official news article did not make any mistake in that sense: it used words “claiming to represent”.

Thirdly, we could see that it was allegedly 500 to 800 kg of explosives. However, it was previously stated that it was only 200 kg of explosives. You have to understand that professional guys do not make such mistakes when estimating damage inflicted by an explosion. They could be mistaken, of course, because no one could be sure if it were 500 kg or 600 kg exactly. Thus, when they use estimation with +/- 20% accuracy, it is reasonable. But no expert would ever state that it was 200 kg of explosives and then – adjust his former claims to “500 to 800 kg”. To increase the initially stated digit by 4 folds would be ridiculous. Experts do not make this kind of errors.

And, at last, we could see that similar “Renault van” allegedly “belonging to ETA” has been already used for a cover-up at least once by Spanish police prior to this particular bombing: it was similarly used to cover up the 2004 train bombings...

⁴¹⁹ ETA stands for “Euskadi Ta Askatasuna” – a Basque separatist organization active in Spain, which is sometimes involved in “mild” terror actions – designed only to attract attention, and not to cause any victims.

Now let us look at the actual damage inflicted by alleged “800 kg of explosives”. Look at the above picture. All that empty space in its middle was formerly a 5 story reinforced concrete structure completely destroyed by the explosion. While “undamaged” parts of the structure – adjacent to the destruction area – still stand. You could imagine what kind of damage suffered the former middle part of the car-parking structure by looking at the damage suffered by remaining outer parts (observe, for example, the right half of the above photo carefully).

Do you believe that someone could demolish such a huge part of steel-reinforced concrete structure by using only a few hundred kilograms (200 or 800 does not matter in this case) of conventional explosives? Placed in one single spot? Try to be realistic... A maximum of damage such a conventional explosion could cause – it could crush some concrete in its proximity – on floors (one floor above, and one floor – beneath, and no more than this), as well as on several surrounding pillars. Everywhere where concrete would be crushed, internal steel rods would remain in place, because the actual structure was made not of just concrete, but of steel-reinforced concrete. The radius of such damaged area will be very limited – let’s say 20-30 meters, at maximum, or even less than that. You have no chance to collapse a huge steel-reinforced structure by 800 kg of explosives placed in one single spot. A maximum of what you could succeed in this case (if you are a professional demolition expert and you know where to position your car-bomb exactly) – you might completely undercut 1 (one) pillar. Note: you will not be able to undercut two pillars at once with a single car-bomb... Now, look at the above picture again and think – how many steel-reinforced concrete pillars you might need to undercut in order to collapse the entire structure that is now absent in the middle? Imagined? You will need several hundreds of “car-bombs”, at the very minimum.

OK, it is pretty clear now, that the building was not demolished by any single conventional explosion. It was demolished by some other explosion. Logically, it should be presumed that it was demolished by a “mini-nuke” – that could be a typical “patrician truth” of the event. But, unfortunately, you can not demolish such a huge steel-reinforced building with so many pillars and so much empty space between its floors even by a “mini-nuke”. Even in case if you set your “mini-nuke” at its maximum available yield – 1 kiloton – it would still not be enough to completely demolish such a huge, strong, and almost empty structure. A “mini-nuke” would probably destroy everything that came within its fireballs radius, plus about twice as much around. And that’s it. On the other hand, any explosion of a “mini-nuke” inside the airport would cause the following effects. 1) It will create Electromagnetic Pulse that will damage all electronic equipment at the airport; so after such an explosion, the airport will be simply no longer functional. 2) It will cause a lot of cases of acute radiation sickness, because the airport is densely “populated”. 3) It will burn remaining cars at the parking – outside the zone of the total destruction – by its thermal radiation (and it will burn people around as well). 4) It will smash the remaining cars around by its tremendous air-blast wave. But neither of these expected effects was observed after the “car-bombing” in the Barajas Airport. It was not a “mini-nuke” that did the job. It is self-evident. Here is another picture showing damage in the still standing parts of the car-parking building that the explosion was not able to collapse.

Above – surviving “outer” parts of car-parking at the Terminal 4 after the explosion in its middle.

Doesn't it look like a typical “damaged zone” that immediately surrounds a “crushed zone” during deep underground nuclear explosions? Look at it carefully. Metal rods closer to the middle are severed without any seeming reason. Pillars standing farther are undamaged – even attached signs and fire-extinguishers are not torn off. It does not look that this area was affected by any air-blast wave, not to say thermal radiation of a nuclear explosion nearby. Does it? There is some truly peculiar effect present here. If you try to draw an imaginary line from up to down indicating an exact border of the destruction, such a line would not be vertical. It would be a line inclined at about 45° angle. Why did the destruction wave that caused this particular damage propagate under such an angle? Do you remember some steel perimeters of the demolished Twin Towers somehow managed to survive the pulverization to which the remaining upper parts of the Towers were subjected? They were the corners of each of the Twins positioned furthest from the hypocenters of the two underground explosions. That is why some lower parts of the Tower's structure managed to fall within certain “dead spaces” that were spared by the general pulverization, while it was not the case with those parts of the structure just above the surviving corners – these parts were totally pulverized. I guess you get my point. It seems that here it was exactly the case. It seems to be a huge deep underground nuclear explosion in the middle of the car-parking building that did the job.

Pictures above show screenshots from Spanish TV-news⁴²⁰ showing “ground zero” after the explosion at Barajas airport Terminal 4 (first four frames) versus two frames from a popular documentary “Red-hot Ground Zero”⁴²¹ – which show streams of radioactive vapor at “Ground Zero” in Manhattan during clean-up works. It is just for comparison.

Try to look at the above screenshots with your eyes OPEN. Look: the car in the close proximity to the destruction zone is still virtually intact. It was damaged by neither air-blast wave, nor by thermal radiation, even to the slightest extent. This is a hard proof that there was not any nuclear explosion in the open. And now look at these odd vapors that are present everywhere around the destruction grounds. Make sure to note, these are not smoke, because there was nothing actually to burn there, and smoke in any case supposes to be darker in color. These are not smoke, but vapors. Radioactive vapors, as you may expect, which ascend from a spot of a deep underground nuclear explosion. Try to compare this picture with that shot at “Ground Zero” in Manhattan.

Do you still believe a “patrician” version of the “truth” that it was a “mini-nuke” in the case of 2006 Madrid Barajas bombing? Or you prefer to believe the “plebeian” version that claims it was a “van with 800 kg of conventional explosives”? Make your choice.

Barajas airport Terminal 4. Vapors ascending from the explosion area. It reminds one of those “unexplainable” vapors ascending from “Ground Zero” in Manhattan in 2001.

Who did this and why did they do this? I do not know. I could only guess. Probably, it was done so by some “good” guys in order to support the “patrician” version of the “truth” in regard to the Twin Towers demolition. By implying that a “mini-nuke” could allegedly cause such damage as shown in this case – the area that was destroyed in Barajas bombing was quite comparable with the footprint of the Twin Tower.

However, in any case, the most incriminating feature of this unprecedented “car”-bombing was, of course, the fact that it was scarcely reported to the public. The reaction of the media supposed to be as hysterical as in the case of 1995 Oklahoma- or 1993 WTC bombings. Surprisingly, the media simply ignored this event. Nobody knows also what happened with the firefighters walking amidst the streams of vapor shown in the above screenshots. There is total silence from the Fire Department.

Spanair Flight JK 5022 nuclear “crash”.

The second nuclear event that occurred in Spain was also at the same Barajas airport. But this time it was a truly strange occurrence, which is difficult to explain from any reasonable point of view. Its official name is “Spanair Flight JK 5022 crash”. This event was freakish, as you will see! The official claims are as follows:

“...The accident occurred [20 August, 2008] at 14:45 local time during takeoff, aircraft type MD-82, with registration EC-HFP. The aircraft was carrying a total of 172 people of which 162 were passengers, four passive crew members and six flight crew, and experienced a fire in its left engine (a Pratt & Whitney model JT8D-217C turbofan) shortly after achieving flight, during its takeoff roll. The aircraft then rolled to the left, lost altitude and crashed in the vicinity of the runway, breaking up into at least two parts and being engulfed by the subsequent explosion....” (this is from Wikipedia⁴²²)

Contemporary news releases were very contradictory. Some claimed that the plane took off first and managed to gather altitude of 200 meters before falling apart while still airborne. Others put this figure to only 50 meters. There were even “surviving” passengers “found” who claimed that they allegedly “fell” from 200 meters (and yet managed to survive). Later ridiculous claims were adjusted to make the story more believable. It was claimed that the alleged engine failure occurred still during the take-off run and caused the plane to sharply veer to the side of the run-way and to completely disintegrate and also to engulf in fires. The fires were in fact so intense that they supposed to destroy the entire plane, leaving no recognizable parts of it, except only its strangely blackened tail that remained more or less whole.

Similarly, contradictory figures were claimed in regards to casualties. Some news releases claimed there were no survivors; some other claimed that a few passengers allegedly managed to survive (unlike any parts of the actual plane that did not). It was also claimed in the awkward governmental cover up that some bodies were so badly burned that it would not be possible to recognize them even by DNA (while it is well known that kerosene can not burn a corpse to that particular extent).

However, the most incredible part was an actual cover up organized by the Spanish Government. After it had been duly explained to the “plebeians” by various mass-media that there were no recognizable parts of the “burned plane” available on the spot, the Government’s spin-doctors had decided to interfere into the process. And they did so quite inelegantly. They brought to the place of the alleged “accident” some fairly damaged piece of a plane from a nearby scrap-heap and called in journalists to display that alleged “piece of Spanair Flight JK 5022” to them:

As you can see from the above photographic “evidence” (you can still find this unprecedented photo here⁴²³ and here⁴²⁴), this nicely cut old piece of a fuselage, apparently brought from a nearby scrap-heap, did not look like it was affected by any “intense fire”, even to the slightest extent. It was affected exclusively by being an obvious leftover. However, the most important item was that this part of a fuselage featured some big black letters (closer to its top) that purported to represent “STAR ALLIANCE” – to which Spanair was a member. The problem was that Spanair aircraft were painted very differently prior to the accident: that did not feature this kind of letters on their top. This is how they used to look then:

⁴²³ <http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/madrid>

⁴²⁴ <https://www.eurocockpit.be/stories/20121004/eca-condemns-publication-spanair-accident-recordings>

On the above photo you can see how the painting of Spanair Flight JK 5022 (as well as of any other Spanair flight) used to look like prior to the above cover-up attempt. This unprecedented photo was a file-photograph of a particular aircraft named EC-HFP "Sunbreeze" that was the very aircraft involved in Flight JK 5022. As you can see, there were no big letters "STAR ALLIANCE" on either of its sides, and not even space available to fit them in later.

The unprecedented falsification of evidence by the Spanish officials was, in fact, officially certified. From now on, the clean-cut piece of "Spanair Flight JK 5022" with "STAR ALLIANCE" letters on its top has indeed become an official part of the otherwise "completely burned" aircraft that did not leave any recognizable parts of itself (it was so in the same manner as American Airlines flight 77 had become an officially certified part of the 9/11 attack on the Pentagon). As such, this particular piece of government-approved "evidence" could no longer be challenged.

However, many people noticed that Spanair flights, and especially its flight JK 5022 (of which a file-photograph was widely available) were painted differently. Due to this particular blunder, Spanish spin-doctors were obliged to make an unparalleled amendment: to repaint remaining Spanair flights in accordance with their own ridiculous "evidence" that was by that time widely circulated by various mass-media. The spin-doctors apparently forgot that the original file-photograph of the Spanair Flight JK 5022 was widely circulated as well, or maybe those spin-doctors did not really care about any future credibility of their ridiculous concoction. Thus, on the very next morning they embarked on re-painting the remaining Spanair aircraft. As a result of their efforts, Spanair aircraft began to look like this:

"Typical" Spanair aircraft after being re-painted on August 21, 2008.

Above – a photo lately added to the Wikipedia article on Spanair Flight JK 5022 crash claiming to be the “EC-HFP Sunbreeze in its final Star Alliance livery.”

In fact, the abovementioned blunder of the Spanish spin-doctors with that bogus piece of a fuselage from a nearby scrap-heap was so embarrassing, that the latest edition of the Wikipedia article on this subject, as a matter of must, features a low-quality photo of a certain plane painted in the new, post-August 21, 2008 manner, and this photo is named as nothing less than the “EC-HFP Sunbreeze in its final Star Alliance livery.”. Even by the file-name it is evident that the Spanish spin-doctors have no sense of measure at all. I could only wonder how silly must be a Spanish taxpayer who pays the salaries of those spin-doctors...

Coming back to the actual “accident”. It seemed at first glance that it was indeed a low-caliber “mini-nuke” that destroyed Spanair Flight JK 5022. At least, everything possible was done by the organizers of that “accident” to create such an impression:

1) An unprecedented and intentionally awkward cover-up attempt that no discerning observer should miss to notice was apparently intended to create an impression that something “extremely dangerous” is being covered up. It included both – manipulations with physical evidence and with witnesses’ accounts.

2) A completely blackened tail of an aircraft was the only piece that was officially found (no other parts of the aircraft were first reported to be found in any condition that could tell that they were parts of a plane). This one should apparently represent an “atomic” damage – implying that the major part of the fuselage was “apparently” reduced to the plasmatic condition by “fireballs of a mini-nuke’s explosion”, while its tail being much farther from a hypocenter “logically” managed to survive, being only blackened by “thermal radiation” (an analog of charred cars that are usually found in close distances from those “car”-bombings).

Above – the blackened tail; the only officially surviving part of the aircraft.

Do not be confused by this discrepancy. There were two “truths” served up simultaneously. According to the first “truth”, only the blackened tail alone managed to survive. According to the second “truth” (that was apparently designed to emphasize the “secret” nature of the first “truth”), that bogus white part with ridiculous letters managed to survive, too, and that blunder had to be covered up by re-painting the planes.

3) Both – firefighters and ambulances were not immediately allowed into the scene of the “accident”. It was clearly noticeable in the event’s coverage by mass-media. Despite intense fires supposedly ravaging the “plane” and affecting its “passengers”, firefighters, as well as ambulances, were kept away for at least a couple of hours. This truly odd occurrence was supposed to enhance the “atomic” suspicions of discerning observers – “perhaps, it was because the officials waited until the initial extremely high levels of radiation would subside at least a little bit before allowing people in”.

Above – ambulances and fire-engines alike are waiting to be “allowed” into the place of the “accident”.

4) Some helicopters (alleged to be “firefighting helicopters”) were continuously flying over the area of the “accident” pouring some alleged “water” to extinguish the fires. It was so while wheeled fire engines that were obviously much more efficient than helicopters in that sense were not allowed in. Such odd “efforts” should also attract “atomic suspicions” of any discerning observer: “those helicopters in reality belonged not to any fire department, but to some ABC service and they were not extinguishing fires, but conducting certain deactivation procedures in regard to radioactivity”.

Above – an alleged “firefighting” helicopter pouring some suspicious liquid into the “accident” area while the fire-engines that were much more efficient were waiting outside – together with the ambulances.

5) It was reported that the entire aircraft while still on the runway suddenly “engulfed in flames” that were even dubbed “fireballs”. Of course, the discerning observer should not fail to notice that such an odd occurrence could not have been caused by any “plane’s engine failure” as officially claimed. Coupled with a strange terminology used (such as the term “fireballs”) it should suggest to any logical person that it was “apparently” a “mini-nuke”.

6) Burned beyond any recognition, bodies (apparently from a nearby morgue as my cynicism suggests) were scattered around the area. They were burned to such an extent that it was not possible to recognize them even by DNA analyses (at least so it was officially reported by Spanish spin-doctors). However, it is well known that kerosene (which is the only combustible material that could burn a passenger plane and its internals) can not combust with temperatures high enough to cause such levels of incineration of a corpse.

7) A suspicious “casual” movie was shot that showed a strange “mushroom-like” cloud of smoke that was instantly formed during the plane’s explosion. An amateurish camera-man managed to occur with his video-camera switched “on” in the right place and in the right time, and he was also quick to point its focus to the right direction. So the very “mushroom form” of the smoke supposed to serve as another “transparent hint” for any discerning observer: it was “apparently” an atomic blast.

On the photo above you can see an alleged “mushroom-like” cloud of smoke oddly shot by an amateur camera-man. This particular “amateur” shot became, in fact, an official “file-photograph” of the Flight JK 5022’s “explosion”. It is good to notice the odd position of that “casual” camera-man. He apparently climbed onto a plane’s wing to have a good view of the explosion. But the problem was that in the actual movie shown on TV and still available on the Internet today, this able camera-man managed to capture the very first stage of the explosion. He started the filming before the moment the smoke cloud began to ascend and to form itself into the “mushroom”. This only means that he climbed onto the plane’s wing well in advance – waiting for that explosion to happen with his video-camera “on” and pointed to the right direction. By no means could such a movie be “casual” as claimed. It was concocted, and this is pretty self-evident.

8) Some mass-media reporting on the event did not miss to include an exact description of that “mushroom-like” smoke in their news releases. It was indeed very suspicious, considering that usually all attributes of real mini-nuclear bombings such as craters and mushroom-like clouds are subjected to censoring before releasing such news for public consumption. However, here it was exactly vice-versa – so it was apparently designed to enhance a “transparency of a hint” that it was an atomic blast.

Everything possible was done by the spin-doctors to create an impression that Spanair Flight JK 5022 was allegedly destroyed by a “mini-nuke” (at least it was done so to impress the “patricians”, who know about “mini-nukes”). Otherwise it would not be possible to logically explain their peculiar efforts, especially ridiculous manipulations with that bogus part of the plane’s fuselage which featured the wrong wording.

However, something was truly odd with that particular “accident” – which attracts suspicions that it was a bogus event and not a real “mini-nuclear” bombing. The suspicious thing was that unlike the real 2006 Madrid Barajas Terminal 4 “car”-bombing, which went largely unnoticed, this Flight JK 5022 “accident” was so well-publicized and was so widely discussed. This is probably the first and foremost proof that it was indeed a bogus event. If that event were genuine, firstly, it would be covered up by spin-doctors in a much more efficient manner than was actually demonstrated in the case, and, secondly, the case itself would not be puffed up that much. I guess the reader should agree with this simple logic.

Now the next question arises: why would Spanish spin-doctors venture into such an enterprise as the unexplainable Flight JK 5022 crash (whether it was “nuclear” or “conventional” it does not matter) – which understandably caused the tremendous public outcry amongst the simpletons who took it for a genuine event? This public outcry alone supposed to cause the Spanish Government a lot of headaches. And it did, in fact. The Spanish Government was severely criticized for ridiculous manipulation with evidence and for the accident handling in general. Still, despite all of these inconveniences, certain Spanish officials ventured into this farce with the bogus plane “crash”, moreover, supposedly the “nuclear” one. Why would they need to do so?

To begin answering this reasonable question is quite easy – it was because Flight JK 5022 supposed “nuclear” “crash” was nothing but a cover-up of itself. It was a cover-up for something else – which was much more dangerous than merely a passenger plane’s crash. This supposedly “nuclear” accident was intended to cover-up another, real nuclear accident that happened in the same vicinity.

It was quite a cunning cheating of all at once – the “patricians” and the “plebeians” alike. There was a real nuclear explosion somewhere near the Barajas Airport and it was not possible to hide the fact of that real nuclear explosion, because it was obvious. That is why the “accident” with Flight JK 5022 was invented.

You don’t believe?

Well. I will give you an example: when a missile with an unexploded thermonuclear warhead struck the Pentagon on 9/11, it could also be considered as a “nuclear” event. Even though the actual warhead did not go off. Did it? If that event was not from the “nuclear” category, then the U.S. Government would prefer to honestly inform the general public about it, rather than involving itself into the awkward lies that eventually cost it its face and its reputation. Of course, the Pentagon strike was the genuine nuclear event; moreover, followed by the genuine atomic alert (although for the “patricians” only). That is exactly why the U.S. Government ventured into an unprecedented (and utterly ridiculous) cover-up in regard to the Pentagon attack. It was decided to blame the Pentagon strike/explosion on the alleged “passenger flight” strike/explosion.

The nuclear explosion occurred not in the Barajas airport area. It occurred a bit farther away – in the adjacent Torrejón Airport. But it was possible to fake the plane’s crash on the end of the Barajas runway to make an impression that the source of the smoke from the supposedly “naked” Flight JK 5022 was the same as the source of vapor from the hypocenter of the real nuclear explosion located at about the same direction, but a bit farther. Under the particular viewing angle used by most observers, these two sources of smoke/vapor visibly overlapped and the nearer source was somehow shielding the farther source, making the wrong impression.

Fortunately, not all observers and reporters were as gullible as not to notice this particular discrepancy. It was noticed and it was reported. Some seditious news releases stated clearly, that there were actually two distinctly different “fires” – one emitting black smoke, and the other one – emitting white smoke. Below is a picture of the event taken from the “wrong angle”. It clearly shows us that there were two different sources of smoke (to be exact – one of smoke, and one – of radioactive vapor).

Here is another picture of helicopters pouring suspicious liquids over the “accident area”. Note, that the helicopter is pouring its liquid not onto an area with smoke, but onto an area with vapors.

Above – a helicopter pouring some suspicious liquid onto supposed “fires” during the Barajas accident.

And here, at last, is the most seditious picture of the entire Barajas accident. Try to guess what this is and what it has to do with the supposed “plane burning”.

This appears to be a thin pillar of vapor ascending from a hypocenter of a “mini-nuke” explosion, since the very hypocenter remains hot for some time even after its actual “atomic mushroom” cloud has departed from the area, being blown away by the wind.

Above – a strange pillar of vapor ascending from one spot. Photo pertains to the Barajas accident. Photo was originally named: “Horror ... a twister-like plume of smoke rises from the jet crash”.

Now many new questions suppose to arise.

Was it a terrorist act?

In my humble opinion, it was not, since there was nothing actually to target in that area.

Was it an accident with existing nuclear weapons?

In my humble opinion, it was not, since Spain is known to be a non-nuclear state and it does not possess any nuclear weapons.

So what was it?

In my humble opinion, it was an intentional explosion of an American SADM designed, in its turn, to cover up something.

What would they cover up in such a case?

It is difficult to say, because information about this event is very scarce. However, there were some rumors that one American nuclear warhead (of a much larger caliber than a “mini-nuke”) was stolen from them while being temporarily stored at the Madrid Torrejón Airport – which is known to be secretly used by the U.S. Air Force for various clandestine operations against the so-called “terrorism” even after its official withdrawal from that facility.

It seems that “terrorists” retaliated by stealing one of the U.S. nuclear weapons. (It is according to rumors, not according to any confirmed information.) Of course, such a loss should have been covered up.

Could it be a mere accident?

No, it could not. Nuclear weapons do not explode accidentally. They are protected from any accidental explosion so many times over that it is even theoretically impossible. Explosion of a nuclear weapon could only be intentional.

The question is only what the intention was: a terror act?

I do not think so. It is not logical.

A cover up attempt? To cover up something much more serious?

This is logical. The second question above contains the answer. The first nuclear explosion was already a cover-up attempt of its own for something else. The plane's bogus "nuclear" crash was a secondary cover-up attempt intended to "explain" the first "mini-nuke" explosion, which otherwise was very difficult to explain to the general public, as well as to some local "patricians". Of course, they could not be informed that it was their American guests in the Torrejón who performed some cover-up of their own. For local "patricians" it could only be explained that it was just a "normal" terrorist nuclear attack – as usual, but this time they took another seat – changing a truck to an airliner. I guess it was so. I simply can not find any other reasonable explanation to these incredible events.

Of course, if you read this chapter as a novice in contemporary "nuclear knowledge" you would not believe that it is possible. But before you reached this chapter, you have already read about the incredible Russian cover-up in regard to their stolen "Granit" missiles. This means you are considered to be "educated" enough and such things as "unexplainable" explosions of "mini-nukes" should not appear too strange to you. Of course, it was a pure, yet awkward, cover-up attempt – similar to that made by the Russians after "salvaging" the sunken "Kursk" submarine with its missing nuclear armament.

Anyhow, the Barajas "accident" that involved the incredible Flight JK 5022 "crash" and the two sources of smoke and vapor was apparently a nuclear event. Do not even doubt it. It was a multi-staged elaborate "nuclear" farce with multiple versions intended for consumption of various kinds of the "patricians", as well as for the "plebeians". However, this "nuclear" cover-up was intended to conceal some genuine nuclear event; a serious nuclear event. A rational observer shall be duped by neither version (I mean by neither stage) of this "nuclear" farce – because it was cheating from its beginning to its end. Only the "mini-nuke" that exploded as a first stage of the cover-up was genuine; and the stolen nuclear weapon – loss of which it was intended to hide – was genuine too.

Unfortunately, as I explained at the beginning of this Chapter, details on both of these nuclear events are sparse and it is not possible to reconstruct these events or to make any exact conclusions in regard to these odd occurrences in Spain. We could only guess. However, these two nuclear events have apparently taken place on Spanish soil. Not very far from the Spanish capital. These are the facts. And facts are known to be stubborn things.

This Chapter was not intended to prove anything; it was rather intended to disprove official lies of the Spanish Government. I hope it served its purpose and contributed to an overall picture of the modern nuclear terrorism as well as to various cover-up methods routinely used in regard to the nuclear terrorism.

Flight 93 – “politically incorrect” truth.

To be frank with you, the story about Flight 93 is the least interesting thing (at least, it is the least interesting when it comes to the humble author of these lines). Moreover, I do believe that an excessive mulling over the story of Flight 93 is an unforgivable loss of time, which, in addition, distracts attentions of researchers from far more important aspects of the 9/11 affair and, correspondingly, allows its true perpetrators to continue enjoying their impunity. Nonetheless, it seems that I am obliged to address the story of Flight 93 anyway, because it was an inalienable part of 9/11, and since I attempted to create something like an “encyclopedia” of 9/11, calling it “9/11thology”, to skip addressing this story would be a lapse. So, here it is.

The official version of Flight 93, in case you forgot it, is this (I just quote the corresponding Wikipedia article⁴²⁵):

“United Airlines Flight 93 was a passenger flight which was hijacked by four al-Qaeda terrorists on September 11, 2001, as part of the September 11 attacks. It crashed into a field near the Diamond T. Mine in Stonycreek Township, Pennsylvania near Shanksville, during an attempt by some of the passengers to regain control, killing all 44 people aboard including the four hijackers. No one on the ground was injured. The aircraft involved, a Boeing 757–222, was flying United Airlines' daily scheduled morning domestic flight from Newark International Airport in Newark, New Jersey, to San Francisco International Airport in San Francisco, California.

The hijackers breached the aircraft's cockpit and overpowered the flight crew approximately 46 minutes after takeoff. Ziad Jarrah, a trained pilot, then took control of the aircraft and diverted it back toward the east coast of the United States in the direction of Washington, D.C. The hijackers' specific target is believed to have been the United States Capitol.

After the hijackers took control of the plane, several passengers and flight attendants were able to make telephone calls and learn that attacks had already been made by other hijacked airlines on the World Trade Center in New York City and the Pentagon outside Washington, D.C. Some of the passengers then attempted to regain control of the aircraft. During the attempt, however, the plane crashed into a reclaimed strip mine in Stonycreek Township, near Shanksville in Somerset County, Pennsylvania, about 65 miles (105 km) southeast of Pittsburgh and 130 miles (210 km) northwest of Washington, D.C. A few witnessed the impact from the ground and news agencies began reporting the event within an hour.

Subsequent analysis of the flight recorders recovered from the crash site revealed how the actions taken by the passengers prevented the aircraft from reaching the hijackers' intended target. Of the four aircraft hijacked on September 11 – the others were American Airlines Flight 11, American Airlines Flight 77 and United Airlines Flight 175 – United Airlines Flight 93 was the only one that failed to reach its hijackers' intended target.” [implying that it were the “hijackers” who succeeded in penetrating steel perimeters of the two Twin Towers and three entire rows/six capital walls of the Pentagon]

It shall be noted that unlike in Flight 11, where stewardesses used so-called “Airfones”, which indeed allowed making calls from the flying aircraft, in the Flight 93 all alleged calls were made through ordinary cellular phones.

I think I do not need to explain much about it. It is pretty self-evident that the Flight 93 story is the flagrant lie. The notion claiming that the cellular phones of the “brave passengers” might allegedly function at the cruise altitude of the airliners (i.e. well beyond the reach of the cell-towers' transmitters/receivers) is not any better than the story that aluminum planes could penetrate the thick steel perimeters of the Twin Towers or the story that kerosene could instantaneously melt those steel perimeters (as well as the steel cores) into fluffy steel dust. In fact, the story of the “brave passengers” allegedly trying to wrestle control of the aircraft from the “cowardly suicidal hijackers” (do you really believe, by the way, that suicidal folks could be “cowardly” while the disarmed “good citizens” guarded by the armed cop could be “brave”?) is one of the silliest stories concocted by the desperate U.S. Government. I could only feel pity for the so-called “good citizens” (especially for the “brave” ones) who obediently swallowed this outrageous version of their rulers...

⁴²⁵ http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/United_Airlines_Flight_93

To begin with, let us remember that there were no hijackers capable of successfully flying aluminum planes through the steel perimeters of the Twin Towers (that were thicker than the front armor of a tank, just to remind you). Since there were no hijackers (and we have already proven it in the earlier chapters), then it shall be presumed that there could not be any hijackers available to hijack Flight 93 either. But what happened with this flight? Why did it disappear? And why did the U.S. Government have to invent such a ridiculous story about the alleged “fight” between the “brave passengers” and the “cowardly [suicidal] hijackers” on board of the doomed plane?

The true cause of the U.S. Government’s lie is pretty obvious. Flight 93 was shot down in the 9/11 panic and the U.S. Government needed to find some method to get away with this. That is why it hired spin-doctors [at the expense of the gullible taxpayer] and the spin-doctors did nothing better than concoct the official story described in the abovementioned Wikipedia article.

I begin with my personal observations. First of all, I have to tell you that I do not watch the TV. I do not even have a TV-set (I proudly missed the TV-set among my personal possessions since I was 16 years of age, which means that I did not watch the television for over 30 years, as of today). 9/11 was a rare exception, though. Once I learned about the 9/11 attack, I immediately went to some Irish pub nearby that featured a big screen and I watched the entire production practically till the late evening. And I watched it quite attentively. Thus, I remember that one of the flights was shot down by the U.S. Air Force (or, maybe by the U.S. National Air Guard, which for me did not make much difference) and it was so reported. I remembered it clearly, because I watched that with my very eyes and I heard it with my very ears (and, since I do not watch the TV as a matter of principle, such a rare occurrence when I made an exception to my rules and watched something, certainly leaves an unerasable impression in my memory). Thus, I could swear that I heard that one of the flights was shot down on the U.S. Government’s orders when I watched the 9/11 story live, at the evening of Bangkok time on the eleventh day of September, year 2001 A.D. Unfortunately, I had no chance to record anything and so to save it for the future use, while the story about the flight being shot down has never been repeated. Instead, a new story soon surfaced – about the “brave” passengers capable of using their cellular phones at the cruise altitudes (and the cruise speeds) of the airliners.

I was busy then for a few years (including spending some time behind bars, but more on it in the next chapters), and it was not until 2006 when I began collecting various 9/11 materials in order to compile this book. However, once I started it, I could not skip finding some videos where the shooting down of the “fourth” or the “second” flight could be discussed. I clearly remembered that I heard that the “fourth flight” was shot down and I was sure that some recordings of the original TV news must survive somewhere. I spent a few years looking on the Internet, but I was not able to find any. In the process, I encountered a few people who too remembered the original news (that the flight was shot down) and who too were desperately searching for the original recordings. None of us succeeded, however, in finding any. Our luck suddenly changed in the year 2010 when I accidentally discovered a recording from the Russian TV news where the shooting down of the “fourth flight” was reported. I immediately made an excerpt from it and uploaded it to my YouTube channel; it is here:

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=-LCcCfmCRTM>

Since it is in the Russian language, I need to provide its English translation, as well as its English description. Here they are:

Moscow time at this moment was 22.01, in New York – 2.01 PM EST. Russian NTV news program “Today” presented the account of 9/11 events. Its international editor Filipp Trofimov reported at 03.10, counting from the beginning of the clip (verbatim in English):

“...anti-aircraft defense of the USA discovers the fourth airliner – presumably heading towards the Pentagon. A pursuit plane wards off the threat. The aircraft falls down not very far from Camp David, the presidential residence...”

Of course, some skills would challenge it claiming that the phrase “...a pursuit plane wards off the threat...” (followed by the phrase “...the aircraft falls down...”) does not constitute a “proof” that the “plane was shot down”, because no such words were explicitly pronounced. Nonetheless, I hope that for us, the logical people, the Barbarians, this is the very confirmation, because this phrase could unlikely be interpreted otherwise.

Anyway, since I had a good luck in finding that recording in Russian (I was indeed the first- and the only 9/11 researcher who managed to discover such a seditious thing in the course of almost 8 years), I managed to discover two more original recordings. Moreover, this time, both of them were in English. Again, I uploaded them on YouTube here (I combined both excerpts into a single YouTube video):

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=jMrF1caOmOw>

In this unprecedented piece of the 9/11 evidence, shown by FOX at 16:29-16:30 September 11, 2001, and one more time at 22.30-22.32, the fact that Flight 93 (referred to as the “second aircraft”, without specifying its flight number) was indeed shot down is confirmed twice. Firstly, a certain Elisabeth Leamy, the FOX reporter, says that “...earlier today, an F16 fighter aircraft from 113th Wing⁴²⁶ of the DC Air National Guard... ...intercepted the second aircraft that was perceived as yet another threat to the Pentagon...”

On the second instance, a service-woman said to be Lt. Col. Phyllis Phipps-Barnes from DC Air National Guard confirms to another female FOX reporter (the reporter’s name was not mentioned, but her voice sounded different than that of Elisabeth Leamy) that the “second plane” supposedly heading towards the Pentagon was shot down by her unit, adding that it was done on the request of the White House. Here is a screenshot from that footage:

FOX5 screen at 10.30 PM -10.32 PM (ET).

If you watch the abovementioned YouTube video of mine attentively enough, you will notice one more detail. There is a CNN report included there also that was aired on September 13, 2001, at 11.47-11.52 AM, where CNN’s reporter Brian Cabell, reporting from the site of Flight 93 crash in Shanksville, Pennsylvania, revealed that the plane’s debris was scattered at a distance of at least 6 miles. This meant that Flight 93 did not hit the ground as a whole piece (as it was supposed to be, if to believe the official story attributing the crash to the “brave passengers”), but disintegrated in the air still at a high altitude.

This, actually, confirms that the unfortunate passenger aircraft was shot down by a fighter jet that fired its cannons, rather than its air-to-air missiles. The point is that, firstly, the air-to-air missile would not cause the plane to disintegrate – it would still send it down as a whole piece, because the explosive power even of the largest air-to-air missile is not enough to blow a large airliner into pieces. A passenger plane is just too big for that. Secondly, the self-guided air-to-air missile is typically heat-seeking and it would not even hit the fuselage of a targeted plane – it would, instead, aim at one of its engines – the source of the heat. This too would prevent the plane from disintegrating – it would certainly fall down as a whole piece (moreover, because such a big passenger aircraft has actually more than one engine, its pilots would still be able to fly it on the remaining engines even if one of the engines was destroyed by the missile). Thirdly, the pilot of the fighter-jet supposed to be educated enough, so he could not even hope targeting the passenger plane of his own state with any air-to-air missile that belongs to the same state. This is because since the late ‘40s, all aircraft, either military or civilian, had an obligatory built-in system of identification, known as “IFF” or “Identification Friend or Foe”⁴²⁷. This solution, besides helping air-defense systems to distinguish enemy aircraft, also automatically prevents its own aircraft from being accidentally shot down by its own anti-aircraft missile. Thus, no anti-aircraft missile would ever lock on the plane that belongs to the same state. Of course, it is technically possible to disable the IFF protection on ⁴²⁶ It was the fighter jet from presumably the 119th Wing, not from the 113th one, which actually participated in shooting down the aircraft.

⁴²⁷ http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Identification_friend_or_foe

the missile, but this possibility is merely theoretical (not to mention that it is explicitly illegal) and in no case could it be performed from the pilot's cockpit – at the best case it could be done by technicians on the ground who supposed to spend many hours on such a weird (and illegal) job.

Therefore, the only possible way to shoot down their own aircraft is to fire at it with the cannons. Since modern aircraft cannons are rapid-firing (they fire something like 6000 rounds a minute approximately, i.e. 10 times more than a common machine-gun), they typically cut the targeted plane into pieces. For example, they could easily “saw off” the targeted plane's wing, or its tail, or to “saw” its fuselage into parts. And this seems to be the case with our plane when it managed to scatter its parts over 6 miles. I hope you realize that if it were true that some “brave passengers” caused the plane to crash, it would certainly not disintegrate in the air.

As I have told you at the beginning, I do not attach any importance to the fate of Flight 93, and, moreover, I consider this particular aspect of 9/11 to be wholly immaterial, if not to say extraneous, which only distracts the precious attentions of 9/11 researchers from the really important things. Nonetheless, since I discovered some interesting evidence regarding Flight 93, I feel obliged to present my discoveries here, leaving the rest to your judgment. The three seditious contemporary video recordings that I managed to discover and to upload to YouTube have been already mentioned above. And here are some more of my findings. Note that they might look a bit “contradictory” to each other, and some of them might contain elements of “beautification”, but, still, I do believe that these pieces of information are worth considering. Unlike those huge volumes of crap, lavishly served up by loony conspiracy theorists, these few apparently contain some grains of the truth that could help us somehow to establish the real picture. Keep in mind, though, that those folks who provided this information did not know and could not know the whole truth; at the very best case they could only know some parts of it. Thus, you have to be able to distinguish useful information from the useless, and, moreover, misleading information and I hope that by the time you have reached this chapter, you have already trained yourself in doing so.

The first notable thing I consider worth paying attention to is an interview of a certain “Elizabeth Nelson” (not her real name), at the time of 9/11 a soldier in the rank of a “Private”, still in training. A sound file with the interview is available here: http://projectcamelot.org/elizabeth_nelson_flight_93.mp3 A web page with the transcript of the interview is here: http://projectcamelot.org/lang/en/elizabeth_nelson_flight_93_transcript_en.html
The interview was recorded on 6th of April 2009.

What is particularly believable in this interview is the fact that “Elizabeth Nelson” does not pretend to be anything “big”, “important, or “knowledgeable”. As you probably noticed, the absolute majority of folks who could provide any information tend to portray themselves bigger than they really are and to pretend to know more than they actually know. Only a handful of such people could honestly admit that they are small, unimportant, and have only heard such and such thing from others. Against such a background, “Elizabeth Nelson”, who honestly says that she is nothing important and knows next to nothing, sounds believable, indeed. Here is a brief summary of the story and of what she claims:

She was present in the room when the decision was made to shoot down UA Flight 93 over Shanksville, Pennsylvania on the morning of 11th of September, 2001, and so could overhear conversations there.

She claimed that:

She was in the last six months of her active duty, in training in the U.S. Army, still of the rank of a Private. She was stationed at Fort Meade under the Kimbrough Ambulatory Care Center Hospital. Fort Meade also had on it the base of NSA, which is the National Security Agency. And it was a fully operational hospital that housed soldiers as trainees to continue and finish up their medical training.

Since she had no weapons that time, because of being still in training, after all other soldiers got the order to get their weapons and to protect the base, “Elizabeth Nelson”, along with another young woman, was “offered” by the Hospital's First Sergeant to the Commander of the base, just like to do an errand, notably, to deliver coffee and snacks to those superiors who assembled in the operation room. Below is what she overheard while in that room:

*“...I do not know the names and ranks of the people in the room. I do know that it was, at the time, the head Commander of the Hospital and, I believe, the Commander of the Base.
...a plane that was flying in a no-fly zone near to Camp David and heading toward Site R. I had no idea what Site R was. And to me Camp David was a place where George Bush went on vacation. I didn't know any more than that...”*

... I didn't hear a thing about hijackers. We just heard that this plane was flying in a no-fly zone and they couldn't make contact with the plane, or something like this. There was no communication. Protocol says it has to be taken out...

...And so I was in this room when the decision was mutually made by the people talking on the phone in the room that I was in, to shoot this plane down.

...Protocol is that this is a no-fly zone. We have to take this plane down. Yes, it's a passenger plane. It needs to be taken down.

...And so I was in this room when the decision was mutually made by the people talking on the phone in the room that I was in, to shoot this plane down.

...Site R is an underground city, under a mountain in Pennsylvania.

...We have just a little bit of time to decide before it's too late. You could feel the intensity in this room. I mean... and these men weren't heartless men...

... From what I learned afterwards, because we had a medical unit deployed for two weeks out to Site R, and one of the x-ray techs was a very good friend of mine. Site R is an underground city under a mountain in Pennsylvania, completely isolated and fully secure, with similar things like Area 51 where they can tell if a mouse is moving in a huge radius around this mountain...

...And you have to go through several gates, and check, after check, after check. And it's heavily guarded, with a huge metal door that opens into a city that's just like a military base under the ground..."

After that, "Elizabeth Nelson" was requested by the interviewer (Bill Ryan from "Project Camelot") to read from the prepared paper some information on the so-called "Site R":

"...[reading] The Raven Rock Mountain Complex, RRMC, is a United States government facility on Raven Rock, a mountain in the US state of Pennsylvania. It's located about 14 kilometers east of Waynesboro, Pennsylvania and 10 kilometers north-east of Camp David, Maryland.

I've never seen this before.

[reading] It is also called the Raven Rock Military Complex, or simply Site R. Other designations, and nicknames include The Rock, National Military Command Center Reservation, and Alternate National Military Command Center. Alternate Joint Communications Center... Backup Pentagon...

...This is the housing-place of the representatives and the congressmen and all of the... It's not for the people. It's for the government so they can hide. [laughs]

[reading] Backup Pentagon, or Site RT. The latter refers to the vast array of communication towers and equipment atop the mountain. It's known as the Underground Pentagon.

This is fascinating. [laughs] [reading] Its largest tenant is not the Defensive Threat Reduction Agency. The largest tenants are the Alternate National Military Command Center or Joint Staff Support Center..."

I hope you got the point. Make sure to notice the expressions "no-fly zone" and the "protocol". The point is that any plane that violated that "no-fly zone" is supposed to be shot down, especially if there were no communication with it. Moreover, it was to have been shot down irrespectively of whether such an event would take place on such an auspicious day as the eleventh day of September, 2001, or just on any other day. Besides, the procedure of taking the plane-violator down was prescribed by a certain "protocol" – much in the same sense as the certain instruction prescribed to demolish the World Trade Center in certain circumstances. I.e. the plane was shot down not because it was particularly on 9/11, but because there was a certain procedure (the "protocol") prepared in advance. Try to remember it.

The second piece of information that deserves our attention is an interview with a certain Colonel Donn de Grand-Pre, U.S. Army (ret.), made by Alex Jones in 2004. Here is the web page with that interview: <http://www.prisonplanet.com/022904degrandpre.html> An actual sound file, in an "mp3" format, could be downloaded from here: <http://www.prisonplanet.com/290204degrand.mp3>

In this rather lengthy interview there is a lot of extraneous information, including some crap (such as mulling over the "remote hijacking" of the aluminum planes that penetrated steel perimeters of the Twin Towers). However, the fact that Flight 93 was indeed shot down is mentioned too. Col. De Grand-Pre claims to know personally the pilot who shot down the plane (though he says it was shot down with the missiles, rather than cannons), as well as the commander of the airbase. There is no reason to doubt his claims, because what he says perfectly matches other sources. Here is the brief summary of what Colonel De Grand-Pre states:

"John: And was United Airlines Flight 93 shot down in Pennsylvania by a U.S. or NATO pilot and was that what was supposed to hit the Pentagon?"

DGP: No, that was hit at 10:00 hours. It was taken out by the North Dakota Air Guard. I know the pilot who fired those two missiles to take down 93.

John: Was it shot down because the airline pilots actually regained control of the hijacked auto-pilot or was that to replace the unmanned drone that was shot down?

DGP: No, it was the aircraft, you see, had totally unconscious people on board. There were no hijackers. At 9:35, the Happy Hooligans, the Air Guard flying the F-16s were ordered to take that plane out. And they took it out from 9:35 to 10:00...

John: Were there any refueling jets involved in that operation?

AJ: Hold on a second, John. The question is why would they deviate from the plan of flying it into the Capitol? Why did the globalists decide to go ahead and shoot the plane down?

DGP: There had been an adjustment to the controls, probably by an AWACS aircraft flying overhead, again, remote control. And it was on a course for either the Capitol or the White House. And at this stage, you don't know. The Happy Hooligans came in and took care of it.

AJ: Do you think they were not following orders?

DGP: Who, the Happy Hooligans?

AJ: Well, yeah, you've got Cheney running around, we've got the stand down taking place.

DGP: Well, this is correct, but you see the Adj. General of the State of North Dakota gave the command to take it out. And, by God, they took it out. And I've got the full story in the book..

John: Was there any refueling tankers used by the North Dakota Air Guard and what tanker wing was used?

DGP: I don't know about the aircraft itself. I don't know about refueling. They came off base in Langley and it was just a few minutes out from Langley to the intercept over Pennsylvania. It was just a matter of minutes.

AJ: Colonel, how did you get in touch with the pilot who shot the plane down?

DGP: It turned out to be an old friend of mine from the Air National Guard and this is my home state of North Dakota. And I attended the ceremony in North Dakota and watched the Adj. General [garbled] the pilot being decorated a year later for this activity that happened on 911 with Flight 93...

BREAK

AJ: Welcome back. We are about to go back to the Colonel and his amazing revelation of the North Dakota National Guard that had been moved to Langley Virginia a few months before 911. And then went in there and shot down that Flight 93 over Pennsylvania. He says he's talked to the pilot. His info checks out. I've been researching what he's been doing for years. Before we go back to our guest and 4 final calls from Scott and June and Warren and Greg, and we'll go to you quick too, because we've got a bunch of news we need to get to.

[Skipped segment]

Colonel, before we take these four final calls, go over that a little bit slower for folks. That's a big deal. You talked to the pilot, a friend of yours, who shot down Flight 93 that was going for the Capitol or the White House. And go over that for folks.

DGP: Okay, quick rundown. They were out of Hector Field, Fargo, North Dakota. A bunch, this 119 Fighter Group and they are called the Happy Hooligans. They are probably the best interceptors that we have in the country. They were moved to Langley Air Force Base from Hector Field down to Southern Virginia. And when the klaxon horn went off at 9:35, those two pilots put down their coffee and shot into their aircraft and took off. They didn't know where they were going initially but by 10:00 hours, they had rendezvoused over Southern Pennsylvania. That's about 250 miles in just a matter of minutes and engaged 93 with two side-winder missiles. And they accomplished their objective. Now Hector Field, I use to fly out of Hector Field some time ago. I know most of those pilots. I could name names. I know the National Guard Adj. General. And they were decorated about a year later and I have the full write up of that story in my book...

Leaving aside the technical question whether the unfortunate Flight 93 was shot down by using the cannons or the missiles (I would bet on the first, while De Grand-Pre claims the second), let us make some preliminary conclusions:

1. The plane was surely shot down. Colonel Donn De Grand-Pre knows it for sure and he knows the pilots who shot down the plane, as well as their commander, personally.
2. The plane was shot down by a group called "Happy Hooligans" that were a part of the Air National Guard of North Dakota, of its 119th Fighter Group.
3. The "Happy Hooligans" were the best interceptors in the United States; despite being from the National Guard, they were better than even their colleagues from the regular U.S. Air Force (this is confirmed by other sources).
4. The North Dakota National Guard (the best interceptors of the United States) had been moved to Langley, Virginia a few months prior to 9/11 (I would say in an apparent preparation to the 9/11 production – in the same sense the only anti-nuclear terror unit was moved out of the United States, within the frames of the same preparations).
5. The plane was unmanned; Colonel De Grand-Pre believes that the people on board were "totally unconscious" while the actual controls were run by the AWACS aircraft flying overhead.
6. The servicemen who shot down the Flight 93 were decorated.
7. [arguable] if to presume that Flight 93 was indeed shot down using the missiles, not the cannons, then it shall be presumed that the IFF feature of the missiles was disabled by the technicians in advance, in an apparent preparation of such a usage as against the U.S. own aircraft.

There is also an additional intriguing point in the abovementioned interview. Note that the humble author of these lines was actually the first publicly known chap that came with the claims that the Pentagon was hit by: 1) the Russian missile; 2) the nuclear-tipped missile; 3) the supersonic missile; 4) the highly maneuverable and therefore indestructible missile. And this happened not before the year 2008, as you probably remember. Until then, the 4 points listed above were not publicly discussed, because they were known only to some specialists who were supposed to keep their mouths shut. The maximum what the 9/11 critics could claim those days was that the Pentagon was hit by a certain missile (certainly, an American-made one), and not by any plane and nothing more than that. Now you will be surprised to read a certain excerpt from the abovementioned Alex Jones' interview with Colonel Donn De Grand-Pre. Just to remind you, the interview was recorded on 05 September, 2005 (at least, so the properties of the .mp3 file show).

AJ: Okay, thanks for the call, Wayne. Let's talk to Diane in South Carolina. Diane, go ahead.

Diane: Hi, before I asked my question. Please ask Don de Grand-Pre, Sir, to give us a phone number so we can contact him. And I have read the first book. It is awesome. It's like reading history and just watching everything unfold.

AJ: Yeah, he wrote about it in 2000 and then it happens a year later.

Diane: So, here's my question. On Thursday of last week in the Courier in South Carolina, they had a small article on the Russians who are now doing this World War III practice.

AJ: Yeah, the Russians are doing nuclear attack drills on us ' our little buddies, you know.

Diane: Okay, they had in there about a maneuverable nuclear-tipped weapon for offensive purposes.....

*AJ: Yeah, they say they've got a missile that nothing can stop...

*Diane: It's an airplane that goes five times the speed of sound. This was in the paper.

AJ: Well, they've had that for a while. You want to comment on that?

Diane: And my question is how is the foreign military in the United States vs. our military going to respond? And it looks like Russia is making some moves now. What do you think about Russia?

AJ: Yeah Colonel, that's a good question. I have all the articles; I have the documents they really are trying to integrate foreign and East German, Czech Republic, others into our military. How is that going?

DGP: It's probably going. I can't give you detail. You are bordering on certain elements that I can't talk about. But we have to consider the Russian aspect of these weapons as being in essence propaganda. We have the same type of unmanned aircraft drones, etc. that will fly 5 times the speed of sound.

AJ: They will do a lot more than that.

DGP: Yeah, but Diane let's not worry too much about the Russians.

Diane: Well, is there a non-gravitational type airplane or something?

AJ: No, they've got regular propulsion air. .. look, look Ma'am, they claim the SR 71 Blackbird in flight in '55, in service in '59, was the fastest jet in the world. It is not and it cruises at mach 3. Okay, I mean they got jets that will just.....

Diane: I know we are way behind what they are telling us. What I'm thinking...."

Interesting, isn't it? This Colonel Donn De Grand-Pre, despite of being retired, certainly knew more than just about shooting down Flight 93... Note also, that this interview was recorded in the remote 2004.

Anyway, let us come back to our topic. Here⁴²⁸ is one more interesting piece of information (I quote):

"Flight 93 Shootdown Pilot Identified

"At precisely 0938 hours, an alarm was sounded at Langely Air Force Base, and those whom were on call, drinking coffee, were scrambled. Thus the 119th Fighter Wing was off for an intercept.

They, the Happy Hooligans, a unit of 3 F-16 aircraft, were ordered to head toward Pennsylvania. At 0957 they spotted their target; After confirmation orders were received, A one Major Rick Gibney fired two sidewinder missiles at the aircraft and destroyed it in mid flight at precisely 0958;

He was awarded a medal from the Governor one year later for his heroic actions. As well as Decorated by Congress on 9/13/2001. The Happy Hooligans were previously stationed in North Dakota, and moved to Langley Air Force base some months before 911 occurred on a "Temporary assignment."

And here⁴²⁹ is one more piece of intriguing information:

"...Yesterday we were able to confirm that Colonel Don de Grand-pre claims he spoke face to face with Maj. Rick Gibney and Gibney told him that he was the pilot who shot down Flight 93.

We are still investigating this matter in trying to uncover the truth while not going out on a limb to say whether this is accurate or not.

However, an article from a September 11 website states that Gibney was not scrambled to track Flight 93, but that he was flying into New York. The article states,

Derrig, Maj. Dean Eckman and Capt. Craig Borgstrom scrambled from Langley Air Force Base, Va., to protect the nation's capital. Maj. Rick Gibney took off from Fargo to fly the New York emergency management director [sic] from Montana to New York.

We have now uncovered footage of the award ceremony in which Gibney is honored for his activities on September 11. Would Gibney be rewarded simply for flying an official to New York?

On the other hand, the official FAA Registry does list Gibney's certificate as 'Airline Transport Pilot.'

Notably, none of the four abovementioned links points to any existing web page today, while a couple of years ago (I believe in 2011, still) the said videos and photos were available and I have watched them. It is intriguing, isn't it? Unfortunately, I was not careful to save those videos by then... As I told you, I did not believe that the question of Flight 93 was that important and I paid the least attention to collecting materials on this matter, and now many of the former pages dealing with the Flight 93 (especially those telling the truth) have gone. Anyway, I was careful enough to save a picture of Mr. Rick Gibney, the supposed “shootdown pilot”, now a Colonel, and still a Major during the 9/11 events. Here he is:

I hope the reader of this book is a man of tact and he would not harass Mr. Gibney, especially considering that he did nothing really wrong. He was ordered by his superiors to shoot down the enemy aircraft and he did follow the order, moreover, doing so in the perfect manner. So, he could only be praised.

It is not so with those who organized the actual 9/11 affair, however. They too could be “praised”, of course, for the meticulous planning and for the near flawless execution of the 9/11 project, but I hope the reader is far from feeling any sympathies for the so-called “good guys” despite their good performance.

As I told you from the beginning, I did not feel that the matter of Flight 93 was that important and therefore I failed to save a lot of materials that I have read in the course of a few years. However, from all I have read, I was able to make the following conclusions, partly or wholly confirmed by the quotations from the above sources:

1. The Flight 93 could not have been “full of the innocent passengers” despite my initial belief to the contrary. Now I am sure that the flight was empty of the passengers, as well as of the pilots/attendants. It is because:

- a) you can not force any pilot into flying over the restricted airspace where the aircraft would be certainly forced to land or even to be shot down;
- b) even if you force a certain loony pilot into such a feat, you could not force him to disobey the jet-fighters that would be inevitably sent to intercept the violator and to force him to land;
- c) you can not force any flight attendant (not to say an entire crew of them) to maintain an aircraft devoid of the pilots;
- d) it does not matter how wicked you are; you can not force the live passengers to board an airliner devoid of the live flight-attendants;
- e) despite the common misconception, even if it were technically possible to “electronically hijack” an aircraft using some remote control mechanism, it was not feasible with the live pilots in its cockpit – the latter would certainly rebel against such an attempt and would start calling and complaining to every possible authority using anything from the old-fashioned radios to the newly invented “Airfones”;

Therefore, the flight, designed to violate the “no-go” zone (that, moreover, contained the “sanctum sanctorium” of the U.S. national defense – the Alternate National Military Command Center, which also serves as a “hiding place” for the top-ranking U.S. politicians) could only be empty and piloted remotely. In this case, Colonel Donn De Grand-Pre suspected it rightly that the doomed flight had been controlled by some AWACS aircraft plane flying overhead. I would bet that it was so, indeed.

2. The pilots who supposedly shot down the violator-plane were chosen from among the best and the most reliable U.S. pilots-interceptors and they were relocated to the needed “temporary assignment” well in advance.

3. Although I have read at minimum 3 different accounts claiming that at least one fighter-jet sent to intercept passenger flights on 9/11 returned to its base with its entire canon munitions spent, I am not sure if this was referred to those who shot down Flight 93, or to those who shot down some other flight. At least, two, or even three more passenger flights are suspected to be shot down during the 9/11 panic – American Airlines Flight 77, which was later assigned to the Pentagon, and the flights from Boston to Atlanta and from Chicago to New York. Thus, there is a reason to believe Colonel De Grand-Pre who claims that Flight 93 was shot by two missiles; although I am not sure about it, because Flight 93 was reported as “disintegrated while in the air”, I can not discount this possibility. However, if to presume that the Flight 93 was indeed shot down with the missiles, as claimed, then we have to presume that it was flying with its IFF system turned off. And this, in turn, was only possible if the planning was meticulous and those who organized it planned to turn its IFF system off, in advance – just to make 100% sure that the plane would be shot down.

4. I have read confessions of a few different FBI investigators (no longer available on the Internet) where they claimed the most unbelievable and seemingly outrageous things: that there were no bodies of people among the debris of Flight 93; nor of its crew, neither of its passengers. The plane was just stuffed with some rags and other garbage.

6. I have read some account of events that claimed as follows: Major Rick Gibney was ordered to scramble and to divert the violating aircraft (without actually shooting it down). However, when he approached the plane and attempted to establish a radio-communication or at least a visual contact with its pilots, he noticed that there were no pilots – the cockpit was just empty. Once he reported this fact to the ground, the order came immediately – shoot it down at once.

I hope you realize that the order to shoot down an aircraft without pilots, encroaching on the most protected U.S. underground facility would be inevitable, even if it were not in the midst of the 9/11 events. So, it is clear that the Flight 93 was the setup at its best. “Someone” just made everything possible to ensure that this plane would be shot down.

The Flight 93 story, by the way, bore a striking resemblance to another well-known story – the infamous shooting down of the Korean Air Lines Flight 007 by the Soviet air-defense in 1983. The official version of this story is described in the corresponding Wikipedia article⁴³⁰. It contains almost no true details, but there is some notable information in it, still: the Wikipedia article honestly admits that the Soviet divers did not find any body of any passenger or a pilot in the wreckage of the sunken aircraft...

It so happened, that the humble author of these lines (who was not just a Soviet military officer, but a well-connected, and, moreover, curious Soviet military officer) used to know some people that were involved in the incident with the Flight 007. One of them was a pilot from the same unit that shot down the Korean flight. Another was a military prosecutor responsible for the inquiry. The first told this story: the pilot, who was sent to intercept the violating flight, approached it and saw that its cockpit was empty; there were no pilots inside. Moreover, the behavior of the lights in the rows of the passengers' windows clearly indicated that there were no passengers either. Of course, it was immediately believed that it was a spy-plane (that, moreover, violated the Soviet airspace in the wrong time – when the Soviet military was in the middle of testing the new ballistic missile particularly in that area) and the order to shoot it down followed at once. The military prosecutor, who participated in the inquiry, told this story: there were no people inside the shot-down aircraft. There was no luggage either. There was no spying equipment. The plane was full of sacks with rags and other garbage. Of course, it was not possible to report to the public (especially to the international community) that the plane was stuffed with rags and garbage, but not with corpses – nobody would believe such an outrageous version anyway, especially considering the situation with the Cold War that took a new bitter turn at that moment. Therefore the Soviet Government found itself in an extremely awkward situation at that moment and the incident cost the Soviet Union a lot, as it triggered a new round of anti-Soviet hysteria all around the world. Moreover, it could be even said that the setup with the Korean Flight 007 was one of a handful of mortal blows delivered to the Soviet Union by the so-called “good guys” that could be compared in value with the “Chernobyl disaster” and with the “Soviet aggression against Afghanistan”.

The point is that the story with the Korean Air Lines Flight 007 of 1983 and the United Airlines Flight 93 of 2001 are so similar that it must be presumed that they were organized by the very same folks. Compare:

1. Both flights violated some restricted airspace at the very wrong time; the “wrongness” of the time was chosen very carefully; in the first case it was the test of the top-secret Soviet ballistic missile in that area, aggravated by the presence of the U.S. reconnaissance aircraft flying along the Soviet border with an apparent intention to collect telemetric information about the missile being tested; in the second case it was 9/11.
2. Both flights-violators ignored the radio-contact with the intercepting authorities and, moreover, ignored warning shots;
3. Both flights were devoid of the pilots in their cockpit (or even of their mannequins) – just to make sure that the pilots of the fighters sent to intercept them would not hesitate shooting them down;
4. Both flights were stuffed with garbage and so the fact of the absence of any bodies/luggage could not be honestly reported because no one in sound mind would accept such an explanation anyway; this inevitably forced the responsible government into the very awkward situation;

Now, I guess, the picture is more or less clear. Of course, Flight 93 was a setup at its best, designed to force the U.S. Government into just another awkward situation (in addition to forcing it to demolish the Twin Towers and to sending the gullible responders to their certain deaths on Ground Zero). But why, you might ask, did the 9/11 perpetrators do this to the U.S. Government? Are they not together? No. They are not together. The U.S. Government (that runs the United States and loves the country) is separate; the Freemasonic sect (that runs the Globe and hates the statehood, the U.S. statehood inclusive) is separate. They have different objectives and different methods of achieving these objectives. Therefore, the Freemasonic modus operandi is to always keep any and every government in a certain awkward situation. This allows the Freemasons to blackmail and to manipulate the governments and also to offer their "kind help" in solving some of such situations. Hence 9/11. Hence the "assassination of President Kennedy". Hence "landings on the Moon". Hence "Pearl Harbor attack". The story with Flight 93 was just one of these, being also an integral part of the larger 9/11 project. This is what the cynical author of these lines believes in regard to Flight 93, which he considers being an inessential part of the 9/11thology.

Bio-terrorism – anthrax attacks following September 11.

The anthrax attacks following 9/11 seem to be almost completely forgotten today. However, these anthrax attacks were an inalienable part of the actual 9/11 perpetration and not to mention them in this book at least briefly would be a lapse. At least for the sake of history this perpetration has to be remembered.

Brief information on this largely forgotten perpetration is this (from Wikipedia):

“The 2001 anthrax attacks in the United States, also known as “Amerithrax” from its FBI case name, occurred over the course of several weeks beginning on September 18, 2001.

Letters containing anthrax spores were mailed to several news media offices and two Democratic U.S. Senators, killing five people and infecting 17 others. The anthrax attacks came in two waves. The first set of anthrax letters had a Trenton, New Jersey postmark dated September 18, 2001, exactly one week after September 11, 2001 attacks. Five letters are believed to have been mailed at this time, to ABC News, CBS News, NBC News and the New York Post, all located in New York City; and to the National Enquirer at American Media, Inc. (AMI) in Boca Raton, Florida. Robert Stevens, the first person who died from the mailings, worked at a tabloid called The Sun, also published by AMI.

Only the New York Post and NBC News letters were actually found; the existence of the other three letters is inferred because individuals at ABC, CBS and AMI became infected with anthrax. Scientists examining the anthrax from the New York Post letter said it appeared as a coarse brown granular material. Two more anthrax letters, bearing the same Trenton postmark, were dated October 9, three weeks after the first mailing. The letters were addressed to two Democratic Senators, Tom Daschle of South Dakota and Patrick Leahy of Vermont. More potent than the first anthrax letters, the material in the Senate letters was a highly refined dry powder consisting of about one gram of nearly pure spores. Earlier reports described the material in the Senate letters as “weaponized” or “weapons grade” anthrax.

However, in September 2006, the Washington Post reported that the FBI no longer believes the anthrax was weaponized. The letters contained at least two grades of anthrax material; the coarse brown material sent in the media letters and the fine powder sent to the two U.S. Senators. The brown granular anthrax sent to media outlets in New York City caused only skin infections, cutaneous anthrax.

The anthrax sent to the Senators caused the more dangerous form of infection known as inhalation anthrax, as did the anthrax sent to AMI in Florida. Although the anthrax preparations were of different grades, all of the material derived from the same bacterial strain – known as the Ames strain.

Dozens of buildings were contaminated with anthrax as a result of the mailings. American Media, Inc. moved to a different building. The decontamination of the Brentwood postal facility took 26 months and cost US$130 million. The Hamilton, NJ postal facility remained closed until March 2005; its cleanup cost US$65 million. The United States Environmental Protection Agency spent US$41.7 million to clean up government buildings in Washington, D.C. One FBI document said the total damage exceeded US$1 billion. The crime remains unsolved⁴³¹.

SPECIAL REWARD
 Up to $2.5 million

For information leading to the arrest and conviction of the individual(s) responsible for the mailing of letters containing anthrax to the New York Post, Tom Brokaw at NBC, Senator Tom Daschle and Senator Patrick Leahy:

AS A RESULT OF EXPOSURE TO ANTHRAX,
FIVE (5) PEOPLE HAVE DIED.

The person responsible for these deaths...

- Likely has a scientific background/work history which may include a specific familiarity with anthrax
- Has a level of comfort in and around the Trenton, NJ area due to present or prior association

Anyone having information, contact America's Most Wanted at 1-800-CRIME TV or the FBI via e-mail at amerithrax@fbi.gov

All information will be held in strict confidence. Reward payment will be made in accordance with the conditions of Postal Service Reward Poster 296, dated February 2000. Source of reward funds: U.S. Postal Service and FBI $2,000,000; ADVO, Inc. $500,000.

The author of this book is neither a specialist in bacterial sciences, nor in actual bio-weapons. He has only basic knowledge due to the fact of him being a former Soviet military officer (as all commissioned Soviet military officers had to undergo some course on military medicine and on bacteriological weapons as a part of their intensive standard training), And his basic knowledge as the author is only slightly enhanced by his personal acquaintance with a person who actually is a specialist in anthrax and particularly in the weaponized anthrax powder.

That is why my personal expertise on such a subject is not accurate enough to any degree to claim any final conclusions. However, the author of this topic is indeed a good specialist in logic – which might be also helpful in understanding the complexities of the attacks, at least to a certain extent.

Thus it seems that with a small amount of effort and study we can still dig into the truth in connection with that now forgotten anthrax attack in the aftermath of the World Trade Center nuclear demolition.

Let us initially make a brief overview of biological weapons in general, otherwise it would be difficult to understand the dangers, either real or imaginary, of the actual anthrax itself and the potential motivations of those who put it to use following the attacks on both the World Trade Center and the Pentagon.

Firstly, it shall be known that anthrax is not the most dangerous kind of bacteriological weapon. The first place apparently belongs to smallpox and the second – to plague. Why?

Plague (“Pasteurella pestis”, also called “Yersinia pestis”) has since ancient times been considered the most dangerous of all infectious diseases. Formerly known as “The Black Death” it could easily wipe entire populations. The most dangerous form of plague – pneumonic – causes lethality of 100%, despite any modern medical treatment.

Plague – especially the pneumonic variation – is highly contagious and rapidly spreads from localized infections into widespread epidemics. Moreover, you won’t need much of an actual plague culture to cause an epidemic outbreak – just one small vial is enough to deliver a deadly strike against the entire city and may be even enough of a lethal dose to wipe out an entire country. Considering that these days people often travel extensively by using high speed planes and super-fast trains, the dangers of the rapid spreading and population contamination of plague infection is considerably higher than that in ancient times – when most of the carriers who could bring “The Black Death” to another country would die on the way reaching it.

Any vaccination against plague is very dangerous itself, and is not always effective, and at best case it is valid for a maximum of one year. Plague microbes are also known to be amongst the most “toughest” microbiological agents known to modern science; as they can survive in dead body tissues for as long as 24 days – which greatly complicates disinfection procedures when it comes to this particular infection.

Indeed, plague absolutely rightfully enjoys the first place in the list of the most dangerous quarantine diseases.

Moreover, to obtain plague microbes is not a difficult task for a person with even a basic knowledge. Thus, for the reasons of responsibility as a precautionary measure against idiots, I will omit here, where to obtain the plague culture in reality. Although rest assured that serious persons who are determined to set themselves on a bio-war path would know surely how to get a hold of it. Do not ever doubt that these extreme folks would not encounter any difficulty whatsoever in obtaining the plague microbes.

That is exactly why, the first and the best choice of a real modern so-called “bio-terrorist” (if he only exists in This World), who does not possess any large facilities to develop bio-weapons within the framework of a secretive national program, would have to resort to the good old “Black Death”. Even if such a plague strike won’t kill the entire population (due to modern knowledge quick quarantine measures will be undertaken, along with certain prophylactic measures), still, depending on one’s luck, the rate of success of such a strike could be tremendous.

Using plague as a bio-weapon will effectively disrupt a normal life for at least several weeks, if not for several months, and it will cause an unprecedented public panic. Such an outbreak would undoubtedly inflict extreme financial damage to all areas of society and in addition, it would kill considerable numbers of people – which, in the case of a moderate success, could be from thousands to tens of thousands, even to hundreds of thousands. In a scenario event of a successful spread of infections, with all the contributing factors aligned, this could easily rapidly see the numbers reach into the millions.

Another deadly disease – smallpox (“Variola vera”) is known to be responsible for estimated 300 – 500 million deaths in the 20th century alone, because it boasts the lethality rate of 35%, with a further 30% losing their eyesight from amongst the remaining 65% of survivors.

Besides this, it was widely believed that when used against native inhabitants of the Americas, smallpox could achieve lethality rates of up to 95%, thus, being largely responsible for the near total extermination of the native population since the colonization of America. In case you wish to refresh your memory in regard to what smallpox used to be, you may read a few quotations from the corresponding Wikipedia article http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/History_of_smallpox – pay particular attention to the epidemics in Africa and in America, described in detail in this article.

Despite the fact that traditionally smallpox occupies only the third “formal” place in regard to its deadliness among the most dangerous quarantine diseases (ceding the first two “formal” places to plague and to cholera), it is still considered to be the most deadly choice when it comes to its use as bio-weapons.

Firstly, there is no medical treatment against smallpox; it is entirely up to a patient if he survives or not, doctors can do nothing to help him.

The vaccination against smallpox is no longer practiced in the world – and even people, who belong to the older generation that were still lucky to get vaccinated in their young age, might lose their immunity to this disease due to their vaccinations being made too long ago.

The people are considered to be unprotected against smallpox today. Moreover, new achievements in genetic engineering allow bio-weapons developers to develop new highly virulent genetically modified strains of smallpox viruses, and to produce extremely deadly weaponized formulas that could be used for its effective delivery to enemy forces.

Considering that smallpox (especially the genetically modified one) is highly contagious and absolutely incurable, with the rate of mortality close to 100%, and considering that it boasts a very long incubation period (12 days) – meaning that the earliest this deadly disease could be noticed is only on the 13th day after its deployment, smallpox would be the most probable choice of an inhumane government should it decide to deliver a deadly bio-strike against another state.

It shall be known, however, that smallpox, especially in its most virulent forms and strains, under no circumstances could be available to any individuals. Thus the possession (not to say the development) of smallpox viruses is too an improbable thing for terrorists – such an enterprise could only be undertaken as a part of a state sponsored bio-research program.

Based on the well-known effectiveness of these diseases, it shall be presumed that the most probable choice of a vicious individual (or a group of vicious individuals – such as the so-called “Al-Qaeda”) will be plague. While the most probable choice of any vicious government will be smallpox – should any of them decide to deliver a deadly biological strike to the notorious “freedoms” and “liberties” of the United States of America. In any case even cholera would be a more likely choice for any bio-terrorist, than anthrax.

What is anthrax?

Anthrax is an acute disease, which occupies probably a 10th place or so in regard to its deadliness in the list of the most dangerous quarantine diseases.

It occurs in people and animals and it is caused by the bacterium “Bacillus anthracis”. This particular bacterium is known to create long-living spores (encapsulated pieces of bacterium). These spores could remain in the revivable condition in the soil or in water for many decades and even for centuries (in the United States it is traditionally believed that anthrax spores could survive in the soil for only 10 years, while in the former USSR it was believed that they could survive in the soil for as long as thousands of years). They could survive in both – in air and in the absence of the air (meaning that they are anaerobes).

Moreover, these anthrax spores are quite resilient and could survive even 30-minutes boiling (in the US it is believed that they could endure only 10-minutes boiling). They could endure in weak disinfectant solutions for up to 40 days and even when placed into strong disinfectant liquids they could survive for at least one hour.

It is relatively easy to grow an anthrax culture outside any live body – thus making it seemingly good choice for bio-weapons developers (though it is a common misconception – this disease attracts attention of bio-weapons developers because of an entirely different reason than just the simplicity of its growing).

Anthrax features a lethality rate of 1-2% in its most common – cutaneous (“skin”) form if treated, and up to 20% if untreated, and much higher – up to 70-90% and in some instances even up to 100% – in its gastro-intestinal form. However, the gastro-intestinal form of anthrax occurs very rarely – primarily only in very poor countries with the total absence of basic sanitary conditions – where populations eat the meat of dead animals, that have not been cooked sufficiently or prepared properly in hygienic conditions.

The only form of anthrax that suits the requirements of bio-weapons developers is its pulmonary (a/k/a “pneumonic”, a/k/a “respiratory”) form (also historically known as “Woolsorter’s disease”) – caused by inhalation of its bacterium. The pulmonary form of anthrax boasts a much higher mortality rate – normally 100% of those infected die in 24 hours. Practically no medical treatment can help those unlucky enough to develop the infection in its pulmonary form, only with a very rare exception.

However, anthrax very rarely occurs naturally in its inhalation form. Practically it ONLY so occurs among people of certain specific professions – such as those who work with wool for example. 95% of known cases of naturally occurring anthrax are cutaneous.

Anthrax itself is not really highly contagious, and it is believed that one needs about 10 species of anthrax bacteria to touch his skin to be certain to contract the disease in its cutaneous form (moreover, it is believed that the anthrax bacteria is not able to penetrate undamaged people’s skin at all). One would need to inhale a minimum of 2500 spores in order to develop the deadly pulmonary form of this disease (while some specialists believe that a man requires a minimum of 20,000 spores for this reason).

In addition, the anthrax disease can not be passed from one man to another – meaning that a person, who has already contracted the disease, can not infect other people around him or her. To contract anthrax one needs to have a direct contact with its encapsulated bacterium and not with another person who is infected and who could spread around only “live” [meaning in a vegetative state] bacterium. Thus, unlike many other dangerous diseases, anthrax can not cause any epidemic.

Actually, it is exactly this unique feature of anthrax, and not any other feature of it, that has made this disease one of the main choices of bio-weapons developers. Sometimes it seems reasonable to kill many people, but without causing any uncontrollable outbreak of a dangerous infection. For such a case, anthrax-based bio-weapons might represent yet another option – besides well-known smallpox, plague, Q-fever, Ebola, glanders, tularemia, and others. Again, I would like to repeat myself – anthrax became a choice of the bio-weapons developers NOT because of an obvious simplicity of growing of its culture outside the man’s body, but merely because this disease does not cause any secondary infections and thus is unable to cause any epidemics.

How could anthrax be turned into weapons?

The anthrax bacterium must first be prepared to cause the most dangerous inhalation form of the disease. (I guess it is clear that to use anthrax with an intention to cause an easily curable skin ulcer would be just simply a stupid idea.)

Thus the only combat-effective use of anthrax is in an aerosol form. Unfortunately, considering that the anthrax bacteria are unusually large and heavy, and it is even heavier in its encapsulated form, it simply can not exist as an airborne bio-agent. Even if you let such a thing to be blown by the wind, it will fall down like a stone – so your intended victims will have no chance to inhale the required 2500 pieces of the bacteria/per person.

Therefore the anthrax culture NEEDS to be “weaponized” – i.e. each particle of the powder that contains the anthrax encapsulated bacterium, has to be coated with some additional substance which will:

- 1) allow spores of anthrax to be “fluffy” and to be airborne for as long as possible, instead of simply falling down right away;
- 2) prevent anthrax spores from sticking to each other – and so creating a useless heavy mass that could not be airborne;
- 3) as much as possible, prevent an electrostatic effect – thus increasing the number of the particles to be able to fly in the air without sticking to objects around;
- 4) such an additional coating has to be carefully calculated as not to decrease any virulent features of the encapsulated bacterium itself.

After 9/11 many venerable bio-weapons “experts” appeared on the scene to scare the simpletons with a notion that anthrax would be allegedly the first choice of so-called “bio-terrorists”.

These doctor-quacks went so far in their ridiculous claims (based on the alleged dangers of terrorism primarily based on the anthrax disease) that they even invented a new linguistic term – the so-called “bio-terrorism” which starting from 2002-2003 and has found its way into modern English dictionaries. The most laughable was that this newly concocted term “bio-terrorism” has entered the dictionaries at about the same time the former term “ground zero” (in a sense the Civil Defense and nuclear science used to understand it) has departed from these dictionaries. In any case, the neologism “bio-terrorism” has appeared in an obvious connection with the infamous anthrax-letters, allegedly sent by the so-called “bio-terrorists” and this alleged action of the so-called “bio-terror” has been exploited by the “experts” and “linguists” alike in the most shameless manner.

Here is just an example of how these “experts” scare the gullible man in the street. I quote (from one Russian-language source⁴³²):

“...the World Health Organization has calculated that after 3 days following the release of 50 kg of spores of anthrax pathogen by aerosolisation downwind on a 2 km wide span against a city of 500,000 inhabitants 125,000 of them (25%) would be affected with 95,000 deaths. Considering that acts of terror occur often, and considering that at least 5 countries are armed with the anthrax powder... etc.”

Are you afraid? Do not be afraid. Try to understand that those shameless “experts” of WHO are fooling you, apparently using your supposed inability to implement elementary logic. But to fully appreciate how these “experts” are laughing at you, thinking of you as a simpleton, try to do the following. In the example above replace the word “kilogram” with the word “gram”. And “anthrax” – with “plague”. Correspondingly, “2 km wide span” (along with the tail-wind) – with “a single air-conditioner in a big supermarket”. Then the digit “25” would change itself to “95”, or, perhaps, to “100%”. While the lethality rate among those affected would be 100% as well, since pneumonic plague is absolutely incurable.

I would dare to claim that these so-called “experts” simply lie to the gullible public, because the first choice of any modern so-called “bio-terrorist” (if only there were any of them existing in reality) would be plague, and none of them, with any level of knowledge of the subject would ever be so misguided to knowingly choose anthrax as a weapon of choice.

It shall be understood first of all that while it seems that it is easy to grow the anthrax culture (it is indeed not so difficult), to grow the culture of the most dreadful “Pasteurella Pestis” is not difficult either. If someone had actually decided to go that far as to grow anthrax – why would they not just grow the plague, instead?

The “experts” who prefer to scare gullible simpletons do not want to answer this logical question. However, the advantage of using plague rather than anthrax is that good old plague could be simply used “as is” – without any additional “weaponization”: just pour contents of your vial into some water reservoir and the job is done (using a little ingenuity you can easily cause an outbreak of pneumonic plague as well).

The plague culture needs only a minor degree of “weaponization” primarily for when it is required to be adapted to some modern means of delivery – such as ballistic missile warheads or aviation bombs, and in order to modify it with a view to long-term stockpiling. Yet when it comes to a purely “terrorist-style” approach, the newly grown home-made plague culture is ready to use.

Unfortunately, when it comes to anthrax, this is NOT the case. While it is relatively easy to grow the bacterium culture itself, it is extremely difficult to achieve that grade of “weaponization” that is required to turn that home-grown stuff into a weapon of mass destruction.

Of course, theoretically it is still possible that a certain lunatic – obsessed with some idiotic idea that he must kill descendants of Adam exclusively with the anthrax powder and with nothing else than this, might embark on a development of some weaponized anthrax powder in his garage or in his remote cave in ⁴³² <http://www.antibiotic.ru/index.php?article=762> (they, in turn, refer to: Dhawan B., Desikan-Trivedi P., Chaudhry R., Narang P. Bioterrorism: a threat for which we are ill prepared. Natl Med J India 2001; 14:225-30).

Afghanistan, and after a few years of efforts he might come up with some kind of usable stuff (if only he himself won't die first in the course of his crazy experiments).

However, it will be just stupid of us to presume that such a lunatic could really exist. No individual in sound mind would produce any weaponized anthrax powder. He simply does not need it. This is an axiom.

What is the basic difference between practical uses of the weaponized anthrax powder and that of, let's say, smallpox?

The problem of anthrax as a disease is that it simply cannot pass from one infected individual to another. At the very most what one could attempt – is to disperse some quantities of the anthrax powder over the populated areas and to keep the fingers crossed. Only those who inhale over a few thousand of its spores would be unlucky enough to have a chance to develop the inhalation form of this disease, and that's all. The disease won't spread any further and once the airborne powder eventually descends to the ground, the further effectiveness of such an attack will be equal to zero. There will be, of course, some isolated cases caused even by the powder as it descends, but it would be individual cases only – merely as an exception to a rule. Moreover, you have to use really huge quantities of the weaponized anthrax powder in order to achieve any significant casualties. Let's say you decided to disperse hundreds of kilograms of it over a densely populated area (like a modern city) in order to kill a couple of hundreds of thousands of people. Then you will need a plane with some dispersal system to spread those hundreds of kilograms of powder form more or less evenly – because if you simply empty your sacks down the street from some high-rise building, you won't achieve any significant results.

By contrast, if you disperse (even in only a single spot of a city) only a hundred grams of the weaponized smallpox powder – you might kill the entire city (and several cities around as well).

Plague would be probably less effective in comparison with smallpox, but still – in the case of good luck (to you, not to the population) it could prove to be as deadly.

See the difference? Do you think that if so-called “bio-terrorists” decide to go on a bio-strike, they would not acquire basic knowledge first? Apparently they will, and that is exactly why they would definitely never ever use any anthrax powder as their weapon.

I guess now it is clear to every logical person that this notorious “weaponized” anthrax powder in reality is much closer to chemical weapons of mass destruction, than to bacteriological ones. A basic feature of bacteriological weapons is that you do not actually need much of its material to be effective in it's impact.

All you need is to choose the right place where to infect the first group of your victims – the rest will be done by it's natural course. Conversely in the case of chemical weapons it is not so – you obviously need more chemicals if you want to kill more people.

As it is probably known to some readers, who read books or articles on this topic, those few countries, which continue to develop anthrax as weapons, do not limit themselves to only research and some limited quantities of the actual material. They typically produce the weaponized anthrax powder on an industrial scale: a few kilograms and even a few hundred kilograms is simply not enough.

Even a few tons of it is still not enough.

Normally, these countries try to accumulate as much of this material, as their industrial capacities allow: for example, hundreds of tons, and this is understandable, because the anthrax powder, despite an obvious fact that it is a live culture that causes an infectious disease, logically belongs to a different group of weapons – similar to chemical weapons, if you compare it with the rest of bio-weapons agents.

Considering all of this, it is clear that no individual, and no group of individuals, and not even a small state would ever embark on the production of such weaponized anthrax.

Since anthrax is a very specific kind of bio-weapon type agent, which does not cause any secondary infections, and also because there is a direct relevance between the number of infected victims and quantities of weapon-material used against them, any potential so-called “bioterrorist” could easily see difficulties and disadvantages of using the anthrax powder as his weapon.

Since there is a minimum requirement to the plant size needed, for the industrial scale needed for production, and because this industrial production will immediately attract the attention of foreign intelligence services, there are obviously then many other reasons, why the weaponized anthrax powder would be never a choice of any small or even a big terrorist organization, and even that of a small rogue state.

It is a sole privilege of big and developed countries to produce such anthrax-based bio-weapons. There must be not even a slightest doubt in this regard.

What countries produce anthrax as weapons?

It is known for sure that biological weapons in general (and anthrax-based weapons as its most possible part) are (or at least were) produced by:

The United States,
the former USSR (there is no data in regard to the post-Soviet republics, but it shall be presumed that Russia possibly does it as well),
the United Kingdom,
Canada,
France,
Iraq,
Syria,
Egypt,
Libya,
Pakistan,
Iran,
Israel,
South African Republic,
China,
Taiwan,
North Korea,
South Korea,
Cuba,
Bulgaria,
Vietnam,
India,
possibly – Brazil,
maybe – Argentina,
maybe – Germany (at least Nazi Germany had definitely produced that thing);
maybe – Italy,
and maybe – Turkey.

I could easily miss a couple of potential producers, but generally – only those countries who crave for nuclear weapons + countries that consider themselves “great” could also resort to some production of chemical weapons and to that of the anthrax powder – as either a substitute for the nuclear weapons, or as an addition to them.

Not many countries in the world actually produce anthrax and even those who do – would never ever publicly reveal such a thing, since officially biological weapons are prohibited and most of those countries are signatories of this international treaty.

It shall be mentioned also that soon after those infamous 2001 Anthrax attacks, the United States was greatly humiliated after some of their officials were forced to reveal that the United States had indeed continued to produce the anthrax weapons even after they publicly declared that they allegedly destroyed all stocks of their bacteriological weapons in 1969 and ceased any new research in relation to the bio-weapons.

The existence of the former Soviet anthrax weapons program was betrayed by a famous Soviet defector – Kenadjan Alibekov – who now lives in the United States under a new name “Kenneth Alibek”.

Iraq during Saddam Hussein’s rule actually did not make much secret out of its anthrax program – and it was well known not only that this country was indeed developing such a thing, but even the exact names of its main researches.

What about the rest of the countries – they keep the existence of their anthrax programs in total secrecy – there is simply no proof that such and such country produces any weaponized anthrax powder. At the very most what those countries could publicly admit, is that they only produce some “vaccines” against anthrax.

Let us conclude:

1) So-called “terrorists” can not produce the weapon-grade anthrax powder because they have neither any real need, nor any industrial capacities to produce such a peculiar thing.

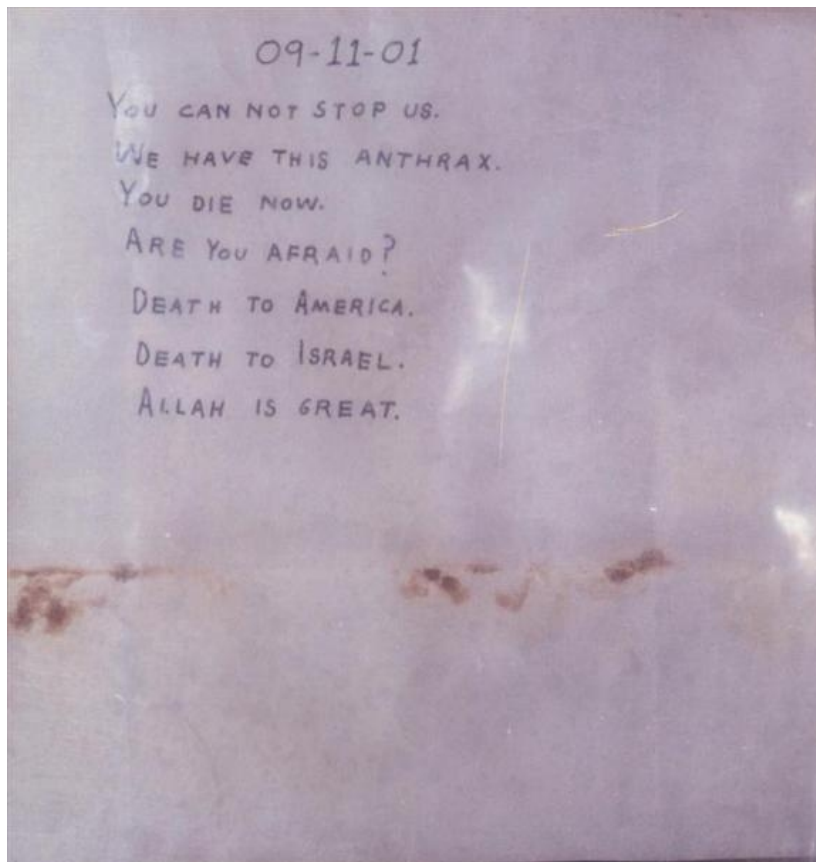

2) Even if the “terrorists” somehow managed to obtain some ready “weaponized” anthrax powder from a certain secret manufacturer (which is near impossible – considering the secrecy and elementary measures of precaution surrounding all anthrax enterprises) – they will not be able to use it anyway, because from all available kinds of bio-weapons the anthrax-based one is the least effective and requires not only huge volumes of the actual anthrax powder, but also corresponding means of its delivery and dispersal – which no terrorist organizations could have at their disposal.

3) Considering all of the above, we can conclude: anthrax is not a weapon of terrorists. It is the exclusive weapon of relatively rich governments.

Armed with this basic knowledge we at last could proceed to consider the actual 2001 Anthrax attacks in the United States in the aftermath of 9/11.

What could we see from these attacks?

To begin with, let us take a close look at one letter that was enclosed in one of the envelopes – along with the actual anthrax powder. Thanks to the FBI, which this time made its photocopy publicly available, until now it is still widely available on the Internet. Here is it:

09 - 11 - 01

You can not stop us.

We have this anthrax.

You die now.

Are You afraid?

Death to America.

Death to Israel.

Allah is great.

What we could see from this note?

Firstly, it was designed to look like as if it was written by some Muslim.

Secondly – its real composer used block-letters in order to escape being identified by his handwriting. Thanks to this approach it was written carefully, so all capital letters intended to be capital ones are easily distinguishable from the rest of the letters – allowing us to make further conclusions.

Thirdly – this letter is purported to be connected to the WTC/Pentagon attack – since on its top it features the relevant digits: “09 - 11 - 01”, while the letter itself was prepared and sent much later than on the actual date September 11, 2001. Let us analyze it step by step.

It shall be understood, first of all, that no Muslim who is educated enough to know Latin letters would ever write “great” when it comes to describe the quality of The Most High.

He will always write “Allah is Great” – both words beginning from capital letters. It will be done automatically. Actually, in the Arabic alphabet capital letters do not exist, but all Muslims know perfectly well that in the rest of alphabets (such as Latin and Cyrillic) where capital letters are being used to write names and even positions of important officials (such as the President or the Prime Minister), all references to The God must start with only capital letters without any exception.

No Muslim could ever write “Allah is great” – especially when he writes his letter carefully, observing the capitalization in the rest of its words.

Note that the author of this letter in its 4th line wrote even middle word “You” starting from a capital letter – while he could easily write it “you” with a low-case “y” and there would not be any mistake still. It would be just strange of us – to expect that such an evil guy who is actually trying to slaughter his recipient will additionally stress his alleged respect to his nearly dead victim by even writing “You” with the capital letter, and in the same time was so disrespectful to The Most High as to write one of His qualities starting from the lower-case “g”.

You can be pretty sure that it simply impossible that such a careful “Muslim” managed to afford such an unforgivable error – as to write “great” when it comes to the Lord God with a low-case letter.

This seemingly “minor” error is indeed the first and foremost indication that this letter was written by a non-Muslim, who did not know anything about the Islamic traditions at all.

This is the second letter (sent to Tom Brokaw from NBC). You can see that it contains exactly the same error: while the first word in the phrase “Allah is great” was written with a clearly distinguishable Capital letter, the second word was not. Even words “Penacilin” and “Now” are started with capital letters in the second note, but not the word “great”.

09 - 11 - 01

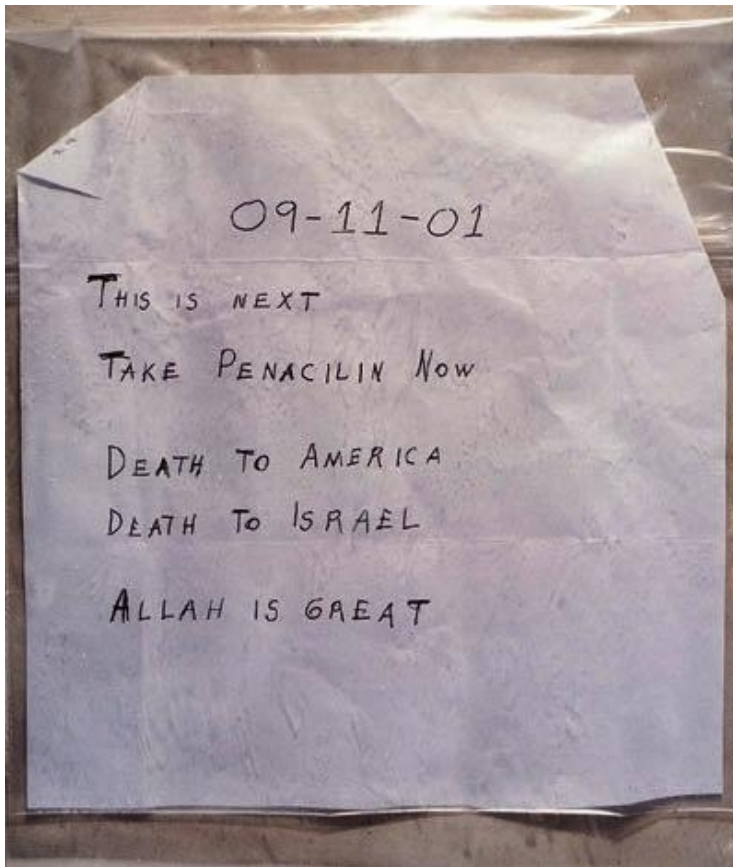

This is next

Take Penacilin Now

Death To America

Death To Israel

Allah is great

No one should be duped by the intentional misspelling of the word “Penacilin” that was apparently purported to “reveal” those “brutal”, but “uneducated Muslims”. Those who know that anthrax is being typically treated with penicillin, and those, capable of even obtaining the actual anthrax material, know for sure how to properly spell the name of that well-known antibiotic. However, even if to imagine that those “uneducated Muslim specialists in the anthrax powder” did not know how to properly spell the word “penicillin”, we still have to presume that they know for sure that the word “Great” should have been written with a capital letter here...

The secondary consideration is this: actually, “Allah” is nothing else than “God” in Arabic.

Due to this fact the majority of educated Muslims when they refer to The Most High while speaking with non-Muslims, especially in English, prefer to use the word “God” rather than “Allah” – because in this case they speak in English, and not in Arabic.

To use an Arabic word in an otherwise English sentence intended for English speakers would be nothing but an example of bad form which no educated Muslim could afford. If this letter were written by some educated Muslim – he would apparently write “God is Great” (observing capitalization); if this letter were written by some less-educated Muslim – he would probably write “Allah Akbar” (observing capitalization too) because it would be really odd – to mix one English and one Arabic word in the same phrase; if this letter were written by some uneducated Muslim – he would simply write it in Arabic, rather than in English. It is very improbable that any Muslim could ever write “Allah is Great” and it is absolutely impossible that any Muslim would write “Allah is great” – without observing the capitalization in the second word.

I guess it is clear.

If the anthrax letters were intended for a plain slaughter of “infidels”, then there would be no reason to write anything at all – especially about anthrax itself.

Such a mentioning of “anthrax” does nothing else than only increases chances of victims to survive – instead of raking their brains over diagnosis, doctors would promptly respond with appropriate antibiotics or may be even with appropriate vaccinations.

So to mention that it was particularly “anthrax” was apparently not a clever idea at all.

If this letter was intended as a kind of blackmail – “we have this anthrax” (meaning “we have MORE of this anthrax”) – then it is a different story; but in this case it would be reasonable to sign this letter – let’s say “Osama bin Laden”, or: “Islamic Jihad”, or: “Al-Qaeda”, or at least something.

However, the letter (and the rest of the “anthrax letters” as well) was oddly anonymous.

Apparently, from the very beginning it was not intended to be ascribed to any “Al-Qaeda” – at least for the “patricians” (the “plebeians” could think whatever they want – nobody cares about their opinions anyway).

Here we came a little bit closer to the potential motives. The “patricians” – at least those with elementary knowledge – knew very well that no “Al-Qaeda” and no other similar organization might have any production of the weapon-grade anthrax powder.

However, there was some other rogue organization, which was proven to have that stuff – namely the Iraqi Government under Saddam Hussein.

All “patricians” knew for sure that Saddam Hussein had an industrial production of this kind of “weaponized” anthrax powder, and even those of them who did not know it yet, would be supplied by the US military (or other) intelligence service with its exact findings in this regard.

I think it is the right time to make some preliminary conclusions: these anthrax letters were intended for the following reason: to link the actual 9/11 perpetration (where “mini-nukes” supposedly belonging to Saddam Hussein were allegedly used to demolish the Twin Towers + a supersonic cruise missile with an unexploded half-megaton thermonuclear warhead used to strike the Pentagon was also supposedly a property of the Iraqi dictator) – to yet another weapon of mass destruction: this “weaponized” anthrax powder, known to be produced by the same Iraqi dictator.

All these notorious “anthrax letters” seem to be nothing else than a part of the 9/11 “exclusive cover-up”, intended exclusively to support the second confidential “truth” for the “patricians”: that it was evil Saddam Hussein, armed with the various weapons of mass destruction who dared to attack the “freedom” of the American people, and who now, at last, had to be defeated and deprived of any of such weapons, before he could repeat his daring strike against the notorious American “freedom”. It was simply a part of a larger plan to convince American- (and also foreign-) high-ranking politicians that the war with Iraq was really necessary.

Who were the intended recipients of these “anthrax letters”?

It was several mass-media outlets and two Democratic Senators – Tom Daschle of South Dakota and Patrick Leahy of Vermont.

Let us take a closer look at the recipients. Firstly, it is notable that both targeted Senators were Democrats – i.e. belonged to the then opposition party, contrary to the Bush Administration which was Republican.

Apparently, some Senators from among the opposition must have been made to believe the “patrician concoction” of the FBI and the Bush Administration too.

To send them the deadly anthrax powder was actually tough means to “convince” them (just try to imagine yourself in their shoes – imagine your shock and indignation when someone reports to you that your secretary has died because she had opened your letter and doctors could, unfortunately, do nothing to save her life).

Moreover, the two targeted Senators used to hold prominent positions in the Senate, which apparently made these two being the best choice: Senator Daschle was no one else than the Senate Majority Leader and Senator Leahy was no one else than its Judiciary Committee Chairman.

As you could see the choice of “cowardly” Saddam Hussein could not have been any better: “he” had chosen the exactly right people to send them “his” anthrax.

Several media outlets were apparently added to “Saddam’s” mailing-list just to enhance an overall picture – and, in addition, to make sure that “too liberal” media would not make inappropriate noises when the “patricians” would eventually go on their war with the alleged “evil”.

Though, even with the targeted media outlets and the particular victims, cowardly “Saddam Hussein” managed to implement an apparent “selective” approach. As appears from the abovementioned Wikipedia article describing the Anthrax attacks, the very first person who died after contracting the deadly disease was a certain not unknown Robert Stevens, a photo editor who worked for “The Sun” tabloid.

Robert Stevens. Undated photograph released by Maureen Stevens, the wife of the deceased.

Most probably “Saddam Hussein” hated Stevens personally for this particular picture showing a certain drunken girl Jenna that bears an odd surname “Bush”:

Strangely, the next media target of cowardly “Saddam Hussein” was the New York Post. It received a nice envelope obviously inscribed by the very same hand that disregarded Muslim traditions by writing “Allah is great” in the abovementioned example:

Perhaps, coincidentally, it so happened that before receiving the deadly message from the cowardly "Muslim" dictator, the New York Post had published even more articles describing boozing Bush's daughters than did The Sun tabloid. As suggested in the article named "Targets!" published here: <http://www.newsgarden.org/columns/anthrax/anthraxtargets.shtml> if you search the New York Post's web site for the name of Bush's daughters, you will get the following results (I quote):

Abstract: [Bush]'s warning came a day after The Post revealed that Comedy Central is doing a hasty retreat from plans to paint the Bush twins as "hot and sexy" and maybe lesbians in a new sitcom satirizing the first family.

Exactly as stated in the abovementioned article, the next target in the mailing list of the "cowardly" dictator was Tom Brokaw from NBC.

NBC anchor Tom Brokaw.

I quote:

"...Brokaw had scheduled the broadcast of an interview with Clinton for September 18 on the NBC Nightly News. When the White House got wind of it they called NBC to rant and complain. The interview was still broadcast and that very evening an anthrax letter to Tom Brokaw hit the mail-stream.

On the same day last week that "NBC Nightly News" anchor Tom Brokaw sat down to interview former President Clinton, executives for the program received unexpected phone calls from senior communications staffers at the White House, expressing disappointment about the decision to spotlight Bush's predecessor.

While not asking the network to refrain from running the interview, they expressed the feeling that the Sept. 18 interview with Clinton would not be helpful to the current war on terrorism. Neither NBC nor the White House would comment on the phone calls, but sources familiar with the calls confirmed that they happened.

I can't resist mentioning here some "coincidences" of the anthrax attacks (again I quote from the abovementioned article):

- The anthrax attacks were concurrent with the debate of Bush's Patriot Act by Congress and the media.
- The Senators who received anthrax letters were trying to amend the Patriot Act to protect civil liberties and the innocent.
- Two Senate democratic leaders received anthrax letters mailed the same day that Senator Feingold blocked an attempt to rush the bill through without discussion or amendments.
- Senator Leahy received an anthrax threat after he expressed reservations about the Bill. As Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, he managed the debate on the Bill.
- Senate Majority Leader Daschle received the first Senate anthrax letter as he led the opposition to the original version of the Bill.
- After receiving the anthrax letter, Daschle switched from supporting a 2 year limit on the Bill, later defending a 4-year sunset clause as the "appropriate balance."
- No Republican received an anthrax letter.
- The House and Senate buildings were closed and not reopened until after the Patriot Act was passed.

· The Supreme Court was shut down with an anthrax scare the day after the constitutionally-challenged Patriot Act was signed by President Bush.

Technical aspects of the “anthrax attacks”.

It is well-known that there were two different waves of the “anthrax letters” with at least two distinctly different qualities of the actual anthrax material.

As you probably remember from the beginning of this Chapter the scientists who examined the material from the New York Post letter said it appeared to be a coarse brown granular material (only the letters to the New York Post and to NBC news were actually discovered – the rest of the anthrax letters were not found – they were only suspected because some people contracted anthrax).

Strangely enough, in the two letters to the Democrat Senators, mailed from the same area three weeks later there was a distinctly different kind of the anthrax powder – the “fluffy” one, which was acknowledged by many experts to be weapon-grade, since it was coated accordingly – to allow it to be used in an aerosol form.

Moreover, the quality of the “weaponization” was exceedingly high – it was noticed by the experts that the powder was almost devoid of any electrostatic effect, in addition to the rest of its highest qualities.

However, the actual strain of the anthrax bacterium found in both grades of the material was exactly the same. It was the native American strain named “Ames” first extracted from a deceased cow’s body by the United States’ own scientists in 1981 in Texas.

Since finding this particular strain to be especially virulent, it was considered to be nothing less than the new “golden standard” or “Base Template” for all anthrax variants and it was exactly against this particular strain the American scientists develop their vaccines.

This is however just officially speaking.

Unofficially – after allegedly destroying in 1969 all its previous stocks of the anthrax weapons – that time based on a less virulent strain of this disease known as “Vollum 1B”, the American bio-weapons manufacturers had secretly embarked on a mass-scale production of weapon-grade anthrax, but this time based on the newly discovered virulent strain named “Ames”. The US’ own bio-warmongers were greatly humiliated after the FBI’s findings following the 2001 Anthrax attacks forced them into various revelations.

Particularly – into admitting that even after 1969, when they declared to the world that the United States allegedly put an end to its biological warfare program – they secretly continued to develop even more dangerous stuff than before, thus effectively equalizing themselves with the rest of the bio-warmongers – those from the former USSR, WWII-time Japanese, Nazi Germany and, of course, with their beloved Saddam Hussein, Hafiz Assad, Mohamar Ghaddafi and Kim Il Sung.

What could be concluded from this particular finding, that both – the “crude” and the “weaponized” grades of the anthrax powder mailed as part of the 9/11 affair, belonged to the very same Ames strain?

First of all, it shall be presumed that this anthrax operation was not actually well-calculated and it was performed too hastily.

Why? Firstly, it shall be known that unlike nuclear weapons, which usually represent the very pride of any nation and are officially considered as the primary means of any modern full-scale warfare – on both strategic and tactical levels, the bio-weapons represent exactly the contrary – the shame of any nation.

Any nation that is unmasked as being a bio-weapons seeker will be traditionally put to the greatest shame. I guess it is clear to everybody why – from all possible means of fighting war, the bacteriological weapons are probably the most disgusting.

And particularly disgusting is the fact that these weapons are being conceived, developed, tested (often on people) and eventually deployed by medical doctors – who according to the common concept have their primary duty to save lives of men to the best of their abilities, instead of killing them on a mass-scale.

The general attitude of the public – including even that of the highest military generals, and even that of the most shameless secret agents from both – intelligence and counter-intelligence apparatuses – towards bacteriological weapons is clearly negative.

The developers of the bio-weapons are traditionally treated as contemptible guys – very similar to executioners, if not worse.

The bio-warmongers themselves, partly because of the high levels of secrecy surrounding their bio-weapons enterprises, partly because they know that nearly 100% of military and civilian officials look at them with disgust, also prefer to stand aside and not to mingle with the rest of the warmongers.

Considering all of this, we could probably imagine, that when some guys decided to go on a limited bio-strike against certain US targets – such as the selected media outlets and the Democrat Senators, they simply could not afford to involve any good specialists in either secret operations or in any other field, while some serious specialists were obviously required to make such an action look at least plausible, if not to say “beautiful”.

Normally, only a very limited number of people are involved in the development of the biological weapons, and these kind of people while they could be really good specialists in mass slaughter of bipeds, are not necessarily good specialists in planning of secretive operations such as sending anthrax letters.

The problem with the anthrax letters operation was that it was not performed by the appropriate specialists. It was performed by specialists in bio-weapons, but not by specialists in secret operations or in political intrigue. I think it is very obvious.

Most probably, it was first decided by certain politicians (or by their spin-doctors) to mail the anthrax powder with an intention to “confidentially” blame it on “evil” Saddam Hussein. Then some highly-trusted bio-weapons specialist was summoned to ask his opinion, and, after he answered positively, he himself was appointed to perform the entire operation.

This matter was too sensitive and too dangerous to allow any extraneous persons to be involved.

Firstly – a person, who prepared the actual letters, must wear individual means of protection (such as a gas-mask and an anti-plague suit, at least, if not a full “lunar-looking” haz-mat suit). Plus, he must perform a very thorough disinfection of the sealed envelopes outwardly (otherwise he must wear his haz-mat suit while dropping the letters).

Secondly – this person had himself to be vaccinated against anthrax. Otherwise it would be simply too dangerous to work with this particular stuff even if wearing the haz-mat suit.

Thirdly – this person must perform a thorough disinfection of premises where he has prepared these letters after finishing the job.

Just try to imagine that all of this could only be performed by an appropriate specialist who knew for sure what to do.

Such an operation could not have been entrusted to any FBI or CIA agent, because of its purely biological hazard. On the other hand – it would not be reasonable to create any large group to perform such an operation – let’s say to mix some secret agents together with bio-weapons experts into one gang. The entire operation was simply too dangerous and too sensitive to allow such a group to be created.

An operation of this scale – especially considering that this particular operation was extremely dirty in every sense – could have been entrusted to only one, maximum – to two persons, and both of them must have been from a bio-weapons enterprise, not from the FBI or from the CIA. That is exactly why this operation was planned not so well, and its performance was unprofessional to such an extent that the anthrax letters’ sender even managed to make those unforgivable stylistic mistakes as described above.

What the sender of the anthrax powder managed to prove to us?

First, he proved that he had access to the very source of the American bio-weapons production.

This is obvious because he demonstrated that he could obtain both varieties of anthrax material – the raw (not “weaponized” yet) biomass and the weapon-grade powder of the same strain of the anthrax bacterium.

Secondly, he proved to us that it was no one else’s, but the American product – based on the typically American strain, known as the most virulent one available to the American researchers. I guess, it is clear that no other country – such as Iraq or Israel, for example, would ever base their anthrax weapons on such American strain, because it is the very strain that Americans develop vaccine against, while the main purpose of any biological weapons is to strike an enemy who is unable to defend himself appropriately – by either a vaccination, or by antibiotics.

Anthrax weapons based on this particular Ames strain could only be the American ones. This is an axiom.

Third, the actual performer of these anthrax attacks proved to us that he himself was not quite sure what to do first – which is just a proof that this impromptu operation was not planned at all and no serious planner from any secret service was involved.

This bio-weapon expert upon receiving an order was apparently acting at his own discretion – he was the chief planner and the sole executioner of this unprecedented operation.

For this reason he afforded so many unforgivable mistakes:

- 1) He did not think that the Ames strain would be soon identified as the American strain.
- 2) He did not think that sending different grades of the same strain would be the hardest proof that the anthrax powder was definitely a domestic product.

He simply didn’t think it through hard enough to cover himself completely.

He probably thought only about how to properly disinfect the premises after preparing those letters with idiotic contents.

I guess all of it is pretty clear. While it was certainly the operation ordered by some of America’s own officials, none of the US secret services were involved in its planning or execution and it is very obvious.

Finally: why there were at least two different grades of the anthrax material mailed? I think it is quite easy to answer.

Since the planner and the executioner of this unprecedented operation was the bio-weapons expert alone, nobody could advise him how to do his job, because nobody except him understood about the biological stuff involved and its actual dangers.

That is why the executioner probably thought first that to mail the “weaponized” anthrax powder to his fellow citizens would be too cruel. Thus he decided to mail first a less dangerous material – the raw biomass.

However, later he (or those who ordered the job or both) evaluated the results and realized that it would not be possible to blame such a thing on Saddam Hussein as being a part of his alleged WMD (weapons of mass destruction) program – because the raw anthrax culture is apparently not a weapon. That is why they decided to repeat the attack – using definitely the weapon-grade anthrax product – and mailed this new stuff to the two Democrat Senators.

This time it began to look really dangerous, because the second product was obviously the high-quality weaponized one.

Inevitably the ensuing investigation SHOULD quickly establish the true origins of both of these products, as well as the fact that the local American strain of anthrax has been used in both cases – but the perpetrators probably did not even think about this prospect, because it is obvious that this operation was conducted by the amateurs, not by the professionals.

Another indication that none of the US secret services were involved in the anthrax attacks was the fact that the FBI (unlike in the case with the WTC demolition and the Pentagon attack where it was engaged in the most shameless cover-up from the very beginning) initially proceeded with its inquiry in regard to the anthrax attacks quite efficiently – quickly establishing many facts being not favorable to the US Government at all.

This probably is the best proof that the FBI itself was involved in neither planning, nor in the execution of the anthrax attacks. The attacks were obviously conceived in a very narrow circle within the US Government and the secrecy over this matter was so tight that they did not even dare to inform the FBI to the effect that it should direct its investigative activities towards some other group than the United States' own bio-weapons manufacturers.

As a result of such an attitude of the scared US officials the FBI promptly established that it was nothing else than an inside job.

Since then, as it could be sincerely expected, the scared US officials had no choice than to “secretly” inform the FBI of their involvement and the investigation had quickly arrived to the dead end.

The crime remains officially “unsolved”. But unofficially it is very clear who ordered this crime.

June 2008,
Bangkok.

P.S.

Some update to this information has come on 3rd of August 2008 – when I have nearly completed this book. It appeared that the FBI did not really stop its investigative activities in pursuit of the real perpetrators of the 9/11 anthrax attacks. It was publicly reported that a certain Dr. Bruce E. Ivins, a bio-weapons researcher at the U.S. Army Medical Research Institute of Infectious Disease, died on Tuesday, July 29, 2008, reportedly by a suicidal drug overdose just as the Department of Justice was about to charge him with the 2001 anthrax attacks.

It does not mean, of course, that this guy is really physically “dead”– it may as well mean that he was simply given a new identity and re-settled within the frames of the notorious “witness protection program” – like an infamous nuclear bomber Timothy McVeigh or “famous” Barbara Olson who appears to be the only passenger of the cruise missile used in the Pentagon strike. But it definitely means that from now on you can be sure that this heinous crime will remain unsolved forever.

And an additional confirmation to this sad fact came 2 years later when an infamous book by the former US President George W. Bush “Decision Points” was published in the late 2010.

In an endnote* to the Chapter 6 (“War Footing”) Mr. Bush claims: “...* In 2010, after an exhaustive investigation, the Justice Department and FBI concluded that Dr. Bruce Ivins, a U.S. government scientist who committed suicide in 2008, had executed the anthrax attack alone...”

Yes, unfortunately, as Kerry Lynn Cassidy from “Project Camelot” puts it⁴³³: “The Lone Gunman theory is an American favorite piece of misdirection to make sure the true conspiracy never sees the light of day...”

Anyhow, the realization of the fact that the 9/11 anthrax attacks (allegedly carried out by a “lone bio-gunman”) were based primarily on the American-made anthrax culture and therefore could not have been blamed on Saddam Hussein did not prompt any high-ranking US official to object to the ridiculous war against the innocent Iraqis under an official pretext of searching for the alleged “weapons of mass destruction”.

P.P.S.

On January 9, 2011, I published the above information in a form of an article on the web site “Veterans Today” here: <http://www.veteranstoday.com/2011/01/09/72207/>

As it could have been sincerely expected, the article caused an utter dismay in certain U.S. circles, because it appears that before the humble author of these lines nobody has ever tried to present the anthrax attacks in such a manner.

⁴³³ http://projectcamelotproductions.com/interviews/viktor_bout/911_viktorbout.html

As a result of that article, the FBI was forced to promptly review the results of its own official inquiry. It was obliged to abandon their previous admissions about the “weapon quality” anthrax material that was used in the perpetration (as used to be described in the abovementioned Wikipedia article of 2008). The FBI hurriedly stated that the “second inquiry” allegedly “revealed that the anthrax material was of a non-weapon quality”.

Moreover, the FBI went as far as to question the then already “proven truth” regarding the claim that “late” U.S. bio-weapons expert Bruce Ivins was the perpetrator.

An official statement of the FBI after my article was not exactly intelligible. However, it was possible to draw a firm conclusion from it – the article indeed seriously undermined the position of the U.S. Government on the anthrax issue and from now on its spin-doctors would work on a new explanation in regard to the attacks.

Moreover, as a result of such an alternation in the official position, ex-president George Bush Jr. began to look like a liar – since his already published book contains information that contradicts a new story of the FBI (that is yet to be published).

Meet the “main culprit” of 9/11: Mike Harari.

Here, I finally arrived at the most intriguing part of this book that has something to do with me personally. Even now I am not quite sure why this happened particularly with me and not with anyone else, and so far I can only guess about the true intentions of those who so meticulously planted that matter on the humble author of these lines.

The basic premises (with the benefit of hindsight) could be described as follows:

“Someone” wanted me, the humble author of these lines, Mr. Dimitri Alekseevich Khalezov, the former officer of the Soviet Special Control Service, to publish something explosive (like this book) where I would explain that there was a special nuclear demolition future built-in into the World Trade Center’s Twin Towers, and I was to blame everything on the Israelis, and, by extension, on the Jews.

In order to achieve this, this “someone” did his real best:

1) To make sure that I did not forget that the WTC Twin Towers indeed had the built-in nuclear demolition scheme. In fact, I did not need this reminder, because even without it I would not forget this. The nuclear demolition idea of the WTC was so shocking when I first learned about it in the ‘80s, that I would not forget it in any case, especially being reminded of this in a “natural” manner – by the very fact of the WTC collapse, coupled with the “ground zero” name awarded to the spot. Nonetheless, some folks made sure to remind me of this fact, perhaps, not being sure if I indeed knew about it or if I still remembered that. Moreover, they did this before 9/11.

2) To introduce me to none other than the most important of all of Mossad’s operatives, who was, moreover, a complete scoundrel, and was well-known as such (at least, to serious people) all around the world.

3) To make me a good friend of the above scoundrel, despite a big difference in age, and despite a considerable difference when it comes to our views on life.

4) To make me involved in multiple conversations with the above scoundrel regarding nuclear weapons in general and the nuclear demolition scheme of the World Trade Center in particular; moreover, prior to 9/11.

5) To make sure that I would not miss to notice the Mossad’s involvement in execution of the 9/11 project.

6) To create for me a lot of personal troubles, as well as a lot of business problems, afterwards, which I would inevitably attribute to the Mossad (because they were indeed created by the Mossad’s folks), and so – to make me very angry and willing to retaliate against the Mossad (and, by extension, against the state of Israel and against the Jews in general) in the worst possible way.

7) To encourage me to retaliate (particularly by publishing my version of the 9/11 story and of the supposed “Jewish” culpability).

8) And to even supply me with a couple of additional pieces of important 9/11 evidence, which would be unlikely for me to discover on my own.

No, do not get me wrong, please – nobody approached me directly and told me something like “hey, Dimitri, here is some evidence that the 9/11 researchers would die for, please, take it free of charge and publish it in a form of the book, accusing the Israeli Mossad and the Jews in general as the culprits; this will make you famous and will generate a lot of income”. It was not so. They did everything in a very indirect way that supposed to look “natural” for just almost any and every man on the street. I supposed not to notice the game either, since the entire setup was based on the “standard” presumption that I was just “normal” – i.e. typically “vengeful”, “greedy”, and “vainglorious”, while being not enough cynical and not enough observant.

The point, however, is that I am not vainglorious at all and am not greedy either; so I have almost no in-born incentives to publish such a thing as the 9/11 revelation they envisioned. And when it comes to the vindictiveness, while I do believe that vengeance must be exacted in any case, irrespectively of the cost, because an ability to retaliate makes the difference between a human and a slave (and I am a human, indeed), I do not believe that the vengeance could be wreaked based on any emotions. Thus, I do not believe that a Homo sapiens should retaliate while being angry. He has to overcome his emotions, to begin with. From my childhood, I was taught that when you have a sudden desire to hit someone, you have to slowly count to ten and only after that, if the desire did not disappear, and the reason supported it, proceed to the actual hit. Moreover, I believe in the well-known conventional wisdom that sounded like “a vengeance is akin to a dessert; so it must be served last and in a chilled form”. Another point is that I am exceptionally cynical and quite an observant person – well above average – and this enabled me to notice their actual game. So, an apparent lack of some supposed qualities and an excess of some other qualities obviously made the personality of the humble author of these lines not suitable for the role designed. In fact, I am just too free and too proud to play any “role”. I would not play it even for big money, and neither would I play it for free, being supposedly driven by my “anger”. Such tricks do not work with me.

So, this is to conclude: some folks (I call them “the so-called good guys”) attempted to make me their tool who would reveal the shocking story of Twin Towers’ demolition and accuse the Israelis and the Jews of doing so. However, I am not going to do it. I am not someone’s tool, after all, but a free man, a human, and God’s slave. Therefore, instead of concentrating on the supposed “evil nature of the Jews”, I preferred to concentrate on the supposed penetrating capabilities of aluminum – a blow, which the so-called “good guys” did not expect from me at all.

My explanation above, perhaps, sounds rather chaotic, but I hope you got its main point.

Now, here is the actual story.

I did not live in Bangkok, Thailand, initially. After the collapse of the Soviet Union, I settled in Kuala-Lumpur, Malaysia, and I spent almost 5 years there; moreover, I was quite OK there. I had a lot of business there, dealing with various electronics and with Japanese-made wrist-watches that could be bought in Singapore and Hong Kong and sold in the former Soviet Union with a substantial profit, as well as with precious stones (that could be bought cheaply in Cambodia, since kind uncle Pol Pot was still controlling sapphire- and ruby mines those days). In addition, I controlled a few more businesses of the criminal- and the semi-criminal nature that generated some profits too.

The problem, however, was that I could not leave the Russian Federation officially, on my own name, because of the secrecy associated with my former military service. I used to have the highest security clearance (the so-called “first form of access”⁴³⁴) and was supposed to be bound to the Soviet territory for at least 10 years. There was some temporary lax in the years 1991-1992, conditioned by the supposed “democratization” of Russia and by the collapse of the former Soviet security apparatus, but that was quickly amended. By the year 1993, to travel abroad for people with such security clearances as mine was no longer possible. This meant that officially I would not have a chance to travel until at least the year 2003; perhaps, the restriction could be even extended beyond that. Understandably, I could not reconcile myself with such a prospect, especially because I had never served the country named “Russian Federation” and did not owe it anything. I did not even recognize the “Russian Federation” as a legitimate entity and felt the least obliged to this recently proclaimed creature, moreover, an officially bourgeois one. I was brought up as a convinced Communist (in fact, I was so much convinced that I even refused to join the official Communist party because I did not believe it was genuine enough), and so I perceived the recent political changes in Russia as the worst kind of whoring. In fact, I was a Soviet citizen, or to be more precise, the “Soviet serviceman”, and nothing appeared to me legitimate after the Soviet Union’s disappearance. Typical bandits and thieves appeared to me far more honest than the criminals at power who overnight turned from the so-called “communists” to the so-called “democrats” that became obedient lackeys of the West. Thus, once I quit the military service (it happened at the end of the year 1992), I ordered for myself some documents with another name and used them to depart from Russia. I still had a couple of old Soviet passports issued for my own name too, including even service- and diplomatic; the last Soviet “citizen’s” passport of mine was issued in 1993 (I managed to get it via some trick). However, I rarely used them, because the Soviet passports needed visas to every country those days, and their pages would quickly end up because of multiple stamps and visas, while to get a replacement (in my particular situation) was impossible. So, while abroad, I used bogus passports almost all my life. To obtain and to use a high-quality bogus passport in the mid-’90s was easy and I least bothered obtaining a genuine one.

Due to my personal dependency on the supply of such documents, I naturally developed certain connections with groups capable of procuring them. Since the Mossad is well-known as the “number one” documents forger and the biggest forged documents supplier in the world, and most of such groups are naturally related to the Mossad. Intriguingly, all document forging gangs in the world (even those of a purely criminal nature, unrelated to any secret services) use the Mossad’s terminology in their business – such as they call a high-quality forged blank of a document “number two”, while a registered document, suitable for changing its holder’s photo, as “number one”; they use other typical Mossad’s expressions as well.

Finally, this state of affairs led to where it should lead – to my acquaintance with some of the Mossad’s operatives. I will drop the details here, because they are not too important and are not very interesting. The importance is that once some folks from the Mossad (and, by extension, from the Freemasonic sect, because the Mossad is merely a branch of the latter and not that of the Israeli Government as it supposes to be) noticed the humble author of these lines, they decided to make some use of him. However, they could not use me in Malaysia, because this formally Muslim country (that was, moreover, officially anti-Israeli) was not their base. Their base was Thailand, which for some not so clear reason wholeheartedly welcomed all scoundrels from all rogue secret services – be it the CIA, the FBI, the DEA, or the Mossad. Thus, some steps were made to lure me from Malaysia and to ensure that I would stick in Bangkok. This was made in the traditional Mossad’s manner – by offering some lucrative “business”, then by creating some trouble, so that I could not leave Bangkok, then – by sending needed folks to get acquainted with me, and so on. It is just boring to explain the details.

The point was that some folks needed to re-locate me from Kuala-Lumpur, Malaysia, to Bangkok, Thailand, and ensure that I would not leave Thailand anymore. And so they did. Of course, those days I did not notice any foul play yet and took that development just like a natural turn of events that could befall any mortal in This life. It was not before the year 2003, when I began to analyze the details and realized that the said “turn of events” was by no means “natural”, but the very deliberated one – i.e. it was just the work of the Mossad (moreover, assisted by some non-Mossad Freemasonic agents, in addition).

Anyway, as a result of the above, I found all my former businesses related to Malaysia, Singapore, Hong Kong, Vietnam, and Cambodia completely (and deliberately) destroyed. And next I found myself first in Bangkok, then in Bangkok’s prison (funny enough, for an attempt to assassinate a certain Mossad agent, who provoked me to doing so), and then, after the release from the prison (I won the case) – as a head of some new criminal enterprise, of which some folks from the Mossad were the partners. Everything was arranged in such a manner that I would not need to (and would not be even able to) leave Bangkok and would stick there for a long time. Intriguingly, at the end of the ‘90s, some shifty folks in Bangkok (apparently by the orders from the Mossad, because their connections to this organization were easily traceable) attempted to involve me into selling some nuclear materials. Moreover, they attempted it several times in different circumstances in the course of at least 3 years. Some of these folks were as low as petty Arab passport-forgers, while some others were as high as Thai Lieutenant-Generals. Those days I did not pay much attention to the nuclear terrorism, not like today, and these attempts did not look sinister to me – I just perceived them as a kind of potentially troublesome business that I did not want to touch. So, I simply refused. Only afterwards (I mean after the post-9/11 troubles) I realized what kind of “useful idiot” I could become for the Mossad if I touched those things, considering my apparent “criminal” profile coupled with my being a former serviceman from the nuclear directorate of the Soviet military...

Finally, not so long before 9/11, one of those younger Mossad operatives, by the name of “Hani Hammoer”, with whom I was particularly friendly, introduced me to no one else than Mike Harari – the longest serving deputy chief of the Mossad.

A formal pretext for the introduction was this. I always lacked a genuine passport; as I have told you, almost all my life I used only the forged ones. Using them was more or less easy in the mid-‘90s. However, after the infamous 1998 mini-nukes’ “car”-bombings of the U.S. Embassies in Kenya and Tanzania, on the anniversary of the Hiroshima bombing, to use forged documents became increasingly difficult. The so-called “good guys” put too much pressure on immigration services of all states in the world forcing them to put an end to the use of the forged travel documents and to impose other travel restrictions. New methods of documents’ checking were implemented, as well as new types of documents (mostly biometric ones) were introduced, while databases of issuance records were computerized and made easily accessible to the cops from different states. By the end of the year 1999, to travel on a forged passport was as dangerous as to play Russian roulette – the cop could verify a passport’s issuance record by instantly addressing a computerized database, even if it belonged to another state. This is not to mention that he now had special equipment allowing him to instantly distinguish the “number two” document from the “number one”, as well as to establish whether a photo of the “number one” passport was tampered with. So, when I was introduced to Mike Harari, I was told that he was capable of procuring some genuine documents, which would be legally registered in the respective state, and so would pass any kind of checking.

Thus, in April 2001, I was introduced to him.

Harari those days did not live under his own name. He was officially wanted by at least two states – by Norway for the so-called Lillehammer affair⁴³⁵, the infamous murder, of which Harari was the chief organizer, and by the United States for his being Panamanian dictator Manuel Antonio Noriega's deputy, also in the latter's drug business. In addition, Harari was also unofficially wanted by the United States (or by at least some serious folks in the United States' military). He was presumed to be behind murders of two high-ranking American officers – Colonel Edward Cutolo⁴³⁶ and Colonel Nick Rowe⁴³⁷ – whom he supposedly disposed of because they knew too much about his dirty business – involving drugs and illegal weapons trade. While Harari has never admitted assassinating Cutolo (perhaps, because our conversations had never turned to that point), he did not hide that he indeed arranged the killing of Rowe. In fact, it was the very reason why Harari was obliged to quit the Philippines, where he used to have a good business, and to relocate to Bangkok. So, understandably, after such “feats of arms” as the Lillehammer affair, Panama affair, and Rowe's assassination, Harari could no longer use his own name, especially outside of Israel. Therefore, by the time I knew him in Bangkok (I am talking about April 2001), he lived on a diplomatic passport of Guinea, issued on the name “Hadji Mohamed Hussein”, born in Jerusalem, Palestine. According to Harari, the said diplomatic passport was issued to him by his good friend – President of Guinea Ahmed Sekou Ture. An ostensible purpose of his staying in Bangkok on the diplomatic passport was to “make a research about conditions and the feasibility of establishing diplomatic relations between Republic of Guinea and the Kingdom of Thailand” – the mission supposedly entrusted to “Doctor Hussein” by Ahmed Sekou Ture. Notably, Harari did not have the actual citizenship of the Republic of Guinea. He had its diplomatic passport only – just like being a foreigner hired by that country's Ministry of Foreign Affairs to perform some diplomatic work. Instead, he had a citizenship of France, moreover, a genuine one, although made on the same bogus Arabic name, but I will explain more about this intriguing detail later.

Interestingly, the abovementioned alias of Harari involved his being no one else than a son of a former Grand Mufti of Palestine – the late Hadji Amin Al Hussein⁴³⁸, well known for his being a Freemason, and one of the top Nazi criminals (who's ostentatious and utterly ridiculous “fierce anti-semitism” and “pro-Hitlerism”, extended to all local Arabs, actually enabled the very creation of the state of Israel; it won't be a mistake to say that Hadji Amin Al Hussein did more for the creation of Israel than David Ben-Gurion). Another interesting detail was that “Doctor Hadji Mohamed Hussein”, despite being not just an “Arab”, but an “Arab with a doctoral degree”, could not speak Arabic. Therefore, he conspicuously avoided contacts with real Arabs and used English when talking to those Mossad agents who were posing as Arabs (I mean, in situations when he could not speak with the Hebrew openly). His Hebrew was perfect, though – the humble author of these lines used to hear several times his conversations with some Jews and none of the interlocutors appeared to have any difficulties with the Hebrew language. In addition, Harari could speak (as well as write and read) perfect English, excellent French, fair Spanish, some Portuguese, and, I believe, also some Italian, but not any Arabic.

Besides the Guinean diplomatic passport on the name of “Hadji Mohamed Hussein, born in Jerusalem”, Harari used to have a diplomatic passport of Uruguay, and a normal, “citizen's” passport of Venezuela on the same name. The latter one was the very pretext for our acquaintance – one of the Mossad's folks, “Hani Hammoer”, whom I knew for several years, told me that “his boss” was capable of procuring a fully registered Venezuelan citizenship, an ID-card and a passport inclusive, and he even made one for himself. When we met, Harari told me that he was indeed capable of obtaining some genuine citizenship, because of his personal connections with several Latin American presidents and other high-ranking politicians and showed me his own Venezuelan passport for a confirmation. He added that he could instantly make an Israeli passport too, but I answered in that particular one I was not interested – I merely needed some piece of carton to feel free to travel, and not a piece of carton that would make me a subject of some stupid state like Israel. So, initially we agreed on the Venezuelan one and he started to do it (at least, he collected from me photos, particulars, and some cash required to proceed).

For the mean time, we quickly became friendly. It is difficult to say now whether it was genuine or so designed. Although, our “becoming friends” supposedly was by design (considering all the circumstances and the consequences), some element of genuineness was also there. Harari those days was involved in a weapons-trade, particularly trying to buy and to re-sell some Russian-made weapons, and so he badly needed someone who could understand the weapons terminology in both – Russian and English. In this case I was indispensable – I knew English more or less well and had a military education, so I was naturally familiar with the weapons; unlikely, Harari could find anyone better than me in such circumstances. Soon I found myself being his permanent interpreter-translator. In addition to this, we were just friendly because we always had something interesting to discuss and it seemed to me that Harari was just bored in Bangkok – he did not have people to talk with. His younger subordinates were not interesting for him and it was pretty obvious; while other Israeli officials in Bangkok were simply too “official” to be friendly with him (although some of them, including the Israeli Ambassador, visited him at times). His local Chinese wife has already died by then (she died from cancer), and the only persons he could talk with were his 17 year old son and me. He had some girls also, at least from time to time, but he believed that women were stupid and suitable only for the bed, so he did not believe that he could have any interesting conversation with them.

Soon I found myself being invited to Harari’s apartment every day, moreover, several times a day – he often wanted to have with me not only a lunch and a dinner, but even a breakfast. To be fair, I would say that he was a perfect cook and he loved to cook – he claimed to even complete special courses at Le Cordon Bleu Culinary Institute in France. Thus, you wouldn’t feel sorry if you were invited to Harari’s lunch or dinner. Of course, we always had a lot of interesting conversations on various topics. I am not sure if Harari learned anything new from me (but it seems he did, because I knew quite a few things, despite being much younger than him, and it seems that he was genuinely interested to listen), but I could say that I learned from him really a lot. I knew many things, indeed, but I learned them little-by-little from various people. Harari was unique – I obtained the biggest collection of knowledge from a single man in his case. I learned from him more than I could be taught in a university. Luckily, we lived not very far from each other – my apartment was in walking distance from his, so I could reach his place on foot in merely 15 minutes, or on a motorcycle-taxi (the most common means of transportation in Bangkok) – in only a couple of minutes. Those days I used to rent an apartment on Sukhumvit Soi 16, while his was on Sukhumvit Soi 12 (people familiar with Bangkok streets arrangement certainly realize how close was it).

These two photos show an entrance to- and the actual tower of- the “Bangkapi Mansion”, located at 89, Soi 12 off Sukhumvit Road in central Bangkok. This was a high-class living building facing some beautiful lake, where Mike Harari used to rent his Flat 15A – a spacious 6-bedroom apartment with an enormous reception-room featuring two huge balconies on both sides, and including even a separate quarter for a maid (his building also had backstairs and separate lifts for servants – an arrangement that is no longer common today even for expensive apartments).

The dead end of this small road named “Sukhumvit Soi 12”, was known to be a highly protected Israeli secret services residential zone in Bangkok – where high-ranking Mossad’s and other Israeli officials and other VIP-persons could enjoy their security. Even the Israeli Ambassador to Thailand did not hesitate (in a sense of his security) visiting Harari in this apartment.

This place could be actually considered as being the “head-quarters of the 9/11 perpetration” – since Mike Harari was residing there before and immediately after the 9/11 events and had conducted from there most of his communications.

I myself also used to have keys to this apartment. He charged me with a special task: whenever he was absent – I had to feed the pigeons on his balcony every day (since Harari used to do it every day and he did not want those pigeons to miss their daily allowance). Besides, I was allowed to use his apartment if I really needed to, while he was not there. That is how friendly we actually were.

Mike Harari. Bangkok 2002.

What you see above is the rarest of all rarities. You would never be able to find any genuine photographs of Mike Harari, but only bogus ones. The genuine photos of this man simply do not exist in any open access. Starting from 1989, he was careful not to allow his photographs to circulate. Following the 1989 Harari's miraculous "escape" from the long hand of the U.S. Justice System extending to Panama⁴³⁹, he undertook an unprecedented step in regard to his photos. On his demand, the Israeli Government had requested ALL newspapers, ALL news agencies, and ALL other institutions all over the world to search and to return to the state of Israel absolutely ALL available photos of Colonel Mike Harari. That request, however odd, was honored. Apart from some secret services, who apparently retain his photographs in their classified files, I am one of the rarest private individuals, who possess his otherwise "prohibited" photos – I have at least five high-quality ones. I was able to obtain them, thanks to the fact that, being younger, I was much more familiar with computers than an old man like Harari, and he always asked me to act as his "computer-man" – to type, to send, to receive e-mails, to repair his hanging computers etc. Sometimes, I used my own notebooks to check Harari's e-mails and to download or upload his files – in times when his own computers were out of order. That is exactly why I managed to keep several scanned documents and some digital photos – including those of Mike Harari himself.

Below is the only photo of Harari that was accidentally available on the Internet, when in the year 2006, I attempted to search for his photos. Here the "mentor" was captured by the photographer together with his "pupil" – General Manuel Antonio Noriega – the dictator of Panama. It seems that even this photo, that does not show much of his face, is no longer available on the Internet today. Harari is the one in dark sunglasses.

⁴³⁹ I am talking about the invasion of Panama by the United States in December 1989 aimed at the removal from power and arrests of both – Noriega and Harari.

HR G... Mr. Kolesari

Above is a photocopy of one of diplomatic passports issued to Mike Harari under the bogus Arabic name of "Hadji Mohamed Husseini" – an alleged "son" of the late Grand Mufti of Palestine. From the four alleged children written into the passport, only the boy (Aziz) was Harari's true child. The girls mentioned there were only his underage Filipina concubines from which he had written into his passport as his alleged "daughters" only to make it easy to export them from the Philippines (he used to travel to the Philippines from time to time even after his escape from there following Rowe's assassination, particularly for the reason of obtaining new concubines – for some not so clear reason he preferred Filipinas to Thais). Since this particular photocopy has been acquired from a fax addressed to me by Mike Harari, it also bears some additional handwritten request to me personally by Harari's own hand.

Next are two more photographs of Mike Harari (alias "Doctor Hadji Mohammed Husseini") from the personal collection of the author of this book. These were taken in Bangkok in the year 2002 when both of us – me and him went to a photo shop to prepare our photos for some new documents (after that, I returned to the shop and obtained the copies of the files, actually, doing so without any malicious reason in mind – I just preferred to have spare files of the photos for some potential future use; I did not even expect those days that my best friend would turn my worst enemy and his photos would end up in a book like this):

Above is a photocopy of Mike Harari's South-African passport under a bogus Arabic name – obtained ostensibly for a reason of making a covert trip to Switzerland and for opening some secret account in one of the Swiss banks. I used an opportunity to scan it when Harari asked me to pick up this passport from his subordinate, named "Hani Hammoer", who had obtained an entry stamp for it, through the latter's connections in Bangkok International airport (the point was that you couldn't leave a country unless you have an entry stamp confirming that you have entered it). His place of birth in the above passport is mentioned as "Al Quds", but in case you don't know it, "Al-Quds" is the Arabic name for the city of Jerusalem.

Note also, that in all of his four passports (he had the following ones under the "Husseini" name: Guinean diplomatic, Uruguayan diplomatic, Venezuelan ordinary, and South-African ordinary, and later it was discovered that he had a French one as well, though he hid that fact from me), Mike Harari always used his date of birth "08 November 1936". In reality, he was about 10 years older, and he looked also 10 years older than he claimed to be. His true year of birth was 1927 – as he himself told me, but his exact date of birth I did not know, because he has never celebrated his birthday. He ostensibly made himself "younger" because he claimed that it would involve technical difficulties in obtaining the diplomatic passport of Guinea if he were using his real age – allegedly because of the limitation of age for serving diplomats (I do not know whether this claim was true or not).

Funny enough, the claim of Harari that he was allegedly a son of the late Grand Mufti of Palestine, Nazi criminal Hadji Amin al-Husseini, also included his claim that as a small boy he stood besides Adolph Hitler in the famous photo of the 1938 Munich Olympic Games. Intriguingly, the small boy on that photo appears to be 10-11 years of age, so this particular claim corresponds to Harari's real year of birth – 1927, but does not match the year stated in his passports – because in this case, by the time of the Munich Olympics, he would have been less than two years old. However strange it might look or sound, nothing is impossible in This life – especially considering the rest of the strange things discussed in this book. There are hard reasons to believe that it was indeed young Michael Harari depicted together with Adolph Hitler on that Munich Olympics file photograph – but this weird notion is out of the scope of this book, so it won't be discussed here. But one has to know that Harari was always more fascist in his persuasions, than a Jew – that is exactly why all those fascist dictators of Latin America and Asia loved him so much; so nothing was really strange even if he were depicted with Hitler in his younger age. Actually, the younger years of Mike Harari are very obscure history – you would never be able to find any information on him whatsoever until before he began to operate for a new state of Israel after World War II in Italy and in France. When it comes to his own explanation, he told me that he could not speak Arabic, despite being born in Jerusalem, because he spent his entire childhood in Switzerland and Italy, and later also in France, where his father-Freemason, and a Nazi criminal, had sent him, so that he was able to learn only Hebrew and French when he was child.

I believe I should abandon the weird things such as speculations on Harari's childhood, before it is too late, and urgently return to the earthly affairs.

I think I shall inform the reader about some details on the personality of adult Mike Harari. Although he is well-known in Israel (moreover, being considered a national hero, occupying either the third-, or even the second position in the "heroic hierarchy" of this state – something below David Ben-Gurion⁴⁴⁰, but equal to Moshe Dayan⁴⁴¹ and Golda Meir⁴⁴²), he is little known to the outside world, especially to the younger generations, which have never been acquainted with his exploits in the '60s, the '70s, and the '80s. When it comes to the "official", i.e. "good" exploits of Mike Harari, you can read about them in the corresponding Wikipedia article⁴⁴³ (that conspicuously misses his photograph, and was recently shrunk by the Wikipedia's editors to merely a tenth of its former size). Some other articles may exist on the Internet describing his exploits – both "good" and "bad", but they are not too many, since there is a certain taboo on revealing any information about this man. However, some of details you would never be able to find. So, let me tell you what I learned from him and what I learned about him.

Although little known to the contemporary "commoners", Mike Harari is well known among an intelligence community as being the longest-serving deputy chief of the Mossad. While the formal chief of the Mossad is changed often – something like every 5 years or so, Harari occupied his position not less than 30 years

⁴⁴⁰ http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/David_Ben-Gurion

⁴⁴¹ http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Moshe_Dayan

⁴⁴² http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Golda_Meir

⁴⁴³ http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Michael_Harari officially, and, perhaps, even longer than that – unofficially. Thus, he knew about the Mossad's operations more than anyone else in the Mossad, anyone of its former chiefs inclusive. Harari is particularly well known to the CIA. It is because during almost 10 years he has been “on loan” from the Mossad – working for the CIA being definitely a “priceless specialist” in South-East Asian and Latin-American affairs (primarily in affairs of procuring heroin and cocaine respectively). During that period, he had even a diplomatic passport of the United States (though, not the U.S. citizenship). Moreover, he used to work for the CIA even while not being “officially on loan” – he just worked for the CIA whenever it was necessary (you should read an additional, optional part of this book named “A Big Lyrical Digression”, where there is an entire chapter devoted to the explanation how the CIA and the Mossad were created by the Freemasonic sect, what is common between these two organizations, and you will understand better why a person could work for both of these services at the same time).

Besides his positions at the Mossad and at the CIA, Harari is also well known for his being second-in-command⁴⁴⁴ in the criminal government of the then dictator of Panama – General Manuel Antonio Noriega (for which he has been also officially wanted by the United States' Justice⁴⁴⁵), as well as for his being a chief-advisor to Nguyen Cao Ky⁴⁴⁶ of South Vietnam. Harari is known also for his being an owner of the biggest insurance company in Israel⁴⁴⁷. In addition, he owns a lot of legal, as well as illegal, businesses in Panama, in the Philippines, in Colombia, in Venezuela, in the United States, in Saudi Arabia, in Israel, and in some other countries.

Ironically, thanks to the former KGB, which popularized him in the former USSR even more than the Mossad popularized him in Israel, Mike Harari became “indirectly” known to any and every citizen of the former Soviet Union who was born before the mid-'70s. He was shown to the entire Soviet Union several times in the '80s in the then very popular TV-serial named “TASS Is Authorized to Declare...”⁴⁴⁸ as one ⁴⁴⁴ Noriega used to refer to Harari as “my mentor” even in his official speeches; so many people believe that Noriega was actually the “second”, while Harari was definitely the “first” person in that criminal government of Panama.

⁴⁴⁵ Harari, as being a leading person in the criminal government of Panama, was indeed officially wanted by the U.S. Justice. At first, immediately after the Panama invasion, the American mass media declared that Harari managed to escape arrest, but was still being hunted for by American commandos, who overthrew the regime; on December 28, 1989 the U.S. Justice Department released an official confirmation that Mike Harari had been, at last, arrested and had been then held in the U.S. custody. The Israeli Government was also officially informed of the fact. However, only 3 days later Harari had been released under some incredible excuse; his “pupil” Noriega was charged in the U.S. Court alone.

⁴⁴⁶ Air Vice-Marshal Nguyen Cao Ky was a commander of the South-Vietnam Air-Force during Second Indo-China War; besides, he also used to serve as a Prime-Minister and then a Vice-President of South Vietnam. After an escape of President Thieu to the USA, for the remaining 10 days before the fall of Saigon, Nguyen Cao Ky remained the last official President of South Vietnam. It is no longer “politically correct” to mention his name in connection with any drug-trade; but some older people might still remember that he – together with Mike Harari and his protectors from the CIA – managed to organize the biggest drug racket of the 20th Century, which continued for many years. He used military jets of the South-Vietnam Air Force to fly to secret refineries inside Laos and even directly to the Golden Triangle and to bring back tons of heroin, which was further shipped to the United States using the CIA's channels.

⁴⁴⁷ One of the rarest accounts on Mike Harari was provided by Victor Ostrovski – a famous Mossad defector, who mentioned some of Harari's activities in his book “By Way of Deception” (the book that is near impossible to find in English nowadays; I was able to find its Russian and Spanish translations only): this included an incident with about two tons of heroin delivered by an Israeli military plane from Bangkok to Panama; however, Ostrovski had spent with Harari a maximum of 30 minutes during his entire life, therefore, he did not know much about him. The author of these lines was more “fortunate” – he knew Mike Harari closely for 3 years.

⁴⁴⁸ http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/TASS_Is_Authorized_to_Declare... “TACC уполномочен заявить...” this is the exact name of that popular TV serial in Russian language. In that quite transparent TV-hint the former KGB managed to “politely” (without offending the USA too much) show the Soviet public extremely dirty methods of the American CIA. Although the abovementioned Wikipedia article described the movie as a “spy fiction”, in reality all events shown in it were based on real facts and its actors played really existing personalities. The movie's characters/places had the following equivalents: “General Ogano” – General Noriega (even the actor's face expression was made to match that of Noriega). The fictional city of “Luisburg” was nothing else than the Colombian capital Bogotá. The fictional “neighboring state of Nagonia” was the neighboring state of Panama. The fictional Soviet traitor “Serguei Dubov” a/k/a “agent Trianon” was a prototype of the well-known real Soviet traitor Alexander Ogorodnik (http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Aleksandr_Dmitrievich_Ogorodnik), whose CIA's code-name was indeed “Trianon”. An attractive Colombian female, “John Glabb's” mistress, which the CIA used to lay under of the most shocking movie's personages named "John Glabb", where his role was played by a popular Georgian movie actor⁴⁴⁹.

Harari is also known to some people as one of the biggest illegal weapons trader. He used to supply large quantities of weapons, in circumvention of embargoes, to Kurdish, Sudanese, and Tamil separatists, as well as to Khun Sa's drug army at the Golden Triangle, and to countries such as Algeria, Libya, Iran, and Nicaragua. He is also well-known as one of the biggest remaining drug dealers of the modern times, capable of supplying a couple of tons of heroin or cocaine at a time.

He is also known for his personal involvement into several scandalous political assassinations. The most commonly known among them are the so-called "Lillehammer affair" – a murder of an innocent Moroccan waiter in front of his pregnant wife in 1974 in Norway. Another was the so-called "Letelier case" – a double murder in Washington D.C. in 1976. In that case a booby-trapped car of a former Chilean Minister Orlando Letelier was blown up in the middle of a busy street. Letelier was killed along with his American female companion, who was pregnant. This is not to count the abovementioned assassinations of the two U.S. Colonels – Edward Cutolo and Nick Rowe. Since we were very friendly and he was quite frank with the humble author of these lines, Harari told me once that during his life he assassinated altogether 28 persons.

Harari also claims credit for stealing of a nuclear bomb from a British destroyer⁴⁵⁰ the HMS "Sheffield" during an armed conflict between the UK and Argentina over Falkland Islands in 1982. This allowed Israel to launch its Uranium-based nuclear weapons project using the nuke stolen by Harari as an example to follow (prior to this, all Israeli nuclear weapons were only Plutonium-based). Moreover, Harari claims credit for organizing the entire Falklands war – the true cause of which so far has not been even established officially⁴⁵¹.

"Dubov" in order to blackmail him in that movie, used not even any fictitious name, but her real one – Pilar (in real life – Pilar Soares Barcala). Of course, the deputy chief of the CIA station in "Luisburg", that used the factious name of "John Glabb", was no one else than Mike Harari, because it was indeed Harari, being on-loan by the CIA from the Mossad, who occupied that position in Bogotá in reality at that moment. In that movie "John Glabb" is shown as a desperate adventurer and a notorious high-scale drug dealer, moreover, with Nazi connections, despite his being a Jew (and for this reason being played by a specially selected "Jewish-looking" actor). The CIA's director (suggested in the movie to be no one else than George Bush Senior, a good friend of Mike Harari in reality) is shown as cherishing scoundrels such as "John Glabb" and "General Ogano" and obstructing "honest" CIA's officials. "John Glabb" is shown as making huge personal investments into the cocaine production and desperate to bring to power in the neighboring "Nagonia" his friend "General Ogano", so that they can embark on a large-scale cocaine delivery via the CIA's channels, using "Nagonia" as their base. So, the actual plot of this supposedly "factious" movie perfectly matched the real state of affairs – by the year the movie was shown on Soviet TV, General Noriega and Mike Harari had already grabbed power in neighboring Panama and turned this country into the major distribution point of Colombian cocaine (as well as of heroin from the Golden Triangle).

⁴⁴⁹ KGB had for this particular role Vakhtang Kikabidze selected – a popular Georgian actor with quite an "exotic" middle-Eastern appearance; due to his appearance, he would never be employed to play any "European"; such a choice of the actor selected to play the role of the CIA operative should have enhanced a "transparency" of a "hint" that the real person whose role he was playing was indeed a Jew, and not an American.

⁴⁵⁰ HMS "Sheffield" was "unexplainably" abandoned by its crew after being hit by an unexploded "Exoset" missile, which had caused a minor fire and relatively minor mechanical damage; the empty destroyer had drifted in high seas over five days; as a result the only nuclear weapon on board – an atomic anti-submarine bomb – was stolen. After being eventually "found", the destroyer, which managed not to sink on its own – during its being unattended for five days in stormy weather, "unexplainably" and quickly sunk during an attempt to tow it to the British naval base.

⁴⁵¹ In reality, it is not known what the real reason behind the 1982 armed conflict between UK and Argentina was. It seemed to lack any reason to many people. The UK Parliament had even a special inquiry board appointed, which was charged with establishing the true cause of the Falkland war. However, even after such an inquiry its true cause still remains a mystery up to this day. It is believed, though, that this entire conflict was instigated by Mike Harari, who was then very influential in Argentina, with only one reason in mind: to create an opportunity to steal nuclear weapons. The conflict itself actually begun like this: Argentinean workers, who were definitely paid by "someone", lowered the British flag on one of the small islands and hoisted the Argentinean flag, instead. Understandably, such an action prompted the British Governor to send some troops to that island to restore both flag and order. On the next step, "someone" had provoked a fight between the Argentinean workers and the British troops. Simultaneously, "someone" had provoked the Argentinean military to send its regular army, allegedly "to protect" the workers from the "abuse". Then "someone" had provoked an exchange of fire between the Argentinean and British troops which Despite his official work for the Mossad (he was indeed the Mossad's deputy chief for 30 years), Harari's course of life had very little to do with the course of the state of Israel. It had more to do with the course of the world's narcotraffic.

Not surprisingly, once the American CIA kicked out the French Deuxième Bureau from the latter's heroin business in Saigon and took that business over, Mike Harari (who was previously associated with the French) found himself associated with the CIA, particularly in Saigon. He was no one else those days than the chief-advisor to Nguyen Cao Ky⁴⁵², who was known as the largest drug dealer of the century officially acknowledged as such in the "politically incorrect" '70s – when certain official organizations still called a spade a spade (it shall be mentioned, for the sake of clarity, that Khun Sa had not grown into his prominence yet, so Cao Ky apparently eclipsed him).

When Saigon fell to the North Vietnamese, Harari immediately relocated to Thailand – to organize a new delivery rout of heroin from the Golden Triangle. Not surprisingly, the private army of Khun Sa⁴⁵³, who became the de-facto ruler of the Golden Triangle, was armed by weapons produced in remote Israel, and trained by military instructors who also arrived from far distant Israel. Almost immediately after the fall of Saigon, Khun Sa's army suddenly grew in numbers, reaching over 20,000 men (it used to be a mere few hundred before), and he relocated the capital of his drug-empire, along with his private army, to the sovereign territory of the Kingdom of Thailand, settling in the Thai village of Ban Hin Taek⁴⁵⁴ where he would spent almost an entire decade. Perhaps, it is hard to understand what it meant in political terms, but it's rough equivalent would be as follows. Let's say, a certain Mexican drug-lord, together with his private army (sized of something like ten infantry regiments), would cross over into Texas, where he would occupy some town, turning it into his "capitol", right on the U.S. sovereign territory, and would start officially distributing his cocaine from this "capitol" of his.

Harari, of course, supervised all of it, and organized things in such a way, that heroin would now pass through Thailand, instead of South Vietnam, on its way to the United States. Even when Khun Sa was kicked out from Thailand in 1982, under the intense pressure of the American DEA⁴⁵⁵ (which had different views on the boldness of the drug trade, other than the American CIA), Harari's business in that area did not stop. Khun Sa merely relocated his "capital" across the border, settling in the nearest Shan town of Homong (also spelled "Hua Muang"), and continued his usual business, sending his heroin to Thailand, where Harari and his business-partners from the Thai military and the Thai police would pick it up for the further distribution. The major part of heroin, as before, was sent via the CIA channels to the usual destination – the United States. Some smaller portions were sent to Australia, Europe, Japan, and elsewhere. Harari, in fact, had such good relations with all drug-suppliers of the Golden Triangle (both – Khun Sa and the remnants of KMT⁴⁵⁶) that he even married one of their women (despite her being 40 years younger than him). His last wife was Chinese, from the folks who ran the Golden Triangle's heroin quickly escalated into a full-scale war – to the extent that the British even decided to bring with them an atomic anti-submarine bomb.

⁴⁵² http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Nguyen_Cao_Ky

⁴⁵³ http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Khun_Sa Khun Sa (born "Chang Chi-fu" or "Zhang Qifu") – a well-known high-profile drug-lord – who is considered to have been the main heroin producer of the 20th Century. He also was an owner and a commander of then the largest and the strongest private army in the Golden Triangle, which was trained by Israeli military instructors and equipped with the most modern weaponry of the time. He managed to monopolize the opium- (and later also heroin-) production in the Golden Triangle, after wrestling the entire trade out of the hands of the aging KMT generals. Notably, the U.S. Government ignored him for decades. Only in 1989, following Harari's falling out of favor, and Noriega's arrest, Khun Sa was, at last, officially charged in New York court with trying to import 1,000 tons of heroin into the United States. It was a mere formality, nonetheless; no one in the United States really wanted him to stand trial and therefore nobody really pushed for his extradition. After his surrender to Burmese authorities in 1996, Khun Sa moved to live in Rangoon – a capital of Burma; he lived there in his nice house by the beautiful lake very peacefully until his sudden and unexplainable death was reported 28 October 2007.

⁴⁵⁴ http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Ban_Hin-Taek

⁴⁵⁵ "DEA" stands for "Drug Enforcement Administration" of the United States, a component of the U.S. Department of Justice – an agency whose official duty is to fight against any illegal drug trade.

⁴⁵⁶ "KMT" stands for "Kuomintang" – a ruling Nationalist Chinese party before Communist takeover; remnants of the KMT troops, which retreated to the Golden Triangle after the Communist offensive directed south, became the main assets of the CIA – since they were the first ones who were able to establish a high-scale opium production in Northern Burma.

It should be added that Harari was instrumental in derailing any attempt to halt the heroin traffic from the Golden Triangle through Thailand to the West. At one point, Khun Sa offered the United States- and the Australian Governments to redeem his entire yearly crop of opium (thus, relieving him from the necessity to refine heroin and to sell it after on the international market) at a discount price. Moreover, this initiative was welcomed by Nancy Reagan, President's Regan's wife, as a result of which even a special board was established to look into the feasibility of the deal and to conduct negotiations accordingly. This initiative was thwarted by Mike Harari, who did not like that idea at all and "torpedoed" the negotiations. In fact, it was no one else than Harari, an undisputable "top specialist in the Golden Triangle affairs", who was put in charge of organizing the actual meeting of Khun Sa with the responsible U.S. officials in one of hotels in Bangkok. Of course, he did his real best to ensure that the deal would not pass. Harari himself, however, claimed that the negotiations were frustrated not only because of the CIA's resistance, but also because of the position of the DEA officials, who did not want to lose their budget and eventually their very jobs, which was quite understandable. So, both organizations – the CIA and the DEA – requested him to prevent the disastrous deal. Harari was so proud of what he did, even in the year 2001, that he repeated that story to me several times.

Harari did not stay in Thailand all the time those days. He was just too energetic to stay in one place. Even by the time I knew him in 2001-2003, when he was quite old (75 years by then), he was still very active and would travel around the world almost every other month; so you could imagine how energetic he was a quarter of a century prior to that. Around the same time, he organized the traffic of cocaine from Colombia as well. To facilitate this, he was even officially appointed the deputy chief of the CIA station in Bogotá – exactly as was shown in the famous Soviet movie "TASS Is Authorized to Declare..." This culminated, as you probably remember, in the installation of Noriega's drug-regime in Panama and in various drug-scandals implicating the CIA, George Bush Senior, Bill Clinton, and Mike Harari in the drug-trafficking, which resulted in the infamous U.S. Government's decision to remove both – Noriega and Harari from power by the means of the surprise military invasion. After narrowly escaping his arrest in Panama (or, to be more precise, being quietly released by the embarrassed U.S. officials after his arrest), Harari relocated to the Philippines. However, he had to quit the Philippines also, due to the fact that his participation in the infamous assassination of the U.S. Colonel Nick Rowe became known to the authorities. Finally, he settled in Bangkok, where I got to know him.

Just to complete his portrait, I would put it this way: despite being considered by many Israelis as one of the Israel's most venerated heroes, Harari is also being considered by many as one of the dirtiest criminals ever trampling the Earth's surface. It might prove to be quite a task – to find another person on this Planet who could match the numerous "achievements" of Colonel Mike Harari.

Nonetheless, he was a very interesting man from whom one could learn a lot of things. It was always a pleasure to chat with him. You could discuss a lot of different topics, and I used to spend a lot of time with this man. As I have already mentioned, I was routinely invited by him for every breakfast, lunch, and diner, and we talked and talked about politics, military, intelligence, culture, religion, history, women, etc, etc, etc. I would say that this old gentlemen for some reason liked me and treated me almost like if I were his son, if not better than that.

I have to admit that I also liked that man – he was a truly charming personality and he also possessed some genuine human qualities that you could rarely encounter nowadays. He was by no means a slave like most of the modern so-called "good citizens". He seemed to be a real human in a full former sense of this word. At the first glance, you would think that you encountered a real Robin Hood of the 21st century – even though he was a well-known criminal (anyhow, Robin Hood was a criminal, too). Harari knew very well what was good and what was evil and he could always teach you how to be a really good guy in this life: how to value friendship, how to hate cops and their informers, how to treat women, how to help poor, how to protect weaker... Funny enough, he could even explain to you that to commit so-called "crimes" nowadays is not as evil as it might appear, moreover, the very deeds could, arguably, not be called "crimes", since they were not defined as such in the Holy Scripture. When you sell drugs you just help those useless junkies to die faster, moreover, if they won't buy drugs from you, they would buy them anyway, but from others. When you sell weapons to guerillas you help them to fight against imperialism. When you use a fake passport – you resist those who enslaved the descendants of Adam, since neither Adam, nor Eve had been issued with any identity documents upon their emplacement to this planet. When you sleep with underage girls – you just defy those who try hard to enslave men and subject them to women. And even you defraud some bank or an insurance company – even in this case you could still consider yourself relatively honest – because those financial institutions cheat others, so there is nothing really wrong if they share their unearned wealth with you...

Harari was quite frank with me and he told me a lot of stories about his participations in different secret operations, his service with the CIA and with the American DEA (he used to serve for them as well), his being a chief-advisor to Cao Ky, his business with former KMT Generals, with Karen leaders, and with Khun Sa, his friendship with President George Bush Senior, his adventures in Latin America, in Africa, in Kurdistan, and in the Philippines, in his participation in various scams, and many other interesting stories one could only dream to learn about. Frankly speaking, even after all bad things that had happened later, I still remember several good things I have learned from Mike Harari...

Anyway, this book is not intended to praise him so I have to stick here strictly to only bad things.

The point was that one day Harari "innocently" (in the course of some related discussion) asked me if I had ever heard about the emergency nuclear demolition scheme of the WTC.

Since I did not suspect anything wrong (and indeed it was nothing really wrong – it was a secret of the Americans, not of the Russians, so I had no obligation to keep that secret in any case) I simply told him that "Yes", of course, I knew about it very well. After that, we discussed the crazy nuclear demolition idea, just in a form of a chat, and exchanged a few jokes about it.

This happened before 9/11, of course, not after.

Continue on, dear reader, there is more.

Bangkok. Before and after 9/11.

Perhaps, the most intriguing events here will be presented in the least interesting format. I am sorry for this, but I just could not force myself to present them as really “intriguing” because I believe that they were merely a part of the game. So, I will describe them as a plain narrative.

Anyway, even considering that the intended game did not work with me (instead of accusing the Israelis flying aluminum planes through the steel as suggested, I preferred to accuse the Freemasons who made the digital planes), the contents described below represent an apparent interest from the point of view of criminology (I mean if someone knew about 9/11 before 9/11, it is something weird and it should attract the attention of the criminologists in any case).

About a week before September the 11th, Mike Harari called me and offered one of his TV-sets as a gift. He had at least three TV-sets (perhaps, even four) in his 6-bedroom Bangkok residence and I did not have even one. Harari used to visit my apartment a few times and noticed that an obligatory “zombie-box” was missing (he was quite an observant person, to give him his due). I answered him that TV-sets were not as expensive as they used to be and I could definitely afford to buy my own, without inflicting any major damage to my welfare, but I did not want to have one as a matter of principle. I seriously believed that the television was a dangerous cheating and I did not want to have any cheating device in my house. I told him the same thing I told the reader of this book – that I have never actually possessed any TV-set since I finished my high school, and I felt proud of it. Harari laughed and said that he also knew that the TV was cheating, but, nevertheless, I must accept his offer, because in only a few days I would have a chance to watch something really “funny” as he put it. He virtually forced me to accept one of his TV-sets as a gift – he even brought it to me in person. He rang the bell when his “gift” had been unloaded by his driver, so I could not refuse it in such a situation. I still keep that TV-set and if necessary I can submit it as a piece of evidence. In fact, the possession of his gift now violates my own principle of “not having a TV-set”; I do not watch it of course, and it is not even connected. If it were not from Harari, I would have thrown this “zombie-box” out a long time ago, but I felt pity to throw out this particular one – since this “Good Morning” Sharp, moreover, manufactured in July 2001, is indeed such a funny piece of the 9/11 evidence... I even suspect that Harari bought it especially for me paying for it from the Mossad’s operational funds, since he was a bit greedy to pay for anything from his own pocket.

This is how it looks:

One day before 9/11, Harari called me (we did not meet that day, as well as a couple of days prior to this, since he said he was very busy). This time he advised me, in case I had any big assets in US dollars, to immediately change that into some other currency, claiming that something “bad” might happen with the US dollar’s rate and it might happen any time soon. I did not have any “big assets” anyway, but, following his advice, 10 of September 2001, I indeed changed several thousand US dollars (in cash) into Thai currency. I had no reason to doubt his words or to ignore his advice.

On September 11, 2001, evening (Bangkok time; morning time in America), Harari called me and told to quickly switch on the TV-set he gave me and to see the show he promised a week ago.

Unfortunately, I did not bother even to connect an antenna to his gift. I did not have an antenna-cable either, because I did not keep such things. And even if I would find a cable and connect it immediately, I would still have to search for the needed channels. So, I had no choice than to quickly move out of my home to an Irish pub nearby and to watch the entire “show” there. I spent the entire night in that pub, watching on a large-screen TV every detail of the WTC attack, collapse, and listening to all statements released that night.

I was shocked, of course. But I was shocked even more when I went to Harari’s apartment on the next morning, because he called me and invited me to have breakfast with him as usual. It was not actually “usual”, because he started the breakfast maybe an hour earlier than usual (it seems that he did not sleep that night – exactly like me). That old man (he was born in 1927) was almost dancing in his room – so much happy he was with the events. Harari even decided to drink a bottle of some collection wine during that early breakfast. It was very strange of him because the earliest I ever saw him drinking wine was at lunch time. He was particularly delighted at seeing pictures of terrorized yuppies running away from the WTC before it began to collapse and commented that all his life he was only dreaming to see pictures of the “brave Americans” making off “like rabbits”.

Later in the same evening, September 12, 2001, I had learned from a certain Mr. “Hani Hammoer” – one of Harari’s younger subordinates in Bangkok, who actually introduced me to Harari – that the Mossad had done a very good job. None of the several thousand Israeli citizens who worked in the WTC has been killed, because all of the Jews had been warned in advance not to report to work on September 11 and luckily every one of them had paid heed to that advice. “Hani” made sure to inform me of this particular detail. “Hani” was also extremely happy with the events and it seemed that he was also celebrating.

Actually, many people (especially from the Mossad) later tried to convince me that Harari was innocent in regard to 9/11, and the fact that he knew about the 9/11 attacks in advance does not constitute any proof of his alleged involvement. He was a high-ranking intelligence officer and in this capacity he could easily possess some information that certain terrorists planned a major attack against the United States. As a kind of proof they even cited the fact that none of the Israelis were killed in the WTC because none of them reported to work that day, being warned in advance by the prompt action of the Israeli secret services that learned about the attacks in advance.

Well. This could explain to a certain extent that Harari advised me to change the US dollars into some other currencies prior to the 9/11 attacks. However, it would unlikely justify the sincere celebratory mood of Harari during that early breakfast on September 12. If an official “friend” of America, the deputy director of the Israeli Mossad, learns about the upcoming 9/11 attacks and prefers not to inform his American colleagues about that, and, moreover, when the actual attacks prove to be a total success he celebrates this success in the early breakfast, drinking collection wine at 7 o’clock in the morning and dancing, this says really a lot of his supposed “innocence”. And if to add here that Harari was also inquiring from me, however “innocently” it might be, about my (and that of the rest of my Service’s) knowledge in regard to the WTC emergency nuclear demolition scheme, this will probably say it all about his alleged “innocence”.

However, at the first moment, I was so shocked, so confused, and so mixed up, that initially I was not even able to draw any connection between the unexplainable WTC Towers’ collapse and that “innocently looking” Harari’s interest in my prior knowledge concerning the emergency nuclear demolition scheme. Only after some time, was I able to comprehend what really happened with the Twins. And still, it was not until several years later, when I realized that Harari’s and the Mossad’s involvement in the 9/11 execution, that was so blatantly obvious (and so unbefitting a serious secret service), was obvious for a reason – “someone” wanted to mask the real 9/11 perpetrators by offering the “evil Jews” to the gullible.

So, for the gullible, who think of themselves as “observant”, the setup should look like this: the “evil Jews” demolished the Twin Towers (a primitive version) or by a clever trick forced the U.S. Government to demolish the Twin Towers (an advanced version), and so forced the desperate U.S. Government (which, understandably, could not admit the truth of the 30 Hiroshimas in the middle of New York City) to blame the entire affair on the “Muslims”. Thus, the state of Israel was supposedly the one who organized the so-called “war on terror” (which, for the sake of honesty, should be called a well organized campaign of persecution against the Muslims – the perpetual enemies of Israel), moreover, organized it not at the expense of Israel, but at the expense of its usual patron – the American taxpayer.

So, for the observant gullible it should look exactly like this. But while we are indeed observant, we are not gullible. We are observant cynical. Aren't we?

I presume it is difficult for a lay person to comprehend that the Israeli Mossad is not a part of the Israeli state, but a part of the state-less Freemasonic sect (as well as the American CIA, though, which is also not a branch of the U.S. Government as supposed to be, but a branch of the Freemasonic Order). Therefore, I strongly suggest that if you haven't read it yet – read the optional part of this book titled “A Big Lyrical Digression” that is distributed free of charge and is allowed for free re-distribution.

For the mean time, Harari apparently felt that what he did prior to 9/11 and immediately after it in order to convince me (and not only me, but just anyone observant enough) that it was done by the Mossad, was not enough and some more “confirmations” were needed. Therefore, he arranged for me a couple of valuable gifts, that was supposed to emphasize that his agency “highly valued” my help in organizing the 9/11 project – apparently, in a sense that they found highly valuable the fact that I (and, by extension, the Soviet Special Control Service) knew about the existence of the WTC nuclear demolition scheme.

First of these valuable gifts was a Uruguayan diplomatic passport (Harari himself also used to have one). The passport featured several diplomatic visas to various countries; there was also an official Note Verbal to the Thai authorities included, requesting them to provide me with a Thai diplomatic visa also (it was issued, accordingly). Here is its copy:

Please, note the date of its issuance – it was 17 of September, 2001.

Although my actual surname was “Khalezov”, not “Kolesov”, Harari suggested that I should slightly modify it, because my own one sounded “Muslim” (it was indeed a Muslim surname, although I was a Christian in reality) and it was not “politically correct”, especially after 9/11, to apply for a diplomatic passport with a Muslim surname. Since I did not really care (I do not attach any importance to surnames and prefer not to be called by the surname anyway, as the most freeminded Russians do) I told him to change whatever he deemed fit. In addition, he also suggested that I should change my place of birth, as well as interchange my given name with my patronymic – because he suggested that I was too well-known and so should decrease my notoriety at least to a certain extent. I did not mind that either and told him to make it as he thought fit. So, he obtained for me the abovementioned passport (I drop the exact technical details here), which deemed to be a “gift from his agency for the invaluable consultation services provided in connection with 9/11”. In fact, it was not the last of them – I used to have two more Uruguayan diplomatic passports, in addition to the above one, in the later times, but the significance of the first one was in the date of its issuance.

The second valuable “9/11” present was an expensive collection-type large Navaja knife. Harari noticed that I loved weapons, knives in particular, because I had a few nice ones and even gave one as a gift to him, so he knew well how to please me. Moreover, he claimed that this particular one was from a personal collection of a certain famous Latin American politician. Here is its photo:

As you probably understand, all of these facts and gifts were supposed to cement my persuasion that 9/11 was indeed perpetrated by the Mossad and by the “evil Jews” and by no one else.

Notably, we had never discussed with Harari the matter of the suggested penetrating capabilities of the aluminum planes. Instead, he did his real best to convince me that the planes were real and were piloted by “trusted guys” (i.e. presumably organized by the Mossad). Moreover, both – him and “Hani Hammoer” attempted to convince me (not by plainly telling me so, but by their actions that I should not miss to notice) that the 9/11 “hijackers” allegedly travelled to the United States from Malaysia via Thailand, and that “Hani” was the one who actually supplied them with the needed travel documents and visas and provided for their lodging in Bangkok. At one point (before 9/11), he even found an “innocent” pretext to take me with him, supposedly to meet some folks about a certain business, and in a manner of “oh, I forgot something”, we passed some other location where he stopped to chat with some guys in Arabic. After that, he asked me if I knew who they were. I answered him that, of course, I did not know. He laughed and said that they were from “Al-Qaeda”, entrusted to his care.

After thinking a while, I believed that it would not be fair – to skip mentioning here some folks who arranged that setup, which led to my acquaintance with Mike Harari and the rest of the 9/11 story. These men really worked so hard, that not to mention in this book their names and efforts would be indeed unfair. They apparently deserved to be mentioned, because if not their efforts, neither me, nor you, who are my readers, would ever get to know about some interesting details of 9/11, which are being currently offered by this book. Besides the names, I also possess some photographs of several of those deserving personalities (unfortunately, I don’t have photos of all of them, but only of some).

So, here is the more complete story of my initial re-location from Malaysia to Thailand and the rest.

I was first “accidentally” approached in Kuala-Lumpur, Malaysia, by one former Soviet military officer – Lt.-Colonel Vladimir Anokhin, a former official of Soviet Chief Directorate of Cosmic Resources of the Defense Ministry, by then a Ukrainian citizen. With the advantage of hindsight, I could say that he looked and behaved like a typical Freemason, but those days I felt too relaxed (I mean not like “being on a war path”) and I took him for a genuine guy and our “accidental” acquaintance – for the truly accidental one without quotation marks. Later, I managed to obtain a photo of that guy, but, unfortunately, it was confiscated by the Thai police in 2003 and never returned. Anokhin was actually the one who invited me to Bangkok. According to the arrangement, while in Bangkok, I was supposed to meet a certain person

(his name bears no importance, because he was only a pretext). I arrived to the scheduled place at the scheduled time, but the man whom I was supposed to meet did not appear. Instead, some other people “accidentally” appeared at the same place and at the same time. Thus, I got “accidentally” acquainted with another Russian man – also named “Dmitri”, whom I met soon after my arrival at the cafeteria of the famous “Na-Na Hotel”, located in Soi 4 (also known as “Soi Na-Na”), Sukhumvit Road, Bangkok. That Russian man was not alone there; he was with one big Israeli businessman named “David Mense”, a fluent speaker of Russian. David was later found to be a senior Israeli intelligence officer. He is late now; he died of cancer I believe in the year 2004 or 2005. Interestingly, he lived in the same location as Mike Harari – at the “exclusive” end of the Soi 12, Sukhumvit Road (Sukhumvit, Soi 12, Asia house, No.95, Apartment 24, 3rd floor); even more interestingly, he had in his apartment the same set of furniture as Mike Harari had in his. There was a funny thing, associated with the late David. Almost a decade later, some “clever” folks from the Mossad sent to spy on me no one else than David’s son, being sure that I did not know him. I indeed did not know him, because we had never met before, but since he was an exact copy of his father, while his father’s appearance was quite distinctive, it did not take me much effort to unmask the entire operation and to make a mockery of that debacle, which additionally exposed to light at minimum 6 more previously unknown Mossad’s operatives.

It would happen a decade later, however. But for the mean time, these men introduced me to another man whose name was “Maher”. Mr. Maher was a well-known scoundrel in Bangkok (probably, the worst of all local scoundrels). He was known, among other things, for his participation in the infamous 1989 stealing of jewelry from Saudi King Fahd, popularly known as the “Blue Diamond Affair”⁴⁵⁷. Maher was a business-partner of Thai Police Lieutenant-General Chalor Kerdthes (who is now in jail for his participation in that jewelry theft and for some related murder). The two operated a joint overseas employment agency in Bangkok, the main aim of which was to supply Thai workers to Saudi Arabia. An actual thief, who secured work as a servant in the Saudi King’s palace and who stole the royal jewelry, was enlisted and sent to the Saudis by their joint company. Importantly, this affair led to the complete disruption of any relations (either business- or diplomatic ones) between the Kingdoms of Thailand and Saudi Arabia, and to the de-facto prohibition of rich Saudis to travel to Thailand and to make investments. You could only guess who the true beneficiary of such a development was.

Mr. Maher supposedly gave my telephone number to another man, whose name was “Nidal Islim” and who was permanently stationed in the Netherlands. Nidal especially came to Bangkok for one reason only: to get acquainted with the author of these lines and then to introduce me to another person; almost immediately after his task was accomplished, he departed back to the Netherlands.

Above: Nidal Islim (left) with the author of this book (center) and with Nidal’s driver sitting in the Bangkok Don Mueang Airport’s café shortly before Nidal’s departure back to Holland.

Concerning the above photo of Nidal Islim – I was not supposed to have it in my possession, because these people are usually careful not to leave their photos behind, but it was just a good luck that upon his arrival to Bangkok, Nidal managed to acquire a temporary Thai girlfriend, with whom he behaved more easily. It was Nidal’s Thai girlfriend who took that final photo of him at the airport shortly before his departure back to Holland; while I managed to get this photo from her later.

Nidal introduced me to a certain Mr. Kaleb (pronounced “Galeeb”) Hanaan – a well-known in Bangkok’s criminal circles as a documents’ forger and an illegal passengers’ sender (i.e. a so-called “human trafficker” in the modern politically correct jargon), who worked for the Mossad since his young age. Most probably, Kaleb Hanaan was not an Arab, but just a well-educated Jew released from the Mossad’s academy, taught to speak perfect Arabic, and capable to pass for an Arab. At least, by his appearance and by his manners he resembled a Jew, rather than an Arab. Moreover, he was always seen with Israeli women, and never with the Arab ones, which was just another indication that he was really a Jew. In addition, Kaleb was also a co-owner of a famous Israeli restaurant in Bangkok’s Kao-Sarn Road tourist area (have you ever seen any Arab who runs an Israeli restaurant? or any Jew who would come to eat in an Israeli restaurant run by an Arab?)

Of course, Mr. Kaleb always had an abundant supply of various stolen, blank- or high-quality forged documents – mainly passports, but also ID-cards, driving licenses etc. – all from the Mossad’s stock. Such a supply allowed him to be always ahead of any competitors in this trade. After his arrival to Bangkok from India, Kaleb Hanaan managed to quickly establish himself on the Thai black market and was considered to be the biggest and the most “successful” so-called “human-trafficker” at the end of the ‘90s. Every year he used to send hundreds, perhaps, even thousands of would be “political refugees” with fake passports from various Arab and African countries, as well as from Iran and from Pakistan, to European countries, to Australia, to New Zealand, to Canada, to the United States, and to Japan, using his unlimited supply of documents from the Mossad, as well as the latter’s good connections with appropriate figures in the Immigration services and in different airlines companies. If you want to know about the profits, here they are: a typical Arab paid over 20 thousand USD to reach America those days; a Chinese could pay much more – up to 70 thousand USD, and later – up to 100 thousand (the Chinese “refugees” were secretly subsidized by their Government, so they could really pay). An Iranian would pay up to 20 thousand USD to reach Japan. While a fake passport those days cost less than a thousand dollars, a ticket, and an entry stamp duly registered in the immigration computer – two hundred dollars. The rest was the cost and the quality of one’s connections with the immigration- and airlines’ officials who would facilitate the departure by closing one- or both eyes on the so-called “human trafficking”.

Surprisingly, despite being such a notorious so-called “human trafficker”, Kaleb Hanaan had never been disturbed by the Thai police, or by the U.S. law enforcement agencies, accredited in Bangkok, which were supposed to be extremely unhappy with his actual trade, especially after 9/11; instead, he always had a “green light” to operate.

Kaleb introduced me to his alleged “first deputy” – Mr. “Hani Hammoer”, whose name I believe was not genuine, because Mr. “Hani Hammoer” himself was not an Arab, but a well-trained Israeli, able to speak perfect Arabic language and able to successfully pass for an Arab. Even by his appearance, by his way of behavior, by his level of intelligence, by his scope of general knowledge, by his English, by his manners, by his operational training, and by many other slightly noticeable signs, “Hani Hammoer” did not fit at all into his supposed role (a poorly educated Jordanian, doing some petty criminal business far away from his motherland because of being “too useless” in his own country). He rather resembled a top-marked graduate from the Mossad’s academy. Even when it came to chasing women, “Hani” behaved with them in a typically Jewish way, which was distinctly different than an approach by the Arabs. However, unlike careless Kaleb, his formal “boss”, “Hani” was careful not to mingle with the Israeli women – he limited himself to the local ones. He did not run the Israeli restaurants either – he was careful to choose an Arab one for that reason.

Officially, Mr. “Hani Hammoer” was reckoned to be a manager of an Arab restaurant “Maedah” in Bangkok’s Pratunam area. “Officially” for some others – he was the “first deputy” of abovementioned Kaleb Hanaan – the biggest so-called “human-trafficker” of Bangkok (and, I believe, of the world). However, nobody knew what “Hani’s” real business in Bangkok was. Later, it was found that “Hani Hammoer” was in reality helping various “Al-Qaeda” members to accommodate in Bangkok, to extend their local visas, and then to travel further to other countries. He was also officially alleged to supply a forged Spanish passport for so-called “Hambali” (alias “Nurjaman Riduan bin Isamuddin” – the alleged leader of the so-called “Jemaah Islamiah” terrorist organization) in August 2003⁴⁵⁸. “Hani” himself claimed in this regard that this particular passport for “Hambali” was ordered by someone from the local U.S. Embassy, who stated that “Hambali” was “their guy”, so that “Hani” did not pass the ready passport directly to the hand of “Hambali”, but gave it to the man from the American Embassy, who placed the initial order. (In reality, however, there is a third version – that the “order” for Hambali’s Spanish passport was placed by the Thai police, tricked into such a thing by some clever Mossad’s set up, but this will be discussed in detail later).

Because “Hani Hammoer” was quite a pleasant personality, I became very friendly with him. Since I considered myself being a free-minded person, absolutely free from any modern slavish complexes, I did not really care about his seemingly odd “terror” connections. A couple of times, “Hani Hammoer” even showed me several of his clients, laughed and said that they were from the “Al-Qaeda”. It seemed that one of them even looked like Khalid Sheikh Muhammad, but it was a too long time ago, so I couldn’t be sure that it was exactly the infamous “KSM”. Anyhow, despite his connections with the so-called “Al-Qaeda”, and despite being officially wanted by the American FBI for his participation in 9/11, Mr. “Hani Hammoer” was still openly living in Bangkok as late as on March, 2009 (when I had seen him with my very eyes; but from other people I have heard that he is still available in Bangkok even now, in 2013).

An entrance to the “MAEDAH” Arabic restaurant in the Bangkok Pratunam area – located very close to the tallest skyscraper hotel – “Bayoke II”. “Hani Hammoer” used to be a manager in this restaurant.

“Hani Hammoer” who was supposed to introduce me to Mike Harari, preferred to do it in a rather round-about way. Although he never actually hid that Harari was his real “boss”, he attempted to put one man in between. Thus, he first introduced me to a certain Arab man, whose name was “Walid” (I can’t remember his surname, unfortunately, because I knew him for too a short time). This Walid used to live on a Venezuelan passport, despite being a Syrian. He stayed in Bangkok for quite a long time and had a Thai wife. All that I know about Mr. Walid is only that at the beginning of the Yom Kippur War he was a Syrian paratrooper sent on a mission to re-take Golan Heights and soon after an Israeli’s counterattack he was captured by the Israeli troops and then held as a prisoner of war for an unspecified period of time. I did not know anything else about his life or activities.

Walid was allegedly a client of a certain “Doctor”, the actual “boss” of “Hani Hammoer”, who helped him to obtain a Venezuelan citizenship. So, my introduction to Walid and consequently to the “Doctor” was deemed a kind of help to me, because I also wanted to obtain a Venezuelan citizenship for myself (I was recommended by “Hani Hammoer” to want that, to be exact – he managed to convince me that the Venezuelan passport would be a really good thing for me to have). Walid and “Hani Hammoer” jointly introduced me to the “Doctor”. During the introduction process, I noticed that the “Doctor” knew “Hani Hammoer” very well and the intermediation of Walid was not actually needed – “Hani” could have introduced me alone.

The “Doctor” was no one else, than Mike Harari. The rest of the initial story you already know.

Here are some photos of Harari’s subordinates and some of their documents:

What happened next to Mike Harari and to me?

Maybe a month later, Harari opened several companies in the USA and in some other countries, as well as several new accounts in Swiss banks, and began to do some business involving financial transactions (I do not know anything about their nature, but the sums transferred were substantial). I had some common business with him too (in which he managed to create for me a lot of troubles later, making sure that I would be very upset and would inevitably take revenge).

In the same time (as well as before 9/11, though) Harari was also involved into the creation of bogus pseudo-terrorist cells of the so-called "Al-Qaeda" and the so-called "Jemaah Islamiah" ("JI" for short) organizations in South-East Asia (in Thailand, Malaysia, Cambodia, and Indonesia). These bogus organizations were then successfully used by the government-controlled mass-media for stirring up anti-Muslim hysteria following the 9/11 affair and particularly after the infamous 2002 Bali bombing. I myself did not know anything concerning those activities of Mike Harari at the time of our close relationship and learned about them only 2 years later – from official police reports submitted to the Thai Criminal Court.

Slowly my relationship with Mike Harari began to cool down (although, the process was indeed slow and took almost two years). Harari also did not spend much time in Thailand and preferred to travel to different countries, so that in 2002 and 2003, I did not see him too often in Bangkok. In the year 2003, our relations became even cooler than before.

One of the last "business-ventures" offered to me by Harari was to establish a bogus "travel agency" in Bangkok that was to be at the expense of the American CIA and under its protection, and to use it as a front for selling fake passports and fake visas to different passengers from the Middle East and from Iran and Pakistan who desired to travel to the USA or to European Union countries, and in the same time – to pass all copies of such fake documents sold to them to the American FBI for a reward. Of course, I refused to participate in such a "business". It was the last time I spoke frankly with Harari. He asked me why I did not wish to do that business, because, in his opinion, it was a very nice venture, which, moreover, did not require any investment (despite his being very rich, he was quite greedy and never wanted to spend anything). So, I answered him that I was unsuitable for such an appointment – I still wanted to go to Paradise, not to Hell, while to betray the customer to a cop was something that God would unlikely approve. Perhaps, I should not have voiced such a thing, because Harari indeed believed in God and this made him think very seriously about his own life. He suddenly grew gloomy, and fell to thinking. After awhile, he came back to This world and told me he thought it over and decided that he had no chance to go to Paradise anyway; so, he had nothing to lose. He was indeed serious and frank when he said so. It seems that I managed to shock him when I forced him to think about the inevitable. Since then, we have never talked candidly, and soon we stopped to talk friendly either.

I also have to mention that even though Harari hated the Americans (or at least so he wanted to appear, because in reality he hated the British and preferred the Americans to the British) and the Americans themselves seemed to cease any relationship with him, at least officially, Harari continued to be quite influential within the CIA. He still had (at least, in 2002-2003) a lot of connections in this organization and was still capable of doing a lot of different businesses with the CIA people.

Harari also had good relations with the Thai secret services. In fact, his relations with the Thais were so good, that he could perform in Thailand truly incredible things, bordering on magic, which would never be possible in any other country.

This was by no means surprising, because the Thai "law enforcement" agencies were his business partners for almost three decades. Just imagine that since the fall of Saigon in 1975, almost 100% of the heroin from the Golden Triangle used to pass through the Thai territory on its way to the West. I hope you are a realistic person and understand that without the participation of the Thai secret services it would never be possible. This business continued more or less until the year 2003 or even 2004. The flow of Burmese heroin to Thailand began to subside only when the CIA switched to Afghani heroin. Thus, during almost three decades, the Thai secret services helped Harari to receive and to transport hundreds of thousands of tons of Khun Sa's heroin to third destinations, making enormous profits in the process. Harari, therefore, must appear to the Thais as a demi-god, nothing less than that.

The rest of the story about the so-called "terror", as well as about my personal troubles in relation to it, is in the next chapter. I hope it will be a bit more thrilling than the vapid narration of this one.

Operation “Black Magic” – “Hambali” and others.

At first, Mike Harari and his accomplices from the Thai police staged an operation bearing the truly mocking codename “Black Magic”. It was an “arrest” of so-called “Hambali”, alias Mr. “Nurjaman Riduan bin Isamuddin”⁴⁵⁹, supposedly an Indonesian national – an alleged leader of the so-called “Jemaah Islamiah” (“JI”) terrorist organization. This person was held responsible for the 2002 Bali [nuclear] bombing, but what was the most important – he was also held responsible for organizing a meeting of the would-be 9/11 hijackers in Kuala-Lumpur, Malaysia, prior to 9/11.

On August 11, 2003, so-called “Hambali” was allegedly apprehended in Ayutthaya city, Thailand.

Left: apartment building in Ayutthaya city, Thailand, where “Hambali” was allegedly living shortly before his capture 11 of August, 2003, with his wrong face insert by some news agency⁴⁶⁰. Middle: “Hambali” arrested as on the FBI’s “Ten Most Wanted” web site before ceding his place in the list to some new “wanted”. Right: front cover of “TIME” magazine featuring the face of so-called “Hambali”. This particular picture of him, hiding his face to the maximum possible extent, is considered to be the “standard”, the only one approved by the FBI and is the only picture actually available⁴⁶¹. This picture is available in only one quality, which is very low.

Why I use word “allegedly”? “Hambali” is “confidentially” known to many Thai police officers to have been apprehended in Cambodia, rather than in the Thai territory. Only after he was “arrested” in Cambodia, the Thai police, who wanted to get international fame and some financial reward from the Americans (“Hambali” cost the gullible U.S. taxpayer 10 million dollars that was secretly paid to the Thai cops⁴⁶²), decided to trade “Hambali” for 17 Muslims from Trad province who were then wanted by Cambodia. Those 17 Muslims were quietly apprehended (without observing any arrest-formalities and without informing the Thai Justice), and then – secretly exchanged across the Thai-Cambodian border with “Hambali”.

When the Cambodians gave “Hambali” over to the Thais (along with the two Makarov pistols, which were very common in Cambodia because of being armed with Soviet weapons), they sincerely believed that even though they were violating their own extradition law, they were still dealing with a real case of “terrorism”. And so it was believed by the Thai police who conducted that illegal exchange across the border.

In reality, that “show” was just a clever set-up arranged by Mike Harari, “Hani Hammoer”, and “Hambali” himself. It shall be known that Harari was as famous and influential in South East Asia as he was once in South America. Since Harari was almost as influential in Cambodia as he was once in South Vietnam and in Panama, it was not really difficult for him to arrange that unprecedented set-up. For example, Harari knew very well Norodom Sihanouk, the then King of Cambodia. He was close to him to such an extent that he even claimed to be the one who actually introduced his wife, now Queen Monique, to him (though, I could not verify this particular claim, there is a big chance that it was true, because although Harari was a bit boastful at times, most of the facts he boasted about proved to be true). Harari was indeed well-established in Cambodia – even better than he was once in Saigon. At the time I knew him, he possessed a very big mansion in central Phnom Penh, just next to the King's palace (where he usually sent his young concubines when he got tired of them in Bangkok), and he often travelled to Cambodia for various businesses. Thus, I presume, to convince the Cambodian police to “capture Hambali” and to illegally trade him across the Thai border was not difficult at all.

Once “Hambali” was on the Thai side of the border, “Hani Hammoer”, subordinate of Harari, offered to the Thais to produce a forged passport for “Hambali”. Otherwise, the Thai police could not make ends meet – they wouldn't have any proof that “Hambali” had indeed entered Thailand prior to his arrest.

The Thai police agreed, because they had no choice. “Hani” took one stolen Spanish passport from an abundant Mossad's supply of documents and replaced the original picture in that passport with that of “Hambali's”. After that, “Hani”, as usual, went to the airport and paid some petty cash to the Thai immigration officials (just something like 200 dollars) to get an entry stamp into Thailand. This stamp was registered in the immigration's service computer – showing that the holder of that Spanish passport had indeed entered the Kingdom of Thailand (to make a computer entry simultaneously with putting a stamp into a passport was always the part of the deal with the Thai immigration in such situations). It was done in a way that even the Thai police did not know in reality how this “Hani” managed to obtain such an entry stamp – because he used to deal with the Thai police and with the Thai Immigration separately.

Of course, those Thai immigration officials, who put the entry stamp into the newly obtained Spanish passport, did not know that they were in reality helping “terrorists”. They thought they were only helping some nice guy who always smiles and gives some small tips in cash (i.e. they perceived “Hambali” as just a regular “victim” of the “human-trafficking” gang headed by Kaleb).

Only after all of these manipulations, the Thai police were able to eventually come up with a story that “Hambali”, with his two Makarov pistols and a forged Spanish passport, on which he allegedly entered Thailand, had been allegedly “arrested in Ayutthaya city”.

As a result, Mike Harari managed to inform the other unit of the Thai police (which did not know the full story and knew only about the fact of “Hambali's” capture) that it was allegedly me, i.e. the author of this book – who supplied “Hambali” with that Spanish passport. Since then, the humble author of these lines enjoys an honorable status of being the principal supplier of travel documents to various so-called “Al-Qaeda”, “Jemaah Islamiah”, and so on.

During his publicized “arrest”, that took place in Ayutthaya city, “Hambali” held the above-mentioned Spanish passport under the name of “Daniel Suarez Naviera” (allegedly made for him by the author of this book – as the police claim now). Besides, in his trousers pockets were discovered 2 (two!!!) Makarov pistols – probably, the worst kind of pistols in the world, which would be absolutely unsuitable for any respected terrorist figure to be armed with. These two Makarov pistols (Makarov pistol is definitely not a kind of weapon available in the Thai black market) in “Hambali's” possession was another transparent “hint” that the humble author of these lines supplied him with the Soviet-made firearms also. It was generally believed then that I was the only high-profile Russian criminal in Bangkok available, so the “hint” was indeed very transparent.

After his “arrest”, “Hambali” was immediately (without being brought to any Thai court of law to request for his extradition) put on board of some “special” plane and quickly sent to America⁴⁶³. At least, so it was reported in the press, which unleashed after “Hambali's” capture an unprecedented campaign of anti-Muslim hysteria comparable in its scale only with the post 9/11 coverage.

This is how this extrajudicial “extradition”⁴⁶⁴ (or may be a “deportation”⁴⁶⁵?) of “Hambali” from the Kingdom

⁴⁶³ It was discovered later that in reality “Hambali” was sent to Jordan, and, through it, to Israel, and not to America.

⁴⁶⁴ According to the Thai law, any extradition is a criminal case and as such it could only be ordered by a final judgment of the Thai criminal court. Even if the extradited person agrees to the speedy “voluntary extradition”, and so to forgo the court hearings in Thailand, even in this case he has to declare it before the Thai judge and to sign the of Thailand to “somewhere” else was said to be:

“...Hambali was flown out of Thailand on a special US jet three days after his arrest. A convoy of cars took him to a remote section of Don Muang airport under tight security at night. All the lights were switched off in that restricted area of the airport, guarded by heavily-armed commandos. “Hambali was taken into the plane by foreign security agents and that was the last time I saw him,” said the senior police officer who took part in the secret operation from the very beginning. Intelligence sources said Hambali ended his journey at Guantanamo Bay detention centre in Cuba, as did his close aide and other JI man arrested at the apartment, but this could not be confirmed...”⁴⁶⁶

As you could see, both – the actual capture of “Hambali”, and his unexplainable sending in the total darkness to “nowhere” were in flagrant violation of the existing Thai law – either of its Criminal- or Administrative procedures, even if it were true that he was sent to the United States’ custody. In reality, however, “Hambali” was not sent to any U.S. detention facility, neither to Guantanamo Bay, nor to Diego-Garcia (not even to say about the poor U.S. Justice on the so-called “homeland”). Not many people know that after the described above “dark scene” in the “restricted” area of Don Mueang airport, “Hambali” was sent from Bangkok directly to Jordan, which was just the closest point to enter Israel – where he enjoyed his life at least until April 2007⁴⁶⁷, being protected by his Mossad’s employers.

Someone could probably become interested in such a practice of giving away captured criminals without even bringing them to the local court of law. Do you think it was really normal in the case of captured “Hambali” – just to put him on the plane and send him out of the Kingdom of Thailand without even asking any permission of the Royal Thai Justice? You are badly mistaken if you think so.

When someone is facing arrest in Thailand following an extradition request by another country, the Thai police have to act as follows: they have to appear in the Criminal Court and request for an arrest-warrant for that person. For this reason, the police have a duty to provide the Court with a comprehensive set of documents proving that the extradition request indeed exists and that its implementation is valid in accordance with the existing Thai law and with existing bilateral agreements on the extradition procedure between the Kingdom of Thailand and that particular country which requests the extradition.

Only then, an arrest-warrant might be granted by the judge. Upon executing an arrest according to the arrest-warrant, the police (unless the police decide to release such a person on bail in their police station) have a duty to deliver the arrested person to the Court in 48 hours. After that it could request the Court for his further detention. A maximum of a 60 days detention-warrant could be granted upon such a request. Within these 60 days, the plaintiffs (the public prosecutor acting on behalf of the Thai State or representatives from the country requesting the extradition or both) have to come up with the complete extradition case – which has to be submitted to the Court in the same manner as if it were any other criminal charge.

Then, the extradition case would be heard. The process could take a very long time and the extradition request could be granted or could be refused. In both cases it could also be appealed by either party. Only after a final judgment of the Appeal’s Court which orders the extradition, could the police, legally, really put someone into a plane and send him out of Thailand. They can not do it before all the abovementioned procedures are completed. Even if the wanted person voluntarily agrees to be extradited and forgoes his rights to challenge the extradition case in the Thai court, still, even in such a case, the person must be brought by the accusers to the Thai court and the person facing extradition has to sign agreement in regard to the “voluntary extradition” in the judge’s presence. In “Hambali’s” case the performers of the operation “Black Magic” did not even bother to bring him to any Thai court to observe the extradition formalities.

⁴⁶⁵ Deportation according to the Thai law is an administrative case and could be ordered by the Minister of Interior, but a person could only be deported out of Thailand to either his country of origin (means to a country of his current citizenship), or to a country which was the last place such a person had last entered Thailand from. So-called “Hambali” was neither a U.S. citizen, nor he had entered Thailand from the United States – which would technically give them the right to deport him back there. Neither was he a citizen of Jordan, where he was actually sent to from Bangkok.

⁴⁶⁶ Published here: <http://www.kabar-irian.com/pipermail/kabar-indonesia/2006-August/002781.html> his decision before the judge. No one could be extradited without duly completing these necessary procedures. Moreover, no one could be sent out of Thailand on an extradition request if he is facing any criminal prosecution in Thailand or pending any criminal punishment meted out by the Thai court: such a person must first complete his punishment in Thailand and only then – could he be extradited.

Here is one example to compare. One famous so-called “pedophile”⁴⁶⁸ – a certain Mr. Eric Rosser, an American, was one of the FBI’s “10 most wanted” in 2000. He was as wanted as very Osama bin Laden – since both of them were in the same “list of 10” in that year (although Eric was cheaper to the American taxpayer than Osama – the tag on his forehead showed only 50,000 USD). Eric Rosser was captured in Thailand at the end of August 2001, following an extradition request from the United States.

The problem was that during his arrest, there were discovered three fake passports (but only one was in his current use, so for the other two he could not be prosecuted) and some little quantity of marijuana – apparently for personal use. The Americans were extremely happy with Rosser’s arrest and demanded from Thailand his immediate extradition. However, the Thais said “NO”. Rosser was arrested with at least two prohibited items which constituted crimes in accordance with the Thai law: he was using a forged passport and marijuana. Therefore, they must prosecute Rosser in Thailand first. When the Americans attempted to exert pressure on Thailand, it did not work out: the Thai side answered sternly: “NO”.

Rosser was prosecuted for three criminal cases: for his fake passport, for his marijuana, and for his extradition. He lost all of the three cases and did not appeal any of them (while he was legally entitled to do so). He got over a year of imprisonment for his fake passport and for drugs and he was not extradited to the United States before he completed his punishment in the Thai prison. This case was very famous and well-publicized, so if someone does not believe me he could easily check it out. Here, for example, is one report of his arrest in August 2001: <http://www.heart7.net/news/newsproarchive.htm> ; and here – about his eventual extradition one year later – in August 2002: <http://news.bbc.co.uk/1/hi/world/asia-pacific/2203165.stm>

What about “Hambali”? Do you think his “arrest” and his so-called “extradition” had any thing in common with the abovementioned “10-most-wanted-Eric-Rosser”? You are badly mistaken if you think so. “Hambali” committed in the Kingdom of Thailand the following crimes, for which he must have been prosecuted in the Thai court of law first:

- 2) he used the forged Spanish passport to illegally enter the Kingdom of Thailand [supposedly];
- 3) he illegally possessed two Makarov pistols in his trousers’ pockets while in a public place;
- 4) he managed to kick two Thai policemen in the stomach during his arrest (he assaulted Thai officials and resisted arrest);
- 5) he possessed detailed plans for bombings of the following objects within the Thai jurisdiction:
 - bomb attack against APEC summit in Bangkok (most probably by a “mini-nuke”);
 - bomb attack against the U.S. Embassy in Bangkok (most probably by a “mini-nuke”);
 - bomb attack against the UK Embassy in Bangkok (most probably by a “mini-nuke”);
 - bomb attack against a night-club in Phuket (most probably by a “mini-nuke”);
 - bomb attack against a night-club in Pattaya (most probably by a “mini-nuke”);
 - bomb attack against a check-in counter of El Al Israeli Airlines at Bangkok’s Don Muang airport (most probably by a “mini-nuke”);
 - bomb attack against an Israeli restaurant in Kao-Sarn Road area, Bangkok [ironically, the very one of which Kaleb Hanaan, “Hani’s” formal boss, was a co-owner] (most probably by a “mini-nuke”).

Do you think all the mentioned above was not enough to prosecute “Hambali” in Thailand? Or maybe the ⁴⁶⁸ So-called “pedophile” (also spells “paedophile”) was originally a definition of a sexual pervert with an inclination for small children, not mature for sex. Lately, with the development of the so-called “political correctness”, this term was expanded to embrace also those who have a natural desire to have sex with young women (sexually mature and therefore correspondingly attractive, but being below the so-called “age of consent”). In addition, this term was also recently expanded to embrace even adult male homosexuals who use services of underage male-whores, particularly in South-East Asia, where this business is quite big and is often controlled by the local police (especially in Thailand and in Cambodia), that extracts money from either – the actual services provided, as well as from blackmailing the so-called “pedophiles” when they are caught in such an act. To my knowledge, Eric Rosser was attracted to young girls (well above the age of “children”) and therefore he could hardly be called “pedophile” in the former sense of this word.

Thai police decided that they “forgive” “Hambali” on behalf of the entire 65 million people population of the Kingdom of Thailand? Maybe they made a referendum to this effect? Whereby they asked every Thai citizen: what do you think, dear, about forgiving such an enemy of the Thai State as Mr. Nurjaman Riduan bin Isamuddin? Would you mind not to prosecute him in the Criminal Court?

I guess everyone who has even a little understanding of the law in general and is familiar with elementary logic, knows that the police are simply public servants (at least, formally) and when they capture a criminal, they have no right to exercise any “forgiveness” in regard to whether to prosecute him for his crimes or not to prosecute. The police simply have no right to do so – they must deliver the arrested person to the court and to submit all available evidence to the public prosecutor. The rest is simply not their business.

How come that in the case of 10-most-wanted Eric Rosser they prosecuted him for his fake passport and for his small amount of marijuana before extraditing him to the United States, but in the case of Mr. Nurjaman Riduan bin Isamuddin, who was also using a fake passport (+ two unlicensed pistols + resistance to arrest + evidence of seven bombing plots) they abstained from any prosecution? Is it believable? In fact, another recent example is Victor Bout, the infamous so-called “Merchant of Death”, who was extradited from Thailand to the United States in 2010. As you probably remember, the Americans obtained Victor’s extradition through the legal procedure in the Thai Criminal Court and the case reached the Thai Court of Appeal, too.

The same thing applies to his actual extradition: why 10-most-wanted Eric Rosser’s extradition had been granted by the Thai Justice (and the same could be said about Victor Bout), but in the case of so-called “Hambali” he was simply brought to the “remote and dark corner” of the airport, put onto some plane and “extradited”?

Try to guess why?

The answer is indeed very simple: because Eric Rosser and Victor Bout were real persons, but Nurjaman Riduan bin Isamuddin (“Hambali”) was not.

How could you bring to the Court someone who does not exist in reality? This is, by the way, exactly the reason why this “Hambali” has never been brought to any U.S. court of justice, either.

There is one quite a shameless official document, published on the Internet here⁴⁶⁹. It deals with so-called “goals” 1 and 2 in regard to “counter-terrorism cooperation” between various countries. In this document, amidst totally senseless official clichés of various kinds, there is a color photograph followed by some short and seemingly “sensible” statement, which reads as follows:

⁴⁶⁹ <http://www.state.gov/s/d/rm/rls/perfrpt/2003/html/28997.htm>

This statement is followed by the very photograph depicting a certain general with plenty of stars on his golden shoulder-straps; the face of this general seems to be extremely unhappy, seeming to be even angry, while he is saying something into a microphone.

This official page with such a photo and AP statement inserted into its middle, in fact, represents a very high class of a public cheating – truly a masterpiece of the cheating art. For a lay person it might appear genuine stuff: there was a big catch – the bad guy, almost as big as very Osama bin Laden, was, at last, captured and this fact “understandably” attracted some supposedly “positive” comments of a “stern-looking” high-ranking Indonesian police official.

Unfortunately, the “AP” which provided their gullible consumers with this short statement, preferred not to go any deeper into details of the press-conference held in Jakarta “following the arrest of Hambali”.

In reality, in that press-conference following the news of “Hambali’s” capture in Thailand, outraged General Da’i Bachtiar expressed his extreme displeasure with his Thai colleagues (not even to say about the Americans), who made it as bold as not to even inform him, the chief of the Indonesian police, of the capture of the alleged mastermind of the Bali bombing.

In his furious speech, the chief of the Indonesian police did not even imply that it might have been this so-called “Hambali” who really organized the Bali bombing – this matter was totally out of topic. The topic was only the fact that the chief of the Indonesian police managed to get to know of the capture of the alleged, again “a-l-l-e-g-e-d” mastermind of the Bali bombing, out of mass-media releases only – when “Hambali” had already been flown from Thailand in an unexplainably speedy extrajudicial “extradition” to the United States.

Actually, if the Thai cops would observe their own law, the situation would be as follows. “Hambali” must have been brought to the Thai Criminal Court in 48 hours since his arrest, and the judge, on the request of the police, would detain him in prison (not in a police station) for 60 days pending the submission of the formal extradition request. After that, you can be sure that two competitive extradition requests would be submitted. Indonesia would submit an extradition request demanding that its citizen, who committed the crime on Indonesian territory by organizing a terrorist organization responsible for the Bali bombing, shall be extradited to stand trial in Indonesia. The Americans could submit their extradition request too, of course, but what would be their chances? “Hambali” was not their citizen. So-called “Jemaah Islamiah” was not based in the United States, but in Indonesia. The actual Bali bombing was a crime against the state of Indonesia, not against the United States. So, imagine which of the two competing extradition requests would be granted by the Thai Criminal Court in this case? As you can see, the Americans would not have a chance, even if so-called “Hambali” were a really existing person.

At the end of his speech, General Bachtiar said that now, since it was no longer possible to get this alleged “mastermind” from Thailand to Indonesia, he would have no choice than to request the Americans to provide the Indonesian authorities with an opportunity to proceed with the inquiry in the United States.

The poor Indonesian Police General was mistaken, badly mistaken, sincerely expecting such a logical cooperation...

The Indonesian authorities indeed requested the U.S. side to let them interrogate “Hambali”, because he was actually wanted for his alleged role in the 2002 Bali bombing – i.e. for his crime against Indonesia, and not for any crime against the United States. However, the U.S. side refused the Indonesians not only to interrogate “Hambali”, but even to meet him (despite him being an allegedly Indonesian citizen). They even refused to disclose to the Indonesian officials the exact location where “Hambali” was being kept under their custody (the exact place was claimed to be “an undisclosed location”, which was quite understandable, considering that “Hambali” was not in any custody whatsoever at that moment – he was freely walking Tel-Aviv’s streets).

Notably, many news agencies almost immediately after the first news dealing with the actual “extradition” of “Hambali” (before he was sent out of Thailand, no news was published), published also a statement of the Indonesian Minister of Justice Yusril Ihza Mahendra who said an utterly seditious thing, upsetting the entire concocted story of this supposedly “well-known” “bin Laden of South-East Asia”. Yusril revealed to the agencies that the Indonesian Ministry of Justice was busy trying to establish whether “Mr. Nurjaman Riduan bin Isamuddin” was indeed a citizen of Indonesia as claimed. Even as late as on August 27, 2001, Yusril repeated, that the Indonesian Government had no clue about the citizenship status of so-called “Hambali”⁴⁷⁰, despite the latter supposedly being such a “well-known” terror figure.

Later, in 2007, the humble author of these lines visited some high-ranking Indonesian security officials, not only from the police, but also from its military intelligence – to privately request from them some information on “Hambali” (such information was needed for my own criminal case in the Thai court).

The Indonesian officials only laughed and answered that they had already searched all over Indonesia and there was no record that a person named “Nurjaman Riduan bin Isamuddin” had ever been born, or had ever studied, or had ever resided in Indonesia. After the exhaustive search, various Indonesian security officials were not able to find any of his relatives, any of his friends, and not even one person who had ever met Mr. “Nurjaman Riduan bin Isamuddin”, whether with “bin”, or without “bin”, or any person who had ever heard that such a personality had ever existed on the Indonesian soil. They were unable also to find anybody in Indonesia who could even recognize so-called “Hambali” by his photograph provided by the Americans. The conclusion of the Indonesian security officials, who studied the claim of the Americans, (who claimed that so-called “Hambali” or Mr. “Nurjaman Riduan bin Isamuddin” was allegedly an Indonesian citizen) was that so-called “Hambali” was indeed a bogus personage, which had never existed in reality.

Even the actual name of so-called “Hambali” was concocted with unforgivable errors (that was strikingly reminiscent of the infamous “Islamic Jihad” that bore an equally idiotic name). It is only now so-called “Hambali” began to be referred to as “Nurjaman Riduan Isamuddin” with the word “bin” removed. Initially, he was referred to as “Nurjaman Riduan bin Isamuddin”.

As you may know, the word “bin” (that is no longer politically correct in the colonized Arab world and is still used only by die-hard feudalists, by recalcitrant aristocrats, by Islamic fundamentalists, and by Mafiosi) means “son” in Arabic and its usage before a certain name defines a patronymic. For example, a construction “Nurjaman bin Riduan” would mean that a person with a given name “Nurjaman” was born to his father whose name was “Riduan” (in Russian, where the patronymics were not phased out by the Freemasons yet, such a person would be called by a construction “Nurjaman Riduanovich”, for example, while in Scandinavian tradition, before the enslavement of the Scandinavians, I mean, he would be called “Nurjaman Riduansson”). A construction “Nurjaman bin Riduan bin Isamuddin” would mean either that “Nurjaman bin Riduan” has a grand-father named “Isamuddin”, or “Ismauddin” was not his actual “grand-father”, but a remote ancestor, the founder of the clan. In any case, “bin Isamuddin” is a patryonimic (or a patronymic with a status of generic name); in no case could it be a “surname”, because tribal people lack the surnames. So, a construction “Nurjaman bin Riduan Isamuddin” is highly unlikely (because people who are defiant enough as to still use the politically incorrect patronymics, automatically defy the surnames, because the latter were enforced on them by Western colonizers and are associated with the state of being slaves of the cop), but, nonetheless, it is still technically possible. In this case it would mean that a person has a given name “Nurjaman”, his patronymic is “bin Riduan”, and his surname is “Isamuddin”. However, a construction “Nurjaman Riduan bin Isamuddin” is not possible even from the technical point of view – it is as ridiculous as the construction “Islamic Jihad” and it reveals that such a name was concocted by folks who have little understanding not only about the Arab and Muslim traditions, but even about the sociology in general.

By the way, not only “Hambali” was proven to be non-existent. Another well-known “leader” of the so-called “international terrorism” and another nuclear bomber – a certain “Abu Musab al-Zarqawi”⁴⁷¹, the

⁴⁷⁰ <http://www.tempo.co.id/hg/nasional/2003/08/27/brk.20030827-02.uk.html>

⁴⁷¹ Abu Musab al-Zarqawi was alleged to be a “Jordanian Muslim” who allegedly ran a militant training camp in Afghanistan. He became known after being blamed by the U.S. officials for a series of bombings and attacks. He allegedly formed an organization Jama'at al-Tawhid wal-Jihad while he was in Europe, and then allegedly went to Afghanistan. He was alleged to have led al-Tawhid wal-Jihad, which allegedly later became the group called Al-Qaeda in Iraq, until his death in June 2006. Zarqawi allegedly took responsibility, on several audio- and videotapes, for numerous acts of violence in Iraq including [nuclear] “suicide” bombings and hostage executions. Zarqawi was involved in an attempt to blow up the Radisson SAS Hotel in Amman, where many Israeli and American tourists lodged. The U.S. government used to offer $25 million reward for information leading to his capture (don't forget, however, that it offered $10 million for “Hambali” too), the same amount offered for the capture of Osama bin Laden before March 2004. On October 15, 2004, the U.S. State Department added Zarqawi and the Jama'at al-Tawhid wal-Jihad group to its “list of Foreign Terrorist Organizations” and ordered a freeze on any assets that the group might have in the United States. On February 24, 2006, the FBI also added al-Zarqawi to the “Seeking most favorite toy of the Western propaganda, who was alleged to be a “head of Al-Qaeda” in Iraq, was found to be non-existent also. Secret services of Jordan have thoroughly checked on him and they were not able to find any one who could even remotely resemble the data on “Abu Musab al-Zarqawi” as provided by the Americans; so it was established that such a person had never existed in reality.

There is some really odd thing about “Hambali”. Except for his well-known “official” photograph where he was depicted wearing beard, mustache, white turban, and round glasses (all of these successfully covering or at least distorting about 70% of his face) you can no longer find any photographs of “Hambali”.

At the first moment after his arrest, there had been quite a few photos of him circulating over the Internet: shaved “Hambali” without any turban and glasses, shaved “Hambali” as on his forged Spanish passport, bearded “Hambali” several days later following his arrest, and smiling “Hambali” at the plane taking him supposedly to the Guantanamo Bay prison. Soon after, “someone” worked really hard to remove all these photos from the Internet (along with removing the embarrassing prefix “bin” before the word “Isamuddin” in all references to him). I could bet that now you can’t find any of those photos anymore – you could probably encounter some of them as thumbnails still in cache, but you won’t be able to open them. This is the best proof that “Hambali” was nothing else than the Mossad agent appointed to play that role. It is because the very manner to hide his photos is the very typical approach of the Mossad – well-known from many other similar cases.

Strangely enough, you would never be able to find any of “Hambali’s” photos even on the U.S. official websites – where they are supposed to be (considering the fact that he was officially “wanted” by the United States in connection with 9/11 – in such a case there should be some photographs of him published).

From among the three pictures shown below you could only find the one on the left – in his full “Muslim” outfit. The other two pictures of him are really “hot” stuff. They are absolutely prohibited.

The picture in the middle (see below) was supposedly taken by “a certain secret service agent” while “Hambali” was traveling to somewhere after that infamous “Al-Qaeda” Summit in Malaysia in 2000.

The one on the right is even more “seditious” and totally prohibited picture of “Hambali” – it is believed that such photo of him was completely destroyed by the Mossad everywhere and is no longer available. Most probably, it was removed even from the police files in Thailand and in Malaysia. This is how he looked like when he (or someone who was playing his role) was captured in Ayutthaya, Thailand, on August 11, 2003, and also during his “extradition” to the United States (I mean to Israel). The same picture was also used by “Hani Hammoer” for Hambali’s forged Spanish passport.

It was officially declared in 2003, after his arrest, that “Hambali” was a “master of disguise” and even a “master of reincarnation”.

One should believe the last particular claim. Apparently, he was the master of reincarnation...

Look:

Information – War on Terrorism” list, the first time that he had ever been added to any of the FBI’s three major “wanted” lists. On June 7, 2006, Zarqawi was allegedly “killed” 1.5 miles (2.41 km) north of Hibhib, near the city of Baquba, Iraq, by a United States air strike, along with as many as eight other people, including women and children. He allegedly “died” from internal bleeding at 7:04/05pm, 50–55 minutes after the air strike, of injuries sustained in the bomb blasts - the most ridiculous claim because the two huge aviation bombs had been dropped right on a roof of his alleged house reducing it (and its inhabitants) to complete dust. The FBI alleged “tests” later “confirmed” Zarqawi’s identity. It was established, however, that so-called “Abu Musab al-Zarqawi” was a bogus personage that had never existed in reality – neither under this particular name, nor under any other name. Nobody was able to recognize him by his alleged photo as well. No friends of him, no relatives, no police records, no records of his birth, or education, or residence have ever been found. However, “confidentially” (only for the “patricians”) this non-existent person is blamed for over 25 mini-nuclear bombings in Iraq; practically all explosions of mini-nukes presented as “suicide car-bombings” (those that occurred prior to his “death”) are officially being blamed on him.

Above you can see Mr. “Nurjaman Riduan bin Isamuddin” (alias “Hambali”) in his three hypostases from left to right: 1) His only approved by the FBI (prior to March 2012) photo. 2) Deemed to be totally destroyed today photo of “Hambali” as in 2000 when he was allegedly heading to Pakistan after the alleged Al-Qaeda’s Malaysian Summit. This photo is claimed to be taken by a “secret agent”, who allegedly monitored that alleged “Al-Qaeda Summit”. 3) Deemed to be totally destroyed photo of “Hambali” as “captured” by the Thai police in August 2003; that is how he actually looked like when he was extra judicially “extradited” first from Cambodia to Thailand and then from Bangkok Don Mueang airport to nowhere. This photo existed then in Thai- and Malaysian police files and was also used in one of the criminal cases against the author of these lines. “Hani Hammoer”, who produced the fake Spanish passport for “Hambali”, claimed that this was exactly a photo given to him to be fixed into the passport.

No clear and good quality photo of this “master of reincarnation Hambali” exists: those shown above are the best quality. Even the “standard” and officially approved photograph of “Hambali” (the one in his full “Muslim” outfit) exists only in one quality, which is not better than the one shown here. Even when the “Time” magazine needed to place “Hambali” on its front cover, they had no choice than to stretch such a ridiculously low quality photo as shown above.

Face specialists presume that a man on the right is most probably a Filipino, on the left – most probably a Malay of mixed Arabian blood (considering the shape of his nose and patterns of his beard and mustache), and in the middle (I mean in the plane, after the “Summit”) – most probably a Bangladeshi.

Now, I hope, it becomes clear to everybody why “Hambali” had to be “extradited” from Thailand to nowhere through the remote and the darkest corner of the Bangkok’s Don Mueang Airport. And under such a heavy guard. It is because nobody wanted to release any more of “his” photographs.

Above from left to right: 3) One more prohibited photo of “Hambali”; this one was on several instances used by AFP and by those who referred to AFP. In this particular case, an Indonesian police official shows that photo. This photo seems most surreal and is believed to be produced by some computer graphic software – judging by both: his face and the picture’s background. 4) One more photo of “Hambali” – from the Bangkok Post newspaper around the time of his arrest. 5) Yet one more prohibited photo of Hambali – it is deemed to be totally destroyed and only its thumbnail was still available in some cached page on the Google search: <http://202.186.86.35/special/online/hambali/hamfront1.gif> – this one was the original picture’s web address. I just made a screen-shot of the thumbnail, because it was no longer possible to find the actual photo it led to, while today, in 2013, even the thumbnail disappeared.

Here are few more pictures of so-called “Hambali” – all from the Bangkok Post newspaper. They were especially combined together, since the Bangkok Post’s writers were obviously perplexed by his supernatural abilities to change his physical appearance (“Bangkok Post”, August 6, 2006, “Perspective”):

Finally, here is the latest “officially approved” photo of so-called “Hambali”, the acclaimed “bin Laden of South East Asia”. This photo suddenly surfaced on the Wikipedia web pages⁴⁷², related to this acclaimed “master of reincarnation”, in March, 2012:

According to the Wikipedia copyright notice, the above photo is claimed to be taken by “...by an officer or employee of the United States Government as part of that person’s official duties under the terms of Title 17, Chapter 1, Section 105 of the US Code”. The new photo claimed to be acquired from a ridiculous document titled “The Guantanamo Docket” published by the New York Times here⁴⁷³.

Family of terrorists

	HAMBALI, whose real name is Riduan Isamuddin is married to Nor Alwizah Lee Abdullah, a Sabahan. Nor Alwizah controlled JI's finances as treasurer. She is also believed to be head of the women wing. Both Hambali and Nor Alwizah were captured by the CIA and Thai police in August last year. Hambali was al-Qaeda's regional director and the mastermind of Jemaah Islamiah and is said to be responsible for the Bali bomb blast in October 2002 that killed more than 200 people.
	NORDIN MOHD TOP an explosives expert and on the run is married to Rahmah Rusdi, the sister of JI leader Rais Rusdi. He is a UTM graduate and former senior supervisor of the Luqmanul Hakiem School.
	FATHUR ROHMAN AL GHOZI who was shot dead when he escaped from a Manila prison last year was married to Sheila Mubin, an Indonesian JI member who is Amrozi's cousin.
	FAIZ and his brother Hashim are JI members. Their sister is married to JI leader Shukri Omar Talib.
	MOHD NASIR ABAS, 35, was the Mantiqi III in charge of Sabah, Labuan, North and Central Sulawesi and Mindanao. Three of his sisters are married to JI leaders. One of them is married to Mukhlas, the Bali bomber.

Above – an alleged “family” of Bali nuclear bombers as believed by Malaysian police... It too features a seditious photo of so-called “Hambali” that dissents from his only official photo approved by the FBI.

I guess the reader of this book will be interested in reading some quotations in regard to such a theatrical capture of this phantom personage that was appropriately called “Operation Black Magic”. Indeed, they are worth reading – I believe that many other bogus “terrorist figures” would attract not less publicity than “Hambali”, but, unfortunately, I do not have any hard evidence to disprove official claims in regard to the rest of high-ranking “terrorists”. While in the particular case of this “Hambali” I really know many things – especially because my humble self was accused by the Americans of being his direct accomplice and even his documents supplier. I was also fortunate to have access to many legal documents in this connection in the Thai courts, thanks to being a party of the criminal cases related to that matter.

It is particularly important to comprehend all what was claimed by the hysterical press in regard to so-called “Hambali”, because “Hambali” was linked to some other important “terror figures” – especially to well-known “Khalid Sheikh Muhammad” and to the 9/11 “hijackers”, not to mention Osama bin Laden (of whom “Hambali” was supposedly the “right hand”). Thus, successfully disproving lies about so-called “Hambali” in this case is tantamount to disproving all lies about the so-called “terrorism” in general – especially in connection with 9/11.

Here are some claims:

"It was confirmed that he organized a meeting for two of 9/11 hijackers when they visited Kuala Lumpur in 2000," he said, adding that Hambali's planned terrorist attacks in Singapore were thwarted in 2001. Hambali is also believed to have masterminded the Christmas Eve bombings in 2000 in Indonesia (19 dead, 47 wounded), the bombing on September 30, 2000 in metro Manila, the Philippines (22 dead), the Bali attacks on October 12, 2002 (202 dead, more than 330 wounded), and possibly the J.W. Marriot Hotel bombing on August 5, 2003 in Jakarta (12 dead, over 150 wounded)..."

A senior Thai police official, who preferred to remain anonymous, in his interview to the “Bangkok Post” newspaper⁴⁷⁴

"The Americans wanted Hambali badly because of his link with al-Qaeda. It was also a big catch for them as the war on terror at that time - and really to this date - hadn't netted many top terrorist leaders alive," a Western diplomat told Perspective. He said Hambali should be put on trial because he is wanted by Indonesia, Malaysia, and the Philippines for a series of deadly bomb attacks." To keep him in Guantanamo, as rumored, is not the best solution," he said.

Some Western Diplomat talking to the “Bangkok Post” newspaper⁴⁷⁵

In regard to the above one, I would totally agree – to abduct and to allegedly “keep in Guantanamo” incommunicado, a criminal, who is wanted for such heinous crimes by Indonesia, Malaysia and the Philippines, constitutes at least a major offence, if not a heinous crime itself against these three countries from the side of the Americans. It just looks like “giving asylum to the criminal”, especially, if someone got used to call a spade a spade.

There is also another important notice by this Western Diplomat – he noticed that “they hadn’t netted many top terrorist leaders alive” – apparently a right thing to say. “They” could only catch those so-called “terrorists” who themselves agree to be “caught” and to be cooperative with the ensuing “inquiries”. “Hambali” and his friend and supposed “terror” colleague – “Khalid Sheikh Muhammad”, also called “KSM” – are probably only two of the really good actors, who could successfully play their roles.

Anyhow, I would like to bring to your kind attention some more claims in regard to “Hambali’s capture”:

"...Reactions to Hambali's arrest were upbeat from supporters of the war on terror. A White House spokesman called Hambali's arrest an "important victory in the war on terrorism" and a "significant blow to al-Qaeda." The announcement came aboard Air Force One, as President George W. Bush was flying from Texas to California on August 14, 2003. In a speech to US Marines in San Diego later in the same day, President Bush said: "Hambali is one of the world's most lethal terrorists who is suspected of planning major terrorist operations. He is no longer a problem for those of us who love freedom." Australian Prime Minister John Howard called Hambali the "ultimate mastermind" of the October 2002 Bali bombings that killed 202 people, including 88 Australians..."⁴⁷⁶

The most interesting, however, is this statement below from the same article; when you read this book further, you will understand what kind of “protection of sources” the Thai police officer was talking about [try, firstly, to read it “between the lines”, and, secondly, remember what was said by this man]:

"...Most of the media reports on the case were incorrect because "firstly, we had to conceal some information to protect our sources and secondly, people from a certain organization wanted to get all the credit, like they had done everything," said a senior Thai police officer..."⁴⁷⁷

*"U.S. President George W. Bush on Thursday (February 9), [2003], however, announced for the first time that Hambali was crucial to a plot to hijack an airplane, and fly it into the tallest building on America's west coast [leaving us only to wonder – if that one featured its own built-in nuclear demolition scheme or not]. Bumbling his statement, Bush said the building was the "Liberty Tower" in Los Angeles, but that was later corrected to refer to the Library Tower. The 73-story building had since been renamed the U.S. Bank Tower. "We now know that in October 2001, Khalid Sheikh Muhammad -- the mastermind of September 11th attacks -- had already set in motion a plan to have terrorist operatives hijack an airplane using shoe bombs to breach the cockpit door, and fly the plane into the tallest building on the west coast," Bush said. "We believe the intended target was Liberty Tower in Los Angeles, California. Rather than use Arab hijackers as he had on September the 11th, Khalid Sheikh Muhammad sought out young men from Southeast Asia -- whom he believed would not arouse as much suspicion. "To help carry out this plan, he tapped a terrorist named Hambali, one of the leaders of an al Qaeda affiliated group in Southeast Asia called J. I.⁴⁷⁸, " Bush said in a speech at the National Guard Building in Washington, D.C. "⁴⁷⁹

"The U.S. government has already given us 10 million dollars for help in the arrest of Hambali," as a reward, Thai Prime Minister Thaksin Shinawatra said after Hambali was seized. "Hambali planned to carry out bombings in Thailand against the U.S. and British embassies, nightclubs in Phuket and Pattaya, and the Israeli check-in counter at Bangkok's Don Muang airport," London's Sunday Times reported in October 2003, citing Hambali's purported "interrogation transcript". "Hambali and two Al Qaeda assistants also considered attacking an Israeli restaurant with a Star of David above it, in the [Bangkok] backpacker area of Khao San Road," the British report said. The popular restaurant⁴⁸⁰, in a street perpetually jammed with thousands of tourists and Thais, has since removed its large six-pointed advertisement...⁴⁸¹

Here is a lone alternative opinion:

"...Alleged Indonesian terrorist leader Abu Bakar Bashir [who, by the way, was the alleged official "leader" and founder of the so-called "Jemaah Islamiah" and who had successfully won an accusation against him in an Indonesian court of law already] insisted at the time that J.I.⁴⁸² was created by the CIA, along with Al Qaeda, to trick and persecute Muslims...⁴⁸³

A few more "straight" opinions:

"...In a statement, US Ambassador Darryl Johnson said Hambali's "capture by Thai law enforcement personnel represents a major victory in the global war on terrorism and testifies again to Thailand's leading role in the community of peace-loving nations." "The US is proud to have played a supporting role in this case," he said...⁴⁸⁴

What is especially laughable in regard to the above claim is that "Hambali" was captured (to be exact – illegally traded across the Thai-Cambodian border) and then sent out of Thailand to "somewhere", in circumvention of all applicable Thai laws. It was then especially mocking to claim that such an action was performed by "Thai law enforcement personnel". Those guys who are supposed to "enforce" the law, in reality "enforced" nothing else than the lawlessness. And this particular claim above was that of the United States' own Ambassador... He apparently perceived such an action as the "law" enforcement...

"...Australia wants an Indonesian accused of masterminding the 2002 Bali bombings jailed indefinitely, Foreign Minister Alexander Downer says. ... Mr. Downer described Hambali as "one of the evil of the evil". "As I understand it, he's in Guantanamo Bay and that is a very good place for him," he said...⁴⁸⁵

The author of this book totally agrees with the above statement – the Guantanamo Bay was really the "good" place for "Hambali" – because there he would be very far from real U.S. Justice and from any honest inquirers, who might not only want him to stay behind bars “indefinitely”, but also might want to find out the entire truth about his alleged “crimes”.

“...Hambali is a key operational commander who has been involved in every major terrorist plot in the region. He was a charismatic figure who was able to convince Southeast Asians to be involved in suicide bombings, and that's no small thing...”⁴⁸⁶

“...Hambali is said to be the only non-Arab in al-Qaeda's military committee... US intelligence officials have linked Hambali to such figures as Ramzi Yousef, now in jail in the United States for the 1993 bombing of the World Trade Center, and information from Khalid Sheikh Mohammad, a key al-Qaeda leader arrested in March, is said to support this. Hambali also organized an al-Qaeda meeting in Kuala Lumpur in January 2000, in which two September 11 hijackers, Khalid Al Mihdhar and Nawaf Al Hazmi, took part. Photographs of this meeting have been released...”⁴⁸⁷

“...In fact, KSM [Khalid Sheikh Muhammad] and Hambali were both present at the January 2000 planning meeting in Malaysia at which the final touches were put on the plot to bomb the USS Cole (a plot to bomb the USS Sullivans had just failed) and the decision was made to carry out the 9/11 attacks in the United States. Also in attendance at this key meeting were two of the 9/11 hijackers, Nawaf Alhazmi and Khalid Almidhar, Cole planner Tawfiq bin Attash, and others...”⁴⁸⁸

“Hambali” stands accused of a lot of different “terror” actions dating back as far as 1994, but it would be just the waste of time and paper to describe each of his accusations here. I would like to only concentrate on those actions ascribed to “Hambali” that have a direct relevance to 9/11 attacks – i.e. to the actual topic of this book.

Probably, the most important thing which is being ascribed to “Hambali” was that of allegedly organizing and hosting of that well-known “meeting” of the 9/11 “top planners” in Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, held on January 5, 2000.

That meeting was attended by such important terrorist figure as very Khalid Sheikh Mohammad, and even by several “rank-and-file” 9/11 “hijackers” (those who planned to fly their aluminum planes through the thick steel bars of the Twin Towers’ perimeters directly to Paradise).

This is particularly important to consider that meaningful “terrorist meeting” for a reason of understanding that the entire story about modern so-called “terrorism” is in reality a cheap fiction intended for the consumption of consummate morons.

The problem is that it was officially “established” that so-called “KSM”, alias “Khalid Sheikh Mohammad”, was a chief organizer of the 9/11 perpetration⁴⁸⁹.

Surprisingly, those who managed “to establish” such a “fact”, are not in any hurry at all to sue this “KSM” in any criminal court in the United States. But it does not matter for our consideration – the mere fact that “KSM's” guilt in regard to the 9/11 WTC- and the Pentagon- attacks have been already officially “established” is enough for now.

Now if we manage to prove here that the alleged “chief organizer” of that alleged “meeting” in Kuala Lumpur in 2000 was a bogus person, it would automatically prove that so-called “KSM” was a bogus person too (the fact that alleged “hijackers” were bogus persons, I think, is clear a long time ago and we do not need to bother proving it here one more time). As such, the entire story about the alleged “Muslim terrorism” in the 21st century has to be discarded. I hope the reader of this book will agree with such logic.

So here is it:

“...About a dozen of bin Laden’s trusted followers hold a secret, “top-level al-Qaeda summit” in the city of Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia. Attendees of the summit are said to include among others:

- 1) Khalid Sheikh Mohammad (“KSM”) – an alleged mastermind of the entire September 11 project;
- 2) Nurjaman Riduan bin Isamuddin (“Hambali”) – an alleged organizer and a host of the summit;

- 3) Abd al-Rahim al-Nashiri - one of al-Qaeda's top field commanders who operated out of Malaysia while 9/11 is being prepared; he was involved in an arms smuggling plot (1997) and the East African embassy bombings (August 22-25 1998), in which his cousin was "martyred"; he also organized the attack against the USS The Sullivans (January 3, 2000), and will be involved in the attacks against the USS Cole (October 12, 2000); he will be arrested in the United Arab Emirates in November 2002;
- 4) Fahad Al-Quso – a top Al-Qaeda operative; Al-Quso will be arrested by Yemeni authorities in December 2000, but the FBI will not be given a chance to fully interrogate him before 9/11 - he will escape from prison in 2003;
- 5) Tawfiq bin Attash - better known by his alias "Khallad"; bin Attash, a "trusted member of bin Laden's inner circle," was in charge of bin Laden's bodyguards, and served as bin Laden's personal intermediary at least for the USS Cole bombing; he is also thought to be a "mastermind" of that attack; Attash is reportedly planning to be one of the hijackers, but will be unable to get a US visa;
- 6) Nawaf Alhazmi – an alleged would be Flight 77 hijacker;
- 7) Salem Alhazmi – another alleged 9/11 hijacker (also Flight 77) and brother of Nawaf Alhazmi;
- 8) Khalid Almihdhar – an alleged would be Flight 77 hijacker;
- 9) Ramzi bin al-Shibh – investigators believe he wanted to be the twentieth hijacker; his presence at the summit may not have been realized until after 9/11;
- 10) Mohamed al-Khatani - a Saudi, he will confess to attending the summit while being held in the US Guantanamo prison; he will unsuccessfully attempt to enter the US in August 2001 to join the 9/11 plot.

As you could see from the abovementioned assembly of those nice guys, most of them apparently wanted to be nothing else than the suicidal hijackers. Meaning that they were all in a hurry to appear in Paradise – amidst the Gardens, and the Fountains, and the Houris with dark eyes and with skin as white as concealed pearls, obedient and eternally young... I hope you agree with these logical conclusions of mine after carefully reading the official claims quoted above.

This so-called "summit", at least, according to its description in the mass-media, really looked more like a contest, where the competitors spent most of the precious time contesting for their personal privilege to go to Paradise ahead of others... Doesn't it look so? It seems that some of the contestants were prohibited to the Gate to Heaven only because the U.S. authorities refused them the visas to enter the United States first... What a pity, indeed...

Now I think it would be good to review some of the statements in mass-media in regard to some of those contestants for Paradise. I think it is very interesting.

This is from "TIME" magazine, Monday, Aug. 25, 2003 "Hambali's Heir Apparent"; by Andrew Perrin⁴⁹³; Bangkok:

"...It took U.S. interrogators three weeks to break the will of Omar al-Faruq, a senior al-Qaeda operative captured in Indonesia in 2002. Spirited away to a U.S. air base in Afghanistan, the Kuwaiti endured day after day of interrogation, including long periods of isolation and sleep deprivation. When al-Faruq finally cracked, he admitted he was Osama bin Laden's most senior operative in southeast Asia, and detailed a network of terror in the region whose scope was beyond anything previously imagined..."

He was a tough guy, indeed – he endured tortures at the dirty hands of kafirs⁴⁹⁴ at least three weeks, before beginning to talk...

and what do you think about "Hambali", who supposedly replaced him?

"...Riduan Isamuddin, who effectively assumed al-Faruq's responsibilities in Southeast Asia after the latter's arrest, was himself captured by Thai police and the CIA on Aug. 11 in a tiny apartment an hour north of Bangkok. But Isamuddin, better known as Hambali, appears to have required far less pressure than al-Faruq. Regional intelligence officials have told Time that Hambali began to talk openly about his terror activities shortly after he was taken to an undisclosed location to face U.S. interrogators... One of the key revelations: Hambali told the interrogators that his replacement in the network is Azahari bin

⁴⁹⁴ <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Kafir>

Husin, a Malaysian geophysics professor who trained with al-Qaeda in Afghanistan and literally wrote the Jemaah Islamiyah (JI) manual on bomb building...

As you see, this brave so-called “Hambali”, despite apparently aiming to go to Paradise, and being as tough as even ready to use nuclear weapons against those Australian tourists in a Balinese bar, suspiciously, quickly agreed to cooperate with the cops from among the infidels. Not only had he agreed to betray to them all the plans of his alleged “brotherhood”, not even to say about the actual “brothers”... He went as far as to even betray his own deputy, who was supposed to replace him as the leader of the so-called “Jemaah Islamiyah” organization (and who was supposed to continue those nuclear bombings)... Doesn't it look really strange to you?

One must be completely insane to believe that The Most High would really admit such a scumbag as “Hambali” to Paradise... It was previously believed that those Islamic warriors would stand in their belief till the end because they supposed not to care about This life much and were much more interested in the World to Come. To the extent that they could even imitate those real Japanese kamikaze pilots and to fly those four “hijacked planes” directly to Paradise... But it seems that this notorious 9/11 organizer was not really a believer?

Just try to be realistic – those alleged “Al-Qaeda” guys do not look like real warriors of Islam...

And what do you think about the other “big” guy – so-called “KSM”, alias “Khalid Sheikh Mohammad”? Do you think he was really tough with his so-called “inquirers” after his “capture”? You are badly mistaken if you think so – I will not quote anything here just to save paper, but if you are really interested – just look in Google how so-called “KSM” had behaved when he was “captured” and how long a time it took for his “inquirers” to make him sing. You will be surprised, indeed.

And you will be surprised even more if you think seriously over this matter: why those “bad” guys like Milosevic⁴⁹⁵ or even Saddam Hussein⁴⁹⁶, or even Victor Bout⁴⁹⁷, should face court-trials, but those bad guys like Khalid Sheikh Mohammad or Nurjaman Riduan bin Isamuddin, who already admitted to being chief organizers of the most heinous crimes so far of the 21st century – such as the World Trade Center nuclear demolition and the 2002 Bali nuclear bombing, should not go on trial and should, instead, loaf about at the so-called “Guantanamo Bay prison”?

By the way – does anyone seriously believe that these two guys are really behind bars right now? As for my own humble opinion, I do not think so. I am just too cynical and too logical to believe in such a notion. I am certain that they enjoy their lives in a full sense of this word – drinking their beers and flirting with women, but in case it would be really necessary, they would be at hand – to be demonstrated to some governmental or international inspectors somewhere “behind bars” at the Guantanamo Bay extrajudicial “detention facility” – just next to the beach where they spend their time when no inspector is around...

Oh, perhaps, it is not fair to refer to the responsible U.S. officials as someone faceless. Those folks who organized the production with the so-called “Guantanamo detention facility” apparently have their names. One of their names you could find, for example, in so-called “The Guantanamo Docket”, that is published here: <http://projects.nytimes.com/guantanamo/detainees/10019-hambali-riduan-isamuddin-> According to the last page of that document, a person, who seems to take a personal responsibility for hiding all these “terrorist figures” from the U.S. Justice system, is a certain “D. M. Thomas Jr, Rear Admiral, US Navy Commanding”.

Now, let's try to be realistic and a little bit logical. We have a basic premise: those would be 9/11 hijackers and those who wished to be the 9/11 hijackers, and those who were supervisors of the alleged “hijacking” – all assembled in Kuala-Lumpur, Malaysia. They assembled there supposedly to discuss their heinous plot + 2002 Bali bombing + the USS “Cole” bombing. The U.S. Government wants us to believe their version of events.

Well. Let us “believe” it for awhile. Our conclusions, based on this “belief”, would be very unfavorable to the U.S. Government's current stand. It would be much, much better for the U.S. Government, if we would not believe its ridiculous version. But we agreed to believe it already. So, here it is:

⁴⁹⁵ Late former President of Yugoslavia, who was sued in the court for the so-called “genocide”.

⁴⁹⁶ Late former President of Iraq, who was sued in the court for the so-called “genocide”.

⁴⁹⁷ http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Viktor_Bout

Let us go one by one: in that Malaysian “Al-Qaeda” Summit were assembled the alleged “hijackers”, at least some of them, and the supposed “masterminds” of that 9/11 “hijacking”. This will be our basic premise. We do not invent and do not distort any facts, because as such this story was presented by the very U.S. Government.

Now we know that there were not any hijackings on 9/11 at all:

1) The Pentagon could not have been attacked by Flight 77, as claimed (if someone still believes that it was indeed Flight 77 that struck the Pentagon, it is better for him to close this book right now and to read some other stuff – maybe to enjoy reading fond memories of President Bush or those of President Clinton).

2) There was no “fighting on board” Flight 93 that crashed in Pennsylvania (scattering its debris, after disintegrating at a high altitude, over an area of at least 6 miles).

3) And the thick perimeter steel columns of the Twin Towers, plus one “passport of a hijacker” found on ground zero, plus a retractable landing gear found retracted and with a wheel featuring an undamaged rubber tire, plus the “unexplainable” refusal of the U.S. Government to release the passenger-lists for almost 10 years – all of these, and more, successfully proved that there were no planes in the case of the WTC Twin Towers.

However, even if there were any planes that struck the Twin Towers in New York – still, it has been already proven that the WTC was demolished by its in-built nuclear demolition scheme.

Even if those planes that supposedly penetrated the steel perimeter columns of the Twin Towers were in reality physical, not digital, even in such a case, these planes (along with alleged “hijackers” inside the planes) were merely a secondary part of the primary nuclear demolition plot – intended only to distract the public attention from the real cause of the demolition.

Therefore, irrespective of the fact whether the 9/11 “hijackers”, who had attended the Malaysian “Al-Qaeda” Summit, were sitting inside the physical planes, or were sitting in front of their TVs drinking their beers and watching those digital planes at the moment of attack, in both cases it is deemed successfully proven that these so-called “warriors of Islam” were accomplices of those guys who actually planned to demolish the WTC by its built-in nuclear demolition scheme.

Do you want to argue? Please, try. I wish you really good luck in your argumentation.

Next one: so-called “Hambali”. It has been proven already that this man was an accomplice of Mike Harari who participated in his own capture, by agreeing to play that role of a captured “high-profile terrorist”, and who, suspiciously enough, quickly began to talk to the cops and to betray his own “comrades-terrorists”.

First: “Hambali” was captured in Cambodia, and then illegally exchanged for the 17 Muslims from Trad province – across the Thai border. If “Hambali” would not participate in the game, being a “genuine” terrorist figure, then he would not allow the Thai cops to play that game around him. He would simply refuse to receive his newly made Spanish passport. He would refuse to put the two Makarov pistols in his pockets. And he would loudly complain if the cops would try to play such a game as his bogus arrest in Ayutthaya, Thailand.

I think it is pretty obvious that nothing mentioned above could have been performed without his explicit permission and without his personal participation.

Second: if “Hambali” were a genuine person, he would honestly talk to his FBI- (or whatever American) interrogators. He would definitely reveal to them that the Thai cops were liars – in reality, they bought him (together with his two Makarov pistols) from the Cambodian cops, and were so cheating the gullible Americans.

This also did not happen.

Third: if “Hamabli” were a “genuine” guy, he would never go to Jordan after his capture in Thailand. He could probably go to Guantanamo Bay, to Diego-Garcia, to Guam, to Afghanistan, to the Thai court, to the U.S. court, to the Indonesian court, to the Philippines court, but Jordan would never be an option.

“Strangely” enough, he went to Jordan and he indeed appeared in Guantanamo Bay only in April 2007 – actually because the author of these lines started to make a big noise over this matter a month earlier. Where was “Hambali” all this time – from August 2003 and until April 2007? In Jordan? What could he do there? Was he a Jordanian citizen? Or was he wanted by Jordanian Justice for some crime?

Just try to be realistic – “Hambali” was in Israel all that time – until the matter began to grow a little bit scandalous, thanks to the scandalous nature of the humble author of these lines.

Now it is proven that not only the “hijackers”, but also the chief “Bali-bomber” (for the “patricians” the chief “nuclear Bali bomber”) was proven to be a bogus person that belonged to the Mossad.

However, “Hambali” is officially blamed for nothing else than the 2002 Bali bombing (exclusively and “confidentially” for the “patricians” – he was blamed for nothing else than a 2002 nuclear Bali bombing) and several other bombings! Isn’t he? And also – he is blamed for organizing the entire 9/11 project – together with his best friend and comrade-in-arms Khalid Sheikh Muhammad! Isn’t he?

What will be our logical conclusion?

The conclusion will be very unfavorable to the Mossad: it was the Mossad that committed the 2002 Bali nuclear bombing and the rest of those bombings blamed on “Hambali”.

Do you wish to argue?

Oh, I almost forgot this. I could confirm that shortly before the 2002 Bali bombing, Mike Harari (in the disguise of “Doctor Hadji Mohamed Hussein”, of course) and “Hani Hammoer” suspiciously often visited Indonesia and Bali in particular. Neither of them had any reasonable business to do there. An official part of their business was then well-known to me. However, neither of them was ever able to explain what their reason for visiting Indonesia so many times was. You could make your own conclusions – taking into consideration the incredible capabilities of Mike Harari as demonstrated in other similar cases.

The next thing is the participation of Khalid Sheikh Mohammad in the Malaysian “Al-Qaeda” summit.

Since the “hijackers” and so-called “Hambali” were successfully proven to be bogus persons, what about so-called “KSM”? Could he alone be genuine against such a background?

Try to guess.

Khalid Sheikh Mohammad admitted to be the organizer of the entire September 11 project (I mean the project in a sense offered for the plebs by the “9/11 Commission’s” Report).

I guess it is clear to everybody that the “findings” of the “9/11 Commission” could be true.

If so-called “KSM” claims that he organized the 9/11 attacks in accordance with the 9/11 Commission’s scenario, it only means that he is also a part of the game. Doesn’t it?

The summary of the above is enough to establish that Khalid Sheikh Mohammad and “Hambali” are both fruits from the same tree, grown by the Mossad.

This means that all crimes, without any exception, which are being ascribed to Khalid Sheikh Mohammad, to “Hambali”, or to any other man related to them, were in reality committed by the Mossad (or, at least, by those who wanted to make it to appear that all these crimes were committed by the Mossad, with the latter’s explicit consent to bear such a guilt). I hope it is clear to everybody who is familiar with elementary logic.

There is yet another logical argument concerning abovementioned “Hambali”, particularly connected to the author of these lines.

How come that “Hani Hammoer” who was a person, which actually had introduced me to Mike Harari, and who was alleged to supply “Hambali” and other “nice” guys from his group with their fake documents, has never been arrested? Despite the fact that this “Hani Hammoer” has apparently enjoyed a central position in that “confidential” chart (shown at the beginning of this book) composed by the FBI and purported to show the links between “Hambali” and his guys and between Mike Harari and the author of these lines?

Do you know, by the way, what this “Hani Hammoer” does now?

You would probably be surprised: he lives in Bangkok with his Thai wife under the very same name: “Hani Hammoer”; he has a registered business, and he does not feel that any FBI or whatever other police has any claims against him whatsoever. “Hani Hammoer” has never been arrested and has never been even looked for; spare for a very short period of time in 2003 when for a couple of months he was supposedly “hiding from the FBI”.

What would be the conclusion then? The conclusion is very bad: those guys like “Hambali”, “KSM” and those “hijackers”, who allegedly managed to fly the aluminum-made “Boeings” through the thick steel perimeter columns of the Twin Towers and through the four rows of the Pentagon – were all bogus personalities, which have never existed in reality. I am sorry to say so, but this is the sad, fact... Nobody could fight against elementary logic. Facts are stubborn things.

Since we came to the logical conclusion that the officially “established” main perpetrators of the terrorist actions such as: the 9/11 hijackings, the 2002 Bali nuclear bombing, the Marriott hotel bombing, the Manila [nuclear] bombing, the attack against the USS “Cole”, and even the 1998 mini-nuclear attacks against the U.S. Embassies in Kenya and Tanzania on the anniversary of the Hiroshima bombing – were all bogus persons, which was overwhelmingly proven by their bogus “Malaysian Summit”, then what else could we say about the so-called “terrorism”?

It should be noted also that Khalid Sheikh Mohammad, following his capture, confessed that it was him, who personally, with his “blessed right hand” severed the head of that “American Jew” – Daniel Pearl, the Wall Street Journal reporter, who was claimed to investigate Osama bin Laden’s alleged nuclear aspirations.

Daniel Pearl; still with his head on his shoulders.

According to the new book by the Pakistani president Pervez Musharraf, “In the Line of Fire”, it was allegedly Khalid Sheikh Mohammed, the alleged mastermind of the 9/11 attacks, who was “the man who may have actually killed Pearl or at least participated in his butchery.”

Moreover, recently there was a direct “confession” of so-called “KSM” published, whereby he apparently admitted to the so-called “Military Tribunal” that:

“I decapitated with my blessed right hand the head of the American Jew, Daniel Pearl, in the city of Karachi, Pakistan. For those who would like to confirm, there are pictures of me on the Internet holding his head,” the transcript [of Khalid Sheikh Mohammed statement] read⁴⁹⁸.

Let us draw a conclusion now in this particular regard:

The supposed “kidnapping” and “murder” of that American Jew Daniel Pearl was allegedly organized by no one else than Sheikh Ahmed Omar Said⁴⁹⁹. He, in case you forgot it, was the very man who transferred those ill-starred 100,000 USD to the would be 9/11 “hijacker” Mohammed Atta on personal orders of Pakistani Lt-General Mahmood Ahmed, then the Chief of the Pakistani ISI.

⁴⁹⁸ Fox News, Thursday, March 15, 2007, Khalid Sheikh Mohammed Confesses to Daniel Pearl's Execution; <http://www.foxnews.com/story/0,2933,258907,00.html>

⁴⁹⁹ http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Ahmed_Omar_Saeed_Sheikh

Khalid Sheikh Mohammad was alleged to be “a person, bigger in the “Al-Qaeda’s” hierarchy than Sheikh Ahmed Omar Said”, because the latter claimed that he did not want to kill Daniel Pearl, but it was someone “higher than me” in the “Al-Qaeda” hierarchy who took the knife (and the entire matter) into his hands and did the job.

Now, at last, it is found that this “someone” was so-called “KSM” – the friend of “Hambali” and the main organizer of the 9/11 project.

Do you see a link? Now we know that there were no hijackers at all, that Mohamed Atta was an asset of the Pakistani ISI (and, most probably, the FBI borrowed Atta from the ISI because they needed some “hijacker” to be used in the cover-up), and Sheikh Ahmed Omar Said was also an asset of the ISI.

In such a case, Daniel Pearl was a part of the game and there should not be any doubt in this regard, because to think otherwise would be to sin against logic. That means he agreed to forever separate with his wife and his not yet born child and to pretend to be “murdered” for everybody – only to support the cover-up story that the “Al-Qaeda” was allegedly in pursuit of nuclear weapons. I guess it is clear enough.

That means that so-called “KSM” is merely one more clown who participated in the same production: he admitted to organize non-existent 9/11 “hijackings”; he admitted to decapitate Pearl, who has never been decapitated in reality. And, as you could expect, he also admitted to allegedly commit many other major actions of the so-called “international terrorism” – mostly, on behalf of Osama bin Laden.

Now everybody, who possesses logic, is welcome to make his or her own conclusions...

Actually, so-called “Hambali” and those simpletons from various secret services who have promoted him together with his friend Khalid Sheikh Mohammad in such a manner did a very good job. We have to appreciate, indeed, and to applaud loudly.

By organizing that unprecedented “Al-Qaeda Summit” in Malaysia on January 5, 2000, “Hambali”, together with his best friend “KSM”, managed to clear at once the very “Al-Qaeda” from any terror suspicions whatsoever. Which means that: it was not the “Al-Qaeda”, which attacked the USS “Cole” and it was not the “Al-Qaeda” that nuked the American Embassies in Kenya and Tanzania.

Do you want to argue? Try to argue. I wish you really good luck in your argumentation...

Who were those rogue guys who conducted the mini-nuclear attacks against the U.S. Embassies in Kenya and Tanzania on an anniversary of the Hiroshima bombing? And who were those, who attacked the USS “Cole”, if it was not the “Al-Qaeda”?

Try to guess who they were: it is quite logical to presume that it was the same people who stayed behind that circus with the bogus “Al-Qaeda” and “Jamaah Islamiah” persons as described above...

It now becomes very clear, thanks to the Malaysian Summit of the “Al-Qaeda”, to understand that it was the very same group – that attacked the World Trade Center in New York. It is very logical. It was the very same group of rogue guys who attacked the World Trade Center, who attacked the USS “Cole” and who nuked the U.S. Embassies in Kenya and Tanzania “to commemorate the Hiroshima”. It simply could not be otherwise. By the way – the USS “Cole” was apparently struck by torpedo, fired from a submarine hiding not far away, or at least by an anti-ship mine brought to the scene by certain highly qualified navy divers. One must be completely insane to believe that the U.S. destroyer was attacked by abovementioned contenders for the Gate of Heaven riding some inflated boat full of explosives as it was officially claimed...

It should be noted also, that while some actions of the so-called “terror” (such as alleged “decapitation” of the “American Jew” Daniel Pearl – who had simply changed his identity and is still alive and kicking) were truly bogus, certain actions of the so-called “terror” were indeed genuine.

It was a genuine nuclear device that “in milliseconds” reduced the Sari Nightclub in Kuta, Bali, to a pile of smoldering dust. It was a real bomb that struck the USS “Cole”. It was a real “mini-nuke” that leveled the Australian Embassy in Jakarta. And the two nuclear bombs which destroyed the U.S. Embassies in Kenya and Tanzania, as well as many other bombs (many of them nuclear) were truly genuine. Not even to say about the genuine cruise missile with its genuine half-megaton thermonuclear warhead which was found unexploded in the middle of the Pentagon...

The game around the so-called “Muslim terrorism” is far more serious than it might appear at first glance.... Even the so-called “Muslim terrorists” are indeed bogus, the bombs and especially the nuclear and even the thermonuclear bombs which are being ascribed to them, are all genuine...

Now we come back to the time of the arrest of “Hambali” 11 of August 2003 in Thailand and to his speedy extrajudicial “extradition” to “nowhere”. I just need to finish with my personal story in relation to the so-called “terrorism”.

After making sure that I would not be able to summon “Hambali” to any Thai court (since he was already flown out of Thailand), Mike Harari used his connections with the Thai police and tipped them off that I was the one who allegedly supplied “Hambali” with the fake Spanish passport. It was also tipped off that it was indeed me, the humble author of these lines, who also helped to arrange the trip of the 9/11 hijackers from Malaysia to Thailand and then – further to the United States three years ago; also by allegedly supplying them with appropriate travel documents (i.e. all that was made by “Hani Hammoer” was blamed on me; though, without explaining to the silly Thai cops that aluminum could not penetrate steel and therefore no hijackers were actually needed).

Following this denunciation, 14 of August 2003, morning time, some seven or so policemen from the Thai Crime Suppression Division (one of the elite Thai police units) with a search-warrant from the Criminal Court broke into my apartment and confiscated all my paperwork, computers etc. and also arrested me on that allegation. Unfortunately for Harari, these cops were greedy and I paid them a bribe of 1,200,000 Thai Baht (about 30 thousand USD equivalent) for closing that case on the spot. They returned to me all my property and reported to a judge (who issued the search-warrant) that “nothing suspicious has been found” in my apartment.

I immediately understood who did this and also suspected that Harari wanted to confiscate my computers particularly for a reason that I might have in them his photographs and some other sensitive information about him – remaining there from the “good old times” when we were still friendly. Indeed, I had a lot of information about him in my computers, so he was right in that sense. In order to avoid any loss of such information in the future, after my first arrest, I created back-up copies of all my important computer data and kept them in some secure places.

Since that event, even though I did not have any hard proof I was tipped off by Harari, I presumed so, and completely ceased any relationship with him. Apparently, Harari presumed also that I understood it was him who tipped me off, and our relations, since then, from the “cooled” state, transformed into an open enmity. He called me couple of times with some threats – such as that if I won’t shut up I would follow “Hambali” to the Guantanamo Bay, but I just told him that I did not care.

Also, about this time, “Hani Hammoer” disappeared and had not been seen for about 2 months, claiming later to hide himself from the FBI.

Then Harari moved to his next show.

On 12 of October 2003, Harari “staged his own arrest”. For that reason, he moved in advance from his spacious 6-bedroom apartment (because it was rented in a building known to be a kind of “protected by Israeli security zone” – i.e. the residence for their most valuable people) into a private house rented on the outskirts of Bangkok – at 51/425, Muang Ake Village, Likhog locality, Muang district, Pratumthanee province. Since he was living in Bangkok not under his real Israeli name, but under a bogus Arabic name of “Doctor Hadji Mohamed Hussein” – under this name he was also arrested in his “country residence”.

While preparing his “arrest”, Harari even grew a beard – to resemble a really “good” Muslim (or, maybe to hide a little bit of his own face – since Mike Harari was quite a well-known personage – at least among the intelligence community).

The bogus arrest of bogus “Doctor Hadji Mohamed Hussein” was organized as a very high-profile event. He was arrested by four Thai police generals who arrived to apprehend him with a lot of their subordinates. They arrived to his house with a Search-Warrant No. 720/2546, issued on October 11, 2003, by the Provincial Pratumthanee Court. Those Thai police Generals and Colonels broke into Harari’s house as early as 7:30 AM to begin a search and the search continued until 13:00 PM (at least, according to the official note of the search, later enclosed in my own case-file in the criminal court).

Above – Mike Harari (alias “Monsieur Hadji Mohamed Hussein, allegedly a citizen of France”) during his staged arrest and “search” of his new house on October 12, 2003, in Bangkok, Thailand, as photographed by the Thai secret services. These photographs were legally obtained from the case-file of the Criminal Case Black Number 5729/48 at the Criminal Court of Southern Bangkok. Stamps in Thai language on the above page belong to the Thai court and to the Thai Public Prosecutor’s office.

The above was a part of a certain 6 page long document in Thai language that was a genuine report of the bogus “arrest” staged by Mike Harari on 12 of October 2003. The rest of the pages of that document are included in the last part of this book. The arrest-report mentions Harari as “Mr. Hussein Hadji Mohamed”, a citizen of France, as well as his son Aziz, genuinely a citizen of Thailand.

If you look at that document, you will notice the age of “Mr. Hussein Hadji Mohammed” was mentioned (in digits, clearly visible in the otherwise Thai text) as only “67” – that is his alleged age, because he claimed to be born in 1936 in all his “Hussein’s” documents, including obviously those issued by France, since he was arrested as a “French citizen of age 67”.

Below the abovementioned one (at the end of the book) is a page of a classified chart (another page of it is shown in the beginning of this book) that was composed by the American FBI for their Thai colleagues. It purports to represent the conspiracy ring behind the 2002 Bali bombing and some other terrorism-related events. Here the author of this book is mentioned as “Dimitri”, Mr. “Hani Hammoer”, Harari’s subordinate, as “Hani”, Harari himself as “Hussein”, and Mr. “Nurjaman Riduan bin Isamuddin” – the acclaimed Bali [nuclear] bomber and a prominent 9/11 organizer – as “Hambali”. As you can see, the American FBI made me equal to Mike Harari. I shall be proud, indeed, of being such a big guy... This particular document is widely available in various criminal cases at the Criminal Court of Southern Bangkok, for example criminal cases Black File No.605/49; No.6009/48; No.2534/49; No.5729/48, as well as in many other criminal cases.

It is followed by a genuine court document where the Thai police citing the local U.S. Embassy claim that the author of this book and one of his partners are allegedly involved with so-called “Hambali” and with so-called “international terrorism” in general. You can see all these materials at the end of the book, but for the mean time, let me tell you the rest of the story.

The arrest of “Doctor” was also attended by the local FBI officials from the American Embassy (who probably believed that the production was the genuine stuff) and deemed almost as an important event as the arrest of “Hambali” three months earlier.

As a result of the search in Harari’s new house, there was found a stock of various empty passports allegedly found, along with forged immigration entry- and exit- stamps, some empty visa stickers to various countries, photographs of major international terrorists – apparently prepared to be fixed into their new passports, computers, printers, and some other “terrorist” paraphernalia. But it was not earlier than 10:30 AM (probably when all those things had already been “found”), when Harari requested to borrow from one of the policemen the latter’s mobile phone and used it to call an officially registered mobile phone of the author of this book, telling him the following phrase: “Dimitri, they came and found everything; I am arrested, you, please, run!” I thanked him for his kindness (it was especially “kind” of him to make such a call to me from the cops’ telephone because we hadn’t talked to each other since August) and I answered that I was not interested.

Upon his arrest in Bangkok, in the glorious tradition of “KSM”, “Hambli”, and other “heroic terrorist figures”, bogus “Doctor Hadji Mohamed Hussein” immediately confessed to a lot of different kinds of terrorist activities. He confessed to being one of the organizers of 9/11 (of course, without mentioning anything about the secret emergency nuclear demolition scheme of the WTC – he was talking about the hijacked planes only). He confessed to being one of the chief organizers of the 2002 Bali bombing, as well as to being one of the chief suppliers of various travel documents (including diplomatic passports) to various leaders of the so-called “international terrorism”.

Of course, he claimed that he performed all these activities “in the name of Islam” and did not feel sorry for what he did and he even kissed a copy of the Holy Quran to stress it (Harari always kept a copy of the Holy Quran in his house – it was permanently opened at some verse proclaiming the necessity of Jihad – and in such an opened position it was always displayed his book-shelf; although, to be fair, I have to say that he knew very little about Islam; so if you engage him into a conversation on Islamic history, or on the Islamic doctrine, or on contents of the Quran, you would be surprised at how superficial was his knowledge on this subject; this is not to mention that he could not even read the Arabic properly – his copy of the Quran was, therefore, in two languages – English+Arabic).

In addition to all his “confessions”, Harari did not forget to mention me as one of his chief lieutenants – who helped him a lot, for example – to maintain connections to people such as “Hambali”, etc.

The arrest of bogus “Doctor Hadji Mohamed Hussein” in Bangkok was a much celebrated event – since he was deemed to be the eldest and the most prominent leader of the “international terrorism”, considering his stature, his intellectual level and his age (and considering that he claimed to be nothing else than a son of late Grand Mufti of Palestine – who, in turn, was considered to be one of the top Nazi criminals).

However, Harari’s quiet release on bail the very next day – after all his “confessions” were properly recorded and signed – was not publicized at all.

The Thai police did not violate any law by letting free such a dangerous man as “Doctor Hadji Mohamed Hussein” – one of the organizers of 9/11 and of the 2002 Bali Bombing. Because they did not release him for free. He posted some bail⁵⁰⁰ to be released (probably a couple of thousand USD in equivalent, if not less). After his release, Mike Harari simply disappeared (at least for the Royal Thai Justice – he jumped bail, exactly as expected). However, all terrorism confessions, signed by “Doctor Hadji Mohamed Hussein”, remained and could be used in any legal proceedings.

On 6 of November 2003, I was arrested again – some eight Thai policemen from the Police Special Branch (an elite anti-terrorist unit of the Thai police) broke into my apartment again (I will omit the exact details here) and again arrested me and confiscated all my computers and my paperwork (but without mentioning any of these in the list of the confiscated properties). This time they did not want to accept any bribe.

They delivered me to their Special Branch Office, but there was nothing to talk about, because neither of the sides was stupid and both I and the police understood very well what was going on and what the game was. They did not even bother to ask any questions, because they would know all the answers in advance, but only told me that I was arrested on request of the local American Embassy because the eldest terrorist leader – recently arrested “Doctor Hadji Mohamed Hussein” pointed at me as one of the prominent terrorists.

The legal pretext for my arrest was that I allegedly supplied the Spanish passport to a certain “Hambali” – the leader of the “Jemaah Islamiah” organization, and that I allegedly supplied passports to some other leaders of “international terrorism” – including helping the 9/11 hijackers and the 2002 Bali [nuclear] bombers.

At the time I was still sitting at the Police Special Branch office, I saw two European men arrive there to look at me. According to my arresters, these two were from the local American Embassy – on whose request I was arrested. While I was still in their custody, two days later – i.e. 8 of November 2003 – this group of the Police Special Branch, along with one American man from the local American Embassy arrived to my apartment again – in order to confiscate the remaining stuff. That time they attempted to confiscate even the TV-set, the gift from Mike Harari. Luckily, the Apartment’s keeper, who was quite friendly with me, did not allow taking the TV-set. He demanded the search-warrant, but there only “forged documents” were mentioned, so he was brave enough to refuse giving them the TV. So, thanks to him, I still have that one in my possession.

I will omit here exact technical details of my arrest and attempted prosecution in the Thai criminal court. I would only mention that an initial attempt to prosecute me in Thailand failed and the criminal case in a local court was dismissed. However, due to persistent attempts of the American FBI to get me extradited to the United States, I was kept under detention in the Thai immigration prison from November 25, 2003

⁵⁰⁰ In accordance with Thai Criminal Procedure Code, release on bail could be granted by either the arresting police (within first 48 hours following an arrest) or by a Criminal Court (or by a District Court handling a criminal case) – after the arresters have already delivered the arrested person to the court to request for his 12 days remand, which supposes to happen within 48 hours following the arrest. In the first case (if the police granted the bail), the police would have 6 months time to complete a preliminary inquiry and to come up with charges. In the second case (if the police preferred to deliver the arrested person to the court and have already asked the court for his 12-days remand – irrespective if the court has later released such a person on bail or not), the police would have only 48 days (i.e. max. of 4 remand periods of 12 days each) to complete the preliminary inquiry and to come up with the charges.

till December 20, 2004.

The trick with the immigration prison allowed the Thais to avoid certain judicial technicalities, prescribed by the Thai Criminal Procedure Code and by the Thai Extradition Act. Actually, the Thai cops were afraid that if they brought me to the Criminal Court, I would post bail and escape afterwards. Indeed, they initially brought me to the Criminal Court and I managed to be released on bail there. So, not to repeat this mistake, they decided to keep me at the immigration prison, instead, supposedly, outside of the Thai court's jurisdiction (as they believed). At that moment, the Thais were trying to please the Americans, in a hope of getting a few more millions of dollars (they were obviously encouraged by the 10 million USD paid for "Hambali" and were sure they would get more). This play with the judicial technicalities resulted in the gravest violation of the Thai law, as this was clearly an illegal detention, not sanctioned by any court. As a result, I made a big headache for the Thai Judicial system later.

This is actually a very long story, which is too technical for this book and is interesting to professional lawyers only, so I will omit it here. In brief, I attempted to get some Thai cops (including a few colonels and a couple of generals) punished for the illegal detention of mine, that lasted over a year, and I indeed put them (and the judges who tried to side with the cops) to the corner. This culminated in the interference of the Thai Security Council that forced the Thai Supreme Court to lose its face, but to save the face of the Thai secret services. Initially, I attempted to punish only some cops, moreover, within the frames of the Thai law. But due to such attitude of the Thai so-called "justice", I was obliged to design another method of the punishment, far more severe, and, moreover, directed this time not at any particular cop, but at the Security Council of Thailand, and, by extension, at the entire Thai state. I am still hesitating whether to proceed with this design or not, because it is too damaging for the Thai state and I feel pity for it (I actually love Thailand)... But in any case, the punishment is prepared and pending (this particular notice is not for the reader of the book, because he does not understand what I am talking about anyway, but for some discerning folks from the Thai Security Council who suppose to understand very well what I mean and what kind of disaster they are facing).

The two photographs below were illegally taken by someone who smuggled a mobile phone into the prison in February 2004. These are the only photos of me available:

Here you can see the author of this book and the general conditions. People have to live in these conditions 24 hours a day, 365 days a year. And so was I waiting for my extradition to the United States. The Thai jailers do not allow their prisoners to have any walk in fresh air even once a week – so everybody who stays there can not breath any fresh air or to see any sunlight during the entire time of their detention. A maximum of physical exercise the prisoners could have is to struggle their way to a toilet and back to their allotted space on the floor. The pictures above were taken at a time when the detention cell was filled at only 40% of its intended capacity; most of the times it was twice as crowded as shown here.

I guess that the Americans were planning to initially put me into a plane and send me out of Thailand exactly like they did with so-called "Hambali", but it was not too easy in my case. Unlike "Hambali", I was not cooperative at all; moreover, I understand a bit about the law and I know very well how to defend myself. So it was not easy to perform such a trick with me and therefore the matter was bogged down and the procedure was extended for over a year. Eventually, the Americans came to their senses and realized that it would not be beneficial at all to get me to the United States and to let me testify before the U.S. court (could you imagine that all that I knew about the WTC nuclear demolition scheme would be revealed in the U.S. court, along with the exploits of Mike Harari on the field of the so-called “terror”?). So, the Americans eventually abandoned their attempts to obtain my extradition. After that, the Thai officials, who were illegally detaining me in the immigration prison in an attempt to please the Americans, had no option than to release me under some “face-saving” pretext. Since December 20, 2004, I was free.

Anyhow, my being in the Thai immigration prison while waiting for an extradition has unexpectedly proven to be beneficial to this book and to its reader. While still being detained at the Thai immigration prison, cage No. 5 (it was luckily the very cage where all “newcomers” used to be initially placed), I accidentally witnessed one of the worst tricks performed by Mike Harari in cooperation with his Thai accomplices. The problem was that bogus “Doctor Hadji Mohamed Hussein” (I mean Mike Harari) had disappeared since released on bail in October 2003, but a charge was due to be submitted to the Court because the case was really important and could not be so simply shelved.

For this reason, the Mossad hired another bogus personality to stay in jail instead of Harari. That hired person was about 50 years of age – i.e. slightly younger than real bogus “Doctor Hadji Mohamed Hussein”, who was supposedly born in 1936⁵⁰¹ (Harari was actually about 77, then), but the Mossad obviously believed that for the Thai Justice it would pass.

This new “Hussein” was “accidentally” arrested somewhere on the street and delivered to the immigration prison – exactly to the cage No.5 – where I was also at that moment. When I asked this new “Hussein” what his case was he was not able to come up with any plausible explanation and just said that he jumped bail and now the police wanted to bring him back to the Justice.

I was especially surprised when I saw Harari’s son Aziz – an 18 year old boy – visiting the immigration prison exactly at the time when that new bogus “Hussein” had arrived there. (Mike Harari had a Chinese wife – almost 40 years younger than him, now late, and a son from her – named “Aziz Hussein” – according to his bogus Arabic surname. His son was genuinely a Thai citizen, since his late wife even though from the KMT Chinese descent was a Thai citizen.)

The next day, I was surprised even more when I got a fresh copy of the “Bangkok Post” newspaper – because there was a big photograph of this new “Hussein” depicted together with the then Commander of the Immigration Service of Thailand – Police Lt-General Charnwut Watcharapuk⁵⁰² – followed by the claim that it was allegedly this new “Hussein” who supplied “Hambali” with his Spanish passport.

Below – a clip from the “Bangkok Post” newspaper, the October 1st 2004, edition, page 7, that shows a new culprit who allegedly made a passport for “Hambali”. Next day, this person will be proclaimed to be “Hadji Muhammed Hussein” who jumped bail; he will be put in jail to stay there instead of Mike Harari.

⁵⁰¹ Harari in reality was born in 1927, but according to his Guinean diplomatic passport he was 9 years younger.

⁵⁰² Soon after that event of exchanging super-bogus “Hussein” for simply a bogus one, Police Lt-Gen Charnwut Watcharapuk had been promoted two steps upwards – he became first an assistant, and then, very quickly – a first deputy of the Thai National Police Commissioner. So, by now he is the second person in the Thai Police hierarchy.

SOMCHAI LADPAISANTAKSIN

Forgery suspect

Accused passport forger M.A. Hussein, 44, a Bangladeshi, is questioned by Immigration Police after being arrested on Wednesday night in Bang Rak. He was earlier arrested in March 2002 but skipped bail and fled overseas. Police said he later travelled in and out of Thailand on a false Burmese passport. He is believed to have produced a fake passport for Hambali, a Jemah Islamiyah suspect who was arrested in Thailand last year.

New bogus "Husseini" was later handed over (I personally witnessed that exact event) to prison guards who arrived to pick him up from the Bangkok Central Prison and later I learned that "Doctor Hadji Mohamed Hussein", supposedly a citizen of France, had been convicted on various terrorism-related charges and sentenced to 25 years of imprisonment, but because of his guilty plea the punishment was reduced to 12 years only.

Some legal copies from his criminal case-file are available; also available are more documents from his file of inquiry – i.e. those never submitted to the Thai Court – even those including the real photograph of Mike Harari taken during his arrest 12 of October 2003 are also available. The photograph of the new bogus "Husseini" is also available – along with that "Bangkok Post" article I have mentioned above.

I need also to add here that when I was eventually released from the immigration prison, I attempted to visit Mike Harari (I mean "Doctor Hadji Mohamed Hussein") in Bangkok Klong Prem Central Prison, building 6 – where he supposedly served his 12 years sentence for the “terrorism”. Of course, “he” (I mean the man who really stays in the jail in his stead) simply refused to meet with me, which was quite understandable.

Eventually, I had decided to submit to a prison chief a certain letter with attached photographs of Mike Harari – I mean the real bogus “Doctor Hadji Mohamed Hussein” and photographs of the bogus “Mr. Hussein” – who was his 25- or even 30-years younger replacement. In that letter I requested the prison chief to investigate what was the irregularity. The request was simply ignored – apparently the chief of the prison, as well as the chief of Thai police (who got a copy) have also got their share of money.

Second “indirect” checking of the true personality of the suspicious prisoner in the Building No.6 in the Klong Prem Central Prison named “Hadji Mohamed Hussein”, a citizen of France, undertaken in September 2007, through the means of a private detective, revealed that this queer “person” has been changed at least twice since then: during this second checking it was not any longer a “Bangladeshi-looking” personage bearing that name – like the one shown in the “Bangkok Post” article, but some square-faced Arabic-looking guy, being apparently in his mid 40-s.

At last, it was found that “Doctor Hadji Mohammed Hussein”, a French citizen, had been transferred from Thailand to France under some inter-governmental agreement and he will supposedly serve the remaining part of his prison term in some French jail. His transfer occurred somewhat in the beginning of 2008.

The strange thing was that in May 2007 I informed the local French Embassy, that a citizen of France, a certain “Dr. Hadji Mohamed Hussein”, was a bogus person, who acted as a cover for Mike Harari, who, in turn, was the chief organizer of some important acts of the so-called “international terrorism”. It took me approximately 4 hours describing all these technical and legal details, as mentioned in this book, to two gendarme officers at the French Embassy in Bangkok. It seemed that at learning of all these things, both were visibly shocked, especially when they got to know that it was a French citizen who organized all of it. So, one could rightly expect that the French Government would undertake certain measures in this regard. Indeed, it “undertook” the measures: the bogus person was promptly transferred to France...

It shall be noted also for those possible readers who are interested in the purely legal aspects of this problem, genuine photographs of Mike Harari (alias “Doctor Hadji Mohamed Hussein, citizen of France) during his abovementioned “arrest”, of fairly good quality, in color, are available in the case-file of the Criminal Case Black No.5729/48 at the Criminal Court of Southern Bangkok. The genuine note of “arrest”, though in Thai language, legally obtained by the author of these lines, is also available and its scanned copy is enclosed at the end of this book. From there it could be obtained a lot of purely legal information – i.e. names of the arresting police, search-warrant number, criminal case number, exact date of search, the exact name of Harari’s son Aziz, the fact that “Doctor Hussein” was indeed a French citizen, etc.

Since I was released from the Thai immigration prison, I managed to meet a couple of times Mr. “Hani Hammoer”, with whom, despite all the troubles created by Harari, I managed to retain more or less friendly relations. From “Hani” I have learned that the 9/11 operation was sanctioned by the then Prime-Minister of Israel Ariel Sharon – whose duty was to say the final “Yes” – in accordance with the Mossad’s subordination procedure. He claimed that it was Sharon who supposedly put his signature on a certain document allegedly permitting Mike Harari to proceed with the entire 9/11 project. Following all scandals and suspicions arising from that commitment, “Arik” had decided that enough was enough and had simulated a few unbelievable strokes while pretending to be paralyzed. According to “Hani”, who has bitterly complained about Sharon’s “Jewish mentality”, Sharon, who was indeed healthy like a bulldozer, came up with that simulation only in his desperate attempt to escape any responsibility for his signature under the sanction in case of a major scandal over the 9/11 affair. At that instance, “Hani” claimed that since Doctor⁵⁰³ himself was almost 80 years old and would soon pass away due to his old age, and with Sharon pretending to be “a vegetable” (though being fit enough to secretly play tennis in his back yard), all blame for 9/11 in case of any major inquiry would be put on the younger people like himself. He was then extremely unhappy with such a development.

Strangely enough, “Hani Hammoer” is still available in Bangkok up to this day (at least he was still ⁵⁰³ When “Hani” talked to me, he always referred to Mike Harari as “Doctor”. I have heard also that even in Panama many people used to refer to Harari as “Dr. Harari” also. Harari himself also preferred to be called “Doctor” even when you address him directly – only those who knew him for many years were entitled to call him “Mike”.

available on the second week of March, 2009), despite being officially “wanted” by the American FBI for the Hambali affair.

I was surprised to learn that “Hani Hammoer” was arrested for some petty crime and stayed in the Bangkok Remand Prison for a few weeks in 2008. It so happened that I went to that prison to visit a certain not unknown Mr. Viktor Bout – the so-called “Merchant of Death” and the “Lord of War” – whose character supposedly inspired a notorious Hollywood movie of the same name (it so happened that Victor resided in the same small village with the humble author of these lines and therefore I felt obliged to help him with his case). Viktor was at that prison fighting the extradition charges in the Thai Criminal Court. During one of such visits, I noticed “Hani Hammoer” in the visiting room and found out that he was there for some alleged petty financial fraud. Surprisingly, “Hani Hammoer” stayed there under the very same name “Hani Hammoer” – under which he was wanted by the FBI in 2003 for producing the fake passport for “Hambali”. But despite “Hani’s” status being obviously verified in the police computer, that should contain all records of other charges, this did not lead to any extradition request from the United States, neither to any local prosecution for that “Hambali” affair. In a few weeks, “Hani” was released on bail, as could be expected.

There is no doubt that he was planted into the prison for spying on Viktor Bout – since Victor was arrested shortly before these events. Unlikely “Hani” had anything else to do inside the prison.

What about the “Doctor” himself? I was surprised when I found out that Mike Harari, at his venerable age, was appointed to be a Counselor for Political Affairs at the Israeli Embassy in London⁵⁰⁴. As to this day (this being written November 14, 2007) Mike Harari exists in two hypostases – as “Doctor Hadji Mohamed Husseini”, supposedly a “French” citizen, he serves his 25 years punishment of imprisonment (reduced by half due to his guilty plea) for the so-called “terrorism” in the Building 6, Klong Prem Central Prison, Ngam Wong Wan Road, Bangkok, Thailand (don’t forget that later he would be transferred supposedly to serve the remaining part of his sentence in France). But as Mike Harari – he serves the state of Israel at the Israeli Embassy to the United Kingdom.

Political Affairs

The political aspect of the Embassy's work is represented by three diplomats:

His Excellency Dr Zvi Shtauber, Ambassador of Israel

Minister Zvi Rav-ner, Minister Plenipotentiary

Counsellor Michael Harari, Counsellor for Political Affairs

Since I presume that someone will not believe me, or it might be possible also that those contents of the ⁵⁰⁴ Israeli Embassy’s website: <http://www.israel-embassy.org.uk/web/pages/polithm.htm>

web page would be changed in the future, I decided to make a commemorative screenshot of that webpage, so it would exist forever in this form (see above).

Do you think the FBI did not know that it was Mike Harari who [supposedly] organized 9/11? You are badly mistaken if you think so. As early as on November 13, 2001, there was some unprecedented information published on the Internet⁵⁰⁵ suggesting that it was Mike Harari who did the job.

Here is the screenshot from that web page in case you disbelieve or in case the so-called “good guys” would modify or remove that web page upon publication of my book (make sure to notice the date of the publication of that post that is clearly visible in grey font):

Screenshot of webpage at <http://www.mail-archive.com/ctrl@listserv.aol.com/msg80246.html>

It was, of course, unofficial information titled “is michael harari the 9-11 mastermind?” But look – it was on November 13th, merely two months after the 9/11 events. And do you think the FBI did not know about it? You must be very naïve if you think that some private “conspiracy theorists” (that did not exist yet in November 2001, by the way, since they appeared only 4 years later) would suspect that the job was done by Mike Harari, while one of the most serious secret services in the world (which is the American FBI) would miss to notice this fact... It should be rather presumed that the folks who published this suggestion in November 2001 had somehow acquired this seditious information that was leaked by the FBI.

Do not even doubt that the FBI knew everything. Hence this strange Internet page published on November 13th, 2001...

I have to add here, however, once again:

I do not believe that Mike Harari and Co. were indeed capable of organizing such an expensive, complex, and extremely well-planned project as “9/11”, not to say capable of executing it in the almost flawless manner. I do believe that this theatrical production with the supposed “guilt of the Mossad”, that was so unprofessionally obvious and unbecoming a serious secret service, was designed to distract attention of the gullible from the real perpetrators of 9/11 – the Freemasonic sect, and to switch this attention to the usual scapegoats – the “evil Jews”.

But it does not mean, of course, that Mike Harari was not guilty. He, at minimum, knew about 9/11 in advance, and he was celebrating the 9/11 execution, being in a genuinely celebratory mood, and I was an eye-witness thereof.

⁵⁰⁵ <http://www.mail-archive.com/ctrl@listserv.aol.com/msg80246.html>

French secret services and the 9/11 Vendetta.

It might sound strange that the French secret services were involved into 9/11. But it is the matter of fact that France had something to do with it. You cannot escape from facts. We have to deal with this reality.

First of all, I should remind you that it was the French State that intervened on behalf of Mike Harari and arranged the transfer of the bogus prisoner “Doctor Hadji Mohamed Hussein”, supposedly a citizen of France, from Thailand to his “country of origin” to serve the remainder of his prison term (it is explained at the end of the previous chapter in detail). Oddly enough, this unprecedented transfer of “Hussein” occurred in a timely manner: only in a couple of weeks the humble author of these lines was planning to summon this “prisoner Hussein” to the Thai Criminal Court to be a witness in a criminal case related to so-called “Hambali” and to some other so-called “terrorists”. I had already submitted the proper paperwork to the Court requesting a hearing to talk about this matter, so the Court was aware they would be put on the spot very soon. You could probably imagine what would happen then in the Thai court-room once such a bogus “prisoner Hussein” who was at least 30 years younger than necessary would be brought in and his face would be compared in front of the judges with that of the real Doctor Hadji Mohamed Hussein (the real Mike Harari) that was available inside the case-file... That is why the French Government’s interference in this process came exactly on time.

Why would the French Government participate in these events, one might ask? Would not it be better for France to simply deny that the new alleged “Doctor Hussein” was a French citizen and to state that all his claims to that effect were false?

Unfortunately, it was not so easy. Something was too much wrong from the beginning to go such a simple way. It appears that France had been involved with Harari from the very beginning and, due to this fact, it could not abandon this process in the middle. Apparently, Harari could not use his own Israeli passport for travelling. He was too well known to many serious people under his real name; moreover, he was wanted by at least two countries (Norway and the USA) for his crimes and they might also apply for his extradition from any third country he appears in.

On the other hand, he could not travel too easily with his Guinean Diplomatic passport, copy of which is shown in the corresponding chapter of this book. Firstly, a Guinean passport, even though diplomatic, needed a visa to almost every country, and it was not really convenient for “Doctor Hadji Mohamed Hussein” to apply for these visas. Imagine that Harari is first of all a white person, while 100% of Guinean population is African black and this fact is known to everybody. When he came with his Guinean Diplomatic passport to any foreign embassy to request a visa, it attracted a lot of undue attention from everybody around. It was not what such a secretive person as Harari would wish. In addition to all of it, because his Guinean passport was not an ordinary one, but diplomatic, Harari could not hope that he would keep a low profile when visiting foreign embassies. It is a matter of courtesy that upon a visit of a foreign diplomat he must be attended by some diplomat from the embassy, rather than by an ordinary clerk who deals with ordinary visitors. All of it was not really convenient for him, as you might guess.

Luckily, Harari speaks perfect French – his French is far better than his English or his Spanish, not to say that it is better than his Arabic (which he seems not to be able to speak at all, despite bearing an Arabic name and claiming to be a Doctor). Considering all of this, there are certain reasonable grounds to believe that Harari indeed used a French passport for his extensive travelling around the world. Frankly speaking, I have never seen with my eyes any French passport in his possession. I have seen only his Guinean Diplomatic and his Venezuelan passports (and later also his Uruguayan Diplomatic and South-African passports). But it does not matter that I failed to see a French passport of his. Harari had no duty to show me everything he might possess. I remember that in one instance, in 2002, Harari went to Switzerland to open a secret bank account there. He told me that he would travel there on his South-African passport acquired especially for that reason and he did not want to use his Guinean Diplomatic passport in that case. When he came back from Switzerland, I accidentally got hold of his South-African passport and noticed that there was no entry stamp in it into Switzerland. I understood that he lied to me and then I managed to quietly check his other three passports – Guinean, Venezuelan, and Uruguayan, and in neither of them there was any stamp to- or out of Switzerland. Apparently, he travelled there on some other passport, which I have not seen.

Therefore, I am certain that he had a French passport, and apparently not only a “passport” as a book, but the very right to possess such a French passport. It seems that France had really entitled him to use its nationality. First of all, when Harari staged his bogus arrest on October 12, 2003, he was mentioned as being a “citizen of France” in the arrest-report (a genuine copy of it is at the end of this book for your reference). Why would Thai policemen, who came to arrest him, state his nationality as “French” in official documents covering his arrest when it was very clear that “Hadji Mohamed Hussein” according to his name was an Arab, according to his place of birth (Jerusalem) he was an Arab too, and, according to his Guinean Diplomatic passport he was an Arab as well? There was simply no reason to suspect that “Doctor Hadji Mohamed Hussein” might have been a French citizen, considering all these particulars. Why was he mentioned in the arrest-report of the Thai police as being a “citizen of France”? And why was he mentioned in Bangkok Central Prison registration section as a “citizen of France” too? And why was he eventually transferred to France to serve the remaining part of his prison term for the so-called “terrorism”? Would not the French officials who arranged his transfer to France notice that something was wrong with his particulars if “Doctor Hadji Mohamed Hussein”, an apparent Arab by the name, were not genuinely a citizen of France?

Try to be realistic when considering this possibility. Just imagine that you are a French judicial official – whose job is to arrange transfers of prisoners of French nationality from foreign jails to France.

You come to Thailand because you have learned from your superiors (or from local French diplomats) that there is one French citizen who serves his prison term for terrorism (!) in Thailand; and you wish to transfer him to your home country. You studied his case and you found out that the prisoner, being supposedly a national of France, oddly bears an Arabic name – “Hadji Mohamed Hussein”. Moreover, he was not even born in France, because it is clearly stated in documents that he was born in Jerusalem, Palestine.

Next you saw that he was born in 1936 (Harari was born in 1927, actually, but in all his documents it was stated that he was born in 1936). Then you could probably imagine how he may look like, considering his age. Then you see photographs of Mike Harari in a case file and you get surprised first, because you see that an old gentlemen on these photos looking at least 10 years older than he claims to be (because in reality he was born in 1927, rather than in 1936, and he looks accordingly in those photos).

Then you decide to go to the Bangkok Central prison to talk to him in person. And you get surprised even more, because the actual prisoner behind bars whom they call to talk to you does not look like those photographs in the case file you studied before your visit. He looks about 30 years younger than necessary.

So, you ask this “Doctor Hussein” (who was actually accused of “terrorism”, just to remind you) – are you really a French citizen, of Arabic descent, born in 1936 in Jerusalem? You hear an answer: Yes, sir, I am the one. Then you probably say: OK, dear, I believe you. Just begin to pack your things. Tomorrow you will fly home. To serve there a remaining part of your prison term for your “terrorism”.

The next day, you come with an escort of armed French police (you are dealing with a terrorist, after all, don't forget) and also together with their Thai colleagues (also heavily armed). The cops from the armed escort that came with you are surprised at seeing such a young-looking terrorist who was born in 1936 according to the documents, but you convince them that there is nothing wrong with it. So, you sign all necessary documents, receive that accused “terrorist” from the Thai jailers (in handcuffs, of course), and bring him to the airport. There you convince Thai immigration officers that this 45-years old guy was indeed born in 1936 (because staying in Thai jails usually makes prisoners look that much younger), and put him into a plane bound for France.

Upon arrival, you also convince the French immigration officials to the same effect – that the Arab terrorist you brought with you, who is in his mid-40s, was indeed born in 1936. You sincerely believe that this “terrorist” you brought to France from Thailand is indeed a French citizen, Doctor Hadji Mohamed Hussein, born in Jerusalem, Palestine, in 1936, and you do not have even a slightest doubt about it. That is why you sound very convincing. The French immigration officers believe you at once. They have no doubt as to his true identity. It is just normal for them that typical Arab terrorists holding French nationality usually look 30-35 years younger compared to their true age as stated in their official papers.

That is why after successfully passing through the French immigration checkpoint, you proceed to bring “Doctor Hussein” to some French jail and, at last, you hand him over to the French prison authorities. And you also convince them to the same effect: that he is the right person. The French jailers receive him from you accordingly: thoroughly check all his particulars, take his fingerprints, take his mug-shots, and register him as “prisoner Hadji Mohamed Hussein”, born in 1936, in Jerusalem, Palestine, citizen of France, accused in Thailand of “terrorism”, and punished by the Thai Criminal Court for 25 years of imprisonment, commuted by half due to his guilty plea.

Now this “prisoner Hadji Mohamed Hussein” begins to serve his remaining prison term in France, his home country. You have done a good job. And you go home, at last, to have a rest from your long and tiring journey to Thailand. And you feel that your conscience is clear: you did the right thing – you brought home a citizen of France.

Does the abovementioned development sound realistic to you?

You should remember from the previous chapter how so-called “Hambali” was taken out of Thailand on his way to Jordan. It was done in the dark corner of the airport, first of all, all lights were off, and security was extremely tight. But this “Hambali”, at least, looked about the same age he claimed to be. In order to bring out of Thailand and to deliver to France “Doctor Hussein”, who was more than 30 years younger than necessary, it would not be enough to only turn all lights off in airports upon his departure and arrival. It would be necessary also to put a sack over his head. And to convince immigration officials that this guy is too dangerous to allow strangers to see his face. But this would be reasonable actions in regard to his identity. What about his French nationality – this is another story. Thai prison officials would simply refuse to hand him over to the French authorities unless the latter provide sufficient proof that this “terrorist” was indeed a citizen of France.

Do not even doubt that everything about his French nationality was genuine. It could not be otherwise – “Doctor Hadji Mohamed Hussein”, the alias of “Mike Harari”, was either a real citizen of France, or, at least, he must have been granted some very special protection from top French Government officials; and under such protection, he was entitled to claim that he was indeed a French citizen. And all his claims to this effect must be immediately confirmed by the nearest French Embassy. If not, the abovementioned trick would simply fail to work.

Harari was a citizen of France. It is the fact. And he was protected by France, despite being known for his terrorist activities. It is another fact.

By the way, Harari himself told me many times during our endless conversations on various topics that he was a personal friend of former President of France François Mitterrand.

Apart from the fact that Harari’s French citizenship was apparently genuine, there must be also a genuine involvement of various French officials who arranged a genuine transfer of his bogus replacement from Thailand to France, as described above. Without the serious involvement of the French security- and other officials this unprecedented transfer of the bogus person, who was 30 years younger than necessary (and apparently has different face features, not to say different fingerprints), would never be possible. I hope you realize it.

Now, as we have at last established that France definitely had something to do with Mike Harari and his protection, we could also guess that France had something to do with the 9/11 perpetration.

Why do I think so?

It is because before the French officials had arranged that unprecedented transfer of Harari’s younger replacement from the Thai- to the French prison, they had learned from me about all the real details of the 9/11 perpetration. As I have said, I spent about four hours explaining to the two French security officials about real facts pertaining to the WTC triple nuclear demolition, and about the personal role of Mike Harari, alias “Doctor Hadji Mohamed Hussein”, allegedly a citizen of France, in that perpetration.

What do you think must have been behavior of the French officials upon learning that they were accidentally harboring no one else than the chief organizer of the entire 9/11 project (as well as the chief Bali nuclear bomber)?

I guess they should have promptly denounced any protection they previously provided to such an evil person and launch a very serious inquiry into that matter. Probably, they must also cooperate with their U.S. colleagues in conducting such an inquiry. At least, you should expect them to do so.

In addition, you might expect that some responsible French security officials would try to contact me (the author of these lines) in order to obtain more legal details about all those affairs. I was the only available person who was legally entitled to obtain copies of various documents from criminal cases in Thai courts in relation to all these events. I could do that because of being a party to some cases and no one else in Thailand or anywhere in the world ever had similar rights. I was an absolutely unique person in that sense. In all, I had access to 13 different criminal cases all related to extremely sensitive matters – such as so-called “Hambali”, “Hani Hammoer”, “Doctor Hadji Mohamed Hussein”, etc. Considering these opportunities, it would be quite reasonable for the French security officials to contact me over these matters and to try to obtain from me some more information regarding their own “French citizen” who had actually organized the nuclear demolition of the WTC...

Surprisingly enough, they have never contacted me again. But by no means had they forgotten about “Doctor Hadji Mohamed Hussein”. They arranged for his transfer from Thai prison to France exactly on time: when he was about to appear in a court-room of the Criminal Court of Southern Bangkok and to be unmasked officially – in front of the judges (I was the one who arranged that summon of him as a witness). What could that action mean? It means that France had obviously something to do with the entire 9/11 project from the very beginning. It simply could not be otherwise. Facts are stubborn things...

What could be a real reason of France’s participation in such an action against the United States?

If you employ a concept of modern so-called “political correctness”, you would never be able to see any reason at all. To be able to notice this reason (or reasons), you must be a really free-minded person, absolutely free from any slavish complexes. Remember it: only a free-minded person can use his brains freely.

Before investigating any crime it is good to look at all possible motives.

First of all, what is France as a state?

Let us be honest with ourselves. France was once a truly great country. Until very recently, it was a mother country which possessed a lot of colonies in Africa, Asia, and elsewhere around the world. Even today, she still possesses a few of them. It was once very influential not only in “black” French-speaking Africa, but in the Arab world as well. French language until very recently was a “lingua franca” in the world and only recently French was replaced by English in that particular capacity. Besides, French was an official language of diplomacy until very recently. Almost all countries in the world used French as a primary international language in their national passports intended for travel abroad. It was replaced by English in that capacity only some 20 years ago. Just only 70 years ago it was still a necessity for any and every educated person anywhere around the world to have a good grasp of French. Even today, French still remains the second official language of the United Nations Organization – but only as a mere reminder of its former importance.

Of course, as you might probably imagine, this kind of development is not liked by many French people at all. They still believe that French is a great language and it must remain lingua franca even today. However, their aspirations are in vain – French has clearly lost to English (which is primarily being associated nowadays with USA, rather than with England).

Until very recently, France could boast its own pop-music and its own indigenous cinematography – probably the best of its kind. But all of this is in the past today. Nobody is going to listen to French songs and nobody is going to watch any French movies. All cinema-theaters are engaged by cheap Hollywood production only, so no room remains for any alternative. The truly best French cinematography is dead. The same thing could be said about remaining aspects of the French cultural inheritance. The exquisite French culture has apparently lost to the so-called “mass-culture” primarily associated with the United States and the English language.

The same could be said about the French education system. It clearly lost to the American one on both school- and university levels. Nobody craves today to enlist at the Sorbonne as it used to be. Everybody wants to study in Harvard today, or at the worst case – in Oxford or Cambridge.

It is very clear that France as the state and everything that used to be associated with its former culture is on the losing side nowadays. It is the sad fact whether you like it or not.

As you might probably imagine, all these developments are not really welcomed in France. A lot of French people sincerely believe that something has gone badly wrong in this world. And many of the French, especially educated people and especially those who tend to think independently, would not miss to notice that the true culprit behind their losses is the very United States of America.

In addition to all these cultural losses, France has suffered great economic losses too. As long as one loses its influence somewhere, someone else would quickly take his place. Everywhere the French lost their influence; they were replaced by the Americans. It is mostly the American-based multinational corporations that spread their tentacles everywhere around the former "third world" – a good third of which used to belong to France. It is primarily American-made weapons that are being sold today everywhere around the world, rather than the French-made ones.

France has lost too many things during the last decades of the 20th century. It no longer produces its own computers, neither its own computer software. France does not produce any domestic electronics today. It no longer produces its own communication equipment. Its once flourishing automobile industry is on a sharp decline today. The same could be said about the once flourishing French civil aviation industry.

France still struggles in a very few specific branches of industry – such as the nuclear power plants construction, for example, and in space exploration, but even there her efforts look not more than a mere agony. Nobody wants to have new nuclear power plants anymore after the so-called "Chernobyl disaster"; and her space flights are more a matter of prestige than that of any income.

In addition to all of it, France managed to lose her very statehood. She is no longer a state today, but merely a province of a certain "European Union" – very much like a kind of "Moldavia" while a part of the former Soviet Union. France no longer controls her own borders, no longer has any currency of her own, police from other European countries can freely operate on her formerly sovereign territory. And soon France will lose her remaining national symbolism – her passport, her coat of arms, her flag, and her national anthem – which will all be replaced by some unified symbols common for the European Union. That will be her real end.

Actually, I loved France. It was a really good country. And I feel pity for what has happened with this country. But what could we do? We have to deal with the reality: now we have France, a former great country, populated by the proud French people – who still consider themselves great, and these people who apparently love their France, obviously cannot reconcile themselves with all the losses suffered by their great nation. I hope any reasonable person free of slavish complexes would fully agree with my observations in this regard (even though these observations of mine are obviously not "politically correct").

Let us take a closer look at some other aspects of the former "greatness" of France.

France was the first country in the world that freed itself from the corrupt rule of former kings as a result of the greatest Revolution in history – the event which is being widely celebrated even today, when everybody has forgotten about freedom and the word "revolution" begins to sound negative.

France participated in World War I and managed to become a winner in it.

France participated in World War II and somehow managed to become a winner even in World War II.

France was the third country that managed independently – entirely on her own – to develop nuclear and thermonuclear weapons after the World War II. It was the third most powerful nuclear state – far more powerful than China. As one prominent French politician used to say: "The Americans and the Russians could destroy the earth 1000 times over. France could only do it once – but that is enough."

Moreover, it was actually France that took the lead in nuclear science prior to the World War II – thanks to the breakthrough research by Pierre and Marie Curie. France developed her own peaceful nuclear industry. French nuclear reactors were probably the best in the world.

France developed her own indigenous space industry as well.

France also developed her own supersonic aviation – both for military and civilian purposes. Her "Mirage" was the fastest jet-fighter in the world and her "Concord" was the fastest civil airliner ever built.

France was obviously the third greatest country in the world – immediately following the United States of America and the Soviet Union. Nobody could argue against it. Relatively small and relatively poor France, having smaller population compared to that of the U.S. and the USSR, and also devoid of many needed mineral resources, still managed to match, on her own, practically all the greatest achievements of these two huge countries.

Now, please, try to imagine, considering all of this, how proud must be an average French citizen of his motherland?

And now, again, please, try to imagine how proud of his country must be some specific French citizens – those who decided to serve in this country's secret services. Imagined?

And now try to imagine, that France is still technically a “great” country, even today, even after all her losses described above. France boasts one of the most active and efficient intelligence and counter-intelligence apparatuses – comparable only to those of the United States, the UK, the former USSR, and Israel. And the secret services of France are apparently staffed with some specific people, who love their great France much more than you could even imagine.

Could these people in the French secret services have some grudge against the United States?

Oh, yes. Do not even doubt that. Many of them share the general dissatisfaction of the French people over the losses suffered by France, and by French language, and by her cultural and economic inheritances. And many of these people are reasonable enough to realize that most of these things they lost to no one else than to the United States of America. Besides their general dissatisfaction with the Americans' advances everywhere in the world, the people from the French secret services might have certain specific reasons to harbor a grudge against their American colleagues.

What could be these “specific reasons”, you might ask?

Let us begin with the U.S. intervention into former French Indochina (Vietnam, Cambodia, and Laos) in the '60s and the '70. Although from the political point of view, it might look like the “cowardly” French lost to the Communists in that area, and faint-heartedly escaped, while the “brave” Americans came in to amend the situation, it does not look entirely so from the point of view of the secret services. From their point of view, it looks like the Americans kicked out the French from the latter's important zone of influence, and turned the former French domain into a zone of influence of their own.

Add here that the American CIA also appropriated the entire heroin business in that area, wresting it from the hands of the French secret services, which initially organized it. This may not be well-known on the “political” level, but on the level of certain French officials, especially those of the corresponding age, it is surely remembered.

Some of the newer “specific reasons” we are talking about was that as a result of the first “war against Iraq” (orchestrated by the U.S. secret services, at least, obviously) France, one of the main oil operators in Iraq, was simply kicked out. The same count put an end to a promising nuclear cooperation between France and Iraq that was highly beneficial to France.

It is also good to remind that France lost more as a result of the so-called “Chernobyl catastrophe” than even the former USSR, against whom it was originally directed. It was nothing else than the “Chernobyl disaster” that effectively put an end to a promising development of the peaceful nuclear industry that was one of the primary objectives for the French national economy. Actually, if you try to recollect all those events that followed the “Chernobyl disaster”, you will be surprised to notice that France did not share the Chernobyl hysteria. French nuclear scientists were rather trying to prove to the contrary – stating that a nuclear reactor could not explode by definition. But their honest opinions were nothing but a voice crying in the wilderness in 1986...

Now you might probably imagine – how much those French who knew certain dirty secrets about the 1986 “Chernobyl catastrophe” might hate those guys who stood behind both – the actual “catastrophe” and the intense anti-nuclear hysteria that followed.

But there was one more recent event that might have eventually exasperated the French secret services.

There was one peculiar issue between these two countries that dates back to July 25, 2000, when Air France Flight 4590 – the Concorde flight from Charles de Gaulle International Airport near Paris, France, to John F. Kennedy International Airport in New York City, New York, operated by Air France – crashed in Gonesse, France, killing all 100 passengers, 9 members of crew, and 4 people on the ground, in addition. It was the only accident that ever happened with the Concorde since the beginning of its operation in 1969, but this very accident delivered a mortal blow to the Concorde's existence. That accident eventually led to a demise of the entire Concorde's operations and production. The demise happened not immediately, of course; the Concorde managed to drag on for another 2 years, but eventually it happened.

As a result of that “odd” tragedy, the only available supersonic passenger plane – the beauty Concorde, the very pride of France and that of every citizen of hers – was dead... The word “is” is no longer applicable to the word “Concorde”, but only the word “was”. There is no more beautiful supersonic passenger Concorde in this world. And no more chance that they might re-appear one day. And it was pretty clear from the beginning that the Concorde was put on death row on July 25, 2000.

An ensuing inquiry, as you might expect, had “established” that it was an “accident” (did you seriously expect those guys to point to the U.S. secret services as possible culprits of Flight 4590 catastrophe?), but that was the “plebeian” version of the “truth”. But I hope the reader of this book does not think that the secret services of France are staffed with “plebeians”? Of course, they are not. The serious people, who serve in the French secret services, apparently, do not even bother to read that “plebeian” version of the “truth” in regard to Flight 4590 catastrophe, which turned to be the catastrophe for the entire Concorde enterprise and a winning point for the Boeing Corporation...

There is no hard proof, of course, as to any involvement of particularly the United States’ secret services into that “accident” (it might have been done by some other secret services), but the serious people have never had even the slightest doubt that it was a state-sponsored terror action and that it must be retaliated against, one day.

There are some reasons to believe that the Mossad, which abides by the principle “divide and rule”, somehow managed to provide its French colleagues with a certain hard proof that it was the American secret services who stood behind the Flight 4590 catastrophe. Still, it could be a false presumption, because the Mossad (which professes the “divide and rule” religion) could as well organize the Flight 4590 catastrophe on its own – with an intention to blame it “secretly” later on its U.S. counterpart.

In any case, to investigate the disgusting intrigue behind the Concorde catastrophe is apparently beyond the scope of this book. Here we only try to talk about possible motives of the French secret services to bear a grudge against their U.S. colleagues. And we managed to find some of such motives, at least. Apparently, there were certain sound reasons why the French secret services might wish to provide some help to their Mossad colleagues – who decided to wage their little 9/11 war against the United States. It should not be surprising then why the French provided Mike Harari with such unprecedented assistance as described in the previous chapter.

The reader might not believe, of course, because these allegations against the French are too serious. But the fact remains, whether you like it or not: the French protected Mike Harari in the manner described above, knowing for sure that it was him, who organized the 9/11 affair. Why should they do that?

Let us try to put ourselves in their shoes. Let us imagine that you are some high-ranking French intelligence officer, who is in his 70s, who was brought up a long time ago, and who is apparently healthy enough as not to believe in any modern garbage such as “international terrorism”, “money laundering”, “drug trafficking”, and especially in so-called “human rights”, “democracy”, and “international cooperation” – all of which make sense only to zombies, but not to free-minded people.

Just try to look at this world by his eyes. What could you see? You will see that:

- 1). The United States secret services (namely its “CIA”) were the first who organized a high-scale “drug trafficking” in a modern sense during the Second Indo-China war (moreover, stealing that business, which was initially of a much smaller scale, from the very French secret services). And that they continued such business even after that by installing their puppet – General Manuel Antonio Noriega – in Panama.
- 2). You will see that it was the United States secret services who created Osama bin Laden and his so-called “Al-Qaeda” – which are being accused today of the so-called “international terrorism”.
- 3). You will see that it was the United States secret services who installed Saddam Hussein and who ordered him to occupy Kuwait.
- 4). You will see that it was the United States secret services that created so much trouble for the civilian nuclear industry – one of the main sources of income to the French State.
- 5). You will see that it was the United States clandestine efforts that greatly increased oil prices, simultaneously discrediting the civilian nuclear industry.

6) You will see that the United States is simply destroying France, her former might, and her very sovereignty by making her dependent on the oil prices that could be controlled from across the ocean...

7) And at last, you see that the same guys are destroying the French aircraft industry by all methods that they could invent – including even purely terrorist ones.

What do you think – if you are in his shoes, would you really like the United States?

Just try to be honest with yourself.

If you are really a French patriot in his 70s with that kind of knowledge and without any slavish complexes – that are typical to younger people – you would probably dream of destroying the United States by a massive thermonuclear strike.

Or, in a moderate case, you might probably dream of only shooting down a couple of hundreds of the Boeings in different parts of the world and simultaneously wish that an illicit drugs flow into the United States would increase by at least 100-folds. Because the United States simply deserves all of that.

Just try to imagine that not everyone in this world has reached that state of mind which is dubbed a “new thinking”. There are quite a few people alive, especially from older generations, who still remember the World War II and those values that were in use among the humanity before that War. And these old people think differently compared to those youngsters whose minds are damaged beyond repair by the so-called “political correctness”.

And now just try to imagine that such a hypothetical “old-thinking” person is approached by Mike Harari – a long time acquaintance from the friendly secret service – who offers to teach those Americans a lesson – such as provoking them to detonate their own thermonuclear charges right in the middle of New York City. And to shoot down several passenger “Boeings” of their own, in addition to the thermonuclear explosions in the middle of the city. Would you like the idea?

Probably you would, if you were really in his shoes, not in your own ones. Why not? 9/11 was not the real thermonuclear strike against his enemies, after all. It was only a beautifully conceived provocation – intended to exploit the enemies’ own greediness, their own cowardice, and their own stupidity. Just try to imagine that to send a digital image of a plane into a Tower and simultaneously sink a real plane empty of passengers into the Atlantic Ocean is a lesser offence than to bomb the Concord plane full of passengers with a real explosive device.

As for me – I do not think that a really free-minded person of an older generation who belonged to the French secret services would refuse himself a pleasure to participate in such a beautiful action, taking into account all those psychological and other aspects described above.

If you try to look at the entire 9/11 perpetration with the eyes of an unbiased person, free from any “political correctness” and from any other slavish complexes, you will see that it was not really Mike Harari and his accomplices who murdered most of the 9/11 victims. It was the U.S. Government. Only a few people (if any at all⁵⁰⁶) were killed by initial explosions in the Twin Towers designed to imitate the “planes” impacts, because there are hard reasons to believe that nobody alive was present on those mined “impact zone” floors that were about to be blown up. All those who were really killed in the Twin ⁵⁰⁶ It seems that no people were present on those floors that exploded with those famous Hollywood-styled orange flames upon being stricken by the “planes”. Firstly, there are hard reasons to believe that all offices in the would be “impact zones” were rented exclusively by accomplices of the 9/11 planners. Otherwise, it would not be possible for them to so nicely pre-position charges of explosives to imitate holes made in the steel perimeter columns by the “planes”. It would be logical to expect that everybody was evacuated from the “impact zones” prior to the actual “impacts”. However, as many people could see on their TV-screens, there were some apparent “human bodies” thrown out of the South Tower to the streets as a result of those initial explosions. Those flying bodies were clearly visible on corresponding footage. And indeed, those bodies were found on the streets beneath where they eventually fell. But the strange thing was that on none of these dead bodies was there either: a wrist-watch, or any cash, or any piece jewelry, or a wallet, or any identity document, or any credit card, or any phone-book, or mobile phone, or anything at all that could at least somehow identify the body. So it was pretty clear that all those “dead” bodies were brought in from some morgue and were in fact dead well before hitting the street as a result of those orange Hollywood-styled explosions.

Towers perished as a result of the thermonuclear blasts that collapsed the Towers, and definitely not as a result of the initial “planes” impacts. And it was the U.S. Governmental officials from the Department of Buildings who approved that thermonuclear demolition of the Twins, while being perfectly aware that several thousands of people remaining inside and around the Twin Towers would be killed in the demolition process. It was the U.S. Government who sent to ground zero unprotected firefighters, cops, construction workers, and other volunteers – to their certain death in the aftermath of the cleanup operation. It was the U.S. Government that ordered to shoot down passenger planes in panic. And even those anthrax letters were sent with an apparent U.S. Government’s consent, if not under its explicit order...

If you look at all these events from that point of view, you will notice that it was the U.S. Government who was responsible for almost all counts of murder committed on 9/11. You might disagree, of course, but it would be very, very difficult to argue against these observations. And those smart guys, who planned the 9/11 affair, knew well in advance that all cases of murder that it would entail would be perpetrated by the Americans themselves; primarily – by the U.S. Government. There was only one minor miscalculation, actually, in this regard: a missile, fired at the Pentagon, proved to have much more penetrating capability than they could expect – so it accidentally killed several people in the Pentagon, which was presumably not planned.

Now, if we throw aside all moral concerns and all “political correctness” along with the rest of slavish complexes, such a so-called “patriotism”, and try to evaluate the 9/11 planning only judging by its performance alone, we would notice something interesting. 9/11 was a very beautiful combination. It was brilliantly planned and brilliantly executed.

If you are really unbiased, you have to give the culprits their due: they showed us a flawless performance... It was marred only by the personal greediness of some of its participants – who wished to gain some additional profits by speculating on a stock market based on prior knowledge of the 9/11 events (some 9/11 participants were Jews, after all, so it is not actually surprising). But if not for this particular mercantile component, the entire 9/11 project could be considered beautiful. It would receive top marks in any secret service’s evaluation. Do not even doubt. And a part of its apparent beauty, the 9/11 performance was not really a terror action in a full sense of this word. It was truly the Vendetta – starting with the capital “V” – that was primarily aimed to strike at the very wickedness of the adversary. Apparently, sound-minded adversary’s officials would not demolish buildings in the middle of their own big city by thermonuclear explosions, would not order military pilots to cowardly shoot down unarmed passenger planes simply flying their routes, and would not send gullible volunteers to clean places of recent nuclear explosions without issuing them proper protective gear. Would they?

What do you think now – if you were that high-ranking French intelligence officer, in his 70s, absolutely free-minded, would you refuse to participate in such a beautiful “9/11 Vendetta” – offered by your foreign colleague? Where all its victims would be killed not by the avengers, but exclusively by cowardly irresponsible actions of the targeted government?

Just try to be honest with yourself: it is very unlikely that you would deny yourself such a pleasure in such a case. And that is exactly why there are all reasonable grounds to believe that several high-ranking guys from the French secret services were very glad with everything that went on September 11, 2001, just across the Atlantic Ocean. Because they knew that something like this was going to happen there.

Now let us conclude about the possible involvement of France and its secret services into 9/11. These are the stubborn facts, whether you like them or not:

1) It was the French Government that provided the French passport and the French nationality as a cover for Mike Harari’s secret operations. What do you think about it? Does it sound reasonable to you?

2) It was the French Government that eventually covered up Harari’s younger “double” in Thailand and got him to France from the Thai prison. In doing so, the French knowingly prevented Mike Harari from being unmasked in the court-room in Thailand when the humble author of these lines attempted to do this by requesting the court to deliver him from the prison as a witness. Just try to realize this: it was not the Israelis, it was the French, who saved him in that case. What do you think about this particular irregularity? Do you think it was a “coincidence”? Especially considering that the person they transferred from Thailand to France was an obviously different person than the one stated in court- and prison documents?

Perhaps, I have to remind about something important that otherwise might miss your attention. There are quite a few videos (both “professional” and “amateur” ones) that showed how the second aluminum plane penetrated thick double-walled perimeter of the WTC South Tower. The fact that such videos are many is conditioned by “logic” – there were many cameras riveted to the upper floors of the Twin Towers because of the explosion and fires in the North Tower; so these cameras “logically” captured the second event. It was not so, of course, with the first aluminum plane (that penetrated steel perimeters of the North Tower). Since it was a normal day, nothing special occurred in the upper floors of the Twin Towers prior to the first “impact”, there logically should be no camera-man pointing his camera towards the Twin Tower’s tops in anticipation of anything. If someone was anticipating the first to strike the first (North) Tower and was in a stand-by position with his video-camera, then that person shall be deemed an accomplice of the 9/11 perpetrators. I hope the reader is logical enough to realize this. The Freemasons were logical enough too. That is why, while quite a few videos exist in regard to the second “plane”, no videos shall exist that showed the first “plane”, because it is simply logical. One video that showed the first “plane” managed to pop up, nonetheless. This infamous footage, known among 9/11 researchers as the “Naudet brothers’ video” was shown on September 11, evening time on all TV channels. So here is the third point:

3) It was two French camera-men who managed “to capture” on their video camera that alleged passenger “Boeing”, which managed to penetrate the steel perimeter columns of the North Tower (the first WTC Tower that was “hit by the plane”) and to completely disappear inside of it. Please, do not make any mistake: these able Naudet brothers⁵⁰⁷ were not the Israelis, not the Americans, but the French.

Do you think this is minor evidence? You are badly mistaken if you think so.

As you probably know, there were NO PLANES in reality that were able to so successfully cheat La Guardia air-traffic controllers by entering unnoticed into their airspace, flying right into the Twin Towers, and completely disappearing inside their thick steel double-walled structures. Thus, anyone, who managed to “see” these non-existent “planes” with his eyes was either a true accomplice of the 9/11 planners; or was either a stupid dreamer who wanted to appear an “important witness”, or, possibly, he could be ordered to do so by the FBI in its ensuing cover-up.

However, the above observations concern only those who “saw” the alleged “planes”. It is a totally different story when it comes to those who managed to “capture” these “planes” on their video- or photo-cameras. Those who went as far as to produce digital video manipulations with the “planes hitting the Towers” and supplied with their works all main news agencies could only be true accomplices of the 9/11 perpetrators. It simply cannot be otherwise, because otherwise it would contradict elementary logic.

In fact, the Naudet brothers, who managed to capture the first “Boeing” hitting the WTC North Tower, represented the first and foremost proof that the French secret services had been involved into the 9/11 planning from its very beginning. Because if not, then upon their arrival to France these two able “camera-men” must have been arrested and interrogated over their evidently proven involvement with other 9/11 perpetrators.

Just think about it – if the French secret services were really innocent, serious guys who work there would not fail to notice that the “planes” which “hit” both Twin Towers were digital. And they would not fail to notice that the two French citizens had apparently participated in these unprecedented events. Don’t you think that it would be enough to arrest both those bogus “camera-men”? It would be more than enough. People who serve in the secret services, especially in those belonging to France, are not stupid. Do not even doubt it.

To continue this thought: now imagine that the French secret services seriously believe that it was indeed the two mini-nukes belonging to Saddam Hussein and Co. (or to Osama bin Laden and Co.) that brought down the Twin Towers – as secretly claimed by the U.S. Government for high-ranking officials (a/k/a “patricians”). In this case, the two French citizens, who managed to “capture” on their video-camera the first mysterious “Boeing” disappearing inside the North Tower as a cover-up for its nuclear-demolition by

Saddam's mini-nuke, were nothing less than accomplices to the real nuclear terrorism. You cannot argue against elementary logic...

Considering logic of the above said, we may conclude that there could be only two possible scenarios.

a) The French secret services are staffed with morons, who sincerely believe that aluminum planes could really penetrate steel structures (simultaneously deceiving La Guardia air-traffic controllers by flying into their airspace unnoticed), and that these two able French camera-men managed to capture one of such odd events – “oddly” occurring with their video-camera “on” in the right spot and in the right time.

When you consider this particular possibility, you have to be realistic. The 9/11 attacks were an absolutely unprecedented event hitherto unknown in the history of humanity, as well as something interesting to all secret services. Do not even doubt, that all these “aerial attacks” must have been duly analyzed by the French secret services, who made their own analyses, without waiting for the ravings of the 9/11 Commission to be published. Of course, during their internal inquiry, the French secret services would also consult various specialists – both in aviation, and in skyscrapers construction. Do you think that a French specialist in aviation, invited as an expert to such an inquiry, would suggest that the 9/11 production with the “planes” could be true? Or do you think that a French specialist in skyscrapers' would challenge the former and claim that aluminum planes could indeed penetrate buildings in the manner shown on TV? In that light, it would be stupid of us to expect that the French secret services could believe such a notion that it was “two passenger planes” that managed to fly unnoticed into La Guardia airspace and to strike the Towers in the manner captured by the French citizens, the Naudet brothers. Just think about it.

b) The French secret services are staffed with reasonable people, rather than with morons. And it was the very French secret services that deployed these two French camera-men near to the WTC cite and ordered them to proceed with their unprecedented work. And the French secret services did so in order to provoke their American colleagues into demolishing the Twin Towers by the in-built thermonuclear demolition charges.

Which of the two abovementioned possibilities seems believable for you – “a” or “b”? Make your choice.

4) There were no French citizens killed in the World Trade Center's collapse. The only other state that could boast the same rate of “good luck” that befell its citizens was Israel. There is not any mistake in this assertion. I repeat it again: there was no French citizen killed as a result of 9/11. Not even one.

Just for comparison. Here are some digits officially published on September 18, 2001: Austria lost 40 of its citizens; Bangladesh – over 50; Brazil – at least 55; Belgium – 60; Britain – at least 100; Cambodia – 20; Colombia – 295; Denmark – 5; Ecuador – 33; Egypt – 4; El Salvador – at least 100; Finland – 17; Germany – 270; Hong Kong – 19; Ireland – 24; Italy – 57; Japan – 24; Malaysia – 7; Mexico – 19; Philippines – 117; Portugal – 5; Russia – 117; Spain – 9; South Korea – 19; Thailand – 19; Turkey – 131; Taiwan – 9; Zimbabwe – 6; France/Israel – 0/0.

Do you really believe in such coincidences? Please, do not believe in them in this particular case – it would be against the laws of mathematics. Thousands of French used to work in the Twin Towers. The French were definitely more numerous among the WTC tenants compared to the “resident” Bangladeshis or Cambodians. Although “someone” has duly doctored the list of the former WTC tenants and you could hardly find any true information in this regard nowadays, it shall be presumed that at least a few French companies were present in each of the Twin Towers. That is not to mention that the French Embassy Financial Services Company used to be one of the tenants of the Twin Towers on that fateful day. In addition, many French could have been employed by non-French companies there. And even casual tourist visitors to the WTC from France would definitely exceed in their numbers those possible tourists from poor Bangladesh or Cambodia. Do not even doubt. Please, look again at the list of the victims per country above and try to apply your common sense to the stated proportions.

5) Unlike the United States of America, the United Kingdom, Australia, Denmark, Poland, and some other primitive countries, France did not join that crowd of simpletons who were in a hurry to go to “evil” Iraq to search for the alleged “weapons of mass destruction” – following 9/11 and the 2002 Bali “car-bombing”. Prudent France was obviously not in any hurry at all to “disarm Saddam Hussein from any alleged weapons of mass destruction”, “to stop Saddam's alleged support for international terrorism”, or “to free Iraqi people". France clearly abstained from participating in any stupid action following the 9/11 affair. Just think about it.

6) All flights of the Concorde were completely halted following the "accident" on July 25, 2000. But soon the Concorde flights were resumed. It was clear that the Concorde would not survive anyway after that "accident", but it was just a matter of principle to resume the Concorde flights at least for a little while – to demonstrate that the Concorde would die by natural death, rather than as a result of the murder attempt.

The first resumed passenger Concorde flight took off from London to New York on September 11, 2001. It was the British Airways flight, not the French operated one, but it does not actually matter. It was the Concorde flight. The Concorde was then the symbol of France – almost as meaningful as the Eiffel Tower. And the flight occurred on that very date: September 11, 2001. That Concorde was in the air – approaching the U.S. East Coast – at the moment when the first aluminum "Boeing-767" succeeded in penetrating steel double-walled perimeter columns of the World Trade Center Twin Towers, which were the very symbol of American imperialism, and being simultaneously filmed by the two French camera-men who "luckily" appeared with their video-camera "on" at the right spot and in the right time.

Do you believe in coincidences? As for my humble self, I do not; especially, when such coincidences occur in this kind of circumstance. That Concorde flight was apparently a hint, a very transparent hint, from some guys who loved their Concorde and who felt deeply injured by what had happened with it on July 25, 2000.

Thus, you can be sure that not everybody was in the bad mood following the 9/11 events. A certain citizen of France – Monsieur Hadji Mohamed Hussein, for example, was nearly dancing and celebrating by drinking collection wines (the humble author of these lines was an eye-witness of that, just to remind you). And there are sufficient reasons to imagine that there were many more people of the French nationality dancing and drinking collection wines at seeing the 9/11 news. And not all of those dancers and wine drinkers were Muslims as you may expect.

Someone might argue that the Mossad has made a lot of troubles for France. For example, it thwarted to some extent a fruitful nuclear cooperation between France and Iraq and between France and Iran. This is not to mention the so-called "Islamic Jihad" that nuked the French paratroopers in the Beirut barracks bombings in 1983, simultaneously with the U.S. marines. So, all of it must prevent the French secret services from cooperating with their Israeli colleagues in such an action.

Yes, it is true: the Mossad did something wrong to France, but the Americans apparently caused much more damage to France compared to the Israelis. The French have much more reasons to hate the Americans than the Israelis. Whether you like it or not.

Do not forget also that it was France that helped Israel at the very beginning to embark on its clandestine nuclear weapons development. It was the French-supplied "research reactor" installed in Dimona that allowed the Israelis to accumulate Plutonium-239. And it was the French-supplied nuclear weapons technology that was badly needed by the fledging Israeli nuclear scientists at the very beginning of their own nuclear weapons program. And it was France, after all, which allowed Israel to test its nuclear and thermonuclear charges in their Moruroa nuclear testing facility.

Do not believe this particular claim? Don't forget that the author of these lines used to serve as an officer at the Soviet Special Control Service – whose primary duty was to detect nuclear tests. That is why I always had a keen, "professional" interest in this particular thing. During our endless conversations with Mike Harari on various topics we used to discuss that topic too – because I was always surprised how it was possible that there never was an Israeli nuclear test detected by our Service. And it was explained to me by Harari why. Since then I am surprised no longer. But for those readers who are still surprised, I shall explain what is the nuclear testing and what is the Israeli nuclear testing.

It must be known that it is NOT possible to make any nuclear or even thermonuclear charges without their testing from time to time. This is an axiom. Because you can never be sure that your nuclear charge would really explode.

Israel is known to have a lot of various nuclear weapons – starting from Plutonium-based mini-nukes and Uranium-based tactical bombs, to huge-yields strategic thermonuclear warheads. But never has a Israeli nuclear test been detected by any controlling services of any country. Not even one. Because Israel has officially never tested any of its nuclear weapons in either atmospheric, or in underground conditions (save for its mini-nukes, of course, which it routinely tests in the field conditions in the disguise of “truck bombings”, and save for one peculiar anonymous nuclear explosion on September 22, 1979, in the Indian Ocean, which was believed by many to be an Israeli test, while some others believe that it was a South African test, because Israel simply did not need it – considering its very special relations with France, and considering that a single 3 kiloton test would not be enough for an extensive Israeli nuclear weapons program anyway).

How about Israel’s thermonuclear warheads, which are attached to its ballistic missiles that are currently in service? Do you seriously believe that Israeli nuclear scientists just designed these highly sophisticated thermonuclear warheads by only some guessing and also “hope” that these thermonuclear warheads would “most likely” explode when necessary? And this guessing of the scientists is also shared by the Israeli military which might launch these missiles one day? Who also “hope” that these thermonuclear warheads would explode in case of good luck? Because their respectable scientists hope so?

Do not be so naïve. Israeli specialists do not “hope”. They are absolutely SURE that all their thermonuclear warheads and other nuclear munitions would not fail to explode. And they have not even a slightest doubt about it. Because they have duly tested every design of their nuclear and thermonuclear charges. Tested “somewhere” where detonating such devices would be noticed, of course, by various controlling services, but the nuclear devices would be ascribed to another country – without causing any concern over the so-called “nuclear proliferation”.

Try to guess now where could Israel test them? Considering that any and every underground (not even to say about an atmospheric) nuclear explosion would be immediately detected by other countries?

Israel has not many options. There are only three countries that conducted great numbers of nuclear tests which may have technically allowed the Israeli testing program to secretly “fit” in. And two more countries that conducted a little number of tests only. And two more that conducted only a few tests.

The first group is represented by the United States, the former USSR, and France.

The second group – by the UK and China.

And the third group – by India and Pakistan.

That’s it. No more countries in the world are entitled to conduct any nuclear testing.

With whom of the abovementioned could Israel secretly test its nuclear weapons, do you think?

With the former USSR? Its main adversary? It is not plausible. These two countries were enemies to the extent that there was not even diplomatic relations between them. Not to say that some targets in southern parts of the USSR were permanently aimed at by the very nuclear missiles possessed by Israel.

With India or Pakistan? It is not plausible either: these countries are not true members of the officially designated so-called “nuclear club” and they are considered to be “nuclear pariahs” that are narrowly missing international sanctions against them for such testing. Do you think these two poor nuclear beginners, who managed to carry out only a few nuclear tests of their own (and these tests, moreover, greatly annoyed the international community), might agree to accommodate ambitious Israel for that reason? It is impossible.

China? The Communist country? Which supports Arabs, Iranians, and various anti-imperialist- and anti-Israeli movements, and, besides, conducts not so many tests of its own? It is absolutely impossible.

The United Kingdom? It is impossible. Especially considering its “love” for Israel. Besides, the United Kingdom does not conduct much nuclear testing leaving simply no room for any strangers to fit into.

The only two potential candidates remain: France and the United States. Whom you would bet on?

Someone might suspect, of course, that Israel secretly tests its nuclear and thermonuclear weapons at the U.S. testing facility in Nevada. But it is not as simple, as it might appear. First of all, the United States was always against the nuclear proliferation, so that the U.S. would never ever help Israel to develop, not even to say test its own nuclear weapons. The United States was actually pushed to the corner when the first proof appeared that Israel possessed the nuclear weapons of its own.

The United States logically should have exerted pressure on their official protégé Israel forcing it to abandon the illegal nuclear development, because the U.S. was the very country that spearheaded the campaign to stop the nuclear proliferation. But, unfortunately, the U.S. could not force Israel to do so, because of Israel's firm position on this issue: it was stated clearly that Israel would never ever stop the "clandestine" development of its nuclear weapons. The United States had nothing than to accept its defeat and to leave Israel alone with its nuclear ambitions. But it does not mean that the Americans are really happy with that state of affairs. It shall be known also that Israel has even blackmailed its "patron" on several instances by showing that it prepared to deliver nuclear strikes against its enemies – such as Syria, Egypt, and Iraq – with only a reason to get some concessions from the United States. And Israel eventually got all these concessions from the United States, because the nuclear blackmail does work in this world.

Do you think that the United States really likes that kind of behavior? You don't even have to doubt that the U.S. is extremely unhappy with the Israeli nuclear weapons and it always was.

Now, what do you think – if the United States Government, being an official patron of Israel, after all, knew about Israel's dangerous nuclear ambitions from the very beginning, when it was still possible to stop them, would the U.S. connive? Surely, it would not. The United States would force Israel to abandon its nuclear program as vigorously as it did in the case of North Korea, Iraq, or Iran. Do not even doubt it.

It was not the United States of America who helped Israel to develop its nuclear weapons. It was France. France also heavily depended on Israel when these two countries jointly developed their nuclear weapons in the '60s and the '70s. Some technology was contributed to a common cause by the French nuclear scientists, some – by their Israeli colleagues. In addition to all of it, it was necessary for both countries to obtain certain secrets concerning foreign nuclear- and especially thermonuclear technology. The French secret services were apparently not able to steal some tightly guarded U.S. secrets that concerned designs of thermonuclear weapons. Therefore, it was done by the Israeli secret services who simply exploited an opportunity that a lot of scientists of Jewish blood worked on the American thermonuclear research program. The Israelis shared these secrets with their French colleagues and this greatly helped the latter with their own thermonuclear weapons development. But Israel does not have any Uranium, so Uranium was supplied by France. Along with some tritium badly needed for the thermonuclear weapons – especially for so-called "neutron bombs", which Israel boasts to make on its own.

These two countries simply needed each other. They were the partners. And they continue to be the partners even up to this day. They continue to develop their nuclear weapons jointly. This is a matter of fact. Whether you like it or not. Considering all of this, don't you think that Israel tests its nuclear and thermonuclear charges at the official French testing facilities on the atoll Moruroa – in the disguise of the French-made nuclear charges? Or you prefer to believe that Israel does not test its nuclear and especially its thermonuclear weapons at all? And has never tested them before? You prefer to believe that Israeli nuclear scientists and military officials would rather "hope" and "believe" that their thermonuclear warheads would really explode when necessary, instead of simply testing them to this effect in the testing grounds kindly provided by their longtime partners? Who conducted all together several hundred tests? Blessed are those who believe...

Someone might ask yet another question – why would the Mossad require help from the French secret services in preparing the 9/11 project? Could not the Mossad cope alone?

It is a good question, which requires a good answer. First, of all, as I have told you a couple of times, I do not believe that the Mossad was the principal organizer of the 9/11 project. It was not capable of doing so in any case. It was not enough rich. It was not enough numerous. Its level simply did not match the level required to conceive, to plan, to prepare, and to execute such an enormous project as 9/11. The Mossad could only be an accessory to such a perpetration. Moreover, an accessory, which was designed to become the 9/11 scapegoat. It simply cannot be otherwise.

And, secondly, of course, the Mossad could not cope alone. And even the Mossad plus the French could not cope together. It shall be always remembered that the 9/11 project was not the project of any secret services. It was the project of the Freemasonic sect. Some secret services were merely accomplices of the Freemasons. The Israeli ones – because the Freemasons traditionally put the "evil Jews" as a front for any outrageous action; it is just a modus operandi, while the Mossad is merely a branch of the Freemasonic sect (read more about it in a separate part of this book titled "A Big Lyrical Digression"). The French ones – apparently because the Freemasons managed to convince them that to participate in such an action against the United States would be good in a sense of satisfying someone's personal vindictiveness.

But why involve the French in the first instance? Couldn't the Freemasons execute 9/11 without the French? Most probably, they could, and the French were not really needed. But in this case, I believe that some Israelis decided to involve the French, as not to be alone. The psychological explanation is this.

Let's say, you are a petty criminal who is planning to commit some serious crime. You have two options: to venture alone and to take all the possible blame (and the punishment in case of bad luck) alone; or to invite some prominent criminal to be your accomplice, so in case of bad luck the possible blame (and the punishment) would be shared between you.

What would you prefer? Especially, considering that you are the smaller criminal and your accomplice is the bigger one – so when the punishment would be meted out, it would be divided according to your size and prominence?

I guess you get the point. The Mossad simply could not venture into such an enterprise alone. It would be too risky for the small state of Israel. Way too risky. While the Freemasons hate the Jews and the state of Israel, it is not so with the folks who serve in the Mossad. Although the Mossad is indeed a branch of the Freemasonic sect and not that of the Israeli Government, it is still staffed with the Jews. And so the Mossad, in any case, must have a certain pro-Israeli sentiment. At least so my logic suggests to me.

That is why much bigger France was invited to participate in that enterprise. To share the blame and the punishment – in case of bad luck. And to get nothing – in case of good luck. France was merely a potential scapegoat taken along; just "in case"... This, I think is the answer.

Did France get any benefit out of the 9/11 affair? Apparently, not at all. Save, possibly, for some private moral satisfactions of certain high-ranking individuals working in her secret services. It was Israel that got a lot of benefits: World War against Muslims at someone else's expense, restored sympathies of Europeans towards Israel, more concessions for Israeli secret services, fall of Iraqi regime, etc. etc. etc.

Of course, I could easily be wrong when it comes to the true motives of the French that drove them to participate in the 9/11 project. I just offered my guessing only. Maybe there was some other reason. Maybe the Freemasons did not mind that the Mossad also involved the French, because it would additionally mask the Freemasonic participation in 9/11. For an observer it would be clear that it was Israel+France who did the job, and so he might fail to notice those so-called "good guys" behind the so-called "curtain". But anyhow, the point is not in "why" France participated in 9/11, but in the very fact of her participation, which is proven. So, here is the stubborn fact: France was heavily involved in the 9/11 events and it is proven. Of course, someone might argue that this is nothing but a conspiracy theory. Unfortunately, this is not a "conspiracy theory".

It is the matter of fact that France was involved with both: planning and execution of the 9/11 perpetration. As well as with an ensuing cover up. France has her fingerprints all over the 9/11 project. Still don't believe? Try to answer then why would the French government officials help Mike Harari in his odd games with the Thailand justice system – to the extent that they even provided Harari with the genuine French documents and managed to get his younger "double" out of the Thai jail to France? Especially considering the unprecedented circumstances and the fact that they managed to do it exactly on time... Do you have any reasonable answer?

And now try to answer the same question in regard to the two French camera-men who miraculously managed "to capture" that non-existent Boeing "hitting" the WTC North Tower – i.e. who managed to occur with their video camera switched on exactly on the right place at the right time and to produce a "scene" which did not exist in reality.

And now look again at numbers of killed on 9/11 from various countries. And think – why 20 Cambodians and 295 Colombians were killed – in sharp contrast to 0 and 0 casualties from France and Israel?

Against this background, the very Concord flight, which was "oddly" resumed exactly on September 11, 2001, might indeed appear a mere "coincidence". Compared to the rest of the "coincidences"...

By the way – the described above resumed Concord flight that first occurred on September 11, 2001, was not the only 9/11 hint. There was one more hint. Oddly published on the 10th of September, 2001:

Russia's 'Shipwreck' missile enigma solved

By Richard Scott, JDW Naval Editor, London

Newly released information and photographs have lifted the veil of secrecy long surrounding Russia's P-700 Granit long-range anti-ship missile (SS-N-19 'Shipwreck'), regarded as the most feared Soviet anti-ship cruise missile of the Cold War era.

It also reveals Granit as the progenitor of the Yakhont supersonic anti-ship missile, which designer NPO Mashinostroyeniye is now marketing for export.

The bureau says Granit was conceived in the late 1970s specifically to interdict US carrier battle groups. Both conventional and nuclear warheads can be deployed.

ADVERTISMENT

The actual article, of which screenshot is shown above, still existed on the Internet here: http://www.janes.com/defence/naval_forces/news/jdw/jdw010910_6_n.shtml as on March, 2010, but it was removed by the authorities after the author of these lines began to publish his materials. However, I have the saved copies of that web page and it could be sent upon request to the reader for verification reasons. The above one is not a screenshot directly from the web-page (because it no longer exists), but from the saved copy of that web-page that I likely kept in my collection; therefore, unlike other typical screenshots made by me, this one does not show the address-bar with the corresponding web-address.

As you can see, only one day before 9/11 a certain Richard Scott, JDW Naval Editor, London, has published a unique article which had direct relevance to the Pentagon strike that would follow in less than 24 hours after the publishing... It was claimed in that article precisely that:

"Newly released information and photographs have lifted the veil of secrecy long surrounding Russia's P-700 Granit long-range anti-ship missile (SS-N-19 'Shipwreck'), regarded as the most feared Soviet anti-ship cruise missile of the Cold War era..."

and

“...The Oscar II-class submarine Kursk, lost in the Barents Sea in August 2000, had conducted a Granit live-firing trial just before it went down. A further 22 missiles are reportedly still aboard the wreck, due to be salvaged from the seabed later this month. ...”

Mr. Scott made sure to include word “reportedly” into the above description of the 22 missiles.

This unprecedented article was followed by photographs of that hitherto top-secret Cold War era “Granit” missile. So that the next day some “patricians” just across the Atlantic Ocean would not need to rake their brains for too long trying to figure out what exactly was that odd missile with an unexploded thermo-nuclear warhead found in the middle of the Pentagon...

Do you believe in coincidences, still? Do not believe. There are no coincidences in This World. Everything has its meaning. Professional inquirers and especially intelligence officers know this rule very well.

Oh, we almost forgot about a certain “Mr. William Tahil, B.A.” – who first advanced the concept of “nuclear madness” by publishing his unprecedented book⁵⁰⁸ named: “Ground Zero: The Nuclear Demolition of The World Trade Centre. Incontrovertible Proof that the World Trade Centre was destroyed by Underground Nuclear Explosion.”

As you probably remember, we have already encountered his book twice – one time while disproving the “clandestine nuclear reactors conspiracy theory”, and second time – when wondering about the odd supernatural abilities of Mr. Tahil, who managed to figure out the exact position of one of the underground “clandestine nuclear reactors” in between WTC-3 and the North Tower – at the end of the Chapter of this book named “Technicalities of the WTC-7 collapse and the rest of the WTC collapses from the logical point of view. Unproven suspicions”.

Do you know what the very first words in his book are? They are about the same as those in my book (the one you are currently reading). William Tahil explains to his reader the true meaning of “ground zero”.

His epigraph reads: “Ground Zero: the point on the ground directly under the explosion of a nuclear weapon.”

Note, he does not say that this is the point where a nuclear reactor has exploded. It is the point where a nuclear weapon has exploded. He does not make any mistake in that sense.

However, Mr. Tahil proceeds to explain “scientifically” that it was two so-called “clandestine” nuclear reactors 50 meters deeper than the lowest underground foundations of the Twins that ended up in the “two nuclear explosions” – which pulverized the Twin Towers and led to their collapse in clouds of fine dust. Otherwise, his book is really scientific (word scientific without any quotation marks) – in sharp contrast to mine, because I did not indulge in any chemical formulas and fission sequences. Here are, for example, contents of Mr. Tahil’s book:

Please, look at these contents – does it not look like it was written by some true nuclear scientist?

Just imagine that someone operates by terms such as “Fission and Decay Pathways”, “Chemistry of Nuclear Fission”, “Half Life”, “P Waves” and “S Waves”, “Seismic Magnitude and TNT Equivalent”, “Gravitational Potential Energy of WTC”, and “Discriminating Between Explosions and Earthquakes”...

What would you think of a person, who knows these very words? Does it look believable that such a knowledgeable guy would indulge into “proving” to his gullible readers that it was “clandestine nuclear reactors” that ended up in “two atomic blasts” under the Twins – using such scientific terminology?

Could it be real that such an apparent nuclear scientist would claim such an idiotic notion, moreover, trying to “prove” it to us using all that scientific argumentation as mentioned in the above “Contents” of his book?

What do you think?

Mr. Tahil does not actually state plainly that he is an author of his book. He put his claims in a rather peculiar way: “William Tahil asserts his moral right to be identified as the author of this work.”

I thought at first: it was a little bit immoral – to exercise one’s moral rights in such a manner...

At first, when I read his book, I suggested that Mr. William Tahil, B.A. might be a comedian, and his book might be a comedy.

But now, after contemplating once again over the role of the French in the 9/11, I have a new suggestion.

His work is not a comedy. It is satire. The French lost to the Americans many things, including the truly best French comedian cinematography, but they apparently retained their actual sense of humor (actually, in this case not even their “sense of humor”, but their “sense of satire”).

Mr. William Tahil, B.A. in fact, serves as a Director of Research at the “Meridian International Research”. Tel: +33 2 32 42 95 49; Fax: +33 2 32 41 39 98 (“33” is an IDD code of France in case you don’t know, which only means that Mr. William Tahil, B.A. is no one else, than a French scientist).

Do you recall the 1986 Chernobyl hysteria – when the French nuclear scientists tried hard to prove that a nuclear reactor could never explode? Because they realized that the “Chernobyl disaster” was nothing but a premeditated murder of the then flourishing French nuclear industry? But their opinion was the voice crying in the wilderness?

Apparently, starting from the 9/11 nuclear catastrophe, the French nuclear scientists have “changed” their opinions and switched to “prove” to the contrary. Asserting that it was their moral right.

From now on, Mr. Tahil’s book does not look to me like an intentional misleading of “Barbarians”, as I thought initially. It would not be serious to presume so when you contrast Mr. Tahil’s ridiculous statements about “nuclear reactor resulted in nuclear blast” against his sheer level of scientific knowledge. It rather looks like a gloating delight of the French nuclear scientists over the 9/11 nuclear event in the middle of New York City.

Are you still unsure that France had “something” to do with the 9/11 Vendetta?

Then try to read this chapter over again very slowly and very carefully. I hope you will get my points.

P.S. Oh, I almost forgot to mention one important detail regarding the French. In his infamous book titled “Decision Points”⁵⁰⁹, ex-President George W. Bush revealed that the U.S. officials were warned at least twice on 9/11 (Bush describes the second warning, but did not explain the details of the first one) by the French intelligence officials regarding some alleged “Islamic terrorists” allegedly responsible for 9/11 attacks. Here is the quote (page 136 of the printed edition; may be different page number in an e-Book):

“...On the flight back, Andy [Andrew Card] and CIA briefer Mike Morell came to see me in the conference room. Mike told me that the French intelligence service had provided reports of other operatives – so called sleeper cells – in the United States planning a second wave of attacks. It was a chilling phrase, “second wave.” I believed America could overcome the September 11 attacks without further panic. But a follow-on strike would be very difficult to bear. It was one of the darkest moments of the day....”

⁵⁰⁹ eISBN: 978-0-307-59062-6

Try to be realistic when analyzing this. It is highly unlikely that G.W. Bush lies to his gullible reader at this particular point. Although he lies throughout his entire book, for example, talking about Barbara Olson's alleged participation in the suicidal strike against the Pentagon right in the very next sentence after the part quoted above, at this point he obviously reveals the truth. When it comes to me, I have no doubt that the French intelligence officials indeed "warned" their colleagues from the United States. Moreover, I am 100% certain that it was particularly the French, rather than the Israelis, who managed to convince the U.S. officials in regard to the thermonuclear warheads allegedly delivered by the hijacked planes that stuck inside the upper parts of the Twin Towers. So, it shall be presumed that the French indeed convinced the Americans that aluminum planes could penetrate steel WTC Towers. The mere fact that after such a bogus production as the 9/11 affair, the French continued to "confidentially" inform their gullible U.S. colleagues about "more attacks" by alleged "sleeping cells" (as if it were indeed the "woken up cells" of Arabs who fed the fake videos of digital planes to various TV channels) is the 100% proof of the French involvement. Logic is stubborn thing as you probably know...

Secret services of Thailand and their role in 9/11.

It might sound strange that Thai secret services were somehow involved in the 9/11 affair. But, in fact, it is not as strange as it might appear at the first glance. As you could notice from the previous chapter – it at first sounded strange too in regard to their French colleagues, while by the time you reach the end of that chapter you should lose all your initial doubts. Secret services of the Kingdom of Thailand were heavily involved in the 9/11 affair. This fact is absolutely out of questioning. Do you need a proof of the involvement of the Thais? Here is it:

Please, read again the incredible story of “Doctor Hadji Mohamed Husseini” bogus arrest, putting in Thai prison a younger “double” in Harari’s stead, and the eventual transfer of prisoner “Doctor Hadji Mohamed Husseini” to France. What do you think – could such an unprecedented enterprise have been successful without the proper participation of the Thai secret services and the very Thai Government, or not? Just try to be realistic and honest with yourself while answering this question. And now, please, read again about the bogus “arrest” and bogus “extradition” of a bogus so-called “Hambali”, alias Mr. Nurjaman Riduan bin Isamuddin – the alleged Bali nuclear bomber – by the Thai secret services. What do you think now? Was it by “coincidence”? Remember: there are no coincidences, especially when it comes to the secret services.

Let us go one by one.

Mike Harari has been known as the biggest heroin dealer (besides being known as the biggest cocaine dealer, as well). Where did he get his heroin? Of course, he got it from the Golden Triangle, because this is the only place, besides Afghanistan, where you could obtain heroin. Harari claimed to be a personal friend of Khun Sa, by the way. It shall be known also that Khun Sa’s private army (that controlled the Golden Triangle and the entire heroin trade correspondingly till the end of the 20th century), was armed by the most modern weapons supplied by “someone”; and, besides, it was trained by Israeli military instructors. Please, make sure to note it: the Khun Sa’s army was trained not by American military instructors, not by Russian, not by Chinese, not even by Thai, but by the Israeli ones. Don’t you see anything unusual?

What do you think – would it be possible for Harari to arm Khun Sa’s army and to send to the Golden Triangle Israeli citizens as military instructors without connivance of the Thai secret services? Especially considering that at that time the Golden Triangle was completely cut off from the main part of Burma and its only “window” to the rest of the world was through its southern border with Thailand? Just try to be realistic when you answer this question. Of course, Harari could not do it without cooperating with the Thai secret services and without cooperating with the Thai military, as well.

On the other hand – what do you think: would it be possible for Harari to continue his actual heroin business for many years without the connivance and cooperation of the Thai secret services? Just try to imagine: the Golden Triangle was blocked from its north by the then extremely hostile Burmese Communist Party. From the East the Golden Triangle was blocked by Laos – another Communist regime, which too, was extremely hostile to Khun Sa. From the remaining part of Burma to the West it was blocked by at least three layers of various Burmese nationalist insurgents – all fighting the central Rangoon government, and these nationalist insurgents (mostly Christians) would never allow any transit of Khun Sa’s drugs through their territories (and even if they would – where could Khun Sa bring these drugs to? To his enemies in Rangoon?) The only available route to bring anything to- or from the Golden Triangle was via its southern border with Thailand. That is why this entire “Burmese” heroin (many tons of heroin each year) was always brought into Thailand first. And only then could it be re-distributed to the rest of the world. This is the matter of fact and the fact of history. Well-known to everybody who is free from “political correctness”.

What do you think now – could Harari (even with his Israeli and CIA accomplices) successfully bring all those enormous quantities of heroin to Thailand via heavily guarded Thai-Burmese border in the North Thailand without connivance of the Thai secret services (not to say without their explicit participation)? And could he export that heroin out of Thailand? And could he continue to do so for many years in a row – starting from the end of the Second Indo-China War and until the very recent times?

Oddly enough, Harari was successful all that time in this trade. No Thai border patrol policeman has ever shot any Israeli drug trafficker trying to cross into Thailand at the Burmese border. Not even one container with heroin that belonged to the Mossad or to the CIA has ever been intercepted by the Thai customs officials. These are the stubborn facts. Whether you like them or not.

This is the first part of an answer to the question: yes, the Thai secret services, as well as the Thai military, the Thai police, the Thai customs, and even the Thai immigration service were all and always heavily involved with Harari's illegal activities in South-East Asia. It simply could not be otherwise. Mike Harari was always protected in Thailand. It was so for many years prior to 9/11. Harari was even married in Thailand. Interestingly, his wife was from the former KMT people naturalized in Thailand. The Chinese KMT, in case you don't know, was the first drug organization operating in the Golden Triangle under the American CIA protection, before losing that trade to Khun Sa and his private army. I guess it is clear for now that Harari had indeed good connections with the Thai secret services and could conduct some joint illegal operations with them.

Now we come to the second part of the question: could the Thai secret services cooperate with Harari in his 9/11 efforts?

Look at the facts: Mike Harari, together with certain "Hani Hammoer", along with another Mossad agent – a certain Kaleb Hanaan (a passport-forgery and a so-called "human trafficker" well-known in Bangkok) were all allowed to freely operate in Thailand for many years – starting from 1996 or even from 1995. They were allowed not only to organize the forged passports trade along with illegally sending of Arabs and Pakistanis to the United States, Canada, Australia, and Europe on these fake passports from Thai airports. They were also left free to create various cells of the so-called "Al-Qaeda" right inside the sovereign Thai territory, as well as to use Thailand as their main base for the creation of such "Al-Qaeda" cells in the neighboring countries – such as Cambodia, Malaysia and Indonesia. Mike Harari, in fact, had turned the city of Bangkok into the "Al-Qaeda's" capital of South East Asia. It was so from 1996-1997 and right up to 2003 – when so-called "Hambali" was at last "captured" in Thailand.

What do you think – the people who work in the Thai secret services are all stupid as not to notice those odd activities of Harari and his group in Bangkok prior to 9/11?

Try to look at these realities: Thailand is a big and a serious country. It is one of only three countries in the entire world (the other two being Afghanistan and Ethiopia) that has never been colonized by any imperialist nation, and Thailand is extremely proud of this fact. Besides, Thailand boasts its own indigenous culture and its own highly developed language. Its population is over 65 million people. It is as big as France. And it is as proud as France. Thailand is obviously a country that is rich and advanced enough to afford to have serious secret services to protect its interests. What do you think?

That is exactly why the Thai secret services are very, very serious. Do not even doubt it. To claim that the Thai secret services "did not notice" unprecedented activities of Harari and his guys in Thailand prior to 9/11 would not be a realistic claim. It is simply impossible. Harari made his command post to conduct the 9/11 production, as well as various other "terror" operations, such as the Bali bombing, etc., in nowhere else than right in the middle of Bangkok City. Do you seriously believe that the Thai secret services "did not notice" that? Do not be so naïve. The Thai secret services usually notice everything. Much more than you could even imagine.

There could only be two possible situations:

- 1) Thai secret services pretended "not to notice" these activities of Harari in Thailand. That only means that Thai secret services connived with the actual 9/11 perpetrators.
- 2) Thai secret services participated in those odd terrorism-related activities of Harari. Which means the Thai secret services were direct accomplices of the 9/11 perpetrators.

A third option, unfortunately, does not exist.

Let us see if the Thai secret services were really "passive" or "active" in their dealings with the 9/11 perpetrators and other so-called "terrorists". These are the facts that are, by the way, legally verifiable:

1. The Thai secret services willingly and knowingly participated in the Mossad's circus that involved the bogus arrest of so-called "Hambali" – who was in fact arrested in Cambodia, not in Thailand. The Thai secret services illegally traded "Hambali" across the Thai-Cambodian border for some illegally arrested Cambodian Muslims who used to live in Trad province, Thailand. The Thai secret services obtained for this newly arrested "Hambali" a forged Spanish passport with a genuine entry-stamp into Thailand that was produced with a malicious reason – to create an impression that “Hambali” had allegedly entered Thailand prior to his bogus arrest.

2. The Thai secret services cheated their American colleagues by claiming that the abovementioned arrest of “Hambali” in Thailand was allegedly a genuine event.

3. The Thai secret services would never fail to notice that so-called “Hambali” during his “arrest” had a distinctly different face compared to that of actual “Hambali” wanted by the United States. If for a lay European person, faces of Asians sometimes might look confusing (such as an effect that all Asians might look the “same” to a European), it is not so when it comes to Asians. The Thais are apparently capable of recognizing Asian faces – especially those Thais who work in the secret services. Still, the fact that “Hambali” was with an obviously different face did not prevent the Thai secret services from joyfully participating in the bogus event rightfully dubbed the “Operation Black Magic”.

4. Do you think that the Thai secret services might not really care about the abovementioned trick with so-called “Hambali” because they did not know that “Hambali” was the alleged Bali nuclear bomber? Don’t be so naïve. The Thai secret services took the nuclear bombing in Bali very seriously. I personally chatted with some Thai police and military intelligence officers – they were all extremely concerned with the fact of that nuclear bombing and they undertook some serious studies of that event, as you might expect from them. And in the same time they participated in a bogus arrest of a bogus nuclear bomber with a light heart? It is impossible. The Thai secret services were a part of Harari’s “terror” game from its beginning to its end. Do not even doubt it.

5. The Thai secret services participated in the bogus arrest of “Doctor Hadji Mohamed Hussein” that took place on October 12, 2003. Do you think that those Thai police generals and colonels who conducted an actual “arrest” would not recognize Monsieur Mike Harari in the “arrested” person, allegedly “a citizen of France”? Especially considering that Mike Harari is almost as famous as Golda Meir and Ariel Sharon, and that Harari’s face is well known among the intelligence community? Do you think that the people in the Thai secret services do not know Mike Harari by face? Considering that he was the deputy of Nguen Cao Ky of Southern Vietnam? And one of the most important CIA officers “on loan from the Mossad” for more than 10 years? And also the first deputy of General Noriega of Panama? And also a personal friend of Khun Sa of the Golden Triangle? You have a low opinion of the Thai secret services indeed if you think it could be really a case. Way too low an opinion...The Thai secret services are a little bit more efficient than you presumed in this case.

6. The Thai secret services allowed “arrested” elder “Doctor Hadji Mohamed Hussein” to be exchanged for another “Doctor Hadji Mohamed Hussein” – who was about 30 years younger. A person, who stayed in Thai prison from 2004 till 2008 instead of Harari, was a really different person – he was of different age, he has a totally different face, and apparently – different fingerprints. Moreover, while in prison, that person had been exchanged at least once – so at least two different “Doctor Hussein” stayed in that prison, one after another (as I told you before, the first one looked “Bangladeshi”, while the second one looked “Arab”). Do you think that it would be really possible without the active participation of the Thai secret services?

7. Do you think that the Thai secret services did not know that a prisoner named “Doctor Hadji Mohamed Hussein” in Bangkok Central Prison was a bogus person? I, myself, also presumed so. That is why I made sure that the Thai authorities would be aware of that fact. I personally sent letters with detailed explanations to at least the following Thai officials (and made sure that they received the letters): 1) the governor of Bangkok Central Prison; 2) the Police Commissioner (the Chief of the entire Thai police); 3) the then leader of the Thai military junta (acting as the Prime-Minister after a coup d’état in Thailand); 4) the Public Prosecutor General; 5) the Chief of Thai Army Intelligence; 6) the Chief of Thai Navy Intelligence; 7) one high-ranking politician, a member of the National Security Council; 8) Special Investigation Department of the Ministry of Justice (in Thailand it is an alternative inquiry body to inquire into controversial cases that might involve corrupt police etc.). The officials working in the latter one even summoned me to their Special Investigation Department and required me to submit my testimony in an official manner and I did so – that is why now they have even a registered case concerning a bogus prisoner “Doctor Hadji Mohamed Hussein” in Bangkok Central Prison. The Thai Government was well aware of the fact that they had a bogus prisoner, as well as its secret services were well aware of the fact. Still, there was no action undertaken in regard to my complaint mentioned above (save for only a transfer of that prisoner to France that had been eventually arranged).

8. Thai secret services oddly cooperated with the French secret services in securing a transfer of a bogus prisoner “Hussein”, allegedly a citizen of France, (who has different fingerprints, not even to say about his different age) supposedly to France. (I am actually not even sure if that “Husseini” really went to France and not just straight to Israel – like so-called “Hambali” in 2003 after the latter’s “extradition”).

Try to analyze the behavior of the Thai secret services in the 8 abovementioned counts. What do you think – was it a “passive” complicity with the 9/11 perpetrators, or an “active” one? Was it just their connivance or it was their direct participation?

Why would Thailand participate in such an action against the United States, one might ask?

I do not know. I could figure out some possible reasons when it comes to the participation of France, but I do not find any at all when it comes to the participation of Thailand. It probably could be only because of money.

The U.S. Government handsomely pays for all “friendly” foreign secret services – particularly for those who are involved with fighting the so-called “terrorism”. It is known that the Thai secret services receive more money from the U.S. Government than from their own Thai Government. All important Thai police- and secret service officers receive two salaries – one from the Thais and one – from the Americans. Surprisingly enough, in Thailand such a practice is not perceived as “treason” (in most other countries of the world security officials receiving salaries from another state would be executed). Moreover, in Thailand the American salaries of the cops are incomparably higher than the local ones. Besides their “secondary” personal salaries, they receive a lot of “grey” money from the Americans for their supposed operational expenses. Moreover, the Thais are free to spend the U.S. money in any way they wish, without giving any account of their expenditures to either the Thai Government, or to even the U.S. Government, because it pays this money in a shady manner. Considering their additional income, which they got already used to, the Thai secret services need to permanently maintain at least a certain level of “terrorism” in their territory. They simply can not live without “terrorists” operating in Bangkok and elsewhere in Thailand. Otherwise, the Thais can not demand those shady subsidies from their American patrons because the main reason for these subsidies to be demanded is the very presence of the so-called “terrorism” to fight with. I guess you agree with this logic. This could be the only reason for the Thais to participate in the “terrorism” in general and in the 9/11 affair in particular.

You could imagine that in the aftermath of the 9/11 attacks, the Thai secret services got more American money “to fight terrorism” than they got during the entire previous period. Do not even doubt it. And they got at once a lot of U.S. subsidies again “to fight terrorism” after the 2002 Bali nuclear bombing.

You can not argue that the participation in various “terror projects” turns out to be quite profitable. Of course, it is not “politically correct” to claim such things, but it is correct from the point of view of elementary logic.

Anyhow, the fact remains. Whether you like it or not. Thailand was heavily involved with the 9/11 efforts of Mike Harari and with his other “terror projects”. Including helping the nuclear bombers who nuked the Sari night club in Bali in 2002. These are proven facts. And facts are stubborn things.

In this view, by the way, it shall no longer surprise you that the Thai cops did their best to squeeze out everything usable from the fact that the South of Thailand is populated by the so-called “Muslims”.

Actually, the so-called Thai “Muslims” that inhabit the South (bordering Malaysia) are very different from the warlike Chechens in Russia, Kurds in Iraq and Turkey, Albanians, or Pashtuns in Afghanistan and in the Tribal Area of Pakistan. The so-called “Muslims” of Thailand are as peaceful slaves as any other so-called “Muslims” in the colonized world. They do not tend to wear daggers and firearms as obligatory parts of the free man’s dress. They do not tend to grow poppy-flowers and hemp in their yards. They do not tend to remove the license-plates from their vehicles claiming that it is the worst infringement on the man’s freedom. They do not even object surveillance video-cameras recently installed by the cop in public places. The Thai “Muslims” do not read books of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini and even those of them who still remember the obsolete word “Adat” are certain that the “Adat” is merely a “pre-Islamic” survival of tribal laws that have nothing to do with “proper Islam”. So, if you do not force the Thai “Muslims” to eat pork and do not prohibit them from praying 5 times a day and to travel to Saudi Arabia on Hajj from time to time, they would never bother you. They would obediently surrender their firearms and swords to the cop, and agree to carry citizen’s ID-cards, to pay taxes, to accept so-called “surnames” and to denounce their former patronymics, to send their children to the obligatory government schools, to serve as conscripts (and even as commissioned officers) in the ungodly army and even in the police, and when the time come for all slaves in the globalized world to be microchipped (I mean implanted with an obligatory identification microchip) these so-called “Muslims” would not resist the microchipping either. This type of “Muslims” is indeed obedient.

Nonetheless, the Thai secret services, following the designated global trend (all “Muslims” are “bad” and supposedly “rebellious”), managed to create the so-called “Muslim insurgency” in the South of Thailand. One could only wonder where did they manage to get the warlike folks to act as the actual “insurgents” (if you have ever seen the pitiable Thai “Muslims” you will understand what I mean) and what is the ideology of these “insurgents”. As you probably know, without an attractive ideology no insurgency could exist, while the ridiculous “Shariah” that makes the man a complete slave is hardly “attractive” – people tend to fight for their liberation, but not for their own enslavement.

That is not to mention that in Thailand those so-called “Muslims” are indeed allowed to practice the “Shariah” and such a right was accorded to them quite a long time ago – well before the “insurgency” (in fact, Thailand is a relatively free semi-feudal country and the “Muslims” there are as free as the rest of the people). It is not like in the United States, where no “Muslim” could have his “four wives” and not like in France where no “Muslim” could force his daughter to wear an obligatory headscarf. The Thai “Muslims” indeed could have their four wives (and even more than four if they really wish), their women could freely wear their headscarves, and those “Muslims” could, of course, abstain as freely as they wish from drinking wine and other alcohol. Thus, the Thai “Muslims” already have everything that is usually craved for by admirers of the so-called “Shariah code” in the West. They could not get more as a result of the alleged “insurgency” and it is blatantly obvious. Nonetheless, the Thai secret services managed to concoct their “insurgency” even despite the fact that there were neither objective-, nor subjective social factors that might condition such an “insurgency”, and despite the total absence of any militant attitude among the actual so-called Thai “Muslims” who are the most peaceful slaves one could only imagine.

The Thai cops conducted multitudes of various provocations against the Thai “Muslims”, trying to cause them to rebel, that included several massacres in the most outrageous circumstances, including a couple of mosque massacres and innumerable “disappearances” of local activists in a-la-Pinochet style (which the Thai cops made sure to boldly and proudly admit). However, even these actions and admissions did not provoke any rebellion. Those so-called “Muslims” were simply too peaceful slaves to rebel; they won’t rebel even if you massacre their brethren in the mosque using tanks’ cannons, RPGs, and heavy machineguns (as did the Thai cops on one well-known instance). With the conspicuous failure of provoking those so-called “Muslims” into the genuine rebellion, the Thai secret services had no choice than to stage such a “rebellion”.

The poor production with the alleged “Muslim insurgency” announced in the South of Thailand, which manifests itself exclusively by anonymous bombings and by anonymous assassinations (for which no “Muslim” wishes to take a responsibility), nevertheless, continues, and so it continues to bring the needed cash to the Thai cops from their de-facto patron – the gullible U.S. taxpayer.

First official reactions to this book. Fake “mini-nuclear” car-bombings.

Ironically, not all of those “suicidal truck-bombings” and “car-bombings” of recent times were indeed “mini-nuclear”. Some of these “car-bombings” were intended to be false (meaning – they were intended to falsely imply that it might have been a typical “mini-nuclear” bombing, which would be proven to be false later during an inquiry).

You might wonder – why make such false car-bombings whatsoever? It is quite easy to answer this question. It happened because some big guys did not like the current book at all, tried their best to disprove all its points, and to, as much as possible, discredit its humble author. That is why some “suicidal truck-bombings”, implying that they were allegedly “mini-nuclear” ones, were faked. These bombings were intended as traps to entrap the author of- and some of those who might believe this book. But we are not as stupid as to fall into their traps, are we?

Both of the following fake “mini-nuclear” car-bombings happened almost instantly. At the end of August 2008, I had made my intentions clear: I completed this book and I wanted to publish it. I had even sent a copy of this book to the U.S. Department of Justice – so that they might have prosecuted some guys before this book would reach book-shelves. Understandably, some people did not like that idea at all. But what could they do? Kill me? Kidnap me? It would not work in the 21st century as it would in the previous century. Nowadays it is not enough to destroy the source of dangerous information. You must be able to destroy all copies of such information. But who knows how many copies I left? Who knows where I left them? And, at last, who could be certain that I did not publish this book secretly somewhere in the Internet and that secret publication would become open following my death or my disappearance? Of course, nobody can be sure of anything in the 21st century which is otherwise dubbed the “communication and information century”. It is not so easy to stop the dissemination of dangerous information today. But what else could you do, except physically eliminating dangerous information, plus all its copies, plus the very source of it? Unfortunately, you do not have many options to do that today. What you could probably do is to try to anticipate distribution of dangerous information by distributing first some false information that would minimize potential damage – at least, to a certain extent.

Let us imagine that you are a professional spin-doctor and you have just learned today that hitherto tightly-guarded secret information about mini-nuclear explosions is about to be spread to the plebeians any time soon. What could you do? Probably, you will try to create some fake story, spread rumors of it, imply that it might be a “mini-nuclear” bombing, and then you may try to professionally disprove it, and, consequently – to make a public mockery of any claims to the contrary. When after such a mockery some real story of a real mini-nuclear bombing would surface, nobody would believe it, because of the recent mockery. It is quite an effective trick and, besides, it is the only possible one considering the situation. In fact, the same method is routinely applied by the spin-doctors to beat off all attempts to publish the truth about 9/11. All those so-called “DEW theories”, so-called “nano-thermite” theories, “explosives theories”, and other theories are intentional “straw-man arguments” promoted by the governmental skills with a view of making a mockery of the 9/11 truthers and so making the rest of the people immune to the real truth. It is a cheap trick, but, unfortunately, it works and the spin-doctors know very well about its efficiency. Therefore they attempted to apply the same thing in order to ward off the threat of revealing the truth about the so-called “truck-bombings” that was so carefully hidden from the “plebeians” from the times of Reagan’s Administration.

That is exactly why soon after I made my intentions to publish this book clear, two fake “mini-nuclear” car-bombings occurred. Let us consider them.

I had sent a copy of this book to the U.S. Department of Justice on exactly 11 of September, 2008, in the late afternoon, Bangkok time, because I wanted to make it look significant – I completed the book exactly on the anniversary of 9/11 and the first copy of it went to the U.S. Department of Justice on the same day. I do not know how long time it took for them to read and to digest it, but the first reaction to this book’s appearance came just a few days later.

On September 17, 2008, a new car-bombing occurred against the U.S. Embassy in Yemen. One of the significant features of this new car-bombing was that the well-forgotten mysterious organization bearing the idiotic name “Islamic Jihad” immediately took responsibility for that perpetration. This organization had never been heard of since September 11, 2001, when it was only briefly mentioned in the 9/11 news in the afternoon the same day as a potential perpetrator (apparently it has not been decided yet – whether to blame the WTC nuclear demolition on mini-nukes of Osama bin Laden or on those of “Islamic Jihad”). The previous time the so-called “Islamic Jihad” had been publicly mentioned was in 1995 – in connection with the Oklahoma bombing (which first was attempted to be blamed on Palestinians). The majority of nuclear bombings that the so-called “Islamic Jihad” took responsibility for had occurred back in the ‘80s. Even during the ‘90s all nuclear bombings were blamed on newer “terrorist organizations” – such as Lebanese “Hezbollah”, non-existent “Saudi Hezbollah”, and later – almost invariably on the so-called “Al-Qaeda” and its affiliates and alleged proxies in various countries, with only a couple of exceptions – when a couple of nuclear bombings in Bogotá and Lima were blamed on FARC and on “Sendero Luminoso”.

Considering that the so-called “Islamic Jihad” fell into oblivion a long time ago (partly due to its absolutely idiotic name), to mention such an organization in connection with the 2008 bombing was something really strange. Nonetheless, it was the very moth-eaten “Islamic Jihad” that jumped out of the box and promptly “took responsibility” for that new bombing. Guess why?

It was because the so-called “Islamic Jihad” previously used to take responsibility exclusively for nuclear bombings. That is why the words “Islamic Jihad” for some “initiated” guys became synonyms of the words “mini-nuclear bombing”. Once you hear that the “Islamic Jihad” is responsible, the very first thought which supposes to come to your mind (if you are a “patrician”, of course, not a “plebeian”) is that the occurrence had something to do with those stolen Soviet mini-nukes, as it used to be claimed in the past. Such an odd revelation of the alleged “Islamic Jihad’s” involvement into the bombing was supported by a few appropriate photos: several nicely burned cars were scattered around the spot of explosion (supposed “ground zero”). Let us take a close look on some of these photos which are below.

Cars found around an explosion site after a car-bombing against the U.S. Embassy in Yemen on September 17, 2008. The cars purported to be “burned” during the bomb attack.

It is pretty clear that someone cunningly attempted to convince gullible spectators from among those who understand about mini-nuclear bombings in general, that this damage could have been caused only by thermal radiation of a nuclear explosion. Indeed, they tried their best to burn the car and its internals to the exactly needed state to represent the “atomic” damage.

However, they forgot to do the same thing in regard to the background. Just look at the nice decorative fence behind the burned car. Does it look like that fence has suffered any effects of air-blast wave or thermal radiation of a recent nuclear explosion nearby? Or, maybe, leaves on those green trees behind the fence might have survived a recent air-blast wave?

A clever observer shall not be duped by this manipulation of evidence. We are not that stupid. If you want to see how the real damage after a recent mini-nuclear explosion looks like, just come back to the previous Chapter of this book and look at the photograph of the Oklahoma Alfred P. Murrah Building as bombed. And try to understand the difference. Thus, I hope the first fake “nuclear” bombing of its kind has been successfully unmasked and we managed to do it ahead of the spin-doctors who stood behind it.

The second fake “mini-nuclear” car-bombing was far more serious and it received much more attention. Firstly, it was dubbed accordingly. The spin-doctors were not ashamed to officially name it as “Pakistan’s 9/11”. Secondly, it was continuously, for many hours in a row, shown to gullible TV spectators by almost all main news outlets. To show it on TV for several hours in a row was an absolutely unprecedented coverage comparable only to that of the real 9/11 affair.

The actual “car-bombing” of the Marriott Hotel in Islamabad, Pakistan, was well-planned and well-prepared. It occurred on September 20, 2008 – only three days after the above-mentioned fake “mini-nuclear” bombing of the U.S. Embassy in Yemen. This Islamabad Marriott Hotel bombing was a logical continuance of the same game connected to my attempt to publish this book. What was particularly strange in this case was that the TV reportage (that continued for many hours without stop) devoted ~50% of its entire coverage time to an enormous crater in front of the burning Marriott Hotel – presumably “created by a truck-bomb”. Before that event to pay such attention to craters was by no means a common thing. It was vice-versa, in fact. It was “politically incorrect” to show craters from so-called “car-bombs”. I mean it was common to hide from the “plebeians” any evidence of such seditious evidence as craters, since car-bombs and truck-bombs are supposed not to leave any crater whatsoever and it was well-known to every discerning person acquainted with explosive works. The craters in all previous mini-nuclear bombings were a “secret”, “exclusive” part of evidence intended exclusively to impress “patricians” alone and never for entertainment of any “plebeians” (who, despite being “plebeians”, might still possess some basic knowledge as to ordinary explosions and their commonly known effects).

The enormous crater in front of the Islamabad Marriott Hotel was truly enormous. It seemed to have been created by at least 200 tons of TNT. So, the implied “mini-nuke” that supposed to dig such a crater must have exploded at least at 0.2 kiloton in TNT yield – leaving no doubt that it was indeed a job of a “nuclear explosion”. I hope it is clear to everybody that to place several hundred tons of TNT onto any truck is simply an impossible task, so such an explosive yield could only be offered by a nuclear charge.

The problem was, though, that the crater was not created by any underground explosion, unfortunately... It was pretty obvious that the “crater” had been dug by an excavator – prior to this “explosion”. It was clearly visible from the lengthy event coverage that the “crater” was artificial, as well as the very explosion it purported to “betray”. In addition to the artificial “crater”, it was very clear that the burning Marriott Hotel on its background did not suffer any effects of supposed air-blast wave whatsoever. The hotel was indeed intensely burning, at times with even blue flames (thus, betraying that some specific inflammable materials had been responsible), but all its exquisite façade decorations and small beautiful balconies belonging to each room on the façade wall were absolutely intact...

It was in sharp contrast with façades of “victims” of real mini-nuclear bombings – such as that of the Oklahoma Alfred P Murrah Federal Building or of the Khobar Tower Building #131 – which suffered their façades completely torn off by the corresponding nuclear explosions (see pictures below).

Comparison of the destruction caused by the 1995 Oklahoma bombing and the 1996 Khobar Towers bombing.

In both cases shown by the above photo it is clear that façades of the targeted buildings were destroyed completely. In the case of the Oklahoma bombing the zone of destruction has a smaller radius than the radius of the corresponding destruction shown in the Khobar case. The crater left by the explosion in the Oklahoma case is also closer to the targeted building. It is because of their explosive yields difference: in Oklahoma it was about 0.1 kiloton, while in the Khobar Tower's case it was at least twice as much. The mere size of crater left in Khobar shows that it must have been created by at least 200-250 tons of TNT. A crater in front of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building is not clearly visible on this photo, because the so-called "good guys" took good care to fill it up with earth almost immediately, but the location of the former crater used to be somewhere in between the two cranes – above letter "u" in the word "Murrah".

Unlike on these pictures, the nice façade of the Marriott Hotel in Islamabad was not damaged at all – it retained all its nice small balconies and other decorations...

The exquisite Marriott Hotel in Islamabad after being "bombed" by the "deadliest" and the "largest" known "explosion" in Pakistan was purported to be at least 0.2 kiloton (200 tons) in TNT yield.

On the photo above you can see the apparently artificial "crater" in front of the burned Marriott Hotel in Islamabad. The exquisite undamaged façade of the latter could be clearly seen on the top right corner of this photo. The building to its left is undamaged too.

Actually, spin-doctors committed a very big error in that case – if I were them, I would dress military guards near the crater in ABC-suits, to make their “hint” even more transparent, or, at least – order the guards to wear respirators. By the way – the mere fact that on the next morning someone stands without a respirator near a crater left by an alleged “mini-nuke” is the proof itself that the event was a bogus one... Especially, considering that Pakistan is a nuclear state and its military officials know very well what a nuclear explosion is and what dangers it entails. Therefore to call such a poor production as the Marriot Hotel “car-bombing” “Pakistan’s 9/11” was too pompous... It simply did not deserve such a high name.

For comparison. Above: a real crater in front of the Khobar Tower Building #131 – completely destroyed by a real mini-nuclear explosion of about 0.2 kiloton in TNT yield on June 25, 1996. Courtesy the United States Department of Defense. As you probably remember, the peculiar file-name of its graphical file was: “Khobartowersgroundzero.jpg”.

Above you can see yet another supposedly “seditious” photograph of so-called “Pakistan’s 9/11” shows the “crater” that was oddly not of ideally round shape (natural craters left by explosions are all near “ideally round”, just to remind you – you can look at the crater left by a mini-nuke in the Khobar Towers bombing case for example). This is not to mention once again that the conspicuously undamaged façade of the Marriott Hotel stands simply too close to the fringe of this “enormous crater” not to be destroyed.

There was another “transparent hint” in the case of the Islamabad Marriott Hotel “truck-bombing”. It was not actually pronounced, but it was shown by the lengthy TV coverage of the event – so that a “discerning spectator” would not fail to notice the “hint”. The “hint” was that no firefighters were visibly engaged in any firefighting. The Marriott Hotel was burning and burning for many hours and no efforts had been made to extinguish the fires... It was to politely hint that the firefighters were apparently ordered to stay away of the area, because of the supposed “radiation” dangers. To crown this show, it was stated publicly that the very explosion of the “suicide truck” was felt on distances of up to 30 km (18 miles) away. It shall be noted that Wikipedia nowadays claims that it was felt at only 15 km away, but many contemporary news claimed double that distance, such as, for example, this one: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Hashoo_Group

A little army of scribblers had been set on to add their “suspicions” in writing. The “suspicions” varied from ravings that it might have been a “thermo-baric” devise (a “discerning reader” capable of reading between the lines should not miss to conclude that it was the “covert” description of an atomic bomb) – to their “transparent” comparisons of this bombing to the Oklahoma one (that was known for many to be confirmedly nuclear). To enhance the overall picture, some charred bodies from a nearby morgue were scattered around the supposed “ground zero” and some suspiciously intriguing statements sounding like “the sophistication of the blast shows it’s the work of al Qaeda”⁵¹⁰ had been made by various security officials.

Another claim was by Rehman Malik⁵¹¹, a senior Pakistani interior ministry official, who said “the attack used the largest amount of explosives ever seen in a terrorist strike in Pakistan. It was also the deadliest attack ever seen in the Pakistani capital”. Taking into consideration that Pakistan has suffered quite a few real mini-nuclear bombings in the past, it was transparently implied that the current “largest” bombing was obviously the “largest” and “deadliest” from among the rest of the mini-nuclear ones.

Above you can see another supposedly “seditious” photograph of the so-called “Pakistan’s 9/11”. It shows us oddly burned cars, moreover, purportedly damaged by air-blast wave of an “atomic blast”. The latter seemingly propagated from the upper right corner of this scene to its lower left corner – as it could be clearly perceived by the way the car’s bodies were crushed. Still, in an amazing manner, such “air-blast wave” that was supposedly able to smash the cars in the manner shown, was unable to smash the exquisite façade of the Marriott Hotel that was located just next to the alleged “crater”. All you need to do is to compare the undamaged façade with that of the Khobar Tower...

⁵¹⁰ <http://www.reuters.com/article/topNews/idUSLK18396120080921?sp=true>

⁵¹¹ <http://www.telegraph.co.uk/news/worldnews/asia/pakistan/3042007/Islamabad-Marriott-hotel-bomb-attack-captured-on-CCTV-says-Pakistan.html>

It came as no surprise that the video footage shot by a security camera that was released⁵¹² by the Pakistani Government, did not show us the very moment of the “explosion”. It was apparently not so easy to make it fully believable (more or less “believable” for simpletons from among the “patricians” were only its purported “aftereffects” – such as the “crater” and the “fires”).

It should be presumed, of course, that all these spin-doctors, who organized that bogus event, quickly ran to various ABC/Civil Defense specialists and maybe even as far as to IAEA inspectors – “earnestly” asking them to measure possible radioactivity inside the enormous crater because it was “sincerely” suspected by them that such an enormous explosion might only be a nuclear one... Of course, nothing of radioactivity was discovered in that case, which supposed to make the spin-doctors feel satisfied with their “smart” invention. But it does not mean that we must feel the same thing. We are not so stupid, heh?

Anyhow, I guess that the discerning reader of this book is already educated enough if he has read this book till the current Chapter, so that he can not be so easily duped.

It shall be considered that the nice Islamabad Marriott Hotel had been burned down by those spin-doctors really for nothing (save for maybe some amount of insurance that they might get). They would not be able to impress any “barbarians” by their cheap show. Their sacrifice was truly in vain...

From now on, I sincerely hope that a discerning reader would be able to distinguish a true mini-nuclear explosion from a bogus one – such as attempted on 17 and 20 of September 2008.

P.S.

Actually, this book was about to be published when one of my friends drew my attention to the most recent “suicidal car-bombing” that occurred near the headquarters of the ruling Baath party in Damascus, Syria, on February 20, 2013. In his opinion, this bombing was nuclear, because outwardly it matched all needed properties – from a typical mushroom cloud and burned bodies to a crater and corresponding hysteria in mass-media. Actually, I grew so tired of those mini-nukes bombings that occurred so often, that I stopped paying attention to them since approximately the year 2008. They were simply too numerous to keep count of them, and there was nothing really interesting in them when you get used to observing this “phenomenon” in the course of a few previous years. I simply became no longer interested in this aspect of the so-called “terror”, feeling it no longer deserves my precious time. However, on the insistence of my friend, I took a close look at that particular “car-bombing” and it appeared to me that it was fake, too. Let us, for the sake of a clear conscience, review it in detail.

Here is some published information on this latest car-bombing that indeed had all visible properties to be a typical “mini-nuke” bombing:

Here is an article “Car Bomb in Damascus Kills Dozens, Opposition Says”⁵¹³ by Anne Barnard and Rick Gladston, published: February 21, 2013 by the New York Times. I am quoting:

“...TRIPOLI, Lebanon — At least three car bombs exploded in Damascus on Thursday, including a powerful blast near the downtown headquarters of President Bashar al-Assad’s governing party and the Russian Embassy that witnesses said shook the neighborhood like an earthquake...”

“...There was no immediate claim of responsibility. The main umbrella opposition group seeking to depose Mr. Assad condemned the bombings as it convened a meeting in Cairo...”

“...Syria’s state-run SANA news agency described the blasts as the work of armed terrorist groups, its standard terminology for the insurgency...”

I can’t resist interrupting the narration here and inserting my comment in regard to the cliché such as “its standard terminology for the insurgency” (which the Syrian Government calls “terrorist groups”). The scribblers who work for the New York Times apparently do not feel that it might be improper to use such a classic double-standard propagandist cliché in the U.S. media at the moment when the very U.S. troops battle the insurgencies in Iraq and Afghanistan, which they too call “terrorist groups”. It seems that those who run the mass-media today have indeed lost their sense of reality, not to mention any tact.

⁵¹² <http://www.telegraph.co.uk/news/worldnews/asia/pakistan/3042007/Islamabad-Marriott-hotel-bomb-attack-captured-on-CCTV-says-Pakistan.html>

⁵¹³ http://www.nytimes.com/2013/02/22/world/middleeast/car-bomb-in-damascus-kills-dozens-opposition-says.html?pagewanted=all&_r=2&

“...The Syrian Observatory for Human Rights, an anti-Assad group based in Britain that has a network of contacts in Syria, reported that at least 59 people had been killed by the Mazraa bomb, which the group described as a booby-trapped car next to a military checkpoint. It said that at least 16 of the dead were members of the security forces. ...”

“...The National Coalition of Syrian Revolutionary and Opposition Forces, the main Syrian umbrella group for the opposition, denounced the car bombings and other mayhem that killed civilians in Damascus on Thursday, saying in a statement that it “holds the Assad regime responsible for them.”...”

Here is another revealing article “Car bomb kills over 50 near Damascus ruling party office”⁵¹⁴ by Dominic Evans, BEIRUT | Thu Feb 21, 2013 5:22pm EST, Reuters. The most important details quoted:

“(Reuters) - A car bomb killed more than 50 people and wounded 200 in central Damascus on Thursday when it blew up on a busy highway close to ruling Baath Party offices and the Russian Embassy, state media and activists said.

Syrian television showed charred and bloodied bodies strewn across the street after the blast, which it described as a suicide bombing by “terrorists” battling President Bashar al-Assad. It said 53 people were killed. ...”

Make sure to note that the scribblers from Reuters, too, use the word “terrorists” in quotation marks – implying that those who might detonate car-bombs capable of killing and maiming merely a couple of hundreds of innocent civilians are “terrorists” only in the eyes of the “totalitarian” Assad’s regime, but not in the eyes of the “democratic” West. However, when it comes to the “charred bodies”, we will come back to them later; for now it is important to only understand the fact: that the “charred bodies” were apparently present in the scene and that the Syrian television did not fail to show these to its spectator.

“...Opposition activists reported further explosions elsewhere in the city after the explosion which struck shortly before 11 a.m. (0900 GMT).

One resident in the heart of the capital heard three or four projectiles whistling through the sky, followed by explosions. At least one of them landed in a public garden in the Abu Rummaneh district, she said, but no one was hurt...”

Here you can see that the attack was coordinated, because it must have many aspects (including some hidden ones, apparently). Therefore, it was synchronized. However, the synchronization was carried out in a strikingly old-fashioned manner: by firing whistling signal rockets into the sky (as if modern city means of communication – such as GSM mobile phones with their SMS capabilities, Wi-Fi, Bluetooth, and the Internet could not have been used for such a reason). This fact probably points to the involvement of a regular army, rather than to the potential involvement of any terror groups or any foreign secret services (since it is the army that is known to be the most old-fashioned and unreceptive to the novelties).

“...It said 56 people were killed, of which at least 15 were from Syria's security forces and the rest civilians. Eight other people were killed by a car bomb in the Barzeh district of northeast Damascus, one of several explosions which followed the Mazraa attack.

Russia's Itar-Tass news agency quoted a diplomat as saying the Mazraa blast blew out windows at the Russian Embassy, but no employees were wounded. “The building has really been damaged ... The windows are shattered,” the diplomat said.

The vehicle was carrying between 1 and 1.5 metric tons (1.65 tons) of explosives, Damascus Governor Bishr Sabban told Reuters...”

From the above quotation you can see that it is implied that the bodies were so badly burned (or even presumably reduced to ashes or evaporated without a trace) that even the number of counted members of the Syrian security forces killed could not have been established for certain and therefore words such as “at least” must be used. Of course, the traditional claim of “between 1 and 1.65 tons of explosives” that the terrorists managed to cram into a car perfectly matches the property of a classical mini-nuke bombing.

⁵¹⁴ <http://www.reuters.com/article/2013/02/21/us-syria-crisis-blast-idUSBRE91K09W20130221>

“...A correspondent for Syrian television said he saw seven body bags with corpses at the scene. He counted 17 burnt-out cars and another 40 that were destroyed or badly damaged by the force of the blast, which ripped a crater 1.5 meters deep into the road...”

I think, this is enough – now we have all needed information, and it is not necessary to review the rest of published articles, except only for the photos of the event. Now we saw all we need: classical claims, burned bodies, burned and smashed cars, “earthquake”, and the crater (while knowing that car-bombs could not leave any crater, could not kill and injure on a mass-scale, could not burn people, and could not burn cars). Moreover, we saw that the one who tries to push the supposedly “nuclear” details is the very Syrian television, presumably backed up by the Syrian Government, and, perhaps, by the Russians who support the Syrian Government. In the same time we see that no really existing opposition organization claims any responsibility. Moreover, the opposition directly puts the blame on the Syrian Government.

Now it is the time to study the available photos. Let us begin with the most obvious ones. Here is the photo of the mushroom cloud – that purports to prove even to the most gullible observer that it was indeed nothing else than the nuclear explosion:

Above – the apparently “atomic mushroom” shot immediately after the “car-bombing” on February 20, 2013.

The photo of the “mushroom cloud” (along with a few other photos) was taken from the “Daily Telegraph”, U.K. web site here: <http://www.telegraph.co.uk/news/picturegalleries/worldnews/9885424/Syria-car-bomb-shakes-Damascus-near-headquarters-of-ruling-party.html?frame=2488180> It does not mean, though, that the photos were necessarily shot by the Daily Telegraph’s staff photographers. They were apparently shot by some “casual” folks and supplied as “hot” photos to the said news agency.

I would dare to claim that this production was fake and the abovementioned photo of the “revealingly” “mushroomy” cloud of the “suspicious” car-bombing was doctored using some digital tool. I am certain that some shifty folks shot this photo in advance, added the “atomic” cloud (it was not difficult to make it against a relatively monotonous blue sky background), obviously prepared proper file properties and EXIF data (to match the time of the explosion that was known in advance) and supplied this “hot” photo to the gullible news agencies. Why do I claim it was fake? It is because of the rest of the photos. Look at them:

Above you can see a photo of what they called a “crater” (the photo taken from the same “Daily Telegraph” web site, the same web page). Apparently, the Syrians had no chance to dig a nice deep crater by an excavator in advance at that particular location – in order to repeat what their Pakistani colleagues did in the previous case. So, they had no other option than to resort to some explosion of conventional materials on the surface that was intentionally directed downwards. Even though, such a directed blast was not able to dig anything that might look like a “crater”. It merely damaged asphalt by pressing it down.

Above – another photo of the burning cars left by the Damascus car-bombing on February 20, 2013.

On the last photo above (taken from the same “Daily Telegraph” web page) you can see a lot of supposedly “nuclear” details. Smashed and burned cars and even a half-burned road sign, moreover, smashed by an apparent head-on hit of air-blast wave.

But ask yourself a logical question: what supposed to hit this road sign first – thermal radiation (that travels with the speed of light) or air-blast wave (that is merely supersonic)? I hope you got the point: the road sign must have been first equally burned (not “half-burned”) by thermal radiation, and only after this – hit by air-blast wave that bent its flat surface around the pole. So, now the question is: how could it have been “half-burned” in such a case? I think the answer is obvious: it was “half-burned” in the same manner as those “half-burned” police and other cars around Manhattan’s Ground Zero – i.e. by blow-lamps and hammers of local security officials. So the apparently “Hiroshima-like” supposed “ground zero” not so far from the Russian Embassy, did not pass our scrutiny. We are the Barbarians, after all, not the Plebeians and not even the Patricians to whose consumption this perpetration was apparently intended.

Someone might, probably, doubt that this particular bombing was intended to be passed for the “nuclear” one. He might think that it could have been a pretty ordinary “conventional” car-bombing and nothing more than that.

Yes, I agree, it could have been so, indeed, if not for several intentionally concocted details. Namely: a bogus photo of an “atomic” cloud, plus genuine photos of bogus “burned” cars (not to mention the TV show of the “charred bodies” and an attempt to exaggerate an importance of the alleged “crater”). Do not forget that ordinary explosions do not burn people, they do not burn cars, and they do not create clouds of a typically “mushroomy” form, and they do not make any craters.

The case is closed therefore. The evidence was enough to establish for certain that the Syrian officials attempted to concoct the story of the alleged “mini-nuke” bombing in this episode.

But why, you might ask, did the Syrian Government decide to play such an unprecedented trick?

I think it is not so difficult to answer this question. The Syrian security officials, as well as those folks who work in the Syrian Government, are apparently discerning enough to understand how shamelessly the so-called “good guys” exploit all those alleged “car-bombings”. So, they decided to make some good use of them too. Otherwise, they probably believed, it would be too unfair.

If they had real mini-nukes at their disposal, or could borrow one from their Russian friends, they would most probably detonate the real mini-nuke, to make the show 100% natural. However, Syria does not have any mini-nukes, unfortunately; and the Russians, apparently, were not so eager to present them with one. Hence the cheap show you saw above.

The mini-nuclear terror is an exclusive kind of terror. Do not forget it. In order to be able to detonate a mini-nuke, you must have one in your hands, to begin with.

Still, the question remains – what were the actual motives behind this action?

The Syrian Government that is being pressed so hard by its former Western handlers to quit the scene can not reconcile itself with the thought that its time is over. The West no longer needs any secular dictators who could cope with the Islamic Fundamentalists and with the Reds by “unconstitutional” and “undemocratic” means, since these two ideologies are defunct and no longer represent any danger. Therefore, the West would like to remove its sitting too long puppets from power and replace their no longer useful regimes with either so-called “democracies” or, in some cases, with “Militant Islamists”. The latter are far more useful for the West in today’s situation than fossil regimes of Saddams, Kaddafis, Mubaraks, Ne Wins, and Suhartos. Assad’s regime is just one of these useless fossils, but Mr. Assad apparently fails to realize it and still clings for power, hoping to prove to his Western handlers that he is as useful in fighting the “Islamic terrorism” as used to be his father 30 years ago. Mr. Assad Jr. does not understand that his former handlers denounced him – exactly as they denounced his puppet colleagues – Saddam Hussein and Muammar Kaddafi, because the West no longer needs any secular dictators. The West needs the very “Islamic terrorists”, in their stead.

I hope that from now on, the reader will be careful enough as not to be duped by any fake “car-bombing” that is presented in such a way as “betraying” some obviously “nuclear details”. Also, since I made this addition that directly concerns the useless regime of Bashar al-Assad who is no longer needed by his former Western masters, I decided to add one more lyrical digression about Syria – which is in a separate chapter that follows next. I am just afraid that some readers might feel pity for the Syrian regime that is pressured so hard by the West today.

Trust me – as any other puppet regime of the so-called “good guys”, this regime does not deserve any pity. Therefore, do not feel pity for those Saddam Husseins, Muammar Kaddafis and Hosni Mubaraks. Even though they were deposed by the emboldened Western imperialism in the most impudent manner, still, these former lackeys of the very Western imperialism do not deserve any pity. Read the next chapter and you will understand why.

Lyrical digression. Chemical weapons of secular “Muslim” dictators. Journey from the era of “Militant Islamism” to the era of Islamic Fundamentalism. More on the ideology.

Disclaimer: since this particular chapter deals with the Truth in the religious sense, which is actually the Supreme Truth, or just the Truth spelled with the Capital letter, I can not charge money for it. I believe I have the right to sell a nicely arranged compilation of facts established in the course of my 9/11 research (even the infamous 9/11 Commission does not give away its Report for free; it charges for its copies), but I can not afford charging descendants of Adam for acquainting them with the Truth. This would be against the principles. Therefore, this particular Chapter is excluded from the copyright claims of mine and is provided free of charge – which means that anyone is free to copy and to re-distribute this chapter in any way he wishes. This chapter is merely a free addition to the otherwise profit-making book.

Warning: when you really don't know the Truth, you are not guilty for sinning against it. However, when you know it, especially in such a precise detail as provided below – you are. So, if you feel uneasy about it, you should jump over this portion. The religious Truth is provided only for those who really crave to know it. It is by no means to be enforced on any and every passer-by. You have been warned.

Suggestion: since this chapter, besides chemical weapons, deals with certain ideological categories that are prohibited to mention in the modern “politically correct” mass media, an average reader might not even understand what I am talking about when I mention terms such as “Adat”, “Tawrat”, “Islamic Fundamentalism”, etc. Therefore, it is recommended, before reading this chapter, to read an optional part of this book titled “A Big Lyrical Digression”, which is distributed free of charge and therefore must be freely available. All those ideological categories are explained there in the most comprehensible manner.

Let us take some rest from those nuclear car-bombings and ideologically uncommitted so-called “Militant Islamists” and “Islamic Terrorists”, bred by the Western secret services today. Let us remember some real guys, who did not have any mini-nukes in their hands in those days, yet represented the real danger to the New World Order, to the so-called “globalization”, to the so-called “democracy”, and, of course – to the very “good guys” who pulled the strings from behind their infamous “curtain”. The name of these guys was “Islamic Fundamentalists” and the name of their ideology – “Islamic Fundamentalism”.

At the end of the previous chapter I promised to explain to you why all those Saddam Husseins, Muammar Kaddafis, Hosni Mubaraks, Ne Wins, Suhartos and the rest of the secular dictators, of the '60s and the '70s, do not deserve any pity when their fossil regimes are being removed today by the emboldened Western imperialism.

Please, try to understand, that when the West tolerated folks like Saddam Hussein, Muammar Kaddafi, Ne Win, or Suharto in their time, it simply needed them for some reason. If they were not needed, they would have been removed from power at once – back in the '60s, or, most probably, they would not have been even allowed to come to power in the first instance. Try to understand that it is not that the West was inflamed with passion for the so-called “democracy” only in the new Millennium and this new passion was transformed into violent imperialist actions aimed at the removal of the last regimes of those third-world dictators. In fact, the West had the passion for the so-called “democracy” even in the '60s – i.e. during- or even before the time all those dictators were first installed. It is difficult to deny the obvious: the Western attitude towards the so-called “democracy” today, in 2013, is not any different from that in the '60s, in the '70s, or in the '80s. But why then, you might ask, the Western powers did not press for the removal of those third-world secular dictators in the '70s with the same amount of the “democratic” zeal they do today, in 2012-2013? I think it would be a very logical question to ask.

The answer is quite simple. The keyword in the above question is “secular”. The so-called “good guys” in those days were not able to withstand an ideological assault by two very dangerous anti-“democratic” heresies – the Red Ideology and Islamic Fundamentalism. Both heresies were not just anti-secular. They were directly anti-NWO, anti-globalist, anti-imperialist, and, what was the most dangerous – they were openly anti-masonic. Instead of pretending that the “mysterious” Freemasonic sect “does not exist”, which is the official doctrine in the West, the Reds and the Islamic Fundamentalists called a spade a spade. They pointed their fingers at the “mysterious” Freemasons, hiding behind the so-called “curtain”, and called for their physical extermination. Their leaders such as Stalin, Mao, or Ayatollah Khomeini saw their primary enemy in the person of the Freemasonic sect, and the actual Western imperialism used to occupy only a second line in the list of their enemies.

The actual Red- and Islamic Fundamentalist ideologies were very logical, easily explainable, evidently right, devoid of any mysticism whatsoever, and therefore they were highly contagious. In fact, during the time of the Great Teachers such as those mentioned above, there were a considerable number of highly educated people who were inspired by their teachings and embraced their doctrines at once. It is not that the Reds or the Islamic Fundamentalists were mostly represented by uneducated villagers. It was exactly vice versa – they were in the most part represented by particularly educated people. Moreover, the general level of education of the Reds and of the Islamic Fundamentalists was incomparably higher than the educational level of an average educated Westerner (a mass of whom could be, for example, so easily duped by suggested armor-piercing capabilities of aluminum planes, by a car-bomb that could supposedly leave a crater, or by the alleged “Islamist” nature of the so-called “Militant Islamists”).

Therefore, it was not easy at all to argue with those “heretics”. If you try to argue with the Red or with the Islamic Fundamentalist, for example, trying to convince him that the Western so-called “democracy” is the example to follow, he would only laugh at you. He would easily prove to you that you are merely a slave of police, prohibited from carrying even a pocket-knife, and confirm it to you by a variety of Biblical and Quranic examples, as well as examples from the Greek history, where the very word “democracy” originated from. It is not to mention that he would not fail to use examples from the most recent implementation of Christianity – the one practiced in the neo-feudal United States prior to the Civil War. Therefore, it was impossible to argue and defeat the Reds or the Islamic Fundamentalists in any verbal battle – they would win an argument in any case. It was impossible to sue them in the court of law either accusing them of “subverting the social order” – because they would easily win any argument in the courtroom too, by simply pointing to appropriate Biblical or Quranic verses that no judge could deny.

There was simply no way to effectively counteract these two heresies by any so-called “constitutional” or “democratic” means. The only possible way to contain this threat was to defeat them by unconstitutional and undemocratic means: i.e. by physically exterminating the Reds and the Islamic Fundamentalists. Moreover, their death-warrants must not be meted by any law court, but simply carried out by some death squad. That is exactly why the Freemasons created such an “undemocratic” phenomenon as fascism with all its attributes such as death squads, storm-troops, concentration camps, etc. The so-called “good guys” who run the capitalist society from behind the curtain simply needed fascists, because without them they could not cope with the Reds. The Reds derided the rules of the so-called “democracy” to be played with on the stage. Instead of playing a scene, they dared to challenge the very producer pointing not just their accusing fingers, but their guns towards the curtain behind the scene.

Understandably, the Freemasons could not cope with such rebellious actors while observing the “constitutional” rules of the play, and neither could they afford to appear from behind the curtain with their own guns in hand in order to engage the Reds in an open battle. The main factor that allowed the Freemasonry to survive for centuries was the total secrecy of their sect and the complete anonymity of its members. Thus, as a matter of their survival, the Freemasons could not afford showing their faces to profanes. They simply could not afford venturing into the battlefield as “the Freemasonic sect” (or as the “Order of Knights Templar” if you prefer the latter definition). Even if such a “knights order” wins a first battle or two against the profanes, it would be defeated anyway at the end, due to an apparent numerical superiority of its opponents. However, due to their being unmasked, the Freemasons would be exterminated completely, in such a case. That is to confirm that their secret “non-existing” sect indeed can not go into a battle under its own banner (at least, not in the conditions of the middle of the 20th century). In any case, some openly, officially existing proxy is needed. Therefore, the creation of some brutal, “undemocratic” and “unconstitutional” proxy was the only solution in the situation with the rebellious Reds. That is exactly why fascism was created. I hope it is quite understandable from the point of logic, at least, when it comes to the creation of the Western fascism.

However, while the true reasons behind the creation of the classical European fascism, including its more recent Latin-American varieties, is more or less understandable for an educated Westerner, in retrospect, (since the creation of the fascism was directly related to the contemporary danger of the Reds), it might not be so clear in regard to the third-world secular dictators. So, to fill a gap in this knowledge, I have to reveal some little secret: there was no difference at all between the “classical” European fascists, their Latin American brethren, and those “secular” third-world-type dictators in Muslim states. All those third-world secular “Muslim” dictators were merely fascists – the f-a-s-c-i-s-t-s – in the full sense of this word.

In order to understand this obvious fact, it shall be understood first that there is no principal difference between the Reds/Anarchists and the Islamic Fundamentalists. All of them have the same objective: to overthrow the modern Egyptian slavery installed by the Freemasonic sect in disguise of the so-called “secular capitalism”, which is strictly prohibited by the Old Testament (known to the Muslims as the “Tawrat”), and to re-install the Law of Moses (known to the Muslims as the “Adat of Prophet Musa”, also called “Qanun”/“Kanun”, or simply “Adat”) as the law of the state. There is only some superficial difference in their doctrines due to the fact that the Red ideology (as well as the ideology of the Anarchists) was adapted more to Judaic and Christian environments, while the Islamic Fundamentalist one was adapted to particularly Muslim environment. So, for the Freemasons, who were challenged by these two heresies, the means to counteract either was the same: fascism. European and Latin American fascist dictators in their time faced only the Reds, and, to a certain extent – also the Anarchists, and some feudal survivals of the good old times – such as the orthodox Jews, the Gypsies, and the Mafia. The fascist dictators in Muslim (both Arabic and non-Arabic) countries used to face all of them – the Reds, the Anarchists, the Jews, the Gypsies, the Mafia (represented by recalcitrant followers of the Adat), and the modern, educated Islamic Fundamentalists, in addition.

That is to confirm one more time that all these Saddam Husseins, Muammar Kaddafis, Gamal Abdel Nasers and Hosni Mubaraks, Hafez Assads, and the like were pretty ordinary fascists. In fact, they had all visible similarities with their German brethren: they promoted extreme nationalism, they hated Jews to the extent of exterminating them, they pretended “to hate the Freemasons”, they naturally hated the Reds, the Gypsies, and the Mafia, they held in contempt the rotten through so-called “democracy” along with its perverted “liberal values”, and, of course, they loved Adolf Hitler. Nearly all folks mentioned above used to have Hitler’s portrait in their offices and they had never felt ashamed of it – moreover, they were proud of hanging the portraits of their guru in full public view.

I hope I could stop repeating myself over and over in order to prove to you the obvious: those “secular” “Muslim” dictators, as well as the rest of the third-world secular dictators were merely fascists in the full sense of this word. It is pretty self-evident, judging either by their visible properties, or by the reasons behind their very existence.

Let us make a brief overview of what these third-world “secular” dictators managed to prevent in their time.

1. Suharto. Eliminated the Red threat in Indonesia. Effectively suppressed the ethnic Chinese prone to the ideas of Mao. Suppressed the Adat. Effectively prevented the spread of Islamic Fundamentalism in Indonesia in the wake of the Iranian Islamic Revolution. Cooperated with the British Special Forces and helped them to suppress the Red threat in neighboring countries – such as Singapore and Malaysia, plus exterminated the Reds in occupied East Timor.

2. Saddam Hussein. Completely exterminated the Reds in Iraq. Practically exterminated the Jews in Iraq. Promoted the anti-Semitism of the most extreme type. Promoted the extreme Arabic nationalism of the secular nature in order to suppress both – the Jews prone to the Torah, and the Kurds prone to the Adat. When the “retarded” feudal Kurds became infected with the ideas of the Reds and managed to combine the ideas of Maoism with the ideas of the Islamic Fundamentalism, Saddam went as far as to use chemical weapons (supplied by the United States, in case you forgot it) to wipe the dangerous Kurds off the face of the Earth. With the beginning of the Islamic Revolution in neighboring Iran, Saddam immediately spearheaded the new world “secular crusade” against the revolutionary Iranians. His army invaded Iran and engaged it for 10 years continuous fighting, trying to bleed white the Islamic Revolution. Saddam also used the U.S. supplied chemical weapons against the revolutionary Iranians – exactly as he used them against the recalcitrant feudal Kurds. In the same time, Saddam undertook the most ruthless suppression of the poor Shi’a majority in his country, fearing that the Shi’a could be the first to be inflamed with the ideas of Ayatollah Khomeini.

3. Muammar Kaddafi. Eliminated the Red threat in Libya. Effectively suppressed the Adat in Libya. Did all his best to make either “shariah” or “secular” all those nomadic tribes prone to the Adat. Prevented the inevitable spread of the Islamic Fundamentalist ideology in Libya following the Islamic Revolution in Iran. Promoted the Arabic nationalism of the secular nature coupled with the obligatory anti-Semitism. Helped the so-called “good guys”, who badly needed some new enemy those days, with several bogus terror projects of the pan-Arabic-, pan-African-, and even world-wide scale in the ‘70s and the ‘80s. Helped to bring to power several secular dictators in some smaller African countries. Did his real best to promote the “African unity” and almost managed to unite the African continent into something similar to the European Union, thus, completing for the Freemasons approximately one-quarter of the entire job required to get rid of former states sovereignty and to achieve complete globalization of the planet Earth.

Is it still not enough for you? Do you still believe that all these flunkies of the Western imperialism were “freedom fighters” so unjustly removed from power by the latter? Do not be so naïve. These folks were merely fascists who served the “unconstitutional” and “undemocratic” needs of the West in this particular capacity. They were the unconstitutional “death squad men” hired by the constitutional West. But now their time is over. They have to go. There are no more Reds, there are no more Islamic Fundamentalists, and nobody remembers nowadays what the word “Adat” actually means. Therefore, these secular fascist dictators are no longer needed. They are obsolete. Like Hitler, Mussolini, and Franco.

As you can see, in the description above I addressed only Libyan, Iraqi, and Indonesian fascist dictators. The Syrian one was skipped. It was for a purpose. I want you to read one intriguing article that no longer exists on the Internet. Since such pieces could not be embraced by the concept of the copyright, especially because they no longer exist in public access anyway, I place here its full text with a light heart, without fearing that someone could make it as bold as accusing me of any violation of his copyright.

I found this article in May 2005 on this web page:

http://reformsyria.org/Baath/Terrorism/the_hama_massacre.htm (of course, it no longer exists).

The Hama Massacre of February of 1982

The Ba'athists Brutal Massacre of Innocent Civilians

Under their regime's rule, one need only to look at the Hama massacre of 1982 to realize the sheer amount of suffering that the innocent people of Syria have had to endure.

The year was 1982. Hafez Assad, the then dictator of Syria, had banned all other political parties except the Ba'ath (his own). He had them ruthlessly dissolved, their leaders often killed. The free press of Syria had also been outlawed.

The only newspapers that were allowed into circulation were official Ba'ath papers. Needless to say, the people of Syria eventually grew furious with these turn of events. A new political party was formed ... the Muslim Brotherhood.

Not fearing the dictates of Assad, the Muslim Brotherhood had one major goal: to overthrow the dictator of Syria. They made their presence known and soon enough, people started listening to them.

Seeing the new wave of extreme anti-government sentiment as a threat to himself, Hafez Assad deployed his army with one goal ... to make such an example of the Muslim Brotherhood that no man would ever dare challenge his rule again.

The residents of a Syrian city named Hama had been more persistent in their criticisms of the dictator than other towns. For that reason, Hafez Assad decided that Hama would be the staging point of the example he was to make to the Syrian people. In the twilight hours of February the 2nd, 1982, the city of Hama was awakened by loud explosions. The Syrian air force had begun to drop their bombs from the dark sky.

The initial bombing run cost the city few casualties. It's main purpose had been to disable the roads so that no-one could escape. Earlier in the night, Syrian tanks and artillery systems had surrounded Hama. With the conclusion of the air bombing run, the tanks and artillery began their relentless shelling of the town.

The cost in human lives was severe. As homes crumbled upon their living occupants and the smell of charred skin filled the streets, a few residents managed to escape the shelling and started to flee. They were met by the Syrian army which had surrounded the city ... they were all shot dead.

Hours of shelling had turned Hama into rubble. The tanks and artillery had done all that they could. The next wave of attacks came in the form of Syrian soldiers. They quickly converged onto the town killing anything that would move. Groups of soldiers would round up men, women, and children only to shoot them in the back of the head. Many other soldiers would invade homes with the orders to kill all inhabitants.

After the majority of the people in Hama were dead, the soldiers began looting. They would take all that they could from the now empty homes. Some were seen picking through the dead civilians looking for money, watches, and rings.

With their mission completed and their pockets filled with loot, the soldiers began to retreat from the city. One would think that would have been the last wave of the attacks. It was not. The final attack on Hama was the most gruesome. To make sure that no person was left alive in the rubble and buildings, the Syrian army delivered poison gas generators. Cyanide gas filled the air of Hama. Bulldozers were later used to turn the city into a giant flat area.

The Syrian government death count was placed at around 20,000 people dead ... but the Syrian Human Rights Committee estimates it to be much higher, at somewhere up to 40,000 civilians may have died.

The following is part of the horrific testimony of one survivor:

"I was among a huge number of people, so crowded that we almost could not breathe, and we were taken to Sriheen, where we were ordered to step out of the trucks, so we did as told.

First thing we noticed was those hundreds of shoes scattered everywhere on the ground. It was then when we realized that it meant that hundreds of our fellow citizens were killed and we were next to face the same imminent death.

We were searched afterwards, and any cash or watches were taken off us. Then, the elements of the Syrian authorities ordered us to move forward towards a deeply dug trench, which stretched long. Some of us were ordered to go to another nearby trench.

When I stepped forward to my spot by the trench, I saw the pile of bodies in their still tainted by running blood, which horrified me so much that I had to close my eyes and I had to contain myself to avoid falling off.

As expected, streams of bullets were fired towards us and everyone fell in their blood into the trenches, whilst the ones who were inside the other trench got shot inside the trench where they stood"

The survivor went on: "My injury was not life threatening and God granted me survival by inspiring me to wait patiently till the murderers left the premises and I ran despite my injuries. I was divinely saved from that fate whereas the injured could die under the weight of the other bodies most definitely"

Amnesty International reported:

"Some monitors stated: old streets of the city were bombed from the air to facilitate the introduction of military forces and tanks through the narrow streets, like the al-Hader street, where homes were crushed by tanks during the first four days of fighting.

On February 15th, after days of intense bombardment, Defense Minister General Mustafa Tlass announced that the rebellion was put out, but the city remained under siege and surrounded. Door-to-door searches along with extensive arrests continued during the next two following weeks, while various news leaks talked about atrocities committed by the security forces and mass killings of innocent city residents. It is not easy to know what did exactly occur, but Amnesty International mentioned news of a mass execution of some 70 people outside the city hospital on February 19th and the annihilation of all residents of the al-Hader area on the hands of the Defense Brigades (Saraya el-Defaa) on the same day. Other reports talk of using containers of cyanide gas to kill all inhabitants of buildings, where rebels were suspected of residing. Also, people were grouped in the military airport, city stadium, and military camps and were left there without shelter or food for days."

The following are some very telling excerpts from the Syrian Human Rights Committee report on the Hama massacre:

"It is rather impossible for a writer to paint a picture of the massacres committed against women and newborn children or to describe the methods used to murder members of the same family, one after one right in front of their loved ones, they followed the same fate.

They would cut the guts of a baby while his mother held him, and then fire a stream of bullets onto her to prevent her from giving birth to another future opposition member. They would fire right on the head of an elder, while he murmured a prayer after what he had just witnessed.

Children would scream asking for their mom, or grandfather just to be answered with a stream of bullets killing them all. A family would fall in a pool of their blood, but not for long, because soldiers would set everything ablaze after ransacking the house for any valuables and cutting the hands and ears off in their crazed rush to loot the jewelry worn.

Not one store escaped theft, ransacking or bulldozing, no mosques escaped destruction, nor any minarets remained erect in Hama during that tragic month, even churches were not spared and suffered a similar fate."

"The regime violated the most basic rights of its people, starting with the right to live and ending with the citizenship rights, motivated only by its utter hatred towards Hama and its citizens because they opposed the regime most when compared to other Syrian cities." "The Syrian regime deals with its citizens by utilizing state terrorism, because it has given up on its duty as a preserver of lives of its citizens and a protector of their properties, honor and dignity."

I hope now, at last, you understand why the so-called Western “democracies” so badly needed the services of lackeys like Saddam Hussein, Hafez Assad, and Muammar Kaddafi and why all these “brutal dictators” were tolerated by the West in those days. It was simply because the “democratic” West could not afford to annihilate entire cities in the manner described above merely because their inhabitants were infected with the contagious “undemocratic” ideas of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini or those of Chairman Mao Tse-tung.

Do you think that those Western scribblers and their masters got to know about the “brutality” of Assad’s regime only in 2003 – at the time they published the above article? Do you sincerely believe that the Western leaders did not know how their own puppets – Baathists Saddam Hussein and Hafez Assad were dealing with the revolutionaries back in 1982? Do you think they did not know how Saddam Hussein used the U.S.-supplied chemical weapons to fight the Maoist Kurds and the revolutionary Iranians? Or do you think they did not know how Hafez Assad used the Soviet-supplied chemical weapons to do the same thing in Syria? Do not be naïve. Be cynical, instead. They knew it very well. And the so-called “Amnesty International” knew it as well many years ago. Do not even doubt it.

Before this time, no Western scribbler and no “Amnesty International” were allowed to touch these two most useful hitmen of the New World Order. Because these two were fighting the then two most dangerous anti-NWO ideologies: Maoism and Islamic Fundamentalism. However, by the time the above article was published, the Baathist death squads, hired by the West, had already served their purpose. Islamic Fundamentalism was no longer a threat, and neither was Maoism. Thus, all those “Amnesties Internationals” and other Western propaganda tools were set on on these fossil dictators, and could start, at last, “honestly” informing the lay Westerner about the brutality of the latter; so the “Baathists” could be, “remembered” for what they did. Namely for their usage of the US- and Soviet- supplied chemical weapons against the “innocent civilian” Islamic Fundamentalists...

In any case, we, the Barbarians, are not as gullible as to be duped by such “honesty” of informing us of this fact (with merely a 20-year delay), are we?

Now, I hope, it no longer surprises you why the younger Assad, who runs Syria now (being said in February 2013), can not comprehend why his former handlers from the West turned away from his regime and why he is trying to prove to them that he is still useful in fighting those dangerous “militant Islamists” – to the extent that he even imitates the mini-nukes explosions supposedly directed against the Baath party headquarters? It is because Mr. Bashar al-Assad is too young and too naïve. Moreover, he is apparently not educated enough in the history and in the doctrines of “secularism”, “feudalism”, “communism”, and “capitalism”. Or, using Stalin’s terminology, he is simply too “politically short-sighted” to be able to spot the obvious: his fascist regime is no longer needed. The very “militant Islamists” are needed in his stead – ironically, because “they” could detonate the real mini-nukes and because the West badly needs some new global enemy that is sadly missing today.

Oh, I almost forgot it. For some reader it might appear strange – why the Soviet Union used to support the puppets of the Western imperialism – such as Muammar Kaddafi, Saddam Hussein, and Hafez Assad? Why, for example, the Soviet Union supplied the Iraqi regime with thousands of tanks and other weapons? Why when the United States supplied the chemical weapons to Baathist Saddam Hussein, the Soviet Union supplied the chemical weapons to his fellow Baathist Hafez Assad?

For some people who do not understand the basics of ideology and know little about the history of Communism, it indeed appears like a discrepancy. The point, however, is that the Soviet Union was no longer a Red country in the '60s and in the '70s (not to mention the '80s). The Soviet Union was "Red" only until the time of Stalin's death in 1953. Once the former seminarian Uncle Joe was dead, the USSR was at once converted to an atheist, secular fascist regime with no actual right to use the word "communist" in any of its definitions. In fact, the real Reds – like the Albanians or Chinese those days, referred to the then USSR, as nothing else but the "fascist gang of Kremlin" that usurped the word "communist". The humble author of these lines loved to listen to the prohibited Albanian and Chinese radios in those days – when he was a young boy, and still remembers it very well. And indeed it was so – judging by all its visible and invisible properties, the Khrushchevite/Brezhnevite USSR was merely a fascist country that had absolutely nothing to do with any "communism", not to mention the actual revolutionary Red ideology.

In reality, all those devoted Reds that were not shot by Hitler's troops and storm-troops and managed to survive World War II, were shot by Khrushchev's henchmen during the post-Stalin coup d'état. While the fact that Khrushchev and Brezhnev did not go as far as to replace the portraits of Lenin with those of Hitler in their offices, does not mean that the USSR was "not fascist". It only means that anti-Hitler and pro-Lenin sentiments among the elder generation in the USSR were simply too strong to afford this, so the new secular rulers of the atheist USSR decided to keep the portraits of Lenin, while effectively converting to the fascism. It is the same like in today's slave-owning secular United States they still hang out portraits of its religious feudal Founding Fathers who adhered to the God's Law and used to advocate personal freedoms envisaging the latter being in any case above the interests of the state. The portraits shall not dupe a reasonable observer and neither shall the flags. The fact that the flag of the post-Stalinist USSR was still red in the '60', the '70s and the '80s, does not mean that the actual USSR was "red" too. The flag of the modern secular capitalist United States is almost⁵¹⁵ the same as it used to be in the Christian feudal United States 200 years ago. But it does not mean that the undeniable human right to carry his weapon without any "license from police" accorded to a Christian U.S. citizen 200 years ago is still the same in today's "secular capitalist" United States, Does it? So, do not be duped by the flags, the brands, and the colors. Look at the ideology practiced and you will not make any mistake in your judgment.

Thus, it should not surprise you any longer that the post-Stalinist USSR used to support states like Indonesia, Burma, India, Algeria, Egypt, Libya, Syria, or Iraq who suppressed their own Communists in the most brutal manner. As well as it should no longer surprise you why that USSR held the Red Chinese and the revolutionary Iranians as their most dangerous enemies and why it eventually invaded Afghanistan – starting the civil war there and paving the way for the abolishment of the Adat in the last officially feudal state on this planet. The post-Stalinist USSR was only seemingly "against the Western imperialism". It was so only by its rhetoric that it inherited from the defunct Reds. In reality, since the time of Stalin's death and the assassination of Beria, the USSR was run by the very same sect that runs the West from behind the infamous "curtain". Additionally, the seemingly "communist" fascist USSR helped the so-called "good guys" to make up for a deficiency of the badly needed global enemy during the '70s and the '80s. There was indeed no genuine global enemy those days present, so the vacant position was temporarily staffed with the pseudo-communist USSR whose leaders agreed to participate in the nuclear arms race and in the lavish "Cold War" production. In reality, however, during the last 30 years of its existence, the USSR was the biggest death squad of the Freemasonic sect – not different in principle, but much more efficient than those represented by the "secular Muslim" regimes of Iraq, Syria, or Libya.

⁵¹⁵ I do not want to elaborate it here, because such an elaboration would distract the reader's attention from the main point of this chapter, but in fact, the U.S. flag today is not the same as it used to be during the time of the free United States. Today, the flag has some additional feature on it – a yellow fringe, that technically signifies the change from the so-called "Common Law" (a/k/a the "God's Law") to the so-called "Admiralty law", thus, effectively changing the judicial status of the U.S. citizen from "sovereign" to "subject". You can educate yourself by reading more on this judicial technicality here: <http://www.barefootsworld.net/admiralty.html> Note, though, that the subject discussed there is merely a judicial technicality. It does not have any fundamental importance. The fundamental importance, of course, is not represented by any additional yellow fringe on the United States' flag. It is represented by the secularism, instilled in the originally Christian United States, by the Egyptian pyramid boldly depicted on the "Great Seal of the United States" (as well as on one dollar bill), and by the challenge this pyramid sends to the abolished God's Law, particularly, to its First Commandment (see the Holy Bible, the book of the Exodus, 20:1-2).

It seems that some readers, especially those from the younger generation, might not fully comprehend the fact that the United States indeed supplied the Iraqi regime with the chemical weapons, and therefore such readers might doubt my unfounded claims to this effect. Well. Just 25-30 years ago it used to be common knowledge. It was so widely discussed those days that everybody simply knew it as a matter of fact. The notion that the United States supplied chemical weapons to Saddam Hussein's regime was as well known as the notion that the American CIA was the biggest heroin supplier in the world and as well known as the notion that our Planet Earth was spherical rather than flat. However, today, in February 2013, it might no longer be common knowledge. Today it is very hard to find, for example, any of those multiple books that were widely circulating in the '70s and '80s and that were describing in detail how the CIA organized the biggest drug-scheme ever – by purchasing hundreds of tons of heroin from the Golden Triangle and delivering it by direct flights of South-Vietnamese Air Force to Saigon for the further delivery to the United States. The so-called “good guys” apparently take good care to stop this type of info from any further circulation. The same could be said about any other information that could provide an unprejudiced insight into any “unbefitting” behavior of the United States' leadership and that of its secret services dating back into the era of those third-world dictators.

Actually, once I finished writing this chapter, it luckily occurred to me that I had to provide at least some references to substantiate my claims, because otherwise the shills would not miss this opportunity to accuse me of lying, while some readers from the younger generation might simply disbelieve me. For this reason, I decided to search in Google for some articles that might mention the fact that Saddam was indeed supplied with “his” chemical weapons by the United States. However, to my utter dismay, there were no such articles immediately available in the Google search. Apparently, they are too “politically incorrect” to be available today. I am not the person who surrenders so easily, though. Therefore, I spent several hours of searching and eventually I found one of such seditious articles. Let us review some parts of it, reading it with our eyes OPEN and drawing some conclusions, as we usually do in such cases.

However, before we move to read this rare article dealing with the chemical weapons supplied by the United States to Iraq, I have to interrupt the narration by inserting here some important preliminary explanation. Otherwise, some readers might get confused.

The point is that some educated readers might recollect that the United States used to supply their weapons to not only Iraq, but its rival Iran as well. This fact could create a wrong impression in some naïve souls. This impression could be, for example, like this: “yes, evil United States (British imperialism, or whatever other evil imperialism) always sells weapons to both belligerent sides because in this case the imperialists could kill more potentially dangerous people, because in this case they could prolong the actual war, thus, weakening both sides, and, thanks to the prolonged war, they could sell even more weapons, thus making even more profit – i.e. at minimum three birds are killed with the same stone when weapons are simultaneously sold to both sides of a certain armed conflict”. Yes, the above notion might sound logical and even a bit “advanced” – so it could appeal to some naïve people who consider themselves being “above average”. Do not forget, however, that another popular advanced notion that says “evil Zionists are guilty of everything” appeals to many “advanced” souls too – thus, effectively blinding them by turning their attention away from the Freemasons (and, additionally, making themselves totally immune to otherwise highly infectious “Jewish” ideas of the Reds, of the Anarchists, and of the Islamic Fundamentalists).

If you want to understand the truth, try to be cynical. Do not fall for popular “ready to use” advanced notions intended for the consumption of naïve folks who think of themselves that they are “advanced”. Try to use your common sense and logic and analyze the reality on your own, without being distracted by misleading freemasonic notions such as “so-called Zionists are guilty of everything” or “evil imperialists do everything for profit”. Try to remember that the so-called “Zionists” simply do not exist (or, to be more precise, they used to exist prior to WWII, when they advocated repatriation of Jews to Palestine, but now they exist only in sick imaginations of conspiracy theorists and their credulous audience). Try to remember also that the “evil imperialists” do not do for profit just “everything”. It is often quite to the contrary: the so-called “good guys” are ready to make huge, moreover, long-term investments and to suffer damages in order to achieve their goal. And do not make any mistake: their goal is by no means the profit. They do not actually care about any profit – especially about the profit in those green papers no longer supported by any real gold. A prison warden could not care less about accumulating a personal fortune made up of prisoner's coupons intended for making purchases in the prison's commissary. He is interested only in improving the prison's security regime and in tightening up the inmates' discipline; moreover, he could even aggressively invest in these. The goal of those who entertain you with all these “terror” and “war” shows is to make you a complete slave with an obligatory dog-collar on your neck; the slave who has no right to hasp the door of his bull-pen, because that door must only be pad-locked from outside. As long as you realize this objective of the so-called “good guys” and always keep it in mind, the quality of your analysis of their actions will improve exceedingly.

Coming back to the main point of this interruption. The Western imperialism supported Saddam Hussein’s secular (read “fascist”) regime against the local Reds and against the feudal Kurds. This support dramatically increased after 1979 – i.e. after the Islamic Revolution in neighboring Iran. Before 1979, the Western imperialism used to support the pre-revolution secular Iranian regime as well. It was understandable, because the predominantly Shi’a (Shi’a was always a “rebellion-inclined” faction in Islam) Iran was always considered as a source of an extreme danger to the Freemasonic sect. Thus, by the time of the Islamic Revolution of 1979, Iran was relatively well armed. However, once the West set the Iraqi regime on revolutionary Iran and the full-scale war broke out, the Iranians quickly exhausted their stocks of advanced weaponry. Since the start of the Iraq-Iran war (that in the West was called “Iran-Iraq” war, as if it were started by Iran), the West supplied only the Iraqi regime. It was understandable, because the Iranians suddenly inflamed with the “Jewish” ideas of the new Exodus from the slave-owning freemasonic Egypt into the new Promised Land (where free humans supposed to abide by the “Jewish” Tawrat) represented roughly the same danger as the Reds after the 1917 “Jewish” October Revolution in Russia. Of course, in this situation only Iraq could have been supported by the West, and not Iran. The Iranian Islamic Revolution had to be crushed at any cost – exactly as the 1917 Revolution in Russia.

Nonetheless, as it is probably known to the reader, the United States used to support Iran at some point – at least, it was so claimed when the infamous Iran-Contra scandal broke out. According to the then very embarrassing (what? supplying weapons to revolutionary Iranians? are they mad?) information, some elements within the U.S. establishment managed to secretly ship certain U.S.-made weapons to Iran in 1985-1986. This, indeed, might create an impression that the unprincipled U.S. imperialists were merely making profits by selling arms to both warring parties.

It was not so, of course. The imperialists do have principles in reality. Their principles are quite the same: 1) eliminate the Jewish ideology that advocates the Exodus from the slave-owning Egypt; 2) restrict the new Exodus from the slave-owning capitalism by the “constitutional” means; 3) if the previous steps do not work and some Jewish-inspired or feudalist folks still attempt to break out of the slave-owning society, quickly arm some death-squads or even entire fascist regimes and set them on the escapees in order to exterminate the latter.

Within the frames of the abovementioned “Step 2” the Freemasons installed in Iran a “secular” regime of Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi, trying to convince the Muslims that they had to be slaves of police merely because their regime was no longer religious, but secular. However, it did not work – the Iranians refused to play by the rules of the Freemasonic game; they disdained the so-called “secular democracy” and overthrew the Shah’s regime, breaking out of Egypt, out of the land of slavery – exactly in accordance with the Old Testament. So, within the frames of the abovementioned “Step 3”, the Freemasons armed Saddam Hussein and sent him to chase the rebellious Iranians leaving the so-called “capitalism” for the Promised Land. It apparently worked – the actual battle between the Jewish-inspired Islamic Fundamentalists and the death-squad of the modern global Pharaoh sent to chase them in the desert was indeed very fierce.

However, nobody could predict the outcome of that fierce battle. The Iranians were numerous and they were much better soldiers than the Iraqis (I hope you realize that a soldier armed with an idea of going directly to Paradise from the battlefield is far more superior to a soldier armed with the secular Arabic nationalism). Moreover, the Iranians were flanked by the feudal Kurds – both in Iraq and in Turkey, by feudalist Muslims in neighboring Afghanistan enraged by the Soviet Army and encouraged by the Islamic Revolution, by remnants of Maoists surviving here and there in the Third World, and, to a certain extent – by Shi’a parts of Muslims in all countries, but particularly in Iraq, in Lebanon, and in Syria where the Shi’a constituted a majority. Add here that the Gorbachev’s Soviet Union was scheduled to collapse very soon and nobody could predict with an absolute certainty what kind of folks might come to replace Gorbachev – it could be as well some Stalinists in Moscow and some Islamic Fundamentalists – in the Central Asia and Caucasus. Add here that Maoist elements, although heavily suppressed, have not been completely removed yet from the Chinese Communist party those days, and you will get the full picture of potential dangers to the modern so-called “democracy”.

As you can see – judging by the situation of the mid-’80s, the “Step 2” might not work at all, while the “Step 3” might not be efficient enough: the powers that clashed in that part of the world were about equal. Thus, the Freemasons could not disregard the most important “Step 1”.

In fact, the “Step 1” is much more important than even the “Step 2” and “Step 3”. Instead of tightening the “constitutional” prohibitions plus keeping in a constant combat-ready status various death-squads and potentially unruly fascist regimes, it would be much easier to eliminate the ideological source of the danger – i.e. the very “Jewish” idea of the Exodus from the slave-owning society. Of course, the best the Freemasons could do – is to prohibit the Old Testament whatsoever or to replace it with something else that does not describe the Exodus and does not contain the Law of Moses (that is to be used in the Promised Land, upon escaping the Pharaoh’s Egypt). However, a complete prohibition of the Old Testament might constitute a danger – some discerning folks might become alarmed by the fact of its prohibition and this mere fact might encourage them to study the Torah and to get its point. Some other ways might be more effective, especially in a Christian environment. As you probably remember, for the Christian part of their slave stock the Freemasons managed to instill a notion that Jesus Christ (who used to teach the mortals approximately 1700 years prior to the advent of the so-called “capitalism”) allegedly “abolished” the Law of Moses, while the “Old” Testament was allegedly “rendered obsolete” by the appearance of the so-called “New” Testament (nobody wants to remember that this “New” is 2000 years old, meaning that the Law of Moses was the only law of all feudal Christian states during almost 1700 years after Jesus Christ). The above “neo-Christian” notion, of course, must be coupled with the obligatory anti-Semitism – to make the Freemasonic slaves immune to any “Jewish” ideas whatsoever.

When it comes to the “Muslim” part of their slave stock, as you probably know, the Freemasons managed to make a more radical step – to abolish the Tawrat whatsoever (and, of course, to instill the obligatory anti-Semitism of quite an extreme grade – in part, to make their “Muslim” slaves immune to any “Jewish” ideas, in part – to discourage them from borrowing the Torah from the Jews or the Bible from the Christians in order to read this highly seditious book). The problem, the so-called “good guys” faced with the 1979 Iranian Islamic Revolution, was exactly the same as they used to face with the 1917 “Jewish” October Revolution in the Christian Russian Empire. The leaders of the Reds – such as a former seminarian Stalin or a fervent revolutionary Jew Trotsky inflamed the masses of the so-called “Christians” with the notion that it was not Jesus Christ who abolished the Old Testament 2000 years ago – it was the Freemasons who did it merely 250 years ago. Moreover, they explained that only those who practiced the Law of Moses had a chance to go to Paradise, because the slaves of the Pharaoh were scheduled to go to Hell by definition – as not being subjects of the God’s Law they were not even cognizable to the Last Judgment. The charismatic leader of the Islamic Fundamentalists Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini explained exactly the same things, thus, at once inflaming the Muslim masses with the necessity of the new Exodus.

To begin with, Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini pointed his accusing finger to the Egyptian pyramid boldly depicted by the Freemasons (along with an eye of Shaitan⁵¹⁶) on their one dollar bill and on the “Great Seal of the United States” and explained its true meaning to the Egyptian slaves who thought of themselves that they were allegedly the “Muslims”, the “Jews”, or the “Christians”.

Next – Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini revealed to the gullible the self-evident truth: he proclaimed publicly that the modern state of Israel was actually a secular capitalist state that was not governed by the Law of Moses and as such it had nothing to do with the Jews who by definition supposed to abide by the Law of Moses.

Next – Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini explained to the so-called “Muslims” that nobody abolished the “Jewish” Tawrat for them either, and that, in fact, its “abolishing” was made by the Freemasonic sect merely a century ago or even less than that (Ruhollah Khomeini himself was old enough to remember the old good times when the Tawrat was still available in the pre-capitalist Islamic world). In addition to this, he proclaimed that the Tawrat was the very fundament of Islam and called this notion as nothing else than the “Islamic Fundamentalism” – the very name we use today, without actually paying any attention to what this expression literally means.

Thus, Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini recommenced the Tawrat’s circulation in the Islamic world. He ordered this “Jewish” book, prohibited by the Freemasons on all colonized Mahometan territories, to be re-printed in all languages, the Arabic, of course, inclusive, and began widely distributing it. The Iranian jurisprudence began to be based precisely on the Tawrat – exactly as it used to be in the Ottoman Empire prior to the WWI. Even worse – Iranian school children began to study the religion not from dull reciting of taken out of context Quranic verses, but from the event of the Exodus undertaken from the land of the Egyptian slavery under the leadership of Prophet Musa.

⁵¹⁶ “Shaitan” is they way the Arabs, and the rest of Muslims usually pronounce the word “Satan”.

You could probably imagine how serious was the blow Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini managed to deal to the Freemasonic sect and how much the latter “appreciated” his “Jewish” ideas that extended as far as criticizing the very state of Israel of being technically non-Jewish.

Understandably, the so-called “good guys” could not leave this type of an anti-masonic ideology simply as is. Could you just imagine that millions of Iranian children continued to absorb knowledge of the “Jewish” Exodus from their primary school course? And that the Freemasons could not afford carpet-bombing the entire Iranian territory with the chemical weapons in order to stop this unmitigated barbarism? Of course, the so-called “good guys” had to target not only the passionate Iranian soldiers on the battlefield alone and even the Iranian military commanders; they had to target the very ideology that generated this unprecedented anti-masonic rebellion. However, while the soldiers and even their commanders could be targeted with the chemical weapons, it was not so with the ideology. The ideology, as you probably know, could only be targeted with an alternative ideology – i.e. the ideology could only be dealt with by subversion. Therefore, apart from stopping the revolutionary Iranian soldiers from finishing off the “secular” regime of their thug Saddam Hussein and from continuing their triumphant way into the “religious” Holy Land of Saudi Arabia, the Freemasons faced another task, much more important – undermining the very “Jewish” ideology of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini and replacing it with something else.

As you probably remember, the Freemasons managed to finish off two most dangerous Red regimes – in the USSR and in China immediately after deaths of their charismatic leaders – Josef Stalin and Mao Tse-tung. In both cases it was done by a careful promoting of certain so-called “moderate” factions within the ranks of the ruling party. At some important moment, these carefully prepared in advance “moderate” factions seized power, eliminated some irreconcilable Red elements, and forced the rest to change the ideology. This is how the “communist” USSR became “atheist” (read “fascist”) after Stalin’s death, and how formerly “red” China became “modern” (read “secular capitalist”, though not actually “democratic”) after Mao’s death. In the first case the Freemasons managed to bring to power a “moderate” faction of Nikita Khrushchev and Georgy Zhukov. In the second case they managed to bring to power a “moderate” faction of “atheist” Deng Xiaoping that at once denounced the Red ideology and eliminated all irreconcilable Reds.

Based on their modus operandi, we could safely presume that when the Freemasons encountered the Iranian Islamic Revolution, they must have carefully promoted some so-called “moderate” faction within the ranks of the revolutionary Iranian clergy – with a view of “moderating” the openly anti-masonic stance of the latter. As you can see, today’s Iran no longer promotes any Tawrat (in fact, you will be sentenced to death in modern Iran if you only mention such a thing), though its basic anti-imperialist rhetoric remains in place. In fact, this bears a striking resemblance to the post-Stalinist “atheist” USSR – that continued to wave its red flag, to cry out loudly about “Communism”, and to maintain its anti-imperialist rhetoric, which it inherited from the real Reds. Likewise, post-Khomeini Iran continues to wave its green flag, to cry out loudly about “Islam”, and to maintain its moth-eaten anti-Western rhetoric. Though, as you can see, the Freemasons were perfectly OK with either. Even though the post-Stalinist USSR was successfully used as their “enemy” in the so-called “Cold War” production, and even though post-Khomeini Iran was being successfully used as their “enemy” for another 23 years after Khomeini’s death, the Freemasons did not really bother with either. They no longer created any fascist regimes nearby – akin to those of Adolf Hitler or of Saddam Hussein in order to counteract the USSR or Iran by the force of arms. They no longer maintained any “cordons sanitaires” around either country – in order to prevent the spread of the highly-contagious ideological infection. I think only a completely blind would fail to notice those striking similarities in the Freemasonic attitude towards the Stalin’s USSR and Khomeini’s Iran versus the Freemasonic attitude towards post-Stalinist USSR and post-Khomeini Iran. The first two were real enemies and were treated as such. The second two were cartoon “enemies” and were treated as such.

The actual change in the abovementioned attitude of the Freemasonic sect was conditioned by changes in the corresponding ideologies practiced in the USSR and in Iran. Initially, either of them practiced revolutionary ideologies: they called for an armed rebellion against the Freemasonic neo-Egyptian slavery served up to gullible slaves in disguise of the so-called “secular capitalism”. Speaking in other words, either called for the new Exodus from the Freemasonic slavery and for the restoration of the Law of Moses (called the “Law of Musa” in Iran) as the only law of state. However, eventually, either of the ideologies was “moderated” (or, to be more precise – “castrated”). The communist ideology was made “atheist” by prohibiting the “Jewish” Torah, while keeping the word “Communism” in place and maintaining the former anti-imperialist rhetoric. Since it was technically impossible to make the Islamic Fundamentalist ideology “atheist”, it was simply made “moderate” – by first denouncing and then – completely prohibiting the “Jewish” Tawrat, while keeping the word “Islam” in place and maintaining the traditional anti-imperialist rhetoric.

So, while the former Soviet ideology shifted from the Exodus towards “Communism”, the Iranian one shifted from the Exodus towards the so-called “Shariah”. Interestingly enough, in either case the formerly strictly prohibited anti-Semitism (in Khomeini’s Iran anti-Semitism was strictly prohibited, do not even doubt it; while in the Red USSR anti-Semites used to be shot) was immediately elevated into the main component of the state’s politics. The post-Stalinist USSR used to support the officially atheist PLO and all secular Arab regimes against the hated state of Israel while openly maintaining a classic anti-Semitic rhetoric. The new Iranian “Islamic” regime does exactly the same thing.

Significantly, if you compare the attitude of the modern Western propaganda towards late leaders of the Red USSR (Josef Stalin) and of revolutionary Iran (Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini) you will notice a lot of striking similarities too. Both leaders of the greatest anti-masonic rebellions of the 20th century enjoy truly unprecedented amounts of the most hysterical defamation ever accorded to an individual. Compare, for example, English-language Wikipedia articles on Josef Stalin⁵¹⁷ and on Ruhollah Khomeini⁵¹⁸ and you will feel how much the so-called “good guys” hated these two revolutionaries (whose only “guilt” was that they dared to explain to the gullible Egyptian slaves the true meaning of the Egyptian pyramid used as the main symbolic of the United States).

The point in the above rather lengthy explanation is this: the Freemasons always need to groom and to promote some so-called “moderate” faction (to call a spade a spade – to promote some Freemasonic agents that were able to penetrate a certain anti-masonic movement) in order to eventually bring such so-called “moderates” to the top and so – to enable them to extirpate a certain anti-masonic ideology and to finish off the most dangerous, irreconcilable elements adhering to the latter. Just a few examples: in the USSR the so-called “moderate” agent of the Freemasonic sect was not unknown Nikita Khrushchev. In China it was Deng Xiaoping. In Vietnam it was Le Duan. In the United States it was Abraham Lincoln, who defeated the followers of feudalism in the American Civil War and abolished the “Jewish” Law of Moses on the entire territory of the United States, technically turning this former feudal country into a “secular capitalist” one and thus effectively equalizing former slave owners to their former slaves (and not the other way around).

In revolutionary Iran, of course, there must have been some “moderate” faction groomed and promoted too. This faction would denounce the “Jewish” Tawrat-based Islamic jurisprudence, silently shelve the idea of the new Exodus, shift the public sentiment towards the classic anti-Semitism, the source of Islam – towards the Holy Quran, and the jurisprudence – towards the so-called “Shariah”, thus, effectively forgetting about the “Fundament of Islam” and about the real cause of the Islamic Revolution of 1979.

Now, with this understanding of the Freemasonic modus operandi, we could, at last, take a cynical look at the well-forgotten so-called “Iran-Contra” scandal, or an “illegal” attempt of some U.S. politicians to supply its arch-enemy Iran with certain weapons in 1985-1986, seemingly “despite any logic”. Do you still believe that the “unprincipled” American imperialists supplied both sides of Iran-Iraq war with weapons just because they did not have any principles and wanted to have more profit? Well. Now you will see that everything was not so simple. As it became our good tradition, let us open the corresponding Wikipedia article describing the infamous Iran-Contra Affair: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Iran-Contra_affair

First of all, let us take a look about the quantity of the actual weapons supplied to Iran quoted by the Wikipedia article (later we will compare it with those supplied to Iraq):

August 20, 1985.	96 TOW anti-tank missiles
September 14, 1985.	408 more TOWs
November 24, 1985.	18 Hawk anti-aircraft missiles
February 17, 1986.	500 TOWs
February 27, 1986.	500 TOWs
May 24, 1986.	508 TOWs, 240 Hawk spare parts
August 4, 1986.	More Hawk spares
October 28, 1986.	500 TOWs

⁵¹⁷ http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Joseph_Stalin

⁵¹⁸ http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Ruhollah_Khomeini

Does it look really “a lot” to you? Try to be cynical. The cost of the Hawk anti-aircraft missile was $250,000 per missile. Merely 18 missiles were actually supplied making up their total cost less than 5 million dollars. The rest, as you can see, were only Hawk spare parts. The unit cost of the BGM-71 TOW anti-tank missile is only $50,000. Thus, the 2512 TOW missiles mentioned in the above list would cost only ~125 million USD. Not too much in terms of the 10 years long full-scale war that involved millions of soldiers on the actual battlefield, is it? Add here, that Saddam’s tanks were Soviet-supplied, so, allowing the Iranians to destroy the Soviet tanks in big numbers would apparently lay an additional strain on the Soviet economy (Saddam usually did not pay for the Soviet tanks but demanded more and more of them, promising to “pay later” – eventually, he ended up in debt for several thousands of the Soviet tanks, and, to my humble knowledge, he has never paid for them).

Now we are going to the actual causes. I quote:

“...Following the Israeli – U.S. meeting, Israel requested permission from the United States to sell a small number of TOW antitank missiles (tube-launched, optically tracked, and wire-guided) to Iran, claiming that this would aid the “moderate” Iranian fraction⁵¹⁹, by demonstrating that the group actually had high-level connections to the U.S. government. Reagan initially rejected the plan, until Israel sent information to the United States showing that the “moderate” Iranians were opposed to terrorism and had fought against it. Now having a reason to trust the “moderates”, Reagan approved the transaction, which was meant to be between Israel and the “moderates” in Iran, with the U.S. reimbursing Israel. In his 1990 autobiography “An American Life”, Reagan claimed that he was deeply committed to securing the release of the hostages; it was this compassion that supposedly motivated his support for the arms initiatives. The president requested that the “moderate” Iranians do everything in their capability to free the hostages held by Hezbollah...”

As you can see, the actual causes were not too mysterious, at least, for the reader who knows the basics. Of course, the keywords in the above excerpt are not the “release of the hostages”. Their keywords here are “a small number of”, “to trust the “moderates””, and the “moderate Iranian fraction” (perhaps, the Wikipedia’s authors meant “faction”, not “fraction”). Funny enough, in the actual text of the Wikipedia article its authors also used words “moderate” and “moderates” in quotation marks in all instances.

By allowing their agents to dupe the revolutionary government of Iran by their alleged abilities to get the badly needed weapons (although in very small numbers that could not influence the outcome of the main battle anyway), the Freemasons promoted those so-called “moderate” Iranians. By the time irreconcilable charismatic leader of the Islamic Revolution would die (Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini died in June 1989), the Freemasonic so-called “moderates” would reach about the top of the Iranian hierarchy and would be able to consolidate enough power to actually “moderate” the very cause of the Islamic Revolution (effectively turning Iran into a counter-revolutionary fascist country – bearing so much similarities to the “moderate” Khrushchev’s USSR, to “moderate” Kim Il Sung’s North Korea, or to “moderate” Deng Xiaoping’s China).

Now, as we understood why the U.S. imperialism actually supplied hated Iran with weapons, along with knowing the actual number of the “illegally” supplied weapons and their approximate cost, nothing hinders us from coming back to where we left off. I mean we could, at last, start reading the rare article that I was scarcely able to find on the modern “politically correct” Internet.

The article was transparently named “How the US armed Saddam Hussein with chemical weapons” and was published on Wednesday, August 28, 2002 - 10:00, by a certain Norm Dixon on this web page: <http://www.greenleft.org.au/node/26825> This article contains all necessary references and, moreover, contains almost all important details required to duly understand the entire affair. The article is quite big, but it is so highly informative that I could hardly resist quoting it here in its entirety. Indeed, I was scarcely able to make it a bit “concise”, so what I am quoting below is roughly 60% of its entire volume (words in bold are as usual highlighted by me):

“On August 18, the New York Times carried a front-page story headlined, “Officers say U.S. aided Iraq despite the use of gas”. Quoting anonymous US “senior military officers”, the NYT “revealed” that in the 1980s, the administration of US President Ronald Reagan covertly provided “critical battle planning assistance at a time when American intelligence knew that Iraqi commanders would employ chemical weapons in waging the decisive battles of the Iran-Iraq war". The story made a brief splash in the international media, then died.

While the August 18 NYT article added new details about the extent of US military collaboration with Iraqi dictator Saddam Hussein during Iraq's 1980-88 war with Iran, it omitted the most outrageous aspect of the scandal: not only did Washington turn a blind-eye to the Hussein regime's repeated use of chemical weapons against Iranian soldiers and Iraq's Kurdish minority, but the US helped Iraq develop its chemical, biological and nuclear weapons programs.

Nor did the NYT dwell on the extreme cynicism and hypocrisy of the current US administration's citing of those same terrible atrocities — which were disregarded at the time by Washington — and those same weapons programs — which no longer exist, having been dismantled and destroyed in the decade following the 1991 Gulf War — to justify a massive new war against the people of Iraq.

A reader of the NYT article (or the tens of thousands of other articles written after the latest war drive against Iraq began in earnest soon after September 11) would have looked in vain for the fact that many of the US politicians and ruling class pundits demanding war against Hussein today — in particular, the most bellicose of the Bush administration's "hawks", defence secretary Donald Rumsfeld — were up to their ears in Washington's efforts to cultivate, promote and excuse Hussein in the past.

The NYT article read as though Washington's casual disregard about the use of chemical weapons by Hussein's dictatorship throughout the 1980s had never been reported before. However, it was not the first time that "Iraqgate" — as the scandal of US military and political support for Hussein in the '80s has been dubbed — has raised its embarrassing head in the corporate media, only to be quickly buried again.

One of the more comprehensive and damning accounts of Iraqgate was written by Douglas Frantz and Murray Waas and published in the February 23, 1992, Los Angeles Times. Headlined, "Bush secret effort helped Iraq build its war machine", the article reported that "classified documents obtained by the LA Times show ... a long-secret pattern of personal efforts by [George Bush senior] — both as president and vice president — to support and placate the Iraqi dictator."..."

"...The background to Iraqgate was the January 1979 popular uprising that overthrew the cravenly pro-US Shah of Iran. The Iranian revolution threatened US imperialism's domination of the strategic oil-rich region. Other than Israel, Iran had long been Washington's key ally in the Middle East.

Washington immediately began to "cast about for ways to undermine or overthrow the Iranian revolution, or make up for the loss of the Shah. Hussein's regime put up its hand. On September 22, 1980, Iraq launched an invasion of Iran. Throughout the bloody eight-year-long war — which cost at least 1 million lives — Washington backed Iraq.

As a 1990 report prepared for the Pentagon by the Strategic Studies Institute of the US War College admitted: "Throughout the [Iran-Iraq] war the United States practised a fairly benign policy toward Iraq... [Washington and Baghdad] wanted to restore the status quo ante ... that prevailed before [the 1979 Iranian revolution] began threatening the regional balance of power. Khomeini's revolutionary appeal was anathema to both Baghdad and Washington; hence they wanted to get rid of him. United by a common interest ... the [US] began to actively assist Iraq."

At first, as Iraqi forces seemed headed for victory over Iran, official US policy was neutrality in the conflict. Not only was Hussein doing Washington's dirty work in the war with Iran, but the US rulers believed that Iraq could be lured away from its close economic and military relationship with the Soviet Union — just as Egypt's President Anwar Sadat had done in the 1970s.

In March 1981, US Secretary of State Alexander Haig excitedly told the Senate foreign relations committee that Iraq was concerned by "the behaviour of Soviet imperialism in the Middle Eastern region". The Soviet government had refused to deliver arms to Iraq as long as Baghdad continued its military offensive against Iran. Moscow was also unhappy with the Hussein's vicious repression of the Iraqi Communist Party.

Washington's support (innocuously referred to as a "tilt" at the time) for Iraq became more open after Iran succeeded in driving Iraqi forces from its territory in May 1982; in June, Iran went on the offensive against Iraq. The US scrambled to stem Iraq's military setbacks. Washington and its conservative Arab allies suddenly feared Iran might even defeat Iraq, or at least cause the collapse of Hussein's regime.

Using its allies in the Middle East, Washington funnelled huge supplies of arms to Iraq. Classified State Department cables uncovered by Frantz and Waas described covert transfers of howitzers, helicopters, bombs and other weapons to Baghdad in 1982-83 from Egypt, Saudi Arabia, Jordan and Kuwait..."

"...The January 1, 1984 Washington Post reported that the US had "informed friendly Persian Gulf nations that the defeat of Iraq in the three-year-old war with Iran would be 'contrary to US interests' and has made several moves to prevent that result".

Central to these "moves" was the cementing of a military and political alliance with Saddam Hussein's repressive regime, so as to build up Iraq as a military counterweight to Iran. In 1982, the Reagan administration removed Iraq from the State Department's list of countries that allegedly supported terrorism. On December 19-20, 1983, Reagan dispatched his Middle East envoy — none other than Donald Rumsfeld — to Baghdad with a hand-written offer of a resumption of diplomatic relations, which had been severed during the 1967 Arab-Israel war. On March 24, 1984, Rumsfeld was again in Baghdad.

On that same day, the UPI wire service reported from the UN: "Mustard gas laced with a nerve agent has been used on Iranian soldiers ... a team of UN experts has concluded ... Meanwhile, in the Iraqi capital of Baghdad, US presidential envoy Donald Rumsfeld held talks with foreign minister Tariq Aziz."

The day before, Iran had accused Iraq of poisoning 600 of its soldiers with mustard gas and Tabun nerve gas.

There is no doubt that the US government knew Iraq was using chemical weapons. On March 5, 1984, the State Department had stated that "available evidence indicates that Iraq has used lethal chemical weapons". The March 30, 1984, NYT reported that US intelligence officials has "what they believe to be incontrovertible evidence that Iraq has used nerve gas in its war with Iran and has almost finished extensive sites for mass producing the lethal chemical warfare agent".

However, consistent with the pattern throughout the Iran-Iraq war and after, the use of these internationally outlawed weapons was not considered important enough by Rumsfeld and his political superiors to halt Washington's blossoming love affair with Hussein.

The March 29, 1984, NYT, reporting on the aftermath of Rumsfeld's talks in Baghdad, stated that US officials had pronounced "themselves satisfied with relations between Iraq and the US and suggest that normal diplomatic ties have been restored in all but name". In November 1984, the US and Iraq officially restored diplomatic relations.

According to Washington Post journalist Bob Woodward, in a December 15, 1986 article, the CIA began to secretly supply Iraq with intelligence in 1984 that was used to "calibrate" mustard gas attacks on Iranian troops. Beginning in early 1985, the CIA provided Iraq with "data from sensitive US satellite reconnaissance photography ... to assist Iraqi bombing raids".

Iraqi chemical attacks on Iranian troops — and US assistance to Iraq — continued throughout the Iran-Iraq war. In a parallel program, the US defence department also provided intelligence and battle-planning assistance to Iraq.

The August 17, 2002 NYT reported that, according to "senior military officers with direct knowledge of the program", even though "senior officials of the Reagan administration publicly condemned Iraq's employment of mustard gas, sarin, VX and other poisonous agents ... President Reagan, vice president George Bush [senior] and senior national security aides never withdrew their support for the highly classified program in which more than 60 officers of the Defense Intelligence Agency (DIA) were secretly providing detailed information on Iranian deployments, tactical planning for battles, plans for air strikes and bomb-damage assessments for Iraq."

Retired DIA officer Rick Francona told the NYT that Iraq's chemical weapons were used in the war's final battle in early 1988, in which Iraqi forces retook the Fao Peninsula from the Iranian army.

Another retired DIA officer, Walter Lang, told the NYT that "the use of gas on the battlefield by the Iraqis was not a matter of deep strategic concern". What concerned the DIA, CIA and the Reagan administration was that Iran not break through the Fao Peninsula and spread the Islamic revolution to Kuwait and Saudi Arabia.

Iraq's 1982 removal from Washington's official list of states that support terrorism meant that the Hussein regime was now eligible for US economic and military aid, and was able to purchase advanced US technology that could also be used for military purposes.

Conventional military sales resumed in December 1982. In 1983, the Reagan administration approved the sale of 60 Hughes helicopters to Iraq in 1983 "for civilian use". However, as Phythian pointed out, these aircraft could be "weaponised" within hours of delivery. Then US Secretary of State George Schultz and commerce secretary George Baldrige also lobbied for the delivery of Bell helicopters equipped for "crop spraying". It is believed that US-supplied choppers were used in the 1988 chemical attack on the Kurdish village of Halabja, which killed 5000 people...

"...Soon after, the US agriculture department's Commodity Credit Corporation (CCC) guaranteed to repay loans — in the event of defaults by Baghdad — banks had made to Iraq to buy US-grown commodities such as wheat and rice. Under this scheme, Iraq had three years to repay the loans, and if it could not the US taxpayers would have to cough up..."

"...By the end of 1983, US$402 million in agriculture department loan guarantees for Iraq were approved. In 1984, this increased to $503 million and reached $1.1 billion in 1988. Between 1983 and 1990, CCC loan guarantees freed up more than $5 billion. Some $2 billion in bad loans, plus interest, ended up having to be covered by US taxpayers.

A similar taxpayer-funded, though smaller scale, scam operated under the auspices of the federal Export-Import Bank. In 1984, vice-president George Bush senior personally intervened to ensure that the bank guaranteed loans to Iraq of $500 million to build an oil pipeline. Export-Import Bank loan guarantees grew from $35 million in 1985 to $267 million by 1990.

According to William Blum, writing in the August 1998 issue of the Progressive, Sam Gejdenson, chairperson of a Congressional subcommittee investigating US exports to Iraq, disclosed that from 1985 until 1990 "the US government approved 771 licenses [only 39 were rejected] for the export to Iraq of $1.5 billion worth of biological agents and high-tech equipment with military application ...

"The US spent virtually an entire decade making sure that Saddam Hussein had almost whatever he wanted... US export control policy was directed by US foreign policy as formulated by the State Department, and it was US foreign policy to assist the regime of Saddam Hussein."

A 1994 US Senate report revealed that US companies were licenced by the commerce department to export a "witch's brew" of biological and chemical materials, including bacillus anthracis (which causes anthrax) and clostridium botulinum (the source of botulism). The American Type Culture Collection made 70 shipments of the anthrax bug and other pathogenic agents.

The report also noted that US exports to Iraq included the precursors to chemical warfare agents, plans for chemical and biological warfare facilities and chemical warhead filling equipment. US firms supplied advanced and specialised computers, lasers, testing and analysing equipment. Among the better-known companies were Hewlett Packard, Unisys, Data General and Honeywell.

Billions of dollars worth of raw materials, machinery and equipment, missile technology and other "dual-use" items were also supplied by West German, French, Italian, British, Swiss and Austrian corporations, with the approval of their governments (German firms even sold Iraq entire factories capable of mass-producing poison gas). Much of this was purchased with funds freed by the US CCC credits..."

"...On March 16, 1988, Iraqi forces launched a poison gas attack on the Iraqi Kurdish village of Halabja, killing 5000 people. While that attack is today being touted by senior US officials as one of the main reasons why Hussein must now be "taken out", at the time Washington's response to the atrocity was much more relaxed.

Just four months later, Washington stood by as the US giant Bechtel corporation won the contract to build a huge petrochemical plant that would give the Hussein regime the capacity to generate chemical weapons.

On September 8, 1988, the US Senate passed the Prevention of Genocide Act, which would have imposed sanctions on the Hussein regime. Immediately, the Reagan administration announced its opposition to the bill, calling it "premature". The White House used its influence to stall the bill in the House of Representatives. When Congress did eventually pass the bill, the White House did not implement it.

Washington's political, military and economic sweetheart deals with the Iraqi dictator came under even more stress when, in August 1989, FBI agents raided the Atlanta branch of the Rome-based Banca Nazionale del Lavoro (BNL) and uncovered massive fraud involving the CCC loan guarantee scheme and billions of dollars worth of unauthorised "off-the-books" loans to Iraq...

"...Yet, even the public outrage generated by the Halabja massacre and the widening BNL scandal did not cool Washington's ardour towards Hussein's Iraq.

On October 2, 1989, US President George Bush senior signed the top-secret National Security Decision 26, which declared: "Normal relations between the US and Iraq would serve our long-term interests and promote stability in both the Gulf and the Middle East. The US should propose economic and political incentives for Iraq to moderate its behaviour and increase our influence with Iraq... We should pursue, and seek to facilitate, opportunities for US firms to participate in the reconstruction of the Iraqi economy."...

"...From July 18 to August 1, 1990, Bush senior's administration approved $4.8 million in advanced technology sales to Iraq. The end-users included Saad 16 and the Iraqi ministry of industry and military industrialisation. On August 1, $695,000 worth of advanced data transmission devices were approved.

"Only on August 2, 1990, did the agriculture department officially suspend the [CCC loan] guarantees to Iraq — the same day that Hussein's tanks and troops swept into Kuwait", noted Frantz and Waas..."

Do not be duped by the lay conclusion at the end of the otherwise correct article. Try to be cynical rather than naïve. The administration of Bush Senior "officially suspended" the promised guarantees to its chemical hitman and the "secular" watchdog Saddam Hussein not because the latter went rabid and broke loose, attacking another lackey of the same masters – the neighboring Kuwait (which, moreover, supported Saddam throughout his war against Iran). It was merely because Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini died in Iran and his former "moderate" comrades agreed with the so-called "good guys" to denounce the "Jewish" Islamic Fundamentalism and to abandon the seditious idea of the Tawrat-based Islamic jurisprudence for good, promising to switch to the so-called "Shariah", instead.

So, if on September 8, 1988, when the U.S. Senate passed the "Prevention of Genocide Act", the Reagan administration opposed the bill, calling it "premature" (since Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini was still alive and his "Jewish" ideas required to be dealt with by the genocidal methods), by August 1990 the situation changed considerably – the old Ayatollah was dead and so was his anti-masonic ideology. So, when the so-called "good guys" requested their flunkey Saddam to occupy Kuwait, they simply needed to make another costly show – that they dubbed the First Gulf "War" (and which, despite the apparent "defeat" of Saddam, left that secular watchdog of the Freemasonic sect in his kennel for yet another 12 years).

Some reader, perhaps, might ask – but why would the so-called "good guys" need the costly show dubbed the First Gulf "war" in the first instance? Was it really necessary?

Yes. It was really necessary. There was quite a few reasons for it, in fact (the Freemasons always try to kill more than one bird with one stone, since it is their modus operandi; but in this case they managed to kill, at minimum, three birds, if not more).

The most important reason was that with the death of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini and the repudiation of the "Jewish" Islamic Fundamentalist ideology in Iran (that sadly coincided with the Soviet troops' withdrawal from Afghanistan, with the sudden bout of friendliness of the dying Gorbachev's USSR, and with the rapid dismantlement of the former socialist camp) the so-called "good guys" suddenly found themselves without having any enemy whatsoever. This unprecedented situation was not to be tolerated, because some enemy was always needed. Otherwise, the deluded U.S. citizens might believe that, at last, the war with all enemies of the so-called "democracy" was indeed over and to start demanding back their rights that were gradually taken from them, in the course of the 20th century, under the pretext of "counteracting the Communists". Moreover, the Soviet Union was about to collapse and it was pretty obvious – especially for those who actually arranged for its collapse.

In such an unprecedented situation that occurred in the year 1990, the vacancy of enemies had to be filled at any cost, at least temporarily, because to elaborate a new "global enemy" would take a few years, at minimum. So, in this situation, the armed to the teeth "evil" Iraqi regime of the old good friend Saddam could provide the truly invaluable service. Actually, it was the only available U.S. asset that could have been quickly converted into a “naturally looking” temporary global enemy. And so it was – immediately after Saddam Hussein performed his newly assigned role by occupying Kuwait, the tremendous public hysteria followed, and so the new temporary “global enemy” at once became available. In fact, Western politicians eventually managed to draw out the apparently temporary usability of the “evil” Iraqi regime for quite a long time. While he was initially intended to be used as the “emergency new global enemy” only in between the demise of the socialist system and the moment the “global faceless terror” would start working, i.e. for just 4-5 years, maximum, they managed to eventually extend Saddam’s usability well into the post-9/11 era.

The second reason was that the so-called “good guys” had never had any good pretext to permanently station their reliable troops (I mean those staffed with completely brainwashed Western soldiers) in any Arab country, especially in those Arab countries close to the very source of the danger – the Islamic Holy Places. I hope you realize that the fact the Freemasons managed to convert the Saudis to the ridiculous “Shariah Islam” by no means eliminated the potential danger of the revival of the feudal Adat or the danger of the spread of the modern Islamic Fundamentalist ideology?

The Freemasons realize the potential dangers of the volatile Arab world quite distinctively; do not even doubt this. The Arab world was always one of their main concerns when it comes to the dangers of the ideology. The so-called “good guys” had quite big difficulties in counteracting the Iranian Islamic Revolution. They were able to isolate it, still, but mainly because they were assisted by some fortunate circumstances (not counting the giant “death squad” run by their hitman Saddam Hussein and the fortunate fact that Chairman Mao Tse-tung died before Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini came to power in Iran). These fortunate circumstances were as follows:

1) Khomeini himself and the official Iranian religion were Shi’a, while the absolute majority of Muslims, including those who run the Islamic Holy Places were Sunni (a rough Catholic equivalent: a new outrageous revisionist Christian hierarch originated from Greek Orthodox Church, instead of originating from the “proper” Latin Catholic Church);

2) Khomeini was a Persian, while the source of Islam was Arabic (i.e. by default Khomeini was considered as a “second-quality” teacher – a rough Catholic equivalent: a non-Italian Roman Pope could not be considered as being of the same quality as an “original Latin” one; in Islam Arabic is about the same as Latin in Catholicism);

3) The seat of the leader of the Islamic Revolution was in Tehran – i.e. far from the Islamic Holy places (a rough Catholic equivalent: a new outrageous revisionist Catholic hierarch sits in Slavonic Warsaw or in German Munich, instead of sitting right inside Latin Vatican).

Now, please, try to imagine the unthinkable – that a certain Islamic scholar, who is a Sunni, who is an Arab, were sitting right in the Holy City of Mecca and was professing the “Jewish” ideas of the Islamic Fundamentalism right from there? I.e. from the very place where many millions of Muslims from different parts of the world come for the Hajj every year?

In this case, the Freemasons would lose at minimum a half of the world to the Muslims – exactly as they used to lose the half of the world to the Reds 70 years ago. Of course, they could not afford it. Therefore, their attention to an ideology particularly in this part of the Mahometan world is especially serious. It is, in fact, as serious as their attention to the ideology professed by Vatican. Of course, since the Freemasonic sect has to pay the particularly serious attention to the ideology practiced in these areas, it has to pay an equally serious attention to the political stability in these areas. I hope you realize that if a certain feudalist chieftain following the Adat would seize the power in Mecca or in Riyadh, for those behind the curtain it would mean a catastrophic disaster comparable only with a situation of the current Roman Pope turning Red (or as a variety – of the former seminarian Uncle Joe usurping the Holy See), or one of the Founding Fathers suddenly arising from his grave and challenging the “homeland security” policies of an incumbent U.S. president.

So, the point is that the Freemasons understood these potential dangers very well. They are quite realistic, despite portraying themselves as “mysterious” and even “non-existent”. Their sect fought for almost two centuries against the Islamic ideology before it managed to remove the Turkish sultan, the Caliph of the Righteous, together with his hated “Töre” and “Kanun”, and instill the so-called “Shariah” as the alleged “source of Islam”. You could scarcely imagine – how much it actually cost for the Freemasonic sect to replace the Adat with the “Sharia” and to eliminate the Tawrat in the Mahometan world. The Freemasons simply could not afford to lose all these hard earned achievements on the field of the Islamic ideology to a recalcitrant revolutionary ayatollah or to a casual feudalist tribal leader. The so-called “Shariah law” must be preserved in the Holy Land of Saudi Arabia at any cost, along with the political stability of those who run the Holy Land and maintain the “Shariah”.

Of course, the best way to ensure the political stability there was to permanently station highly-reliable Western troops staffed with those who care neither about the Adat, nor about the Shariah (and who have not even the slightest clue of what their own Holy Bible actually explains to the Christians). I hope you realize that the so-called “good guys” were indeed craving for some pretext to permanently station their troops somewhere near or even right inside the Saudi land? However, they were unable to find such a pretext for quite a long time. Now, with the kind help of their invaluable servant Saddam Hussein, they, at last, found that pretext. As a result of the Part 1 of the theatrical production named “Evil Secular Iraqi Dictator Occupies Sovereign State of Kuwait and Threatens the Holy Land of Saudi Arabia”, the Western troops were, at last, stationed there (ostensibly “to protect the Shariah law from the secular thug” or so it should appear to the non-secular Mahometans).

As you could probably imagine, the Western troops, once finding the pretext to set their foot on the Holy Land of Saudi Arabia, would NEVER, UNDER NO CIRCUMSTANCE leave this land. It is the same as when a typical Western government finds some pretext to force its subjects to surrender personal firearms, it would NEVER, UNDER NO CIRCUMSTANCE allow its subjects to have their guns back. The Freemasons NEVER give anything back. They could be slow, gradual, or fast and brutal in depriving you of your former rights, but the movement is always in only one direction. You will never get your rights back, not even a single right, not even partially. Once you surrender your right to the Freemasons, forget about ever getting it back. Your total enslavement – is the only thing in which this sect is interested.

However, on the tactical level, the Freemasons and their figureheads who run their “secular” countries sometimes need some nice pretext to take from you one right or another. For example, to convince you to “voluntarily” surrender your firearms, the so-called “good guys” might organize a few so-called “school-massacres”. To instill in you the necessity to report money movements on your account, the Freemasons might create a few “terror” projects, as well as “illicit drugs distribution” projects. To instill in you the necessity to surrender your computer files for an appropriate inspection, the Freemasons could first instill in you a notion of the alleged “evil” of the so-called “child pornography”. You can continue the list. So, sometimes, in order to tighten the screws, they need some pretexts. And they need some folks who would actually create these pretexts – for example, those who would supposedly fly aluminum planes into the steel towers, or those who would naturally massacre children in some kindergarten with duly licensed firearms. So, to forever station the Western troops in the immediate vicinity of the Muslim Holy Places, the Freemasons needed some pretext too. Saddam Hussein gave them that pretext. So, that was the second reason for the “1990 Iraqi aggression”.

The third reason of that production was that the West was obliged to arm Saddam’s regime to the teeth in order to enable it to be competitive with far more populous Iran, which was, moreover, armed with the fervent religious zeal that actually makes a soldier unswerving on the battlefield (you simply can’t subdue the one who is certain to go to Paradise – you could only kill him, if only he won’t not kill you first – hence the usability of the chemical weapons). However, after the demise of the Islamic Revolution in Iran, the so-called “good guys” were faced with the new, no longer needed super-power of the regional grade: armed to the teeth fascist Iraqi regime. Understandably, they could not tolerate it. Iraq was armed by them for a certain particular reason, and the reason was no longer valid.

I hope you realize that when in the Western or in Latin American countries they create those death squads, they tolerate their existence only during the time of the real Communist- or Anarchist dangers. Once the death squads did their job by eliminating the actual threat in an “unconstitutional” manner, they could no longer be tolerated. At the best case they have to be disbanded whatsoever, but at minimum they must be disarmed. To begin with, they have to be, at least, partially disarmed – i.e. deprived of heavy weaponry temporarily issued to them to perform those “unconstitutional” dirty tasks; while small arms could be taken from them later. The same consideration was applicable to the Iraqi regime. The Iranian Revolution threat was eliminated by then, so this giant death squad, moreover, so heavily armed, simply could not be left “as is”. It would be just against the rules of those who pull strings from behind the curtain: the death squads must be disarmed when they are no longer needed. Could you just imagine what might happen if Saddam and his henchmen were overthrown by some other folks – for example, by the Shi’a majority (or, perish the thought, by some feudal followers of the Adat or by the Reds) and all this tremendous military machine would fall into the hands of those who are uncontrollable by the West or are even its direct enemies? In immediate proximity to the Holy Land of Saudi Arabia?

Of course, the Freemasons faced the task of disarming the Iraqi regime quickly and at any cost. But how could they disarm it beautifully? If they would simply order Saddam Hussein to start a “voluntary” Iraqi disarmament, it would not look believable. Moreover, it would look utterly suspicious – the discerning observers in the Arab world would immediately denounce hated Saddam as the lackey of the Western imperialism who at last showed his true face. Such a “voluntary disarmament” would never be understood properly (or, to be more precise, it would be exactly “properly understood”) by either Iraq’s own citizens or by the rest of inhabitants of the Arab world.

Please, try to understand that when some “democratic” regime orders some no longer needed death squad to surrender its arms, it could be done in a more or less “natural” manner. First, such a death squad is usually not so big and could be easily dealt with by the “legitimate” police forces or even by the “legitimate” armed forces if it dares to kick against. Secondly, the members of such an “unconstitutional” death squad are still technically citizens of a “constitutional” state – so they could be ordered to surrender their arms by some additional “constitutional” decree passed to this effect and such a move would look technically legitimate. Thirdly, the very existence of such death squads is usually not well publicized and so the matter of their eventual and inevitable disarmaments would attract the least public attention (if any at all) inside the concerned country, and almost never – any international attention.

It was not so, however, with the giant Iraqi death squad that, moreover, enjoyed state sovereignty, at least, technically. How could you disarm a sovereign state? That legally possesses its weapons arsenals intended for its legitimate armed forces? Do you have any clue? The so-called “good guys” from behind the curtain had some. That is why they played to you on the scene in a quick succession two quite costly shows named “The Occupation of Innocent Kuwait by Evil Iraq” and “The First Gulf War”. As a result of this incredibly costly production, an expensive ticket to which was, nonetheless, successfully sold to a gullible spectator who goes by the name “the U.S. taxpayer”, the no longer needed military strength of the “evil” regime of the “chemical thug” Saddam Hussein was considerably reduced. Lazy Western troops, without much effort, and while meeting only a token resistance from the well-trained Iraqi troops that had superior combat experience, were able to successfully destroy most of the Iraqi heavy weapons. They destroyed almost all its tanks and artillery pieces, near all of its aircraft, its entire anti-aircraft defense system, and most of its small-arms arsenals. While the dangerous Iraqi SCUD missiles with the increased range (capable of delivering chemical and bio- weapons) were willfully launched by the “evil” Iraqi dictator into Israeli deserts without any “chemical” or “biological” warheads attached. When it comes to the Iraqi actual chemical weapons, it seems that Saddam found the way to dump their no longer needed stocks secretly in some desert locations. Thus, as a result of the First Gulf “war”, Iraq was effectively disarmed.

Interestingly enough, this profoundly “anti-Western” chemical thug did not use any chemical weapons (not to mention any bio-weapons) against the troops of the Western imperialism neither in the First Gulf “war”, nor in the Second Gulf “war”. It was so despite the fact that Saddam evidently “had nothing to lose” and the usage of the chemical- and bio-weapons capable of teaching a good lesson to the bullying Western imperialists would not aggravate his situation in any case.

Do you think that Saddam decided to abstain from using of his arsenals of weapons of mass destruction because he feared the coalition forces would reciprocate and use their chemical weapons against his own troops that he wished to spare? Do not be so naïve. Be cynical, instead. The U.S. bombers were carpet-bombing unprotected (and apparently innocent) young Iraqi conscripts wiping them out at the rate of tens of thousands per day. It could not have been any worse if the U.S. bombers would use the chemical weapons for the same reason. Thus, there was absolutely no justification for Saddam’s decision not to use any chemical- and bio-weapons against his sworn enemies – the Western imperialists. Nevertheless, he did not use them. He used the chemical weapons only against the enemies of the Freemasonic sect – the feudal Kurds and the revolutionary Iranians.

Note that Muammar Kaddafi, who too had considerable arsenals of the chemical- and bio-weapons, preferred to abstain from using them even in a situation when he had really nothing to lose. So, make your own conclusion – to which Saddam Hussein and Muammar Kaddafi actually served. And do not be duped by the publicly available video showing Saddam’s “execution” or by reports of Kaddafi being “killed”. Do not forget that Timothy McVeigh was “executed” too and his “execution” was too shown on video. Unlike secular profanes, who have no principles at all, the Freemasons do have some principles for their internal usage. They are the Knights Order, still. They can not afford killing those who served them all their lives – like Muammar Kaddafi or Saddam Hussein.

In this connection, I remembered one funny thing. I used to know one very high-ranking Freemason (much higher-ranking than Donald Rumsfeld; if Rumsfeld, in my estimation, holds in the Freemasonic hierarchy a rank equal to something between a lieutenant and a major, the one I am talking about was well above a major-general) and for some odd reason I was very close to him. This man, in turn, used to be very close to Saddam Hussein. He had many gifts and souvenirs from the Iraqi president and he liked to display them. One of them was a palm tree that was presented by Saddam on a certain very special occasion. Soon after the announced Saddam's "execution" and appearance of the video depicting that event, that acquaintance of mine made a very tragic presentation regarding the "death" of his beloved friend. At that point, I, with my inherent cynicism, told him that I could not force myself to believe that Saddam was really dead. He asked me why I thought so. I answered him that I couldn't believe that such a powerful organization as the Freemasonic sect could allow one of its most valuable operatives to be hanged by profanes as if he were a petty criminal. This man, even though he was a good actor, as the most of the Freemasons, was visibly disturbed by this suggestion and he had to skip the dramatic presentation. In about a week time, he found some pretext to call me to visit him at his home. When I arrived there, he, besides discussing the actual thing he used as the pretext to invite me, showed me, in a manner of "by the way", the palm tree presented by his friend Saddam, which "suddenly" dried up. In his opinion (he was portraying himself as very superstitious), it was a "proof" that Saddam was really dead, and he tried his best to convince me to this effect. The Freemasons do not like to be unmasked – even if it is done in a form of a joke.

This was just a little lyrical digression. Let us come back to our main point.

The above quoted article describing the usage of the chemical weapons by Iraq is actually so clear, that it does not even need to be read "between the lines" as we got used to do. You can simply read its actual lines – all that is needed to be understood from it is expressed by its author plainly – "as is". However, on some readers (and certainly – on the shells) this article might leave an impression that the United States only "helped" Saddam Hussein to launch the production of his own chemical weapons, plus, supplied him with the means of their deployment, but without supplying him with any ready chemical weapons. The fact that the U.S.-supplied Bell helicopters, equipped for "crop spraying", that were used in the 1988 chemical attack on the Kurdish town of Halabja, which killed 5,000 people (just only a little more than were killed in the Twin Towers' collapse), is mentioned in that article, indeed, along with the fact that the U.S. supplied to Iraq certain "chemical warhead filling equipment". However, there was no direct mentioning in this article that the actual chemical weapons were supplied to Iraq by the United States too. Thus, some people might conclude that the above information is insufficient to establish my claims for certain.

Well. We will still be able to do it, if we really wish to.

As you could see, in the course of the narration in this book, we have already ventured into the fields of nuclear weapons, mini-nuclear weapons, and bio-weapons. The chemical weapons missed our precious attention so far. It seems now is the time to fill the gap in this knowledge.

In order to get the point, we will need to look into these two excerpts from the above article:

1) "...On that same day, the UPI wire service reported from the UN: "Mustard gas laced with a nerve agent has been used on Iranian soldiers ... a team of UN experts has concluded ... Meanwhile, in the Iraqi capital of Baghdad, US presidential envoy Donald Rumsfeld held talks with foreign minister Tariq Aziz."

The day before, Iran had accused Iraq of poisoning 600 of its soldiers with mustard gas and Tabun nerve gas..."

2) "...The August 17, 2002 NYT reported that, according to "senior military officers with direct knowledge of the program", even though "senior officials of the Reagan administration publicly condemned Iraq's employment of mustard gas, sarin, VX and other poisonous agents..."

We are not much interested in the mustard gas (also known as "yperite" or "sulfur mustard") in this case, although it is very nasty on its own⁵²⁰. The keywords here are "tabun", "sarin", and "VX", and the fact that Iraqi usage of particularly tabun nerve gas strangely coincided with the visit of the proven Freemasonic operative Donald Rumsfeld acting in disguise of the "representative of the United States".

⁵²⁰ http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Sulfur_mustard

My modest knowledge of chemical weapons suggests me the following: tabun is an antiquated type of neuroparalytic action chemical agent that was decommissioned as a chemical weapon well before the '60s due to an apparent superiority of sarin that was twice as toxic and yet easier to produce. Moreover, as far as I know (I was a well-educated, and, moreover, a well-connected Soviet military officer, who knew quite a few secrets of the Soviet military), tabun had never been produced by the Soviet Union and neither was it by any other country, except for two – Nazi Germany and the United States.

At the time I was a small boy avidly interested in weapons and eager to read anything about weapons (I am talking about the mid-'70s), tabun was so badly outdated that it was scarcely mentioned among the commonly known chemical weapons in related books printed in the '60s. By the time I began to study the chemical weapons within the standard high-school course of the civil defense (1979-1982), tabun was completely excluded from any studying books on the subject of the chemical weapons or the means of protection against the latter due to its being obsolete. Unlike sarin, soman, and VX, tabun was not even mentioned in the civil defense textbooks those days and neither was it mentioned in handbooks intended for young soldiers.

When I studied the chemical weapons one more time in the military school (that was equal in grade to a university), again, there was no listing of tabun as a potential chemical weapon, apart from that it was scarcely mentioned as a badly outdated nerve agent no longer used in any modern army and replaced with far more efficient sarin. During my military service, I used to be acquainted with quite a few specialists in chemical weapons and I liked to discuss this subject with them (actually, I loved to discuss any subject with any appropriate specialist because I just loved to study and to know new things – I was quite curious when I was young). Besides, I read many books on the chemical weapons – both classified and non-classified. Therefore I knew all chemical agents that were in service in the Soviet Army since the '20s and up to the '90s. Neither from my acquaintances, who were military chemists by training, nor from any book on this subject – either instructional or “memoirs”-type – had I heard that tabun or tabun-based chemical weapons had ever been produced by the Soviet Union.

Now, please, keep in mind that, according to the two above excerpts, Iraq has simultaneously used (and presumably “produced”) the following types of chemical weapons: 1) mustard gas (we are not interested in it in our case, despite of its being extremely dangerous), 2) tabun, 3) sarin, and 4) VX.

Let us take a brief look at the related Wikipedia articles describing each of these chemical agents.

Sarin (GB). <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Sarin> I quote (words in bold are as usual highlighted by me):

“...Sarin, or GB, is an organophosphorus compound with the formula [(CH₃)₂CHO]CH₂P(O)F. It is a colorless, odorless liquid] used as a chemical weapon owing to its extreme potency as a nerve agent. It has been classified as a weapon of mass destruction in UN Resolution 687. Production and stockpiling of sarin was outlawed by the Chemical Weapons Convention of 1993 where it is classified as a Schedule 1 substance...”

“...Sarin degrades after a period of several weeks to several months. The shelf life can be shortened by impurities in precursor materials. According to the CIA, some Iraqi sarin had a shelf life of only a few weeks, owing mostly to impure precursors ...”

“Sarin was discovered in 1938 in Wuppertal-Elberfeld in Germany by two German scientists attempting to create stronger pesticides; it is the most toxic of the four G-agents made by Germany. The compound, which followed the discovery of the nerve agent tabun, was named in honor of its discoverers: Schrader, Ambros, Rüdiger and Van der LINde.”

“...Use as a weapon: 1950s (early): NATO adopted sarin as a standard chemical weapon, and both the U.S.S.R and the United States produced sarin for military purposes...”

“...1956: Regular production of sarin ceased in the United States, though existing stocks of bulk sarin were re-distilled until 1970...”

“...1980–1988: Iraq used sarin against Iran during the 1980–88 war. During the 1990–91 Gulf War, Iraq still had large stockpiles available which were found as coalition forces advanced north.

1988: Over the span of two days in March, the ethnic Kurd city of Halabja in northern Iraq (population 70,000) was bombarded with chemical and cluster bombs, which included sarin, in the Halabja poison gas attack. An estimated 5,000 people died almost instantly ...”

“...1994: The Japanese religious sect Aum Shinrikyo released an impure form of sarin in Matsumoto, Nagano. (see Matsumoto incident)

1995: Aum Shinrikyo sect released an impure form of sarin in the Tokyo Metro. Thirteen people died. (see Sarin gas attack on the Tokyo subway) ...”

I think, these quotations are enough to begin with, because they provide all necessary clues. Let us summarize what we got from the above Wikipedia article:

- 1) Sarin was discovered as early as in 1938.
- 2) At the moment of its discovery, it at once rendered previously discovered tabun obsolete (i.e. as of 1938, tabun was already obsolete, at least, for the Nazi Germany).
- 3) By the earlier '50s, sarin was a standard chemical weapon for both – the USSR and the NATO.
- 4) By 1956, the United States' military specialists judged that sarin should be replaced with some more potent nerve agent, though they continued to replenish the existing chemical weapons based on sarin with some fresh sarin regularly.
- 5) Technology of sarin production was not so complicated and not so expensive, so that even poor imbeciles from the loony Aum Shinrikyo sect managed to manufacture it in makeshift conditions.
- 6) Even amateur chemical war-mongers from the brainsick Aum Shinrikyo sect, who did not have any industrial capacities to produce either of the two chemicals, clearly preferred sarin to tabun.
- 7) Iraq, at minimum, produced sarin of its own, though not such good quality (as judged by the CIA).
- 8) Iraq used sarin as chemical weapons not only against Kurds at Halabja in 1988, but also against Iranian troops as earlier as in 1980.

Let us look at the Wikipedia article on tabun (GA). http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Tabun_\(nerve_agent\))

I quote:

“...Tabun or GA is an extremely toxic chemical substance. It is a clear, colorless, and tasteless liquid with a faint fruity odor] It is classified as a nerve agent because it fatally interferes with normal functioning of the mammalian nervous system. As a chemical weapon, it is classified as a weapon of mass destruction by the United Nations according to UN Resolution 687. Its production is strictly controlled and stockpiling outlawed by the Chemical Weapons Convention of 1993. Tabun is the first of the so-called G-series nerve agents along with GB (sarin), GD (soman) and GF (cyclosarin).

Although pure tabun is clear, less-pure tabun may be brown. It is a volatile chemical, although less so than either sarin or soman...”

“...Tabun was the first nerve agent to be discovered by accident in January 1936 by the German researcher Gerhard Schrader...”

“...During World War II, as part of the Grün 3 program, a plant for the manufacture of tabun was established at Dyhernfurth (now Brzeg Dolny, Poland), in 1939. Run by Anorgana, GmbH, the plant began production of the substance in 1942. The reason for the delay was the extreme precautions used by the plant....”

“...Large scale manufacturing of the agent resulted in problems with tabun's degradation over time, and only around 12,500 tons of material were manufactured before the plant was seized by the Soviet Army. ...”

“...The Soviets dismantled the plant and shipped it to Russia.[citation needed]...”

My comments – I have never heard about it, therefore, perhaps, “[citation needed]”. Judging by logic, if the Soviets indeed relocated that plant to Russia, as claimed, they would obviously use it to manufacture tabun. However, it is well-known that in the USSR tabun has never been produced.

“...The US once had a tabun production program, which ended many decades ago. Like the other Allied governments, the Soviets soon abandoned GA for GB and GD. Large quantities of the German-manufactured agent were dumped into the sea to neutralize the substance...”

My comments – Soviets have never “abandoned GA for GB and GD” because they have never produced the GA in the first instance, so there was nothing to “abandon”. The article contains a deliberate lie obviously intended to somehow cover-up the fact that the US-produced tabun was supplied to Iraq.

“...Since GA is much easier to produce than the other G-series weapons and the process is comparatively widely understood, countries that develop a nerve agent capability but lack advanced industrial facilities often start by producing GA...”

My comments – and again, it is lie, because if tabun were “easier to produce” and the process of its production were “comparatively widely understood”, as claimed, then those amateur chemists from the loony Aum Shinrikyo sect, who apparently “lacked advanced industrial facilities”, supposed to start with tabun. However, they clearly preferred to start with sarin, despite the “lack of facilities”. The above passage is obviously a deliberate disinformation intended to hide the fact that Iraq would never ever produce badly outdated tabun while being capable of producing far more effective sarin. So, the fact of Iraqi’s possession of tabun betrays the obvious: that “someone” who had existing industrial capacities to produce tabun has supplied Iraqis with this product.

“...In his 1970s-1980s tracts to the media, US conspiracy theorist Francis E. Dec often claimed the use of tabun (misspelled “tabin”) as a covert assassination tool in the US...”

Well, in this case we are not much interested in the lunacy of typical conspiracy theorists, though the above is quite a good example of how imbecilic the conspiracy theorists actually are. Why should you use expensive, classified, prohibited, embarrassing if discovered, extremely dangerous to handle, quickly degradable tabun, when you can use far more effective, cheap, common, easy to keep, and safe to handle cyanide of potassium or curare poison as “covert assassination tools”? The above delirium, however, is useful for us as just one more confirmation of the fact that tabun indeed existed in the United States.

“...During the Iran–Iraq War, Iraq employed quantities of chemical weapons against Iranian ground forces. Although the most commonly used agents were mustard gas and sarin, tabun and cyclosarin were also used...”

Now, I hope, the logically thinking reader has gotten the point, at last. Iraq has used tabun, despite the fact that it was either supplied with- or was capable of producing of sarin and even of cyclosarin.

In terms of conventional weapons, it would sound as if a certain country, while being capable of manufacturing center-fire rifles and even machineguns, also launched an industrial production of muskets and arquebuses.

For anyone, not completely devoid of common sense, it should mean that Iraq was simply supplied with ready tabun by a certain country that had pre-existing industrial capacities of tabun production (or ready stocks of the latter) + ready chemical aviation bombs and other chemical weapons especially designed to be used particularly with tabun.

Considering that no other country except the United States has ever produced tabun, it shall be presumed that no other country would spend its efforts in developing any means of tabun’s delivery, except the United States. So, judging by logic, it shall be presumed that only the United States of America and no other country in the world could have any chemical aviation bombs designed to be used particularly with tabun. Logic is a stubborn thing, as you probably know.

For Iraqis it would be just an unforgivable stupidity – to spend their money and scientific efforts on developing an industrial production of tabun and tabun-based chemical weapons, when they could better spend their efforts on developing some more effective modern chemical agent such as, for example, well-known soman or cyclosarin. It could only be the U.S. who could supply the Iraqi regime with all that tabun-based stuff.

But why, you might ask, the United States resorted to tabun? Why didn’t it supply Saddam with sarin or some newer nerve agent, instead?

I think it is not so difficult to answer this question. The U.S. officials are not always brilliantly clever. Try to remember, for example, how stupid was the initial anthrax-letters attack and how it was “improved” in the course of the time – only to make it even more stupid? The same consideration could be, probably, applied to the so-called “Iraqgate”.

The United States had the abandoned, yet functioning facilities to produce tabun, plus some (perhaps, substantial) stocks of outdated chemical aviation bombs designed to be used with the latter. They had a new customer who needed some chemical weapons. Try to place yourself in someone else's shoes. What would be the very first thought that would come to your mind if you were a typical U.S. official making a decision of what particular nerve agent to supply to Saddam's regime?

Of course, you would propose to resume the production of tabun and supply to Iraq particularly the tabun-based weapons. First of all, in this case you get rid of stocks of antiquated chemical bombs designed to be used with outdated tabun. Secondly, you will create an impression that the "chemical beginner" Iraq decided to follow the path of Nazi Germany and, instead of beginning with sarin, began their chemical weapons program with tabun. It was apparently expedient and sounded quite "logical". Therefore, Donald Rumsfeld gladly rushed to Iraq – to make Saddam happy with the good news: the United States supplied not only tabun-based aviation bombs, but also provided some battlefield planning and even offering the "calibrating" of the aerial chemical attacks on the Iranian troops.

However, later, it would occur to some thinking folks that allowing the Iraqi regime using tabun on the battlefield was tantamount to a public admission that it was particularly the United States that supplied Saddam with "his" chemical weapons. Therefore, the schedule was quickly amended. Tabun was skipped and Saddam's regime began to receive shipments of sarin and sarin-based weapons. In this case, it would look more "believable" and should leave an impression that Iraq produces sarin on its own.

Intriguingly, as you could see from the above quoted materials, Iraq used on the battlefield not only tabun and sarin, but, in addition to them, also VX and cyclosarin. I would skip here cyclosarin, because I know little about it – during the time of my military service, it was not known to be in service in any NATO country, so we did not even study it. Perhaps, Iraqi researchers even managed to develop cyclosarin as their own nerve agent of choice, researching it on their own (because cyclosarin is actually more effective than sarin). However, I just do not want to go deeper into this one, since it is extraneous in our case. The point of our interest now is VX.

Let us review a corresponding Wikipedia article on VX. http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/VX_\(nerve_agent\))

I quote (words in bold are as usual highlighted by me):

"...VX, IUPAC name O-ethyl S-[2-(diisopropylamino)ethyl] methylphosphonothioate, is an extremely toxic substance that has no known uses except in chemical warfare as a nerve agent. As a chemical weapon, it is classified as a weapon of mass destruction by the United Nations in UN Resolution 687. The production and stockpiling of VX was outlawed by the Chemical Weapons Convention of 1993. ..."

"...After the evaluation was complete, several members of this class of compounds became a new group of nerve agents, the V agents. The best known of these is probably VX, assigned the UK Rainbow Code Purple Possum, with the Russian V-Agent coming a close second (Amiton is largely forgotten as VG). This class of compounds is also sometimes known as Tammelin's esters, after Lars-Erik Tammelin of the Swedish Institute of Defense Research. Tammelin was also conducting research on this class of compounds in 1952, but did not publicize his work widely...."

Make sure to notice that the so-called "Russian V-Agent" (also known as "VR", "Russian VX", "Soviet V-gas", "Substance 33", and "R-33"), that is described in a separate Wikipedia article⁵²¹ is a different chemical agent than the "well-known VX". Surely, it was developed by Soviet chemists independently of their American colleagues. A line of the "G-agents" such as tabun, sarin, cyclosarin, and soman was developed by the Nazi Germany and eventually all materials pertaining to their research and production fell into the hands of the allies-winners, who shared them. Eventually, the G-agents became commonly known and well-described, also in an openly-published media. Therefore, all those tabuns, sarins, somans are so well known today and they are indeed common to all armies who are armed with the chemical weapons.

It was not so, however, with the newer V-line of the nerve agents. These were developed independently by the Cold War adversaries – the USA and the USSR. Moreover, they were researched and manufactured in a total secrecy. Thus, it comes as no surprise, that the actual V-type nerve agents that were developed independently in the United States and in the Soviet Union were different. They are even described in two different Wikipedia articles.

⁵²¹ http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/VR_\(nerve_agent\))

Here is the quotation of the Wikipedia article http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/VR_\(nerve_agent\)) describing the Russian V-agent:

*“...VR (Russian VX, Soviet V-gas, Substance 33, R-33) is a "V-series" nerve agent closely related (isomer) to the better-known VX nerve agent.

*The development of VR started in the late 1950s by a team from the Soviet Union's Scientific Research Institute No. 42 (NII-42). Sergei Zotovich Ivin, Leonid Soborovsky, and a female chemist named Iya Danilovna Shilakova jointly developed this analogue of VX...

From either of the above excerpts, it shall be clearly understood that the Russian VR and the American VX, although closely related chemically, and although representing the same class of chemical weapons of the neuroparalytic action, are still distinctly different chemicals.

Let us come back to the first of these two Wikipedia articles – the one describing the American VX.

“...VX is the most toxic nerve agent ever synthesized for which activity has been independently confirmed...”

“...The chemists Ranajit Ghosh and J.F. Newman discovered the V-series nerve agents at ICI in 1952, patenting diethyl S-2-diethylaminoethyl phosphono-thioate (agent VG) in November, 1952. Further commercial research on similar compounds ceased in 1955 when its lethality to humans was discovered. Information on the substance was passed to Porton Down in 1954 and research there led to VX within a year. This was traded to the United States in return for information on the design and construction of thermonuclear weapons as the British passed over VX in favor of continuing with sarin as the UK chemical weapon of choice. The reasoning behind the decision is unclear, although the then recent completion of a sarin production facility at Nancekuke may have played a part.

The US then went into production of large amounts of VX in 1961 at Newport Chemical Depot...

As you can see, VX was actually discovered by the British, rather than the Americans, but its discovery deemed to be so valuable, that the British managed to trade it even for the design of thermonuclear weapons, while themselves resorting to old good sarin as the chemical weapon of choice. In this view, it is no longer surprising that the United States (as you could see from the Wikipedia article on sarin) stopped any further development of sarin-based weapons in 1956. It was because after they purchased VX formula from the British, they decided that their chemical neuroparalytic weapons of choice from now on would be VX. By the way – it was exactly what we were taught in the Soviet Army in the '70s and the '80s in regard to the chemical weapons of the main adversaries.

So, now you got the point – VX was highly valuable and so secret, that the Soviet chemists were not able to discover its formula on their own, and their work in that direction led to creation of VR rather than VX; while the Americans went as far as to trade it for the thermonuclear weapons design. Now, try to use your common sense in order to estimate – what were the chances that the Iraqis could discover VX on their own?

The Wikipedia article on VX continues:

*“...There was evidence of a combination of chemical agents having been used by Iraq against the Kurds at Halabja in 1988 under Saddam Hussein⁵²². Hussein later testified to UNSCOM that Iraq had researched VX, but had failed to weaponize the agent due to production failure. After U.S. and allied forces had invaded Iraq, no VX agent or production facilities were found. However, UNSCOM laboratories detected traces of VX on warhead remnants...

I hope you got the point. Iraq could not produce VX (a chemical peculiar to the United States) and yet Iraq managed to have VX, still, in its warheads.

Let us, for the sake of clear conscience, read the actual 1988 BBC article, the Wikipedia's one refers to. Here it is: http://news.bbc.co.uk/onthisday/hi/dates/stories/march/16/newsid_4304000/4304853.stm

⁵²² BBC (March 16, 1988). "1988: Thousands die in Halabja gas attack". http://news.bbc.co.uk/onthisday/hi/dates/stories/march/16/newsid_4304000/4304853.stm. Retrieved March 1, 2012.

“1988: Thousands die in Halabja gas attack

Thousands of people are reported to have been killed and many others injured in a poison gas attack on a Kurdish city in northern Iraq.

Up to 20 aircraft, said to include Iraqi Migs and Mirages, were seen overhead at around 1100 local time in Halabja.

According to experts, the chemicals dropped by the planes may have included mustard gas, the nerve agents sarin, tabun and VX and possibly cyanide.

*The attack on Halabja, which is about 150 miles (241km) north-east of the Iraqi capital Baghdad, is the latest in the Iran-Iraq war and follows its occupation by Iranian forces.

Iraq was said to be keen to avenge the fall of Halabja, which is seen as an important centre for Kurdish resistance in their struggle for autonomy...”

“...Most of the wounded, who were taken to hospital in the Iranian capital Tehran, were suffering from mustard gas exposure.

Those who escaped death have developed respiratory or visual problems from the cocktail of chemicals dropped on the city.

According to some reports, up to 75% of the victims were women and children...”

I think these quotes should suffice. Please, make sure to notice that while the usage of “cyanide” was suggested as “possible”, it was not so in regard to the usage of VX and tabun.

However, there is yet another intriguing detail, published on the very same BBC web page under the rubric “In Context”. This one is, probably, the most important – much more important than the seditious mentioning of VX and tabun:

*“Initially, the US Defence Intelligence Agency blamed Iran for the attack. Halabja is around eight to 10 miles (14km to 16km) from the Iranian border.

However, the majority of evidence indicates that the gas attack was an Iraqi assault against Iranian forces, pro-Iranian Kurdish forces and Halabja’s citizens during a major battle.

*Although there is some evidence Saddam Hussein’s forces had used chemical agents before this date, the attack on Halabja is thought to be the first documented assault using chemicals...

So, let us make all final conclusions – of either technical-, political-, or even religious nature.

- 1) Feudal Kurds prone to the Adat, and, moreover, adherents of Maoism, were natural allies of the Iranian Islamic Fundamentalists, and indeed fought along with the armed forces of the latter against the pro-Western Iraqi secular dictator. Interestingly enough, besides being Maoists, Kurds were Sunni, while the Islamic Fundamentalist Iranians were Shi’a; however, this did not cause any so-called “sectarian differences” between them (that the Western mass media like so much to emphasize nowadays). The conservative Sunni Kurds and the revolutionary Shi’a Iranians, despite belonging to different branches of Islam, and despite speaking different languages, were clearly united by a certain common ideology that was so much hated by the West.
- 2) The chemical massacre in Halabja at the very end of the ten years long Iran-Iraq war (that was, in fact, “Iraq-Iran” war, not vice-versa) was merely the first one that was more or less documented. Thus, we could only guess how many more of such chemical massacres had taken place in reality during those years...
- 3) The United States’ Defense Intelligence Agency for some not so clear reason was closely monitoring the tactical situation – to the extent that it managed to come up with its “conclusions” as to the “true” perpetrator of the outrageous chemical assault even before the news agencies.
- 4) Iraqi planes used some nerve agents peculiar to the United States’ chemical war arsenals, which under no circumstances could have been manufactured in Iraq.

Do you still not believe that it was indeed the very United States who supplied its “arch-enemy” Saddam Hussein with all these chemical weapons? Well... Then, probably, I can not help – your case is incurable. But, at last, now you know for sure that Saddam Hussein was indeed armed “by someone” with the chemical weapons.

So, now, I hope, you understand that when in the 9/11 aftermath those hysterical U.S., Australian, and British politicians cried out loudly that Iraq had the weapons of mass destruction, they did not really cheat you...

Covert-Labs Red Button: Party Music pre-9/11 prediction and post-9/11 controversy.

Two cows are grazing. The first cow: "It appears to me that those bipeds merely milk us, but one day they will slaughter us and eat our meat". The second cow: "You must be crazy! It is because you are always after those conspiracy theories!"

I believe that I have to add to my book on 9/11 this little chapter in order to finally clarify certain things that traditionally entertain typical conspiracy theorists and their flock. Since I loathe those conspiracy theorists and because they always fail to notice the obvious and prefer to go after imaginary things, I do not want to leave them any food for thought to continue parasitizing on. I would be more than pleased leaving their bread to deserving researchers (in fact, I do not like to address issues properly addressed by others, since I feel like I am stealing their bread, or even worse – plagiarizing), but I can not afford doing so when it comes to those who promote various lunacies. I believe that with this book (including its free part titled "A Big Lyrical Digression") I have managed to wrestle most of the daily bread from the typical loony conspiracy theorists that are alien to both – logic and reality. At least, from now on, dear reader, no one will be able to cheat you by claiming that so-called "nano-thermite" could instantly melt steel into fluffy dust, that the antimasonic 1917 October Revolution in Russia was allegedly organized by "Freemasonry", that Saddam Hussein or Muammar Kaddafi were allegedly "against the West", that he allegedly saw so-called "extraterrestrials" with his very eyes, or that his very own father (uncle / neighbor / friend) was allegedly a so-called "33rd-degree Freemason" (as if the lower 32 degrees of the Freemasonic army were not existent and only their field-marshals and generalissimos could be encountered in the daily life). The only little thing that remains unaddressed is infamous "predictions" and "revelations" that supposedly "betray" various Freemasonic undertakings.

The most infamous of them is, probably, so-called "Illuminati cards" – the game that was released for the plebs in remote 1994 and even in 1994 contained the descriptions of practically all without exception future Freemasonic undertakings, the very 9/11 project inclusive. The gaming purpose of the actual game was "to install a globalized world order on the planet Earth once and forever" (which, despite its certainly seditious purpose, could not be interesting at all from the purely gaming point of view – an ordinary "black jack", not to mention pretty common chess or checkers were incomparably more interesting). Moreover, such a seditious game, despite its silly gaming nature, managed to receive the so-called "Origins Award for Best Card Game" of the year 1994⁵²³ (intended merely to attract public attention to this otherwise uninteresting Freemasonic concoction called a "game"). This is how the pack with those cards looked like:

To begin with, let us take a closer look at some of these cards (of 1994, just to remind you).

Here is the first card:

⁵²³ http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Illuminati:_New_World_Order

Of course, as you may understand, re-writing of history is one of the most important steps to begin with. In this step, the Freemasons managed to “prove” to you, for example, that Stalin (a former Mafioso and a seminarian who all his life was only reminding peoples of Hell, the seven gates to which were still open) was allegedly an “atheist”, or that so-called “Shariah”, concocted by the special ideological department of the British military intelligence in order to enslave colonized Muslims, is allegedly “the law of Islam”.

Here are some more cards:

The above ones deal with the enslavement of the biped cattle by causing them to degrade further. The actual degradation is achieved by promoting whoring (subliminals – see the three letters SEX on the three scoops of ice-cream), since whoring is inevitably associated with music, drinking, smoking, dancing, and drugs, by fast food, by alcohol, by tobacco, by video-games, that indeed blind their eyes – exactly like shown in the above card, and, for those, who are not interested in games – by promoting various bitches of fashion.

I can't resist quoting here a typical "loony" conspiracy theorism, that describes the "death" of "Princess Di" as *"What could only be properly described as a global tragedy, the death of Diana, Princess of Wales, didn't just affect her family, nor did it just affect England. The death of Princess Diana affected the whole world!"*⁵²⁴ Even if to presume that it were true that she was fixed by her enraged sovereign husband (and not relocated within the frames of the Freemasonic relocation network), the death of such a whore who forgot what was the difference between subjects (cattle by definition) and royals (humans by definition) would have been applauded by the humanity merely a century ago. However, thanks to the Freemasonic entertainments, for today's cattle it appears to be nothing less than the allegedly global "tragedy"...

Other cards deal with entertainment of the cattle in the field of politics:

As you can see, the public entertainment in the late '90s and in the new millennium went exactly in accordance with the entertainment project published in 1994 – converting Saddam from the former friend of the "civilized" West into almost "universal evil", adventures of NATO troops in Yugoslavia, along with demonization of Russia, and, of course, evil Israel continued to serve as a usual entertainment.

Other cards dealt with "enemies" that were supposed to be targeted for the cattle's entertainment:

⁵²⁴ <http://www.itsagodthingproductions777.com/diana.shtml>

As you can see the actual vector of development in the late '90s and in the new millennium was exactly in accordance with these cards published in 1994. It was exactly so-called "SPAM", of course, so-called "money laundering", and, of course, "corruption" to be fought against (notably, only the corruption among third-world dictators, not among those who run the so-called "civilized world"). I think a card depicting so-called "child pornography" is missing in the set. I do not know why they afforded such an omission...

Other cards dealt with scaring issues – primarily, with how the ruler had to scare the cattle:

As you can see, from those 1994 “predictions”, the Freemasons so far performed quite a few. They concocted the “flash-eating” virus of Ebola and its “epidemic” in Africa (that enabled them to intrude into a few sovereign African states). They launched at minimum three productions with global “epidemics” (so-called “SARS”, so-called “avian flu”, and so-called “swine flu”). They created the infamous tsunami in South-East Asia at the end of 2004. They attempted the production with the “oil spill” in the Gulf of Mexico in May 2010, but since it was too rudely concocted and people began to ridicule it, the Freemasons were obliged to scrap the production right in the middle of an intense public hysteria caused by it. The infamous production with the alleged “nuclear accident” in Japan was shown to you as well and the absolute majority of the gullible Westerners (and Easterners alike) swallowed it with ease – as if it were indeed the real thing – I hope you still remember it. The threat of the “meteor strike” is in the process of production nowadays, adding its share to the cattle’s scare along with the notion of the so-called “extraterrestrials”; while the so-called “Elders of Zion” continue to serve as a traditional alarm for the cattle – exactly as they used to do for well over a century – since first concocted by the Czarist Okhranka in the Imperial Russia.

Here is another interesting card dealing with scaring of the cattle:

Nowadays it is Judy Wood’s specialty. She and her cult not only claim that “laser-beams-from-the-space” could reduce steel of the Twin Towers into dust (with simultaneously making deep underground cavities under the WTC buildings on “ground zero” covered with molten granite, which used to release radioactive vapors for almost 5 months); they also claim the these “laser beams” were also used for the so-called “mind control” (as if the zombie-box called “TV-set” were not enough for this reason).

These cards dealt with the actual goals of further enslavement of the cattle:

All of it is understandable, because it is so blatantly obvious. The Freemasons want to scare their cattle with alleged “epidemics”, with so-called “extraterrestrials” and so-called “aliens”, with so-called “terror”, with so-called “money laundering”, with so-called “child pornography”, with “hackers” and with so-called “SPAM”, with so-called “school massacres”, etc. in order to disarm the cattle, to get control of their bank accounts, to get control of their computers, and to get control of their very bodies by subjecting them to obligatory “medical” check-ups and to obligatory “vaccinations”, and, of course, to create so-called “FEMA”, as if the old-fashioned cops were not enough... This so-called “FEMA” would finally send the entire so-called “humanity” to concentration camps. The cattle do not deserve to reside in the comfort of big capitalist cities; these were merely a temporary step – to lure the former humans into slavery in the first instance. The cattle must live behind a barbed-wire fence, and this is pretty self-evident.

However, our particular interest is represented by these cards (of 1994, just to remind you):

How do you like the notion of the alleged “terrorist nuke” depicted on the left card? That was published, just to remind you, in 1994! In a manner of “by the way”, I am obliged to tell you that I had discovered these cards only around the year 2009 or 2010, thanks to some friends of mine who pointed out to me that these “Illuminati cards” indeed existed from the year 1994. Thus, I did not base my claims of the alleged “terrorist nukes” in the upper floors of the Twin Towers on the knowledge obtained from these cards. I based my claims exclusively on the knowledge obtained from some folks that belonged to the FBI. These cards I discovered much later, but as you can see, they perfectly confirmed the FBI’s version.

Well. Let us stop entertaining mysteries and come straight to the point. The humble author of these lines would like to remind you once again that he is not a conspiracy theorist, and he is not a person who might believe in any “mystery”, in any occult stuff, or in any esoteric crap. He is an exceptionally cynical former military officer, who believes in God, the Creator, rather than in the so-called “aliens”, who has a technical education, and who goes only by logic and by common sense.

So, my logic and common sense suggest that if someone in 1994 published this set of cards where the future 2001 Freemasonic project with the alleged “nuke” in the WTC Twin Tower was mentioned, this person must be a Freemason.

If that person was the Freemason, then it should be logically presumed that:

- a) He published this set of “apocalyptic” cards without the permission of the Freemasonic sect, and thus betrayed the plans of the sect to the profanes;
- b) He published this set of cards because the Freemasonic sect ordered him to do so, since the Freemasons so utterly despise the profanes that they intentionally publish for them their “revelations” and “prophesies” from time to time, but the profanes are such cattle that they are not even able to catch such hints, despite their complete transparency. This provides the Freemasons with a formal excuse in regard to why the cattle must be prohibited from raping their own wives, disarmed, and implanted with identification microchips, why elder cattle must be subjected to the voluntary euthanasia in disguise of voluntary “vaccinations”, and why younger cattle must be banished from cities and sent to live in the concentration camps.

The third option, unfortunately, does not exist.

The difference between typical loony conspiracy theorists and cynical adequate people, akin to the humble author of these lines, is that the former would bet on the option “a”, while the latter would bet on the option “b”.

The problem is that if the option “a” were the case, then the Freemasons (who are powerful enough when it comes to controlling of publications and promoting games for the cattle), would not allow the publication of these “Illuminati cards” in the first place, lest awarding to the pack their “Origins Award for Best Card Game” of the year 1994. Do you agree with this logic?

Thus, the only remaining option is the option “b”.

It shall be known, that the Freemasons, first of all, have a prefix “Free-“ in their name. It does not, of course, mean that the Freemasons are as free or as freeminded as typical Russian mafia or typical Pashtuns from the “lawless” Tribal Area of Pakistan. It is not so, of course. Rank-and-file Freemasons are not much better in the sense of freedom than the cattle they entertain – they are thoroughly brainwashed (to wash off all remnants of former Christian values) and indoctrinated with the pseudo-ideology of the Freemasonic sect, and they are bound by the very strict sectarian discipline that leaves no room for any “freedom”. The closest thing the Freemasons could be compared with is the North Korean commandos. The latter are definitely more freeminded than typical cattle in the West, yet they are not genuinely “freeminded” because they are indoctrinated with some pseudo-ideology that is merely contradictory to the Western so-called “values”. So a North Korean ridicules them, while himself having an ideology that is not much better than the Western “values” he ridicules. A typical North Korean commando could have a certain operational freedom (especially if he is relatively high-ranking), but not any personal freedom, because despite ridiculing Western so-called “democracy” and other “values” of the Western so-called “civilization” and considering himself personally free from such slavish complexes, such a commando does not belong to himself, but to the North Korean secret service.

The Freemasonic operatives are about the same – they ridicule the profanes, perceiving them as cattle (because indeed they are cattle), but the actual pseudo-ideology of the Freemasonic sect that they are indoctrinated with makes them just another type of cattle, albeit a little more aggressive one. If a typical “law-abiding” Western so-called “citizen” could be compared with a sheep that does not even notice an existence of a shepherd that owns the sheep, a typical rank-and-file Freemasonic operative could be compared with a sheep-dog that certainly knows about the existence of the shepherd and he has a certain operational freedom – running around the sheep and barking at their flock. However, the Freemason is owned by the very same shepherd that owns the actual sheep, and he knows very well that despite his prefix “Free-“ he could not run away from his master to become completely free. The sheep-dog, despite being allowed to run around, can not run too far from the flock it tends – firstly, it would lose its daily subsistence from its owner; secondly, it could be torn to pieces by genuinely free wolves, which are still around.

However, it shall be understood, that either a typical North Korean commando or a relatively high-ranking Freemason are still more freeminded than a typical Western so-called “Christian” who does not even notice an Egyptian pyramid on his green exchange coupon called “money” or a typical Western engineer who believes that aluminum could penetrate steel only because his zombie-box shows him such a performance. Thus, despite the prefix “Free-“ in the name of Freemasonry does not mean really much, it still means something. By using this prefix, the Freemasons, at least, contrast themselves with the so-called “citizens” of the so-called “free world” whom their sect effectively reduced to Egyptian slaves, mocking the Commandment Number One. That is to say that the Freemasons have a certain “corporate disdain” for the Western “law-abiding” cattle and this prompts them to publish various “revelations” from time to time.

For example, when after the “death” of “first cosmonaut” Yuri Gagarin, the Freemasons decided to stage the infamous production with the “human landings on the Moon”, they screwed the United States for enormous amounts of cash. However, the Freemasons did not feel satisfied, because the Moon production looked too genuine to doubt it and it did not reach, therefore, the intended goal – another humiliation of the cattle. So, in order to amend this, the Freemasons finally ordered and released a “revealing” Hollywood movie – titled “Capricorn One”. The movie was released in 1978 and it clearly explained to the spectator that the alleged “Moon landing” was a scam. However, the spectator was more interested in consuming his popcorn than in getting the point of the actual movie he was watching.

“Capricorn One” was the most successful so-called “independent film” that was seen by almost the entire biped live stock in the West. Yet even this did not prompt the cattle to doubt the Moon landing production.

The first public discussions suggesting that the Moon landing was a scam, moreover, technically impossible one, began not earlier than in the late '90s, when some former Soviet scientists that were bound by non-disclosure contracts after Gagarin's escape to America, began to talk openly about the alleged "Moon landings".

That is to say that "Capricorn One" was available since 1978, and it was seen by nearly everyone in the West, but the cattle did not get its point nonetheless. This is just an example of what the Freemasons usually want to demonstrate to the cattle and in the same time – to demonstrate to their own brethren that the profanes are indeed mentally incompetent and incurable, and the only solutions are the voluntary euthanasia and the concentration camps. As a side-effect, such an approach also allows the Freemasons enlisting more or less adequate folks (who do not want to associate themselves with the "law-abiding" cattle) into their own ranks, thus expanding their sect.

So, being armed with this understanding, let us proceed to the actual point of this Chapter – the infamous affair with the original cover for "Party Music" album of The Coup, an alternative hip hop group based in Oakland, California.

Here is the actual cover of the album, created in June 2001, which became a source of the controversy:

Not bad, is it? The mocking picture contains all needed Freemasonic symbolism, in addition to the exact positioning of the explosive charges in the North (with an antenna) and South (without an antenna) Towers of the WTC. Do not miss to notice the drumsticks. In case you don't know it: the 11th date of every month in freemasonic rites alludes to the drumsticks, while the drumsticks signify "loud announcements of apocalyptic actions for those deaf". The Freemasons (who are mad on numerology) love the particular date of "11", therefore. A Red button in a device named "Covert-Labs" (which is implying that the aluminum planes have probably nothing to do with the explosions) is, of course, merely a coincidence. The drumsticks, moreover, held in such a manner as to signify a pyramid, are, of course, coincidence also. As well as the entire picture created in June, 2001. It was just a coincidence, of course.

This is how the corresponding Wikipedia article⁵²⁵ describes the affair:

⁵²⁵ http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Party_Music

“...Party Music was originally scheduled to be released in early September 2001, but the release got delayed until November 2001 due to the cover art, which depicted Boots Riley and Pam the Funkstress destroying the twin towers of the World Trade Center using a Covert-Labs digital chromatic tuner as a detonator. The original cover was created in June 2001.

In an interview with Seattle newspaper The Stranger, Boots Riley spoke about his fight to keep the album cover following the events of September 11:

“There’s been a whitewash in the media over the past couple days over what the U.S.’s role in the world is, and the fact that they kill hundreds of thousands of people per year to protect profit. Now how can I get to the point where I could be saying that on the world stage, and interrupt the lies that CBS, CNN, NBC, and everyone is saying? In my view, that [would be] by keeping the cover. Not because I think by looking at the cover you get all of this message that I’m telling you, but as a way to have a platform to interrupt the stream of lies that are being told right now”...

It does not actually matter what this Boots Riley (who poses as a kind of “Communist”) mumbles in regard to the affair – you can completely disregard his words, since, unfortunately, they were obtained not under torture, which would certainly be the case if America were populated by free and freeminded people – akin to those who live in the Tribal Area or Pakistan or akin to those who used to live in the United States prior to the victory of the Freemasons in the Civil War (fought for equalizing white Christians to their black unbelieving slaves). What matters is that those folks who conduct the show from behind the infamous “curtain”, instead of quashing this presumably “dangerous” piece of supposedly “incriminating evidence”, supposedly “betrayed” by some “communist-like” bastards, gave it the green light to be publicly discussed and even described in Wikipedia articles (by contrast, Wikipedia articles on the humble author of these lines, as well as on the Soviet Special Control Service were prudently removed by Wikipedia’s censors).

This is how the Freemasons usually mock the cattle, which instead of promptly arresting those folks and torturing them into revealing who ordered them to create such a picture (what is his name and his address, or at least how he looked like), prefer to chew silly conspiracy theories on various internet forums... So, I hope now the reader understands why the Freemasons want to send the so-called “good citizens”, who enjoy their so-called “democracy”, to the concentration camps and why they created the so-called “FEMA” and their equivalents in other capitalist countries, which would run the actual camps.

For the sake of fairness, it shall be mentioned that the above was not the only one of the “9/11 coincidences”. There were quite a few of them. Here is, for example, another one, not bad too:

This is a front cover of the Russian-language magazine "Construction and Renovation" ("Обустройство и Ремонт” in Russian, web site www.oir.ru) No.34(63) of 3-9 of September, 2001 that features a bold advertisement of a certain organization whose web site and telephones are provided below (moreover, their web site www.alta-d.ru still exists even today, in August 2013). The actual organization supposedly offers so-called “Eurorenovation” (a typical Russian cattle-term that implies that the “Russian renovation” is inferior to the “European” one, which became widespread in USSR during Gorbachev’s times), interior designs, and obtaining of approvals of building authorities. The white banner with the sign of the Twin Towers crossed out contains a slogan that reads: “ONLY ORIGINAL DESIGNS”.

Do you think that those who paid for the advertisement of this mockery on September 9, 2001, were arrested and tortured by the Russian secret services into revealing who ordered them such a bold thing? You are badly mistaken if you think so. Their web site www.alta-d.ru still exists, as I have mentioned.

In this connection, I have to remind you also about something that was mentioned in the beginning of this book – in the timeline of important 9/11 events. Here it is:

September 11, 9.31 AM – [attention, extremely important!] Alarm is raised when a panel truck is stopped near the temporary command post, with a painting of a plane flying into the World Trade Center on it. Fearing that it might be a truck bomb, the New York Police Department immediately evacuates the surrounding area and calls out the bomb squad. NYPD temporarily detains the truck’s occupants, who turn out to be a group of Middle Easterners [sic] who speak no English, and have rented the truck. No explanation is provided until now why the truck sported a picture of a plane hitting the WTC. However, all major news agencies released news shortly afterwards claiming some truck loaded with explosives allegedly struck the WTC and exploded.

Perhaps, when you encountered the above description for the first time at the beginning of this book, you most probably disbelieved it, perceiving it as “too weird” and therefore “too improbable”. However, now, after being acquainted with the June 2001 cover of “Party Music” album of The Coup and with the cover of the Russian magazine “Construction and Renovation” of 3-9 of September, 2001, you might change your mind and believe it. Indeed, the event described in the above quotation took place. Indeed, at 9.31 AM EST, of September 11, 2001, i.e. in the midst of the 9/11 events, a truck with such a painting was stopped by the U.S. cops. This event is well-documented and any self-respecting 9/11 researcher knows about this event very well. This was the very case that became known as the “case of mocking Jews” (the truck was rented by the descendants of Jacob, of course, who else could be those “Middle Easterners”?). However, it did not occur to the U.S. authorities to apply a certain action to those who rented the truck in order to discover – who hired them to perform such a mockery? And then – to apply similar methods to the agency that rented out the actual truck – in order to discover – who suggested them to paint such a depiction on their truck? The so-called “Middle Easterners” who rented that truck were released by the cops soon after it was discovered that there were no bomb in it.

Finally, just to close this matter, not leaving room for the typical “loony” conspiratorial approach, let us consider a few more artifacts pertaining to the Freemasonic production of the same kind. Here they are:

The above one is from the infamous 1991 Freemasonic movie titled *“Terminator 2: Judgment Day”*⁵²⁶ Still frame of 37th minute, 30th second. And the below one is from the infamous 1999 Freemasonic movie titled "The Matrix"⁵²⁷.

⁵²⁶ http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Terminator_2:_Judgment_Day

These two artifacts are not as impressive, of course, as the first two, but, still, they are notable enough. What is particularly important for our investigation, that now, at last, we could conclude with certainty that the so-called "good guys" scheduled the 9/11 production not later than in 1991, since even in the 1991's "Terminator 2" the Freemasons had already used their typical "transparent hint" referring to 9/11.

Here is yet another notable Freemasonic mockery scheduled to be released right on the very day of September 11, 2001 A.D. (and it was indeed released on that very day):

⁵²⁷ http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/The_Matrix

The above one is an original (as released on the very day of 9/11) cover of a 3-disc live album bearing a truly mocking name “Live Scenes from New York” by so-called “progressive metal” band bearing even more mocking name “Dream Theater”. Here you see that the Freemasons indeed mock the cattle that perceive those entertainments by various “Dream Theaters” and the like as consumable stuff.

Of course, since this mockery was intended as such, the Freemasons have no need to hide it from the profanes and therefore the abovementioned scandalous affair deserved even its dedicated Wikipedia article⁵²⁸ (apart from another Wikipedia article⁵²⁹ that is devoted to the actual “Dream Theater” band).

That is what the first Wikipedia article says on the infamous 9/11 “Live Scenes from New York” affair (I quote; words in bold are marked by me):

“...Live Scenes from New York is a 3 disc live album by progressive metal band Dream Theater, recorded on August 30, 2000, at the Roseland Ballroom in New York City. Live Scenes from New York is the audio counterpart to the Metropolis 2000: Scenes from New York DVD, released in 2001...

...Coincidentally, it was originally released on September 11, 2001, but when it was noticed that the logo on the cover artwork depicted the skyline of New York, including the twin towers of the World Trade Center, in flames, it was recalled and re-released a short time later with the Majesty symbol instead. Some copies with the original artwork still exist, and are now a rare collectors item. The logo was based on a previous album cover, that had depicted a heart in flames. Since the concert was recorded in the Big Apple, the logo was changed to a flaming apple with New York City on it.”

I sincerely wish that the reader of this book no longer believes in any “coincidences”. However, the Freemasons presume that cattle do believe that “artworks” akin to the one shown above could be indeed “coincidentally” released right on auspicious days akin to the 11th day of September, 2001 A.D. That is exactly the reason why they actually mock the so-called “good citizens” in such a manner.

If you are interested in going deeper into the infamous Freemasonic symbolism (which I hate to do, to be frank with you, because I do not want to be mistaken for a typical “loony” conspiracy theorist, since the latter are known to feed on such things), I could, perhaps, make a few comments in regard to the above picture. It represents at least three different implications at the same time (to give the inventive Freemasonic “symbolists” their due). First of all, it implies the mockery of the well-known so-called “Sacred Heart of Jesus” (as you can perceive by comparing the depiction above with the pictures below):

⁵²⁸ http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Live_Scenes_from_New_York

⁵²⁹ http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Dream_Theater

Secondly, it clearly mocks the American so-called “good citizens” by implying that “The Big Apple” (the well known nick-name for New York City) is being converted into a concentration camp.

Thirdly, it mocks the original concepts of good and evil by implying that the “forbidden fruit” of knowledge of good and evil (that for many folks with a superficial knowledge of religion is associated particularly with the “apple”) is buried by the 9/11 project.

That is to say that the Freemasons are so bold that they even try to be competitive with God the Creator by attempting to imply many different meanings simultaneously (which is the apparent ability of God – Who is well-known for such things; for example, Quranic verses contain many different meanings simultaneously, which is indeed a divine ability hardly achievable by limited mortals). Do not miss the point – by this particular performance the Freemasons indeed attempted to challenge the divine abilities; nothing less than that.

Considering that all their implications and challenges described and depicted above have something to do with religion, you can safely conclude that the Freemasons indeed openly mock biped cattle that perceive themselves as “Christians”...

This is not to mention (apart from the religious subtext) that a typical so-called “good citizen” who would presumably purchase the abovementioned 3-disc album with such a depiction right on the very day of 9/11 (when this product was indeed released) would indeed see on its cover nothing else than the “Live Scene from New York” produced by a company mockingly named “Dream Theater”.

The Freemasons, despite their evil Satanic nature, are not completely devoid of the sense of humor, as you can see...

However, what is interesting for us, the cynical Barbarians, is not the blasphemous Freemasonic “humor”. We are much more interested in primitive earthly affairs. Primarily – in why those folks who produced that bold “prediction” scheduled to be released right on the very day of 9/11 were not arrested and why they were not tortured into revealing to the inquiry – who requested them to do such a thing? What was his name?

Here is one more, and the last in this chapter, production of the same kind, this time by infamous Freemasonic stooge Michael Jackson – it is his 1997 album “Blood on The Dance Floor”:

This time instead of commenting on it and thus stealing bread of other researchers, I provide you with someone else's opinion:

I have to admit that the person who interpreted this particular Freemasonic piece of art (I found it on this web site: <http://usahitman.com/mjrobshia/>) apparently knows his subject – he is, at least, well acquainted with the typical Freemasonic symbolism. The “dance floor” above the Manhattan “ground zero” is indeed the Freemasonic floor, the blood is indeed red, the “clock-gesture” of Michael Jackson is indeed pointing to “9-11”, the 9/11 project was indeed presented by the Freemasons as a “sacrifice” for their internal consumption, and one of the Twin Towers here indeed disappeared (moreover, in clouds of dust, which the author of the above analyses failed to point out).

However, typical “loony” conspiracy theorists still do not get the point, as could be, for example, perceived from this depiction that I discovered somewhere on the Internet:

It shall be known, that the Freemasons do not control their operatives. They own them – in the same manner a slave-owner owns his slaves. So, they could order them directly what to do, instead of inducing them to do it through the means of alleged “control” as implied by the above picture. Another thing is that the Freemasons do not “murder” their own folks. They use their folks, indeed, for promoting various “prophesies”, or for promoting some so-called “child abuse” alarmism among the cattle, or for promoting female-slaves over male-slaves (that could be extended as far as to even allowing female interns exposing male-presidents of nuclear-armed states over petty blowjobs). However, the Freemasons, although they indeed use their cadres in a variety of ways, do not murder them. Unlike the cattle, the Freemasons are still “knights”, at least, formally. They do have some principles (although their principles are contradictory to those of the Barbarians, apparently). So, when it appears to the gullible that some Freemasonic stooge was “murdered”, in reality he was simply relocated after changing his name.

For the sake of clarity, I have to mention that not all of such “predictions”, “revelations”, and “prophesies”, authorized by the Freemasonic sect to be “leaked” to the profanes prior to 9/11, had the status of “cattle-entertaining”. Some other “pre-9/11” “suggestions” had a very different status and were “leaked” with a very different intent. If the first group intended to mock biped cattle – like did those “artworks” mentioned above, the second group of “prophesies” was intended to perform the well-known to the specialists so-called “subliminal pre-programming” of the so-called “good citizens” prior to the 9/11 production. If you do not know what the subliminal programming is, you can educate yourself by reading a very interesting explanation on mind control by the late Joe Vialls (which is highly recommended to read in any case):

<http://www.jimstonefreelance.com/vialls2.html>

I consider this unprecedented article being so important, that even I created its back-up copy in a PDF format (in case it is removed from the original web site) and uploaded a couple of such copies to my own web hosting. Here are the download links:

The intent of the said “subliminal pre-programming” I am talking about could be best perceived from the infamous example of a short-lived TV show – “The Lone Gunmen”⁵³⁰ (a spin off from another insidious series called “The X Files” – which basically tried to indoctrinate the so-called “Christians” about the alleged existence of the so-called “extraterrestrials” and their so-called “UFOs”).

The so-called “Lone Gunmen” were supposedly “fictional characters” posing as typical “conspiracy theorists”, governmental watchdogs, and computer hackers, in reality being 100% Freemasonic skills.

Here's a short clip from opening episode of “The Lone Gunmen”, aired on March 4, 2001 (6 months before 9/11): <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=rIZ205ccX8M>

Intriguingly enough, the show was cancelled after only thirteen episodes. So it seems that its existence was really only to get this specific episode out to the plebs.

The episode (aired on March 4, 2001, just to remind you) is about an alleged government conspiracy to fly a commercial aircraft into the Twin Towers in order to increase arms sales and create new wars for the United States. In the episode, an airliner gets hijacked (via remote control of the plane's autopilot) but one of the “Lone Gunmen” manages to board the plane to try to stop the hijacking. Through the aid of the other “Gunmen”, he is able to regain control of the plane and just miss crashing into the World Trade Center.

Do not miss the point: the Freemasons, who planned the 9/11 production, did not want people to even think that planes were typically made of aluminum, while the Twin Towers were made of structural steel. Likewise, they did not want people to think that the production with the digital images of the planes penetrating steel buildings was created with a view to ultimately enslave the so-called “good citizens” – i.e. to microchip them like real cattle, and to finally send them to concentration camps. The Freemasons prefer the so-called “citizens” to adhere to various conspiracy theories, instead, because this approach shifts the guilt away from those invisible folks behind the infamous “curtain” towards the visible bunch of dummies known as the “elected U.S. Government”. Of course, in this view, it is very expedient to promote such conspiracy theories (where the “evil” U.S. Government hijacks an airliner via remote control of the plane's autopilot supposedly “in order to increase arms sales and create new wars”). Moreover, as you can see from this episode, such theories could be promoted not only after-, but even before 9/11...

Here is a better summary of the same thing: <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=z3WW6eolcLI>

An interview with show “creators” about how they just “imagined” this “Hijacked” Plane Attack scenario is here: <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=xSkQ0x1KVjM>

Full show is here: <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=iRtqQLMAZek>

Do you think that the “creators” of that infamous Freemasonic show were arrested and tortured into revealing who taught them to concoct such a show in March 2001? You are badly mistaken if you think so... They were not arrested, lest “tortured”. Only the so-called “terrorists” are being tortured today.

So, with this little additional chapter, I just want to point out that there is not any “mystery” that allegedly surrounds the Freemasonic sect, and the supposedly “non-existent” Freemasonic sect is not mysterious at all. It is not even so much secret, as you can see. It is quite a bold organization that boldly says to you:

We are the Freemasons, and you are enslaved cattle, which think of themselves as so-called “citizens” of the so-called “free world”, the cattle that think of themselves as “Christians” or as “Muslims”, but have never bothered to read the First Commandment in order to duly appreciate the Egyptian pyramid with an eye of Satan depicted for your reference on our dollar, no longer supported by any gold!

⁵³⁰ http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/The_Lone_Gunmen_\(TV_Series\))

Assembling the 9/11 project back.

As I promised you at the beginning of this book, first we “disassembled” the 9/11 project, or, speaking in hacking terms, “subjected the 9/11 project to reverse engineering”; and, after understanding its integral parts one-by-one, we would assemble it back for the final review.

Now, I hope, the reader has already understood the main parts of the complex 9/11 project, so it is time to assemble it in order to have its final overview.

Why and how the 9/11 project was conceived by the perpetrators and when was it conceived?

The collapse of the Communism, the demise of the Islamic Fundamentalism, and the lack of enemies to the so-called “democracy”.

Let us try to answer the question “when?”, because the question “why?” will be answered automatically, in the process.

It is difficult to answer this question precisely, but in my humble opinion, the Freemasons began to contemplate a certain “major terrorist project” soon after the so-called “Perestroika” began in the Soviet Union.

I have seen opinions of a few conspiracy theorists (in this case not the typical “loony” ones, but those conspiracy theorists who were quite reasonable) on the Internet where they suggested that the 9/11 project was conceived right at the time of the WTC Twin Towers construction – i.e. dating back to the mid-’60s.

However, I can not agree with them. Let me explain to you why.

The so-called “good guys” always need some enemy. If they do not have any enemy at all, they simply have no reason to continue the enslavement of their subjects. But the main reason for the existence of the Freemasons is to enslave you, people; whether you like this statement of mine or not, this is the reality.

You have to understand that the so-called “good guys” want you to be complete slaves, which are:

- deprived of any right to carry a weapon (be it a firearm or even a kitchen knife),
- deprived of any right to have a family (i.e. to legally possess wives and children),
- deprived of any right to use gold or silver as a means of payment,
- deprived of any right to use gold or silver as a means of accumulating wealth,
- deprived of any right to possess land or even immovable property,
- deprived of any right to possess means of transportation,
- deprived of any right to travel freely,
- deprived of any right to have privacy,
- deprived of any right to demand anything – be it a retirement pension or justice in legal proceedings (the Freemasons can accord to their slaves some privileges, but not any rights),
- subjected to obligatory measures of tight controls – ranging from obligatory vaccinations to obligatory implantation of identification microchips that can be used for tracing purposes and even for active controls;
- and, in a not too distant prospect – subjected to obligatory wearing a dog’s collar on their necks.

Basically, they want you to be biped cattle locked inside your (not actually “your”, but allotted to you) bull-pen. Moreover, that bull-pen where you will be stalled shall not have any means to be locked from inside; it could only be pad-locked from the outside. The so-called “good guys” want exactly this. Nothing less than this. And, trust me, they will stall you in the bull-pen very soon.

I was not joking when I mentioned the dog’s collar. Only recently, at the end of the 19th century, the Freemasons invented so-called “passports” (that were, of course, “voluntary” at the initial stage and were immediately perceived by old-fashioned and still relatively free-minded slaves as nothing less than a prominent invention of Satan). However, by the ‘20s, the passports began to become obligatory to travel (and in some countries – even to reside), and this process was finalized well before WWII.

It seems that only yesterday they invented the unprecedented so-called “sales tax” or even so-called “value-added tax” (that would make even the greediest pharaohs and other ancient despots green with envy), and even “property taxes” (that effectively deprived you of your property that practically is no longer yours – as long as you are always under an obligation to continue paying something for it, you don’t really own it). However, this was not enough – today the so-called “good guys” are no longer shy to talk openly about increasing the taxes and even about increasing the retirement age (they want you to forget that the actual pension fund intended to support elders was created by obligatory deductions from the elders’ own salaries when they were still young, and by no means is the pension fund being sustained at the expense of the currently working younger generation as they are trying to imply now).

It seemed that only yesterday they forced you to have an ID-card and a “social security number” (that they use to rip you off on the pretext of allegedly “having a retirement pension for your old age” in case you forgot it). However, today they forced you to accept biometric identity documents (and, what is the most important, you have already accepted them). Tomorrow they will force you to have an implanted microchip as a replacement of your ID-card and your credit card (and they produce these implantable ID-chips right now – just google for it and you will find a confirmation of my words, or watch this video: <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=gWnaSWGfjI0>).

Do you think the so-called “good guys” will stop the encroachment on your former liberties when they finish microchipping all of you like cattle? You are badly mistaken, if you think so. Do not even doubt that soon after the microchipping, they will force you to wear a pretty ordinary, non-electronic, “ecologically safe”, leather-made dog’s collar, perhaps, with certain engraved “personal identification number” on its plate. And you will wear it. An armed cop will force you to wear it. Do not forget that by that time you will no longer be armed with any weapon – they will prohibit you from possessing even a kitchen knife and a fork, while any and every cop by that time will look like today’s thug from a so-called “SWAT” unit.

Coming back to the so-called “good guys” and the needed enemy. The Freemasons always need an enemy. Without an enemy, they have no reason to increase taxes. Without an enemy, they have no reason to give more and more rights to their police and secret services. Without an enemy, they have no reason to take those rights from you (do not forget that the right, given to a cop, is the right, stolen from a citizen). You can continue the list, but I hope you got the point.

Who was that needed enemy before? It is easy to understand if you look back at the recent history.

In between 1865 and 1917 the so-called “good guys” did not need to invent any enemy in order to have one like nowadays. They had the real, tangible, moreover, very dangerous enemy – the recalcitrant Christians and the Orthodox Jews from among their own citizens who were not happy at all with the Abolishment of the Law of Moses and with coming back to the slave owning Egypt as a result of the Freemasonic victory in the Civil War (that effectively equalized the former Christians to their former slaves). Thus, the enemies those days were those former Confederates who were not killed in the American Civil War and who could still challenge the legitimacy of the so-called “democracy” by referring to the Holy Bible as the source of the Law.

That is why in between 1865 and right up to 1917 the Freemasons were crying out loudly about the dangers of “religious extremism” and of “feudalist obscurantism”, about the “shameless Southern slaveholders”, and so on. In fact, they used to cry those days about the dangers of the feudalist Christians as loudly as they cry about the danger of the so-called “Militant Islamists” today.

Thus, it was the feudalist Christians who used to occupy the position of the enemies of the so-called “democracy” those days. Therefore, the Freemasons did not need to invent any other enemy – the gradual curtailment of the rights of their newly acquired slaves could be explained by the necessity to fight the “Christian extremism” and to fight the survivals of the pre-Civil War “slave-holding ideology”.

Additionally, the Freemasons could introduce a cop to a citizen those days and slowly increase the powers of the cop. This was motivated by a sharp increase in the crime-rate: the former black slaves that were no longer locked up at night and left completely unattended had nothing else to do than to commit crimes. Of course, the so-called “good guys” made good use of this – very soon the so-called “secular citizen” began to feel that the cop, which was allegedly created to control the former black slaves, began to control their former white owners.

From the time of the 1917 October Revolution in Russia, the main enemies of the Freemasons were, of course, the Reds. They so unfortunately and so untimely popped up to substitute for the Southern veterans of the Civil War, that were about to die out because of their old age. Unlike some later “enemies”, the Reds were real enemies – they indeed aimed at the physical extermination of the so-called “good guys”. The Reds proclaimed their aims openly, by openly stating that the Freemasons did exist, the Freemasons brought the so-called “Christians” back to Egypt, back to the land of slavery, and that is why the Freemasons must be wiped out. The state security organizations of the Reds were officially tasked with hunting and physically exterminating the Freemasons (in sharp contrast with their Western counterparts that officially do not recognize the existence of Freemasonry and pretend that the “mysterious” anti-constitutional secret society named “Freemasonic Order” allegedly “does not exist”).

Besides, the Reds were better educated than their opponents and knew their subject very well. It was difficult to argue with them – they would win any ideological argument easily (by pointing with one finger at the verse preceding the Commandment No.1 and with another finger – at the Egyptian pyramid on one US dollar bill). The Reds made good use of the Holy Scripture – proving that their actual ideology was genuinely Christian, and so severely undermining the supposedly “Christian” Western capitalism. The Red ideology was very attractive for a thinking Christian (do you recollect the phenomenon of “Red Catholics” in the USA in the ‘30s and in the earlier ‘50s?), and therefore it was indeed subversive. It might sound unbelievable, but an “evil” image of Uncle Joe still haunts the so-called “good guys” even today, 60 years after the death of the former seminarian...

Of course, having the Reds as the actual enemies in between 1917 and 1953 (and in cases with Vietnam and China – right up to Ho Chi Minh’s and Mao Tse-tung’s deaths in 1969 and 1976 respectively), the so-called “good guys” did not need to invent any enemy. They were busy fighting the real one (and having a good use of that fighting in a sense of curtailing former rights and liberties of their subjects, of course). Certainly, the continuing curtailment of rights and liberties in the pre-WWII era and in the first decade after the War was seemingly “justified” by the Communist threat.

In case you forgot that the so-called “First Amendment” that granted to the “Christian” slaves of the Freemasons the so-called “religious freedoms” was introduced only in 1957 (while former seminarian Stalin, who used to explain to lost souls the true meaning of the First Commandment, died in 1953), or in case you doubt that the Red subversion was indeed used as a pretext to deprive the “Christian” slaves of their last remaining liberties, please, read a couple of quotations from this recently published article: “Never Forget: Joe McCarthy Was Right!”⁵³¹

“...The atmosphere of suspicion for which McCarthy is blamed was actually the fault of Communists themselves, and of their misguided liberal defenders who either failed to understand the danger or else were inspired by political or ideological motives to be (as it was commonly said) “soft on Communism.” And, in point of fact, it was the attitude of these liberals — derided in Cold War slang as “dupes,” or “pinkos,” or “Commie symps” — that did so much to anesthetize America, to foster the idea that Soviet aggression and domestic subversion were exaggerated dangers, thus creating a stuporous indifference that made this subversion possible...”

“...Don’t lecture me about the “civil rights” of dishonest villains who were willing stooges of the murderous totalitarian Josef Stalin, and don’t tell me that the faults or errors of Joseph McCarthy made him worse than the Communists he sought to expose....”

Try to assemble all your logic and common sense and imagine – if the prospect of being ruled by a certain “murderous totalitarian” could be attractive to any extent? Would that enable a possibility of- and provide any grounds to the “domestic subversion”, or not?

Just as an example – imagine that Saddam Hussein (or even better – Mullah Mohammad Omar, the head of the Afghani Taliban, or Kim Jong-il, the leader of North Korea) would heavily invest in the propaganda machine, would bribe various U.S. intellectuals and even U.S. officials, and start to spread their ideas to the best of their abilities among gullible U.S. citizens so susceptible to a “domestic subversion”. Let’s say, murderous totalitarian Saddam Hussein would promote his socialist Baathist ideology and Arab nationalism in the United States, while murderous totalitarian Mullah Mohammad Omar would call for prohibition of drinking alcohol and smoking marijuana, for observing the Islamic dress code, for praying strictly in Arabic, and for closure of all saunas and other public bath-houses. An alternative murderous totalitarian Kim Jong-il, of course, would not call for the closure of public bath-houses (he would indeed promote them, advocating the closure of personal bath-rooms and converting the freed space into something more useful), but would call, instead, for replacing all existing books with his father’s books on the “Juche” ideology, for implementing the Juche calendar instead of the current Gregorian one, and for replacing statues of Jesus Christ’s late mother with portraits of his father, although late, yet “eternal” president of the United States.

Do you think that any of the three abovementioned “murderous totalitarians” could really proceed with his supposedly “subversive” project in the United States, relying on the phenomenon of the “domestic subversion” in an atmosphere of the “stuporous indifference” aggravated by those “misguided liberal defenders”, or not?

⁵³¹ <http://theothermccain.com/2013/02/24/never-forget-joe-mccarthy-was-right/>

Or, do you think that the prospect of the United States being ruled by Saddam Hussein, or by Mullah Mohammad Omar, or by Kim Jong-il could be attractive to any extent to the gullible, or to the “stuporously indifferent” American populace, and even to some of its intellectual elite, so that a creation of a certain vigilant Senator of “Joe McCarthy type” would be an absolute necessity in order to expose those murderous totalitarian claimants to the Oval Office?

Nonetheless, contrary to the logic of the above examples, the unprecedented popularity of “murderous totalitarian” Josef Stalin and of his genuinely subversive ideology, conditioned such a phenomena as the infamous “McCarthyism” and the conspicuous absence of the so-called “First Amendment” in the otherwise “democratic” and “pluralist” United States till the year 1957. Just think about it.

After Stalin’s death in 1953 and the demise of the Red ideology in the Soviet Union and elsewhere in the world (except only in China, Vietnam and in a handful of small third-world countries), the so-called “good guys” lost the enemy.

However, that loss was partly compensated for by the remaining Reds in China, Indonesia, Indo-China, and in Latin America, partly – by the fact that the post-Stalinist USSR, as well as its “neo-communist” allies in Europe, seemingly did not abandon the “Cold War” struggle. The atheist USSR, even after denouncing the revolutionary ideas following the death of Josef Stalin, continued to exploit the rhetoric of the defunct Reds and continued to declare the capitalist world its “enemy” (which is so strikingly reminiscent of post-Khomeini Iran). Thus, the “Cold War” production and the corresponding Arms Race have both continued despite the fact that the USSR was no longer “Judo-Red” and its ridiculous atheist pseudo-communist ideology represented no danger to the capitalist world since the mid-’50s.

The continuation of the “Cold War” production with the post-Stalinist atheist USSR, coupled with the necessity to counteract the genuine Reds in Vietnam, in China, in Indonesia, and in some other South-East Asian and Latin American countries, allowed the so-called “good guys” to continue exploiting the alleged “communist threat” right up to the end of the ‘70s, and partly – even up to the mid-’80s.

However, when new capitalist policies in China started to be implemented by the end of the ‘70s, and, more importantly, with the so-called “Perestroika” implemented by Gorbachev in the USSR in the mid-’80s, the former “communism” was gone (along with the alleged “communist threat”). The “Evil Communism” production could not be continued without attracting suspicions of even the most gullible spectators. The “Cold War” was clearly over.

Again, it was partly compensated for by the 1979 Islamic Revolution in Iran and by the corresponding surge in the extremely dangerous Islamic Fundamentalist ideology that was clearly and openly anti-masonic. Exactly as former seminarian Stalin did before him, Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini used to point his finger at the verse, preceding the First Commandment, and after that – explained the true meaning of the freemasonic symbol represented by the Egyptian pyramid on one US dollar bill. Moreover, exactly like his Christian counterpart Stalin, Ayatollah Khomeini was not bound by any so-called “politically correctness” and openly used words “Freemasonry”, “Freemasons”, “Pharaohs”, “Misr”, and “Egyptian slavery” in his seditious speeches.

Nonetheless, the so-called “good guys” could make only a limited usage of the existence of the Islamic Fundamentalism. Firstly, it lived too a short time – only 10 years (1979-1989). Secondly, it had a limited appeal – it could scarcely affect any Christian or a Jew, and it had a limited influence in the Sunni Muslim world (since the majority of the Mahometans were “Sunni”, while the actual ideas of the Islamic Fundamentalism were promoted by Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini who was Shi’a). Thirdly, the so-called “good guys” could not use the fact of the Islamic Fundamentalism surge in Iran to call for arms in the Western world, like they did in the case with the Reds a few decades ago. Such a step would be too dangerous. It would attract attentions of the Muslims everywhere in the World. They might sympathize with the Islamic Fundamentalists and in the process they might learn the actual ideas of the latter (that were, in fact, as inflaming for the Muslims as the ideas of the Reds were inflaming for the Christians and the Jews in 1917). The so-called “good guys”, of course, could not afford such a development. Therefore, instead of making good use of it – i.e. instead of declaring the Islamic Fundamentalism their “new global enemy”, the Freemasons preferred to downplay its importance (limiting themselves to only arming Saddam Hussein and sending his army to fight the revolutionary Iranians) and to wait when it dies on its own. Indeed, it happened exactly as they expected – once Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini died in 1989, the Islamic Fundamentalism died at once. His “moderate” followers denounced it just in a couple of months after the death of their teacher.

Anyhow, the Islamic Fundamentalism, even though they pretended “not to notice” its actual danger, was the last real enemy of the so-called “good guys”.

The demise of the Islamic Fundamentalism in 1989, in the most unfortunate manner, coincided with many other unfortunate events that took place in the same year. After 10 years of fighting, Soviet troops were withdrawn from Afghanistan (where the United States supported mujahedeen against the ungodly Soviets). After 10 years of fighting, Vietnamese troops were withdrawn from Cambodia (the United States supported Pol Pot’s regime in the jungle against the Vietnamese troops, in case you forgot it). After almost 10 years of fighting, Cuban troops were withdrawn from Angola (where the United States supported their UNITA opponents, of course). In the same year, the Maoist Communist Party of Malaysia disbanded itself and its last two regiments in the jungle on the Thai-Malaysian border, in exchange for an amnesty. Around the same time, the powerful Communist Party of Burma (staffed mostly with recalcitrant feudal Wa – the most militant tribe of South-East Asia, who, like Pashtuns, managed to resist British colonizers till the end), which used to occupy the biggest part of the “Golden Triangle” since 1969, ceased to exist – it too was disbanded along with its multiple armed units, converting the militant Wa, who have never been colonized during their entire history, into a government-controlled “border militia”. The last remnants of the Reds seemed to abandon their armed struggle almost everywhere in the world exactly in the year 1989. The 10 years-long war between revolutionary Iran and counter-revolutionary Iraq (where the United States supported Saddam Hussein, of course, including supplying him with chemical weapons) also came to an end exactly in 1989 – since the death of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini it was senseless to continue that devastating war. In addition to it, Soviet troops began their withdrawals from Eastern Europe, while the highest secrets of Soviet secret services began to be freely presented to the Americans by Gorbachev as “gestures of good will”. The “Cold War” was clearly over and all former battlefields of the “Cold War” were deserted at once.

Perhaps, the year 1989 (or may be 1990, to be on the safe side), was the year the Freemasons lost all of their former real and alleged enemies at once. By the year 1990, they could no longer claim that there was any “enemy” of the Western so-called “democracy” left at all. The Reds were gone, the atheistic “communists” were gone, and the Islamic Fundamentalists were gone.

Logically, it should be presumed, that in such a situation the so-called “good guys” must gladly declare to their subjects that all their former enemies were defeated and the complete victory of the so-called “democracy” and of the so-called “civilization” had been, at last, achieved.

However, such a declaration should automatically mean that all former liberties and rights that were supposedly “temporarily” taken from the subjects in the pre-WWII era as a “sacrifice to fight the threat of Communism” must be returned to the subjects.

Of course, you should presume that it is not a habit of the so-called “good guys” – to return to their slaves any liberties or any rights previously taken away from them. The Freemasons NEVER, under NO CIRCUMSTANCE, give back anything they take away from their slaves. This is their modus operandi.

Moreover, the so-called “good guys” had to continue their enslavement program. The level of their subjects’ enslavement achieved during the pre-WWII era and increased during the “Cold War” production of the ‘60s and the ‘70s was apparently not enough. For example, total control of banking transactions and of the slaves’ movement was not introduced yet. Surveillance video-cameras only began to appear in public places and it was still far from their predominance. Obligatory metal detectors and luggage-screening introsopes were so far installed only in airports, but not yet at the entrances to all train-stations and supermarkets. Biometric identity documents were not introduced yet. Funny to say, driver’s licenses in Great Britain were still papers without even a photograph of the bearer, there were no ID-cards yet in the U.K., while it was still possible to receive a passport for travel, by applying for it via the postal-service, without even appearing in the passport office in person. The cop in England was still unarmed. Not every cop in Europe had his right to search the citizen’s car without a search-warrant yet.

Of course, the Freemasons could not be happy with all of the above. Moreover, not all their slaves were disarmed yet. Some relatively free territories – akin to states of Texas and Arizona, not to mention the entire armed to the teeth Switzerland and the Tribal Area of Pakistan still remained on the world map. Citizens of Thailand, Brazil, and the Philippines were still legally armed as if in the beginning of the 20th century. Moreover, some spontaneously created new states, after the USSR’s dissolution, demonstrated an unexpected level of “political incorrectness”. For example, newly created Estonia, instead of creating some Estonian police force as a replacement for the Soviet one, began its state history by freely distributing unlicensed “Kalashnikovs” from Soviet arsenals to any and every of its citizens, thus effectively bringing the crime rate to absolute zero and so sending the so-called “good guys” (who spent almost two centuries gradually disarming European slaves) into the state of deep shock. Similar situations occurred with a few other newly created post-Soviet- and post-Yugoslavian states.

Some other post-Soviet states demonstrated political incorrectness in other ways. For example, newly created Latvia felt so “free” being recently liberated from the Soviet oppressive rule that it extended its freedom as far as allowing its free citizens to grow hemp and soon well forgotten, yet exceptionally delicious hempseed oil, now produced on an industrial scale, hit the European market to the horror of the so-called “good guys”. Moreover, the newly independent Latvians decided that the disgusting Soviet feminism (that was introduced by Khrushchev after Stalin’s death) was nothing less than evil, instilled by the decadent Russian occupants, and that the notorious female emancipation must be urgently curbed and traditional family values – restored accordingly. So, the reactionary Latvians went in their political incorrectness as far as to start teaching the dissident concept of patriarchy and of female subordination in their subversive school curriculum. You could scarcely imagine what kind of setback it was for the Freemasons who spent almost one and a half century diligently equalizing their male slaves to their female slaves, both mentally and judicially, and destroying the institution of family...

In a similarly “politically incorrect” manner the newly acquired freedom was perceived in the recently created Muslim state of Tadjikistan. Semi-feudal Soviet Tadjiks (in whose politically incorrect language “odat” [adat] still means “law” and “odam” [adam] still means “man”, naïvely decided that the end of the atheist Soviet rule must signify, at last, the restoration of the lost human rights as provided for by the Adat, the Law of Prophet Musa. These outrageous feudal obscurants have never even heard about any so-called “Shariah”, since that invention of the British colonizers has never even passed near their land. To have a clue of how “politically incorrect” the Tadjiks are, just pay attention to the fact that their current president Emomali Rahmon bears a given name “Emomali” (“Imam Ali”), while being a Sunni. A rough Western equivalent of such an unparalleled political incorrectness would probably be this: if the U.S. President would have his given name not just “Mao”, but “Chairman Mao”. So, the newly independent obscurantist Tadjiks began their independent life not only with the resumption of growing hemp and poppy, but also with the restoration of unrestricted polygamy, not regulated by any so-called “Shariah”. Even worse, the Tadjiks, moreover, while being Sunni, not even Shi’a, managed to get hold of by then prohibited books of late Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini and dared to discuss his seditious ideas in regard to the Exodus from the capitalist Misr, moreover, right on the state television – demonstrating an unacceptable level of political incorrectness and, moreover, showing an exceptionally bad example to other Sunni Muslims. In addition, those semi-feudal Soviet Tadjiks established the friendliest relations with their 100% feudal Afghani brethren led by famous Ahmad Shah Massoud, an ethnic Tadjik and a hero of the anti-Soviet resistance, who by then enjoyed the status of the “Che Guevara of Muslims”, who was widely respected, and who could even successfully ballot for the Tadjikistan’s presidency at that moment. Such a development of the wrongly perceived “freedom” in newly independent Tadjikistan was so badly wrong, indeed, that the so-called “good guys” were obliged to promptly organize the bloodiest civil war, as a result of which, in less than two years, over a million of “politically incorrect” folks were either killed or displaced – amounting to almost one quarter of the entire Tadjik population.

However, the worst example of the “political incorrectness” was demonstrated by the Chechens – the most irreconcilable of all former Soviet nations, who were, nonetheless, remarkably well educated, despite their apparent adherence to the prohibited Adat (the Adat and all its “vestiges” were strictly prohibited by the Soviet government since Khrushchev time). The Chechens were indeed unique people. You could scarcely imagine how much politically incorrect it is to use the name “Israil” to name a Muslim boy since the introduction of the so-called “Shariah laws”, and, especially – since the creation of the state is Israel; you have to be a Muslim to understand this. An approximate analogy of how “politically incorrect” it is to use the name “Israil” among the modern “Muslims”, in a “Christian” environment would be this one: let’s say some modern conservative “Christian” U.S. politician names his three boys “Moses”, “Marx”, and “Stalin” (or “Moses”, “Marx”, and “Mao” – to keep the triple “M”, as a variety). So, you can appreciate this extremely seditious fact: the most common surname in today’s Chechya is “Israilov” – the fact, that betrays the exceptionally “politically incorrect” phenomenon – as lately as at the end of the 19th century (when the Russian Czar enforced the surnames on the Chechens) the most common name used among them was “Israil”, despite their being Muslims. Ah, you really have to be a Freemason to duly appreciate how “politically incorrect” these Chechens are...

The Chechens managed, for example, to wrestle their undeniable right to carry knives and daggers from the fascist Khrushchev’s government by claiming the extremely politically incorrect notion that “a knife/dagger was merely a part of the Chechen national costume” and forcing the Soviet government (whose corresponding part of the “national costume” was a neck-tie) to admit this outrageous claim. But their true face these folks demonstrated only after the dissolution of the Soviet Union in 1991. The obscurantist feudal Chechens perceived the “freedom” from the atheist Soviet rule in the most wrongful manner. They immediately declared the freedom of a human to carry unlicensed firearms and, moreover, freely distributed these unlicensed firearms to the population. Moreover, as if the numerous Soviet-made “Kalashnikovs” and various Soviet-made and imported pistols were not enough to arm the humans to the teeth, the politically incorrect Chechens promptly organized an industrial production of their own variety of the famous Israeli “Uzi” sub-machine gun on a local mechanical plant. Moreover – all firearms, including even machineguns, RPGs, and mortars, as well as ammunition to them, began to be freely sold on a local bazaar – as if there were no difference in principle between civilized Chechnya and an uncivilized Tribal Area in Pakistan.

Even worse – in their outrageous political incorrectness, the Chechens went as far as to infringe upon the hitherto untouchable postulate of the so-called “good guys” – namely the notion that all slaves must have so-called “number-“ or “license-“ plates on their vehicles in an obligatory manner⁵³². The obscurantist Chechen “thinkers” went as far as questioning this supposedly “unquestionable” practice and dared to claim that licensing means of transportation was nothing less than depriving the slaves from their undeniable right to freely possess the means of transportation (do not forget that when someone is licensed to possess something otherwise prohibited, someone else might be not licensed; this is pure logic). Besides advocating the undeniable right of the human to drive a vehicle without any license plate, the Chechens conspicuously failed to create any police force. They decided that the free, well-armed humans, moreover, educated in the Law (the one with the Capital Letter), might live happily without having any so-called “police” whatsoever. Despite the verily heroic attempts of the Freemasons and their stooges to impose on them the so-called “Shariah”, the obscurantist Chechens attempted to re-install the feudal Adat “as is”, including even the undeniable right of a believer to possess an unbeliever as a slave. Of course, the Freemasons, who actually provided to the ungrateful Chechens this freedom from the ungodly Soviets, were deeply offended. So, they had no choice than to resort to adequately unprecedented measures – nearly finishing the unthankful feudalist Chechens off in two bloodiest wars that followed soon.

However, probably the most alarming situation after the fall of the “Iron Curtain” occurred with the small, little-known state of Albania – located right in the middle of Southern Europe. The Albanians, undoubtedly, the most militant and the most dangerous of all European nations, more dangerous than even the Sicilian Mafia, used to be a part of the feudal Turkish Empire. They have never been colonized by any Western imperialist country and therefore have never heard about any so-called “Shariah”. They only heard about “Töre” and “Kanun”⁵³³ formerly practiced by the Turkish Sultan, the Caliph of the Righteous, which were abolished by the Freemasonic stooge Mustafa Kemal “Ataturk”, and about the inflaming ideas of the Reds calling for the restoration of the Law of God. The Albanians in this sense were the European equivalent of Kurds (the Kurds are also nothing else than the never colonized survivals of the defunct feudal Turkish Empire); with the exception that unlike the loosely organized, casually armed, and poorly educated Kurds, the Albanians were exceptionally well organized, well educated, well trained, and well armed. In a striking contrast to the Arabs, almost all of whom sided with Hitler (due to their inclination to the so-called “Shariah” and to the obligatory anti-Semitism conditioned by it), the mafia-like Muslim Albanians not only fought against the fascists in the WWII, but also managed to defeat them without any help from outside – entirely on their own, as early as in 1944. Moreover, unlike the rest of the European “communists”, the tough, irreconcilable Albanians boldly denounced the Khrushchev’s apostasy, openly called Khrushchev and Brezhnev not only “revisionists” and “traitors”, but also “fascists”, and proclaimed that they would go by the ideas of Stalin till the end. So, as you can imagine, the influence of Stalinist- and Maoist- ideologies, coupled with tribal Muslim traditions and the feudal “Kanun”, was exceedingly high among the Albanians. Therefore, this recalcitrant ethnos, moreover, residing right in the middle of Europe, represented even greater danger to the so-called “New World Order” than the Chechens and the Kurds.

The fall of the “Iron Curtain”, besides several other disadvantages, also exposed this small, yet exceedingly dangerous Muslim-Stalinist nation to the European community. The Freemasons did not dare to attack the recalcitrant Albanians, since they realized what kind of war it would entail, considering that they were well-trained, armed to the teeth (to the extent of having a pillbox and a bunker per household, not counting RPGs, machineguns, gas-masks, and the chemical weapons of their own) and had absolutely nothing to lose. Therefore, to cope with the Albanians, who might re-introduce the Stalinist ideology to Europe, and the Kanun-based feudalism – to the Muslims, was quite a task for the so-called “good guys”. They managed to cope with it, nonetheless, but it really cost the Freemasons a lot of headache and lots of losses. The energy of the most militant Albanians was skillfully re-directed by the CIA towards the “liberation” of their supposedly oppressed “secular Muslim” brethren in the Serbian province of Kosovo (with a prospect of annexing Kosovo and so expanding Albania – which should appeal to nationalistic sentiments of many Albanians, thus, overshadowing their dangerous ideological sentiments). In addition, in order to appease the Albanians, the CIA and the Mossad were obliged to cede to them sizeable portions of their heroin-, cocaine- and hashish distribution networks and some other lucrative businesses in Europe, along with the actual supply of the drugs. In the mean time, Albania was urgently admitted to NATO and was provided “help” on preferential terms. All these measures, as you may expect, were intended to extend the so-called “democracy” and “democratic values” on the remaining Albanians.

That was just to illustrate that not everything was really “fine” for the so-called “good guys” after the fall of the “Iron Curtain”, death of Khomeini, dissolution of the USSR, and the dismantlement of the former socialist system in Europe. Yes, the big, commonly known, boosted, visible enemies of the so-called “democracy” disappeared almost at once, but quite a few new, assorted, moreover, genuine enemies, though visible only to a specialist, suddenly popped up here and there to substitute for them. In addition to dealing in an emergency manner with these new enemies and with various new “politically incorrect” trends introduced by them, the Freemasons had a lot of unfinished planned work that was pending. What they achieved in the ‘70s and the ‘80s was apparently not enough.

The banking system was not brought under the total control yet – some rebellious slaves could still keep their money (and, horror of horrors, gold bullions!) in secret- and even in anonymous accounts opened in recalcitrant Swiss banks. Feudalist Swiss bankers did not care about the so-called “international community” at all – they blatantly refused the cop any banking information citing the old-fashioned concept of “bank secrecy” and even their personal “honor”. You have to know that the word “honor” is the most annoying word for the so-called “good guys” because it is associated with free men: female- and male slaves are not supposed to possess any honor. This is not to mention any “code of honor” that not just annoys the so-called “good guys”, but naturally scares them, being reminiscent of the Sicilian Mafia, of the Samurais, and of the Pashtuns from the mountains. Add here that armed to the teeth on both state- and personal levels feudalist Switzerland blatantly refused to recognize and to join the so-called “United Nations Organization” and continued to uphold its rebellious, anti-globalist doctrine of the “armed neutrality”. Moreover, Switzerland boldly continued to issue a seditious 1000-Swiss Frank note that had a world-wide circulation and this “Swissie” was favored by those disobedient slaves who preferred to keep their savings in cash rather than in a local bank.

In addition, some politically incorrect post-Communist European states attempted to copy the Swiss model – in both arming its citizens and in introducing the seditious concept of the “banking secrecy”. Several newly created countries, such as Czech Republic, Latvia, and Croatia, for example, attempted to attract foreign customers to their banks – promising them secrecy of their accounts and convenience of anonymous banking. Some of them went as far as even offering so-called “numbered accounts”. You could scarcely imagine how annoying it was for the cop from the “old” capitalist world who got used to see his slaves disarmed and their banking accounts – transparent. Even some banking elements in the European Union managed to demonstrate a certain level of annoying political incorrectness – by introducing a 500-Euro banknote; and this happened despite the almost half-century long fight for the total abolishment of large denominations. As you probably remember, the so-called “good guys” prohibited their slaves from using 1000- and 500- US dollars notes in the earlier ‘70s (about the same time they formally disconnected the value of the US dollar from the gold standard), keeping the maximum allowed denomination of only 100 USD. So, the blatant introduction of the seditious 500-Euro note (especially in a situation when the Euro was about 50% higher in value than the contemporary US dollar) was nothing less than a slap with a big wet fish on their face. Of course, the so-called “good guys” did their best to discourage the slaves from accumulating their wealth in the 500-Euro bills (for example, by ordering their banks and money exchange offices not to accept these seditious notes), but the damage was done, nonetheless.

Of course, all those problems described above, directly concerned the so-called “good guys” and their efforts – i.e. it was their exclusive, executive headache. These problems with the Estonians, Latvians, Croatians, Czechs, Albanians, Chechens, Tadjiks, not to mention the Swiss, were not a concern for the actual “secular citizens”, and therefore they could hardly be converted into anything usable (I mean in a sense of letting the so-called “democracy” have an official new global enemy as a replacement of the defunct Communists and the defunct Islamic Fundamentalists). Thus, the global enemy, by the year of 1991, was indeed missing for at least 2 years, if not longer.

This situation could not be tolerated, of course. So much work to minimize the damage inflicted by a sudden fall of the “Iron Curtain” and by the disappearance of the Soviet- and Yugoslavian fascist regimes and to continue enslaving the citizens recently “freed from the Communist threat” was to be done. A new “global” enemy was badly needed. In fact, the need to have a new global enemy became apparent even by the end of the ‘80s; however, by the year 1991, to invent such a new global enemy became the barest necessity.

Of course, to temporarily fill the gap between the demise of the Islamic Fundamentalism and the appearance of a new global enemy (that was yet to be invented by then) the Freemasons employed their old good friend Saddam Hussein (armed by them to the teeth, also with chemical weapons) in a new capacity.

Immediately after the demise of the Islamic Fundamentalism in Iran in 1990, Saddam Hussein was re-qualified. From the friendly, secular, anti-Islamic, counter-revolutionary tool of the Western so-called “democracy”, as if by magic, Saddam was converted into a new temporary “global enemy” when he was ordered to perform in two plays titled “Evil Armed To The Teeth Iraqi Dictator Occupies A Small Independent State of Kuwait” and “The First Gulf War”. Indeed, the gullible Western plebs easily swallowed those shows and indeed began perceiving Saddam as the new “global threat” to the so-called “democracy”. Surprisingly even to his handlers, an apparently temporary usability of “evil” Saddam Hussein in a capacity of the “new global enemy”, extended well into the new Millennium.

However, as you probably realize it, Saddam was to be used in this emergency capacity only temporarily – a few years, maximum – i.e. in between the demise of the Islamic Fundamentalism in Iran and till the moment a new “global enemy” would start working. If you are realistic enough, you have to understand that by the time of 1991, the so-called “good guys” could not afford to stake on Saddam as a new reliable long-term enemy of the West. First of all, Saddam was well known. Many people still remembered that only a year ago he was the best friend of the West, instrumental in defeating those “evil” fundamentalist Iranians. Therefore, the entire production with converting Saddam into the “global enemy” was not convincing enough to a spectator only a grade above a moron.

Another thing was that Saddam could not really threaten the West to the extent desired by the Freemasons. To begin with, Saddam’s secular regime had no reliable anti-Western agenda. He had no attractive ideology at all, save his ridiculous atheist Arab nationalism and even more ridiculous Baathist “socialism”. These could hardly serve as anything really “seditious” that might require a resurrection of Senator McCarthy and the suspension of the “First Amendment”. Even if to perceive Saddam as an “ideology-less secular thug” – i.e. if to take him at his face value, as an Arab-breed of a fascist, he was still not dangerous at all from the merely technical point of view. Saddam had no strategic missile forces capable of even theoretically reaching any Western territory; he had no long-range strategic bombers; he had no submarines armed with ballistic missiles; he had no aircraft-carriers that could operate globally. He did not even have any intelligence services good enough to harass the West in its territory (I mean Saddam’s secret services were far from being something like Stalin’s NKVD or Brezhnev’s KGB and GRU). How could Saddam threaten the West with such limited capabilities?

The most important thing was that the application of Saddam as the “new global enemy” was very difficult to convert into anything usable. What was really needed by the so-called “good guys” was the drastic curtailment of civil liberties in the West, but, unfortunately, “evil” Saddam Hussein from far-distant Iraq had a very limited usability for that particular cause... Certainly, the Freemasons used their mighty propaganda machine to instill a notion that Saddam was allegedly “dangerous to the West”, shot a few Hollywood movies depicting him as such, and waged even a couple of well publicized “globally participated” “mini-world-wars” against him. However, “evil Saddam” was clearly a temporary solution – just to maintain the feeling that “the democracy is still threatened” for a couple of more years in the minds of the plebs. For the mean time, an intense search for the useful, long-term, reliable new “global enemy” was under way.

But who could serve as a new global enemy in such a case?

Apparently, for the Freemasons to artificially resurrect the genuine Reds or the genuine Islamic Fundamentalists was not an option. Their ideologies were simply too dangerous in their essence. The so-called “good guys” spent too many efforts to quash and to emasculate these ideologies in the first instance to allow their resurrections.

To resurrect the “atheist communists” wearing the neck-ties akin to Khrushchev and Brezhnev that helped the Freemasons to continue with the “Cold War” production in the ‘60s and the ‘70s? It was technically impossible – those so-called “communists” had no attractive ideology; they were merely a step down to “downgrade” or to “moderate” the already existing Reds. They could be created as a “step down” from something already existing, but it would be impossible to re-create them as a “step up” from anything. Their doctrine was ridiculous to such an extent that even if artificially resurrected, such “atheist communists” would not be able to enlist even a single genuine follower.

What else? The “aliens”? The “extraterrestrials’ invasion”? To exploit this in the earlier ‘90s was too premature. While the so-called “Christians” in the West were apparently degraded enough to make them believe in the “alien threat”, it would not work with the people from the post-Communist- and from the Mahometan countries – those would only laugh at such a notion⁵³⁴. So, while such a production could,

⁵³⁴ It seems I am obliged to clarify what I mean. The point is that no one could believe in the “aliens”/“ETs” as long as he/she believes in the Heavenly Creator. I hope you still remember the boring truism: “Once men cease believing in God, they are ready to believe in anything else”. Thus, no Muslim, no Christian, no Jew, and no Red could swallow such a notion as the alleged existence of the so-called “extraterrestrials” (unless, of course, they mean The Lord God the Creator as such “Extraterrestrial”). The first two (sometimes even three) generations of those who disbelieved in God could not believe in the “extraterrestrials” notion either, because the pretext for their denouncing the belief in God in the first instance was their adherence to the so-called “evolution theory” and to the primitive Freemasonic metaphysics. These would effectively prevent the first two-three generations of the disbelievers from believing in any “extraterrestrials”. To rephrase this statement, it could be said that “from the point of view of psychology, those recent disbelievers in God could not sincerely believe in any “aliens” or “extraterrestrials” because they have abandoned their own former belief in the Heavenly Creator not so long time ago”. Thus, the earliest generation of the descendants of the former “Christians” that could, at last, make themselves believing in the “aliens”, is the fourth “disbelieving” generation. It can not be any earlier than that. Thus, by the earlier ‘90s, only people from traditional, old capitalist countries have degraded enough to agree to switch their beliefs from the Freemasonic “materialism” and Darwin’s theory to the aliens’ notion. For the people from the former Communist world it was too early – these were still “firm atheists” by then, because only two generations have passed since the denunciation of the Red ideology. The same thing could be said about the so-called “Muslims” – these were not degraded enough either by the earlier ‘90s – to be able to sincerely change their official profession to the profession of “aliens existence” (especially, considering that the creation of any so-called “aliens”, unlike the creation of Adam and Eve, was mentioned in neither the Quran, nor in the Torah/Old Testament). Considering all of this, would the perhaps, work out somewhere in the United States + Australia + UK, it would not convince the entire world. Thus, the “alien invasion” was obviously unsuitable for a major global project (at least, considering the level of the people’s consciousness in the earlier ‘90s; in another 10 years or so from now, it might become feasible – at least, we could observe that Hollywood works very hard in this direction and its efforts apparently yield some results).

What else? An “ecological threat”? It was again – too premature. Moreover, actual developments of such notions as “ecological threats” are generally very slow. The so-called “good guys” would need something like 10-15 years to instill a notion of some “global warming” plus the necessity to levy “carbon taxes” and to establish “carbon quotas” or something of this kind. They would surely do it later, and, indeed, they do it right now, but it is a very slow process, unsuitable for a quick solution. However, by 1991, they needed an immediate, tangible enemy, a danger of which could be utilized right away.

What else? An epidemic of some deadly infection? This could be a good option, indeed (apparently, slaves would more willingly agree to wear a dog’s collar on their neck and a microchip under their skin when facing an epidemic of deadly Ebola than facing a so-called “Militant Islamist” armed with a stolen mini-nuke), but again, it was not feasible those days. It only looks that it is “easy” to launch such a project. In reality, however, it is not so easy.

Let us consider such a possibility: it looks like it is indeed easy to start a genuine epidemic of some deadly infection and then to start giving (or refusing) vaccinations and medicines to certain categories of slaves. It looks like it would certainly work. It is also relatively easy to fake such an epidemic by only announcing it in mass media, while obliging the slaves to undergo necessary vaccinations and stalling them into bull-pens (or even directly into concentration camps) in the process. In this case it would be very easy to shoot those who refuse the drastic measures on the grounds of “containing the epidemics”. It would be also very convenient to shoot (or to quarantine and then – shoot) any folks that are “inconvenient” on the pretext that they are “infected”. Yes, it is indeed quite easy to organize such a thing.

However, it is not so easy to control a panic that would certainly follow and to maintain the order and the normal functioning of economy during such a production. The Freemasons are realistic enough to understand that the world economy, especially the modern, the so-called “post-industrial” one, is nothing but a bubble economy and therefore it is very fragile. If only a small portion of it collapses, it would cause a chain-reaction till the total collapse of the entire world economy. It would not even actually “collapse”; it would just burst like a soap bubble if you apply even the slightest pressure to it. Not many people seem to realize that, unfortunately, in order to collapse the entire world economy as of today, it is enough to merely release 100 grams of plague culture in the right spot, or to detonate a single 40-kiloton nuke in the right time in the right place. Even simply announcing the truth about the WTC nuclear demolition on 9/11, in its immediate aftermath, would have been probably enough to collapse the entire world economy – the panic in New York alone would be enough to finish off the entire world financial system with the corresponding consequences. Moreover, it would no longer be possible to recover the destroyed economy, like it was done after the WWII in Germany, in Japan, and in the USSR, when there was still a working class, along with a considerable strata of craftspeople and peasantry, and the actual economy was still more or less “natural” and not so much “integrated” like today. Therefore, with the collapse of the modern world economy, the entire Planet would at once (and most probably forever) plunge into the Stone Age (with the little difference from the actual Stone Age conditioned by the fact that a modern “homo economicus” completely lost all basic production skills and therefore has absolutely no chance to survive outside of the so-called “civilization”: while in the “Stone Age”, he could only use some remaining resources of the previous “civilization” till they are used up). Of course, the so-called “good guys” wish to enslave the bipeds completely, but in the same time they do not wish to change the present comfortable conditions to a certain a-la “Mad Max” society.

Therefore, before venturing into such a seemingly “easy” enterprise, they have to calculate their chances, to evaluate all of its aspects, and to make all necessary precautions. In order to launch a really good production with a “deadly epidemic”, and yet without actually collapsing the fragile world economy due to a complete panic of the plebs, the Freemasons had to employ not only their propaganda machine alone, and not only the tremendous enforcement apparatus, but also too many “initiated” medical doctors, while simultaneously suppressing all independent medical specialists who might challenge and ridicule the production. I hope you realize that this was hardly achievable only a year or two after the dismantling of so-called “good guys” try to exploit the notion of the alleged “aliens threat” in the ‘90s, they would make less than half of the world believing it, with making the good half of the world laughing at it.

the relatively independent (and highly educated) former communist world. And, of course, without well-established and thoroughly tested special enforcement tools such as “FEMA” and its foreign equivalents, the Freemasons would never dare to venture into such an enterprise as the “deadly epidemic”. However, in the former socialist countries the equivalents of the American FEMA (such as the notorious Russian “Emergency Situations Ministry”) only began to be created in 1992-1993 and it would take years before these newly created “emergency” enforcement tools would accumulate enough power.

Of course, an “epidemic of a deadly infection” as a new “global threat” is still on the agenda of the so-called “good guys”. You can feel it while observing their latest global productions with so-called “SARS”, with so-called “avian flu”, and with so-called “swine flu”, as well as their hysterical predictions of future “deadly diseases” and their corresponding developments and deployments of vaccinations programs, training their “emergency services” for “bio-attacks”, and reshuffling of their health-care organizations. Indeed, notions of- and the potential applications of the “deadly epidemics” are being piloted these days and only a blind person would fail to notice the obvious. However, such a “deadly epidemic” would most probably serve the Freemasons only as an emergency strategic backup – much in the same sense the commissioned bio-weapons serve only as a backup to the commissioned nuclear weapons and by no means substitute for the latter. Something else will be a primary global tool, I presume (though, I could be mistaken, of course, and some “deadly epidemic” could be chosen as a primary tool in order to send you to the concentration camp in the nearest future). Anyhow, in the conditions of the earlier ‘90s, the concept of the “deadly epidemic” was not elaborated enough to be put into a real production with a global application. Something else was needed as a “new global threat”.

What else could it be? “Zombies”? Walking and biting infectious “dead”? As an alternative to the so-called “extraterrestrials”? Hmm... This is quite an interesting solution, indeed. Actually, as you can see, Hollywood strives very hard in that particular direction – the number of the “zombie-movies” it stamps out, one after another, apparently exceeds the number of its movies dealing with the “Islamic Terror”, with the “Aliens”, with the “die-hard Communists armed with the nukes”, and with the “deadly epidemics”. Producers of computer games strive very hard in the same direction too.

Do not be in a hurry to dismiss the potential “zombie threat” as too improbable and too ridiculous to be used as an enslavement tool in the future. Apparently, this seemingly ridiculous matter is being elaborated and piloted these days – you can not deny the obvious. Do not forget also that the so-called “extraterrestrials” and the so-called “aliens” also used to look “too improbable” and “too ridiculous to believe in” several decades ago, when they were first suggested by the Freemasons to a gullible “secular Christian”. However, today, nearly half of the Anglophonic world is ready to believe in this notion; followed by maybe a quarter of the rest of the so-called “Christian civilization”.

In fact, the “zombies” are much easier to produce than the “extraterrestrials”, much easier to implement on practice, much easier to explain from the “scientific” point of view, and, what is the most important, they are much easier to make the plebs believe in, compared to the “aliens”. For example, some stratum of the plebs, mostly those who stand by religious beliefs, would certainly doubt that the so-called “extraterrestrials” might really exist, while to make them to believe in “zombies” is still possible. Thus, the “biting infectious zombies” could be put to a very good use one day. For example, an obedient good citizen, scared to death by several nicely arranged TV-shows might be required to prove to the authorities that he is not infected by some zombie blood and to undergo certain obligatory procedures that could range from a vaccination and a microchip implantation to an obligatory installation of various electronic surveillance equipment in his private bull-pen, plus obligation to report for regular check-ups to certain authorities. In this capacity, “zombies” are way more effective than any so-called “Militant Islamists”.

Still do not believe that the authorities could scare you with a well prepared TV-show showing how a gang of “infectious biting zombies” attacked a group of good citizens somewhere in an underground train station? Do not forget that the authorities managed to scare you with the images of aluminum planes penetrating steel skyscrapers. Do you think that the “infectious biting zombies” are more difficult to serve up to a gullible TV spectator than the “suicidal terrorists” flying the aluminum planes into the steel towers? Especially, after a couple of decades of consuming the Hollywood movies and thematic computer games produced to this effect? When it comes to the cynical author of these lines, he does not see any difficulty at all.

Indeed, “zombies” are incomparably easier to produce than the images of the planes, moreover synchronized with the explosions. Of course, if the so-called “good guys” decide to resort to the “zombie-threat”, they would not start with such a TV-show depicting a zombie attack right away. That would be too rude and improper. They would start slowly. First – with some “scientific” discussions; they would employ their so-called “think-tanks” first. Then, there would be some articles and some books on the subject published. Then, some “witnesses” would appear. Then – some alleged “victims”. Then, their spin-doctors would accelerate the hysteria, and only then – end-up with a real show. Intriguingly enough, the humble author of these lines has personally seen in some Bangkok book store an English-language manual on how to deal with zombies in real life. That manual was by no means intended as a joke or a mockery – it was written quite seriously, in a manner of typical first-aid-, self-defense- or civil-defense manuals. The zombie-threat is definitely one of the future global projects of the so-called “good guys”. Do not even doubt this. However, in the conditions of the earlier ‘90s, it was, of course, too premature. Something else was needed by then as a long-term new global enemy; as a reliable and believable global enemy.

What option do we have among the remaining?

Obviously, only one: nuclear terrorism. Faceless “cowards” armed with stolen (or, even with allegedly “self-made”) mini-nukes and even with stolen half-megaton thermonuclear warheads. This would surely work.

That is why the Freemasons resorted to nuclear terrorism as the immediate solution after the denunciation of the Islamic Fundamentalism following the death of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini that so unfortunately coincided with the collapse of the Soviet Union and the dismantlement of the former Socialist system.

But who, what group of freaks would use the actual nukes to threaten the so-called “democratic values”? It could not be Reds, of course. Of course, it could not be Islamic Fundamentalists. It apparently could not be those peaceful atheistic “communists” in the neck-ties that voluntarily abandoned their pseudo-communist ideologies in the late ‘80s without even firing a single gun-shot to defend their “ideas”... Who else could suit the role of the “nuclear terrorist”?

Apparently, the so-called “good guys” were not able to figure out any good candidate to this role at the moment they laid down foundations of the future “nuclear terror” in the earlier ‘90s. It is only later, perhaps, 4-5 years later, they decided to make some good use of the so-called “Al-Qaeda” headed by the CIA’s former employee Osama bin Laden.

Actually, the so-called “Al-Qaeda” inherited “international Muslim” personnel, which was formerly recruited by various “Islamic charities” all around the world, under the guidance of the American CIA (that from 1979 till 1989 was busy fighting the Soviet army in Afghanistan in such an indirect manner). These “Muslim internationalists” (that were, in principle, similar to those idealistic “Red Internationalists” from the Christian world fighting in the Spanish Civil War on the Republicans’ side) were brought to Afghanistan to fight the “ungodly Soviets”. They were funded mostly by the American CIA (I mean by the “American taxpayer”), but partly also – by some Saudi Arabian- and other Muslim “charities”. Once the Soviet troops were withdrawn from Afghanistan in 1989 (that was considered as a “victory of Jihad” by the mujahedeen), the major part of the former “Muslim internationalists” simply returned to their home states, apparently considering their holy missions accomplished. However, some smaller part of them remained in Afghanistan for various reasons.

Later, Osama bin Laden (either acting on the CIA’s instruction, or on the Freemasonic instruction, or on his own will, I am not quite sure about this, but personally I am inclined to believe in the last option) managed to assemble some of the former “internationalists” and attempted to create the so-called “Al-Qaeda”.

This organization was initially created in Afghanistan, but later it was relocated to Sudan. There it was welcomed by the poor local government. The “Al-Qaeda” was relatively rich; actually, it was poor, if you compare it with a typical Western business with a couple of hundreds of employees, but, at least, “Al-Qaeda” was richer than the exceptionally poor Sudanese Government. The “Al-Qaeda” in Sudan was given some concessions in general (non-terrorist and non-criminal) business. After spending several years doing pretty ordinary business in Sudan (that was ranging from growing cucumbers and carrying cow skins to building roads), the “Al-Qaeda” was somehow elevated to become a “terrorist organization” and it began to allegedly participate in the so-called “international terror”. However, it would only happen in 1996-1997, not earlier than 1996. Later, I will prove to you this fact.

For the mean time (I am talking about 1991-1992), the so-called “good guys” could not wait to proclaim the actual new global enemy to the Western society. They had already conceived the new global project – the “nuclear terror” (even though it would be initially carried out by some anonymous “faceless cowards”) and they had to proceed with the plan. It was 1992, and they missed the actual enemy for almost 3 years by then. Saddam Hussein was only a temporary and, moreover, “local” enemy; despite a mini-world-war that was recently waged against him by a broad international coalition, Saddam clearly lacked the global application. Thus, the Freemasons could not afford to wait any longer: the new enemy, even though still “faceless”, should begin to act immediately.

So, it seems that by 1992 (or, most probably, by 1991, judging by the fact that the Freemasons mentioned the 9/11 “prediction” in their “Terminator 2” movie that was released in 1991), the initial project for the “nuclear terror” was signed. Now, the “nuclear terrorists” should deliver some actual strike that supposes to shock everyone – the plebeians and the patricians alike.

Apparently, there were a few major “nuclear terror” projects being contemplated at that moment. It should be known, that the Freemasons (especially elder ones, who used to run the sect in the late ‘80s - earlier ‘90s, meaning those who were brought up in the 20’s and the ‘30s – i.e. in the old good times when there were no TV, no discothèques, no hard-rock music, no freedom of sex, no mobile phones, and no computer games yet and young people had nothing else than to study) are very serious folks and they never go with only a single project. As a matter of “must”, they must have several alternatives, at least for a reason of an emergency backup, or, better – to have more options to choose from. The nuclear demolition of the World Trade Center was not the only possible option, as you may expect. I heard from one of the Freemasons (and I have all reasons to believe him, since it was still before the 9/11) that one of their major “terror projects” was an airburst of a half-megaton thermonuclear warhead above some middle-sized Australian city.

It sounds too brutal to you? Try to look back at the recent history. Look at the American Civil War, for example, and at the number of the victims on both sides. Try to understand, that fighting the Reds for well over a half of the century, including by the hands of Hitler’s regime, was by no means less brutal than a single half-megaton airburst in some isolated location (especially considering that the hands of Hitler’s regime killed not only the Jews and the Communists, but the very American soldiers, in addition). Remember the two million Vietnamese civilians, killed in addition to well over one million of the Vietnamese soldiers. Do you think that killing three million of the Vietnamese was not brutal? Add here also 56 thousand American soldiers who were also killed for advancing the Freemasonic agenda in rebellious Red Vietnam. And what about killing of well over a million of the revolutionary Iranians by the hands of Saddam’s regime? Does not it sound too brutal to you? Remember that gassing Kurdish children and women with American mustard gas and with American sarin and tabun was also by no means less brutal than a potential incinerating of a couple of hundreds of thousands of Aussies with an American thermonuclear warhead. Try to remember Hiroshima, after all. Do you think that the so-called “good guys” see any major difference between Japanese civilians and Australian civilians when they need to reach a certain political goal?

And when we talk about the absolute digits – what does a couple of hundreds of thousands of bipeds mean for the Freemasons (taking into consideration that the entire biped livestock on the Planet is running up to a few billions)? Do you think there is any fundamental difference – for example, in planning to kill a few thousands of the Twin Towers’ inhabitants versus a few hundred thousand of inhabitants of a useless Australian city in the middle of a desert? The point is that a human life is either equally priceless (in case of idealists) or equally pricey (in case of materialists), while a sum of such lives does not matter – you must be equally evil if you plan to kill “only” 10 thousand of descendants of Adam or “as much as” 200 thousand of them. It is not that you are “less evil” when you “only” what to demolish the Twin Towers with people still inside and “only” send some 90 thousand of gullible responders to clean ground zero without haz-mat suits, and “more evil” if you want to kill a comparable number of bipeds by a single half-megaton airburst. Try to be cynical and realistic. Do not even doubt that the so-called “good guys” could opt for such an act of the so-called “terror”.

Such a “terror action” as the incineration of a single Australian city would undoubtedly deliver to the Freemasons all benefits at once. First of all, the slaves all around the world would be scared to death – when all major news channels would constantly show footage of thousands of charred corpses, followed by hysterical reports on movements of radioactive cloud and corresponding levels of radioactive contamination, and alternated with heart-rending accounts of a few survivors who luckily happened to be in some basement during the airburst. The frightened slaves would not only agree to be immediately “microchipped” in order to help to combat such a “nuclear terror” – most of the “good citizens” would even agree that tracking GPS devices would be riveted to their ears. Of course, as a side-benefit of such an action, all citizens would at once surrender the remaining firearms in the genuinely voluntarily manner and they would forget forever that it was exactly the right to carry a weapon that formerly distinguished a human from a slave.

Secondly, such a brutal action of “nuclear terror” would be definitely welcomed by the leaders of nearly all countries in the world – since it would undoubtedly ease their tasks to continue to screw up their own subjects and to increase budgets for their police and secret services, as well as for their local equivalents of the infamous American “FEMA”. Moreover, it would be easy to claim that the so-called “terrorists” used some secret Swiss bank account to finance the purchase of the nuke (or even that they themselves hid in Switzerland) and so – to finish off recalcitrant feudal Switzerland at once, to the applause of the indignant plebs (in the manner they finished off recalcitrant feudal, yet apparently innocent Afghanistan after the 9/11 affair). Indeed, such an act of the so-called “terror” as the half-megaton airburst above some middle-sized Australian city could bring a lot of benefits to the so-called “good guys”. You can not deny the obvious.

Why in Australia, you might ask? I do not know; but when I heard it for the first time (it was before 9/11, just to remind you), I also asked the same question. The answer was that Australia was an isolated continent, it was sparsely populated (meaning that the consequences of the radioactive contamination will be the least dangerous for the rest of the countries), and yet, in the same time Australia was a part of the “white, civilized world” (do not forget that the supposed target of those “faceless cowards” is Western capitalism, of which Australia is undoubtedly a part).

I personally think it was also because the Freemasons presumably kept their nuclear weapons, and means of their delivery, in their secret bases in Papua-New Guinea, which is conveniently close to Australia. (By the way – have you ever asked yourself this question – why would the “civilized world” tolerate for decades the existence of such a savage, ungoverned territory as Papua-New Guinea, where savages still practice cannibalism and even an official, unrestricted polygamy, while the so-called “civilized world” would never tolerate any “ungoverned-” or “failed state” in regard to any other country in the world? Just think about it.) Perhaps, Australia was selected also because it was probably only one country where a major nuclear event could be localized not only in a sense of radioactive contamination, but in a sense of an imminent global panic that could easily collapse the fragile world economy. To conduct a major nuclear strike in any location other than some city in Australian desert (I am talking about the “white, civilized” world, of course) would constitute a major danger – the so-called “good guys” might not cope with containing the panic of the plebs. They have to always remember that the modern world economy is very fragile and to treat it with the utmost caution.

Anyway, as you could see, the “Australian project” apparently lost to the 9/11 project in a capacity of the “main nuclear terror project”. The 9/11 could achieve nearly the same ends, but with much less [visible] brutality (never mind causing slow deaths to almost 90 thousand of gullible “ground zero” responders from leukemia that owns to alleged “asbestos” and “high concentrations of benzene vapors”). Moreover, the 9/11 project was much more beautiful in its essence (and the Freemasons generally love the beauty of the performance; we have to give them their due). However, to implement the 9/11 project was incomparably more difficult too (compared to simply detonating a thermonuclear warhead on a certain altitude above a certain designated “ground zero”, after evacuating all the members of the Freemasonic sect from the targeted location, which would be a relatively simple task that would require, at maximum, a few tens of operatives). The 9/11 project, at minimum, required a participation of tens of thousands of “initiated” accomplices, and an exceptionally precise long-term planning.

Now, as I believe I have satisfactorily answered the question “When?” (along with answering the questions “Who?” and “Why?”), I could proceed to the actual intrigue behind the 9/11 affair, in the mean time “assembling” back the actual 9/11 project, as I promised to do in this chapter.

So, here we go:

The run-up to 9/11. Years 1991-1997. Comparative history of “car”-bombings and nuclear aspirations of the so-called “Al-Qaeda”.

The year 1991.

The Freemasons finally decided that the new global enemy of the Western so-called “civilization” and of its so-called “democracy” would be nuclear terrorism (so far, its perpetrator would be a “faceless coward”, since no suitable official candidate to carry out this “nuclear terror” had been selected yet).

The plan to demolish the Twin Towers of the WTC by its in-built emergency nuclear demolition scheme had been conceived and it was approved in principle. Moreover, it was scheduled to occur on 9/11 (at least, the Freemasonic “prediction” in their “Terminator 2” movie of that year proves so).

The year 1992.

The Freemasons, using all possible means, from publishing “suggestive” articles and employing alleged “whistleblowers”, to ordering thematic Hollywood movies, began to spread suggestions that some Soviet nuclear weapons, ranging from “mini-nukes” to nuclear warheads of ballistic missiles, might be stolen.

These claims of the mini-nukes proliferation, of course, were supported by a few genuine nuclear bombings of that year. These ranged from “car-bomb-” assassinations of Giovanni Falcone and Paolo Borsellino in Italy, supposedly perpetrated by the “Sicilian Mafia”, and the Bishopsgate bombing, London, supposedly perpetrated by the “IRA”, to the unprecedented Tarata bombing (a/k/a “Miraflores district bombing”) in Lima, Peru, blamed on one of the last genuine Red organizations – “Sendero Luminoso”.

The diverse assortment of the alleged “nuclear terrorists” of 1992 reveals, by the way, that while the concept of “nuclear terror” was approved in principle and even put into practice, no suitable candidate for the role of the actual “nuclear terrorist” had been found yet. The Freemasons put to use, for that reason, all their bitter enemies one-by-one – the remnants of the Reds, the most hated Sicilian Mafia, and the dangerous Catholic IRA (generally speaking, the Freemasons value their expensive lives very high and they indeed fear anyone whose life is priceless, who do not value it too much, therefore, and who is capable of using a firearm).

To be on the safe side in regard to inevitable attacks by skills, and in order not to mislead my reader into a wrong perception of reality, I am obliged to clarify that the mini-nukes bombings used to occur before 1992 as well. However, there was a noticeable difference between mini-nukes bombings of the pre-1992 era, and those of the post-1992 era.

I will try to provide here their brief history.

All known mini-nukes bombings of the ‘80s occurred in Lebanon. There were only 5 exceptions: three mini-nukes bombings on railways in the former USSR – one in 1988 and two – in 1988 (if not to count the mini-nuke used to destroy the reactor on the Chernobyl power plant, otherwise it would be 4 in total); the 1983 “Church Street bombing” in Pretoria, South Africa; and the 1989 “DAS Building bombing” in Bogota, Colombia.

The three railway bombings in the former USSR apparently stood by themselves – it is obvious that they were military sabotage operations conducted by the United States (who at that moment were busy finishing off the Soviet Union in every possible way). They were just a continuation of the Afghan war and of the Chernobyl affair.

The 1983 “Church Street bombing” in Pretoria, South Africa, obviously stood by itself, too. It was an action hardly explainable from the point of logic, which was perpetrated supposedly by the military wing of the African National Congress (“ANC”). When it comes to the humble author of these lines, I was unable to figure out any plausible reason yet, since this event occurred in a too distant past and the situation in the South African Republic has changed considerably. The only possible motive of the perpetrators that comes to my mind is that “someone” needed to create an impression (or, at least, to “imply so”) that mini-nukes were allegedly supplied by Soviet secret services to various allies of the then USSR – ranging from “Arab terrorists” (who routinely made the so-called “car”-bombings in Lebanon) to the African National Congress, which was officially supported by the USSR. I read a few books that dealt with the Church Street bombing and for some strange reason, after reading these books (none of these books said that the bombing was nuclear, by the way) I was always under the impression that the Israeli Mossad had something to do with it.

When it comes to the rest of the mini-nukes bombings of the '80s (that numbered well over a dozen in total), you could easily figure out their true perpetrator and his motives – based on the fact that all of them occurred nowhere else than in Lebanon.

When it comes to the last remaining mini-nuke bombing of the '80s – the infamous 1989 “DAS Building bombing” in Colombia, you again could easily figure out the true perpetrator and his true motives. You could base your judgment on the fact that the bombing was directed against the Colombian “Administrative Department of Security” (DAS) and was officially blamed on the infamous cocaine-producing “Medellín Cartel”. Of course, as you could expect, the outrageous “car-“bombing was used as a pretext to attack the Medellín Cartel and so – to seriously undermine its positions in the cocaine business. Add here that shortly before the events, Mike Harari (who was on loan to the American CIA from the Israeli Mossad for 10 years) was a Deputy Chief of the CIA station in Bogota. Later, Harari moved to neighboring Panama to become an “acting mentor” of Dictator Noriega (who was later overthrown by the U.S. military action because of his impertinent cocaine shipments to the United States). It is pretty obvious that only an Israeli mini-nuke could have been used in the DAS bombing, because it was only Harari (who had his personal investments in the cocaine production) who might have been interested in the outcome of the war between the Colombian cocaine-cartels.

It seems that there were no mini-nukes bombings in 1990 and in 1991 (there might have been some, perhaps, in Lebanon, but they missed my attention, so I presume there were none).

There was again a mini-nuke bombing in March 17, 1992 – the infamous “car-“bombing of the Israeli Embassy in Buenos-Aires, Argentina. It was described in detail in a separate chapter of this book. However, this one (that was blamed on “Iranians”, of course) was clearly performed in order to disrupt the promising cooperation between Argentina and Iran on nuclear research, so you could easily figure out the true perpetrator of that “car”-bombing and his true motives.

As you can see, all earlier mini-nukes bombings of the '80s and even one of 1992 could be traced to Israel and only three or four of them – to the United States.

It is self-evident, therefore, that only in the year 1992 the mini-nuke bombings suddenly began to be perpetrated by “assorted perpetrators” and they began to occur in various parts of the world. This, in my opinion, signified the important strategic decision taken by the Freemasons in 1991 (or, perhaps, in 1992) – that there was allegedly the “nuclear proliferation” on the way, and that the future “global enemy” of the so-called “democracy” would be the “nuclear terror” (by then, still “faceless” and, possibly, “assorted”). I think the reader agrees with these observations.

I hope that from now on the discerning reader will be able to distinguish the motivations between different mini-nukes bombings belonging to different eras, even these different bombings were perpetrated by the very same folks from the very same department of a certain Israeli secret service. Thus, you could clearly distinguish the mini-nuke bombings perpetrated by the Israelis in order to pursue their own political agenda (Lebanon), to pursue their own commercial interests (Colombia), and to advance the global agenda of Freemasonry (i.e. to promote the notion of the supposed “nuclear proliferation” and to scare the “patricians” with “nuclear terror” as the new global enemy of the so-called “democracy”).

The year 1993.

April – the abovementioned “Bishopsgate “car”-bombing”, London, supposedly perpetrated by the “IRA” (number of killed was minimal, since there was an advance warning and most people had time to evacuate; however, the property damage was tremendous, and typically nuclear).

March – the infamous Mumbai bombings, India (317 dead with over 1,400 injured), supposedly perpetrated by underworld don Dawood Ibrahim from Karachi, Pakistan. This particular perpetration was a more than a transparent “hint” that not only could the Soviet nukes be acquired and become available to the criminals, but the Pakistani-made ones could go the same road, because Dawood Ibrahim was alleged to be close to the concerned Pakistani military circles.

You could clearly see that the mini-nuking ceased to be the exclusive ability of the Israelis and the Americans and was by then apparently presented to the concerned security officials as the pretty common terrorist- and even ordinary criminal organizations' modus operandi.

However, the most important of all the 1993 mini-nuclear bombings was, of course, the first "car-bombing" of the World Trade Center. It was an integral part of the plan to demolish the World Trade Center, whatsoever, and as such, it was the inalienable part of the major nuclear terror project that would later become known as "9/11".

In the case of the 1993 "car-bombing", a mini-nuke, set at approximately 10% of its entire yield (i.e. 0.1 kiloton in TNT yield) was positioned at an underground car-parking of one of the Twin Towers and detonated. It was intentionally made not to undercut the targeted Tower completely (it was too premature to topple of the Twin Towers at that stage; the actual plans of the so-called "good guys" were different), but it was presented as an allegedly "unsuccessful" and "badly calculated" attempt to do so.

In fact, its explosion and its effects were precisely calculated by specialists: they made sure to properly select its yield and to position the mini-nuke in such a manner that it would sever roughly 25% of the Tower's perimeter – not enough to topple the Tower, but more than enough to create the needed impression on the concerned security officials. I hope the discerning reader realizes that if real terrorists were in possession of a 1 kiloton mini-nuke and had an intention to undercut one of the Twin Towers, they would not reduce its explosive yield intentionally to only 10% of its capacity. It would be just ridiculous. Of course, they would set the mini-nuke to the entire 1 kiloton (in fact, this consideration is equally applicable to all those "car"-bombings – if you were a terrorist why would you explode a nuke at only 10% of its yield when you could explode it at its full yield?)

I will not go here deep into details of the perpetration here, because there is a special chapter in this book entirely devoted to that particular "car"-bombing (the spot of which was, nonetheless, called "ground zero" even back in 1993). I only want to mention the first WTC bombing as being an important part of the preparation of the bigger, major "nuclear terror project" of the global value.

An interesting feature of the 1993 WTC "car"-bombing was that the actual "nuclear terrorist" was not figured out by the so-called "good guys" yet at that stage. By then, it was decided to blame the bombing on so-called "Islamic radical terrorists" (strangely devoid of any digestible ideology whatsoever, lest of the Islamic Fundamentalist one; and not yet connected to any so-called "Al-Qaeda").

Anyhow, the important step forward had been made with the 1993 perpetration. The Freemasons, from that point, could start to blackmail and to scare various U.S. security officials nearly to death – because for the first time in history, a nuclear weapon was used right inside the very United States. Thus, the "good guys" advanced the claim that in the future the "nuclear terrorists" might not limit themselves to detonating a mini-nuke at only the 10% of its capacity in an underground parking lot, but might go a bit further – by detonating a sizeable nuclear (perish the thought, thermonuclear) warhead on a roof of some skyscraper – thus, incinerating the entire city. Of course, the so-called "good guys" made sure to remind the concerned security officials (along with scared nearly to death high-ranking U.S. politicians) of the fact that the yield of the first atomic bomb dropped on Hiroshima was merely 13 kiloton, while the modern nuclear terrorists might get hold of some device of a 40 kiloton yield (and, in case of a thermonuclear warhead – several times more than that).

The year 1994.

The skillfully orchestrated nuclear hysteria within "initiated" concerned circles of the U.S. officials (who knew the "awful truth" of all those "car"-bombings, the 1993 WTC bombing inclusive) nears its peak. It happened despite the fact that merely one "car"-bombing of this kind occurs during that year (it was the infamous July 18 "Argentine Israelite Mutual Association" (AMIA) Bombing, that was arranged in order to prevent, forever, any attempt to resume the cooperation on the nuclear research between Argentina and Iran).

The nuclear hysteria was further advanced by the timely released thematic Hollywood movie – bearing a truly "freemasonic-style" mocking name "True Lies". This movie alone did more for advancing the Freemasonic agenda of "nuclear terror" than the actual mini-nuke detonated a year earlier in the WTC basement. It was as a result of this movie that the scared U.S. officials, at last, began to draw contingency plans on how to act in case the so-called "terrorists" would threaten the so-called "democracy" with nuclear weapons.

Of course, as you may sincerely expect, the so-called “good guys” were in the way, making sure to remind those officials who worked on the abovementioned contingency plans, that there were emergency demolition mechanisms in-built in some skyscrapers and these could be of some use.

As a result of all these efforts, the contingency plans were written around 1994-1995. The plans, besides other provisions, included this one: in case it becomes apparent that the terrorists brought a nuclear weapon on top floors of the Twin Towers of the WTC (or the Sears Tower in Chicago, or the Liberty Tower in Los Angeles, or any other skyscraper known to feature the nuclear demolition scheme) with a view to detonate it at high altitude, the affected building had to be destroyed at once by its in-built demolition mechanism.

Of course, at the time of writing those contingency plans, it was not known yet that the alleged “nukes” would be delivered by aluminum planes able to penetrate steel perimeter columns being as thick as a tank’s armor. It was presumed then that the “nuclear terrorists” would bring them in by hand – in about the same manner shown in the thematic Hollywood movie “True Lies”. Anyhow, the contingency plans were written, special demolition teams were reshuffled and their stuff, along with other concerned officials, was taught how to act in such an emergency.

The year 1995.

The infamous “car-“bombing in Oklahoma (the exact spot of which was strangely called “ground zero”, moreover, in publications citing official references) occurred.

It does not actually seem that the Oklahoma bombing had anything to do with the general plan of the Freemasonry to create a new global enemy – the “nuclear terror”. Its cover-up story, as well as official claims in regard to the bombing, were not well-prepared and it was pretty obvious.

The putative culprits ranged from standard “Palestinian terrorists” (who were militant atheists of the “communist”-Khrushchevite type and by no means “Islamists”, just to remind you; they strictly prohibited praying and used to ridicule and banish from their ranks any “religious fool” who was caught- or even suspected of praying) at the beginning, to the alleged “white supremacists” at the end – revealing that this perpetration had nothing to do with the established Freemasonic general line on the “nuclear terror” that since 1994 supposed to have been perpetrated by the so-called “Radical Islamists”.

The target of the Oklahoma bombing had no political significance either – being a relatively unimportant administrative building in the middle of nowhere.

Therefore, this particular mini-nuke bombing could only be classified as “casual” – being apparently of the “commercial” nature, similar to the 1989 “DAS Building bombing” in Colombia. The problem was that in the destroyed Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building in the Oklahoma City there were results kept of the so-called “Mena investigation”. These were implicating Mike Harari (prior to 1989 – deputy of Dictator Noriega, Noriega’s mentor, and the de-facto ruler of Panama), George Bush Senior (the ex-CIA chief), and Bill Clinton (the ex-Governor of Arkansas) in the conspiracy to ship large quantities of cocaine (and heroin as well) into the United States during the infamous “Iran-Contras” affair. As a result of the mini-nuke’s blast, all those dangerous papers were destroyed. Considering that initially the perpetration was blamed on the Palestinians (Palestinians? in Oklahoma? Harari must have become a bit senile by then...), and remembering who actually benefited from that bombing, you could easily figure out its perpetrator.

In any case, even though the Oklahoma bombing fell out of the approved “general line” of the nuclear terror, it, nonetheless, greatly contributed to the nuclear hysteria of the U.S. Government, since it was the second time when a nuclear weapon was used against the United States right on the U.S. own territory.

In the meantime, the so-called “good guys” remembered about their old “comrade” Osama bin Laden, who’s so-called “Al-Qaeda” was growing cucumbers and doing some other petty business in Sudan. I am not quite sure in which year exactly it was decided that the so-called “Al-Qaeda” would spearhead the future nuclear terrorism, but it seems that preliminary consultations and preparatory steps began around 1995; perhaps, even earlier. However, I am certain that it was not before the end of 1997 that “Al-Qaeda” was finally assigned the new role of the “nuclear terror organization” and replaced, in this capacity, the infamous phantom entity of the ‘80s that bore the idiotic name “Islamic Jihad”.

In order to understand the development of the nuclear intrigue with the earlier “Al-Qaeda” that was still based in Sudan, we have to review a few interesting quotations from some U.S. legal documents. These are the indictment in the case of 1998 U.S. Embassies bombings in Kenya and Tanzania, and the court testimony of one of the case-witnesses, a former “Al-Qaeda’s” member Jamal Ahmad al-Fadl.

The entire set of the documents I am talking about, can be found in a PDF format, here (it was also re-uploaded by me under different file-names, so you may also try to search for them on the Internet using the new file-names, in case you can not find the original files):

It is interesting to notice that Jamal Ahmad al-Fadl was turned to be a “prosecution witness”, which, of course, decreases his value as a witness (it should be presumed that he was taught to lie, by the prosecution). However, we could see a lot of intriguing stuff from his testimony, still. (If you read his testimony in its entirety, you will also understand how miserable the so-called “Al-Qaeda” actually was, plus, you could have quite a good overview of this hard-up organization.)

Another interesting observation would be that the abovementioned hearing took place in February 2001 – i.e. quite a long time after the alleged “nuclear aspirations of Al-Qaeda” that reportedly took place in the earlier ‘90s, and yet, before the upcoming major nuclear perpetration – the 9/11. It is very obvious, that those days the so-called “good guys” were busy preparing smooth and successful execution of the approaching 9/11 in every possible way, using “timely scheduled” judicial hearings inclusive.

The actual indictment on the abovementioned case could be downloaded from here (also re-uploaded by me under a different file-name):

1 A. Could you repeat the question.
2 Q. Yes. Did you ever [know] later anyone in al Qaeda or the related
3 groups who was called by others ustadh?
4 A. Yes.
5 Q. First can you tell us what ustadh means.
6 A. The teacher.
7 Q. Who was called ustadh?
8 A. I remember they call ustadh to Doctor Abu Moez, Abdel
9 Ayman Zawahiri.
10 Q. Just so we are clear, Dr. Abdel Moez and Ayman Zawahiri
11 are the same person?
12 A. Correct.
13 Q. During the time you were involved with al Qaeda, did there
14 come a time when you became involved in an attempt to purchase
15 uranium?
16 A. Yes.
17 Q. Can you tell us when that was?
18 A. That's area of '94 or end of '93.
19 Q. Can you tell us how you came to be involved in the 20 purchase of uranium?
21 A. I remember Abu Fadhl al Makkee, he call me and he told me
22 we hear somebody in Khartoum, he got uranium, and we need you
23 to go and study that, is that true or not.
24 Q. The person who told you was Abu Fadhl al Makkee?
25 A. Yes.

2 Q. What happened when you went to that street in Khartoum?
3 A. Basheer, he told me, are you serious? You want uranium?
4 I tell him yes. I know people, they very serious, and they
5 want to buy it. And he told me did the money ready, and I say
6 what they need. They need the information about uranium, they
7 want to know which quality, which the country make it, and 8 after that we going to talk with you about the price. He say
9 I going to give you this information in a paper, and we need

15 commission for Salah Abdel al Mobruk.
16 Q. What happened then?
17 A. After that he tell me how you going to check it? I tell
18 him I don't know, I have to go to those people and I tell them
19 what you tell me and I give you answer for that.
20 Q. What happened that?
21 A. After that I went to Abdallah al Yemeni and I told him
22 what I got. He told me go to Abu Fadhl al Makkee and told him
23 about what you got, what you have information, and I went to

SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS (212) 805-0300

I think these few excerpts are more than enough to get the main point: the so-called “good guys” were trying their best to connect the so-called “Al-Qaeda” to nuclear weapons and to weapon-grade fissionable materials (presumably South-African enriched Uranium) at least from the mid-'90s.

It is also possible that the earliest attempts to “promote” the so-called “Al-Qaeda” to the level of the “nuclear-armed terrorist organization” were undertaken later – around 1997, but the “nuclear evidence” was stretched and the alleged facts stated by Jamal Ahmad al-Fadl were intentionally backdated, thus claiming to allegedly occur in “1994-1993”.

When it comes to me, I personally do not believe that in the year 1994 (not to say “1993”) the so-called “Al-Qaeda” was indeed approached (try to guess by whom it might have been approached) with an offer to buy the South-African uranium.

It would obviously happen later – in 1996-1997, and not any earlier than 1996. To think otherwise would be against logic. The point is that the nuclear bombings of 1993, 1995 and even 1996, were NOT BLAMED on the so-called “Al-Qaeda” YET at the time they took place. The first nuclear bombings that were blamed straight away on the so-called “Al-Qaeda” were only the 1998 mini-nukes bombings of the U.S. Embassies in Kenya and Tanzania (that occurred right on the anniversary of the Hiroshima bombing, just to remind you).

It was self-evident, judging by contemporary statements of various officials and by publications in mass-media, that the so-called “car-bombings of the pre-1997 era were blamed mostly on the so-called “Islamic radicals”, but without any direct connection to Osama bin Laden or to his so-called “Al-Qaeda”. Osama would be resurrected and put into the “nuclear terror” game not earlier than in 1997. Keep in mind also that the abovementioned testimony of “Al-Qaeda’s” turncoat Jamal Ahmad al-Fadl was produced before the U.S. court only in February 2001. Therefore, we could presume that the prosecution taught al-Fadl (whose protection and housing cost the gullible taxpayer $945,000, by the way) to lie in regard to certain details, and, most probably, to lie about some dates. For example, some alleged purchases of Uranium that were attempted in 1998-1999 could be reported in his testimony as allegedly taken place in 1994 or even in 1993.

Make sure to remember also about the word “ustadh” (“teacher”) used in relation to “Doctor Abu Moez”, a/k/a “Doctor Ayman al-Zawahiri”. Please, keep this in mind for a while; later you will be surprised to learn what kind of “teacher” this doctor really was...

Anyhow, we have to continue our excursion into the historical “nuclear domain” of the immediate pre-9/11 era.

The November 13, 1995 Riyadh “car-“bombing. The U.S. training facility in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia was targeted. This mini-nuke bombing had not been blamed on any so-called “Al-Qaeda” yet. Immediately after the bombing, the U.S. officials said that (I am quoting the CNN news article⁵³⁵, the bold font made by me):

“U.S. officials said that two groups have claimed responsibility for the attack: Tigers of the Gulf, which has never been heard from before [sic], and the Islamic Movement for Change, an extremist group that advocates a complete break in Saudi-U.S. relations...”

“...Security is being increased at U.S. facilities in Saudi Arabia, and the United States is dispatching a special team of FBI agents to help investigate the bombing -- the first terrorist attack against the U.S. military in Saudi Arabia in half a century...”

From the presentation above you can feel that there was no definite “evil nuclear perpetrator” appointed yet at the moment: the nuclear bombings continued, but the so-called “good guys” faced obvious difficulties with finding the actual organization to blame them on.

The mere fact that two different organizations, moreover, one of which has never been heard of before (doesn't it remind you of the so-called “Islamic Jihad” that prior to the 1983 Beirut barracks nuclear bombing had never been heard of either?) allegedly claimed responsibility, says a lot. The so-called “Al-Qaeda” was not there yet and this fact was self-evident.

The infamous first Riyadh “car-“bombing was followed in only 6 days by another “car-“bombing – this time of the Egyptian Embassy in Islamabad, Pakistan (it occurred on November 19, 1995). This “car-“bombing left a 10ft-deep crater and almost completely destroyed the embassy building. A certain Egyptian “Muslim militant organization”, called “el-Gamaa el-Islamiya” (“Islamic Group”), allegedly claimed responsibility. Again – it was not any “Al-Qaeda” yet.

Later, the so-called “good guys” would undertake an attempt to create a bogus terrorist Egyptian organization with the same idiotic name as its Lebanese counterpart, calling it “Egyptian Islamic Jihad”. A certain shill who went by the name “Doctor Abu Moez” a/k/a “Abdel Ayman Zawahiri” would be appointed to head this ridiculous organization.

By definition (I think it is very proper to say in this context “by definition”), the so-called “Egyptian Islamic Jihad” would be held responsible for many nuclear bombings in the future, and “Doctor al-Zawahiri” would be personally blamed for organizing them.

Moreover, later, the so-called “good guys” would claim that the so-called “Egyptian Islamic Jihad” and the so-called “Al-Qaeda” would allegedly “merge” into one terror organization and so Osama bin Laden and Doctor al-Zawahiri would become allegedly partners in the nuclear terror. Thus, later, the November 19, 1995, Egyptian Embassy bombing would be blamed on the so-called “Egyptian Islamic Jihad”, on Doctor al-Zawahiri and, by extension – on the so-called “Al-Qaeda” and on Osama bin Laden. However, it would happen much, much later.

For the mean time, no “Al-Qaeda” and no “Egyptian Islamic Jihad” have appeared on the nuclear terror scene yet. Thus, the November 19, 1995, Egyptian Embassy “car-“bombing was initially blamed on the so-called “Radical Islamists” represented by the so-called “el-Gamaa el-Islamiya”. You can find confirmation of my words in contemporary news articles, for example, by the CNN⁵³⁶ and by the Independent⁵³⁷.

The year 1996.

The unbridled campaign of the world-wide nuclear terror continues, despite the inclination of the so-called “good guys” to limit the mini-nukes usage to the so-called “Radical Islamists” (the trend that became apparent soon after the first wave of the “assorted” mini-nukes bombings in 1993).

The unprecedented Central Bank “car-“bombing, Colombo, Sri Lanka, that took place on January 31, 1996, killed 90 people and injured another 1,400. The perpetration was promptly blamed on the “Tamil Tigers” (“LTTE”) – an exceptionally well organized state-like communist-type Tamil militant organization then successfully battling the government of Sri Lanka, while maintaining remarkable law and order on the “liberated” territories. The actual “Tamil Tigers”, branded an “outlaw organization” by the United States, Britain, India, and Sri Lanka, had denied attacking the Colombo buildings⁵³⁸. Nonetheless, despite the absence of an established perpetrator, this new “car-“bombing greatly increased the nuclear hysteria of the U.S. Government, as well as that of government of other “civilized” and “uncivilized” states alike.

The most important nuclear bombing of that year, however, was yet to occur. It would take place on June 25, 1996, and would be known as the “Khobar Towers bombing”. I do not want to go deep into its details here, because this mini-nuke bombing is described in detail in the corresponding chapter of this book. I will only remind you that this unprecedented “car-“bombing directed against the U.S. military personnel stationed in Saudi Arabia left the enormous crater, 85 feet wide and 35 feet deep, and that the file of the photograph of that crater was named by a photographer from the U.S. Department of Defense as the “Khobartowersgroundzero.jpg”.

The Khobar Towers bombing would be later blamed, of course, on the so-called “Al-Qaeda” and on Osama bin Laden personally. However, it was not so in the immediate aftermath of the bombing. Those days nobody had heard about the so-called “Al-Qaeda” yet (and neither about the so-called “Egyptian Islamic Jihad”, while the so-called “Islamic Jihad” from Lebanon fell into oblivion a long time ago). The Khobar Towers bombing was initially blamed on the little-known alleged “Saudi Hezbollah”, which by definition should have been presumed to be something similar to the well-known Lebanese Hezbollah. Of course, by extension, this bombing must have been blamed on Iran, because Shi’a Iran was indeed the patron of the Shi’a Hezbollah since the time of the creation of the latter. Indeed, the U.S. officials were quick in blaming Iran for that bombing. You could easily find the proof of my words if you review the contemporary news articles – none of them has blamed any so-called “Al-Qaeda” or even the so-called “Egyptian Islamic Jihad”. All of them blamed the “Hezbollah” and Iran, instead.

If you read the Wikipedia article⁵³⁹ on the Khobar Towers “car”-bombing, you will notice that even the belated FBI’s indictment did not include any so-called “Al-Qaeda” and any of its members yet; in fact, it did not include any Sunni Muslims. Instead, the FBI indictment included only several Shi’a Muslims from the alleged “Saudi Hezbollah” a/k/a “Hezbollah al-Hejaz” (that obviously had nothing to do and could not have anything to do with the Sunni Wahhabi “Al-Qaeda”). Here is a quote from the Wikipedia article (make sure to pay attention to dates, and also make sure to notice that all listed folks are Shi’a, not Sunni):

“...Indictment

The three-year investigation led the FBI to conclude that Iranians were involved in the attack. At that time the Clinton administration hoped to open a dialogue with reformist president Khatami, which would be impossible after accusing Iranians of supporting terrorist action. A secret letter, delivered directly to Khatami by Sultan Qaboos of Oman, stated that the United States had evidence of direct Iranian involvement in the act, and demanded that those involved be held responsible for their actions. Khatami refused to begin an investigation and Iranian officials stated that al-Qaeda was responsible for the attack.⁵⁴⁰

On June 21, 2001, an indictment was issued in United States District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia in Alexandria, Virginia charging the following people with murder, conspiracy, and other charges related to the bombing:

Ahmed Ibrahim Al-Mughassil
Abdelkarim Hussein Mohamed Al-Nasser
Ali Saed Bin Ali El-Hoorie
Ibrahim Salih Mohammed Al-Yacoub
Nine other Saudis

Interestingly, the Wikipedia article has even a special sub-chapter, entirely devoted to an attempt to attribute this bombing to the so-called "Al-Qaeda". Some thoughts of those folks who contemplate over this issue are quite intriguing, indeed. The notable thing is that, irrespectively of the personal perceptions of those authors, it is an undisputable fact that initially, the Khobar bombing was blamed on the Shi'a; the switch to the Sunni Wahhabi "Al-Qaeda" happened much, much later. I quote:

"...Attribution to Al Qaeda

Abdel Bari Atwan writes.⁵⁴¹

*In May 1996 Bin Laden and his entourage moved from Sudan to Afghanistan. As if to make the point that they might have been chased out of Sudan by Saudi Arabia and the US they were not leaving with their tails between their legs, al Qaeda struck again: The June bombing of Khobar Towers. The Saudi authorities were at pains to implicate Shi'i militants backed by Iran in this attack, since the embarrassing truth that they had their very own homegrown militancy problem was inadmissible; they did not want to give the impression that there was domestic opposition to the deployment of US troops on Saudi soil.

In 2004, the 9/11 Commission noted that Osama Bin Laden was seen being congratulated on the day of the Khobar attack, and this raised the possibility that he may have helped the group, possibly by helping to obtain the explosives. According to the United States, classified evidence suggests that the government of Iran was the key sponsor of the incident, and several high-ranking members of their military may have been involved.^{542 543} A U.S. federal court speculated that the Khobar Towers bombing was authorized by Ali Khamenei, the Supreme Leader of Iran.⁵⁴⁴

William Perry, who was the United States Secretary of Defense at the time that this bombing happened, said in an interview in June 2007 that "he now believes al-Qaida rather than Iran was behind a 1996 truck bombing at an American military base."⁵⁴⁵

In addition to Secretary Perry, Saudi Prince Nayef, head of the Ministry of Interior and the lead investigating agency, has absolved Iran of involvement in the attack..."

In the above quotations, make sure to pay attention to the abundance of words such as "may", "possibly", "possibility", "speculated", "classified evidence suggests", "believes", etc. It is pretty self-evident, that the purported "evil perpetrator" of the Khobar "car"-bombing was not appointed by the so-called "good guys" at the moment of the actual perpetration. Therefore, their gullible security officials were left alone – trying to figure out the potential culprit on their own. As you see, their guessing did not bring them any closer to the truth. Until as late as 2004, they were torn between the leads – ending up with the most ridiculous suggestion – that Shi'a Iran might help the Sunni Wahhabi group...

In any case, right at the moment of the Khobar "car"-bombing, no one has ever heard about any so-called "Al-Qaeda" yet and no one had a clue that this perpetration might have been committed by the Sunni Wahhabi. It would not be until a year later, when the so-called "good guys" would resurrect Osama bin Laden, create the so-called "Egyptian Islamic Jihad" headed by the shill known as "Doctor Abu Moez" a/k/a "Doctor Ayman al-Zawahiri", and elaborate the story about the alleged "nuclear aspirations" of the so-called "Al-Qaeda" supported by "witness accounts" of his alleged "weapon-grade uranium-" and "mini-nukes" purchases. And only then the so-called "good guys" would attempt to change the putative perpetrator of the "Khobar Tower bombing" from the Shi'a Hezbollah and Iran to the Sunni "Al-Qaeda" and Osama bin Laden.

I hope the consideration above is enough to finally establish that the so-called “good guys” even by the year of 1996 were still in search for the most suitable candidate for the role of the “global nuclear terrorist” and no “Al-Qaeda” was singled out for that role yet. Even by the year 1996, the mini-nuclear “car-bombings were still perpetrated by “faceless”, moreover, assorted perpetrators – ranging from the alleged “Shi’a Hezbollah” and “Iran” to the alleged Communist-like “Tamil Tigers”. However, judging by logic, it shall be presumed that the so-called “good guys” by then envisaged as the most probable universal nuclear perpetrator some kind of bogus “Islamic Fundamentalism” of the Shi’a type played by their shills in post-Khomeini Iran and represented by their affiliates such as “Hezbollah” and by purported “Saudi Hezbollah” a/k/a “Hezbollah al-Hejaz”.

It could be additionally confirmed by this obvious fact: an unprecedented number of mini-nukes’ “car”-bombings occurred particularly in Saudi Arabia. As you probably remember from two “extra”, or “facultative” chapters of this book dealing with the Islamic ideology, the Holy Land of Saudi Arabia (to be more precise – the so-called “Shariah laws” installed by the Freemasons on it) was to be protected by the Freemasons at any cost from the Iranian Islamic Revolution. This was the very reason why secular Iraq was used as a “buffer” and a “sanitary cordon” between Khomeini’s Iran and Saudi Arabia, and as the main protection tool of the latter.

Of course, the so-called “good guys” after realizing the dangers of the spread of the revolutionary ideology into the Holy Land of Saudi Arabia, decided to station there the U.S. troops. Of course, since then, they had an obvious task of maintaining the justification of the ungodly U.S. troops’ presence in the Muslim Holy Land. Since the genuine Islamic Fundamentalism was indeed the main enemy of the Saudi ruling circles during the years of the Iranian Islamic Revolution (that effectively ended in 1990), it would be logical to expect that the concept of the danger of the “Shi’a” Islamic Fundamentalism would be exploited even after the actual demise of the latter. It is easy to understand this if you remember that the Freemasons managed to exploit the alleged “Communist threat” and the “Cold War” production for another 35 years after the death of Stalin and the denouncement of the Red ideology in the post-Stalin USSR. Therefore, it is logical to expect the same approach with the exploitation of post-Khomeini Iran and its affiliates even after all of them have denounced the revolutionary ideology and the actual Islamic Fundamentalism. I hope you got the point.

Therefore, right up to the year 1996 (perhaps, even up to 1997), the main potential candidate to the role of the “conductor of the nuclear terror” was the Shi’a Hezbollah, and, by extension – its official patron and ideological mentor – Shi’a Iran⁵⁴⁶. That is why it shall not surprise you that before the so-called “good guys” finally selected Sunni Osama bin Laden and his so-called “Al-Qaeda” to this role, the nuclear bombings in Saudi Arabia were conducted with a view to be blamed on the Shi’a that for simpletons might look like the alleged “adherents to the Islamic Fundamentalism”.

The nuclear hysteria in the “concerned circles” in the meantime continued to increase (as you could sincerely expect must be the case after the unprecedented Khobar Towers “car-bombing that was perpetrated by just another “faceless coward”).

The year 1997.

⁵⁴⁶ To make it easier to understand, try to imagine that for any Communist party in any country in the world during the ‘30s, ‘40s, and earlier ‘50s an official patron and the corresponding ideological mentor was Stalin’s USSR and Moscow-based “Comintern”. This trend was preserved after the denunciation of the Red ideology in the post-Stalin USSR – for any atheist pseudo-communist party of the ‘60s, ‘70s, and ‘80s the official patron and the corresponding pseudo-ideological mentor was the same USSR, though, now atheist one. Thus, any belligerent action committed by any “communist” party in the world (whether during Stalin, or during Khrushchev or Brezhnev) was in any case perceived in such a manner that Moscow was ultimately behind it. Precisely the same thing is applicable to Revolutionary Iran and to the Hezbollah that was initially created on the ideas of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini (Quranic word “hezb” means “party”; “Allah” is “God” in Arabic, and, by extension – in the general Muslim usage; thus, “Hezbollah” means “party of God”). In this comparison, Khomeini’s Iran is an equivalent of the Red, Stalin’s USSR. Post-Khomeini’s fascist Iran is an equivalent of the fascist USSR during Khrushchev and Brezhnev. So, the Hezbollah party in its revolutionary and pseudo-revolutionary capacities – is an equivalent of the genuinely communist- and pseudo-communist parties in other countries. Thus, it is automatically perceived that Tehran is ultimately behind any significant action carried out by the Hezbollah.

The year 1997 seemed to have been “quiet” in the sense of the so-called “car-“bombings, if not counting the repeating “truck-“bombing on the October 15, of the WTC Twin Towers in Colombo, Sri Lanka (yes, the WTC Twin Towers in Colombo, Sri Lanka, were also nuked). The latter action was again blamed on the “Tamil Tigers” and again the “Tamil Tigers” denied any involvement. It should be mentioned, for the sake of clarity, that the “Tamil Tigers” have never denied any action that they carried out in reality. They always proudly announced even such seemingly repulsive actions as, for example, punitive massacres of Buddhist monks, not to mention successful bombings, ambushes, and other assaults. Nonetheless, this “truck”-bombing was denied by them.

However, despite that the year 1997 was relatively quiet, when it comes to the actual “car-“bombings, there was a very important development that followed one seemingly unimportant event that took place in the previous year.

The “seemingly unimportant event” I am talking about was Osama bin Laden’s mentioning of Hiroshima and Nagasaki in one of his speeches in November 1996.

I have no clue whether this mentioning was intentional (meaning that Osama was ordered by his former- or current CIA handlers to say so) or rather coincidental (that the so-called “good guys” would just avail themselves later), but I think I am obliged to put here the entire quotation and to educate the reader in this regard.

Here is what Osama bin Laden has actually said (do not forget, that by the year 1996, he grew quite critical of the United States, since he continued to consider himself and his group of the Afghan war veterans as “Islamic warriors”, while regarding the United States as rotting decadents and ungodly imperialists, who, moreover, dared to trample their dirty feet on the Holy Land of Saudi Arabia):

“...As for their accusations of terrorizing the innocent, the children, and the women, these are in the category of 'accusing others with their own affliction in order to fool the masses.' The evidence overwhelmingly shows America and Israel killing the weaker men, women and children in the Muslim world and elsewhere. A few examples of this are seen in the recent Qana massacre in Lebanon, and the death of more than 600,000 Iraqi children because of the shortage of food and medicine which resulted from the boycotts and sanctions against the Muslim Iraqi people, also their withholding of arms from the Muslims of Bosnia-Herzegovina leaving them prey to the Christian Serbians who massacred and raped in a manner not seen in contemporary history. Not to forget the dropping of the atomic bombs on cities with their entire populations of children, elderly, and women, on purpose, and in a premeditated manner as was the case with Hiroshima and Nagasaki...

*Osama bin Laden
In Nida'ul Islam magazine October-November 1996”*

Actually, as you can see from the context of the above, Osama did not call for using nuclear weapons against the U.S. that could be supposedly justified by the 1945 atomic bombings of the Japanese civilians perpetrated by the Americans.

However, the Western press was very quick (and suspiciously quick) jumping on Osama’s remark and misinterpreting it to the best of its abilities.

The Western mass-media in 1997 was full of hysterical articles by various scribblers and “terror experts” who all claimed nothing less than “Osama bin Laden was calling for using nuclear weapons against the American civilians and justifying this by the 1945 atomic bombings of Hiroshima and Nagasaki”.

It seems that it was the year 1997, when Osama bin Laden was noticed and, at last, remembered by the so-called “good guys”. And it seems that he was noticed particularly because of his above mentioned remark.

Someone might ask – why I am talking about the year 1997, while Osama did say it in the year 1996, as appears from the above quotation?

Well, I will try to answer it. Osama made this remark in October or in November 1996 (the edition of the “In Nida'ul Islam” magazine was October-November, so, presumably, it was published in November). Moreover, the actual remark was in Arabic and it was only available in the Arab-language publication apparently intended for the Arab-speaking reader. So, it might take quite some time before it would be translated into English and delivered to some appropriate folks to be analyzed; and it would take some more time for this remark to be noticed by a certain discerning person, who possessed the required sense of humor and who appreciated the remark at its true value. I hope you agree with this logic.

Anyhow, we have to understand that the so-called “good guys” decided to make a good use of the words “Hiroshima and Nagasaki” mentioned by the leader of the so-called “Al-Qaeda”... So, it appears that by the year 1997, it was finally decided who would be the new “global enemy” of the so-called “western civilization” and its so-called “democracy”. Thus, the new “global enemy” was, at last, appointed.

From now on, it would no longer be a phantom “faceless coward” of “assorted” nature armed with a stolen Soviet mini-nuke. It would be a tangible terrorist organization named “Al-Qaeda” headed by tangible Osama bin Laden, who is known for his calls for the nuclear destruction of the United States and referring to the atomic bombings of Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

Only from this point, Osama bin Laden began to be regularly mentioned in various publications in the Western mass-media – both in his “conventional terrorist-” and his “nuclear terrorist” hypostases.

Here is one characteristic statement pertaining to those days (though, this particular statement was published later, obviously after 1998; in this case it only shows the atmosphere of those days):

“As a result of the revelations about Bin Laden’s alleged nuclear activities, intelligence agencies worldwide directed their attention to the apparent connection between opium production in Afghanistan and Al-Qa’ida’s interest in nuclear weapons. Opium farmers in Afghanistan produced approximately 3,269 tons of opium in 1997-98. In late 1998, Bin Laden reportedly sent interested parties to Afghanistan to buy large amounts of opium, probably to raise funds for Al-Qa’ida.”⁵⁴⁷

As you can see, the alleged “apparent connection” between opium production in Afghanistan and the “Al-Qaeda’s” interest in nuclear weapons, is mentioned in such a manner and in such a context, that by definition it elevates the alleged “interest of nuclear weapons” to a supposedly “well established fact”.

The above claim is particularly ridiculous because both – Osama bin Laden and the Taliban then controlling Afghanistan were strictly against any kind of drugs, lest opium, because they belonged to the Wahhabi brand of Islam that advocated the so-called “Shariah”, which strictly prohibits alcohol and drugs. In reality, if you care to remember that well-known fact, the opium production during Taliban’s rule in Afghanistan came to near zero (and to absolute zero in particularly territories controlled by the Taliban). So, in this view, to claim that Osama would resort to trading in opium (moreover, bought from his Afghani comrades) is about the same as to claim that Ayatollah Khomeini would advocate trading in rabbits and pigs and opening whore-houses to finance the Islamic Revolution.

For the “initiated” security officials (who knew the difference between a “car-bombing” and a mini-nuke bombing), however, there was a little bit different development. Many various so-called “Radical Islamists” held responsible for the earlier “car-”bombings, began to be slowly, but surely tied to the so-called “Al-Qaeda”. The evidence of the earlier “car-” and “truck-”bombings was routinely stretched and backdated to embrace Osama bin Laden and his men. This is how the 1996 Khobar Tower bombing that was initially blamed on the Shi’a Hezbollah, and, by extension – on “Islamic Fundamentalists”, was eventually blamed on the mortal enemies of the latter – on the Sunni Wahhabis represented by Osama bin Laden. This is how the 1993 first WTC bombing that was initially blamed on the so-called “Islamic Radicals” of an unknown creed, was eventually blamed on the so-called “Militant Islamists” of the Wahhabi creed, moreover, being Osama bin Laden’s associates.

⁵⁴⁷ <http://cns.miis.edu/pubs/reports/binladen.htm>

The run-up to 9/11. Year 1998. Osama bin Laden versus Ayman al-Zawahiri.

The year 1998.

The year 1998 proved to be the decisive year in the time-line of the “global nuclear terror”. It seems that there were no more remarkable “car-“bombings in 1998, except for one event: the double “car-“bombings of the United States Embassies in Kenya and Tanzania (the exact spots of which were called by the strange words “ground zero” and which occurred right on the anniversary of the Hiroshima bombing).

These, of course, were immediately blamed on Osama bin Laden (who by that time had relocated from Sudan back to Afghanistan, together with his entire “Al-Qaeda”, becoming the guest of the ruling Taliban regime, which was, in turn, installed by the CIA and their Pakistani colleagues). The so-called “good guys” had finally made their choice: a personification of the otherwise immaterial “evil” was elected. Thus, the former “faceless coward”, at last, incarnated and obtained the well-known face with a long beard and an obligatory turban.

Yet a few more important events that might easily miss your precious attention took place in the year 1998, particularly – in the immediate aftermath of the U.S. Embassies bombings. You can find mentioning of them, for example, here: <http://cns.miis.edu/pubs/reports/binladen.htm>. I quote:

“...August 16, 1998

Israeli military intelligence sources reported that Bin Laden paid over 2 million pounds sterling to a middle-man in Kazakhstan, who promised to deliver a “suitcase” bomb to Bin Laden within two years. In an attempt to prevent Bin Laden from obtaining such weapons from Kazakhstan, Israel sent a cabinet minister to the republic to persuade the Kazakh government to prevent such exchanges from occurring.(7)...”

Of course, the silly event described above (could you imagine how silly it might look in reality – to pay 2 million pounds, i.e. almost 4 million USD, to someone who “promises” to deliver you some highly improbable stuff in “merely” two years time) prompted the equally silly Israeli response –sending the Israeli cabinet minister to “persuade” the Kazakhs not to allow such silly deals in the future. Of course, if the reader is cynical enough, he would understand that the actual intent was by no means to prevent these alleged “nuclear” deals, but to publicly declare such a thing for the consumption of gullible plebeians and gullible patricians alike. But what was particularly intriguing, was that both – the silly claims and the corresponding silly actions described above, had nothing to do with the Americans (who were actually the victims of the 1998 U.S. Embassy bombings); they had something to do with the “Israeli government” and with “Israeli military intelligence” (while the Israelis had officially nothing to do with that affair).

The next event that followed the “car”-bombings of the U.S. Embassies (spots of which were called “ground zero”) was less silly in its essence and far more impressive for the gullible:

“...September 25, 1998

Bin Laden’s aide Mamdouh Mahmud Salim was arrested in Munich, Germany, and charged with acting on behalf of Bin Laden to obtain nuclear materials. In particular, Salim reportedly attempted to obtain highly enriched uranium in the mid-1990s.(6)...⁵⁴⁸

As you see, this time it was serious. Because to cry in some irresponsible newspaper about alleged purchasing of nuclear materials by some phantom entity is one thing, but to charge some tangible human being with such an offense is a totally different thing. Obviously, when you charge someone, especially if you hold him under arrest, you have to prove your charges; so, I hope that the reader understands the difference.

⁵⁴⁸ <http://cns.miis.edu/pubs/reports/binladen.htm>

Someone might ask, of course, this question: but why did the so-called “good guys” prefer to implicate the so-called “Al-Qaeda” in only purchasing of the nuclear materials? Why not to supply those silly “Militant Islamists” some real nukes and so to catch them red-handed? It would be far more impressive, wouldn't it?

Well, I think it is easy to guess the answer. Enriched Uranium could originate from any country – for example, from South Africa. Or from Brazil. Or from Argentina. Or from the United States. Or from Russia. Or from France. Or from Israel. Or from UK. Or from Iraq. Or from Iran. Or from North Korea. Or from China. Or from Pakistan. Its “original” packaging is easy to falsify. It is not so, of course, with a real nuclear charge. Appropriate specialists, who would be summoned as technical experts, would immediately understand by its design where such a nuke came from. Moreover, by its serial number, it would also be possible to trace it to a certain particular nuclear depot and so – to demand explanations from those who were responsible for its loss. Therefore, to catch any “terrorist” with any real nuke is not an option. It is much easier (and, actually, the only possible way of the game) to create an impression that certain scoundrels supposedly “manufacture their own nukes” because: a) they were caught with weapon-grade nuclear materials; b) because “they” have already detonated several “car”-bombs in reality. But when it comes to the actual nukes – they could only become apparent after their detonation and by no means earlier than that. In fact, the possibility that some operative might be arrested with a yet unexploded mini-nuke in his hand is the most dreadful one – because in this case it would be very clear who was the manufacturer of the actual nuke.

In fact, the story about abovementioned Mamdouh Mahmud Salim who was arrested while allegedly buying weapon-grade Uranium supposedly “on behalf of Osama bin Laden” is serious enough and is apparently worth some deeper studying. Let us, since it is our tradition, begin with a corresponding Wikipedia article on Mamdouh Mahmud Salim⁵⁴⁹. I quote:

“...Mamdouh Mahmud Salim (Arabic: ممدوح محمود سالم, Mamdūḥ Maḥmūd Sālim; b. 1958 in Sudan) is an alleged co-founder of the Islamist terrorist network al-Qaeda. He was arrested on 16 September 1998 near the German city of Munich. On 20 December 1998 he was extradited to the United States, where he is charged with participating in the 1998 United States embassy bombings...”

From the very first sentence of the article we could conclude that:

- 1) Mamdouh Mahmud Salim was an alleged “co-founder” of the so-called “Al-Qaeda” (interestingly, even in the Wikipedia article the word “alleged” used before the word “co-founder”).
- 2) Mamdouh Mahmud Salim was arrested in Germany, yet he was extradited to the United States and not prosecuted in Germany.

Why, you might ask, he was not prosecuted in Germany while his alleged crime (an attempt to buy enriched Uranium) was apparently committed on the German territory?

I think it is pretty obvious: because the game with the so-called “nuclear terror” was being conducted from the United States and it would not be possible (or would be too difficult, perhaps) for the so-called “good guys” to orchestrate the needed outcome of the judicial proceedings in Germany. It would be much easier for them to arrange the show trial in the United States, using peculiarities of the U.S. justice system. Moreover, it would be much easier to arrange a quiet release and an identity change for this shill while in the United States compared to Germany.

- 3) There was an obvious connection between the alleged “participation of Mamdouh Mahmud Salim in the 1998 United States embassy bombings” and his alleged attempt to buy weapon-grade Uranium in Germany.

This clearly implies that the actual bombing must have been nuclear. Moreover, if you come back a few pages and re-read the important excerpt from the page 19 of the “U.S. indictment against Bin Laden et al”⁵⁵⁰ on the criminal case on the 1998 bombings, which I repeat here:

⁵⁴⁹ http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Mamdouh_Mahmud_Salim

The Efforts to Obtain Nuclear Weapons and Their Components

z. At various times from at least as early as 1992, the defendants USAMA BIN LADEN and MAMDOUH MAHMUD SALIM, and others known and unknown, made efforts to obtain the components of nuclear weapons; you will notice that Mamdouh Mahmud Salim was the only real person mentioned together with Osama bin Laden (if not counting those obscure “others known and unknown”) in the “nuclear” connection of the 1998 bombings.

The Wikipedia article continues:

“...Since then he has been convicted of attempted murder, after stabbing two prison guards and maceing others during an attempted escape. He was sentenced to 32 years for the crimes. In 2008, however, a Federal Appeals judge ruled that the judge in the case was in error when he ruled that the stabbing was not part of a terrorism plot. He ordered resentencing.

He was re-sentenced to life without parole in August 2010. He is now an inmate of the ADX Florence facility in Florence, Colorado (reg.nr. 42426-054)...”

If you are cynical enough, you will understand that the above production with “resentencing” and “life without parole” (by the ridiculous elevation of the alleged knife-assault to the level of the “terrorism plot”) was intended to make it easier for the so-called “good guys” to arrange the quiet release and the identity change for their shill. Of course, it would be even better to arrange his “execution” (such as that of infamous “nuclear bomber” Timothy McVeigh), but the “life without parole” could suffice too. You could be pretty certain that if you unexpectedly (I mean genuinely unexpectedly) appear in that prison facility and demand to see that inmate “reg.nr. 42426-054”, prison guards would not be able to produce any “Mamdouh Mahmud Salim” and they would either claim that “he is sick in a hospital”, or produce some other person as a substitute for the latter.

Let us read the second part of the Wikipedia article:

“Founding al-Qaeda in 1988

He attended two meetings from August 11–20 in 1988, along with Osama bin Laden, Ayman al-Zawahiri, Mohammed Atef, Jamal al-Fadl, Wael Hamza Julaidan, and Mohammed Loay Bayazid and eight others, to discuss the founding of “al-Qaeda”.

According to Jamal al-Fadl, Salim instructed militant recruits in the works of Ibn Taymiyyah. Other allegations suggest he travelled to China, Japan or Hong Kong with Mohammed Loay Bayazid in 1990 to facilitate the purchase of communications equipment for the Sudanese government. In Khartoum, he travelled to Hilat Koko with Jamal al-Fadl in late 1993 or early 1994, and met with Amin Abdel Marouf to discuss chemical weapons.

He was arrested approximately September 8, 1998 in Germany, and extradited to the United States. However, his joint bank account with Mamoun Darkanzali was not investigated, and the latter transferred the funds to a militant who would later participate in the 9/11 hijackings.”

As you can see, this Mamdouh Mahmud Salim proved to be quite a handy tool, moreover, almost a “universal” one. His handlers managed to stretch his usability to such an extent as to even claim that he was allegedly one of the original “Al-Qaeda” co-founders in remote 1988. Moreover, now they claim that another shill – “Doctor Ayman al-Zawahiri”, the infamous head of the so-called “Egyptian Islamic Jihad”, the “by definition” nuclear terror organization, was also allegedly one of the so-called “Al-Qaeda” co-founders in remote 1988. And this is despite the fact that the belatedly created “Egyptian Islamic Jihad” was not yet responsible for any of the nuclear bombings of the mid-‘90s, while nobody even heard about “Doctor Abu Moez”, a/k/a “Abdel Ayaman al-Zawahiri” a/k/a “Ayman Mohammed Rabie al-Zawahiri” until the late ‘90s. They went in their ridiculous claims as far as to insist that even after his “approximate” arrest in Germany that failed to investigate Mamdouh Mahmud Salim’s bank account, his bank account was used to finance the incredible project of allowing aluminum planes to penetrate steel perimeters of the Twin Towers that is officially known as the “9/11 hijackings”...

Sometimes we can only wonder – as to how low the so-called “good guys” actually brought their gullible slave in a sense of his logic and his overall education and what opinion they have of his current mental abilities...

Surprisingly, in the above quotation from the Wikipedia article, describing the alleged August 1988 meeting of the “founding fathers” of the so-called “Al-Qaeda”, besides Osama bin Laden, Ayman al-Zawahiri, and Jamal al-Fadl (the supposed turncoat whose testimony before the court we have recently reviewed), there was another interesting personage mentioned – a certain not unknown “Mohammed Atef”.

Let us review, for the sake of clarity, a Wikipedia article on Mohammed Atef⁵⁵¹. I quote:

“...Mohammed Atef Al-Masri (Arabic: عاطف المصرى, Atef Al-Masri) (born Sobhi Abu Setta, also known as Abu Hafs al-Masri) was the military chief of al-Qaida, although his role in the organization was not well known by intelligence agencies for years. He was killed in a US drone strike in November 2001...”

This is not bad beginning, isn't it? First of all, the real role of the supposed “military chief of the so-called Al Qaeda” was allegedly “not well known for years”; moreover, he was so conveniently killed “by a U.S. drone strike” (meaning without any witnesses, so we could only guess why it was decided that it was particularly Atef who was killed by the “drone strike” and not some poor Afghani peasant?) almost immediately after the 9/11 affair.

The Wikipedia article continues:

“...Atef served two years in the Egyptian Air Force and became an agricultural engineer. He was also a police officer and a member of the group Egyptian Islamic Jihad before he moved to Afghanistan to repel the Soviet invasion, while operating from Peshawar. He has been credited as having convinced Abdullah Azzam to abandon his life and devote himself to preaching jihad at this time...”

I sincerely hope that the reader, who reached as far as this chapter, supposed to become a bit educated in both – the ideology and the psychology associated with the latter, and supposed to grow cynical enough, in addition. Note that Atef used to be nothing less than the cop. Could you imagine that the cop would take up illegal firearms and voluntarily depart from his country to some far-distant “lawless”⁵⁵² territory of feudal Afghanistan to repel the Soviet invasion? Well, it is about the same as to imagine that a certain U.S. cop might suddenly inflame with the Christian solidarity, recollect that the Law is actually the one that is to be written with the Capital Letter, realize that the only Law-enforcement organization is the Sicilian Mafia, and so – depart for Sicily in order to join the local Mafiosi in their fight against the unlawful Italian Carabinieri. Sounds “realistic”, doesn't it? Have you ever seen such a cop?

In addition, from the above quotation, you can perceive the most ridiculous claim – that the “by definition” nuclear terror organization known by its moronic trade-mark name “Egyptian Islamic Jihad” allegedly existed in the '80s – i.e. during the era of the Soviet invasion in Afghanistan... Well... it seems that scribblers who concoct these stories for the consumption of gullible security officials, politicians, and even judges in the U.S. courts do not have such a high opinion of the latters' I.Q.

Let us see what else it is claimed in the Wikipedia article in regard to Atef:

“...Atef was sent to an Afghan training camp where he met Ayman al-Zawahiri, who later introduced him to Osama bin Laden...”

Well... This is interesting – it appears that Atef was introduced to Osama bin Laden by no one else than Doctor al-Zawahiri, the 100% proven shill. In fact, this is very important piece of info. Please, try to keep it in mind.

⁵⁵¹ http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Mohammed_Atef

⁵⁵² It shall be known that in the politically-correct “Newspeak” of the capitalist world, territories governed by the Adat are called nothing less than “lawless” – for example, the Tribal Area of Pakistan that is governed by the Law of God is officially called “lawless territory”.

“...He attended two meetings from August 11–20 in 1988, along with Bin Laden, al-Zawahiri, Mamdouh Mahmud Salim, Jamal al-Fadl, Wael Hamza Julaidan, and Mohammed Loay Bayazid and eight others, to discuss the founding of “al-Qaeda” ...”

Here they want to imply that supposedly “as a matter of fact” al-Zawahiri was one of the founding members of the so-called “Al-Qaeda” in the year of 1988. However, it is well-known that the so-called “Egyptian Islamic Jihad” headed by Doctor Ayman al-Zawahiri and the so-called “Al-Qaeda”, led by Osama bin Laden, formally merged only in the beginning of 1998. It was done in an apparent preparation for the nuclear attacks against the U.S. Embassies in Kenya and Tanzania (the cynical reader has to understand that before 1998, the so-called “Al-Qaeda” clearly missed a nuclear component; so this unfortunate omission was fixed by merging into it the so-called “Egyptian Islamic Jihad” – the organization, “nuclear by definition”). How it could be that while al-Zawahiri was the “founding father” of the so-called “Al-Qaeda” in remote 1988, it took for him almost 10 years to get his so-called “Islamic Jihad” merged into the “Al-Qaeda”? Do you see any logic in such garbage? However, some U.S. judges see some “logic” in this type of claim...

“...While in the Sudan, he allegedly conducted a study which resulted in him presenting al-Qaeda details on why aircraft hijackings were a poor idea as they were engineered to allow the negotiation of hostages in exchange for prisoners, rather than inflicting damage...”⁵⁵³

Hmm... this was an interesting observation – perhaps, Atef, being formerly not only the cop, but also the serviceman in the Egyptian Air Force, pointed out to his Al-Qaeda’s comrades that aluminum could unlikely penetrate steel, but it seems that his colleagues did not pay any heed to his expert opinion and decided to proceed with the 9/11 hijackings...

“...Another alleged study he carried out determined that the Afghan Arabs⁵⁵⁴ and Taliban could together topple the dictatorship of Pervez Musharraf in Pakistan, and the government of Iran...”

Oh really? The so-called “Al-Qaeda” must have been really powerful, wasn’t it? To be able to convince its Taliban hosts to topple the government of their only guarantor and supporter – the Pakistani president? Well, it sounds “logical” indeed, especially considering that only three states in the entire world used to actually recognize the Taliban as a legal government of Afghanistan – Saudi Arabia, United Arab Emirates, and Pakistan. But to topple the Shi’a Iranian government, in predominantly Shi’a Iran, while being the Sunni organization, is a feat, indeed. Even the entire armed to the teeth regime of Saddam Hussein was not able to cope with the Iranians, in case you forgot it. Actually, this particular claim in its silliness roughly corresponds to a claim that a group of some 300 Wahhabi freaks with a budget of some half-million US dollars seriously plans to topple the Roman Pope, to hoist the green banner of Islam above Vatican, and to replace the current Catholic doctrine with the so-called “Shariah code”.

“...In 1995, Atef gave Khalid Sheikh Mohammed details for a contact in Brazil⁵⁵⁵. When Mohammed returned to Afghanistan, he turned to Atef to set up a meeting with Bin Laden in Tora Bora, at which he told the pair his plans for military attacks against the United States⁵⁵⁶ ...”

Oh, this means that Atef also personally knew the chief 9/11 clown – Khalid Sheikh Mohammed (a/k/a “KSM”)... And moreover, this alleged “fact” was confirmed by the infamous 9/11 Commission. Well done... We could only guess why Atef “sent” this clown to Brazil (the country, which had apparently nothing to do with Islam, yet was known to have Uranium-based nuclear weapons, at least formerly).

“...Prior to 1996, Abu Ubaidah al-Banshiri, Atef and Yaseen al-Iraqi aided Enaam Arnaout in purchasing AK-47s and mortar rounds from a Pashtun tribesman named Hajji Ayoub, and they were subsequently delivered in large trucks to the Jawr and Jihad Wahl training camps...”⁵⁵⁷

⁵⁵³ National Commission on Terrorist Attacks, 9/11 Commission, p. 153

⁵⁵⁴ “Afghan Arabs” was a term to refer to the Afghani mujahidin from the Arab world that initially came there as volunteers to fight the Soviet troops, but eventually stayed in Afghanistan. It was also commonly known that while the so-called “Afghan Arabs” were tolerated, they were typically disliked by the local Afghanis due to their lack of respect to the Afghani culture and traditions, particularly – to the Afghani code of honor conditioned by the Adat.

⁵⁵⁵ National Commission on Terrorist Attacks, 9/11 Commission, p. 148

⁵⁵⁶ Ibid, p. 148.

This is the only piece of the Wikipedia article that is more or less logical (though, of course, not necessarily truthful). To buy some AK-47s and mortar rounds from some Pashtun tribesman was indeed possible – the free Pashtuns in the Tribal Area were indeed well-armed and they indeed did not see any so-called “political incorrectness” in trading in weapons. Though, I see no sense in the attempt of these scribblers to connect the purchase of the conventional weapons in modest quantities to the nuclear aspirations and otherwise grandiose anti-American plans of the so-called “Al-Qaeda”. Should it mean that the “mortar rounds” and the “AK-47s” were intended to attack the World Trade Center on 9/11? Or what else did they want to imply by citing this fact?

The next part of the Wikipedia article, however, is the most intriguing (read it with your EYES OPEN, please):

“...1998 embassy bombings

On May 7, 1998, Atef faxed Bin Laden a fatwa signed by Afghan scholars on May 7, which said that attacks against American civilians could be justified.⁵⁵⁸ Three months later, al-Qaeda carried out the 1998 U.S. embassy bombings, leading to Atef's indictment as having been involved in the preparation of the attack.⁵⁵⁹ ...”

Well. This provides us with some food for thought. Let us begin with the claim that “Atef faxed bin Laden a fatwa” supposedly “signed by Afghan scholars” that supposedly gave him the green light to attack the American civilians. Note, that this “fatwa” was “faxed” obviously as a preliminary step shortly before the actual “car”-bombings of the U.S. Embassies in Kenya and Tanzania. The actual word “fatwa”, in case you do not know what this is, is a “religious edict” or a “learned opinion concerning Islamic law issued by an Islamic scholar.” It is usually non-binding for the Sunni, though, could be binding for the Shi’a, depending on the latter’s relation to the scholar who issued the fatwa.

Let us look at this through the eyes of a simpleton for whose consumption the abovementioned faxing of the “fatwa” was initially intended. We will see that:

- 1) Osama bin Laden was supposedly “nuclear armed” (this was “common knowledge” by then);
- 2) Osama bin Laden was supposedly (this was also “common knowledge”) calling for nothing less than a nuclear attack on the American civilians justifying this by the fact that the Americans used atomic bombs against Japanese civilians in Hiroshima and Nagasaki;
- 3) Osama supposedly was not sure about the justification of such an action (supposedly deeming it being potentially inconsistent with the Islamic doctrine) and therefore he supposedly sought a learned opinion issued by the Islamic scholars;
- 4) So, he supposedly got the fax with the badly needed opinion of the Islamic scholars, which approved the attack against the American civilians;
- 4a) ...and the American- and possibly some other Western secret services who constantly monitored the communication network, especially the satellite one used by Osama, got their copies of the incriminating fax in the most convenient manner;
- 5) Following the fax, the two “car”-bombings of the U.S. Embassies in Kenya and Tanzania occurred right on the anniversary of the Hiroshima bombing, killing several hundred, injuring several thousand, blinding some 60, and leaving “ground zero” names.

A simpleton is welcome with his own conclusions.

But we are not simpletons, are we?

⁵⁵⁹ Dawoud, Khaled. The Guardian, Atef al-Masry, November 19, 2001

Therefore, let us look at the same set of events through the eyes of a cynical, a little bit educated human, who is friendly with both – common sense and elementary logic. We will see that:

- 1) Some folks made good usage of the existence of the only known⁵⁶⁰ Wahhabi militant organization headed by Osama bin Laden that was initially doing petty non-criminal business in Sudan;
- 2) This organization was repeatedly framed up by agent-provocateurs of Western secret services that repeatedly approached the “Al-Qaeda” with various offers to buy weapon-grade Uranium and other potentially dangerous materials;
- 3) Someone created an impression in the mass-media and among security officials and among “initiated” politicians that Osama bin Laden was supposedly “nuclear armed”;
- 4) Someone made a good use of an unfortunate Osama’s statement about Hiroshima (it will be described in detail later) by misinterpreting it to sound as if “evil Osama bin Laden was calling for a nuclear strike against the American civilians justifying it by the 1945 atomic bombings of the Japanese civilians by the Americans”;
- 5) Someone created an impression that Osama (who used to issue fatwas by himself, believing that he was educated enough in Islamic matters, to be able to issue his own learned opinions) for some not so clear reason allegedly needed the fatwa from some other Islamic scholars. And therefore, instead of requesting the fatwa from Wahhabi Islamic scholars somewhere in Saudi Arabia, he, for some not so clear reason, decided to request it from the “foolish”, supposedly pre-Islamic feudalist Afghani ulema that was bogged down in the un-Islamic usage of the Tawrat and the Indjil and preconceived by the un-Islamic “adats” widespread in feudal Afghanistan. So, Osama requested the “learned opinion” from the “uneducated” Afghani ulema that presumably had no clue about the “true Islam” as perceived by the “educated” Wahhabis.
- 6) Osama was in Afghanistan (because he relocated there from Sudan in 1996, under the pressure from the U.S. Government) at that moment. Therefore, he actually did not need any mediation by Atef, not to mention any “faxes”. He could obviously utilize the opportunity of being in Afghanistan by personally ⁵⁶⁰ It seems that I have to clarify what I mean. The so-called “Al-Qaeda” was indeed a rare, not to say unique, militant Wahhabi organization. The problem is that it is quite difficult – to indoctrinate genuinely militant people with a bogus doctrine originally intended to pacify and to enslave colonized Muslims. It is roughly as difficult as to create a genuinely militant Christian organization, armed with unlicensed machineguns and RPGs, and, moreover, seeking nuclear and chemical weapons, providing that such an organization must be based entirely on the “Christian” ideas of Billy Graham and devoted to implementing them on practice. Indeed, you would have obvious difficulties finding some few hundreds of militant folks willing to join such a “militant Christian” project. The problem is that people tend to be militant to fight for their liberation (providing, of course, that they are unhappy with their current status of being slaves, and brave enough to rebel against the slavery). It is hardly possible to find any militant people who will fight for their own enslavement (unless, of course, you are an established state ruler and have enough power to conscript them into your army; which is, apparently, not a case with a rebel organization). Indeed, some very special conditions are required to unite two antagonistic things such as “militancy” and “Wahhabism”. Usually, it is only possible when you are able to utilize some potentially militant, yet not enough educated youths, moreover, bearers of some feudalist features, such as the “code of honor”. Nowadays, these could only be found among Pashtuns, Kurds, and Chechens. You can hardly find many of such folks among Arabs, considering that the absolute majority of the Arabs originate from former colonies of the West. Some militant youths with feudalist features could be found, still, even among the Arabs, but in very limited quantities. However, unlikely they could still be found today. They might be available some 30 years ago – in the earlier ‘80s, when not all Arabs were completely enslaved yet and some remnants of the Adat and memories of the Ottoman “Kanun” were still haunting among some groups of them, particularly in Hedjaz and Yemen. That is why the so-called “Al-Qaeda” is indeed so unique and therefore so valuable. It was created in very special conditions from very special people, moreover, a long time ago. It is highly unlikely that anyone could artificially re-create such unique conditions, peculiar to the ‘80s, in order to be able to create more organizations of similar kind. It would be a mistake to think that other Muslims fighting, let’s say, U.S. troops in Iraq, or Israeli troops in Lebanon, or Serbian troops in Kosovo, are driven by any “Wahhabi” sentiment. It is not so, of course. They are driven in the most part either by nationalistic, or by “patriotic” sentiments; plus, sometimes they are driven by a sense of avenge. A really militant, genuine Wahhabi organization, moreover, an internationalist one, that supposes to be driven by the ideological sentiment alone, is indeed a rarity, considering that the actual “ideological sentiment” is, in fact, the pseudo-ideological one.

approaching the Afghani ulema and requesting any “fatwa” on any matter personally. In the worst case, if he were for some reason unable to travel, he could still receive the text of such a fatwa in some more reliable means than just “fax”. Osama inherited some 30 millions USD from his father and he was rich enough to be able to afford sending a courier by a plane, or even by a helicopter. Do not forget that the Taliban used to maintain ordinary commercial flights inside Afghanistan, in addition to various military helicopters and planes, supersonic jets inclusive. Moreover, Osama apparently resided not so far from Kabul or from Kandahar and he could easily send such a courier by a car; he did not even need a plane or a helicopter.

7) Serious folks (anything just above a commander of a platoon in military terms or anything above a leader of a youth street gang in plain criminal terms) would never use any open communication to convey anything important, not to say secret or potentially incriminating. They would use some encrypted communication for sure. Moreover, depending on the level of the organization, the quality of encryption used could be right up to the grade of the so-called “one-time-pad” (“OTP”), which uses a cipher that could not be broken even theoretically (i.e. even if all existent and future computers available in the entire Universe would be used in a concerted attempt to break the cipher, they would not be able to break it even after trying so for a couple of billions of years). Add here that with today’s proliferation of the encryption technology even a school-boy with a cheap notebook, using a simple program available for free download, could achieve the level of the OTP encryption in just a few clicks. It is not to mention a well-known “PGP” encryption program⁵⁶¹ – a freeware “folk solution” that was used for secure text encryption since the earlier-’90s by people who would opt to use envelopes while sending a conventional mail. I guess Osama bin Laden and his organization were a bit above that level that might use an unencrypted communication at the end of the 20th century; especially for such a serious matter as an exchange on planning of a nuclear attack against the enemy.

8) To my humble knowledge, no Islamic scholar (not to say about an assembly of them, such as claimed in Atef’s “fax”) would ever issue an opinion justifying an indiscriminate attack on civilians.

Here is, for example, an opinion of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini – undoubtedly, the most militant of all Islamic scholars, whose own country, moreover, suffered tremendous losses from the chemical weapons of Saddam Hussein (as quoted):

*“...Ayatollah Khomeini and his successors condemned the manufacturing, stockpiling, utilization, and threat of utilization of nuclear weapons for being contrary to their religious values. In their view, it is morally unacceptable to deploy weapons of mass destruction which kill indiscriminately civilians and military forces, government supporters and opponents alike...”*⁵⁶²

Here is another characteristic quotation in regard to the use of weapons of mass destruction⁵⁶³:

“...Based on the Supreme Leader Ayatollah Khamenei’s religious edict or fatwa, the use of nuclear weapons and all other types of Weapons of Mass Destruction (WMD) is forbidden or haram – constituting a sin, while being useless, costly, harmful and a serious threat to humanity. Iran’s authorities were informed about this religious view in 1995, eight years prior to Iran’s enrichment program became known to the West. Leaving no room for discrepancy, all Muslim Shia grand ayatollahs have issued the same religious fatwa.

Iran’s stance against weapons of mass destruction, which is far from new, has been put to the test. During the Iran-Iraq war, Saddam Hussein ordered chemical weapons to be used against Iran in the 1980s, resulting in 100,000 Iranian soldiers and civilians being killed or injured. Iran did not retaliate in kind primarily because Imam Ruhollah Khomeini was against the use of weapons of mass destruction based on religious beliefs...”

Try to imagine what was the real opinion of the Afghani religious scholars on the same matter, taking into consideration also that they undoubtedly knew the opinion of Ayatollah Khomeini and his own fatwas issued in this regard.

⁵⁶³ <http://nationalinterest.org/commentary/ten-reasons-iran-doesnt-want-the-bomb-7802>

I hope you got the point: the so-called “good guys” could hardly meet the ends with their new production of the “nuclear terror” in 1998. They made quite a few nuclear bombings by then, but could hardly find anyone to make responsible. Finally, they selected Osama bin Laden as the most useful figure and tried their real best to implicate Osama and his organization in it, but to no avail. Therefore, they resorted to rude falsifications – such as even faxing to him bogus fatwas, supposedly “signed by the Afghani Islamic scholars” that supposedly permitted him to proceed with the “nuclear terror” and they did it only for a reason of such faxes to be intercepted by the Western secret services...

The Wikipedia article on Atef continues:

“...Atef also began speaking to Hambali in Singapore, as the Indonesian-based militant sought al-Qaeda's financing for Jemaah Islamiyah operations.⁵⁶⁴ In turn, when Atef informed Hambali of al-Qaeda's need for a new biological engineer, the latter sent Yazid Sufaat to al-Zawahiri.⁵⁶⁵ ...”

Oh, it appears that Atef also knew not only the chief 9/11 clown “KSM”, but even “Hambali” – the supposed client of the humble author of these lines, in case you care to remember this funny fact. Just to remind you: Mr. “Hambali”, alias “Nurjaman Riduan bin Isamuddin”, was the declared leader of the so-called “Jemaah Islamiah” terrorist organization supposedly responsible for the “car”-bombing of the Sari Night Club in Balinese resort Kuta in 2002 (the exact spot of which even today still bears a strange name “ground zero”). While the humble author of these lines was supposedly his helper in that operation. An Indonesian Islamic cleric Abu Bakar Bashir, who was actually accused of that nuclear bombing and of being the “spiritual leader” of the so-called “Jemaah Islamiah”, managed to win all accusations against him in the Indonesian court. After that he stated that the so-called “Jemaah Islamiah” had never existed in reality; it was a completely bogus entity. While the Indonesian security officials confided to the humble author or these lines that so-called “Hambali” was a bogus personage also – he has never existed in reality.

Thus, with the established fact that Atef used to know non-existent “Hambali” (who, moreover, sent the “new” biological engineer to the so-called “Al-Qaeda”), our case with Atef could be considered closed. He was the 100% proven shill of the CIA – exactly as “KSM”, “Hambali” and Doctor al Zawahiri along with all their “nuclear-”, “chemical-” and “bio-” specialists and specialists in Islamic fatwas and in sending incriminating faxes.

One might, of course, ask – whether or not Osama bin Laden agreed to be the part of the game? Or he was merely a “useful idiot” employed by the so-called “good guys” against his will just because he was a convenient “Islamic militant” who issued convenient thematic statements?

Hmm... I am not quite sure about this. Unfortunately, I was not acquainted with Osama personally and I knew little about him except from publications of the Western media that I do not trust at all. I am sure that “Doctor Abu Moez” a/k/a “Abdel Ayman al-Zawahiri”, the proclaimed leader of the so-called “Egyptian Islamic Jihad”, is a proven shill and I’m almost certain that he is a cadre member of the Freemasonic sect – similar to Saddam Hussein. This could be easily understood judging by the ridiculous name of his “Islamist” organization that was a “logical” continuation of that infamous “Islamic Jihad”, which used to claim responsibility for nuclear bombings in Lebanon in the earlier ‘80s in anonymous telephone calls. However, I have no established opinion on Osama bin Laden in this respect. As you probably noticed, I always try to be objective to the best of my abilities, and I always try not to accuse potentially innocent. So, please, try to figure out your own answer, based on this published interview with Osama (you can easily find it on the Internet if you google for some key-phrases from the below text).

This December 23, 1998, interview with Time Magazine includes the following question-answer excerpts (red fonts made by me; make sure to notice also that the actual reason to conduct the strikes against the ungodly Westerners is not just because they are “ungodly”, but because they made it as bold as to occupy holy sites in Muslim Holy Land of Saudi Arabia that are indeed considered sacred by the Muslims):

“TIME: Are you responsible for the bomb attacks on the two American embassies in Africa?”

⁵⁶⁴ Ressa, Maria. "Seeds of Terror", 2003

⁵⁶⁵ National Commission on Terrorist Attacks, 9/11 Commission, p. 151

Osama bin Laden: The International Islamic Front for Jihad against the U.S. and Israel has, by the grace of God, issued a crystal-clear fatwah calling on the Islamic nation to carry on jihad [holy war] aimed at liberating holy sites. The nation of Muhammad has responded to this appeal. If the instigation for jihad against the Jews and the Americans in order to liberate al-Aksa Mosque and the Holy Ka'aba [Islamic shrines in Jerusalem and Saudi Arabia] is considered a crime, then let history be a witness that I am a criminal. Our job is to instigate and, by the grace of God, we did that, and certain people responded to this instigation.

What can the U.S. expect from you now?

Any thief or criminal or robber who enters another country in order to steal should expect to be exposed to murder [I presume here a word "killing" must have been used, not the word "murder", but this mistake was probably not from Osama, but from an Arab-English translator of this text] at any time. For the American forces to expect anything from me personally reflects a very narrow perception. Thousands of millions of Muslims are angry. The Americans should expect reactions from the Muslim world that are proportionate to the injustice they inflict.

The U.S. says you are trying to acquire chemical and nuclear weapons.

Acquiring weapons for the defense of Muslims is a religious duty. If I have indeed acquired these weapons, then I thank God for enabling me to do so. And if I seek to acquire these weapons, I am carrying out a duty. It would be a sin for Muslims not to try to possess the weapons that would prevent the infidels from inflicting harm on Muslims.

America, the world's only superpower, has called you Public Enemy Number One. Are you worried?

Hostility toward America is a religious duty, and we hope to be rewarded for it by God. To call us Enemy No. 1 or 2 does not hurt us. Osama bin Laden is confident that the Islamic nation⁵⁶⁶ will carry out its duty. I am confident that Muslims will be able to end the legend of the so-called superpower that is America..."

I hope, you got your answer (in case, of course, you believe that the "Time" indeed interviewed Osama bin Laden as claimed and not just simply concocted the entire interview and not misinterpreted what Osama said in reality).

For me personally, however, it appears that Osama was genuinely a "useful idiot" in this case. He sounds pretty genuine in the above interview (though, I could be wrong, of course).

It does not look also that Osama has any luck in acquiring any nuclear weapons, at least, at that point. Of course, later, he might indeed get some fake nuclear weapons that he could not use anyway supplied to him by shills and he would be indeed proud of such a purchase, thinking that it was by the Grace of God Almighty that he got the nukes. But for now, he apparently believed that it was because of his "inflaming fatwas", some other Muslims, who had nothing to do with him or with his organization, used their own nukes (or even genuine car-bombs, because Osama might not even know that it was mini-nukes used in the 1998 bombings) against some American targets – such as against U.S. Embassies in Kenya and Tanzania. Thus, Osama might have felt proud of this, in the same time denying his personal involvement. As you see, Osama sincerely believes that his job was to only instigate and appeal; and someone else apparently responded to his appeals. Indeed, he sounds quite genuine in this sense. If he only knew who actually "responded to his appeals" and how he responded...

Moreover, if you read a few others of his phrases in the above interview, Osama sounds quite genuine when it comes to the explanation of the causes for fighting the infidels, as well as his attitude towards the imperialism in general. I would even say that Osama sounds respectable and his stance strikingly reminds me of Ernesto Che Guevara 30 years back, and therefore could not but attract sympathy. In fact, if Osama would choose genuine ideas of Islamic Fundamentalism instead of his ridiculous "Shariah", ⁵⁶⁶ "Islamic nation" is a concept. The point is that a Muslim (actually, a "Christian" too, if you care to read the Holy Bible) has no nationality and no ethnicity. His nationality is the "Muslim" and his nation is "Islam". Thus, Osama, as a typical idealist, is talking about the "Islamic nation", being apparently too far from the reality to realize that at the end of the 20th century A.D. no such thing as the "Islamic nation" could exist, especially in a capitalist society.

would drop his silly anti-Semitic overtone, would arm himself with the anti-masonic one, and would call for the Muslim Exodus from the capitalist Misr, pointing to the Egyptian pyramid on one US dollar bill, while keeping the same personal appeal and genuineness, he would be as dangerous as Che Guevara too...

Anyway, it is my personal opinion. You are certainly entitled to have your own.

I think I am obliged to say a couple of words in regard to “Doctor al-Zawahiri” because otherwise many people might not believe that he was really a skill.

Let us look at a corresponding Wikipedia article⁵⁶⁷ first (of course, I will not cite the entire text of it, but only the most important parts; words in the bold font are as usual highlighted by me):

“...Ayman Mohammed Rabie al-Zawahiri, (Arabic: أيمن محمد ربيع الظواهري 'Ayman Muḥammad Rabī' az-Zawāhirī, born 19 June 1951) is an Egyptian physician, Islamic theologian and current leader of the militant Islamist organization al-Qaeda. Ayman al-Zawahiri is a former member of Islamist organizations which have both orchestrated and carried out multiple attacks on the continents of North America, Asia, Africa and the Middle East...”

As you see, the Wikipedia article claims that Ayman Mohammed Rabi al Zawahiri, besides being a physician, is also an “Islamic theologian”. Thus, it shall be presumed that his militant activities are conditioned by his knowledge of Islam. Let us implement logic (along with our usual cynicism) when analyzing this suggestion.

I hope that by the time of reaching this part of the book, the reader has already become educated when it comes to the roots of the Islamic militancy and he is able to connect them to the human psychology. The point is that there is only one really, genuinely militant type of a man – that is the man who is not a slave. There are no other militant types.

It does not mean of course, that a typical male slave would not fight. Most probably he would. If a slave is conscripted to an army (or even joins it voluntarily as a commissioned- or a non-commissioned officer in exchange for a good salary or for some social benefits, or because of being brainwashed by a certain doctrine, such as, for example, the so-called “patriotism” or some “imperial interests”) he might fight more or less bravely (depending on his individual qualities, of course, and also depending on circumstances of the fight and on the propagandist maintenance of the army). However, it is almost impossible that such a slave would ever venture as a volunteer (not to mention as an “illegal volunteer”) to some extraneous environment to fight for a certain “right cause” in some far distant country. His mental state of being a slave would effectively prevent him from such a move.

Actually, there are only three types of men who could venture to some far distant land to fight:

- 1) Completely free men who clearly understand the concept of freedom and who therefore could go and fight for it (even in order to liberate- or to preserve the freedom of others);
- 2) Idealistic, romantic, not yet corrupted by This life, not yet completely enslaved by the environment, young men, who might venture into some far distant country to fight for the right (or for the “presumably right”) cause just because of their being young, romantic, and idealistic;
- 3) Mercenaries, who are neither of the above, but who chose to fight for that particular cause, for example, because they are well paid for it or because they want to receive some other benefits as a result of that fighting (for example, become citizens- or other kind of beneficiaries of a state that could be created after such a war), or because they are some kind of desperados, adrenaline addicts, or perverts who pathologically enjoy killing, raping, bombing, and destroying.

You could hardly invent any other category besides the abovementioned three. A typical male-slave, especially a well-off or an educated one, would not voluntarily go and fight in the ranks of any army that is not an army of his own “fatherland”. I hope you agree with this reality that is conditioned by sociological and psychological aspects. Thus, the phenomenon of the international Muslim volunteers who came from different countries of the world to fight the ungodly Soviet troops in Afghanistan in 1980-1989 could be explained by classifying these volunteers in accordance with the three categories listed above.

⁵⁶⁷ http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Ayman_al-Zawahiri

The major part of them (I am talking about the mujahidin of non-Afghani and non-Pashtun origin in this case, i.e. about the truly international volunteers) was, of course, young people. I.e. they were typical young idealists and romantics. Although they had no clue about the genuine Islamic ideology and in the most part they were genuine slaves of police in their own countries, they were not yet corrupted by This life, not yet enslaved by women or by having excessive possessions, and this state of affairs enabled them to venture as volunteers to fight for the cause that looked “right” for them. These could be classified as belonging to the above category No.2. Do not make any mistake in this sense – in no case could these folks have been Islamic Fundamentalists. Although ideas of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini those days were available, in theory (in Iran or in Iranian embassies abroad + among Hezbollah in Lebanon), they were effectively suppressed in any and every Muslim country, as well as in any Western country. Therefore, and especially considering that the actual recruitment of the Muslim volunteers around the world those days was conducted under the aegis of the American CIA mostly by their Saudi and Pakistani lackeys, the usage of the ideas of Islamic Fundamentalism for that purpose was absolutely excluded. That is exactly why, the majority of those recruited volunteers, especially from Arab countries, could only belong to the abovementioned category No.2.

A part of the mujahidin belonged to the above category No.1, of course. Primarily, these were Pashtuns from the Pakistani side, mostly those who used to live in the “lawless” (means governed by the Law) Tribal Area. There were a few exceptions, of course. For example, some educated idealists who perfectly understood what that fight was really for and who consciously joined the Afghani resistance (though not many could have been represented by Islamic Fundamentalists, Anarchists, or Maoists, for example, or by some few followers of the Adat from other countries; unsurprisingly, among these there were even some Soviet officers and soldiers who crossed the sides – those days the sentiment in the Soviet army was by no means “anti-terrorist” like today, but clearly “anti-imperialist”, having something in common with the sentiment of Stalin’s era).

And some part of the mujahidin belonged to the above category No.3, obviously. But there were not too many of these, because it was not common in Islam to be a mercenary; moreover, the available mujahidin’s budget was not too high to afford paying high salaries for such mercenaries.

When it comes to Osama bin Laden, considering that he was an adept of the “Shariah Islam” and of the “Wahhabi” creed, he could not belong to the category No.1, obviously. However, he could be classified as belonging to the category No. 2. And indeed, it seems that it was so. Osama was born in 1957 and he joined the fight against the Soviet Army in Afghanistan as early as in 1979. That means that he was merely 22 years old when he dropped out from his college, left his family (just to remind you that his father was billionaire Mohammed bin Awad bin Laden⁵⁶⁸) and joined the mujahedeen forces (moreover, in the earliest stage of the fight – in 1979, well before the CIA would organize the mass volunteer enlistment network all around the world). I hope you agree that a college dropout of the age of 22 is more likely an idealist and romantic than a highly-paid CIA shill, a well-trained mercenary, or a vicious, specially educated Freemasonic operative.

Moreover, Osama was rich enough, as not to be attracted by even the highest salary; thus, the suggestion that he could be a “mercenary” or a “highly-paid CIA operative” is ungrounded. Logic is stubborn thing... In fact, it is well-known that Osama used to participate in real combat, where he could have been really killed and in this case the salary, whatever high, would not be of any use (Osama was a Muslim, after all, and he must know that a man could not carry much in his hand while departing from This World).

For example, not too many people seem to know a story behind Osama’s iconic Kalashnikov sub-machine gun that was used in almost all of his videotaped statements and seen on many of his photographs. In reality, this was not a typical Chinese-made 7.62 mm AK-47 common to all so-called “terrorists” around the world. It was a special AK-74, moreover, its “shortened” AKSU model of 5.45 mm caliber. In the earlier years of the Afghani war it was still an “experimental” model that was not issued to troops yet. Only some Soviet generals could have been armed with such a weapon in those days. Indeed, Osama always maintained (and he was always proud of this) that he took his “Kalashnikov” as a trophy from a killed Soviet general. In the former USSR it is widely believed that Osama’s iconic AKS-74U in reality belonged to Soviet Lt.-General Petr Shkidchenko (father of the current Minister of Defense of

⁵⁶⁸ http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Mohammed_bin_Awad_bin_Laden

Ukraine General Vladimir Shkidchenko) who was killed near Afghan city of Khost on January 19, 1982⁵⁶⁹. Actually, Petr Shkidchenko was the only Soviet general known to be armed with such a weapon who was killed in Afghanistan and whose personal weapon has never been recovered, so it perfectly matches the proud claims of Osama bin Laden.

This is just to illustrate that Osama was not a “seasoned asset” of the CIA who “helped the CIA to funnel the money” to support the Afghani resistance, as many conspiracy theorists try to portray him today. He was indeed a young man who was driven by an apparent idealistic sentiment and who was ready to participate in the actual war. He was merely a 22 years old college dropout – do you think the CIA would really appoint such a boy into the position of a “financial boss”?

Add here that Osama became known to the gullible Western spectator only in the late '90s – when he was puffed up by the Western media in the preparation of the then pending U.S. Embassies bombings. Prior to this, Osama was little known, while in the '80s nobody has ever heard about him. However, there are quite a few old photos exist that show Osama as a real combatant during the Afghan war. Considering that those days he was not a “public figure” yet, these could not be considered as “photo op”, but as rather genuine photographs.

There is a couple of interesting details in Osama's biography to which only a few people bothered to pay an attention. The first of them is this (quotation from the Wikipedia article on Osama bin Laden)⁵⁷⁰:

*“...The Arabic linguistic convention would be to refer to him as "Osama" or "Osama bin Laden", not "bin Laden" alone, as "bin Laden" is a patronymic, not a surname in the Western manner. According to bin Laden's son Omar bin Laden, the family's hereditary surname is "al-Qahtani" (Arabic: القحطاني, āl-Qaḥṭānī), but bin Laden's father Mohammed bin Laden never officially registered the [sur]name...”

I think, in order to make the reader properly appreciate the conduct of Osama's father, who “never officially registered” the so-called “hereditary surname”, I have to remind you (presuming that you have already read the chapter on surnames in the free part of my book titled “A Big Lyrical Digression”), that the refusal of having a surname, especially if it goes with the combination of a refusal to denounce a patronymic, is the clearest indication of the feudalist mentality. A man who goes by the name plus patronymic and refuses to trade the latter for the so-called “surname” is akin to a man who refuses to trade his unregistered sword and his unregistered rifle for the neck-tie and the license-plate on his car.

When it comes to Arabs, traditionally, of course, they only used the patronymics, usually, more than one – often three, referring to three ancestors up to the great-grand-father. For example, the full official name of Osama bin Laden is this: “Osama bin Mohammed bin Awad bin Laden” and none of it contains any “surname” or “family name”. In fact, it is only the Europeans, who got used to their own slavish surnames, who refer to Osama as “bin Laden”, perceiving his last patronymic in a sense of his supposed “surname”. As you might notice from several of quotations above, Osama bin Laden's last patronymic was often used by the Western scribblers alone. Moreover, it was often spelled as “Bin Laden” or “Ben Laden” – with the first capital “B”, as if it were indeed his “surname”. In reality, it is not his “surname”, of course, and therefore it is improper to refer to him as “Bin Laden”. As you probably noticed, when his name is spelled in full – i.e. “Osama bin Laden”, the word “bin” is always written with a low-case letter, because it is indeed not a name but merely a prefix that means “son of”. However, those Arabs that were colonized by the Italians, by the French, or by the British (and especially by the British), or those that came under the latter's rule as a result of the partitioning of the Ottoman Empire after the World War I, were of course, forced to accept the obligatory surnames. Moreover, those colonized Arabs, on the insistence of the Freemasons (i.e. on the grounds of the so-called “political correctness”), usually drop the prefixes “bin” or “ibn” that used to precede their former patronymics.

This is, for example, how this phenomenon of dropping “ibn” and “bin” – to indicate that the society is no longer “tribal” – is being presented in the Wikipedia article on the Arabic names⁵⁷¹:

“...Nasab

⁵⁶⁹ http://gazeta.aif.ru/online/aif/1102/24_01

⁵⁷⁰ bin Laden, Najwa; bin Laden, Omar; Sasson, Jean (2009). Growing up Bin Laden: Osama's Wife and Son Take Us Inside Their Secret World. New York: St. Martin's Press. p. 301. ISBN 978-0-312-56016-4.

⁵⁷¹ http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Arabic_name#Nasab

The nasab (Arabic: نسب) is a patronymic or series of patronymics. It indicates the person's heritage by the word ibn (colloquially bin) (Arabic: ابن), which means "son" (bint بنت for "daughter").

Ibn Khaldun (Arabic: ابن خلدون) means "son of Khaldun". Khaldun is the father's proper name or, in this particular case, the proper name of a remote ancestor.

Several nasab can follow in a chain to trace a person's ancestry backwards in time, as was important in the tribally based society of the ancient Arabs, both for purposes of identification and for socio-political interactions. Today, however, ibn or bint is no longer used."

In the above quotation, please, pay attention to the words "ancient", "tribally", and "no longer".

Let us compare, for example, the full name of Osama bin Laden and that of Ayman al-Zawahiri:

Ayman Mohammed Rabie al-Zawahiri versus

Osama bin Mohammed bin Awad bin Laden

In the "politically correct" full name of Ayman al-Zawahiri, although the names of his father and of his grand-father are still present, the "politically incorrect" prefix "bin" or "ibn" is no longer used – thus, effectively reducing the former patronymics to the so-called "second names". Moreover, a slavish surname is present.

In the "politically incorrect" full name of Osama, in contrast, there are three levels of patronymics⁵⁷², while the so-called "surname" is conspicuously missing. Another notable detail is that, Osama, as being a real vestige of feudalism, could be referred to, even formally, by his given name "Osama" alone. In contrast, al-Zawahiri, who was born an Egyptian ("Egyptian" in a Biblical sense) slave, could not be referred to by his given name "Ayman" alone. He must be called either by his full name or by his surname only.

Let me repeat the conduct of Osama's father that was described in the corresponding Wikipedia article:

"...According to bin Laden's son Omar bin Laden, the family's hereditary surname is "al-Qahtani" (Arabic: القحطاني, āl-Qaḥṭānī), but bin Laden's father Mohammed bin Laden never officially registered the [sur]name..."

So, now, as the reader becomes more or less educated when it comes to the patronymics and to the so-called "surnames"/"family names", it is easier to understand how politically incorrect was the conduct of Osama's father when he refused to register his supposed "hereditary surname" ("al-Qahtani") with the cop and resorted to the use the traditional Arab patronymics, moreover, used with the politically incorrect prefix "bin".

It is difficult for a modern European or an American (who indeed perceives the neck-tie and the license plate on his car as inseparable parts of his life) to understand how deep-rooted the feudal traditions can be in certain nations or in certain social groups, and how great could be their disdain with anything that constitutes a step away from the feudalism and from the associated "code of honor". But if you try to understand these recalcitrant folks, still, you could observe many interesting things. The point here is that Osama's father was an obvious feudalist. He was an apparently "ancient tribal Arab" – exactly the words used in the above quotation from the Wikipedia article on the Arab names. It is pretty self-evident.

The second interesting detail in Osama's biography (that not too many people appreciate) is this:

⁵⁷² The last patronymic of Osama, i.e. "bin Laden", might not refer to his actual great-grandfather, but to some more distant ancestor – the founder of the clan – similar to the second patronymic "Musavi" in Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's full name. In any case, "bin Laden" is not a "surname" and not even a tribal name – it is certainly a patronymic and therefore it cannot be used in a manner of a "surname". Thus, to refer to Osama by the patronymic "bin Laden" alone is as improper as to refer to Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini by his second patronymic "Musavi" alone. Although the last patronymic in this case serves as a generic name (for both Osama bin Laden and Ruhollah Musavi), this generic name cannot be used alone in a manner as if it were a "surname", because it is indeed not a surname.

Osama's mother Alia Ghanem was 10th wife of his father Mohammed. Do you understand what this actually means? Perhaps, you don't. Well, I will explain to you this more than "politically incorrect" fact. It means that Osama's father did not pay any respect to the so-called "Shariah laws", according to which the Freemasons allow a man to have not more than 4 (four) wives and only on a condition that each wife should be supplied with a separate household.

Even though a Wikipedia article on Osama's mother⁵⁷³ contains this "politically correct" statement: "...Her husband had at least 22 wives but divorced many, having only four wives at once, in accordance with Muslim law ...", I hope the reader understands that this statement is nothing but a little white lie, intended to white-wash the extreme political incorrectness of a certain real fact. The point was that Osama's father (who was almost coeval of Ayatollah Khomeini) in reality was some kind of a typical "pre-Islamic fool", a/k/a the typical follower of the Adat. Indeed, there were many followers of the Adat even in Saudi Arabia; especially among elder people and especially among tribal nomadic people, as well as among the traditional feudal aristocracy. Do not forget also, that in accordance with the so-called "Shariah laws", the Freemasons allow a man to marry more than one wife only on a strict condition that he buys an independent household for each of his wives (a practice that effectively deprives such a moron of a household of his own – in a situation of having four wives each happily living in her own household, the husband does not have a household that is actually "his"). I hope you are realistic enough to understand that feudalist Osama's father did not have "at least 22" separate households, one per each of his "at least 22" wives? And that he kept all his wives in a single household of his own – much in the same sense as any typical feudal sultan used to keep all his multiple wives in a single harem?

Still don't believe that the above Wikipedia's statement is merely a white-wash designed to cover-up some unpleasant "political incorrectness"? Well. Try to make simple mathematical calculations – how long is an active life of a typical man, and how often you must "divorce" your "at least 22" wives in order "to comply" with the so-called "Muslim law" by having not more than 4 wives at a time? Add here, that although it is quite easy to divorce in Islam from the technical point of view (all what you have to do is to kick your wife out of your house and shout "divorce!" three times), it is not so easy to explain your decision to the family of the divorced wife. Do not forget, that for her family an instance of the divorce is the greatest shame possible, because it implies that they brought up their daughter in a wrong manner – as a bad wife. Nothing could be worse than this for a respectable family of devoted Muslims. Another point that shall be known is that, in accordance with the teaching of Prophet Mahomet: "Of all the lawful acts the most detestable to Allah is divorce"⁵⁷⁴ and "Allah did not make anything lawful more abominable to Him than divorce"⁵⁷⁵.

Could you just imagine that Osama's father supposedly divorced a minimum of 18 (eighteen!) wives, putting to the greatest shame at minimum 18 innocent women, and their 18 families, in addition? And 18 (eighteen!) times committed the act that is considered in Islam as the "most detestable to God"? And all of this just in order to formally comply with the ridiculous so-called "Shariah"? And yet, knowing his vicious habit of divorcing innocent wives, more and more respectable families still wished to marry their daughters to him? This sounds "realistic", doesn't it? Add here that it is only in the so-called "Christian" world women can earn their own money (as you probably remember, the Freemasons got for "emancipated" women an opportunity to work in the '20s, and to earn salaries comparable to those of men – in the '50s). In traditional cultures there are no jobs for women; they could only be housewives, or, perhaps, could sell some petty stuff at a local bazaar. Therefore, it is only in marriage women feel (and actually are) protected. To divorce a wife (especially an elderly one who has no chance to marry again) means to effectively drive her into poverty – in the most cases, a divorced women has no other chance than to go back to the family of her elderly parents (if they are only still alive). That is why, although the divorce is indeed an easy thing in Islam, nobody abuses this "easiness" on practice. The divorce is something as rare and as reproachable in the Islamic environment as it used to be in the Christian environment a century ago. And now these spin-doctors want to convince their gullible reader that Osama's father allegedly divorced "at least 18" wives? Are they mad?

The point, which the spin-doctors try so hard to cover up, is that Osama's father did not care at all about any so-called "Shariah", and lived, instead, in accordance with some other Islamic laws. Do not even doubt it, because if Osama's father would have "at least" 22 wives in violation of the law, no one would wed his daughter to him. Some laws must have been certainly observed in this case. And these laws were by no means the so-called “Shariah” ones. That is why even though the Wikipedia article⁵⁷⁶ on Osama bin Laden says that “...Bin Laden was raised as a devout Wahhabi Muslim...” it shall be presumed that in the mind of young Osama, who was still “bin”, there must have been something like a typical feudal “code of honor” present (because “code of honor” is always associated with the Adat). It would be just impossible that his father, who paid the least respect to the modern “political correctness” and to the so-called “Shariah laws” (that were enforced by the Freemasons on the holy land of Hejaz relatively recently – after the partitioning of the Turkish Empire and the overthrow of the Caliph of the Righteous), would not pass some of his apparently tribal attitude to his sons. Just imagine that only 34 years has passed since the Caliph of the Righteous with his supposedly “un-Islamic” Kanun was overthrown by the Freemasons (it happened in 1924) and Osama’s birth in 1957. It was not too long, indeed, and it was apparently not enough to completely wipe out all vestiges of the so-called “pre-Islamic tribal traditions” among the Arabs in Hejaz and Yemen.

⁵⁷³ http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Hamida_al-Attas

⁵⁷⁴ Sunan of Abu-Dawood Hadith 2173

⁵⁷⁵ Sunan of Abu-Dawood Hadith 2172

Keeping this in mind, we could easily understand that despite the fact that Osama was “raised as a devout Wahhabi Muslim”, he was apparently not a complete slave of police like many modern Saudis. And this might easily explain his decision to join the fight of the Afghanis in the age of 22 – i.e. in the romantic idealistic age when it was too early to become the CIA’s mercenary.

It was not so, of course, with “Doctor Ayman al-Zawahiri” who originated from Egypt – the long-time British colony (the Western powers effectively controlled Egypt since the middle of the 19th century, from 1882 Egypt was turned into the de-facto “British protectorate”, and from 1914 this “protectorate” was made de-jure). As a visible distinction from Osama bin Laden (who had three patronymics and not even one surname), Doctor Ayman al-Zawahiri apparently had a surname.

First of all, as you remember from the above passage from the Wikipedia article on al-Zawahiri, he was the “theologian”. The point is that the “Islamic theologian” from Egypt, the former British colony, could only be educated in one particular branch of the “Islamic science”: an art of convincing slaves of the cop that they were allegedly “slaves of Allah”. I hope that by now you are educated enough in the ideology and in the history of Islam and are cynical enough to understand that no colonial administration (especially no British one) would allow teaching any other aspect of the “Islamic theology” except only the abovementioned art.

Thus, to imagine that Ayman al Zawahiri would suddenly be inflamed with “Muslim solidarity” and depart to fight for the “lawless” land of feudal Afghanistan, protecting it from the Soviet colonizers, is the same as to presume that Billy Graham⁵⁷⁷ might suddenly be inflamed with the “Christian solidarity”, grab his unlicensed AK-47, and depart to Kosovo – to join the Christian Serbs in their fight against the Muslim Albanians.

Let us read some more details on al-Zawahiri from the corresponding Wikipedia article:

“...Ayman al-Zawahiri was born in 1951 in Maadi, Cairo, the Kingdom of Egypt, to Mohammed Rabie al-Zawahiri and Umayma Azzam. The al-Zawahiri family was considered “upper middle class” while they lived in Maadi...

...Ayman al-Zawahiri's parents both came from prosperous families. Ayman's father, Mohammed Rabie al-Zawahiri, came from a large family of doctors and scholars. Mohammed Rabie became a surgeon, and a medical professor at Cairo University. Ayman's mother, Umayma Azzam, came from a wealthy, politically active clan. Ayman expressed that he has a deep affection for his mother. Her brother, Mahfouz Azzam, became a role model for Ayman as a teenager...”

“...Ayman al-Zawahiri was reportedly a studious youth. Ayman excelled in school, loved poetry, and “hated violent sports” – which he thought were “inhumane”. Al-Zawahiri graduated from Cairo University in 1974 with gayyid giddan. Following that he served three years as a surgeon in the ⁵⁷⁷ Billy Graham is a prominent preacher of the Gospel, who popped up in the mid-50s, during the times of the so-called “Christian revival” conditioned by the death of former seminarian Josef Stalin and by the demise of the Red ideology in Europe. He is the earliest, the most enterprising, and therefore the most commonly known representative of the modern galaxy of the “preachers of the Gospel” that decided to remind the secular Americans about God, but failed to remind them about the God’s Law that was abolished by the Freemasons as a result of their victory in the American Civil War.

Egyptian Army after which he established a clinic near his parents. In 1978, he also earned a master's degree in surgery ...

So, as you can see, unlike Osama, who apparently came from a certain “politically incorrect” family (judging, at least, by the fact that his father used to have “at least 22” wives in a blatant violation of the so-called “Shariah”, and refused to register the “surname”, in addition), Ayman al-Zawahiri came from an obedient, “politically active”, well to do family that no longer used the politically incorrect prefixes “bin” or “ibn” in the politically incorrect patronymics, but used the politically correct surname, instead. Moreover, his bourgeois “upper middle-class” family was a family of “doctors and scholars” and by no means a family of “feudalist tribal chieftains, gun runners, and opium smugglers”.

What I mean is that al-Zawahiri did not come from a family with any kind of the “politically incorrect”, Mafia-like inclinations. His education and career apparently corresponded to the milieu. He was “a studious youth” rather than a member of a youth street gang. He “excelled in [a colonial type of obligatory slaves] school” rather than excelling in studying of works of Chairman Mao Tse-tung or of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini. Although he “hated violent sports” perceiving them as “inhumane” (perhaps, they wanted to imply a typical feudalist, aristocratic attitude to cattle sports that involve hitting a man on his face, such as boxing or karate), this hatred did not prompt him to obtain a dagger and an unlicensed revolver as a humane compensation for his noble lack of abilities in the cattle martial arts. He even served in the ungodly Egyptian army (although “as a surgeon”, but you know, any service to an ungodly establishment counts when it comes to the Final Reckoning and the Islamic scholars know this boring truism very well). Eventually, he established a medical practice “near his parents”, i.e. right on the land of the slave-owning Egypt (this time in both – geographical and ideological senses) instead of establishing it on some liberated territory in some remote jungle – like did Ernesto Che Guevara, who was also a medical doctor.

Do you really believe that a man of such an upbringing, education, and behavior would suddenly turn “militant” and his state of “militancy” would lead him to machine-gunning and hacking to death foreign tourists in Egypt and using mini-nukes to indiscriminately incinerate his Muslim Arab brethren in several “car”-bombings of residential areas in Saudi Arabia? Well... Some security officials and even some judges seem to believe so...

A very characteristic action organized by this “militant” doctor in 1997 is described in the Wikipedia article on al-Zawahiri. Please, pay attention to the fact that prior to this action, he made sure to send a corresponding “angry” letter to the mass-media, moreover, located in London. This is so strikingly reminiscent of faxing the incriminating fatwa by Mohammed Atef to Osama bin Laden... Actually, these letters, faxes, and “fatwas” betray the modus operandi of the skills:

“...While there Zawahiri learned of a “Nonviolence Initiative” being organized in Egypt to end the terror campaign that had killed hundreds and resulting government crackdown that had imprisoned thousands. Zawahiri angrily opposed this “surrender” in letters to the London newspaper Al-Sharq al-Awsat. Together with members of al-Gama’a al-Islamiyya, he helped organize a massive attack on tourists at the Temple of Hatshepsut to sabotage the initiative by provoking the government into repression.

Main article: November 1997 Luxor massacre [a quotation from the main article:

“...The six assailants were armed with automatic firearms and knives, and disguised as members of the security forces. They descended on the Temple of Hatshepsut at around 08:45. They dispatched two armed guards at the site. With the tourists trapped inside the temple, the killing went on systematically for 45 minutes, during which many bodies, especially of women, were mutilated with machetes. They used both guns and butcher knives. A note praising Islam was found inside one disemboweled body. The dead included a five-year-old British child and four Japanese couples on their honeymoons.

The attackers then hijacked a bus, but ran into a checkpoint of armed Egyptian tourist police and military forces. One of the terrorists was wounded in the shootout and the rest fled into the hills where their bodies were found in a cave, apparently having committed suicide together.

Casualties

Four Egyptians were killed in the massacre, including three police officers and a tour guide. Of the 58 foreign tourists killed, 36 were Swiss, ten were Japanese, six were from the United Kingdom, four from Germany, and two were Colombians. Six gunmen perpetrated the massacre were also killed...”]

*The attack by six men dressed in police uniforms, succeeded in machine-gunning and hacking to death 58 foreign tourists and four Egyptians, including "a five-year-old British child and four Japanese couples on their honeymoons", and devastated the Egyptian tourist industry for a number of years. Nonetheless the Egyptian reaction was not what Zawahiri had hoped for. The attack so stunned and angered Egyptian society that Islamists denied responsibility. Zawahiri blamed the police for the killing, but also held the tourists responsible for their own deaths for coming to Egypt,

[Quoted message of al-Zawahiri to the foreigners:] "The people of Egypt consider the presence of these foreign tourists to be aggression against Muslims and Egypt, ... The young men are saying that this is our country and not a place for frolicking and enjoyment, especially for you."

The massacre was so unpopular that no terror attacks occurred in Egypt for several years thereafter. Zawahiri was sentenced to death in absentia in 1999 by an Egyptian military tribunal...."

As you can see, the attack was indeed well-organized – the supposed “perpetrators” were, of course, conveniently “suicided”. It shall be presumed that in reality the perpetrators simply killed 6 more men, in addition to the 62 massacred inside the temple, and faked their “suicide”. I mean that the 6 “suicided” folks dressed in the police uniforms, most probably, had nothing to do with the actual massacre. Though, it does not mean, of course, that they were not accomplices of the perpetrators – most probably, they were “useful idiots” ostensibly employed to perform some other action and therefore dressed in the police uniforms.

Another characteristic feature of this massacre was that no names of the perpetrators were made public – meaning that none of the six corpses of the “suicided” assailants was positively identified. Presumably, they were brought into Egypt from some distant land...

Try to understand also, that if some really militant folks were planning such an exemplary massacre for a reason of promoting their religious cause, moreover, with a view of possibly committing a suicide as a result of their action, they would never elect the foreign tourists to be their victims. This will be a very silly choice. Most certainly, their action would be directed against the main oppressor – the cop, that well-known infidel collaborator of the former colonialism and the secular watchdog of the current imperialism. The mere fact that instead of targeting the domestic cops, the perpetrators preferred to target the foreign tourists is the most convincing proof that the very cops (or the latter’s bosses from behind the infamous “curtain”) stood behind this despicable act of the so-called “terror”.

Another intriguing detail in the main Wikipedia article on the Luxor massacre⁵⁷⁸ is the statement: “Sheikh Omar Abdel-Rahman blamed Israelis for the killings...”

Make sure to understand also that the so-called “Islamists” from “al-Gama'a al-Islamiyya” denied responsibility for this outrageous attack not because it “stunned and angered the Egyptian society” [despite the initial hopes of kind Doctor al-Zawahiri who used to love poetry] as suggested in the Wikipedia article. They denied responsibility merely because they did not commit that atrocity in reality. It was committed by the so-called “good guys” alone, without any “Islamist” intermediaries employed as “useful idiots” (except, perhaps, only those 6 that were “suicided”). The only link of the so-called “Islamists” to this unprecedented massacre of foreign tourists was the “angry” letter of Doctor al-Zawahiri to the London-based Arabic newspaper, plus his “thematic” statements in its immediate aftermath, and the “note praising Islam” that was found inside one disemboweled body. Former studious youth Ayman al-Zawahiri, who used to hate violent sports, indeed appears to have outdone himself in this particular case...

Let us see what other information the Wikipedia article provides to its gullible reader in regard to this supposed “Warrior of Islam”:

“...Ayman al-Zawahiri has also shown a radical understanding of Islamic theology and Islamic history [citation needed]. He speaks Arabic, English, and French...”

Oh, really? He also, allegedly (even the Wikipedia article places the remark “[citation needed]”) exhibited a “radical understanding” of the Islamic theology and even that of the Islamic history? How would we interpret it? Perhaps, young Ayman studied history diligently enough to recollect the famous 10th Turkish

⁵⁷⁸ http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/November_1997_Luxor_massacre

Sultan Suleiman the Magnificent, also known as Suleiman Kanuni? Who, besides bearing personal “politically incorrect” name “Suleiman” (Solomon) was also named “Kanuni” because of the Jewish code of laws he vigorously enforced in the Muslim Ottoman Empire? Of which Ayman’s native Egypt used to be a part? Or, perhaps, young Ayman studied history deep enough to recollect and to “radically understand” that the abovementioned “Kanun” was abolished by the Freemasons in the territory of the former Ottoman Empire only in the 20th century? Or he “radically understood” that the so-called “Shariah laws” were invented by the British colonizers as a substitute for the feudal Law of Prophet Musa, otherwise known as the “Adat”? Or did he study the history diligently enough to learn that the so-called “surnames” were enforced on the secular Egyptian slaves by the Freemasons, as a replacement of the “politically incorrect” patronymics, which used to be a distinctive feudal feature among the pious slaves of Allah?

Of course, it was not so. His so-called “radical understanding” of the “Islamic theology” and that of the “Islamic history” was merely a concept that a slave of the cop, in addition to being prohibited from carrying unlicensed firearms and from driving unlicensed vehicles, had to be prohibited from drinking wine and beer and from keeping more than one wife in a single household. While his wife, in addition to covering her hairs with a scarf while in public, had to hide her entire face behind a black mask.

“...By the age of 14, al-Zawahiri had joined the Muslim Brotherhood. The following year the Egyptian government executed Qutb for conspiracy, and al-Zawahiri, along with four other secondary school students, helped form an “underground cell devoted to overthrowing the government and establishing an Islamist state.” It was at this early age that al-Zawahiri developed a mission in life, “to put Qutb’s vision into action.” His cell eventually merged with others to form al-Jihad or Egyptian Islamic Jihad. ...”

So, the spin-doctors claim that al-Zawahiri was so militant that even by the age of 14 he allegedly joined an organization that conspired to overthrow the Egyptian government, which, in turn, was concerned enough to even put to death some of the conspirators. And the spin-doctors seriously expect us believe this? Especially taking into consideration the personal qualities and inclinations of young Ayman described above? Well... they must be not of so high opinion of our I.Q., then...

However, what is important in the above excerpt is this: the so-called “Egyptian Islamic Jihad” (the exceptionally idiotic name, which sounds for a Muslim about as idiotic as an organization’s name “Imperialistic Capitalism” concocted by North Korean secret services would sound for an American) seems to have an alternative name that sounds merely as “al-Jihad”.

Hmm... This is quite intriguing information, indeed. Just to remind you, that while the combination of words “Islamic Jihad” sounds very silly for the Muslims because “Jihad” cannot be anything but “Islamic”, it is not so silly when it comes to the perception of the Western security officials. The point is that those security officials do not know anything at all about the Islamic terminology or logic associated with it, but know very well that the “original” so-called “Islamic Jihad” used to take responsibility for all nuclear “car”-bombings in Beirut in the ‘80s in anonymous telephone calls. Therefore, naming an organization “Islamic Jihad” (whether in Lebanon, or in Egypt, or elsewhere) would immediately alert the security officials around the world, since these security officials would perceive such an organization as specializing in particularly nuclear bombings. Thus, any terror organization named “Islamic Jihad” is a nuclear terror organization “by definition”. Of course, it is not so with an organization that is simply named “al-Jihad” without any moronic “Islamic” addition.

Since the above piece of information about the double-naming is indeed intriguing, let us verify our suspicions by reviewing a corresponding Wikipedia article on the so-called “Egyptian Islamic Jihad”⁵⁷⁹. I quote:

“...The Egyptian Islamic Jihad (Arabic: الجهاد الإسلامي المصري) (EIJ), also known as the Salafi Jihad movement, formerly called simply Islamic Jihad (الجهاد الإسلامي) and Liberation Army for Holy Sites originally referred to as “al-Jihad”, and then “the Jihad Group”, or “the Jihad Organization”, is an Egyptian Islamist group active since the late 1970s. It is under worldwide embargo by the United Nations as an affiliate of al-Qaeda. It is also banned by several individual governments including that of the Russian Federation. Between 1991 and 2011, it has been led by Ayman al-Zawahiri. ...”

I think a discerning reader got the point even from this little introductory part alone. The important is that:

⁵⁷⁹ http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Egyptian_Islamic_Jihad

1) The so-called “Egyptian Islamic Jihad” was not originally named as such. Originally, it was only “al-Jihad” and even when it changed its name twice in the later times, neither of its two new names included an imbecile combination of the words “Islamic” and “Jihad” yet.

2) This organization from the year 1991 (I hope you remember from our previous considerations that the year 1991 was a turning point in the new history of the so-called “nuclear terror”) was led by Ayman al-Zawahiri.

3) Since the Americans occupied Saudi Arabia only in 1990 (after the production with Saddam’s occupation of Kuwait), and considering that this organization was formerly known as “Liberation Army for Holy Sites” and “simply Islamic Jihad” (not “Egyptian” yet), it shall be presumed, that the former al-Jihad’s elevation to the new, by definition “nuclear” status occurred particularly in the year of 1991. This was evidently connected to the leadership of Ayman al-Zawahiri and to the fact of the American military occupation of Saudi Arabia.

4) As such (because of the apparent connection of the so-called “Islamic Jihad” to the cause of the liberating of the Holy Sites of Hedjaz from the occupation by the ungodly U.S. army) the aims of the so-called “Islamic Jihad” coincided with the aims of Osama bin Laden. As you probably remember, Osama came back from Afghanistan in 1990. Soon, he became one of the most irreconcilable opponents of the American occupation of Saudi Arabia. As a result, Osama was banished from Saudi Arabia in 1992 and even his Saudi citizenship was revoked by the Saudi authorities.

5) Officially, it was recognized that the so-called “Egyptian Islamic Jihad” was allegedly “an affiliate” of the so-called “Al-Qaeda”.

All of the above, in short, could be interpreted / summarized as follows:

The so-called “good guys”, who suddenly lost all their real and imaginary enemies at once in 1989, promoted their shill, Ayman al-Zawahiri, the supposed “radical Islamist theologian”, although a medical doctor by education, to the leadership of the former “al-Jihad” (that existed since the ‘70s). He became the head of this organization by the year of 1991 (to ensure his promotion, the Freemasons imprisoned a previous head of this organization for life). Upon becoming the leader of the former “al-Jihad”, Ayman al-Zawahiri, acting on the instruction of his handlers, re-named the organization first into the “Liberation Army for Holy Sites”, and later – into the “Islamic Jihad”, and again – into the “Egyptian Islamic Jihad”. In the course of time (when it was later decided to stake on the so-called “Al-Qaeda” then growing cucumbers in Sudan), acting on the instruction of his handlers, al-Zawahiri began to develop “affiliation” with the so-called “Al-Qaeda” in order to implicate the latter in the “nuclear terror”. Finally, to attract public attention to his newly renamed organization (that was about to “car”-bomb the U.S. Embassies in Kenya and Tanzania on the anniversary of the Hiroshima bombing), al-Zawahiri organized the unprecedented Luxor massacre, machine-gunning and hacking to death 58 foreign tourists and 4 Egyptians, and “suiciding” the 6 supposed assailants. It was not al-Zawahiri personally, of course, who organized the massacre, but he was puffed up as the supposed leader of the perpetrators and he himself did his real best to maintain this notion. I think all of it is pretty obvious.

Let us continue reading the Wikipedia article on Ayman al-Zawahiri. It is interesting to read about his career, as well as about his supposed “Afghan adventure”, since it is widely believed that al-Zawahiri was also a volunteer of the mujahedeen movement in Afghanistan during its occupation by ungodly Soviet troops in the ‘80s.

“...Career

Ayman al-Zawahiri worked in the medical field as a surgeon. In 1985, al-Zawahiri went to Saudi Arabia on Hajj and stayed to practice medicine in Jeddah for a year as a reportedly qualified surgeon; when his organization merged with bin Laden's al-Qaeda, he became bin Laden's personal advisor and physician. He had first met bin Laden in Jeddah in 1986...”

Hmm... Interesting. First of all, despite common misconception (many people believe that al-Zawahiri first met Osama bin Laden in Afghanistan or in nearby Pakistan during the Afghan war), al-Zawahiri met Osama for the first time in peaceful Jeddah in 1986.

However, there is a much more important detail that, perhaps, not too many people pay attention to. For the “radical Islamist theologian” Ayman al-Zawahiri, who was born in 1951, and who, as the young “Islamist”, supposedly worked on overthrowing the ungodly government of Egypt since he was 14, it took “only” some 15-18 years (considering that he was already 34 in 1985) to find time and assemble enough courage to venture into the obligatory Hajj to the distant land of Hedjaz (despite the fact that Saudi Arabia was as close as just across the narrow Red Sea from his home Egypt). This one is probably the most illustrative detail that effectively betrays a typical Freemasonic shill in this “Islamic theologian”.

Let us read about his actual Afghani adventures – since many people believed that al-Zawahiri was allegedly a militant mujahedeen who bravely fought the ungodly Soviet Army in Afghanistan. The Wikipedia article continues about his career:

“...Red Crescent

In 1981, Ayman al-Zawahiri also traveled to Peshawar, Pakistan, where he worked in a Red Crescent hospital treating wounded refugees. There he became friends with the Canadian Ahmed Khadr, and the two shared a number of conversations about the need for Islamic government and the needs of the Afghan people.

In 1993, al-Zawahiri traveled to the United States, where he addressed several California mosques under his Abdul Mu'iz pseudonym, relying on his credentials from the Kuwaiti Red Crescent to raise money for Afghan children who had been injured by Soviet land mines – he only raised $2000...”

As you see, the stories about the brave exploits of al-Zawahiri in Afghanistan were greatly exaggerated – he was merely a doctor who treated refugees in Pakistan. Moreover, he was not an illegal field doctor associated with the actual illegal combatants. He worked under the aegis of the Red Crescent (that is a Mahometan equivalent of the Red Cross), in a perfectly legal manner. And even when it comes to his travel to the United States (ostensibly to raise money for children “injured by the Soviet land mines”, but most probably to attend some Freemasonic courses on the nuclear terror project), this “radical Islamic theologian” raised in several California mosques the ridiculous sum of 2,000 USD – hardly enough to cover the cost of his ticket to the United States and back.

However, the most important observation could be made from comparing of these two important milestones in Ayman al-Zawahiri’s biography: in 1981 he travelled to Peshawar, Pakistan, as the perfectly legal medical doctor, while in 1985 he decided, at last, to commit the obligatory Hajj, and after that decided to pursue his medical practice in Jeddah till 1986 (where he met Osama bin Laden).

In my humble opinion, it could be interpreted as follows. Till 1981 (or even till some later time) Ayman al-Zawahiri was a typical secular Egyptian citizen that had nothing to do with any “Islam” whatsoever, and neither he had anything to do with the Freemasonic sect or with the CIA. However, when he arrived to Peshawar to work as a doctor for the Red Crescent, he was apparently noticed by some Freemasonic operatives (or by the CIA operatives, which is basically the same thing). These Freemasonic/CIA operatives were busy at this moment re-educating Afghani children in Pakistani refugee camps from the hated feudal Adat to the “properly Islamic” so-called “Shariah”. As you probably remember, these so re-educated Islamic students, a/k/a “Talibs”, would form the infamous Taliban movement that, with the support of the Pakistani ISI and the American CIA, would conquer Afghanistan in 1996, abolish the Adat, and install the extremely annoying regime there that was based on the so-called “Shariah law”.

The point is that the Freemasons do not have enough of highly-reliable, and in the same time educated Arab cadres at their disposal. They have in their ranks a lot of reliable Europeans and quite a few reliable secular Jews/Israelis. However, the Freemasons severely lack reliable Arabs. They lack them to such an extent, that often they resort to the use of Arab-speaking Jews from the Mossad, capable of passing for Arabs, because they cannot find reliable original Arabs. That is why rare reliable educated Arab cadres such as Saddam Hussein, Hafez Assad, or Muammar Kaddafi are so highly valued in the Freemasonic sect.

Most probably, during the abovementioned “number of conversations”, the Freemasons noticed the young Egyptian doctor and appreciated his education, his diligence (the diligence is a highly valuable feature for their operative, because the “non-existent” Freemasons suppose never do mistakes that might betray their existence), and his potential usability to the sect. That is why al-Zawahiri was enlisted, brainwashed (the Freemasons also brainwash their cadres), educated in the Freemasonic secrecy and in their operational art, trained in the acting technique (the thing obligatory for any and every Freemasonic operative), and so – converted to the “radical Islamic theologian”. His supposedly “radical Islamist biography” was concocted in a backdated manner (the Freemasons are masters of such an art), while to formally match an image of the “Islamic scholar”, al-Zawahiri, at last, was sent to commit the obligatory Hajj in 1985 (at the age of 34, just to remind you, while being “radical Islamist” supposedly from the age of 14, the latest). Of course, to develop missing contacts among Islamic scholars and to increase his “Islamic” practice, al-Zawahiri was told to remain in Saudi Arabia for some time. That is exactly why the newly concocted “Hajji” practiced medicine in Jeddah at least a year after committing his belated Hajj.

I could be mistaken, of course, but, being cynical and knowing the Freemasonic methods quite well, I presume that I am not mistaken in the above presumption.

The Wikipedia article on al-Zawahiri continues:

“...Marriage

Ayman Al-Zawahiri has been married at least four times. His wives include Azza Ahmed Nowari and Umaima Hassan.

In 1978, Ayman Al-Zawahiri married Azza Ahmed Nowari, a student of Cairo University that was studying philosophy. Their wedding, at the Continental Hotel in Opera Square, was very conservative, with separate areas for both men and women, and no music, photographs, or light-hearted humour. Many years later, when the United States attacked Afghanistan following the September 11 attacks in 2001, Azza had no idea that Zawahiri had supposedly been a jihadi emir (commander) for the last decade....”

Here we could make quite a few interesting observations. The fact that al-Zawahiri’s wife Azza had no idea that her husband was the “jihadi emir” for the last decade until 9/11, is the least important of these observations. Much more important is that at the age of 26, “radical Islamic theologian” Ayman al-Zawahiri married not an obedient daughter of some devout Muslim from Mecca and not even some pious daughter of another conservative Islamic scholar from Egypt. Instead, he married a pretty secular student of the secular Cairo University, who studied there the ungodly discipline – philosophy.

You have to know, that the seemingly “inoffensive” scientific discipline named “philosophy” (here we are talking about the modern Western philosophy, of course) is nothing else than the corner stone in the fundament of the rest of the Freemasonic pseudo-sciences that are designed to cement the secularism of their slave-owning society. Not too many people seem to realize today that it is actually the very Western philosophy, with its notorious three-dimensional “metaphysics”, with its alleged “endlessness and eternity of the Universe”, and with its concept of the alleged “materiality of the consciousness”, that effectively prevents the majority of “educated” Europeans affected by it, from sincerely believing in God – the most “advanced” of them would rather believe in some alleged “extraterrestrials” from within the Universe, but not in the Creator of the Universe Whose abode is outside of it. On the other hand, it is again the very Western philosophy, with its so-called “ethics” and “aesthetics”, along with its so-called “morality”, that serves as the basis for the infamous “political correctness” that, in turn, effectively prevents the educated slaves of the Freemasons from any defiant thinking.

Do not forget, that in general, philosophy is the mother of all sciences, the political foundation of the society, and the basis of the concepts of good and evil as perceived by the society. Therefore, if philosophy is misleading, the entire society will be misled.

In the feudal society there was only one book on philosophy – the Holy Scripture. All alternative “philosophers” were burned at the stake as the worst kind of heretics who dared to encroach upon the very foundations of the Faith. All works of those ancient Greek philosophers (who were either pagans or atheists, in case you forgot it) were heavily suppressed, as being inconsistent with the Christian, Islamic, and Judaic doctrines.

When the Freemasons converted the former feudal society to the slave-owning one, abolishing the Law of God and making “separation of church and state”, they could not afford keeping the religious philosophy as a fundament of the new “secular” sciences, of course. That is exactly why they instilled the new atheistic philosophy that is known today as “modern Western philosophy”. This “philosophy” is obligatory for any and every university course, and, particularly, for anyone who wishes to have a postgraduate academic degree. Do you know that irrespective of your actual specialization (you can be a chemist, a physician, a medic, an astronomer, a biologist, a geologist, a jurist, a mathematician, etc.) before you become a “Doctor of science” you have to pass a preliminary stage that in the West is known as a “Doctor of Philosophy” a/k/a “Ph.D.”? In modern Russia and in the latter days of the USSR, for example, in order to have a postgraduate degree⁵⁸⁰, the post-graduate student must learn only three subjects – his specialty, a foreign language, and philosophy. As you can see, philosophy (that seemingly had nothing to do with his actual specialty) was obligatory too, being one of only three subjects. Moreover, some essential parts of this “philosophy” are integrated into some other disciplines, and, in disguise of the latter, are being taught to younger slaves even in obligatory secondary schools.

In fact, so-called “modern Western philosophy” is nothing else than the ideological vaccine the so-called “good guys” use to prevent any revolutionary inclinations in the educated strata of the society – primarily, in those folks with post-graduate degrees, of course, but also in those holding ordinary university diplomas. When it comes to the lower strata of the society, the corresponding “ideological vaccine” is the well-known anti-Semitism, which effectively precludes the bipeds from any rebellious thinking (I hope you realize, that if you are an anti-Semite, you have no chance to duly appreciate the contradiction between the “Jewish” First Commandment and the Egyptian pyramid on one US dollar-bill). However, the anti-Semitism could only work with the cattle or with the least educated folks; it would apparently fail in case of the educated people, especially those with doctoral degrees. Therefore, the so-called “philosophy” is the replacement of the anti-Semitism for the educated slaves.

Thus, modern Western philosophy is an essential tool that allows the Freemasons to keep an educated man in the Egyptian slavery. It is a bit brutal to say so, but this is the naked truth. No Doctor of Jurisprudence (who was, of course, a “philosopher” too) was able to prevent the gradual enslavement of the secular citizens by the cop during the last 100 years, for example. No Doctor of Physics (who was a “philosopher” in any case) stood up and questioned the 9/11 production on the grounds that aluminum could not penetrate steel. No Doctor of History and no Doctor of Sociology (who combined jobs of “philosophers” too) revealed to their gullible students that the so-called “Shariah code” was invented and instilled on colonized Muslims by a special ideological department of the British military intelligence and therefore it had nothing to do with Islam whose code was the Adat of Prophet Musa that used to condition feudalism. You can continue the list. In fact, the “philosopher” would be the first to keep his mouth shut, because he was taught the so-called “ethics” as the philosophical basis for the infamous “political correctness”. Indeed, while philosophy supposes to be the “mother of all sciences”, the current “philosophy” is the “mother of all lies”.

Here is a quotation from the Wikipedia article on “philosophy” that deals with the transitional period between the medieval philosophy and the so-called “renaissance” (or the so-called “re-discovery” by the Freemasons of the ancient pagan philosophies formerly suppressed by the Christians and by the Muslims)⁵⁸¹:

“...Medieval philosophy is the philosophy of Western Europe and the Middle East during the Middle Ages, roughly extending from the Christianization of the Roman Empire until the Renaissance. Medieval philosophy is defined partly by the rediscovery and further development of classical Greek and Hellenistic philosophy, and partly by the need to address theological problems and to integrate the then widespread sacred doctrines of Abrahamic religion (Islam, Judaism, and Christianity) with secular learning...”

All you have to do in the above quotation is to strike out the mistakenly used word “Medieval” in the second sentence and change it to “Modern”. As you can see, when the Freemasons were undermining feudalism in Europe, they “rediscovered” so-called “classical Greek and Hellenistic” philosophies developed by the heathen of the pre-Christian era and “further developed” their paganish ideas. They called this “Renaissance”, i.e. “rebirth” or “revival”. Guess “revival” of what? Of the former antique paganism destroyed by the Christians in Europe, of course. Many people seem not to remember what thing was actually “revived” as a result of the so-called “Renaissance”...

The problem the Freemasons were then facing – as the Wikipedia quotation honestly informs us – was to reconcile the “then widespread sacred doctrines of Islam, Judaism and Christianity” (most importantly, the Commandment Number One prohibiting from coming back to the slave-owning Egypt by denouncing the God) with the so-called “secular learning”. Do not forget that “secular” means “ungodly”, at least, in the ⁵⁸⁰ In the former USSR and in some other former socialist countries, the first post-graduate degree was not called “Ph.D”, like in the West, but a “Candidate of Sciences” – a degree preceding the “Doctor of Sciences”. Though, it did not change anything in principle – one of the main subjects to be learned was Western philosophy anyway.

⁵⁸¹ <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Philosophy> language of the Barbarians. Thus, the so-called “philosophy” is the basic “scientific” tool the Freemasons use to reconcile the potential believer in God with the Egyptian slavery.

Coming back to our Doctor Ayman al-Zawahiri, the “radical Islamic theologian” who married Azza Ahmed Nowari, a student of Cairo University that was studying philosophy.

Try to understand that it is only for a typical “secular citizen” this Freemasonic “philosophy” looks like a kind of “scientific discipline” (despite its glaring inconsistency with logic and even with fundamental scientific discoveries of the recent decades⁵⁸² and despite its being blatantly contradictory to the Holy Scripture). For a real believer, lest the Islamic scholar, the Western philosophy is the blasphemy for which only a couple of centuries ago heretics used to be burned at stake. So, to believe that a “radical Islamic theologian” would marry such a philosopher-girl is about the same as to believe that he would marry a male homosexual.

Nonetheless, our “radical Islamic theologian” Ayman al-Zawahiri, who supposedly fought the ungodly secular government of Egypt since the age of 14, at the age of 26 decided to marry a girl specializing in the worst profanity – secular Western philosophy... This looks “logical”, doesn’t it?

Another interesting detail is that his “conservative” wedding with the supposedly “separate areas for men and women” and allegedly “without even photographs and music” took place in such a vestige of the decadent Western culture as the “Continental Hotel in Opera Square”. Not a bad choice for the “radical Islamic theologian”, was it? Finally, try to remember, that despite being so “pious” at the age of 26 that even conducting his wedding in such a “conservative” manner, this “radical Islamic theologian” did not ⁵⁸² It shall be known that in the 20th century, there were quite a few fundamental scientific discoveries made that were fully compliant with the religious doctrine and totally inconsistent with secular Western philosophy. The former notion of the alleged “evolution of species” was effectively disproved by the discovery of DNA that was clearly a mathematical program written by “some rational being”; by no means such a mathematical program could “evolve” or “write itself”. The former “philosophic” Freemasonic notion of the alleged “endlessness and eternity of the Universe” was effectively disproved with the development of the new science – physical cosmology (http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Physical_cosmology) and with fundamental discoveries of physicists, astronomers and mathematicians. All of them clearly prove that our Universe constitutes a kind of closed space of a special form that has a corresponding curvature of space, and that our Universe currently expands with a certain definite speed. This, in turn, allows calculating the finite age of the Universe and to conclude that initially, the actual Universe and the entire matter it consists of were compressed in a single spot and that “someone” from outside of the Universe caused the initial expansion of this “spot”. In fact, this scientific discovery perfectly matches what was stated in the Quran (21:30) 1,400 year ago: our entire Universe indeed used to be a spot that had no space and no time, and it was the God Creator Who caused the Universe to expand from that spot, so creating the time and the space. The alleged three-dimensional “metaphysics”, which the Freemasons managed to instill on the secular society of their slaves, used to be in a blatant contradiction with the religious concept stating that there were 7 worlds (“heavens”), of which ours, the three-dimensional one, was the lowest, and the seventh, the 10-dimensional one, was the highest. This was difficult to comprehend until scientists, specialists in particle physics, in their attempt to reconcile quantum mechanics and general relativity arrived to a so-called “string theory” http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/String_theory. The problem with it (which the Freemasons made sure to suppress in the most heavily manner due to its extreme political incorrectness) was that the strings actually existed in 10 dimensions (exactly 10; not 9, not 11, not 8, not 12, but precisely 10). This allowed constructing not only 3-dimensional matter like ours, but any higher-dimensional matter up to 10-dimensional one inclusive, which supposed to be the very matter of the “seventh heaven”. This delivered the second mortal blow to the Freemasonic “philosophy” (the first one being the theory of the Big Bang http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Big_Bang that popped up after the 1927 and 1929 discoveries of the Belgian Catholic priest Georges Lemaître and the U.S. astronomer Edwin Hubble). Even the disputed notion that God created swine by transforming some rebellious tribes of men into pigs has been finally confirmed by the modern science. Geneticists effectively proved that a pig differs from a man only by its outward appearance – the major parts of DNAs and the corresponding internal body structures are identical to such an extent that even pig’s blood could be use for transfusion and pig’s internal organs – for transplantations into human beings. The former Freemasonic denial of spirits was effectively corrected by scientific experiments that not only established that a spirit has physical properties, including some weight, but even that the mammals’ and birds’ bodies owe the phenomenon of their constant high temperature (moreover, independent of how warm is dress/fur, how nutritious is food, and what is the temperature outside) to the spirit inside the body that is known to be created by God from “flames of scorching fire”. Actually, any and every fundamental postulate of the secular Western “philosophy” was effectively disproved by recent scientific discoveries. Nonetheless, the Freemasons stubbornly keep their “philosophy” intact and continue lecturing it to gullible students as if nothing new was recently discovered by science.

bother to make an obligatory pilgrimage (a/k/a the "Hajj") to the nearby Islamic Holy Sites until he became 34 years old.

However, the most illustrative (and the most impressive for a simpleton, I presume) is this part of the Wikipedia article on al-Zawahiri:

"...Death of Family

Ayman al-Zawahiri's wife and two of his six children were killed in an air strike on Afghanistan by US forces in late 2001, following the September 11 attacks on the USA: Azza, Mohammed and Aisha. After an American bombardment of a building at Gardez, Azza was pinned under debris of a guesthouse roof. Concerned for her modesty, she "refused to be excavated" because "men would see her face". Her four-year-old daughter Aisha had not been hurt by the bombing but died from exposure in the cold night while Afghan rescuers tried to save his wife, Azza.

Zawahiri later wrote of his anger with the public reaction. "This meant that they wanted my daughter, who was two at the time, and the daughters of other colleagues, to be orphans. Who cried or cared for our daughters?"..." [Here al-Zawahiri apparently referred to the published reactions of Euro-American simpletons who swallowed the above story and apparently expressed opinions that roughly sounded like this: "if this Islamist bitch was so silly that she even refused the rescue workers to see her face she certainly deserved her death".]

As you can understand from the above story, the evil U.S. forces attempted to kill al-Zawahiri's wife, Azza, along with his children, by bombing the guest-house, but did not succeed in killing them right away. His pious wife (educated in ungodly modern Western philosophy, just to remind you) preferred to die, nonetheless, because she was so concerned for her modesty that she preferred honorable death to the shame of showing her face to the impious Afghani rescue workers.

We could only guess if Zawahiri's "late" wife was as pious as hiding her face from her impious classmates while studying blasphemous Freemasonic "philosophy" in the secular Cairo University back in the mid-70s...

I think, this should be enough to get the point in regard to the personality of "Doctor Abu Moez" a/k/a "Ayman al-Zawahiri". He was a typical shill, but he was concocted quite rudely, so that his handlers did not even bother to elaborate his legend to sound a bit plausible... It seems that the so-called "good guys" are not of too high opinion of the I.Q. of the modern Arabs...

However, in order to complete the picture, let us review some materials showing the relationship between Osama bin Laden and Ayman al-Zawahiri.

There is a very interesting CNN article intriguingly named "Egyptian doctor emerges as terror mastermind", apparently a part of some former CNN broadcast. It is published here: <http://edition.cnn.com/CNN/Programs/people/shows/zawahiri/profile.html>

Let us review some quotes from this material (words in the bold font are, as usual, highlighted by me):

"(CNN) -- Ayman al-Zawahiri emerged from a privileged upbringing in Egypt to become one of the world's most wanted terrorists..."

Not a bad beginning, is it?

"...The bespectacled 52-year-old surgeon formally merged his group, Egyptian Islamic Jihad, with al Qaeda in 1998, becoming leader Osama bin Laden's personal physician and closest confidant..."

"....An Islamic fundamentalist, al-Zawahiri joined the outlawed Egyptian Islamic Jihad group as a teenager, being jailed twice for helping plot assassinations of two Egyptian leaders.

He eventually became the group's leader, which was dedicated to the creation of an Islamic state in Egypt, and in the 1980s he joined Mujahedeen fighting Soviet forces in Afghanistan..."

As you can see, the "militant Islamist" biography of al-Zawahiri (who used to hate violent sports in his youth, just to remind you) now includes the claims that he was allegedly "jailed twice" for his assassination activities and, moreover, that he allegedly "joined the mujahedeen forces fighting" the Soviets in Afghanistan. Moreover, they went as far as to elevate this “radical Islamist” to the level of “Islamic Fundamentalist” (just to remind you, in case you forgot it, that “Islamic Fundamentalism” is an extreme anti-masonic doctrine, which insists that the fundament of Islam is the Tawart rather than the Quran, and calls for the new Exodus from the slave-owning Egypt to the Promised Land by restoring the Law of Prophet Musa as the only law of society; it has nothing to do with the so-called “Shariah” or “Wahhabism”; quite to the contrary, it is the mortal enemy of the latter).

*“...There he befriended and joined forces with bin Laden. Before and after September 11, al-Zawahiri appeared on numerous video and audiotapes calling for attacks against Western targets and urging Muslims to support his cause.

“Ayman al-Zawahiri is effectively Osama bin Laden's No. 2,” said CNN terrorism analyst Peter Bergen. “He is his closest adviser.” ...”

Do not even doubt that this is true. Indeed, al-Zawahiri managed to approach Osama and to become his “closest adviser” and indeed “before” and “after” 9/11 al-Zawahiri made sure to appear on numerous video and audiotapes calling for the attacks against the Western targets, thus, effectively linking the so-called “Al-Qaeda” (that he managed to merge his so-called “Islamic Jihad” into) to the 9/11 attacks.

“...He left Egypt in 1985 and made his way to Peshawar, Pakistan, where he worked as a surgeon treating the fighters who were waging holy war against Soviet troops in Afghanistan...”

As you see, now al-Zawahiri, who was merely working in a perfectly legal manner for the Red Crescent hospital in Peshawar (actually, in 1981, not in 1985) claimed “to make his way” (implying to a simpleton that it was allegedly an illegal trip) to Peshawar...

“...That is where Zawahiri met bin Laden, a prominent Mujahedeen leader and who also had left behind a privileged upbringing to join the fight in Afghanistan. The two became close, linked by their common bond as “Afghan Arabs.” ...”

Oh, really? But shortly before we have learned that al-Zawahiri first met Osama in peaceful city of Jeddah in Saudi Arabia in 1986... However, an interesting thing is that Osama bin Laden indeed “had left behind a privileged upbringing to join the fight” (do not forget that Osama’s father was a billionaire). That is why, it was important for the so-called “good guys” to concoct a personality that “also” “left behind a privileged upbringing” in order to match the merits of Osama that was obviously missing some “good companion”.

“...After the war against the Soviets ended, Zawahiri was unable to return to Egypt.

Instead, he joined bin Laden in Sudan, where he planned terror activities, including an attack on the Egyptian Embassy in Pakistan. He was also linked to assassination attempts on several Egyptian politicians. ...”

So, as you see, now the nuclear “car”-bombing of the Egyptian Embassy in Islamabad, Pakistan, which in 1995 was not blamed on any so-called “Al-Qaeda” or on any so-called “Egyptian Islamic Jihad” yet, now is blamed on both – Osama bin Laden and Ayman al-Zawahiri, which supposedly jointly planned that bombing while in Sudan...

“...A new al Qaeda emerges

*After reuniting in Afghanistan, bin Laden and al-Zawahiri appeared together in early 1998 announcing the formation of the World Islamic Front for the Jihad Against the Jews and the Crusaders -- formally merging the Egyptian Islamic Jihad and al Qaeda, bin Laden's group.

The two issued a fatwa, or decree, that said, “The judgment to kill and fight Americans and their allies, whether civilians or military, is an obligation for every Muslim.”

Al-Zawahiri and Osama bin Laden were indicted for allegedly masterminding the twin bombings of the U.S. embassies in Kenya and Tanzania on August 7, 1998. ...”

Here we are coming closer to the main point. As you can see, “educated” “theologian” Ayman al-Zawahiri not only formally merged his so-called “Egyptian Islamic Jihad” to form and, what is more important – to announce the “new al Qaeda”, prior to the “car”-bombings of the U.S. Embassies in Kenya and Tanzania on the anniversary of the Hiroshima bombing, but also conveniently issued fatwas justifying killing the Americans (and, of course, the Jews), including the civilian ones, moreover elevating these killings to the level of “an obligation for every Muslim”.

“...‘Al-Zawahiri’s influence on bin Laden has been profound,’ Bergen said. ‘According to a number of people who know both men, [al-Zawahiri] helped [bin Laden] become more radical, more anti-American and more violent.’ ...”

This is, probably, the most important part of the CNN article. Indeed, it was no one else than al-Zawahiri, whose influence on Osama was indeed “profound”, who “helped” Osama become “more radical”, “more anti-American”, and “more violent” [and, I would add from myself – “more nuclear”]...

The point is that if you carefully look into Osama’s biography, you will notice that he clearly lacked education. He dropped out of the college in 1979, at the age of 22, and this was all his scholarship. The rest of his time he spent doing anything, except resuming his studies... Even though Osama on several instances made his photos against bookshelves full of volumes, it shall not mislead you – this was merely a publicity stunt. Osama used to issue fatwas and therefore he wanted to appear “educated”, while in reality he was not. Even if he read some clever books from time to time, and so increased his knowledge in some matters, the formal education was apparently missing in his case. It does not mean that Osama was stupid, of course. Obviously, he was not. Moreover, a lack of the formal education (especially of the modern, the Freemasonic one) does not really harm a person. Quite to the contrary – self-educated people are often more free-minded and correspondingly cleverer compared to the formally educated folks; it is because they have a benefit of being able to choose what they want to learn and an option to skip all those Freemasonic “secular” subjects that are intended to dupe students in an obligatory manner – such as, for example, so-called “Western philosophy”. However, a lack of a formal education and a corresponding lack of a diploma often constitute a psychological problem – a person lacking a diploma might feel “inferior”, often developing a corresponding psychological complex.

The Freemasons are very experienced. They know psychology very well – much better than many of you could even imagine. They know all psychological complexes, which a typical person might develop, for example. So, it is easy for the Freemasons to establish that a certain person, who lacks a formal diploma, apparently suffers from lack of certain knowledge and from a certain psychological complex, in addition. That is why when they need to influence someone who is a subject of their interest, they typically plant on him their operative in disguise of someone “knowledgeable” and “respectable”, who approaches as a “friend”, but must be perceived as a “teacher”. For this reason, the Freemasons could even especially train such an operative in certain additional subjects that are known to be of interest of the victim – exclusively in order to impress their student with the supposedly “encyclopedic” knowledge of the new “friend”.

For example, if the Freemasons know that you are interested in botany and in the history of ancient China, your new “friend” might “accidentally” reveal such a profound knowledge of these two disciplines that you would think that he is equally well-versed in all other scientific disciplines and his knowledge is truly encyclopedic, unlike yours. Unless you are exceptionally cynical, it would never occur to you that the Freemasons, who have planted that “new friend” on you, had simply studied your interests in advance and ordered their operative to take crash-courses on the two subjects of your interest in order to impress you. Typically, this psychological assault of the Freemasons on their victim begins with “impressing” the victim by the “level” of the assailant and this inevitably leads to the strong influence that the “teacher” could exercise on his gullible “student”, eventually dominating the latter in the most shameless manner.

Thus, considering the actual educational level of Osama bin Laden, aggravated by his apparent sincerity (that often borders on gullibility, as you probably know), it shall be presumed that Osama was merely a victim of the “educated” so-called “theologian” Doctor Ayman al-Zawahiri. This Freemasonic skill indeed “helped” Osama to become “more radical” and “more violent”, and did his real best to convert Osama into the self-announced “nuclear terrorist”.

Maybe I am wrong, of course, but my usual cynicism suggests me that it was exactly the case. I believe that Osama was not a shill, as believed by many, but merely a “useful idiot”, albeit a very sincere and genuine one. The shill was (and “is”) Ayman al-Zawahiri – there is more than enough evidence to establish this obvious fact.

Another indication of the suggestion that Osama bin Laden was most probably a “useful idiot”, rather than a shill, is that following the 9/11 affair, the U.S. officials used to concoct some footage where apparently fake Osama was shown as commending the successful 9/11 attacks, which supposedly “benefited Islam”.

I hope you still remember that infamous footage and understand what I am talking about (if not, you can refresh your memory by watching it here⁵⁸³)

Above – screenshot from the infamous DoD video footage showing fake “Osama bin Laden” discussing the 9/11 attacks with Khaled al-Harbi and revealing “his” foreknowledge in the process.

The above picture is a frame grab from the infamous videotape released by the U.S. Department of Defense on December 13, 2001. This picture is available on this Wikipedia web page <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/File:2001-12-13-frame-grab-DoD.jpg>

This is how, for example, this infamous video-fakery (supposedly “recovered by the U.S. forces somewhere in Jalalabad”) is being described by the Wikipedia article on Osama bin Laden⁵⁸⁴:

*“Bin Laden initially denied involvement in the attacks. On September 16, 2001, bin Laden read a statement later broadcast by Qatar’s Al Jazeera satellite channel denying responsibility for the attack.”*⁵⁸⁵

In a videotape recovered by U.S. forces in November 2001 in Jalalabad, bin Laden was seen discussing the attack with Khaled al-Harbi in a way that indicates foreknowledge.⁵⁸⁶ The tape was broadcast on various news networks on December 13, 2001. The merits of this translation have been disputed. Arabist Dr. Abdel El M. Hussein stated: "This translation is very problematic. At the most important places where it is held to prove the guilt of bin Laden, it is not identical with the Arabic."⁵⁸⁷

I hope you are cynical enough to spot the "little lie" in a form of the "opinion of the Arabist Dr." and designed to distract your attention from the far more important BIG LIE. The problem is not that on this videotape "fake Osama" pronounces his supposed "foreknowledge" of the 9/11 attacks in an "ambiguous" manner, making the English translation supposedly "not identical" to the actual Arabic words spoken. The problem is that actual "Osama" is fake on this bogus videotape so rudely concocted by the so-called "good guys". Therefore, it is not "the merits of this translation" that supposes to be disputed. It is the physiognomy of fake "Osama".

The point is that if Osama were really a shill, the so-called "good guys" would not need to concoct a fake Osama – they could use the genuine one. Logic is a stubborn thing, as you probably know...

Another point is that in the immediate aftermath of 9/11, Osama personally, as well as his equally gullible Taliban hosts, explicitly denied his involvement in the 9/11 attacks.

Yet another logical observation is that if Osama were really a shill, he would be used far, far more extensively in the propaganda efforts of the so-called "good guys" than he was used in reality. He would be ordered by his handlers to produce tons of articles, speeches, and genuine interviews, some of them certainly in English, which could be successfully used by the Western propaganda for fanning the anti-Muslim hysteria. As you see, it did not happen – the West was scarcely able to utilize only a couple of video-taped appearances of Osama where he spoke in Arabic + merely a couple of his interviews in the span of almost 10 years.

To be more fully fair, this state of affairs does not match the suggestion that Osama bin Laden was a shill. Yes, he was indeed the CIA's employee (most probably, he was only a contractor, rather than the "employee") during the time of the mujahedeen war against the Soviet troops in Afghanistan. And yes, he was instrumental in promoting the Saudi-made Wahhabi cause and the so-called "Shariah" among the Adat-inclined feudal Afghans (again, not necessarily consciously, because as being a Saudi Arab, Osama might know little about the genuine Islam, because he was acquainted only with the perverted version of it practiced nowadays in Saudi Arabia and he might sincerely have taken it for genuine). Though, it does not necessarily mean that Osama began to willfully participate as a leading character in the drama of the so-called "nuclear terror". At least, when it comes to the humble author of these lines – he seriously doubts it.

However, it is not actually important – to understand whether Osama bin Laden was voluntarily involved into the Freemasonic "global nuclear terror / new global enemy" project or not. It does not really matter. What matters is that we have understood, at last, that:

- 1) The new global nuclear terror project was approved in principle around 1991-1992.
- 2) The new global nuclear terror project was put into practice in 1992.
- 3) The actual nuclear terrorist / new global enemy was not appointed till at least 1997.
- 4) From 1997 it was Osama bin Laden appointed to occupy the hitherto vacant position (possibly without his consent).

I cannot resist quoting here something from a certain Dr. Hugh Cort, a time-server author of two outrageous books on the so-called "nuclear terror" named "The American Hiroshima: Osama's Plan for a Nuclear Attack, And One Man's Attempt to Warn America"⁵⁸⁸ and "The American Hiroshima: Iran's Plan for a Nuclear Attack on the United States"⁵⁸⁹.

“...Evidence of Osama bin Laden's "American Hiroshima" Plan

Hamid Mir interviews Osama bin Laden near Kabul on Nov. 7, 2001

Hamid Mir, the noted Pakistani journalist who has interviewed Osama three times, and who is the only man who has interviewed Osama after 9/11, reports that Osama told him he has acquired twenty suitcase nuclear bombs from the former Soviet Union. Osama has a plan, his "American Hiroshima" plan, to blow up 7 or more U.S. cities with nuclear devices. There is evidence these devices have already been smuggled into the United States. Hamid Mir says he thinks Osama may pull the trigger on his "American Hiroshima" plan when Israel or the U.S. attacks Iran's nuclear sites, or he could do it sooner.

FBI Director Robert Mueller told NewsMax.com that he has trouble sleeping at night for worrying about Al Qaeda's nuclear attack plans..."

What is worth noticing in the above claim is not that Osama supposedly "told he had the Soviet mini-nukes", because this might have been concocted by the unscrupulous Pakistani scribbler acting on the orders of his masters. Though, the abundant mentioning of the words "American Hiroshima" (that were repeated in such a short text as much as three times) is apparently worth to take a note of. However, what is the most important is the date shown on the photograph – the meeting between Osama bin Laden and Hamid Mir took place on November 7, 2001 – i.e. the revelation of the alleged "nuclear aspirations" of Osama so timely coincided with the dire necessity to justify the nuclear events of 9/11.

Just to remind you, in a manner of "by the way", at that very moment the unscrupulous scribblers were concocting stories about Osama's plans to attack the U.S. citizens with the Soviet suitcase nukes, many thousands of gullible responders were freely inhaling deadly radioactive vapors on ground zero, created by the American hydrogen bombs...

The run-up to 9/11. Year 1999. Chechen adventures of Doctor al-Zawahiri.

The year 1999.

Since the permanent performer of the so-called “nuclear terror” was finally elected in the previous year (it was to be the so-called “Sunni Wahhabi Militant Islamism” represented by Osama bin Laden’s “Al-Qaeda” and by Dr. Ayman al-Zawahiri’s “Egyptian Islamic Jihad”), the year 1999 and the following years could scarcely change the proposed picture. The further “car-“ and “truck-“ bombings supposed only to lay it on thick – enhancing the actual grim picture of the so-called “nuclear terror” and paving the way to the smooth execution of its “crown of creation” – the 9/11 project.

Surprisingly, there were no “car”-bombings perpetrated by the so-called “Al-Qaeda” immediately against the United States on that year. Neither there were any perpetrated by the “Hezbollah” or by anyone else in Lebanon – in the traditional domain of the nuclear terror. At least, there were none that attracted the attention of the humble author of these lines (perhaps, I have missed some, but indeed there were no “car”-bombings prominent enough to be noticed in 1999 in Lebanon, so I presume there were none).

However, there were, still, a few nuclear bombings that occurred in the year 1999. These, while seemingly not having any direct relevance to the general line of the “nuclear terror”, were, in fact, closely related to the development with its production.

The two notable mini-nukes’ bombings were the infamous apartment bombings in Russian cities of Buynaksk (September 4, 1999) and Volgodonsk (September 16, 1999). The second of them we have already studied in detail in a special chapter of this book devoted to the so-called “car”-bombings. The first of them, which that took place 14 days prior to it, did not differ in principle. In that case a typical so-called “truck-bomb” was detonated in a sewage tube underground (thus, leaving a huge crater) outside an apartment building housing Russian soldiers and their families in the city of Buynaksk, in the Republic of Dagestan. Sixty-four people were killed and dozens of others were wounded. In combination with two other (most probably, genuinely conventional) apartment buildings bombings (both in Moscow) that occurred within the first two weeks of September 1999, this series of the Russian apparent bombings led to the start of the Second Chechen War in which Russia launched an all-out assault on the then de-facto independent Chechen Republic.

Appropriate political conclusions could be easily drawn by a properly educated politically incorrect observer, providing that he is cynical enough. These mini-nukes bombings, immediately blamed on the Chechen “terrorists” (by that time closely connected to Osama bin Laden’s so-called “Al-Qaeda” and its Wahhabi pseudo-ideology by joined efforts of the Freemasons and of the American CIA), provided the so-called “good guys” with the following benefits:

1) They forced the Russian Government into the new war with Chechnya that would continue for many years. This, in turn, made traditionally anti-Western Russia closely united with the West in its otherwise outrageous fight against the so-called “Islamic terror”, and, by extension – against the very Islam.

2) Additionally, since the Russian troops would apparently commit multiple instances of genocide against the Chechens, the Russian leaders, understandably, would not be able to blame their American counterpart for its genocidal tactics used against Muslims in Iraq, and, what is the most important – in Afghanistan. As you probably remember, the Freemasons do not care about the so-called “Muslims” in Iraq (except the feudalist Kurds there); they care only about Muslims without quotation marks – such as those in feudal Afghanistan, in the Tribal Area of Pakistan, and, by the way – in very Chechnya.

3) The “proven” fact that the Chechen “terrorists” also possess the mini-nukes (while being closely related to the so-called “Al-Qaeda”, as well as to various Wahhabi organizations specialized in recruiting “fighting Muslim brothers” and financing their “Jihadist activities”), would serve for the gullible mid-ranking security officials as an “undeniable truth” that the supposed Muslim nuclear terror network was indeed world-wide. Additionally, it would also serve as a “proof” that the international “nuclear terrorists” were armed with particularly Soviet-made mini-nukes rather than with American- or Israeli-made ones.

4) The state of war against the so-called “terror” in Russia would lead to the severest curtailment of human rights and civil liberties, not to count the unprecedented growth of supposedly “anti-terror” army-like police forces in Russia, and, what is even more important – of the main NWO tool – its so-called

“Ministry of Emergency Situations” (the 100% analogue of the notorious “FEMA”). Understandably, against such Russian background, corresponding developments with the severe curtailment of human rights and of the civil liberties in the West, along with the unprecedented build-up of the police force and of various “emergency management” tools would be much easier swallowed by the citizens in the West.

5) Russian population, which traditionally holds an anti-American sentiment since the times of the Reds, aggravated by the destruction of the USSR (obviously U.S.-orchestrated) and by recent U.S. aggressions against former Yugoslavia and Iraq (I mean the first Iraqi war – do not forget that secular Russian plebs grown up during times of Khrushchev and Brezhnev know nothing about the ideology, and therefore the Freemasonic production with the “First Gulf War” was genuinely perceived by the plebs as the impudent aggression of the American imperialism against the genuine friend of the former USSR – “anti-imperialist” Saddam Hussein), now would be somehow made sympathetic with the American cause because of the appearance of the “common enemy” – the “evil Muslims”.

6) The new round of the anti-terror hysteria (as well as generally anti-Muslim hysteria) unleashed in Russia following the September 1999 apartment bombings, and the so much loved by plebs “determination” demonstrated by Putin in starting the new war against the “evil Chechens”, would ensure Putin’s victory in the 2000 presidential elections (that otherwise could have been won by Communists). As you probably imagine, a smooth execution of the 9/11 project (and especially the smooth execution of post-9/11 components of the project) could not have been guaranteed would the Communists win the 2000 elections in Russia.

There is some little-known intriguing information available in one of Wikipedia articles dealing with one of the so-called “Al-Qaeda’s” operatives known as “Ahmad Salama Mabruk”. This Wikipedia article⁵⁹⁰ contains the following (I think I have to quote a couple of entire paragraphs – just pay a special attention to those words made in bold by me):

“...Arrest and imprisonment in Russia

*On December 1, 1996, Mabruk and Mahmud Hisham al-Hennawi - both carrying false passports - accompanied Ayman al-Zawahiri on a trip to Chechnya, where they hoped to re-establish the faltering al-Jihad. Their leader was traveling under the name Abdullah Imam Mohammed Amin, and trading on his medical credentials for legitimacy. The group switched vehicles three times, but were arrested within hours of entering Russian territory and spent five months in a Makhachkala prison awaiting trial. The trio pled innocence, maintaining their disguise and having other al-Jihad members from Bavari-C send the Russian authorities pleas for leniency for their "merchant" colleagues who had been wrongly arrested; and Russian Member of Parliament Nadyr Khachiliev echoed the pleas for their speedy release as al-Jihad members Ibrahim Eidarous and Tharwat Salah Shehata traveled to Dagestan to plead for their release. Shehata received permission to visit the prisoners, and is believed to have smuggled them $3000 which was later confiscated from their cell, and to have given them a letter which the Russians didn't bother to translate.*⁵⁹¹

In April 1997, they were sentenced to six months, and were subsequently released a month later and ran off without paying their court-appointed attorney Abulkhalik Abdusalamov his $1,800 legal fee citing their "poverty".⁵⁹² Shehata was sent on to Chechnya, where he met with Ibn Khattab.⁵⁹³ Zawahiri and Mabruk accompanied al-Hennawi to Baku, Azerbaijan where he'd managed to secure himself a position.⁵⁹⁴

In June 1998, tired of Mabruk's criticisms of his relationship with Bin Laden, al-Zawahiri allegedly banished him from al-Jihad's central operations. He subsequently remained in Azerbaijan when Zawahiri left, and set up his own militant cell under the Bavari-C name, replacing Eidarous as the regional commander, after his transfer to London.^{595 596}

1998 arrest in Azerbaijan

In August 1998, a wiretapped phone call tipped off the Israeli Mossad that a rendez-vous between Ihab Saqr and an Iranian MOIS official was planned in Baku, Azerbaijan. Without a bureau in Azerbaijan, they contacted the American CIA, who allowed a Canadian-raised Mossad agent to unofficially tag along as seven or eight CIA officers based in Frankfurt oversaw a local police raid on the Baku hotel room on August 20.^{597 598 599}

When the Azeri police received confirmation that Saqr was in his hotel room drinking coffee with others, they stormed the room grabbing all three people they found present and brought them still barefoot to the police station. It was now realised that the Iranian official hadn't yet shown up, and they had instead arrested Saqr, as well as Mabruk and Essam Marzouk.^{600 601} They were brought to the police station, where the Mossad agent says the police "beat the crap out of them".⁶⁰² His laptop computer was seized, and yielded information on an Albanian cell, leading to a raid which saw five more arrested and extradited to Egypt.^{603 604} It also ostensibly confirmed the identity of more than a hundred others who were, or had been, arrested based on their links to the group.⁶⁰⁵

An alternative telling of his arrest suggests that he had been arrested outside a Baku restaurant after American authorities had been tipped off by an informant inside al-Jihad.⁶⁰⁶

Imprisonment

Under interrogation and alleged torture,⁶⁰⁷ Mabruk claimed that al-Jihad had acquired chemical weapons over the past two years and gave up the names and locations of dozens of al-Jihad members.^{608 609} Although previously sentenced to death in absentia, he was instead sentenced to 15 years' imprisonment at the Huckstep Military Court.^{610 611} ..."

I think the reader has already grown cynical enough to be able to draw right conclusions from this Wikipedia article on his own. However, if he still doubts as to how to properly interpret this unprecedented information, I will try to help.

Here it is claimed that the avowed nuclear terror organizer "Doctor Ayman al-Zawahiri", the leader of the universally recognized nuclear terror organization that bore the thematic name "Egyptian Islamic Jihad", has allegedly travelled to Chechnya prior to a few nuclear bombings that happened there.

Additionally, it is claimed that these nuclear terror folks, headed by "Doctor al-Zawahiri" allegedly scheduled a meeting with some Iranian official from the Iranian Ministry of Intelligence and National Security (a/k/a "MOIS") in Azerbaijani capital of Baku, but their evil intentions were unmasked by the vigilant Israeli Mossad.

However, the brave and vigilant Mossad operatives were not able to act on their own (due to the factual- or alleged absence of the operational base in Baku) and therefore they preferred to inform their colleagues from the American CIA.

Of course, it was impossible to catch the actual Iranian, because of the supposed “stupidity” of the CIA folks, who were in a hurry to capture the Arab nuclear terrorists without waiting for the Iranian. (The logical thought that educated intelligence officials from Shi’a Iran would abhor to make any deal with known Sunni Wahhabi shills of the American CIA did not occur to those gullible folks who believed this cheap production.) After this, the arresters simply beat the stupid folks from the entourage of “Doctor al-Zawahiri”, and they, under torture, could confess anything.

This is, by the way, a typical Mossad’s modus operandi. Having only one or two shills (I mean here “Doctor al-Zawahiri” is the only putative shill, the rest I presume were just “useful idiots”), the Mossad managed to create all necessary impressions. Particularly, that the evil nuclear terrorists from “Al-Qaeda” and “Islamic Jihads” make sinister deals with the Iranians, that they travel in disguise to Chechnya, and, moreover, that they conduct real nuclear bombings in Russia supposedly by the hands of their Chechen comrades-jihadists.

Thus, even though I initially presumed that the two 1999 “car”-bombings in Russia might “fall out of the approved line of the nuclear terror”, in reality they were just an integral part of it.

Yet another 1999 “car”-bombing that seemingly fell out of the approved line of the nuclear terror occurred the same year in Bogota, Colombia. The characteristic nuclear features of that bombing could be easily perceived from this short quote from the contemporary news⁶¹² (do not forget that it was 1999, i.e. the pre-9/11 era):

“...A badly burned and bleeding woman was pulled from beneath the skeleton of a parked car thrown by the blast. Another woman was found face up on the sidewalk in a pool of blood. A taxi driver who survived the explosion sat shell-shocked in his badly damaged vehicle, his face bloodied, a few feet from ground zero...”

Frankly speaking, I was not able to connect this particular “car”-bombing to the approved line of the nuclear terror in any way. Therefore, it must be indeed considered as a rare exception to the rule and as a mere continuation of the “commercial”, cocaine-related Mossad’s activities in Colombia. After a long interruption, at this point, Colombian authorities finally decided to proceed with extraditions of some drug-related figures to the United States. A quote from the same article:

“...The new attack came a day after the Supreme Court approved the second handover in a week of a major alleged drug trafficker to the United States and Colombians feared it was a blunt warning to the government not to go ahead with more than three dozen planned extraditions...”

If you are cynical enough, you may sincerely expect that this “blunt warning” to the government did exactly the opposite. The scared to death Colombian “patricians” (who, unlike the plebs, do understand the difference between a “150 pounds of explosives” and a “mini-nuke set to 0.1 kiloton”, and who know what the term “ground zero” used by their American advisers does mean) could only accelerate the extradition proceedings of these men in such a case. Thus, the Mossad, the traditional player in the Colombian cocaine business (since the time of Mike Harari’s service in the CIA station in Bogota, at least) could easily get rid of several dozens of dangerous competitors by a single “car”-bomb.

Nonetheless, in the post-9/11 era, this 1999 “car”-bombing will be re-evaluated. In 2008 a certain Israeli secret service by the name “Sayeret Matkal” (specialized in particularly nuclear weapons) will plant 50 kg (exactly one critical mass) of weapon-grade Uranium on assassinated FARC leader Raúl Reyes, while simultaneously planting in his computer certain files. These files would “reveal” that Reyes and his group were not only guilty of the most recent purchase of the 50 kg of enriched Uranium from Russian “merchant of death” Victor Bout, but were also responsible for two earlier “car”-bombings in Bogota – for the 2003 Bogota upper crust club “car”-bombing (in which, according to the U.S. “explosive experts”, the same type of “explosive devise” was used as in the 1995 Oklahoma bombing), as well as for the abovementioned 1999 Bogota “car”-bombing.

However, if not counting the belated 2008 attempt to connect that 1999 “car”-bombing to the general line of the “nuclear terror” by connecting it to Victor Bout and to “his” supposedly “Soviet” weapon-grade

Uranium (that for a typical simpleton from secret services, who does not know that mini-nukes are made from Plutonium, not from Uranium, should mean that those "Commies" in the jungle started to stamp mini-nukes from Uranium), it should be presumed that this bombing was indeed of the purely "commercial" nature and was not a part of the approved line of the nuclear terror that was steadily advancing towards 9/11.

The run-up to 9/11. Year 2000. Who wanted “collapse” the Ostankino Tower in Moscow and why?

The year 2000.

It appears that there were no more mini-nuclear bombings (at least, none has attracted the attention of the humble author of these lines) in this year. However, it shall not deceive you – it was the classic “calm before the storm”. It shall be presumed that Freemasonic planners and operatives (who might perpetrate such car-bombings) were busy with far more important things – the time to execute the 9/11 project was approaching. Anyway, the car-bombings were, perhaps, not really needed in the year 2000 – the level of the nuclear hysteria among the concerned officials achieved during a few previous years of the “car”-bombings was more than sufficient to ensure the smooth execution of the main project.

There was, however, one important operation carried out in 2000 that was directly related to the 9/11 project. It was the stealing of missiles and thermonuclear warheads from the Russian “Kursk” submarine.

I will not go deep into details here, but I can assure you that it was not an easy operation at all. To get the submarine to “sink” on a certain day and hour and in a certain location, moreover, while being manned by highly reliable people (while getting rid from the unreliable ones in advance), to unload and to carry away its weapons, to securely relocate more than 100 men of its crew, and to cover the entire story up (because if even a single Russian navy official would state publicly that the missiles were stolen, the entire story would not work for 9/11). It was incomparably more difficult than to only deliver a mini-nuke into a certain location and to slide it into a sewer. So, you can probably imagine that the great bulk of the Freemasonic operatives were busy planning, preparing, executing, securing, and supporting the “Kursk” operation, and therefore they had simply no time for any “car”-bombings.

There was another important pre-9/11 operation conducted by the so-called “good guys” in the same year. Moreover, unlike the highly successful “Kursk” operation, this one was unsuccessful. Though, it seems that not many people paid any attention to that botched operation. This was the Freemasonic attempt to destroy the Ostankino TV Tower in Moscow. I have learned from some trusted people that the attempt to destroy the said Tower was undertaken by the so-called “good guys” in order to provide an illustrative example of a “tall building collapsing due to fires” shortly before 9/11. Whether the motive was true or not – it’s up to you to decide. I will only provide you with the basics of that August 2000 perpetration in Moscow.

I think I would have some difficulties explaining to the reader certain peculiarities of the Ostankino TV Tower’s construction, but I will try my best to explain it, because I believe it is important.

To begin with, let me explain to you about its smaller analogue – a so-called “whip antenna”, also known as “collapsible antenna”, “fishpole antenna”, “Kulikov antenna”, “Kulikov spike”, or simply “kulikovka”, as derived from the name of its inventor. This type of antenna was, perhaps, not too widely used in the West, but in the former Soviet Union it was the most common type of antenna on a large variety of military radios, especially those installed on military vehicles. It is difficult for me rendering terminology from Russian to English, so I would rather quote some ready English-language article here⁶¹³ on this antenna:

whip antenna [wɪp an,tən·ə]
(electromagnetism)

A flexible vertical rod antenna, used chiefly on vehicles. Also known as fishpole antenna.

McGraw-Hill Dictionary of Scientific & Technical Terms, 6E, Copyright © 2003 by The McGraw-Hill Companies, Inc.

Warning! The following article is from The Great Soviet Encyclopedia (1979). It might be outdated or ideologically biased.

Whip Antenna

an antenna in the form of an asymmetrical dipole made from a rigid metal rod or a large number of metal coils strung on a flexible steel line. The rigid rod may be solid or may consist of several coupled sections.

⁶¹³ <http://encyclopedia2.thefreedictionary.com/Whip+Antenna>

In the USSR, a whip antenna made from metal coils strung on a steel line is known as a Kulikov antenna. Whip antennas made from a shaped metallic strip, a braided wire, or a metal-coated dielectric rod are used less often.

The radiation pattern of a whip antenna in the horizontal plane is circular (see Figure 2 in ANTENNA). Therefore, whip antennas are especially suited for communication between ground-based objects whose relative position changes in time, for example, between mobile radio sets in motor vehicles or tanks.

I especially love the “Warning!” in the above quotation. Although it is off topic here, it was always fun for me to observe how in the West they used to denigrate the former Soviet Union (and now continue to do the same thing with Russia, despite its being a brotherly capitalist state with no ideological differences) using outright lies, carefully mixed with “half-truths”, and served to the gullible in both covert and overt forms of anti-Soviet propaganda, and how, in the same time, they were scared of any potential “subversion” that might originate from the Soviet Union... That fear seems to outlive not only former seminarian Uncle Joe, who died in remote 1953, but even Khrushchevite and Brezhnevite USSR that since the mid-’50s represented no ideological danger whatsoever, being an officially atheist state armed with the most ridiculous pseudo-doctrine that might impress only imbeciles. Just imagine how much Stalin scared the so-called “good guys” that even in the new Millennium, even in such a short, merely technical note, moreover, taken from the “corrected” edition of the Soviet Encyclopedia (the “politically incorrect” Great Soviet Encyclopedia pertaining to Stalin’s time was destroyed in the USSR, and, in its stead, a new version of the “politically correct” one was printed in the earlier ‘70s), they fear to find something that might be “ideologically biased”...

Anyway, the above one was just another “lyrical digression” of mine, which I seem to afford too often. The point is not in the potential “ideological bias” of the construction of the Kulikov antenna, but in its technical peculiarity. If from the above-quoted English description it is still unclear to you how it works (the article above, despite mentioning a certain “Figure 2”, does not provide any picture), you might better perceive it by looking at these two pictures. I found these photos on one e-bay page⁶¹⁴, where someone tried to sell such an antenna (actually, in the Soviet Union this item was highly valued among hooligans and vandals, because it was a dangerous weapon if used in street fighting and even in a planned assault, and a perfect tool for vandalism – especially if used against passenger cars, and yet it was easy to hide and to keep):

⁶¹⁴ <http://www.ebay.com/itm/Military-collapsible-Russian-antenna-Kulikova-/390365519404>

As you can see, the antenna consists of many “spool-like” metallic elements, strung on a thin steel rope. When you relax the steel rope, the antenna became very flexible and “collapses”; so it could be conveniently folded. When you strain the steel rope (using a special lever mechanism), it would force the “spool-like” elements to firmly stand on top of each other and the antenna would erect at once (remaining slightly flexible, still, even when erected; its flexibility in this case depends on the degree of straining the steel rope inside the antenna – hence its similarity with a fishing pole and the corresponding name “fishpole antenna”).

So, the peculiarity in this case is that the upper end of the steel rope is fixed to the uppermost element, while the lower end of it is movable. When we strain the rope (in order to erect the antenna), we actually pull the rope down, but, instead of falling down, following the vector of our application of force, the antenna stands up.

The example with the “Kulikov antenna” was the part 1 of the preliminary explanation.

Now here is the part 2 of it:

It is difficult to explain it in words, but is easy to make this practice experiment. Please, try to do as follows: take a piece of soft rope (or even a scarf or a thin towel might work). Hold its middle firmly with your teeth, while letting its two ends hang freely. Then start twisting both ends into the same direction (either both clockwise or both counter-clockwise). Wind them round until the ends tend to intertwine and continue till they actually intertwine – like in the picture shown below.

Note that my rope in the case shown on the above photo is not lying horizontally, but is standing vertically – I especially put behind it a box of matches and used a flash to make it clear by the pattern of its shadow. Moreover, it is not leaning on the box of matches (which is almost 3 cm away). It is standing entirely on its own, despite the actual rope being very soft.

Although, I really don't know how to explain it in English words, I hope you understand what I mean and what kind of factor I am talking about. Note that if you want to repeat the experiment shown above, the two ends of your rope must not be simply “intertwined”. That alone would not be enough. Each of its intertwining ends must be first twisted around its own axis, and only then – when it tends to intertwine with the other end – to be allowed to intertwine.

So, let us, for the simplicity sake, call the peculiarity with the Kulikov antenna (where we pull the rope down, forcing the end of the vertical construction towards the earth surface, but it causes the opposite effect – it forces the actual construction to erect and to stand up firmly) as “Factor Number 1”. And let us call the peculiarity described in the second case (the twisted rope tends to erect and to stand vertically too) as “Factor Number 2”.

Now it will be a bit easier to understand the architectural idea implemented in the construction of the Ostankino TV Tower in Moscow, because the Wikipedia article⁶¹⁵, devoted to this structure, fails to explain these details of the latter’s design. The said Wikipedia article describes the Ostankino TV Tower as (I quote):

“It surpassed the Empire State Building and was a masterpiece of Soviet engineering in the time period it was built, to become the tallest free-standing structure in the world”.

It is not entirely true, however. It, of course, might depend on what one means using the expression “free-standing”, but the Ostankino TV Tower is not actually “free-standing”. If it were “free-standing” as claimed, it would, firstly, collapse on its own, because of the tremendous gravitational pressure exerted by its upper parts on its lower parts, and, secondly, it would also (shortly before its final collapse) suffer horizontal oscillations of an unacceptable amplitude, due to winds. That is not to mention that it might simply fall over, because it has almost no foundations (all its foundations are represented by a mere 3 meters thick concrete slab located merely 3,5 meters below the Earth’s surface), so the capsizing moment of this incredibly tall structure does not match the size and the depth of its actual foundations. Here it is how the said Tower looks like:

Above left – the Ostankino TV Tower in Moscow as on these days. Above right – the Ostankino TV Tower during its construction; its mock-up showing its true proportions is held by one of the Towers’ designers. On the background only the first third of the Tower is erected so far.

⁶¹⁵ http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Ostankino_Tower

You can perceive from the below picture how thin the Tower is and how narrow its actual base is. So, you could imagine what must be the Tower's capsizing moment (the below picture is taken through the glass-floor of the observation deck/restaurant located in the "barrel-like" bulb of the Ostankino Tower):

The point is that unlike the defunct Twin Towers of the WTC in New York (that consisted of core- and perimeter steel columns, which served as its essential bearing structure), the Ostankino TV Tower does not have any "bearing structure" whatsoever.

The role of the "bearing structure" in its case is performed by a certain number of thick steel cables, running inside the empty Tower's body. The middles of these steel cables are fixed at the Tower's top and the actual cables are then pulled down (the cables hang down to the ground level inside the Tower's body, and below the ground level they are redirected horizontally through a system of special pulleys to the sides). Thus, straining these steel cables creates an effect peculiar to the Kulikov antenna described above (the "Factor Number 1") and prevents the Ostankino TV Tower from oscillating, or, to be precise, it tremendously increases the Tower's rigidity and decreases the horizontal oscillation (especially that of its upper parts) to the acceptable amplitude. In addition, because the ends of the cables run horizontally quite far away from the Tower's footprint, while underground, this solution tremendously increases the area of the "virtual foundations" of the Tower, eliminating its capsizing moment, as well as the need for any "physical foundations". However, the "Factor Number 1" alone is not enough. Although it prevents the oscillation and the capsizing, it adds nothing in a sense of a "bearing structure"; indeed, it does quite the contrary – it increases the already tremendous gravitational pressure on the Tower's lower parts by pulling the Tower's top down.

Therefore, in addition to the "Factor Number 1", the "Factor Number 2" is implemented. The said thick steel cables running inside the Tower's empty body are twisted around their axis till they transform into the self-standing rigid poles.

So, these "self-standing rigid poles" made out of twisted steel cables provide the "bearing structure" that upholds the entire Tower from within, almost entirely eliminating the gravitational pressure of its upper parts made of concrete onto its lower parts also made of concrete.

Please, come back a couple of pages and look again at the photo of the standing twisted rope made by me. That would be the inside of the Ostankino Tower (though in the latter case it is represented not by a single steel cable, but by many of them; besides, the two twisted ends of each cable are not allowed to intertwine – each of them runs alone along the Tower's wall opposite each other). Now imagine that on top of such a "standing twisted rope" we place a certain empty Tower, made of whatever fragile material (it is not even necessary for the outer hull to reach the surface – it might as well fall short of reaching the ground, because it does not matter, at least, in our demonstrational example). The outer hull of this Tower would apparently rest upon the internal “bearing structure” (at the uppermost point) and so it would no longer matter how fragile that outer hull is and whether or not it has any foundations.

And now imagine what would happen if we suddenly remove the bearing structure. So, we have an empty hull being almost as high as the WTC Twin Towers, but made almost entirely from thin concrete rings placed on top of one other. The answer to this question is obvious: the Ostankino Tower would crush itself under the gravitational forces. It would not be “pulverized” to microscopic dust, of course, like the Twin Towers on “ground zero” did, but, still, it would crumble and collapse. There is no doubt.

Since it is obvious for us, the uneducated Barbarians, who do not even know how to explain the abovementioned rope-effects by the proper scientific terminology, what could we say about those educated folks who plan demolitions of skyscrapers, also those demolitions that use well-calculated underground thermonuclear explosions? If they were in need to produce to the gullible a visual example of a “tall building that collapses due to the fires”, could they find anything better than the Ostankino TV Tower in Moscow?

Of course, they could not. Because almost all (if not to say “absolutely all”) tall buildings and towers available in the world at that moment were built in such a manner that they could not collapse due to anything, lest the fires. Mostly, such buildings used a steel-frame design that made the “collapse”, especially, the “collapse due to the fires”, technically impossible. The Ostankino Tower, therefore, was unique – it was the only tall structure available in the world that could collapse due to the “fires”. And so it attempted to do. It nearly collapsed, indeed, on August 27, 2000, due to the “fires”. Some folks attached thermite charges (the standard ones, used in the Russian military for destroying steel items) to each steel cable running inside the empty Tower’s body, ignited them, and imitated “general fires” in some Tower’s premises, in order to mask their actual intention (they hoped that after the Tower’s collapse there would be very little evidence left, if any, and so the public, as well as the inquirers would swallow the “fires” story). It did not happen, though. The Tower was left to stand, and so some thermite charges, which failed to ignite, were discovered attached to some “bearing” steel cables.

Another problem was that there was nothing to burn inside the almost empty Ostankino Tower’s body, so to commit this arson was not easy at all. Until now it does not look plausible for many (even for those who did not know about the Freemasons, about the thermite charges attached to each of the steel-cables, and so do not entertain weird thoughts on the connection of this arson to the WTC events that would follow the year to come). The majority of the “innocent” people who tried to analyze these “fires” on their own, presuming that the cause of the fires might be natural, are perplexed. The point is that nothing could actually burn there.

The humble author of these lines has some information, though (let me not disclose my sources this time and just suggest that you take my words at their face value). Some people, who were close to this event (I mean involved with the inquiry, not with the arson) told me that there were thermite charges attached to the steel cables. Some of them were properly ignited and so did their job by severing the cables. Some other failed to ignite (it is extremely difficult to ignite the thermite, in case you don't know, way more difficult than to detonate TNT or to ignite some inflammable materials; and it is even more difficult to do so in a "remote-controlled" manner and, moreover, simultaneously for multiple charges), and so they failed to do the job.

Those who investigated the matter from the point of estimating the structural integrity and the possibility of the Tower's collapse, after that arson, revealed that if only three more steel cables were severed, the Ostankino TV Tower would collapse. But because they were not, it managed to stand.

After the arson, the cables were replaced, of course, but it was quite a task. It took a few years before the Tower could be repaired to the "safe" state (this had nothing to do with any internal or external renovations after the fires, but exclusively with the replacement of the "bearing" steel cables).

Two photos above show the said unique steel cables running inside the empty Ostankino Tower. These cables run close to the internal walls of the Tower, because they are intentionally arranged in such a manner – this arrangement additionally increases the rigidity of the concrete rings, thus adding to the overall strength of the Tower. Some people mistake these steel cables with the commonly known "stressed reinforcement" that is used to armor concrete, but as you can perceive from my explanation above, the function of these cables is quite different. One could only wonder – how could you make an arson in such "premises" totally devoid of anything, except the steel cables that were hardly "inflammable"...

There was another peculiar thing associated with this arson. This has never happened in Russia prior to this (and neither in the Soviet Union, at least, since the old good times of Lavernty Beria⁶¹⁶ who was an official enemy of the Freemasonic sect). The criminal inquiry (undertaken in this case, of course, not by the local police station, but by the state security organization – the FSB, the reincarnation of the KGB) did not discover any traces that might lead to the “Chechen terrorists” as it was initially suggested. Neither there were any traces that led to foreign spies nor to any loony individuals that might escape from a lunatic asylum. There were traces, however, that led to the Freemasonic sect. Although officially the Freemasons “do not exist”, in the FSB there is still a department, inherited from the former KGB (which, in turn, inherited it from Stalin’s NKVD) that deals with secret societies and this department does know that the “nonexistent” Freemasons do exist in reality. After that discovery, the inquiry was hashed, of course.

Anyhow, the attempt to “pulverize” the concrete of the Ostankino TV Tower in the run-up to the 9/11 affair had failed. Although the Freemasons are indeed very powerful and they almost never make mistakes, preparing and executing their actions in the near perfect manner, sometimes they have failures too. Here there was one of such failures. But whether or not it had any relevance to the 9/11 production that was to follow in only a year time, is up to you to decide. I know for sure that it was the Freemasons who attempted to collapse the Ostankino Tower in August 2000, and that it was attempted by severing its “bearing” steel cables using the attached thermite charges. In addition, I was told that it was a botched preparatory step to 9/11. I do not see anything illogical in this claim – my common sense supports it. However, I leave it to you to decide. You may agree with me, or may think that it was merely a “coincidence” – when some Freemasons attempted to collapse the Ostankino Tower using the thermite charges, while some Arab hijackers flew their aluminum planes into steel Twin Towers in order to collapse the latter through the usage of kerosene.

Oh, I almost forgot it. There was another intriguing detail in the arson of the Ostankino Tower. There was one guy, who represented Chechen rebels (and who also promoted the Shariah code among these Adat-inclined people, forcing them to abandon the “incorrect” Adat in favor of the “correct Shariah” – i.e. doing precisely the same thing the Freemasonic Taliban did in Afghanistan in the ‘90s). That guy in his publications on the Internet took responsibility for the arson in Ostankino TV Tower, claiming that it was allegedly made by the Chechen freedom fighters as “retaliation” for something committed by the Russian Federal authorities in Chechnia. Notably, the very same guy took responsibility for sinking “Kursk” submarine, claiming that some agent of the Chechens was allegedly planted on the submarine and that “suicidal hero” was responsible for the actual explosion that sunk the “Kursk”. So, if we could only guess if the arson in the Ostankino TV Tower in August 2000 had anything to do with the demolition of the WTC Twin Towers, it is clearly established that it at least had something to do with sinking of the Kursk submarine – because the same group of bogus folks took the responsibility for both actions.

⁶¹⁶ http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Lavrentiy_Beria

The year 2001; final preparations and execution of the 9/11 project; final conclusions.

Now, let us estimate the last preparations for the 9/11 event, and review all preparations to it once again. In the process, we will be also able to estimate the number of people required to prepare and to execute such a complex thing as the 9/11 production. To understand it is particularly important, because it seems that some folks, who believe that the “evil U.S. Government” was the one who performed 9/11, do not want to use their brains to count at least an approximate number of personnel required for such a complex job. For such “thinkers” it, perhaps, appears that a couple of officially ruling degenerates – akin to George Bush Jr. and Dick Cheney, plus a few henchmen of theirs (maybe numbering a hundred in total) would be indeed able to perform such a thing. Well... Now, with our estimations below, you will see that it was not so simple.

In the process of the “disassembling” of the 9/11 project in the earlier part of this book, we have already understood, more or less, what its main integral parts were. Let us briefly list them again, for a reason of refreshing our memory:

- 1) It was necessary to stir up the nuclear hysteria among the “patricians” for almost a decade prior to 9/11 through the more or less regular usage of the “mini-nukes” for the so-called “car-“ and “truck-“bombings.
- 2) It was necessary to convince some responsible U.S. officials to reconsider their “terror-response” plans and, particularly, to draw the instruction that would oblige other responsible U.S. officials to demolish some skyscrapers (particularly the WTC Twin Towers, but not limited to them) if it became known that the so-called “terrorists” brought in some nukes with an intention to detonate them on the high floors.
- 3) It was necessary to create plausible-looking “terror-cells” of some supposed “terror” organization with a certain plausible ideology and plausible agenda (as we remember, the ultimate choice fell on the bogus so-called “Wahhabi Muslims” due to the natural extinction of genuine Islamic Fundamentalists and of the Reds – the former natural enemies of the so-called “democracy”).
- 4) It was necessary to connect the “nuclear terror” to the abovementioned “terror-cells” in a plausible manner.
- 5) It was necessary to prepare the production with the nuclear-tipped enemy missile that would be used as a “convincing tool” to confirm that the demolition of the Twin Towers was indeed a matter of life and death (this part of the production could be subdivided into its own integral parts, each of these sub-parts being extremely complicated by itself). The production with the “Granit missiles was so elaborated, indeed, that even a special article dealing with these top-secret Soviet missiles (including their photos) was scheduled to be published on 10 of September 2001 by some British “observer” (details are available in one of the above chapters dealing with the French secret services participation in 9/11).
- 6) Since it was not planned to declare to the plebs that the Twins were demolished by the U.S. officials, but rather to convince the plebs that the Twins fell due to the “terror action”, some convincing production must be performed beforehand, and some plausible technical explanation must be prepared in advance in regard to the technicalities of the Twin Tower’s collapse (as we remember, the most important part of this particular effort was an attempt to collapse the Ostankino TV Tower in Moscow in August 2000, but the attempt failed; if it hadn’t failed, the plebs would swallow the Twin Towers kerosene-pancake collapses with ease, do not even doubt it).
- 7) It was necessary to prepare the “hijacked” planes, their pilots, their “passengers”, and stewardesses that would make the corresponding Airfone-calls, alerting the authorities in regard to the “hijackings”.
- 8) It was necessary to prepare the “impacts” of those aluminum planes in each of the Twin Towers; for this reason, the entire corresponding floors (several floors, in fact, not just a single floor) must have been rented by the perpetrators. Thousands of cutting charges must be brought in and installed in between outer aluminum coating and the inner steel perimeter columns at the impact spots, and lots of cutting charges – on the opposite sides of each Tower (that would imitate the “penetration of the entire Towers” allowing some parts of their structure, some office materials, and even some “plane’s” parts to be thrown onto the streets on the opposite sides). In addition, large quantities of pyrotechnic staff, as well as kerosene must be brought in – to imitate “fireballs” from initial explosions of the “planes”, as well as the lasting fires.

9) Of course, actors who would “see” how the aluminum planes would penetrate the steel Twin Towers and shout about what they just “saw” to dupe the crowd must be enlisted and thoroughly trained.

10) Of course, actors who would call to various media outlets and report that they allegedly “saw” the planes must be prepared too; again, they must be trained thoroughly.

11) Cameramen – both “amateur” and “professional” ones who would film the “planes” must be prepared in reasonable quantities; these too must be trained thoroughly.

12) Computer-men who would quickly and without any mistake add images of digital planes to the 9/11 footage must be prepared and trained; since this one was the most difficult and the most important part of the production, these men must be trained in the superb manner.

13) Synchronization of all those events must be arranged in the superb manner as well. The synchronization must be well prepared, taught to all concerned parties, while the actual synchronization signals must be transmitted over a highly reliable communication system, with obligatory backup options. Moreover, the actual transmission system of such synchronization system must be not only reliable, but also highly secure – so that no inquirers, investigating the affair, would catch the “communication specialists” red-handed.

14) A superb communication system must be in place as well, and it too must have obligatory backup channels and options, and it too must be highly secure – not just simply “encrypted” in the rude manner, but also hidden from the imminent inquiry.

15) Some responsible folks who would facilitate “feeding” the fake videos to all major TV-channels in the quasi-real time must have been prepared, trained, and promoted in advance to their actual positions; moreover, all “extraneous” folks who might spoil the drama, must be removed either permanently, or at least temporarily from all such positions.

16) Even more responsible folks must be appointed to all major TV channels and news agencies; their duties would be to block all attempts to pass genuine video-footage (that would show only explosions, but no planes), which would be certainly undertaken by some genuine reporters and genuine camera-men.

17) Yet even more responsible folks must be appointed to all major TV channels, news agencies, and newspapers who would prevent any “incorrect” (I mean genuine) information to be published, which must be sincerely expected in such a mess-up as the major terror action against the United States.

18) And yet even more responsible folks must be appointed to all major TV channels, news agencies, newspapers, etc., who would redeem all genuine video-footage from amateur cameramen, in the same time preventing them from publishing these on YouTube or keeping such seditious things for future use.

19) Highly responsible people must be appointed for casting, enlisting, supervision, training, rehearsal, synchronizing of actions, and ensuring discipline and secrecy among the multiple personnel listed above (I hope you realize what must be the level of discipline required to prepare and to execute the 9/11 project and in the same time to prevent any information leaking out either before or after the actual production).

20) Highly responsible people must be promoted in the military, as well as in the government (moreover, in several different departments of the U.S. Government and in several different branches of the military) who would arrange the needed schedule of top U.S. officials, as well as needed schedules of some military exercises, duty schedule of “proper” military officials, sending out of the U.S. those “nuclear terror” units, sending President Bush to Sarasota and Colin Powell to Latin America, and so on.

21) Yet some more special, highly-trusted people must be appointed:

a) To ensure that the Flight 93 will fly the prescribed route and to ensure that it would be shot down.

b) To ensure that the atomic alert that would be inevitably rung with the approaching of the “Granit” missile would not result in the retaliatory nuclear strike against Russia.

c) To ensure that the Twin Towers would be indeed demolished (could you imagine what would happen if some responsible official in the last moment would abstain from pressing the “red button” for whatever reason and the resulting inquiry would not find any “plane” in the upper floors of the Towers after the fires in them would be extinguished?).

d) To ensure that no true information about the missile that would strike the Pentagon would be leaked to the plebs (it appears to me that the 9/11 planners did not want the plebs to know about the missile from the beginning and to officially blame the Pentagon attack on some “passenger plane” was their intention from the beginning, though, I can’t be 100% sure about it; but in any case, as you can see, the leakage of the details of the missile attack on the Pentagon was effectively prevented on practice – for almost 5 years since the year 2001, almost no one talked about the missile, even the conspiracy theorists).

e) To ensure that no true information of the method of the Twin Tower’s demolition would be leaked to the plebs, of course not information about radiation on the spot (I presume that the accidental usage of the “ground zero” words was an unpredicted blunder – it appears to me that the 9/11 planners managed to overlook it and the “ground zero” words leaked to the plebs caught them with their pants down).

f) To ensure proper cooperation with all major secret services, governments, and especially seismic laboratories and nuclear explosions detection services of various countries, so that no country would publicly complain about the illegal levels of radiation in the middle of New York City, or about the 150 kiloton underground nuclear explosions that the U.S. Government would try to pass for the “kerosene-pancake collapse”.

g) To promptly hush up any media outlet around the world that might dare to publish anything “incorrect” in the immediate aftermath of 9/11 (while such attempts must be sincerely expected – for example, some intelligence officers, scientists of various profiles, or some rebellious politicians not happy with the 9/11 production might easily go to some newspaper and to reveal what they think about it).

22) Finally, things must be presented in such a way, that while “evil Arabs” would appear the culprits to the gullible, for the discerning, the “evil Jews” must appear as the culprits, for the most discerning, who might look deeper into the subject, the French must appear culprits, while the Freemasons, who actually organized all of it, must not be visible, securely hiding behind their infamous “curtain”. So, to present things in particularly this manner, some very special people must be appointed as well and their task was the most delicate one.

23) And yet even more – the Freemasons worked so hard to make the 9/11 project believable, that they went as far as concocting a book of alleged “Nostradamus”⁶¹⁷ prophecies, printing it in the earlier ‘90s (with backdated publishing data, of course; so it might appear to the gullible that the book was printed in the ‘80s, and, in turn, was merely a re-print of some earlier version, supposedly originating from medieval France). In that book, the Freemasons made sure to include the Nostradamus’ “prophesy” that sounded roughly like this: “...and two fiery birds will strike the twins, and the twins will fall...”

Most probably, I missed several important appointments and the above list must contain another dozen of positions, but even what I listed above is enough to imagine how complex the 9/11 project was and how many personnel it required.

Do you still believe that such an action could be performed by a few so-called “neocons” – i.e. by the few undisciplined degenerates of Bush Jr. or Cheney’s grade? Well, you give them too much credit in this case...

Perhaps, you expected that I would explain to you in detail how these tens of thousands of members of the Freemasonic sect, as well as hundreds of those belonging to the French intelligence services, and to the Mossad, along with their infamous so-called “sayanim”, were preparing dead souls for the “hijacked” planes, how they rented the needed floors and installed there multiple cutting charges, or how they were accumulating from morgues and hurriedly defrosting those corpses before throwing them from windows of the Twin Towers onto the streets?

You are wrong. I cannot explain this to you, because I was not there. I know that all of it was done, because all of it was necessary for the smooth execution of the entire project, but when it was prepared, how exactly it was executed, by how many people it was done, and what were the names of these peoples, I cannot explain. I don’t know.

⁶¹⁷ <https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Nostradamus>

I could only explain to you, from the point of logic, what must have been done, how complicated it was, how many personnel, and what kind of financing it must require, and so to appeal to your common sense.

I just wanted to demonstrate that 9/11 could only be perpetrated by an extremely powerful organization with unlimited funds and with at least a hundred thousand (if not several hundred thousand) of dedicated personnel, which was, moreover highly disciplined, well-trained, tight-lipped, and which must adhere to the interests of the said powerful organization, and by no means – adhere to the interests of the “sovereign” state called “the United States of America”.

There is only one such organization available today.

It is the Freemasonic sect (which, despite its obvious sectarian nature, is still being officially called “Order”, as if the Freemasons were still indeed “knights”).

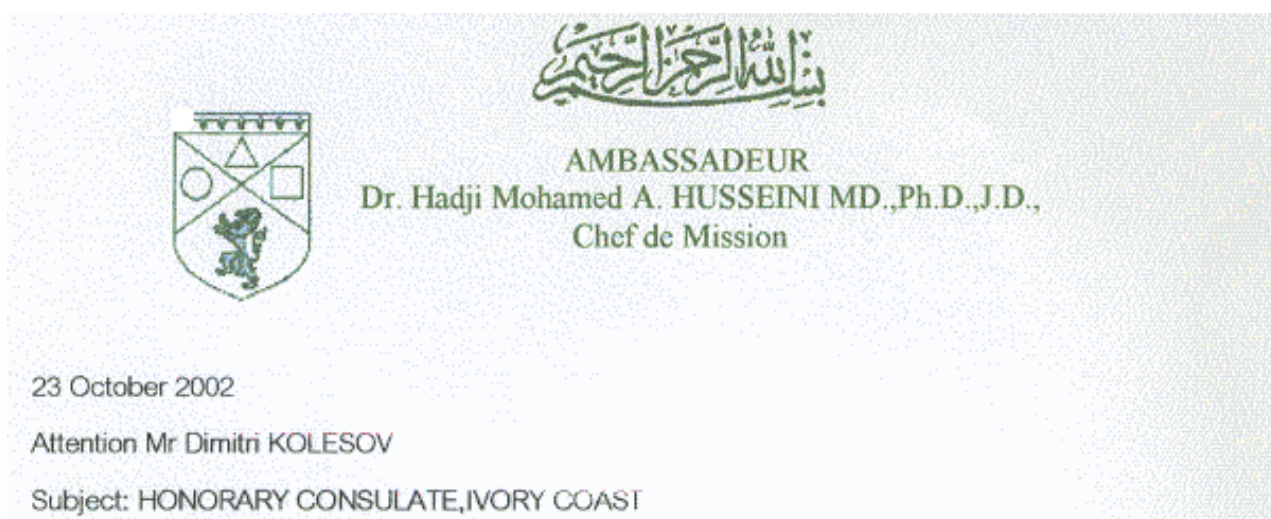

In any case, the Freemasons overdid with 9/11. This ambitious project was just too bold a venture for their otherwise secretive sect. In the case with the 9/11 production, the Freemasons violated their own rules of secrecy and showed their real faces. Anyone who “saw”, and especially everyone who filmed the “planes”, and anyone who called to the news agencies reporting how he saw the “planes”, was a confirmed member of the Freemasonic sect and his participation in the 9/11 perpetration was confirmed.

These folks could be arrested right away and tortured – so they would reveal the names of those who stood behind the 9/11 perpetration – exactly as it is being done with the so-called “terrorists”, to whom torture is now applicable, thanks to the very 9/11 project.

Appendix: photos of some genuine documents concerning Mike Harari, Hambali, Hani Hammoer, so-called “terror” and the humble author of this book.

Here I want to show several documents that pertain either to the times when I was still a friend with Mike Harari, or documents from criminal cases that concern Harari, Hani Hammoer, so-called “Hambali”, so-called “terror” and the humble author of this book. These documents are not too many, but some of them represent major importance, especially considering that their genuine copies are available in corresponding criminal cases in Thai criminal courts. These documents could be used by a serious inquiry to find traces of Mikr Harari and those who stood behind him when he performed his “terror” games in Bangkok.

Above is a ample (only the scrap of its upper part – i.e. a typical head-letter) of Mike Harari’s paperwork pertaining to his alleged position as being an Honorary Ambassador of Guinea.

Here are banking details of a certain company and its bank account in the United States that I used couple of times to transfer money to Mike Harari (I do not have any scanned document, so I just produce them from my written notes):

I have no clue who owns this account, but, considering the level of the police control in the West, I do not think it would take long for the U.S. cops to find it out (unless, of course, they are interested to do so).

Shown below is a 6-page document in Thai language is a genuine report of the bogus "arrest" staged by Mike Harari on 12 of October 2003.

It mentions him as "Mr. Hussein Hadji Mohamed", a citizen of France, as well as his son Aziz, genuinely a citizen of Thailand. You can see that age of "Mr. Hussein Hadji Mohammed" was mentioned in the arrest report (in digits) as only "67" – that is his alleged age, because he claimed to be born in 1936 in all his "Hussein's" documents, including obviously those issued by France, since he was arrested as "French citizen of age 67".

Above – Mike Harari (alias “Monsieur Hadji Mohamed Hussein, allegedly a citizen of France”) during his staged arrest and alleged “search” in his new house on October 12, 2003, in Bangkok, Thailand, as photographed by the Thai secret services. These photographs were legally obtained from the case-file of the Criminal Case Black Number 5729/48 at the Criminal Court of Southern Bangkok.

Below is a page of a classified chart (the last page of it with my comments was shown in the beginning of this book) that was composed by the American FBI for their Thai colleagues.

It purports to represent conspiracy ring behind the 2002 Bali bombing and some other terrorism-related events.

Here the author of this book is mentioned as "Dimitri", Mr. "Hani Hammoer", Harari's subordinate, as "Hani", Harari himself as "Hussini", and a so-called Mr. "Nurjaman Riduan bin Isamuddin" – the acclaimed Bali [nuclear] bomber and a prominent 9/11 organizer – as "Hambali".

As you can see the American FBI made me absolutely equal to Mike Harari. I shall be proud, indeed, of being such a big guy...

This particular document is widely available in various criminal cases at the Criminal Court of Southern Bangkok, for example Criminal Cases Black No.605/49; No.6009/48; No.2534/49; No.5729/48, as well as in many other criminal cases.

Below is a genuine court document, followed by its English translation, where the Thai police citing the local U.S. Embassy claims that the author of this book and one of his partners are allegedly involved with so-called “Hambali” and with so-called “international terrorism” in general.

The case happened following the second arrest of the author of this book on 6 of November 2003. At that time, the Thai police sincerely expected that the U.S. Embassy would come with an official extradition request and they would get some more money from it (since they have already got 10.000.000 USD for so-called “Hambali”).

To their utter disappointment, the U.S. Embassy was prudent enough not to pursue an extradition of the author of this book – I guess it is understandable why after reading this book: the U.S. Embassy officials apparently realized their mistake and did not want any contents of this book to be discussed in a court room in United States...

Still, some official documents pertaining to my initial arrest pending formal extradition request remain – they are available in many police files, as well as in several criminal cases in Thai courts.

ท่าน

สำเนาถึง ผู้บัญชาการตำรวจแห่งชาติ
พลตำรวจเอกเสรีพิศุทธิ์ เตมียาเวส

เรียนท่านผู้เกี่ยวข้อง

ข้าพเจ้าขอเรียนให้ท่านทราบโดยเร่งด่วนว่า นักโทษคนหนึ่งซึ่งถูกจองจำอยู่ที่เรือนจำคลองเปรม กรุงเทพฯ - ตามข้อกล่าวหา ค็อกเตอร์ "ฮัดจี มุฮัมหมัด ฮุสเซน" (Doctor "Hadji Muhammed Hussein") - ซึ่งหนังสือเดินทางปลอมและรายละเอียดของการจับกุมมีแนบท้าย - สงสัยว่าจะเป็นบุคคลอีกคนหนึ่ง

ตามข้อกล่าวหา ค็อกเตอร์ ฮัดจี มุฮัมหมัด ฮุสเซน (Doctor Hadji Muhammed Hussein) อ้างว่าเป็นชาวอาหรับ เกิดที่ปาเลสไตน์ เยรูซาเล็ม เมื่อ พ.ศ. 2479 แต่ลักษณะภายนอกไม่ได้เป็นไปตามอายุที่กล่าวอ้าง บุคคลผู้นี้ดูเหมือนว่าจะมีอายุเกินกว่าที่กล่าวอ้างอย่างน้อย 10 ปี นอกจากนี้ นับเป็นเรื่องแปลกที่เขาไม่สามารถพูดภาษาอาหรับได้อย่างถูกต้องและไม่สามารถเขียนและอ่านภาษาอาหรับได้ ทั้งที่กล่าวอ้างว่าเป็น "ค็อกเตอร์" กล่าวคือทั้งที่กล่าวว่าเป็นผู้มีการศึกษาโดยใช้ชื่อภาษาอาหรับ

ในขณะที่อยู่ในเรือนจำของท่าน ชายผู้นี้กล่าวอ้างว่าเป็นบุคคลสัญชาติ "ฝรั่งเศส" เนื่องจากพูดภาษาฝรั่งเศสได้ดั่งลิ้น (เขาพูดภาษาอื่นอีกหลายภาษาได้อย่างคล่องแคล่ว เช่น อังกฤษ สเปน โปรตุเกส ฮิบรู เป็นต้น แต่พูดภาษาอาหรับไม่ได้)

มีความพิรุธอยู่มากที่ "ค็อกเตอร์ ฮัดจี มุฮัมหมัด ฮุสเซน" (Doctor Hadji Muhammed Hussein) ในความเป็นจริงคือ อาชญากรตัวฉกาจที่นานาประเทศต้องการตัว - อดีตพันเอก ไมค์ (ไมเคิล) ฮารารี (Colonel Mike (Michael) Harari) แห่ง Mossad (หน่วยราชการลับอิสราเอล) ซึ่งเกิดเมื่อ พ.ศ. 2470

พันเอก ไมค์ (ไมเคิล) ฮารารี (Colonel Mike (Michael) Harari) ถูกกล่าวหาว่าเป็นนักค้าอาวุธผิดกฎหมายรายใหญ่ที่สุดในศตวรรษ XX และมีส่วนเกี่ยวข้องในการค้าเฮโรอีนรายใหญ่หลายรายที่สามเหลี่ยมทองคำโดยใช้ความสัมพันธ์ส่วนตัวกับขุนศึก นักค้ายาเสพติดและอดีตผู้บัญชาการกองทัพอากาศเวียดนามใต้ จอมพล หงวน เคา คี (Marshal Nguen Kao Ki) นอกจากนี้ ไมค์ ฮารารี (Mike Harari) ถูกกล่าวหาว่าเป็นผู้บังคับบัญชาระดับที่สองในรัฐบาลอาชญากรของผู้นำ นายพล มานูเอล อันโตนิโอ โนรีเอกา (General Manuel Antonio Noriega) แห่งปานามา ซึ่งมีส่วนเกี่ยวข้องในการค้ายาเสพติดอย่างลึกซึ้งและถูกหน่วยทหารคอมมานโดของอเมริกาล้มล้างใน พ.ศ. 2532 ไมค์ ฮารารี (Mike Harari) สามารถหลบหนีการจับกุมเมื่อ พ.ศ. 2532 ในปานามาและสาบสูญไปนับจากนั้น ไมค์ ฮารารี (Mike Harari) ถูกกล่าวหาเรื่องการลอบฆ่าด้านการเมืองหลายต่อหลายครั้งทั่วโลก ไมค์ ฮารารี (Mike Harari) ถูกกล่าวหาในข้อหากระทำการลอบฆ่าด้านการเมืองที่เลวทรามในเมืองลิลเดแฮมเมอร์ ประเทศนอร์เวย์ เมื่อ พ.ศ. 2516 และนับแต่นั้นรัฐบาลนอร์เวย์ต้องการตัวเขาเพื่อบำบัดคดี

ข้าพเจ้าขอเรียนให้ท่านทราบว่า ปัจจุบันรัฐบาลนอร์เวย์พยายามจะค้นหาตัวคนที่แท้จริงของ ค็อกเตอร์ ฮัดจี มุฮัมหมัด ฮุสเซน (Doctor Hadji Muhammed Hussein) และหากได้รับการยืนยันว่าเป็นไมค์ ฮารารี (Mike Harari) รัฐบาลนอร์เวย์อาจขอให้ประเทศไทยส่งตัวผู้ร้ายข้ามแดนได้

มีข้อมูลบางอย่าง ซึ่งเนื่องจากมีประวัติด้านการเมืองของชาวลิเบียที่มีความเป็นไปได้ในเรื่องตัวคนที่แท้จริงของนักโทษผู้นี้ ตัวแทนของ Mossad อาจพยายามแลกเปลี่ยนตัว ค็อกเตอร์ ฮัดจี มุฮัมหมัด ฮุสเซน (Doctor Hadji Muhammed Hussein) อย่างลับ ๆ ภายในเรือนจำของท่านกับผู้อื่นโดยจ่ายเงินสินบนแก่ผู้คุมเรือนจำ อาจเป็นไปได้ว่า ตัวแทนของ Mossad อาจพยายามฆ่า (หรือให้วางยาพิษ) ค็อกเตอร์ ฮัดจี มุฮัมหมัด ฮุสเซน (Doctor Hadji Muhammed Hussein) ภายในเรือนจำหรืออาจพยายามทำให้ออกจากเรือนจำ

Klong Prem Prison, Bangkok.

Police General Seripisuth Temiyavej.

URGENT.

Dear Sir !

I would like to urgently inform you that one of the prisoners being imprisoned at the Bangkok Klong Prem Prison – an alleged Doctor “Hadji Muhammed Hussein” – whose bogus passports and details of whose arrest are attached – is suspected to be another person.

Doctor Hadju Muhammed Hussein claims to be allegedly an Arab, born in Palestine, Jerusalem, in a year 1936, but his physical appearance does not much his claimed age. He appears to be at least 10 years older than he claims. Besides of this, he strangely does not properly speak Arabic and apparently can not write and read any Arabic, despite claiming to be a “Doctor” – i.e. despite of claiming to be an educated person bearing Arabic name.

While in your prison, he claims to be an allegedly “French” citizen, since he speaks French language quite well (he speaks fluently several other languages – English, Spanish, Portuguese, Hebrew etc, but not any Arabic).

There is a serious suspicion, that this alleged “Doctor Hadji Muhammed Hussein” in reality is internationally wanted top criminal – former Colonel Mike (Michael) Harari of Mossad (Israeli intelligence service), who was born in 1927.

Colonel Mike Harari has been accused of being one of the biggest illegal weapons traders of XX century and has been involved in several big-scale heroine trade operations in Golden Triangle using his personal connections with drug lord Khun Sa and former commander of South-Vietnamese Air Force – Marshal Nguen Cao Ky. Additionally, Mike Harari has been accused of being second-in-command in criminal government of Dictator General Manuel Antonio Noriega of Panama, which has been deeply involved in drug trade and has been overthrown by American commandos in 1989 (Mike Harari managed to escape his arrest in 1989 in Panama and has since disappeared). Mike Harari has been also accused in several political murders all around the world. Particularly, Mike Harari has been accused of committing an infamous political murder in Lillehammer city, Norway, in 1973 and ever since he is wanted by the state of Norway for trial.

I would like to inform you that the Government of Norway currently tries to establish the true identity of Doctor Hadji Muhammed Hussein and if it will be confirmed that this is indeed Mike Harari, the Norway Government might apply from Thailand for his extradition.

There is some information, that due to a very high political profile of the possible scandal over the real identity of this prisoner, the Mossad agents may try to secretly exchange an alleged Doctor Hadji Muhammed Hussein inside your prison to some other person by bribing the prison guards. It is also possible that the Mossad agents might try to kill (or poison) Doctor Hadji Muhammed Hussein inside the prison or might even attempt to organize his escape.

For this reason I would like to submit to you some true photographs of alleged “Doctor Hadji Muhammed Hussein” – all taken in 2003 and one photograph of Colonel Mike Harari taken around year 1987.

I could be contacted via my mobile phone: 085-1230760, Mr. Dimitri A. Khalezov, or by mail: 333, Soi 40, Phaholyothin Rd, Senanikom, Chatuchak, Bangkok.

Thank you very much for your kind attention.

Mr. Khalezov D. A.

Bangkok, 25 May 2007

Below are some old newspapers articles pertaining to Harari’s role in the criminal government of Panama dictator General Manuel Antonio Noriega, overthrown by the U.S. commandos in the last days of 1989:

After Noriega: Panama City; U.S. AIDE REVERSES REPORT OF ARREST

By DAVID E. PITT, SPECIAL TO THE NEW YORK TIMES

LEAD: A senior United States Embassy official said today that his earlier disclosure of the arrest of an Israeli identified as Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega's closest associate appeared to have been based on erroneous information from the American military.

A senior United States Embassy official said today that his earlier disclosure of the arrest of an Israeli identified as Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega's closest associate appeared to have been based on erroneous information from the American military.

"We don't have him," the embassy official said of the Israeli, Mike Harari. "In fact, I think we are doubtful that he is in-country at this time."

The acknowledgement came a day after Israeli newspapers reported that the United States Justice Department had formally advised Israeli's Foreign Ministry of the arrest of Mr. Harari, a former Mossad intelligence agent who many Panamanian officials assert was General Noriega's principal liaison to the Israeli Government.

"They thought they had him," the American official said of the United States military forces here. "But on further checking, either they didn't have him - most probable - or that he convinced them he was someone else." Original Report on Thursday

On Thursday, the same senior embassy official told reporters that Mr. Harari had been seized Wednesday somewhere in Panama and was being held by the United States as a prisoner of war.

The reported seizure of Mr. Harari, who is said to have known General Noriega since 1973, had been hailed by the new Panamanian Government as a major development that could only be surpassed by the apprehension of the general himself.

Mr. Harari, an athletic-looking 62-year-old who almost invariably wore pilot-style dark glasses, personally recruited, trained and equipped General Noriega's security force, and is reputed to have made millions in illicit business ventures with the Panamanian strongman.

One of those ventures, according to a witness who testified before Congress recently, involved setting up an operation to smuggle arms to the United States-backed contras in Nicaragua using proceeds from drug sales. Israel Denies Connection

Israeli officials have long denied any connection with Mr. Harari, describing him as strictly a private citizen.

The confusion over the Harari case heightened speculation here that the initial report of the arrest was a result either of an innocent bureaucratic bungle or of something more convoluted.

<http://query.nytimes.com/gst/fullpage.html?res=950DE1D71F3DF932A05751C1A96E...> 25-Oct-07

One theory among some Panamanian Government officials today was that Mr. Harari, a shadowy figure with extensive intelligence contacts worldwide, might have in fact been arrested this week and then promptly turned over to United States intelligence agents for questioning.

According to this scenario, the senior embassy official who first told reporters of Mr. Harari's arrest may have released a piece of classified information to reporters in a moment of carelessness.

Asked about this theory, American officials declined to comment. Insists on Anonymity

The senior embassy official, who has been talking to reporters here only on condition that he not be identified, insisted today that "I misadvised" the press on Mr. Harari's status because of apparently erroneous information provided him by the United States Southern Command.

The embassy official said he only discovered that Mr. Harari was not in custody "when I tried to arrange for the Israeli Embassy here to see him."

The embassy official stressed that it was not clear that Mr. Harari had never been in custody. What may have happened, he said, is that United States troops "had someone that at one point they thought was Harari, who then convinced them that he was not - most probably legitimately."

Israeli Sought in Panama May Have Been Alerted to U.S. Invasion

By DAVID E. PITT, SPECIAL TO THE NEW YORK TIMES

LEAD: An Israeli reputed to be Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega's closest associate may have eluded capture on the night of the United States invasion because he was warned to flee nearly six hours before American troops swept into the capital, the deputy commander of Panama's new police force said today.

An Israeli reputed to be Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega's closest associate may have eluded capture on the night of the United States invasion because he was warned to flee nearly six hours before American troops swept into the capital, the deputy commander of Panama's new police force said today.

The Noriega associate, Mike Harari, a former Israeli intelligence officer, was last seen at 7 P.M. on Dec. 19, leaving the home of General Noriega's wife, the commander, Eduardo Herrera Hassan, said. The invasion began shortly before 1 A.M. on Dec. 20.

Mr. Harari, the commander said, was reportedly accompanied by two Israeli assistants who had come for him with a car. The location of Mr. Harari, who is said to have trained and equipped General Noriega's elite security forces, has been a mystery. Over the weekend, a senior United States Embassy official retracted an assertion that the Israeli was captured by American troops on Wednesday and was being held as a prisoner of war.

Says He Was 'Misadvised'

The embassy official said he had "misadvised" reporters because of incorrect information by American military officials. He said there was no evidence that Mr. Harari had been in custody, and that the Israeli was probably out of Panama. But in an interview, Commander Herrera Hassan said, "We figure he's still in Panama."

"We believe that," he said, because according to the American military, "no airplane left Panama for any destination that night. The information we have is that at 7 o'clock on the night the North Americans came to visit, he was at the home of Senora Felicidad Noriega. Two Israeli assistants talked to him and then they drove him away."

The commander, a former lieutenant colonel under General Noriega who served as envoy to Israel beginning in 1986, at the same time that Mr. Harari was Panama's commercial attache in Tel Aviv, said the source of his information was a Panamanian sergeant who had been Mr. Harari's chauffeur.

It could not be learned from American officials whether the sergeant, believed to have been seized by United States troops soon after the strike in Panama, was still in detention.

<http://query.nytimes.com/gst/fullpage.html?res=9C0CE0D9173EF930A35752C0A966...> 25-Oct-07

Over the weekend, Bush Administration officials suggested that the confusion over whether Mr. Harari had been arrested may have occurred because military officials holding the sergeant mistook him for Mr. Harari. Officials at the United States Southern Command have offered no explanation for how the athletically built 62-year-old Israeli could have been mistaken for a much younger Panamanian soldier.

Although Panamanian and United States officials have said there are no charges pending against Mr. Harari, there has been intense interest in the case because of numerous accounts circulating about Mr. Harari's services to the Noriega regime.

Links to Drug Trade

Those include what was said to be his work as a supplier of arms bought with drug proceeds, some of them reportedly shipped to United States-backed rebels in Nicaragua. Mr. Harari is also said to have been a partner in various banking and business deals with the general, some legal and some illegal, and was also described as a covert liaison with the Israeli Government.

Although Mr. Harari spent more than 30 years as an intelligence officer with the Mossad and at one point with the Israeli Foreign Ministry, Israeli officials have disavowed any connection with his activities in Panama.

But Commander Herrera Hassan suggested that there was a connection between Mr. Harari and the Israelis.

"Look, he had to have influence on the Israelis," he said. "But I'm not going to get into that because it's not worthwhile to talk about it right now."

The commander said he was ousted as Ambassador to Israel and later cashiered from the military because he refused to take orders from Mr. Harari. "I was the Ambassador to Israel, but he was my boss," Commander Herrera Hassan said. "Everything I did had to be authorized by Harari."

Below is a passport of one of underage girls brought by Mike Harari to Bangkok from one of his usual concubine-hunting trips to the Philippines, and her entry stamp into Thailand. Harari actually brought her for himself, but it seems that later he changed his mind and married her to his son Aziz, but I am not quite sure about it. It seems that this girl is the only "live" link that remains to Mike Harari and his relatives.

Unfortunately, these are all what I have about Mike Harari. If I knew that it would happen that way, I would collect much more information, of course. But since I considered him being my friend those days, I did not bother accumulating anything (I do not spy on friends, to my shame...). So, these you can see above are those things that I managed to obtain either accidentally or because of some court-cases.

Important Notice

Sorry, folks, but I have to inform you that this one is not a free version of my book. It costs some money.

I do not want to appear “greedy”, especially because I am not actually greedy. I just need some money – as any other person who has daily expenses would need. And in any case, it is still an open question – who is actually “greedy” – an author of a book who wants to get some money for his work, or a reader of his book who earns money during working hours, but doesn’t want to pay for the book (that was created during working hours of others)?

I am tired of waiting for voluntary donations (of which I got very little) and now I insist seriously that every person who reads this book should send its price to me, its author, accordingly (which should not mean that I no longer need any donations; in fact, I badly need funds to continue my work and I would appreciate any kind of donations in addition to the price of the actual book).

I have to remind you that it was not easy at all – to conduct this research, to write the book and to create the corresponding video presentation. Besides taking several years to collect evidence, it also took several years of fighting with various secret services who opposed this work in one way or another. I even had to spend over a year in a prison (in a prison of a third-world country, to be precise, and in the most awful and absolutely inhumane conditions that you could scarcely imagine). None of it was at all cheap... Add here that I did not earn any money during all these years. Thus, I guess, the price of this book (whatever it might be, since I leave it to your discretion) is in any case a minor amount for a reader originating from the so-called “civilized world” and so it could be easily afforded without inflicting any major damage to one’s welfare.

As I have already mentioned at the beginning of this book, I let you decide on the amount. If you feel that this book costs merely 2 dollars – then send me 2 dollars. If you value it at 7 dollars – then send me 7 dollars. If you value it at 50 dollars – then send me 50 dollars. If you value it at 100 dollars – then send me 100 dollars. If you value it at 200 dollars – then send me 200 dollars. It is entirely up to you – how much you value the work that is included in this book. Just keep in mind that I spent on this book 5 years of my precious time, and that now I have no income.

Please use for your payment (as well as for donations, if any) any of the options listed below:

1) My personal bank account:

Beneficiary Bank: Krung Thai Bank Public Company Limited

SWIFT Code : KRTHTHBK

ROUTING NO/ CHIPS UD: 007895

Branch: Yannawa branch

ADDRESS: Krung Thai Bank Public Company Limited, Yannawa branch, 1674/3 Charoen Krung Road, Yannawa, Sathon, Bangkok, 10120, Thailand. Telephone +662211-0156, +662211-0-2211-3300

Beneficiary's Account No: 010-0-47535-3

Beneficiary's Name: DMITRI KHALEZOV

ÐIMITRI

This account should work for a long time, I hope, but should it become unavailable, a notice will be published on one of my websites listed below.

2) Alternatively, you can pay/donate through a check sent to my postal address:

Mr. Dmitri Khalezov
P.O. Box 36
Yannawa
Bangkok
Thailand 10120

Please, note that local banks in Bangkok charge approximately 10 USD for cashing any check, so it is useless to send checks with less than 12 USD value (in the latter case I would get 2 USD).

3) Yet another way of paying/donating is through the Western Union (only Western Union):

to Mr. Dmitri (without the second “i”) Khalezov, Bangkok, Thailand;
in this case, please, send me:

- 1) MTCN (“Money Transfer Control Number”);
- 2) FULL name of the sender;
- 3) country the money was sent from;
- 4) currency type;
- 5) the amount transferred –
– by SMS to my mobile phone: +66812492233, and one more time (to make it sure) – to my e-mail: donate@911thology.com

Please, note that my personal names used for a bank-account/checks and that as an author are a bit different in spelling: “Dmitri” for the bank-account/checks and “Dimitri” (with an extra “i”) as the author. This change in the first name of mine should not scare you – the first spelling was used in accordance with the Soviet tradition and was so used in all my former Soviet documents. The second one was used in my newer documents while I was hiding abroad from various secret services and eventually, in this capacity it became my actual “screen-name” and “pen-name”. Recently, I was obliged to start using my original name, but by then I have already become known to millions of people as “Dimitri”, and all Internet search-engines indicate me as such. So, I decided to keep it – just to make it easy for people to find me and my published works.

Should the situation with my bank account change in the future, you could always find payment details on my web sites: www.911thology.com or www.911thology.co or www.911thology.net or www.911thology.org or www.911thology.biz or www.911-truth.net

Or you can contact me in person if you can’t find the required information on any of the above web sites. Any offers of cooperation are always welcome along with the offers of donations. My latest contact details could be always found here: www.dkhalezov.com and www.dkhalezov.ru

Hopefully, your timely payments for this electronic version of my book and, perhaps, your kind donations, in addition, would allow me, at last, to publish the long-awaited paper version of the book (which I could only do at my own expense, since no publisher agrees to cooperate with me) and to make all necessary steps to popularize this information for the benefit of the Truth.

Thank you very much in advance for your kind understanding.

Dimitri Khalezov.

Important Notice 2

Here I would like to inform every reader about an extremely important thing. Please, read carefully.

As you could probably imagine, after publishing such revelations as in this book or in my video (that was prohibited on YouTube in April 2010) I can no longer be sure about my personal safety and I have to take corresponding precautions. The information I dared to reveal is more than enough for me to be killed by the so-called “good guys”, or at least to be arrested on some bogus accusations by lackeys of the latter.

In fact, many people reasonably doubt that “this Russian guy” (it means me) “is still alive”. And based on the mere fact that I am indeed still alive, they doubt that things that I reveal are actually true. It is because for any reasonable people it appears that a person who reveals such explosive things must necessarily be killed. Yes, it sounds reasonable, I agree, and I understand these people doubts. However, the author of these lines is not completely stupid either. Moreover, he has long, near life-time experience of survival.

First of all, I always made corresponding precautions. I live in a place where it is not easy to kill me or to arrange me to be kidnapped. I have no established habits of eating in any particular place or buying any particular food in any particular place – so it is not so easy to arrange me to get poisoned. I do not have a personal car, so it is not easy to arrange my car to be booby-trapped. In addition to all of that, I made sure to declare that I had certain highly explosive information unrelated to 9/11 that is not included in my book and if anything wrong happens to me, this information (that is extremely harmful to certain “good guys”) would be made public by my friends. Add here that I live in Thailand, not in the United States or in any European ally of the United States, and it is not too easy for the so-called “good guys” to do anything to a foreigner in an Asian country (just imagine how would faces of white killers look like as contrasted against Asian faces on a typical “Thai” Soi in Bangkok and what are the actual chances of those killers :). All of the factors mentioned above, plus, of course, the gracious protection of the God Almighty, apparently made me to survive till recent, despite the highly explosive information regarding 9/11, as well as about the Mossad, that I dared to reveal to the public.

However, it does not mean that I could be protected forever in the same manner and that I do not have to bother making any further precautions. Especially now, when the 12th anniversary of 9/11 is approaching and I decided to finally publish the full edition of my book, I could sincerely expect to be at last killed, or thrown behind bars as a vengeance for my 9/11 revelations. Add here that my good friend and the case-partner (with whom we supposed to be extradited to the United States in 2003) Vadim Alexandrovski was indeed murdered by the so-called “good guys”, who faked his “suicide”, in October 2011 (Vadim used to live in an apartment building just next to mine, on the very same street).

Considering all these circumstances, I decided to undertake an unprecedented step and I request anyone to participate in this event because your kind participation will increase my chance to survive any possible attempts on my life or on my freedom on the part of the so-called “good guys”.

I made four encrypted archives that contain highly sensitive information. Please, download these archives and save them for a future use. If anything happens with me, my friends will make passwords to these encrypted archives publicly available on the Internet. Once you know that something wrong happened with me and you got passwords to these archives, please, distribute this information on the Internet to the best of your abilities. Upload videos on YouTube and make them available for torrents or e-Mule, talk about these revelations on the Internet forums, send letters to concerned parties, etc. Just make as much noise as you can. The information in these archives has nothing to do with 9/11, so its revelation would not add anything at all to the actual 9/11 research. However, revealing of this information would inflict a serious harm to certain high-ranking officials of Thailand, Russia and United States, as well as it would do a serious harm to the actual states of Thailand, Russia and the United States. If the contents of the archives are revealed, the impact on the state of Thailand would be particularly disastrous because a certain state secret is being kept by the state leaders from the Thai people for the people’s own good. Once revealed, this state secret would indeed harm Thailand very seriously and its disastrous impact on the state is hard to imagine. In any case, the U.S. and Russia would get their own portions of harm too.

I have no choice than to make such precautions. I currently live in Thailand and my wellbeing directly depends on the behavior of the Thai security officials. Neither the Americans, nor Russians, nor Israelis can do any harm to me here unless with the explicit connivance of the Thais. In fact, the Thais have already attempted to arrest me and accuse me of the so-called “terrorism” in 2003 on the request of the Americans and the Israelis and I do not want this kind of dirty game to be repeated. Some high-ranking Thais who are reading these lines might already realize WHAT KIND of the “state secret” I am implying here and consider this as the most impudent blackmail. I am sorry, guys; you can think whatever you wish. But I just want to remind you what you did to me during the entire 2004 and remind you that you did not make any amendment yet, while you had more than 8 years at your disposal, considering that now is 2013 A.D. I was waiting for the amendment, by the way, though to no avail. But please, be informed that Dimitri Khalezov is by no means a person you could treat in the way you treated him in 2004. I am simply obliged to retaliate for what you did to me in 2004 and indeed I will retaliate in the most serious manner. Do not even doubt it.

From now on if anything happens to me – such an “accidental death”, or “accidental injury”, or an arrest or detention for anything whether related- or unrelated to my 9/11 research, or an attempt to deport me from Thailand, or to extradite me to any country, or if I simply disappear – the retaliation will be inevitable and this retaliation will be far more serious than anyone could even imagine. Even if I am accidentally detained for a couple of days, the retaliation will follow. I strongly suggest that you do not doubt my words and do not think that I am bluffing. I have already proven many times that I am indeed a very serious person; I guess, you know me good enough to know that I am a man of my word; and I would like to stress once more that am not joking at all when I state this [here, as you probably understand, I address not you, my dear reader, but those high-ranking Thai security officials who are reading these lines].

To every reader of mine: please, download and keep these encrypted archives. Keep them till further notice, but do not try to break cipher in these archives merely out of your curiosity. First of all, as I have said, this information has nothing to do with the actual 9/11 events and it has nothing to do with the so-called “terrorism” either. This information is just certain sensitive secrets of the mentioned states – really sensitive secrets. Actually, in other circumstances I would abhor touching such things, especially because I do not wish any harm to Thailand, since I love this country more than any other. However, unfortunately, in this case I have no choice – being an author of the most dangerous 9/11 revelations, I have to take all necessary steps to protect my life and my freedom as a matter of “must”. Secondly, you won’t be able to break the cipher anyway, and neither could you guess passwords by “bruteforcing”. The passwords are random and very long – you will have no chance to guess them, while the ciphers are very secure, moreover, there are actually triple-ciphers – one after another, for overprotection.

If you want to participate in this personal security program of mine (and I sincerely request you to do so), all you have to do is to find on the Internet as soon as you can and download these encrypted archives:

Please, make sure to verify the archives' checksums, after downloading, using the suggested hash calculator (or any similar utility of your own, or verify them using corresponding PGP signatures if you have the PGP program installed) and then keep these zip-archives until further notice. You are also encouraged to redistribute these encrypted archives, so that more people could possess them. You can make them available for download in any way you wish, advertise them on the Internet forums, make them available via peer-to-peer file-sharing networks, such as e-Mule, torrents, etc. Once many people have these files in their possession, I could feel a bit more secure and that is exactly my intention now.

Where to find these files?

To begin with, I put them for download on my web hosting where I usually keep the rest of my files – i.e. on www.911-truth.net meaning that direct download links are these:

Besides, you can find these files elsewhere re-uploaded by other people, or you can find them in e-Mule, torrents or other similar networks. As long as you know the file-names you can always find these files. So far, one of my good friends helped me by creating alternative download links on the Rapidshare hosting:

Alternative download links could be published on other web sites of mine or those referring to me – such as on www.dkhalezov.com or on those web sites that advertise my videos or my book, or on YouTube where a video could be published in the future showing where and how to download the abovementioned files (in this case, to avoid possible files falsification by the so-called “good guys”, please, make sure to get only those zip-archives that exactly match the checksums listed above).

As I have said, if anything wrong happens with me, my friends (who constantly monitor my wellbeing) will make the passwords to all or only to some of the abovementioned encrypted archives available and the availability of these passwords will be advertised accordingly on various 9/11-related Internet forums, on the web sties of mine, on YouTube, or elsewhere – right up to an e-mail SPAMing.

I would like to urge everyone to download, to keep and to redistribute as widely as possible the above mentioned encrypted archives with highly sensitive information and so to participate in maintaining my security.

Thank you very much in advance. I really appreciate your kind help and cooperation.

Dimitri Khalezov.

Important Notice 3

Availing myself of this opportunity to address many people at once, I would like to recommend my reader several important “politically incorrect” items that could otherwise miss his precious attention:

1. I would like everyone to be aware of a book by Oleg Novoselov (“Олег Новоселов” in Russian). His book “Woman. Manual for men” (“Женщина. Учебник для мужчин” in Russian) is an unprecedented masterpiece of the “political incorrectness” next probably only to the Holy Bible. This is an absolute must read for any and every man and even for some women. If read by a sufficient number of people, his book is capable of causing a revolution in the so-called “civilized” world. This truly fundamental work, despite its seemingly silly name, contains the most serious analysis of men of both sexes and their relationship on biological, ethological, moral, social and political levels. Every man and every woman who reads this book will immediately understand what happened with his or her own family and what is wrong with the institute of family in the Western society in general. I insist once more: this book is the absolute “must read”. No modern book could surpass this one in its practical importance for the modern humanity. So far, it is only available in Russian language, but its English translation is under way and, hopefully, the English version of it will be available in 2013. Just make sure to remember this name: “Oleg Novoselov”.

2. I would like to draw your attention to another important and extremely politically incorrect book. This one is available in English, though due to its extreme level of the “political incorrectness” it is hard to find it nowadays. “Socialist States of America. (America without retouching)” by Viktor Fridman. This book practically cost its author his American citizenship. Read it and you will understand why. This is a “must read” for every American patriot who loves his country.

3. I accidentally discovered this web site: <http://www.barefootsworld.net/> sometime ago. However, I was shocked at the level of truthfulness, integrity and “political incorrectness” of its authors. I recommend you to begin with this page: <http://www.barefootsworld.net/admiralty.html> and you will see how important this source of information is for any and every American patriot who wishes his country to come back under the Constitutional rule again.

4. If you have not read them yet, I highly recommend you to read books by John Coleman, particularly his book named “Conspirators Hierarchy: The Story of the Committee of 300”. After reading it you will have a better chance to understand what kind of forces stood behind the 9/11 perpetration and behind other acts of the so-called “terror” and what these forces actually fight for.

5. I highly recommend you to read books of my good friend – brave anti-New World Order publicist and speaker Daniel Estulin. So far, two of his books are available: “The True Story of the Bilderberg Group” and “Shadow masters: how governments and their intelligence agencies are working with drug dealers and terrorists for mutual benefit and profit.”, but more will follow in the nearest future. The New World Order folks try hard to diminish the importance of his books, but they become more and more popular.

6. I recommend you to find time to read this small article by Richard K. Moore “Historical background — the Establishment of Capitalist Supremacy” here: http://serendipity.li/capitalism/prognosis_2012.htm (though, please, be informed that I do not promote the actual “serendipity.li” web site, because I disagree with the most of 9/11 information published on it and sincerely believe that it is not a truly reliable source).

7. I am not fond of loony conspiracy theorists and their works that dominate the “alternative Internet” and I am even inclined to believe that these conspiracy theorists are mostly paid shells whose only intention is to annoy thinking auditorium that would have no choice than to turn away from the “alternative Internet” (much in the same sense as the only job of the pseudoreligious Afghani Taliban at the pay of the CIA was to annoy people as much as possible with their ridiculous “Shariah laws” and thus – to turn the former free followers of the genuine Islamic Adat Law towards the Western so-called “freedom”). However, not everyone who publishes shocking stuff on the “alternative Internet” is necessarily a “loony conspiracy theorist”. There are indeed quite a few responsible and clear-minded authors who publish truly shocking things as well. The only pity is that these responsible authors are just “a few”. You can count them by the fingers of one hand. Anyhow, I strongly suggest you reading several works of such clear-minded authors (it does not mean, of course, that I agree with any and every publication of such authors, because they could be mistaken as any other mortal man could, but, at least, I found some of their publications to be worth contemplating):

One of the most responsible and clear-minded authors – Jim Stone: <http://www.jimstonefreelance.com/>

I was particularly impressed by two highly seditious articles published on his web site:
<http://www.jimstonefreelance.com/cells.html>
<http://www.jimstonefreelance.com/vialls2.html> (the author of this one is late Joe Vialls).

I consider these two unprecedented articles being so important, that even I created their back-up copies in a PDF format (in case they are removed from the original web site) and uploaded them to my own web hostings. Here are the download links:

[http://www.911thology.com!/ Danger- Mind Controllers At Work! \[The final report before Joe Vialls died\] must read!.pdf](http://www.911thology.com!/ Danger- Mind Controllers At Work! [The final report before Joe Vialls died] must read!.pdf)
[http://www.911thology.com!/ Mind control via electronic manipulation \(by Jim Stone\) MUST READ!.pdf](http://www.911thology.com!/ Mind control via electronic manipulation (by Jim Stone) MUST READ!.pdf)

[http://www.911-truth.net!/ Danger- Mind Controllers At Work! \[The final report before Joe Vialls died\] must read!.pdf](http://www.911-truth.net!/ Danger- Mind Controllers At Work! [The final report before Joe Vialls died] must read!.pdf)
[http://www.911-truth.net!/ Mind control via electronic manipulation \(by Jim Stone\) MUST READ!.pdf](http://www.911-truth.net!/ Mind control via electronic manipulation (by Jim Stone) MUST READ!.pdf)

8. I recommend you this web site, because it seems being run by a people who are not typical conspiracy theorists, but rather specialists who know their subject very well: <http://www.toltec-legacy.com/>

9. I strongly suggest anyone reading this article that is directly related to 9/11:
<http://www.veteranstopday.com/2012/08/02/mobbed-up-us-justice-system-delivers-911-injustice/>

10. And, of course, as a matter of “must”, you must read this unprecedented confession of a former shill:
[http://www.911thology.com!/ I Was a Paid Internet Shill \[MUST READ ! \].pdf](http://www.911thology.com!/ I Was a Paid Internet Shill [MUST READ !].pdf)
[http://www.911-truth.net!/ I Was a Paid Internet Shill \[MUST READ ! \].pdf](http://www.911-truth.net!/ I Was a Paid Internet Shill [MUST READ !].pdf)

If you read all of the abovementioned, you will greatly improve your education in the modern political science, which will enable you to analyze the 9/11 affair and other acts of the so-called “terror” not only from the technical point of view, but from the most important point of view described by the well-known Latin phrase “qui bono?”

11. What else could I suggest for a truth-seeker?

Oh, a free human needs a freedom of communication, isn't it?

Unfortunately, many people do not pay any serious attention to the fact that their Internet communications and their sensitive files on computers are largely unprotected from the all-seeing eye of the “Big Brother”. For this reason, I would like to recommend you works of another brave anti-New World Order fighter – a good programmer from Ukraine Mr. Vsevolod Ievgiienko – an inventor of an unprecedented “CipherWall Network”, which allows users to conveniently and anonymously exchange automatically encrypted electronic letters and even attachments. This “CipherWall Network” (of which I am a user and an ardent supporter) saved me a lot of trouble with the authorities since I used it for encrypted anonymous communicating with my friends and supporters for nearly 3 years. You can learn about latest products of Vsevolod Ievgiienko related to the encryption and secure communication, or you can even order some customized security software products from him here: <http://www.linkedin.com/in/ievgiienko>

I would like also to introduce a new web site www.sutils.com titled “Smart and simple utilities” that provides interesting security software and other security solutions. Please, pay serious attention to these security products. I highly recommend them.

12. The last, but not least, I believe that a free human might need some financial freedom as well.

Therefore, I would like to recommend you one of the best companies that deals with off-shore banking, anonymous credit cards, remote opening of bank accounts in various “privileged” areas, helps with obtaining second citizenship in order to minimize taxes and to properly register businesses, etc. You can receive there a fairly good consultation and an excellent recommendation in case you feel that the modern Pharaoh that runs your state outbid the Biblical one and overcharges you when it comes to taxes:

E-mail: info@offshore-pro.info , Skype: offshore.pro.group , telephone: +65 824 824 57 or +65 3108 0780
Address: Offshore Pro Group, 14 Robinson Road, #13-00, Far East Finance Building, Singapore 048545.

Consultants of this company are mostly native Russians, but they can communicate in English. You could refer to me if asked how did you find them.

Dimitri Khalezov.

Important Notice 4

I would like to inform every reader of mine that we, truth-seeking people, have to organize in one way or another.

Availing myself of this opportunity to address many people at once, I would like to call for a creation of a new 9/11 truth-seeking community – that would be an alternative to the infamous “9/11-truthers” led by Prof. Steven Jones in America. We badly need this community, folks. We can only achieve significant results if we get somehow organized. Each of us individually could achieve only a little (if anything at all).

The new truth-seeking community I propose to establish must be based on the following main principles:

1. On accepting obvious self-evident facts regarding to the 9/11 perpetration that were established by me and described in this book of mine, namely:

- that aluminum can not penetrate steel;
- that only places of nuclear explosions are being called “ground zero” (at least, were prior to 9/11).

2. On accepting the obvious fact that the U.S. Government and so-called “good guys” shamelessly exploit gullibility of innocent common people by planting into their ranks skills and professional demagogues tasked with derailing any type of movements towards the truth. Thus, all of such planted governmental skills and professional demagogues within ranks of our new community must be constantly and ruthlessly hunted, unmasked and banished without any pity. Meaning that the counter-intelligence work in this new community must be as effective as the intelligence work – in order to prevent this new community from being hijacked by the governmental agents.

3. On the strict observance of established security procedures (such as encrypted communications between concerned community members and strict observance of secrecy) when planning and exercising especially sensitive and important steps of activity.

I am sure that such community could be easily created and managed and it could achieve incredible results in collecting information, distributing the truth about 9/11 among other people, conducting legal suits, maintaining dedicated Internet resources and Internet forums, and performing other important actions related to revealing the truth about 9/11 to public and bringing the true culprits to the Justice.

Should anyone become interested in joining such a community, please, send a letter about yourself and about your intentions via an encrypted CipherWall Network to the CWID: 1-7920 (please, see details on how to use the CipherWall Network in the “Contacts” page below). Such a letter of yours from the very beginning would be anonymous and securely encrypted, so, that no “good guys” could establish who is joining the new society.

I think this is a good to begin with. Once we assemble a few comrades, we will discuss further steps.

Please, note that the CWID: 1-7920 is not my personal address on the CipherWall Network, because my personal address there is: 1-7778. I registered the CWID: 1-7920 as a separate address especially for accepting requests to join the proposed new community. It will be something like a “secretarial” address. If you would not get an immediate reply for your letter do not worry. You will get it in a few days for sure.

I wish the new community I propose here will be indeed established and it will be indeed a strong army of comrades dedicated to the common cause.

All genuine truth seekers are welcome to join.

Sincerely yours,
Dimitri Khalezov.

Important Notice 5

Please, take a serious note of the following:

This file containing the book was digitally signed by the PGP program using a PGP key of Mr. Dimitri Khalezov, which is publicly available on PGP servers, and of which a copy is enclosed here for verification purposes (text contents of the said PGP key are also available at the end of this book – after the “Contacts” chapter).

The PGP key used for this digital signing of the current file pertains to my e-mail address – dkhalezov@thebat.net and bears my name “Dimitri Khalezov” – so it could be searched for by these keywords and found on the official PGP key-server: <http://keyserver.pgp.com> .

Alternatively, you can download this PGP key from here (select the ...@thebat.net key):
<http://www.dkhalezov.com/911thology-dimitri-khalezov-contact-info.html>

Value of the PGP key downloaded from the keyserver.pgp.com and from the abovementioned link must be the same as the one mentioned at the end of this file you are reading now.

This step of digital signing was intended to prevent any unauthorized modification of contents of this file.

To verify authenticity of this Word file you shall have the actual PGP program installed with the PGP key of Dimitri Khalezov “imported” to your PGP key ring. The actual file (the very “.pdf” file you are reading now) must necessarily be accompanied by a corresponding PGP signature file (a file bearing the same name, but with the “.sig” file extension). Unless you see both files together and verify the digital signature by double-clicking the signature file and seeing a verification result from the installed PGP program, you cannot be sure at all that some unscrupulous people have not modified original contents of this book.

I sincerely hope you were lucky to get its original copy and you are reading now a genuine book of mine, but, still, please, take a precaution to verify that the file is indeed genuine using the PGP program. In any case, even if you do not use the PGP program, it definitely will not harm you to get accustomed to its usage. The PGP program is an extremely useful utility intended not only to “sign” files digitally, but to encrypt them as well. The PGP, in fact, is about as useful in today’s digital life as were door-locks with keys and sealed envelopes for postal letters in a physical life of the XIX and the XX centuries.

The actual PGP program could be obtained from an official PGP website (the latest commercial version), or, otherwise, the freeware, but extremely powerful PGPct program could be downloaded from here:

ftp://ftp.zedz.net/pub/crypto/pgp/pgp60/pgp658_ckt/ (it is Windows XP compatible).

Alternatively, you can download a very convenient and easy to use portable version of the same PGPct program (it does not require any installation and can work in a “portable mode” on any computer even from a USB-connected flash-drive) from here:

http://www.911-truth.net/programs/PGPct_portable.exe

I hope you will find a good use of this useful program.

Dimitri Khalezov.

Important Notice 6

Please, help me to find some important dictionaries that I need to complete my second book – the research on manipulating with “ground zero” in post-9/11 English dictionaries. I need your help !!!!

I need these (strictly these, not any other, because other I have in abundance; I have more than 400 different dictionaries and you can rest assured that you can not offer me anything that I did not have, except only those mentioned above; so offering me any other dictionary would only be loss of your time and of my time, while the time is precious, as you probably know):

1) VERY IMPORTANT, VERY RARE dictionary, IMPOSSIBLE to find in ANY library, do not even bother to try, it is a loss of time – in all public libraries the are all fake, even in the smallest and the most obscure public libraries. You can not buy this dictionary on ANY Internet shop, or in e-Bay either, because its sale is constantly monitored and those who monitor it would always buy this dictionary ahead of you even if it suddenly appear on sale. All you could buy on the Internet is the fake edition. Do not spend your money for nothing. The genuine edition of this dictionary could ONLY be found in private possession (all those from libraries, books-stores, second-hand book-stores, and from the Internet were redeemed long time ago and were replaced with fake backdated editions):

Webster's Dictionary of English Usage 1989 edition. ISBN – not known.

The difference between the genuine and fake backdated editions is that the fake backdated one contains an article on “ground zero”. The genuine one must contain NO such article. Besides, there is some visible difference. The fake dictionary contains a small white frame with certain words on its front dust jacket – in its upper left corner. On two photos above you could see the genuine dictionary on the left and the fake one – on the right. Both are of 1989 edition, but the fake one in reality is the post-9/11 concoction. There are also fake editions of it of “1993” and “1994”, but both of them are backdated as well, being printed in 2003-2004. What I need is strictly genuine 1989 edition, like shown on the left photo above, which does not feature any article on “ground zero”. If you can find the genuine dictionary, please, contact me as soon as possible.

Please, DO NOT DISTURB me if you only have a fake dictionary. I already have it and I do not need it!

2) VERY IMPORTANT, VERY RARE dictionary, IMPOSSIBLE to find in ANY library! Merriam-Webster's Collegiate Dictionary Tenth Edition. Please, note, that all those dictionaries available on the Internet, on Amazon, on e-Bay, or on any other book-selling service are fake. All those in public libraries are fake as well. However, I need only the original one. The original one can no longer be bought today – its sale is strictly monitored and those who monitor it would always buy it ahead of you even if it accidentally appears on sale. It is only possible to find this dictionary in some private possession. I only needed those dictionaries, genuinely obtained prior to the year 2001, and not recently bought, and not from any library! Any editions of: 1993, 1994, 1995, 1996, 1997, 1998, 1999, 2000, 2001 are needed.

The difference between the fake and the original one is in the definition of “ground zero”. In the original one it is single. In the fake backdated one it is triple. See examples below:

ground zero definition in genuine pre-9/11 Merriam-Webster's Collegiate dictionaries:

ground zero n (1946) : the point directly above, below, or at which a nuclear explosion occurs ground zero definition in backdated “pre-9/11” fake Merriam-Webster's Collegiate dictionaries:

ground zero n (1946) 1 : the point directly above, below, or at which a nuclear explosion occurs 2 : the center or origin of rapid, intense, or violent activity or change 3 : the very beginning : SQUARE ONE

Please, before contacting me, make sure that the dictionary you have (or could obtain, or at least copy or photograph) is indeed genuine (with the single definition of “ground zero” as shown above). Please, be informed that I am not interested in the fake backdated ones (with the triple definition) and I do not like to be disturbed with this. I am not interested in opinions of the shills who might try to convince me that the second one (the fake one) is allegedly “genuine” because they allegedly “bought it before 9/11” and could allegedly “swear” that it is “true”. I am not interested in the opinions of the shills. So, if you could find the original dictionary, please, contact me as soon as possible. If you can not, please, do not disturb. Thanks for your understanding.

3) VERY IMPORTANT, VERY RARE, IMPOSSIBLE to find in ANY library! IMPOSSIBLE to buy on the Internet. Only possible to find in some private possession! Encyclopedia Britannica on CDs or on DVDs. Only CDs originally obtained in the corresponding years (not recently bought !!!) – the following editions: 1993, 1994, 1995, 1996, 1997, 1998, 1999, 2000, 2001, 2002, 2003, possibly also 2004.

The difference between the fake and the original one is that the backdated fakes include an electronic version of the abovementioned fake Merriam-Webster's Collegiate Dictionary Tenth Edition with corresponding fake definition of “ground zero” (fake means the “triple definition” instead of the single one – like shown above). Genuine CDs and DVDs of the editions 1993 through 2004 must not include such a fake dictionary. Please, contact me only if you have (or could obtain) the genuine CDs or DVDs. Please, be so kind and do not contact me if you have only the fake ones, I do not want to be disturbed by the shills or by anyone else who possesses these fakes, because I have already many of them and I am now looking for the genuine ones only. A counterfeited CD-copy or an ISO image would work also in my case, providing that this is a counterfeited copy of the genuine CD/DVD, not of the fake backdated one.

PLEASE, before contacting me about the Britannicas, make sure to check if your copy is indeed genuine – install it first, run the included Merriam-Webster's dictionary (if any is included in the set) and check the definition of “ground zero”. If it is triple – please, DO NOT DISTURB me. I am NOT interested in this. If the “ground zero” definition is single, or if no Merriam-Webster's Dictionary is included in the Britannica set – then, please, contact me as soon as possible, we will discuss the rest.

4) RARE, but not “seditious” like the above three, and therefore possible to find: Encarta World English Dictionary – only with ISBNs mentioned below, not any other:

ISBN-10: 0747548064

ISBN-13: 978-0747548065

Please, note one more time: only ISBNs mentioned above, I do not need any other ISBNs.

This one could be available in any big public library; certainly it must be available in the U.S. Library of Congress, because that one is a legal depository of all existing books.

5) RARE, and possibly “seditious” American Heritage College Dictionary Third Edition 2001 print. Only strictly 2001 edition and only with ISBNs mentioned below, not any other (I already have its 2000 print and its 1993 and 1997 prints, so I do not need them – I need only its 2001 print):

ISBN-10: 0618204474

ISBN-13: 978-0618204472

Please, note one more time: only ISBNs mentioned above, I do not need any other ISBNs.

This one could be available in some very big public libraries; most probably, it is also available in the U.S. Library of Congress, because that one is a legal depository of all existing books.

6) Harper Dictionary of Contemporary Usage 1992 ISBN-10: 006272021X ISBN-13: 978-0062720214
Only edition of 1992, not any other, is needed!

7) Oxford Australian Dictionary 1999 (the 2001 reprint of it)

only strictly “2001 re-print”, not any other.

ISBN: 9780195507935

8) Oxford Australian Dictionary 1999 (the 2002 reprint of it)

only strictly “2002 re-print”, not any other.

ISBN: 9780195507935

If you have, or know where to find any of the abovementioned dictionaries (strictly the years specified in positions No. 5 through 8, and only genuine ones in the first three positions), please contact me, we will discuss further steps.

Please, do not contact me if you have any other dictionary, not specified above, because I have, or have seen more than 400 different dictionaries, both fake and original ones, and all that you could show me I have seen already. What I miss for now are only those listed above.

I would appreciate your help if you could obtain (or at least copy/photograph/make ISO images of) any of the abovementioned items. However, I would appreciate it even more if you DO NOT DISTURB me with any other item except those listed above, because I am quite a busy man. Please, try to understand that I DO NOT NEED any other dictionary, because I already have them and by sending me things that I already have you merely consume my time and my bandwidth.

Thank you very much for your kind understanding.

Sincerely yours,
Dimitri Khalezov.

Important Notice 7

Using this opportunity to address many people at once, I would like to inform them about some business opportunities available.

As you probably noticed, the author of this book is a bit “strange” person; I mean that I am not a typical “good citizen”, but rather a “politically incorrect” creature. Thus, the business opportunities I am talking about have something to do with certain “political incorrectness” too; though, these businesses are by no means criminal. They are perfectly legal; they are just “politically incorrect”.

Some of these require reasonably big investments (a couple of millions of dollars approximately). However, they will return substantial profits and additional benefits. Thus, potential free minded investors are welcome. Some others – do not require any investments whatsoever, but require merely hardworking reliable people (still, free minded ones and with the creative turn of mind, though).

If you are interested in this proposal, please, contact me for details. Make sure to use only secure means of communication in this case – from among the options described below.

Contacts

The author of this book, Mr. Dimitri Khalezov, could be contacted:

Directly: Telephones in Bangkok, Thailand: +6681-2492233 and +6681-4403337
The most convenient time for contacting via the telephone: 8 AM – 9 PM, Bangkok time (+7 GMT).

Please, note that mobile phones +6685-1230760 and +6681-1333644 formerly shown on my web site as my contact telephones are still functioning, but now they are reserved strictly for personal use.

Note, that my former telephones +662-776810444 and +662-9939949 ext.3 are no longer in use.

or by E-mail: dkhalezov@911thology.com 911thology@gmail.com for requests for my books, video, etc.: book_request@911thology.com for donations: donate@911thology.com (however, if your intent for a donation is serious, I would prefer to be contacted via an encrypted mail – the CipherWall Networks – see a description below).

My very personal e-mails for general purposes (please, do not abuse; use only in case of a real emergency since I do not want these e-mails to be overloaded):

dkhalezov@gmail.com dkhalezov@thebat.com dkhalezov@yahoo.co.uk dkhalezov@fromru.com

PGP keys (besides the one published on the next page) could be found for my e-mails on public PGP key-servers or on my own web-sites (on their “contacts” pages).

The best way to contact me securely is to download the “CipherWall Network Client” program for secure communication from here: <http://www.911-truth.net/cwcli.zip> and register as a new CipherWall Network user (which is a simple automated one click procedure). After registering you will be assigned a new unique ID on the CipherWall network (“CWID”) and you can send a letter to me using my CWID: 1-7778 (Dimitri K). This program resembles an ordinary mail program or ICQ, but it is much easier to use. It is portable and does not require any installation. All incoming and outgoing letters, as well as attached files are encrypted automatically with an unbreakable cipher. Besides, this unique program ensures complete anonymity of all its users, anonymity of their communications with each other, and, what is the most important, it ensures guaranteed delivery of all messages to their intended recipients. Should the above mentioned link for download of the CipherWall Network Client program become unavailable, alternative download links could always be found on the rest of the web sites listed below.

ICQ: 448-400-378; Skype: DimKhz; Yahoo! Messenger: dkhalezov

My Jabber ID for Pidgin messenger on jabber.org: dkhalezov (this one can be used for the encrypted communication as well, if you have a corresponding encryption plugin installed)

Note that the former domain of mine 911thology.cn (it was a Chinese *.cn, not *.com domain) as well as this one: 911thology.info might be no longer under my control by the time you are reading these lines. I was cheated out of them by some crooks and beginning from February 2013 I might lose rights to them whatsoever.

Welcome are any suggestions that may improve this book, as well as any offers to edit it or to translate it to other languages. Serious offers to provide help for distribution of this book or videos are welcome too. All serious offers of both – commercial and non-commercial nature – will be seriously considered. As you could probably imagine, many people contact me and I could scarcely afford to reply to everyone. Thus, please, carefully review the abovementioned websites first before contacting me – perhaps, you can find an answer to your question published on one of them. Contact me only if necessary, please.

My PayPal- or a bank account or other account for receiving payments for the book will be always published on this web site: www.911thology.com or on www.911thology.co or on any of “911thology” web sites from among those mentioned above. Please, note, that for banking reasons my name could be spelled “Dmitri” rather than “Dimitri”.

If you wish to donate, please, contact me directly for bank account details. Funds are badly needed to continue this work and advertising and distributing these materials and all donations are welcome.

Sincerely yours,
Dimitri Khalezov.

My PGP key

This is my PGP key – could be used for both – contacting me and for verifying contents of the current file (I used this PGP key of mine to digitally “sign” it – please, refer to the PGP program’s manual if you don’t know how to use this program or how to verify the PGP digital signatures). This key could be used on any PGP program’s version starting from PGP versions 8.x and newer, as well as on the PGP 6.5.8ckt and GnuPG. This PGP key of mine could be found on the official PGP key-server <http://keyserver.pgp.com> :

-----END PGP PUBLIC KEY BLOCK-----

In order to create an analogue of a standard “exported” public PGP key out of the above data, please, create a new plain text file using the Notepad program, copy and paste the entire value of my PGP key exactly as shown above (including beginning and end lines) into such a new plain text file and save this text file with the “.asc” file extension instead of the “.txt” file extension. Such an operation could be easily performed by selecting “File -> Save as” and typing the new file name in quotation marks – for example: “dkhalezov@thebat.net_public_pgp-key_1.asc”. The resulting file will be exactly in a right format that is automatically acceptable for “importing” by any PGP or any Open PGP program. Then you can use this key for either securely communicating with me (by encrypting letters sent to me) or for verifying my digital signatures.

Alternatively, if you have difficulties to copy the key from here, you can download this PGP key from here: <http://www.dkhalezov.com/911thology-dimitri-khalezov-contact-info.html> (select the ...@thebat.net key)

The actual PGP program could be obtained from an official PGP website (the latest commercial version), or, otherwise, the freeware, but extremely powerful PGPct program could be downloaded from here: ftp://ftp.zedz.net/pub/crypto/pgp/pgp60/pgp658_ckt/ (it is Windows XP compatible).

Alternatively, you can download a very convenient and easy to use portable version of the same PGPct program (it does not require any installation and can work in a “portable mode” on any computer even from a USB-connected flash-drive) from here: http://www.911-truth.net/programs/PGPct_portable.exe

The PGP program is an extremely useful utility intended not only to “sign” files digitally, but to encrypt them as well. The PGP, in fact, is about as useful in today’s digital life as were door-locks with keys and sealed envelopes for postal letters in a physical life of the XIX and the XX centuries. Even if you do not use the PGP program until now, it definitely will not harm you to get accustomed to its usage.
