Each file is PGP-signed and includes corresponding PGP-signature file, as well as MD5 and CRC-32 checksums mentioned above. Please, make sure to verify the checksums of the files you received in order to prevent their unauthorized or falsified versions.

Both of these file are very important parts of this book.

However, they must only be read in the prescribed order.

In order to prevent some curious people from “premature” reading of these files, I protected them with passwords. You will encounter these passwords when you reach corresponding chapters. A password for “A Big Lyrical Digression” is available in the text of this book. A password for “Philosophy” is available in the text of “A Big Lyrical Digression”.

I would like to apologize for causing such an inconvenience.

If you have difficulties with these passwords, you can search in the Internet for unprotected versions of the same PDF files. Here are their names and checksums:

About author

Dimitri A. Khalezov.

About author:

Mr. Dimitri A. Khalezov, a former Soviet citizen, a former commissioned officer of the so-called “military unit 46179”, otherwise known as “the Special Control Service” of the 12th Chief Directorate of the Defense Ministry of the USSR. The Special Control Service, also known as the Soviet atomic (later “nuclear”) intelligence was a secret military unit responsible for detecting of nuclear explosions (including underground nuclear tests) of various adversaries of the former USSR as well as responsible for controlling of observance of various international treaties related to nuclear testing and to peaceful nuclear explosions. After September the 11th Khalezov undertook some extensive 9/11 research and proved that the Twin Towers of World Trade Center as well as its building 7 were demolished by three underground thermonuclear explosions – which earned the very name “ground zero” to the demolition site. Moreover, he testifies that he knew about the in-built so-called “emergency nuclear demolitions scheme” of the Twin Towers as long ago as back in the ‘80s – while being a serviceman in the Soviet Special Control Service.

Some blurbs on the book's jacket

(placed here due to the absence of the jacket):

Third Truth is a definitive work of great wisdom and depth, a much needed corrective to a decade of biased journalistic and academic writing about the events of 9-11 in which the author gets to the bottom of the cauldron that took place on September 11, 2001. We cannot understand today's world without reading this insightful and provocative book.

As a Radiation Protection Technologist who worked at over 20 Nuclear Electric Generating Stations all over USA including Indian Point in Peekskill New York and Three Mile Island, I find Dimitri Khalezov's assertions and conclusions regarding the mechanics of nuclear demolition at WTC and his observations regarding Health Physics issues of radiation victims that worked "ground zero" to be in complete accord with Radiation Fundamentals and nuclear technology in general.

A bit of history and a small disclaimer.

This was my foreword to the third edition of my “free” book published on August 20, 2010:

After my “9/11thology” video presentation appeared on the Internet in March 2010, the absolute majority of the innocent people welcomed it. However, it was not so with the “professional” 9/11 auditorium. Those “professional” 9/11 conspiracy theorists (who spent at least 8 years on their supposed “9/11 research” but who did not even bother to open a pre-9/11 dictionary and to check the only pre-9/11 meaning of “ground zero”) were not happy at all with my presentation that they promptly dubbed a “theory”. In addition, series of the most spiteful accusations were hurled at me on various Internet forums by governmental skills who accused me of supposedly “making money on the 9/11 tragedy” by refusing to release my information free of charge.

Apparently, they did not bother to notice that my actual video presentation that lasted well over 4 hours was released totally free of charge and it successfully covered nearly all aspects of 9/11 and explained them even better than the book. But I understand them. They receive their monthly pay from the U.S. Government for trolling on the 9/11-related Internet forums and for ostracizing and ridiculing all 9/11 discussions dangerous to their masters. That is why they have to work off their monthly salaries. Perhaps, the majority of the innocent people do not even suspect that almost 99% of so-called “9/11 truthers” and full-time 9/11 conspiracy theorists are merely government appointed skills that receive their monthly subsistence at the expense of the American taxpayer.

Unlike the professional, full-time 9/11 folks, who are being secretly paid by the Government on the monthly basis, I receive no salary... I have no job, no business, no country, and no prospect of the retirement pension. To sell my book is the only means for me to survive and to save some money for my old age. However, not too many people seem to realize it. Several thousands of people, 95% of whom have positive feelings about it, saw my free video presentation. My web sites that provided detailed explanation about 9/11 were read by thousands of people, too. Do you think I really made much money out of it? Ha! You are badly mistaken if you think so.

Despite accusations that I supposedly “make money on the 9/11 tragedy” I received (as on 12 of August 2010) the following donations: 100 Euro – 1 time; 600 Euro – 1 time; 500 USD – 1 time; 250 USD – 1 time; 200 USD – 1 time; 25 USD – 1 time. As you can see, despite the donation sums were quite large, only 6 persons out of several thousands who liked my research actually donated anything to support it.

However, to tell you honestly, I spent plenty of my own money on this research that led to creation of the book and of the video. Add here that I spent several years of my precious time entirely on this unpaid work instead of making some profitable business or doing some well-paid professional work like many of you. This is just to clarify how much I actually “earned” on the 9/11 tragedy.

Now, at last, I hope you realize why I do not want to distribute my book free of charge and want to earn at least something from it?

It is because out of every 10,000 people who will read my book free and appreciate my explanations, may be only one or two will render their appreciation in cash and send me a hundred dollars...

By the way – how many writers do you know who give their books away free? Well. Now you know one. Following all those spiteful assaults, I decided to make freely available 11 most important chapters of my book that explain nearly everything about 9/11 – in addition to one chapter about the Chernobyl so-called “disaster” which I made freely available a few days earlier. These 11 chapters really explain almost everything you need to know about the WTC demolition and its aftereffects; and this is really a lot – 122 A4 pages – the size of a real book.

From now on, nobody can accuse me of hiding the truth from the public because of “greediness”. My conscience is now as clean as my purse is. I hope you will appreciate this step of mine and express your gratitude accordingly.

Dimitri Khalezov.

P.S. These free 11 chapters of the book mentioned above were available for everyone during more than two years – from July 2010 until December 2012. The video presentation was available also – everyone could download it via torrents or directly from my web-hosting with a large bandwidth (which I maintain at my own expense, just to let you know). I could assure you that during these two years, not less than 200,000 people downloaded the free version of the book and even more people got this book via file-sharing services like “torrents”.

Do you think that during these two years many people “expressed their gratitude accordingly” and I got many more donations? Well. I received, in addition to those sums mentioned above: 500 USD – 1 time, 200 Euro – 2 times, 100 Euro – 1 time, 200 USD – 1 time, 10,000 Japanese Yen – 1 time; 100 USD – 1 time; 50 USD – 1 time. Not much, is it? Only 8 donations from tens of thousands of grateful readers and from tens of thousands of grateful watchers during two and a half years?

Even when I published my urgent video address on YouTube on November 18, 2012, where I requested some support (because my security situation had greatly deteriorated at that moment and I badly needed some cash to improve my security), a ridiculously low number of people supported me. As on December 23, 2012 (more than one month starting from uploading the video-address onto YouTube) the video was watched by about 1,800 people, but only 4 (four) of them sent me something: 500 USD – 1 time, 100 Euro – 2 times, 250 AUD – 1 time. And that was it: 4 donations out of 1,800 people... Thank you, folks, for your kind support of a person who told you (and not just “told”, but explained in precise detail, moreover, risking his life in the process) the truth about the most heinous perpetration that supposes to shape the new century.

Well. I would like to remind you one more time that I am NOT GREEDY. I am sure that “naked man came into This world and naked he will depart and nothing he could take in his hand from his works Here”. Thus, I care little about money. But I still need these stupid papers. I have daily expenses, as any other people. In addition, unlike many of you, I have a couple of criminal cases in the court that I have to deal with (i.e. paying for lawyers, for translators, for translations, etc.) – and these court cases, just to remind you, are directly connected to my efforts to let you know the truth about 9/11. Besides, I had grandiose plans to promote this important information about 9/11 and to translate this information into a few more languages, not to mention that I planned to publish a paper-edition of my book (which I could only do at my own expense, since all publishers are scared touching this stuff).

However, with this rate of support, I was scarcely able to survive. I could not even afford to create a nice web site or to acquire a good hosting to host my files. I was not able to hire a moderator to maintain my Internet forum; therefore, it is full of spam now. I was not able to hire a secretary to answer my mail; therefore a lot of letters addressed to me remain unanswered. Not to mention, that I simply could not afford to promote this information among many people, as I initially planned, folks.

From now on, I hope, you understand why I do not want to release anything free of charge? Just try to imagine yourself in my shoes. You spent 5 years of your precious life not making any money, but rather spending your previous savings on something very important (and fighting various serious secret services in the process, in addition). And after 5 years of your hard work (and fighting) your readers (who, unlike you, were earning during these 5 years and were not facing any assassination attempt or a prospect to be thrown behind bars) are very happy with your book. However, they do not feel that they need to contribute anything. They are just happy reading it free of charge. Would this state of affairs make any of you happy?

Well. You can continue to think that I supposedly “make money on the 9/11 tragedy” if you wish so. But, at least, now you know how much I actually “earned” from it. You can calculate all the financial transactions mentioned above and divide that by number of months that have passed since. I can assure you that I spent much more than I earned – and not just “much more”, but “incomparably much more”. Only on acquiring important rare dictionaries, needed to prove machinations with “ground zero” definitions, I spent more than 10 thousand USD. Moreover, I could assure you that my conscience is indeed clear. I indeed released my video-presentation free of charge and it explained more than the book. In addition, the most important part of the book was available free of charge for two and a half years – exactly as I promised in July 2010.

From now on, it will no longer be free. This updated book costs money.

However, I do not wish to put any pressure on my reader. I want him to read the book first and to enjoy reading it without being preconceived with a notion that its author supposedly “makes money on the 9/11 tragedy”. Besides, I have difficulties calculating this book’s price.

If I set the price like $4.99 – I could probably sell a lot of it, but it would be perceived “cheap” and therefore “not trustworthy”. If I set the price like “50 Euro” – it would greatly decrease its circulation – many greedy people would not buy it at that price. However, I want this book to be read by anyone – even by the greediest folks (those who have salaries in an order of thousands USD, but do not wish to pay even a few bucks). I believe that even those who are greedy must know the Truth about 9/11. That is not to mention those poor, who are entitled to know it as well. Thus, I indeed have no clue when it comes to its price-tag. So, after thinking a while, I decided to distribute it freely, but on a certain condition: everyone who read this book must pay for it at his or her own discretion. Without putting any pressure on my reader, I let him decide – how much he values my work and transfer that cost to me, the book’s author. The details of my bank account or other means of payment could be found at the end of this book (“Important Notice”) – you will reach that page when you finish reading the book.

I remind you one more time: this book is not free. It has its price. And I want you to pay its price. However, I let you decide on the amount. If you feel that this book costs merely 2 dollars – then send me 2 dollars. If you value it at 7 dollars – then send me 7 dollars. If you value it at 50 dollars – then send me 50 dollars. If you value it at 100 dollars – then send me 100 dollars. It is entirely up to you – how much you value the work that is included in this book. Just keep in mind that I spent on this book 5 years of my precious time, and that now I have no income.

I hope this time I made everything clear.

Thank you very much for your understanding.

Dimitri Khalezov.

Warnings.

This book is not a pleasant surprise for some who have spent by now 10 (ten!!!) years of their precious lives chewing on multiple 9/11 “conspiracy theories”. Since this book does not leave a stone unturned of those former theories, it might deeply disturb a considerable number of “conspiracy theorists” – by implying they have spent these ten years for nothing. So, do not be surprised when this book causes an extreme annoyance for many of them.

Someone might think at first that this book is just one more conspiracy theory.

Unfortunately, it is NOT a conspiracy theory. This book is an explanation for what really happened on 9/11. This is the testimony of a person who, firstly, was an appropriate specialist in related fields, and, secondly, who was personally involved with the events. That’s it.

I hope you can perceive a difference between the testimony of an eye-witness (who is also an expert at the same time) and some guessing of a lay “theorist” who neither saw, nor knew anything at all. That is the very difference between a testimony and a “conspiracy theory”.

This book not only claims something, it proves everything. And its proof is not based on logic alone. This proof also includes names, photographs, photocopies of documents, statements of well-known officials, and all necessary references – including criminal cases numbers – in where every claim of mine can be easily verified. However, if anyone is interested in more proofs and details – there is my contact information at the end of the book. All honest investigators and sincere researchers are welcome.

This book is strange. It is easily understandable and is very logical. Yet, it is not so easy to make oneself believe it because of purely psychological reasons. You will see all the facts proven and yet you might still be inclined not to accept them.

It could be partly because of our own slavish mentality so thoughtfully cultivated in us by inhumane propaganda which has heavily targeted humanity since the 19th century or it could be partly because of someone’s inborn inability to believe in anything that is unusual.

Still, I hope that freeminded people will not hesitate to understand and believe the truth in this book.

What about the rest? – I do not care about them or their opinions anyway. This book is intended exclusively for truth-seeking and freedom-loving people – neither for modern slaves, nor for their modern masters.

What can you do with someone who believes that two plus two is five because his master has told him so? Try to prove to him that it is four only? He won’t believe you even if you place four apples in front of him and carefully count them as: “one, two, three, four”, since it would be too unusual for him. In addition, he might disbelieve you because you won’t be able to produce a doctoral degree in arithmetic as some diploma is always required for these types of folks to believe you even when it comes to the mere counting of the four apples... Moreover, such folks would rather accept an idea that two by two could be five, than a possibility that his beloved master who taught them so might have cheated them. You could do really nothing in this case. Neither could I...

Anyhow, logic of this book is based on a premise that two by two is still four, even when this arithmetical operation takes place in the 21st century A.D.

Considering all of it, I could say that this book is intended exclusively for those who wish to believe in that old-fashioned (and now obviously “politically incorrect”) notion which is otherwise called elementary logic.

It is not intended for any of those who sincerely believe in the so-called “human rights”, “genocide”, “terrorism”, “money laundering”, “human trafficking”, “global warming”, and in other garbage of similar kind – invented by the so-called “good guys” mostly in the second half of the last century for entertaining modern slaves and for depriving them of their remaining freedoms and of their incomes as well.

Unfortunately, it appears that this book could be easier understood by social outcasts, rather than by so-called “good citizens”; but, still, even some “good citizens” might try getting its point if they overcome the abovementioned slavish complexes, and always keep in mind that: 1) two by two is still four, even today; and 2) a testimony of an eye-witness and a “conspiracy theory” are totally different things.

This book is awful. It deals with weapons of mass destruction. You might encounter here a cynical yet exact depiction of a real nuclear explosion over a populated area or potential effects of a plague strike against a big modern city. This book was not really intended to shock its reader; actually, it was intended only to explain in exact detail what happened on September 11, 2001, in New York and Washington. However, it became a necessity to enlighten the reader about modern nuclear terrorism, and to a certain extent – about modern so-called “bio-terrorism” as well; otherwise, many important points in regard to the actual 9/11 tragedy might be misunderstood. As a result of all of these additional explanations, plus explanations concerning the actual WTC collapse, this book became indeed a little bit shocking. It was reported that a few adult men after reading it were not able to sleep for about a week – that is how much they were shocked.

Be careful when reading this book. Take your heart medicines first, and do not read it shortly before going to bed; otherwise, you might really have nightmares. You have been warned.

Unfortunately, this warning is the maximum of what I can do in sense of any amendment. But, on the other hand, it is good that this book produces such a shocking impression. It means that it has some sense, at least; otherwise, the people would not take it so much seriously.

Chapters of this book should be read only in a currently presented order. If you try to read this book from its back, or from its middle, you risk misunderstanding its main points, and, possibly – even losing interest in reading it whatsoever. Though, if you read the book from its beginning, you will most likely enjoy reading; moreover, you are expected to properly understand everything explained here.

So, please, do not even try to attend university courses without completing your elementary school first. You have been warned.

Foreword to the edition timed to the 12th anniversary of 9/11.

I completed the main part of this book almost five years ago – by September 11, 2008, it was ready and could have been published any time. Unfortunately, it did not happen. As you could sincerely expect, this book is “politically incorrect” to such an extent that notorious concepts of alleged “freedom of speech” and alleged “freedom of expression” are simply inapplicable to it. Today, with the notorious concept of the professed “freedom of speech” you can publish practically anything, including insults against the U.S. President. The so-called “good guys” might consider allowing you to publish even certain 9/11 conspiracy theories. However, you would never be allowed to publish the actual truth of 9/11...

I was quite a realistic person and, of course, I knew in advance that it would not be that easy to publish such a seditious book in any so-called “civilized” country. Nonetheless, I sincerely hoped that I would still be able to get it published either in some “rogue” or “uncivilized” state – such as Iran or Bulgaria – where publishers might not be bound so much by “political correctness”.

Unfortunately, my hopes proved to be in vain. So on today, not only was I unable to publish this book; I was unable even to complete its proofing process – therefore, please tolerate some of my strange English expressions, including outright grammatical errors, which otherwise would have been corrected a long time ago.

To be completely honest, I would say that not all publishers refused publishing my book right away. Some of such prospective publishers spent a couple of months of my precious time by supposedly getting the book “proofed and printed”, in the meantime apparently getting some ransom from the so-called “good guys” for not publishing it. After encountering such a problem for several times in a row, I have realized that I simply can not afford to wait any longer and to continue spending my precious time and efforts on enriching unscrupulous publishers who would only use an opportunity to get hold of this book for blackmailing poor U.S. officials.

In addition to that, I eventually realized that most supposed “publishers” as well as “middlemen” who claimed to undertake publishing of this book, were simply planted on me by some secret services, in order to delay at any cost, my inevitable decision to make this book publicly available in one way or another.

Thanks to their combined efforts, the book that was actually ready to go public four years back, would only reach its reader in the year 2013. Five years have been completely stolen from me and also from you, my dear reader. But what could we do? We have to live with it... In any case “late” is better than “never”.

One might ask this question – why didn't I publish the book for free immediately upon finishing it 5 years ago? Why should I wait for five years before making such a decision?

The answer would be very trivial: it is because unlike you, guys, who have your salaries, businesses, and retirement pensions pending your old age, I have nothing at all. No business, no salary, and no retirement pension pending... Therefore, I wanted to earn some little money by officially publishing the book and getting my due from selling its hard copies. Is there anything wrong with such a normal intention?

In any case, I would appreciate receiving donations. Money is badly needed to continue spreading the truth – by maintaining and promoting web sites and videos, as well as for publishing the complete version of this book in the paper-form. If you consider donating – please, find information on how to contact me at the end of this book. This information could also be used in case you need to contact me for any other reason – such as research, inquiry, investigation, interview, cooperation in regard to publishing of this book, improvement of this book, translating this book into other languages, or for any other positive reason.

In order to prevent being impersonated by some unscrupulous guys, which, I sincerely guess, could easily happen, taking into consideration the mere sensitivity of material in this book, I decided to place here my photograph. Besides, in order to prevent unauthorized modifying of its content, the current file of the book is electronically signed by the PGP program, using my PGP key that is available on the PGP key servers.

To be continued in the next chapter (since now we are touching a new subject – the existence of skills)...

About shills, trolls, and the so-called “good guys”.

I am obliged to mention that a long time ago I sent several copies of this book (in its complete form) to various prominent 9/11 “scholars” – those, who nowadays head various “truth-seeking” 9/11 societies. I wanted either to inform them of my findings, to obtain their opinions, or even hopefully to obtain their help in publishing it.

I was surprised, however, that there was absolutely no reaction from any of them. Considering that the book, in fact, contained extremely explosive information that any true 9/11 researcher would die for, and especially taking into consideration that these “scholars” seemed to supposedly devote their very lives to this particular research and to 9/11 “truth-seeking”.

Now, I am no longer surprised by their indifference. They did not even bother to contact me anymore, despite acknowledging having received the materials. The problem is that in the U.S. all those “truth-seeking” 9/11 societies are headed by some special “trustworthy” people secretly appointed by the FBI that have the task to prevent such “truth-seeking societies” from ever finding the actual truth about 9/11.

It is easy to understand, if you take into consideration modern political technologies, one of them being “the best way to control the opposition is to lead it ourselves”.

Of course, I have to say here at least a couple of words about shills.

Actually, I noticed existence of the Internet shills (or full-time Internet-forum “trolls”, if you prefer to call them “trolls”) a very long time ago – from approximately the end of 2007. Before the end of 2007 I simply did not believe in the existence of such shills and trolls and if someone would tell me about them I would probably disbelieve. The notion that such Internet shills could exist was too strange for me to believe.

Because of my participation in various serious discussions on the Internet, I began to notice certain systematic “trolling” on the Internet forums that could not have been “accidental”. I began to analyze the typical behavior of suspected shills, cooperation between suspected shills, the time of their reaction to “dangerous” discussions, the appearance of shills’ reinforcements in order to get the numerical superiority in discussions, and so on, trying to figure out a system behind their activities. Soon, maybe in a couple of months, I was certain – shills DID EXIST. In another couple of months I trained myself to distinguish shills from the very moment of their entering an Internet discussion.

I could say that I achieved significant results in this particular field – soon I was able to spot a shill after his third, sometimes even after his second post on any Internet-forum and I have never made any mistake – I could clearly distinguish an innocent skilled debater from a skilled shill. Moreover, I concluded that the shills apparently received certain professional training prior to their dispatch to the field and because of this training they acquired some qualities that could be easily noticed in their behavior (thus, actually, betraying them as shills).

However, even though I personally was convinced that the shills did exist (and not just “convinced”, but also able to spot them at once and even to classify them) by the year 2008, I was not able to convince the rest of the Internet community as to the shills’ existence.

When I tried to alarm people that the existence of the shills is a reality that had to be dealt with, I noticed that the most of the people (if not to say the absolute majority of them) did not believe me, moreover, thinking that I might suffer from a certain “persecution mania” or something of this kind.

I was trying hard to increase the awareness of the Internet community about the shills from 2008 and up to 2011, but my efforts brought very little results: only a few people seemed to accept the fact that the shills indeed existed, but even those few seemed not to realize the true extent of the shills’ penetration of the Internet and it seemed that none of my listeners was able to master the “shills recognition technique” that I developed back in 2008. I understand their innocence – the mere fact of the shills’ existence in the wilderness of the Internet was so odd and so unbelievable that it was hard to convince oneself of this notion...

Anyway, it all changed in April 2012 with an unprecedented confession of a certain ex-shill that was published on the Internet.

Do not underestimate the importance of this confession, please. It is indeed so important and so unprecedented that even if George W. Bush or Condoleezza Rice would appear in TV and publicly admit that aluminum could not penetrate steel and that the United States leadership was duped by digital planes, even then, the abovementioned confession of the former shill would be more important in comparison.

The shill revealed nothing less than the Freemasonic modus operandi that is supposed to be kept secret forever from the people. Yes, clever people might suspect that the shills exist, but, still, they must have no proof of it. This is the main point. However, the confession of the former shill in this case provided nothing less than the proof. It is indeed very serious. So serious, that I sincerely hope the former shill is still alive. His revelation is such a big blow to the so-called “good guys” that it could be punishable by death.

Not surprisingly, today (noticed in August 2013 by one of my friends who reviewed a preliminary edition of this book) the testimony of the shill on the web page specified below¹ is being preceded by the following statement:

“Thread is close and hoaxed. The author admitted in a private exchange that the entire story was fabricated.”

The so-called “good guys” are serious. Besides, they know psychology very well. They know if they simply remove the text of the shill’s confession, it would serve as a proof that the actual story was genuine. Moreover, due to its being removed, this story would be elevated to the status of “seditious” and it would be re-published by many people on many other web sites with corresponding comments. Thus, the maximum the Freemasons could do in to minimize the damage, considering the circumstances, was to keep the original revelation in place, but to suggest it was allegedly a “hoax” + add an [unproven] claim that the turncoat shill allegedly “admitted” something in an alleged so-called “private exchange” + closing commenting on the seditious thread. They just could not afford to do more than that without aggravating the situation. However, you shall not be duped by the above addition; a serious person shall be cynical when analyzing the reality. And I sincerely hope that the reader of this book is serious enough to duly appreciate both – the recent attempt of the so-called “good guys” mentioned above and the original statement of the ex-shill mentioned below.

I think it is important to quote here the entire confession that was published on this Internet forum:
<http://www.abovetopsecret.com/forum/thread826545/pg1>

Here is its original text:

“I am writing here to come out of the closet as a paid shill. For a little over six months, I was paid to spread disinformation and argue political points on the Internet. This site, ATS, was NOT one that I was assigned to post on, although other people in the same organization were paid to be here, and I assume they still walk among you. But more on this later.

I quit this job in the latter part of 2011, because I became disgusted with it, and with myself. I realized I couldn’t look myself in the mirror anymore. If this confession triggers some kind of retribution against me, so be it. Part of being a real man in this world is having real values that you stand up for, no matter what the consequences.

My story begins in early 2011. I had been out of work for almost a year after losing my last job in tech support. Increasingly desperate and despondent, I jumped at the chance when a former co-worker called me up and said she had a possible lead for me. “It is an unusual job, and one that requires secrecy. But the pay is good. And I know you are a good writer, so it’s something you are suited for.” (Writing has always been a hobby for me). She gave me only a phone-number and an address, in one of the seedier parts of San Francisco, where I live. Intrigued, I asked her for the company’s URL and some more info. She laughed. “They don’t have a website. Or even a name. You’ll see. Just tell them I referred you.” Yes, it sounded suspicious, but long-term joblessness breeds desperation, and desperation has a funny way of overlooking the suspicious when it comes to putting food on the table.

The next day, I arrived at the address – the third floor in a crumbling building. The appearance of the place did not inspire confidence. After walking down a long, filthy linoleum-covered corridor lit by dimly-flickering halogen, I came to the entrance of the office itself: a crudely battered metal door with a sign that said “United Amalgamated Industries, Inc.” I later learned that this “company” changed its name almost monthly, always using bland names like that which gave no strong impression of what the company actually does. Not too hopeful, I went inside. The interior was equally shabby. There were a few long tables with folding chairs, at which about a dozen people were tapping away on old, beat-up computers. There were no decorations or ornaments of any type: not even the standard-issue office ficus trees or plastic ferns. What a dump. Well, beggars can’t be choosers.

The manager, a balding man in his late forties, rose from the only stand-alone desk in the room and came forward with an easy smile. “You must be Chris. Yvette [my ex-co-worker] told me you’d be coming.” [Not our real names]. “Welcome. Let me tell you a little about what we do.” No interview, nothing. I later learned they took people based solely on referral, and that the people making the referrals, like my ex-colleague Yvette, were trained to pick out candidates based on several factors including ability to keep one’s mouth shut, basic writing skills, and desperation for work.

We sat down at his desk and he began by asking me a few questions about myself and my background, including my political views (which were basically non-existent). Then he began to explain the job. “We work on influencing people’s opinions here,” is how he described it. The company’s clients paid them to post on Internet message boards and popular chatrooms, as well as in gaming forums and social networks like Facebook and MySpace. Who were these clients? “Oh, various people,” he said vaguely. “Sometimes private companies, sometimes political groups.” Satisfied that my political views were not strong, he said I would be assigned to political work. “The best people for this type of job are people like you, without strong views,” he said with a laugh. “It might seem counterintuitive, but actually we’ve found that to be the case.” Well, OK. Fine. As long as it comes with a steady paycheck, I’d believe whatever they wanted me to believe, as the guy in Ghostbusters said.

After discussing pay (which was much better than I’d hoped) and a few other details, he then went over the need for absolute privacy and secrecy. “You can’t tell anyone what we do here. Not your wife, not your dog.” (I have neither, as it happens.) “We’ll give you a cover story and even a phone number and a fake website you can use. You will have to tell people you are a consultant. Since your background is in tech support, that will be your cover job. Is this going to be a problem for you?” I assured him it would not. “Well, OK. Shall we get started?”

“No time like the present!” he said with a hearty laugh.

The rest of the day was taken up with training. Another staff member, a no-nonsense woman in her thirties, was to be my trainer, and training would only last two days. “You seem like a bright guy, you’ll get the hang of it pretty fast, I think,” she said. And indeed, the job was easier than I’d imagined. My task was simple: I would be assigned to four different websites, with the goal of entering certain discussions and promoting a certain view. I learned later that some of the personnel were assigned to internet message boards (like me), while others worked on Facebook or chatrooms. It seems these three types of media each have different strategy for shilling, and each skill concentrates on one of the three in particular.

My task? “To support Israel and counter anti-Israeli, anti-Semitic posters.” Fine with me. I had no opinions one way or another about Israel, and who likes anti-Semites and Nazis? Not me, anyway. But I didn’t know too much about the topic. “That’s OK,” she said. “You’ll pick it up as you go along. For the most part, at first, you will be doing what we call “meme-patrol.” This is pretty easy. Later if you show promise, we’ll train you for more complex arguments, where more in-depth knowledge is necessary.”

She handed me two binders with sheets enclosed in limp plastic. The first was labeled simply “Israel” in magic-marker on the cover, and it had two sections. The first section contained basic background info on the topic. I would have to read and memorize some of this, as time went on. It had internet links for further reading, essays and talking points, and excerpts from some history books. The second, and larger, section was called “Strat” (short for “strategy”) with long lists of “dialogue pairs.” These were specific responses to specific postings. If a poster wrote something close to “X,” we were supposed to respond with something close to “Y.” “You have to mix it up a bit, though,” said my trainer. “Otherwise it gets too obvious. Learn to use a thesaurus.” This section also contained a number of hints for de-railing conversations that went too far away from what we were attempting. These strategies included various forms of personal attacks, complaining to the forum moderators, smearing the characters of our opponents, using images and icons effectively, and even dragging the tone of the conversation down with sexual innuendo, links to pornography, or other such things. "Sometimes we have to fight dirty," our trainer told us. "Our opponents don't hesitate to, so we can't either."

The second binder was smaller, and it contained information specific to the web sites I would be assigned to. The sites I would work were: Godlike Productions, Lunatic Outpost, CNN news, Yahoo News, and a handful of smaller sites that rotated depending on need. As stated, I was NOT assigned to work ATS (although others in my group were), which is part of the reason I am posting this here, rather than elsewhere. I wanted to post this on Godlike Productions at first, but they have banned me from even viewing that site for some reason (perhaps they are onto me?). But if somebody connected with this site can get the message to them, I think they should know about it, because that was the site I spent a good 70% of my time working on.

The site-specific info in the second binder included a brief history of each site, including recent flame-wars, as well as info on what to avoid on each site so as not to get banned. It also had quite detailed info on the moderators and the most popular regged posters on each site: location (if known), personality type, topics of interest, background sketch, and even some notes on how to "push the psychological buttons" of different posters. Although I didn't work for ATS, I did see they had a lot of info on your so-called "WATS" posters here (the ones with gold borders around their edges). "Focus on the popular posters," my trainer told me. "These are the influential ones. Each of these is worth 50 to 100 of the lesser known names." Each popular poster was classified as "hostile," "friendly," or "indifferent" to my goal. We were supposed to cultivate friendship with the friendly posters as well as the mods (basically, by brownnosing and sucking up), and there were even notes on strategies for dealing with specific hostile posters. The info was pretty detailed, but not perfect in every case. "If you can convert one of the hostile posters from the enemy side to our side, you get a nice bonus. But this doesn't happen too often, sadly. So mostly you'll be attacking them and trying to smear them."

At first, like I said, my job was "meme-patrol." This was pretty simple and repetitive; it involved countering memes and introducing new memes, and didn't demand much in-depth knowledge of the subject. Mostly just repetitive posting based on the dialogue pairs in the "Strat" section of the first binder. A lot of my job was de-railing and spamming threads that didn't go our way, or making accusations of racism and anti-Semitism. Sometimes I had to simply lie and claim a poster said something or did something "in another thread" they really hadn't said or done. I felt bad about this...but in the end I felt worse about the possibility of losing the first job I'd been able to get since losing my "real" job.

The funny thing was, although I started the job with no strong opinions or political views, after a few weeks of this I became very emotionally wedded to the pro-Israel ideas I was pushing. There must be some psychological factor at work...a good salesman learns to honestly love the products he's selling, I guess. It wasn't long before my responses became fiery and passionate, and I began to learn more about the topic on my own. "This is a good sign," my trainer told me. "It means you are ready for the next step: complex debate."

The "complex debate" part of the job involved a fair amount of additional training, including memorizing more specific information about the specific posters (friendly and hostile) I'd be sparring with. Here, too, there were scripts and suggested lines of argument, but we were given more freedom. There were a lot of details to this more advanced stage of the job – everything from how to select the right avatar to how to use "demotivationals" (humorous images with black borders that one finds floating around the web). Even the proper use of images of cats was discussed. Sometimes we used faked or photo-shopped images or doctored news reports (something else that bothered me).

I was also given the job of trying to find new recruits, people "like me" who had the personality type, ability to keep a secret, basic writing/thinking skills, and desperation necessary to sign on a skill. I was less successful at this part of the job, though, and I couldn't find another in the time I was there.

After a while of doing this, I started to feel bad. Not because of the views I was pushing (as I said, I was first apolitical, then pro-Israel), but because of the dishonesty involved. If my arguments were so correct, I wondered, why did we have to do this in the first place? Shouldn't truth propagate itself naturally, rather than through, well...propaganda? And who was behind this whole operation, anyway? Who was signing my paychecks? The stress of lying to my parents and friends about being a "consultant" was also getting to me. Finally, I said enough was enough. I quit in September 2011. Since then I've been working a series of unglamorous temp office jobs for lower pay. But at least I'm not making my living lying and heckling people who come online to express their views and exercise freedom of speech.

A few days ago I happened to be in the same neighborhood and on a whim thought I'd check out the old office. It turns out the operation is gone, having moved on. This, too, I understood, is part of their strategy: Don't stay in the same place for too long, don't keep the same name too long, move on after half a year or so. Keeping a low profile, finding new employees through word of mouth: All this is part of the skill way of life. But it is a deceptive way of life, and no matter how noble the goals (I remain pro-Israel, by the way), these sleazy means cannot be justified by the end.

This is my confession. I haven't made up my mind yet about whether I want to talk more about this, so if I don't respond to this thread, don't be angry. But I think you should know: Shills exist. They are real. They walk among you, and they pay special attention to your popular gold-bordered WATS posters. You should be aware of this. What you choose to do with this awareness is up to you.

Yours,

ExSkill

April 2012"

I am proud to announce that the former skill revealed exactly what I was convinced of by the year of 2008. The above revelation confirmed that I did not make any exaggeration when I was trying to convince the innocent Internet auditorium about the skills' activities and their modus operandi.

Now, when I read the above confession, I could put my signature under every word of it – it is exactly the truth. The above description matches the reality exactly 100%. It contains no lie and not even exaggeration. Even the Godlike Productions forum where I personally used to battle the skills in reality is mentioned there...

As you can see from the above confession, the former skill who published it was specialized on derailing discussions dangerous to the state of Israel and his primary task was to suppress any anti-Israeli and anti-Jewish sentiment.

However, based on the abovementioned details, you can easily imagine that there must be a considerable number of the skills whose specialty is to derail dangerous 9/11 discussions – primarily the discussions that touch the two most "unwanted" aspects of the 9/11 truth:

- the so-called "no-plane" theory;
- and the fact that the WTC was demolished by underground nuclear explosions (hence the "ground zero" name).

From now on, please, understand:

- 1) The skills do exist.
- 2) The fact of the skills' existence is an extremely seditious issue, which must be kept secret from the gullible consumers of the Internet;
- 3) The skills are many; their total number is considerably big – bigger than you could imagine;
- 4) The skills are trained professionals; they are at least well-educated, moreover, skills are skilled in demagogy and many of them are better in conducting an argument, than you, an untrained, and, moreover, unsuspecting innocent person;
- 5) The skills infest the Internet; their presence is considerable on every populated Internet forum;
- 6) The skills have much better cooperation with each other than innocent people; this allows the skills to seemingly "win" any and every argument they wish;
- 7) The skills can easily call for reinforcements – thus, easily gaining numerical superiority on any dangerous Internet-discussion and so being able to easily crush such a discussion;
- 8) The skills deeply study their subject first and so they indeed possess the required knowledge that could be used for both – for successful arguing and for appearing as "knowledgeable researchers" to innocent gullible people;
- 9) The skills are not only good in demagogy and skilled in conducting an argument in general; the skills are knowledgeable in psychology and they know how to knock down their opponents by smearing and by insulting in case they can not defeat them by proper arguing;
- 10) The skills have very good salaries; their salaries are considerably higher than those of other professionals;
- 11) It is you, a gullible taxpayer, who actually pay the numerous skills their high salaries;
- 12) The skills receive their income from you and yet they dupe you, dear reader...

It is good to observe, that people began to wake up in regard to the shills during the year 2012. It means, that the shills were, at last, NOTICED by the community! This is really great news! For over 10 years the shills acted with unprecedented audacity and impunity – because gullible common people took the shills and “their opinions” for genuine things. It is no longer the case: the shills are being more and more often recognized these days by pretty ordinary, formerly unsuspecting people, who were, at last, made aware of the shills’ existence. Moreover, there are attempts to study the shills and to classify them, undertaken by serious researchers, who try to analyze the shills’ behavior and to publish their findings for the community.

I was really pleased to discover a great article on the shills published by a famous internet-journalist and a former U.S. military intelligence officer Gordon Duff in the “Veterans Today” on-line magazine. The article named “Scamsters, Spies and Trolls, an Internet Story; Paid $25 Per Hour to Infect Your Life”² provided an interesting analysis of the shilling and trolling on the Internet. Gordon’s analyses are not limited to the typical forums/chatrooms activities of the shills, described above; he also mentions campaigns of harassment conducted by the shills, and even outright criminal enterprises run by the shills and their bosses in order to fund the actual shilling activities. I highly recommend everyone to read the abovementioned article. Such good articles on the shills and the trolls are still very rare (and we can understand why they are very rare – the shills still hold the numerical superiority on the most important web forums and they do all they can to prevent their opponents from publishing such things). However, I hope the community will wake up completely and that the exposed shills and trolls (and their actual methods) will get the due attention.

Just to add here my personal observation-contemplation and a bit of recent history.

You have to understand that freedom of speech was always dangerous for authorities. The authorities have always tried to control the freedom of speech whether directly or indirectly.

In the “good old days”, the control was easier because there was no mass-media in the modern sense. There were no means to address many people at once with some seditious statement. You could not publish any seditious thing in a newspaper because all newspapers either belonged to the so-called “good guys” or were controlled by them. As the last line of defense there was always an official censorship that would prohibit any dangerous publication. The same thing could be said about the radio. To operate a radio-transmitter you must have a license and you would never get the license if the so-called “good guys” were not sure about your loyalty and your adherence to “political correctness”.

When the first manual typewriters came into existence, they were not so “free” as you might think. They were sold only to authorized people, or, at least, their purchases were registered, so that each sold typewriter could be traced to a particular user (much in the same sense as a licensed firearm could be traced to a person who bought it from a gun-shop).

Moreover, it was obligatory in those “good old days” to take a “control print” from every typewriter and to keep it with the authorities (this served as more or less a “fingerprint” of any and every typewriter for forensic reasons, so in case the authorities would discover a seditious statement printed they could easily find the typewriter used and its owner).

Later, with the development of computer-connected printers and appearance of cheaper electrical typewriters, the authorities eased the control of these potentially seditious devices. However, by then, the general degradation of the Western society, affected by corrupting freedom of sex and by other easily available entertainments, by destructive rock music and by other aspects of the “mass-culture”, by alienating the younger generation from adults, and by an intentional decline in general education, made people much less susceptible to potentially seditious ideas. Therefore, the so-called “good guys” cared much less about the proliferation of typewriters and printers in the ‘50s than they used to care about the typewriters in the pre-WWII era.

Nonetheless, when easily affordable copying machines came into existence, the so-called “good guys” were alarmed again. Not before the middle of the ‘70s the copying machines were freed from any control. Before that, such machines were duly supervised in order not to allow some “rogue people” to use them for multiplying works of Stalin, Mao Tse-tung or Che Guevara, for example. Later, with the death of Mao and with further degradation of the Western society (which by the end of the '70s became even lesser susceptible to the potentially seditious ideas than it used to be in the '60s), the copying machines were deemed no longer dangerous and were freed from any state control whatsoever.

When it comes to the potential publishing of seditious statements in the printed mass-media, the so-called "good guys" did not worry much, since the mass-media belonged to them and even in the absence of the official governmental censorship they could still successfully censor any unwanted content (by simply ordering the owners of the mass-media to adhere to the "political correctness").

As you could imagine, in the situations described above there was simply no need to employ any skills.

However, it was all changed with the appearance of the free Internet. The so-called "good guys" could no longer control it.

What they could do in this case? Of course, the easiest thing is to prohibit the Internet. Unfortunately, it is impossible right now. Later, the so-called "good guys" will definitely prohibit, or, at least, severely restrict the Internet and you don't even have to doubt it – they already are doing it slowly but surely. For the time being, they have to combat the dangerous tendencies on the Internet. It is obvious.

How they could do it? Try to guess. The only way to do it is to employ the skills – trained professionals who could successfully derail dangerous discussions and help the so-called "good guys" to maintain at least some order on the Internet in one way or another.

Do you still doubt that the skills exist? Do not doubt it. Use your logic to understand that skills MUST exist in the present conditions and therefore they DO exist. And read the confession of the former skill quoted above one more time.

Coming back to the professional 9/11 conspiracy theorists and the full-time "9/11 truth-seekers". You don't have to doubt that many of those "9/11 truth-seeking scholars" are merely secret government agents secretly tasked with never allowing the "truth-seekers" under their command to find any truth. This is a very sad fact, but it is the fact and we have to live with it. The same thing could probably be said about the moderators and owners of many of the more prominent Internet forums specializing on 9/11 – they are skills; whether you like it or not. Once you finish reading this book and get its main point, you will be surprised how ignorant many of those 9/11 truth-seekers actually are, despite their endless and seemingly "genuine" efforts to dig to the truth that last, to remind you, well over a decade...

As I have already warned above, most of "professional" 9/11 conspiracy theorists, those who routinely spend their precious time chatting in various Internet forums and otherwise parasitizing on the 9/11 topic, without any doubt will be greatly annoyed by this book. They will be annoyed not because my claims in this book are inconsistent, but because of the diametrically opposite reason: because my claims are logical and consistent, thus leaving no room for them to continue to parasitize on the 9/11 topic which they got used to during the last 10 years.

Try to understand them – they got used to chewing on various conspiracy theories in regard to 9/11, routinely spending many hours per day sticking in various Internet forums and even sitting physically in various "truth-finding" 9/11-related societies. This became their life-style. It does not matter that during their 10-year long "research" they managed not to even come close to the truth. This apparent failure does not bother them – despite the fact those 10 years were enough to complete two additional university courses with 2 master-degrees per each of them. What matters is the very process – to chew on various conspiracy theories has become a self-purpose...

Therefore when someone attempts to steal their favorite chews from their mouths by replacing it with a healthy, delicious, but one-time only meal, it understandably causes their displeasure and their displeasure could be, in fact, very intense.

It is easy to understand them. Just try to imagine yourself in their shoes – imagine that you got used to spending all your time chatting with other 9/11 conspiracy theorists for the last 10 years, and now, at last, you have gotten the point and therefore beginning from tomorrow there is nothing else to discuss on 9/11-related Internet forums... The 9/11 battle is clearly over, the case is closed, and you have to come back to your normal life – and so to spend your future efforts on renovating your house, for example, or to devote some time to your kids, at last. Can you imagine your indignation in such a case?

Therefore, do not be surprised when this book will be attacked from every side. The government agents and shills will attack it with one (understandable one) reason in mind, while “professional” 9/11 conspiracy theorists (the absolute majority of whom are government shills too) will lash out at it with either the same reason in mind, or merely out of jealousy, or simply because of their annoyance that someone dared to steal their beloved toys and so to deprive them of their favorite pastimes...

But who cares about their problems and feelings? Dogs bark, caravan moves on.

These folks had their sick fun for more than 10 years and that should be enough. Even they knew very well, they could not continue their cheating forever and one day all fruits of their efforts would be flushed down the lavatory when the truth would be revealed.

Now the time has come. The truth is available and you have a chance to get acquainted with it and judge it yourself. Just read the book and you will have your own ideas.

About this book.

There have been many books and other researches undertaken on this general topic: “9/11; who carried it out and why they did it; how the U.S. Government lies to us, etc.” Most of these sources claim not more and not less but the “final truth” in the last instance.

Who did it? Of course, it was G.W. Bush and his clique.

Why did they do it? Of course, they did it because they wanted to attack Iraq and lay their hands on Iraqi oil and looked for a beautiful pretext to do so.

How did they manage to collapse the Twin Towers? Of course, by TNT (or C4) charges pre-positioned on each floor and simultaneously detonated.

Why then were temperatures on “Ground Zero” so high that the boots of the firefighters completely melted in a few hours – even after a few weeks had passed from the actual Towers collapse? Of course, it is because “Bush and his clique” used thermite, in addition to the TNT and C4 charges.

How did these “Bush and his clique” manage to strike the Pentagon? Of course, they did it by a “Tomahawk” missile of their own.

But why then did they run an atomic alert in that case, hid themselves in anti-atomic bunkers, and even managed to scramble their “doomsday plane”, which until now they scarcely admitted to the general public? Oh, really? This I did not know... May be they did that just to enhance an overall picture...

And you, serious reader, do you really believe that all was as simple as claimed above?

Do you seriously believe that an aluminum-made “Tomahawk” would be capable of penetrating 6 (six!) capital walls of the Pentagon, simultaneously causing the most serious atomic alert known in the entire U.S. history? Don’t you think that a “Tomahawk” would simply smash itself flat on the very first wall?

Do you seriously believe that charges of TNT or C4 would be really capable of instantly reducing double-walled steel columns of the Twin Towers (each wall being as thick as a tank’s armor) to complete microscopic dust and so – causing the Towers collapse with near the speed of free fall?

Do you really believe that thermite (that is indeed capable of causing the effect seen by everybody in an event of electric welding) is capable of continuing to melt boots of the firefighters for as long as a few weeks after September the 11th?

Do you really believe that “Bush” and his alleged “clique” were indeed capable of instantly causing such unprecedented damage using the abovementioned cheap stuff as C4, TNT, Thermite, and a “Tomahawk”?

And, at last, do you seriously believe that such a malicious “clique” might really exist in a transparent democratic society, such as The United States of America, and feel free to perform so many technical miracles in order to impress their gullible fellow citizens?

Oh, we almost forgot about the so-called “initiated” guys – senators, congressmen, top judges, military brass, foreign prime-ministers, and other dignitaries who did not even question those ridiculous conclusions of the infamous “9/11 Commission” and seem to be fully satisfied with its “findings”.

I mean we almost forgot about those high-ranking guys who did not hesitate to name the former WTC site by a peculiar nuclear name “Ground Zero” and who in the same time pretended “to believe” that it was aviation fuel, namely “kerosene”, that allegedly “completely melted” steel core and steel perimeter columns of the Twin Towers into fluffy microscopic dust and then continued to melt boots of the “Ground Zero” responders for another 4 (four) months.

What about those high-ranking guys? Are they really that stupid?

No, obviously they are not. At least, not to the extent they appear to be in this case.

Those seemingly “stupid” high-ranking guys have some extenuating circumstances. They believe that it was indeed Saddam Hussein who supplied Osama bin Laden and Co. with certain portable nuclear weapons, possibly stolen Soviet-made “suit-case nukes” – similar to those that destroyed the U.S. Embassies in Kenya and Tanzania on an anniversary of the Hiroshima bombing – and these tiny nuclear munitions were allegedly the true cause of the Twin Towers disasters (hence the name “Ground Zero”).

But you, serious reader, do you really believe that such a laughable 1 (one) kiloton in TNT yield mini-nuclear charge would be really capable of instantly reducing the over 350 meters long and extremely robust steel Towers structure into complete microscopic dust? Or would you rather believe that such a “mini-nuke” (if any) would, instead, cause the Tower to be undercut and fall over?

Interestingly, while almost everybody is in a hurry to answer these relatively unimportant questions: “Who did this” and “Why they did this”, no one has ever been able to satisfactorily answer this seemingly reasonable question: “How did they manage to do it from the merely technical point of view and so to achieve those incredible results that everyone saw on his/her TV?”

I guess it is clear to everybody that to answer “TNT/C4/Thermite and Tomahawk”, is not a satisfactory answer to this question. It is by no means better than the well-known answer “Kerosene and the Boeing 757”. Unfortunately, “stolen Soviet-made suit-case nukes of 1 kiloton in TNT yield!” is not a valid answer either – despite the common misconception.

This book will satisfactorily answer this question concerning all 9/11 “victims” – WTC-1, WTC-2, WTC-7, and the Pentagon.

No, it was not two stolen Soviet “suit-case nukes” that instantly transformed the WTC1, 2 and 7 into piles of microscopic dust. It was something else; many times more powerful than those laughable one- or two kiloton “mini-nukes”. You will know what it really was after reading this book.

No, it was not two mini-nuclear explosions on Manhattan that determined the peculiar “Ground Zero” name promptly awarded by Civil Defense dosimetrists to the WTC demolition site. It was three nuclear explosions that did the job and neither of the three was “mini”. Moreover, these three were not just “nuclear”, but “thermonuclear”.

No, it was not an aluminum-made “Tomahawk” that managed to penetrate six capital walls of the Pentagon and to cause the most serious atomic alert during the entire history of The United States. It was something much stronger and faster; much more expensive, and much more awful than a “Tomahawk”. Not only will you know from this book what really struck the Pentagon on 9/11; you will even be able to see a picture of that peculiar thing.

No, it was neither George W. Bush, nor his alleged “clique”, who stood behind this most heinous and the most incredible 9/11 perpetration. It was another person and another “clique”; and, what is the most important, this “another person” is not as mysterious as you might guess. He has his exact name, his date of birth, his country of origin, his color photograph, and even a photocopy of his diplomatic passport. And, unlike mysterious Osama bin Laden, that real person is still available (at least it was so as on June 2008 when I wrote these lines).

As I have mentioned, most of the existing books on the 9/11 topic attempt to somehow answer the two questions: “Who did it?” and “Why they did it?” leaving practically without any answer the most interesting question, “How they did it?”

In the current book you will encounter a totally different approach. This book answers questions: “Who did it?” and “How they did it?” Both of these questions will be answered precisely, in exact detail. You will have the exact name of the chief perpetrator and the exact technical details of the actual perpetration.

After reading of this book, simple people who were fed with the “findings” of the 9/11 Commission will no longer wonder how someone could achieve a feat of reducing thick steel columns into microscopic dust using TNT, C4, thermite, or so-called “nano-thermite”.

While the prominent people (confidentially fed with the “mini-nukes” theory) will no longer wonder how someone could use a seemingly uncontrollable nuclear explosion so precisely as to cause the rigid 415 meters long structures to fall straight down in disintegrated condition, rather than causing them to simply fall to a side as whole pieces.

Of course, some unfortunate people will, at last, understand that they now suffer from leukemia and from various kinds of cancer not because of alleged “asbestos dust” but because of an entirely different reason.

No major question of technical nature should remain unanswered after you finish reading this book neither in regard to the WTC-1, -2 and -7, nor in regard to the Pentagon.

Moreover, this time I decided to even answer the question “Why they did it?”

Initially, when I prepared the first edition of this book, I did not want to answer this question. I wanted to limit myself to answering only “Who?” and “How?” It seemed to me that to answer the question “Why?” would be unnecessary, since I thought that people are observant and educated enough to understand why they did it without any additional guidance on my part.

However, after participating in various Internet-discussions, and after reading lots of published opinions, and also after being acquainted with lots of loony conspiracy theories, I realized that the most people have been duped into a wrong perception of reality. Thus, I decided that a failure to educate my reader in this regard would be a crime on my part. I do not want to commit this crime. Therefore, I added somewhere closer to the end of my book a couple of new chapters entirely devoted to those so-called “good guys” who planned and executed the unprecedented 9/11 project. From the actual book you will understand how they did it. But from those particular chapters you will understand why they did it.

Do not jump directly to those chapters, though. It would be a premature step. Read the book first. You will be much better prepared to understand who committed the 9/11 perpetration and why they committed it, if you reach that chapter in a “natural” way – by reading all the chapters of this book one-by-one, in the prescribed order.

When it comes to the methodology of presenting this information to you, I decided to do it in a bit unusual way.

The problem is that the 9/11 is a complex event. It is impossible to understand only one part of it, taken entirely out of context of the whole thing. The 9/11 affair could only be understood in full, in its entire complexity, “as is”. And I promise you, you will understand it in its entirety (if you only bother to read the chapters of this book in the due order).

However, you should understand, that the 9/11 project was indeed a grandiose project. It was a highly sophisticated program that could be compared to some sophisticated computer program.

Just imagine, you have a certain nicely functioning computer program, a so-called “utility”. This utility appears for you as merely an icon on your computer’s “desktop”, plus, when you double-click this icon, the utility will pop-up some window where you could click some buttons and do your intended task. Certainly, as an end-user, you have no clue how much effort its programmers spent in conceiving, designing, developing, testing and polishing this program before you could click its installer and see its ready-to-start icon on your desktop. You have no clue of how many elements this utility consists, and what these elements are – it could only be understood by a programmer.

Now, imagine that you are a hacker. You need to understand how this program works, let’s say, in order to make its unauthorized modification. However, you can not so simply get to its source code – it is most probably protected by its legitimate developer. In order to get to its source code, you have to “disassemble” the program, or, speaking in terms of computer jargon, to subject this utility to the process, known as “reverse engineering”. Only after this, you could get access to the program’s separate components and to analyze each of them. Finally, after you analyzed and modified, if necessary, certain components, you might try to assemble it back. As a result of such a disassembling you will certainly understand how this program functions. However, without subjecting it to the disassembling, you have no chance. All you could do – is to continue to double-click its icon and to use this program as an ordinary lay user whom it is intended for. This makes the difference between a consumer and a researcher.

The point is that in this case we do not want to consume the 9/11 project. We want to understand it.

Now, imagine that the 9/11 project is not just “complex”. It is more than complex. Moreover, it was from the very beginning intended for at least two separate levels of consumption. It must be consumed by the general public in one way, and, at the same time, it must be consumed by targeted officials in a very different way. Even more than that, as a “well-developed project”, 9/11 is designed to be consumed in a continuous manner, for many years ahead. Both – the plebs and the high-ranking officials – continue to consume the 9/11 project even today, in 2013, almost 12 years after its first presentation.

Of course, here we are going to study the 9/11 project in a serious, professional manner. Thus, we will have no choice but to disassemble the actual project first. Then – we will subject deep scrutiny to each of its multiple aspects separately. And only then – we will assemble this project again, and with the newly acquired understanding we will make a brief, final overview of the assembled thing. After that, I guarantee you the full understanding of 9/11.

As you could probably imagine, such an approach made this book quite thick. I would be pleased to make it smaller, but it is impossible without damaging its quality. Have you ever seen how thick is Microsoft's book on its Windows XP, for example? I am just trying to say that complex things require a certain minimal thickness of manuals that describe them. The 9/11 project was too complex. Therefore, the size of the first ever complete studying book on it should match the complexity of the subject. Sorry for that.

Anyway, I hope, you will like this book, and even if you don't, I hope you will still find it interesting enough to read from beginning to end.

I really did my best in compiling this book, and many people, who were given test copies to read, said that it was comprehensive research leaving practically no question unanswered – either in regard to 9/11 or in regard to the nuclear terrorism in general.

Some of my first readers even suggested re-naming this book “The encyclopedia of 9/11 and of modern nuclear terrorism” – the status, they claimed, it truly deserved.

However, I decided to ignore their flattering suggestion and stick to the original version of its name: “9/11thology: V for Vendetta and R for Reality. The “third” truth about 9/11, or Defending the US Government, which has only the first two...”

I think this former name reflects the purpose, the way of compiling (single-man's job), and actual contents of the book more precisely as the name “Encyclopedia” – however flattering it might sound to me.

Read it and you will understand why.

Thanks for your kind interest in downloading and reading my work.

Dimitri Khalezov.

P.S. Since I have neither time, nor money to arrange the proper proofing process of the text of my book, you are going to read the text that may contain accidental grammatical and stylistic errors, that are due to English being not my native language. I would like to apologize for it in advance. The final edited version of my book will definitely contain fewer errors than this one.

Thanks.

Special thanks to the late Lak Nitiwattanawichan – my former lawyer in Thailand. He was the man who virtually opened my eyes and helped me understand many strange things I otherwise would never be able to understand. If not for him, I may not have had the reasons and mood to create this book. Moreover, shortly before his death, Mr. Lak Nitiwattanawichan let me know some secrets of the Freemasonic sect – including those related to the 9/11 Pentagon attack and to the confidential information behind Victor Bout's (the so-called "Merchant of Death" and the so-called "Lord of War") extradition case. He also revealed to me a couple of the most awful secrets of the Kingdom of Thailand. Many of you might remember Mr. Lak Nitiwattanawichan – he was Victor Bout's lawyer here in Bangkok's Criminal Court during the infamous extradition case of Victor initiated by the United States' DEA in 2008.

Special thanks to another person who represents the same camp of the so-called "good" – Mr. Bekhterev July (or "Yuliy") Germanovich, a former chief-editor of Soviet journal "Philately" – for his kind, although indirect guidance to understanding some other peculiar things. If not for several artifacts that were willingly or accidentally provided by him, it would not be possible to establish many things in regard to 9/11 nor some other acts of nuclear terrorism that led to the creation of this work. This man, who boasts his powers being probably next only to those of The God Almighty, really did his best to ensure that this book would appear and bring the true enlightenment to humanity.

Special thanks to the late Mr. Boris Natanovich Strugatsky, a famous author of Soviet-Russian science-fiction novels and yet another important representative of the same camp of the so-called "good", for his help in understanding certain things that made this book possible.

Thanks to my late friend Vadim Alexandrovski, who contributed a great deal of work and research that helped to complete this book. Without his efforts it would not be as comprehensive as it is now. If not for him, I would not have been certain regarding the exact origins of the missile that hit the Pentagon. I had wanted Vadim to be mentioned as one of this book's co-authors, but he categorically refused. He believed that certain pieces of sensitive information used in here were obtained from the Freemasons, and, being too proud a person, he could not afford to accept any sop from those disgusting folks. This should mean that the humble author of these lines is not so proud since while hating the Freemasons to the very same extent, I didn't abhor undersigning my name. However, it seems that I had no choice – I really wanted this information to go public and if it were anonymous it would have no credibility. Moreover, I am certain that the mere fact of the publication of this book will cause extreme damage to the Freemasonic sect that is primarily responsible for the New World Order in general and for the 9/11 production in particular. Vadim Alexandrovski is indirectly known to many of you because the Freemasons devoted to him at least two well-known movies in the recent years. He was the main character in the "Blood of Templars" as well as in "Gone in Sixty Seconds" – Nicolas Cage played no one else than Vadim in that movie. Vadim Alexandrovski was murdered ("suicided") here, in Bangkok, on the 10th of October 2011 – in an apparent connection to our combined efforts to create troubles for the Freemasonic sect and for the Israeli Mossad. I can not officially mention Vadim's name as the co-author of this book because I wish to respect his last wishes. Vadim, however, contributed a lot to the creation of this book and even if he did not want to be mentioned as its co-author, at least, he has to be credited as helping.

Thanks to one kind lady whose name is not to be revealed to mortals but is definitely known to the Lord God – if not for her wholehearted support and selfless devotion to the cause, you wouldn't be reading this book now.

Thanks to Loida dela Cruz, a brave woman, who risked tricking the most serious secret services of the world and so saved invaluable computer-files that were eventually used in creation of this book.

Thanks to my friend Daniel Estulin, the brave investigative journalist and the author of several bestselling anti-New World Order books about the Bilderberg Group. He has been quoted saying that the Bilderberg Group's "main objective is creating a World Government ruled by an elite group of people whose main objective is to control the Natural resources of the Planet". Daniel provided truly invaluable support to my humble efforts to reveal the truth about 9/11.

Thanks to my friend Andrew Musacchio for his wholehearted support of my work and for his professional advice.

Thanks to my friend Viktor Bauer for his wholehearted support of my work, for his active participation in promoting and defending it from shills, and for supplying me with important information included in this book.

Thanks to my friend Sebastian Armbrüster, a student from Germany, for his invaluable help in obtaining rare dictionaries needed to compile this research.

Thanks to my friend Mauricio Massa, a highly-qualified Portuguese interpreter, for his invaluable help in obtaining rare dictionaries needed to compile this research as well as for his professional advice.

Thanks to my friend Marc Pinke, a qualified web programmer from Canada for his help in obtaining rare 9/11 materials and for his helpful advice.

Thanks to a nice guy who calls himself the “Finnish Military Expert” for providing me invaluable information.

Thanks to retired NYPD Detective John Walcott, a famous “Ground Zero” responder, whose ordeal, which was well publicized on the Internet, became an actual source of my inspiration to create this book.

Thanks to everyone who managed to record contemporary news releases during the 9/11 events and made their recordings publicly available. Without this invaluable video evidence, that is no longer officially available, this book would not be as comprehensive as it is now.

Thanks to everyone whose photographs are used in this book.

My deep appreciation goes to all of the others here and there, who made this book possible.

Disclaimers (please, make sure to read all):

1. Concerning possible accusations of falsifying facts or defaming “innocent” people.

Everything that is claimed in this book can be easily verified. The only exception to this rule is a chapter of this book named “Technicalities of the WTC-7 collapse and the rest of the WTC collapses from the logical point of view. Unproven suspicions.” This particular chapter was composed using guessing rather than exact knowledge of facts. However, even in regard to this chapter, I believe everything stated in it is still verifiable.

When it comes to the rest of facts mentioned in this book, all of them are well-known, well-documented, and in the most part they were published in open sources, so all necessary links and other references are provided here. Even when it comes to the particular people having significant roles in 9/11 events or in other acts of so-called “terrorism”, all my claims in regard to them can be easily verified too – thanks to a few criminal cases instituted against these people. Various personal data, photographs, photocopies of their documents, and other information on these people are available in corresponding case-files in either United States courts, or in courts of the Kingdom of Thailand; the case-numbers are mentioned in this book.

Anything doubtful can be easily verified using these references. In addition to all of that, I myself am not just a lone witness who can testify to confirm all these claims. There are several more witnesses who could testify too, since they were somehow involved in events described in this book along with its author. Thus, one must not have any doubt in regard to the authenticity of my claims in this book, irrespective of how strange and unbelievable they might appear.

2. Concerning possible accusations in connection with so-called “anti-Semitism”.

This book might appear “anti-Semitic” to many people who have gotten used to routine “political correctness”. I wish it to be understood, however, that I did not intend to make it “anti-Semitic”, even to the slightest extent, and I insist that it is not “anti-Semitic”.

This book may only appear “anti-Semitic” because I just freely talk here about involvement of some descendents of Jacob into modern terrorism activities. I am not defaming anybody and I can prove all of my accusations in the course of legal proceedings in any country, including even in an Israeli court (providing those proceedings are indeed legal, of course). I am by no means against the State of Israel; and, unlike many Arabs and Muslims, who believe that Israel is the “unlawful entity”, I sincerely believe that the State of Israel has its undeniable right to exist.

Being a reasonable person, I even understand that the State of Israel, being indeed a small country surrounded by an overwhelmingly large number of enemies, has to employ extraordinary means to ensure its defense and its eventual survival.

However, I believe that this time the small pitiable State of Israel has gone far beyond the boundaries of any reasonable defense. Moreover, the State of Israel, which according to the very sense of Judaism should have served as an example of freedom, has become the most important tool of those behind the curtain who want to enslave the entire mankind on this Planet.

Upon its creation, the State of Israel was intended to become an outpost of freedom; but, it did not take long for those “behind the curtain” to transform this new state into their most formidable weapon which they turned against that very freedom. Therefore, the modern State of Israel is by no means the “promised land” into which people can escape slavery from the house of slave-owning Egypt. It rather became the very military base where elite troops of the New Global Egypt are stationed. The Star of David, which is still depicted on the Israeli flag, should not mislead you. It now has nothing to do with David. It is no more than a relic and from the point of view of logic, the Israelis should have depicted on their flag the very Egyptian pyramid with an eye of Satan – right from the US one dollar bill.

There shall be no doubt that Israel has become a criminal enterprise in every possible sense judging from either the point of view of the ancient religion or from the point of view of modern criminal law. This state of affairs has to be brought to an end. I hope this book will help to do it.

Indeed, this book might seriously harm the State of Israel, but even this does not make this book “anti-Semitic”. I do not even believe that the term “anti-Semitism” makes any sense in the modern world – as it did at the beginning of the 20th century, when the Jews, who attempted to continue to abide in feudal freedom under the Law of Moses amidst constitutional environments, were subjected to officially approved persecutions in many post-feudal countries.

It shall be understood that modern so-called “Jews” do not practice the Law of Moses in excess of the freemasonic constitution any longer, and as such, they actually lost the very right to be called “Jews”. Moreover, the very reason for which these so-called “Jews” might differ from the rest of the inhabitants of their respective countries ceased to exist.

Please, try to realize that formerly (I mean in the 19th century and at the beginning of the 20th century A.D.), a Jew could be contrasted against the rest of people of a country because the Jew refused to accept that country’s citizenship – he preferred to abide by the Law of Moses and so deny the constitution of the country. The Jew in those days was clearly, obviously, self-evidently, an anti-social element – akin to a Gypsy, a Sicilian Mafioso, or to a Maoist insurgent. In those days, rulers of the non-feudal countries had to counteract the anti-social and anti-constitutional stance of the Jews. The rulers also had to counteract the Jew’s potentially seditious influence on the so-called “Christians” and on the so-called “Muslims”. The Christians and the Muslims, according to their sense of their religion, were supposed to abide by the Old Testament and by Tawrat/Adat, respectively, and to whom the “anti-social” Jews, abiding by the Torah, might show a very dangerous example to follow. Hence the anti-Semitism. The rulers those days had to certainly defend their “constitutions” and supposed “absolute monarchies” (as well as the actual flocks of supposed “Christians” and so-called “Muslims”) from the subversion imminently carried out by the rebellious Jews. That is exactly why they promoted the anti-Semitic ideology and had from time to time to stir up the anti-Semitic sentiment (hence the infamous “pogroms”, evictions and other persecutions of the Jews in the former times).

However, it started to change by the end of the 19th century. Former Jews began to accept citizenships of their respective countries, thus accepting the constitutions and automatically denouncing their ancestral adherence to the Law of Moses. A lot of Jews began to receive secular education – up to the university levels. Many of those “educated” and “civilized” Jews became scientists, musicians, artists and even politicians and army generals. Lesser parts of the former “anti-social” Jews embraced the Communist ideology (which was, in fact, developed by the Jews) and joined the ranks of the Communists (who were professed internationalists, in case you forgot it). Thus, the former classical “anti-social” Jew, who used to live in the closed “anti-constitutional” Jewish community under the Law of Moses and under the supervision of Kahal, and who spoke Yiddish or Ladino (speaking a certain “Jewish” language also used to make the Jews distinctly different in those days) ceased to exist by the beginning of the 20th century because they now had to follow their country’s laws and constitutions.

The last remnants of the anti-constitutional (or, to be more precise, “potentially anti-constitutional”) Jewish communities were physically exterminated in Europe by Fascists (and by the Fascists’ admirers in “Muslim” countries) and the absolute majority of the descendents of Jacob became obedient citizens by the end of the World War II. The Jew in the sense of the “Jew of the 19th century” sank into oblivion. You have to face it: a modern descendant of Jacob is by no means a “Jew”. He is an ordinary citizen of the respective country – by no means different from an Italian, Chinese, Vietnamese, Hispanic, Polish, or Irish immigrant. Formerly, it was his adherence to the Torah and the Law of Moses (that he practiced in excess of or contrary to the constitution) that made the Jew different from the rest of the country’s inhabitants. However, it is no longer a case. Thus, the very reason for the anti-Semitism ceased to exist.

However, unfortunately, it appears that some “clever” people still try to somehow exploit that old and nearly forgotten concept of “anti-Semitism”. It seems that some Jewish criminals make a cunning use of the old term, trying to ascribe to it an entirely new sense: “Anyone who caught a criminal that happens to be a descendant of Jacob and did not release that criminal immediately, right on the spot, upon being informed that he has accidentally caught a Jew, is apparently an anti-Semite”.

Actually, such a concept does nothing else than gives a Jewish criminal an extremely unfair advantage over a non-Jewish criminal.

One must not be surprised if he gets to know that the Mossad supplies the biggest share of heroin, cocaine, and hashish to the world’s black market, for example, in comparison with any other drug organization.

Such an implementation of this “slightly modified” concept, understandably, allows Jewish criminals to act with an unprecedented impunity for many years since the end of the World War II. They can make bombings in the times of peace (and even make it as bold as to admit them) – but they are not terrorists; they can assassinate – but they are not murderers; they can abduct – but they are not kidnappers; they can massacre civilians – but they are not war criminals; they can attack first – but they are not aggressors; they can conduct illegal surveillance in independent countries – but they are not spies; they can divide humanity into Jews and Goyim – but they are not nationalists; they can give lesser legal rights to fellow Israeli citizens of Arab blood – but they are not racists; they can displace entire populations – but this is not qualified as “genocide”; they can transport tons of heroin or cocaine via a civilized country – but this is not drug-trafficking.

Why? The so-called “Jews” are no longer Jews in a technical sense since they do not practice the Law of Moses in excess of constitutions. Thus, they are merely citizens of a constitutional community, moreover, perfectly integrated into the modern multi-national political landscape. Why should they differ from others and based on what point could they claim any difference from other citizens of similar societies?

For example, an unprecedented campaign of state-sponsored terror unleashed by Israel almost 50 years ago is in its full swing today – but nobody dares to duly label it as the “state-sponsored terrorism” – the right name it truly deserves.

Why are the Israelis allowed to do all of it and enjoy such an unprecedented immunity from any prosecution whatsoever? Only because great-grand-fathers of some of them have been persecuted by Hitler and his proxies in the first half of the 20th century? Or is it because their ancestors openly practiced the Law of Moses and were persecuted for that in early capitalist societies that managed to enslave the former Christians, but not the Jews?

You are badly mistaken if you think that this is the real reason for allowing today’s Jewish criminals to proceed with all their crimes unpunished.

The Jewish criminals mostly escape their due prosecutions because of an entirely different reason: they managed to cunningly implement a new concept of the former term “anti-Semitism” – so, the prominent people nowadays are simply afraid to criticize Jews for any of their wrongdoings because they are afraid to be labeled “anti-Semites” (which in most cases could mean an end to their political or bureaucratic careers).

And you, are you really sure, dear reader, that if some acclaimed murderer, child molester, drug dealer, spy, and war criminal – all-in-one – is eventually caught red-handed, let’s say, in an attempt to exchange a stolen thermonuclear warhead for a couple of tons of heroin and a couple of underage concubines in addition – he has to be released with the excuse that his great-grand-father was a Jew persecuted 70 years ago?

Or it would be better to bring such an evil guy to Justice – at last?

But the fact that I prefer to call a spade a spade does not make out of me any so-called “anti-Semite” – especially considering that I understand perfectly well what a Jewish legacy is, that I have a lot of friends and even relatives of Jewish blood, and that I have never ever in my life allowed any uneducated idiot to speak out anything against the Jews in general in my presence. I simply cannot tolerate any anti-Semitism in its former sense at all. That anti-Semitism is (was) really disgusting.

However, this clear understanding of mine does not make me stupid to allow any criminal Jews to abuse this very concept of anti-Semitism and to enjoy their impunity in regard to common crimes for which non-Jews are expected to be prosecuted.

All I want to say here is that I simply do not make any distinction between a Jewish and a non-Jewish criminal (unlike many others who do) and nothing more than that.

What could we do if it were indeed the Israelis who were hired by those behind the curtain to make 9/11 and so to create a nice-looking pretext for your future enslavement? Try to avoid mentioning it and to find some other “culprits” who are not Jews?

Would it be reasonable to claim that it was supposed “religious fanatics” who carried out 9/11, thus giving the ungodly imperialists a very good pretext to create the global concentration camp named the “New World Order”? But why should we sin against the justice and blame innocent? Why don’t we simply point to the real perpetrators who did the actual job? Especially when they were caught red-handed and we have abundant proof of it?

Are you really afraid of the so-called “Jews” that much that you are ready even to accuse innocent people in order to cover up their crimes? As for my humble self, I am not. But it does not mean that I am an “anti-Semite”. Please, do not accuse this book of being “anti-Semitic”, because it is certainly not, and neither is its humble author personally. I hope I managed to make this clear enough.

3. Concerning accusations that are diametrically opposite to those in connection with the so-called “anti-Semitism” – i.e. accusations that I allegedly disregard the “true danger” of the so-called “Zionism” and that of the so-called “Jews” that supposedly “control the world”.

Hey, folks. I am not so stupid, actually. The fact that most bankers are of Jewish blood is not a proof to me that the “Jews allegedly control the world”. The world is controlled by the Freemasons, and not by the Jews.

The percentage of the actual descendants of Jacob in the Freemasonic sect is not too high. Most of the Freemasons are definitely NOT Jews. Moreover, the Freemasons in reality hate Jews and hate the Jewish ideology. They hate Jews more than anything else in the world. In addition, the Freemasons want you to hate the Jews as well. You have to understand, that the Freemasons want to enslave you. And for them to enslave cattle that hate Jews is much easier than to enslave a thinking person who reads the “Jewish” Bible that defines the actual concept of Freedom.

When it comes to the so-called “Zionists”, I do not even believe that they exist in reality. It might look to some primitive people that the so-called “Zionists” allegedly exist and they allegedly “control the United States and the world”. But it is a wrong impression. It is just a clever Freemasonic setup.

The Freemasons, who really control the United States and the entire world now, do not want you, gullible folks, to hate them. They do not want you to hate the Freemasons. They want you to hate the Jews and the so-called “Zionists”, instead. Do you understand this?

That is why the Freemasons organized things in such a manner that it will appear to you that everything in the world is supposedly run, perpetrated and lobbied by the Jews and the “Zionists”. While in reality all these “Jews and Zionists” are merely a front, a smoke-screen that allows the Freemasons to remain “good” while the “Jews” they put at the front are “bad”.

But do not make any mistake, folks. It was not the Jews who printed the Egyptian pyramid with an eye of Satan and the bold Latin inscriptions on the one US-dollar bill. The Jews, in fact, committed the Exodus from the slave-owning Egypt, if you care to remember this biblical fact. It is the Freemasons who brought the Christians as well as Muslims back to the slave-owning global Egypt codenamed “capitalism” and made them slaves there. This has nothing to do with the Jews or with the so-called “Zionists”.

Remember:

It was not Jews who prohibited you from possessing and carrying firearms.

It was not Jews who invented the unprecedented so-called “value added tax” (which the biblical Pharaoh who charged flat “one fifth” of income from the biblical Egyptian slaves could only dream of).

It was not Jews who instilled the “property tax” (that would make the biblical Pharaoh green with envy).

It was not Jews who invented monitoring of your bank accounts allegedly for the so-called “money laundering” or for the support of the so-called “terrorism” (but in reality – for possible tax evasion).

It was not Jews who prohibited you from spanking your children and from “raping” your own wives.

It was not Jews who enforced obligatory passports, and further – even obligatory biometric passports.

It was not Jews who allowed cops to search your cars and your bodies without any search-warrant.

It was not Jews who installed surveillance video-cameras in public places without public’s permission.

All of it was done by the Freemasons, and not by any Jews and not by any so-called “Zionists”.

Yes, I know many people blame everything on the “Jews” and “Zionists”. However, in the most part these people are not educated enough to realize the obvious: that the Jews and the Freemasons have diametrically opposite ideologies. While the Jews are craving for Freedom as accorded by the Torah, the Freemasons are craving for the establishment of the slave-owning society where the Torah will be prohibited as the most dangerous extremist book.

I feel very pity for you, folks, if you do not understand this obvious fact. Read the Holy Bible: The Old Testament – the Ten Commandments. And pay particularly good attention to the last sentence before the very First Commandment (Deuteronomy 5:6). And then – look very carefully at the one US dollar bill and try to understand what the Freemasons depicted for you there. And think – what it has to do with the Jews and with the “Jewish” Law of Moses?

I hope you will get my point and forever forget the silly notion: “the Jews are guilty of everything” – that the Freemasons want you believe in.

4. Concerning copyright over photographs.

There are some photographs used in this book. All of them are widely available in the Internet and it is not possible to establish whether they are copyrighted or not, and who are their legal owners (if any) in order to ask their permissions to use these photographs in this book, or in order to credit their respective owners.

Moreover, many of these photographs were taken illegally, since there was a strict prohibition from bringing any photographic equipment onto Ground Zero and violators should have been prosecuted and their equipment seized. Ironically, many photographs of 9/11, especially those of “Ground Zero”, are not only anonymous, but also technically “illegal”.

Unlikely it would ever be possible to find their real makers; moreover, it is very much possible that those who actually made those illegal photos have already died from chronic radiation sickness which became peculiarly endemic to “Ground Zero”...

Based on my inability to ever discover the real owners of such photographs, I simply used here several of these which were needed to explain the truth about 9/11 and about several other important terrorist acts.

Actually, I could write this book even without any photographs at all and I would still be able to successfully explain what exactly happened with the World Trade Center and with the Pentagon, but it will not be as much illustrative as with this photographic evidence. I believe that this book (and its reader by extension) will greatly benefit from the photographs used here.

If anyone accidentally recognizes his or her photograph used wholly or partly in this book and insists that it is copyrighted and published without his or her explicit permission – I would like to apologize in advance, and I promise to remove such a photograph from any further edition of this book immediately upon receiving an appropriate notice.

However, considering that all of the photographs used in this book were from the public domain, it is highly unlikely that someone could claim any exclusive copyright over them to the extent that might prohibit me using them as important evidence in my explanation.

For those people who are the owners of these photographs but who do not object their works to be used here as photographic evidence, I would like to express my gratitude for their courtesy and my apology that I was not able to credit them here for their works appropriately – due to all of the photographs being anonymous.

I would like to thank everyone who was brave enough to make these photographs despite all the dangers of 9/11 and despite all the dangers of being prosecuted for bringing their photo-cameras onto “Ground Zero” in violation of the official prohibition; and I would like to thank all who were kind enough to make their works freely available in the Internet.

Several photographs used in this book belong to me – such as several photographs of some people involved in the 9/11 perpetration and in some other well-known acts of so-called “terrorism”; so I insist that these photographs belong to me personally and nobody else could claim any copyright over them in order to prohibit me from freely distributing them. I feel free to publish these photographs in any way I want. Moreover, I allow anybody who wants to copy and re-distribute these photographs to do so without any explicit permission of mine (but with the obligatory notice of their actual source – which is the book you are currently reading).

5. Concerning the possible accusation over supposed betraying of state secrets.

There will be a few secrets revealed in this book. These secrets partly belong to the United States and partly – to the former Soviet Union.

I have no obligations whatsoever to keep any secrets belonging to the United States, because I have never been confidentially acquainted with them in the course of any duties; neither have I ever signed any non-disclosure contract. Therefore, I feel free to talk about those secrets openly.

In regard to some secrets belonging to the former Soviet Union, I had certain obligations to that defunct state to keep its secrets. It shall be understood, though, that all these obligations were directly connected to an anti-imperialism stance of the former Soviet Union and correspondingly – to that of its armed forces and intelligence apparatus.

Apparently, this Communist state no longer exists. What about its supposed successor – bourgeois Russian Federation – it does not seem to be a real successor to its former Soviet, revolutionary, and anti-imperialist legacies – all of which were, moreover, officially denounced by the new Russian counter-revolutionary government.

Moreover, the Russian Federation does not even consider all those citizens of the former Soviet Union (who might have also been acquainted with similar secrets of the former USSR) to be Russian citizens if after dissolution of the USSR those people have found themselves outside of the Russian territory. I guess it is pretty clear to everybody, that no Georgian, Latvian, or Ukrainian has any duty to keep secrets of the former USSR in regard to the modern Russian Federation and nobody has the right to demand from them doing so.

Based on all these considerations, I do not feel any obligation whatsoever to keep those secrets of the non-existent USSR, at least in regard to modern Russia, which has obviously nothing to do with the former USSR (except only accidentally inheriting its nuclear and other weapons that were primarily designed to protect well-known achievements of the October Revolution from its imperialist enemies). My former obligations to keep such secrets given to the now-defunct Soviet Union are obviously void.

Nobody could argue claiming to the contrary. It seems to me that to force anyone today – over 20 years after the USSR's disappearance – to keep secrets of the Soviet Union would be as ridiculous as to insist that Slovenians are obliged to keep the secrets of Austro-Hungary, or that Armenians or Iraqis must keep secrets of the Turkish Ottoman Empire.

Nevertheless, I think I will continue to keep some of these secrets of the former USSR – just as a matter of principle, but I will do it entirely at my own discretion, meaning nobody has the right to tell me what to do and what not to do.

In this light, I decided to reveal here some of these – those which seem not being dangerous secrets, but being vitally important to understanding the truth about September the 11. Actually, there is one quite awful secret that has direct relevance to the WTC Twin Towers demolitions and this one will be revealed in this book.

However, nobody has right to accuse me of betraying any state secrets. Since the Soviet legacy no longer exists, no one has right to blame me for revealing its former secrets, or hold me accountable in a legal way. I am legally and morally right to say anything I wish to say. I guess this is clear.

6. Concerning possible accusations of being not “politically correct”.

Sorry, but I have never seen any term such as “political correctness” in any section of any penal code or that of any other law. The only definition that was noticed by me in various laws in this respect was the “freedom of speech”.

Besides, I have never been taught any “political correctness” in my entire life, so, frankly, I do not even know exactly what this is (except only suspecting that the “political correctness” is some kind of a voluntarily practiced anti-constitutional magic that would eventually help those craving for totalitarian power to abolish the very constitution and replace it with much tougher rules).

Thus, unlikely you can accuse me of being “politically incorrect”, especially considering that you would unlikely be ever able to define this peculiar concept exactly except that so-called “political correctness” and “double standards” are, perhaps, synonyms. Try to explain to yourself honestly what does the term “political correctness” actually mean and you will get my point.

Moreover, this book in its main part has very little to do with any politics. It has more to do with mechanics. I am just trying to explain here how it was technically possible to instantly transform over 350 meters of extremely rigid steel structure into that complete fluffy microscopic dust, which is a purely technical matter. Unlikely such an explanation has anything to do with so-called “political correctness”.

I do not believe that it would be a right thing to accuse a chemist or a mathematician of being “politically incorrect” because of their purely scientific research that technically has nothing to do with any politics. Neither is it applicable to my own current research concerning the World Trade Center collapse.

If you disagree with the abovementioned argumentation, and continue to insist that explaining such a merely technical thing could still be “politically incorrect”, I am obliged to remind you of something from history.

They used to claim not so long time ago that our planet Earth was “flat” and they considered any claim to the contrary being “politically incorrect” too.

If we stick today to a concept of the so-called “political correctness” in regard to the demolition of the WTC, we risk to forever fixing in our science some peculiar notions: that aluminum projectiles could allegedly penetrate steel structures, that aviation fuel (kerosene) could allegedly “melt” steel structures into fluffy microscopic dust, and that such unprecedented physical processes are usually accompanied by intense releases of radioactive vapors...

Do you, at least, agree with this logic?

7. Concerning possible accusations of “undermining the very pillars of society”.

What to say in this regard? To begin with I would remind you of those brave scientists who claimed several centuries ago that our planet Earth was indeed spherical, and not flat, were also “undermining the very pillars of that society” which were known then to be the three giant whales bearing our supposedly “flat” planet...

There were quite a few Great Lies in the 20th century that seem to be forever fixed in history with their officially acknowledged versions. Among them the discovery of the so-called “dinosaurs” (whose “bones” even to this day are still made of gypsum), true causes of World War II and its true aggressor; the true story behind the Pearl Harbor “attack”; true reasons behind the atomic bombing of Hiroshima and the true physical nature of the “atomic” bombing of Nagasaki; the “death” of “First Cosmonaut” Yuri Gagarin and those “human landings on the Moon” that followed; the “assassination” of President Kennedy; the Chernobyl “nuclear catastrophe” and “sinking” of the best Soviet nuclear submarine “Komsomolets”; an advent of so-called “Muslim terrorism” peculiarly devoid of any ideology whatsoever that peculiarly coincided with the demise of the Islamic Revolution and with that of genuine Islamic Fundamentalism, etc.

Some people know about these Great Lies very well, but it is no longer possible to change official definitions of respective events for the general public consumption. References to these Great Lies are too numerous and it would require completely re-writing history and to change too many other things which no one could afford.

Besides that, all those Great Lies become so deeply embedded into respective cultures, that it would be too painful for many if someone tries to challenge them right now. It is simply too late to do it today. This society has put too much load on these false pillars since those days, and it is no longer possible to touch these very pillars without endangering the existing social structure...

One of the best examples of what I am trying to say is this: on April 12, 2007, the Kremlin vetoed a new investigation into the alleged “death” of Yuri Gagarin – the investigation, which is still being demanded by many, including some Russian legislators and its initial investigators – who were ordered to shut up 40 years ago... And it is understandable, indeed. You cannot touch a holy cow. It is taboo. Even if such a holy cow enters a Parliament session and decides to shit right there...

Unfortunately, it seems that the first Great Lie of the 21st century – the 9/11 affair – might easily follow in suit and become a holy cow too... Its controversies are still being widely discussed today by many but you have to expect that soon it will turn to be a kind of taboo as well. It is no longer “politically correct” to challenge inconsistencies of the official interpretation of 9/11 and you have to expect that the next logical step is to declare such a challenge a criminal offence.

I would not be surprised if one day challenging the infamous Report of the 9/11 Commission would be criminalized and 9/11 conspiracy theorists would be legally prosecuted and imprisoned just next to those who watch child pornography, spank their children, or rape their wives. The EU has recently shown a very scary example of what could be done to critics of an officially approved version of history – when it abandoned a former “voluntarily” concept of “political incorrectness” regarding the Holocaust denial and enacted monstrous legislation that provides for punishing Holocaust deniers with imprisonment.

Considering this precedent, one could sincerely expect something similar about the 9/11 Commission Report “denial” in the near future.

It is self-evident that the 9/11 affair slowly, but surely, moves to be fixed in history in its officially approved version, despite being itself too improbable to believe in, judging from either logical or even merely technical points of view.

The fact that 9/11’s officially approved version is not even remotely plausible seems to be compensated for by another fact: this approved version is convenient for almost every ruler in every country in the world. In the same manner the bogus official claims concerning the beginning of World War II and its true causes were convenient to the then rulers of all winning states in 1945.

It is pitiable, indeed. And it seems that soon we will have the same problem in regard to 9/11. However, when it comes to my humble self, I presume that it is still not too late to try to disprove those ridiculous official claims about 9/11, because only seven years have passed since, and it is still feasible to do it today, in September 2008.

Therefore I try my best to relieve the 21st century of its first Great Lie. But in doing so, I do not undermine the very pillars of this society. I rather attempt to replace some rotten ones. Before it is too late.

8. Concerning possible resentment of some readers who might expect this book to be a fiction and who might find that it is not, to their disappointment.

I am sorry, but this book is not a fiction book. I know that to read truly fiction books is a more pleasurable experience than to read materials from some criminal case-file. But the problem is that fiction books are primarily intended for recreation of their readers. My book explains what really happened on 9/11, obviously having nothing to do with any entertainment. It is rather intended as education for its readers.

Of course, the incredible 9/11 intrigue explained here makes it easy to convert this book into a kind of fiction and it would be much easier to read in such a case. I guess it allows even to make a couple of Hollywood movies.

I, however, consciously decided not to go that way because making this book in the form of fiction might seriously undermine the credibility of the extremely important information provided in it. Therefore, this book feels more like a set of incriminating documents that is suitable to be submitted directly to a public prosecutor’s office, rather than as belles-lettres suitable for a boudoir.

Still, it must not scare you off. I have really tried my best to write this book in an easy language and to make it as interesting as possible. And indeed it is very interesting. And it is very easy to read. I am sure you will like it, despite its being a non-fiction.

9. Concerning possible accusations of this book being just one more “conspiracy theory”.

As I have mentioned above, there is a great difference between the testimony of an eye-witness and a so-called “conspiracy theory”. For example, if the first one is acceptable in a court of law, the second one is not. All I say here is verifiable and I could repeat everything I claim here in a court-room.

Moreover, all my words in such legal proceedings would be supported by many legal documents obtained in a purely legal way. If this would not be enough, more eye-witnesses would come to the court-room to testify to the same effect.

Besides, all these claims would be additionally supported by highly-trusted documents that would come from various third-parties sources that have nothing to do with this book or with its author.

Would you still call it a “conspiracy theory” after all of that?

If so, then you probably do not need to read this book further; it will be just a loss of your precious time. We seem to speak in different languages and you would not be able to understand the language of this book anyway. Try to read something else in this case – something written in your language. You might love the famous Report of the "9/11 Commission" or memories of President George W. Bush (who, by the way, refused to testify under oath or on the record before the "9/11 Commission" – unlike the humble author of this book, who is ready to do so at any time). Perhaps, you could enjoy reading these without dubbing either of them “conspiracy theories”.

I have honestly warned you that this book is not for everyone capable of reading, but only for the free minded people who clearly understand the difference between a “conspiracy theory” and an eye-witness’ testimony.

10. Concerning accusations of my “protecting” and “shifting all 9/11 blame away” from the “guilty” U.S. Government.

Since my video presentation “9/11thology” went public in March 2010 and my 9/11 research began to be publicly discussed, I noticed a new trend, which I did not even expect initially.

Some folks began to accuse me of “protecting” the U.S. Government, because it appears from my claims that it was not the U.S. Government who actually perpetrated 9/11, while these people are “sure” that it was the U.S. Government. Some of these folks went as far as even accusing me of being a “plant” of the American FBI. Some of these accusations were very primitive and therefore of little value to the shills, but some were quite professional, accusing me of “intentionally mixing lies with some truth” and therefore believable for the “advanced gullible”, such as, for example, a very elaborate concoction published here: <http://www.lawrencechin2011.com/blogs/2012/05/27/the-crimes-of-mss-director-viktor-bouts-framing-and-dimitri-khalezovs-third-truth/> that was designed to seriously undermine my credibility by arguing in quite an “earnest” manner (as opposed to typical spiteful assaults of the rank-and-file shills). The “critical” article mentioned above, in reality, is written in a classical “loony conspiratorial” style common to conspiracy theorists. Its author advances notions of so-called “international court cases” without substantiating his claims even to the least extent. In the same time, he strives to undermine my credibility in a surprisingly “professional” manner. I do not want to stoop to arguing with this type of folks, but I strongly suggest that after reading this book and getting its point, the reader comes back to the abovementioned web page and forms his own opinion (I repeat: after reading this book, not before that).

I have to state frankly: most of those who accuse me of the above, whether in a typical spiteful-, or in an “earnest” manner, are “professional” 9/11 conspiracy theorists. Though, most of them do so at the FBI’s expense, which elevates their actual status from the “conspiracy theorists” to the “shills”. These folks parasitize on the 9/11 tragedy by accusing the U.S. Government for perpetrating 9/11, but without being able to prove their accusations in any court of law.

Actually, these “professional” conspiracy theorists had more than 10 years to compile a winnable legal suit against the U.S. Government and to file it to the court of justice. Interestingly, they spent these 10 years only talking. It seems it became their self-purpose: to consume precious time of their listeners and blame the U.S. Government indefinitely, without being able to ever convert their incessant babbling into a real prosecution.

Unlike them, I do not accuse innocents and do not claim things which I cannot prove.

It was NOT the U.S. Government who perpetrated 9/11.

It was the so-called “good guys” from behind the so-called “curtain”. Those “good guys” that printed the Egyptian pyramid – the symbol of Egyptian slavery (in defiance of the verse from Exodus 20:2 preceding the First Commandment), on the US one dollar bill. Those guys that created the so-called “United Nations Organization” and push for a global concentration camp on this Planet. While the U.S. Government is an elected body that is changed every few years, those people behind the infamous “curtain” are permanent. You cannot change them. Thus, those shrilly folks who accuse me of “protecting” the supposedly “guilty” U.S. Government, are actually paid shills, who in this way protect those very “good guys” from behind the so-called “curtain”. This means they protect the very people who actually committed the crime.

I hope you get my point.

11. Concerning grammar.

Excellent grammar has never fed a hungry man. Its known disadvantage is a lack of love for mankind. Moreover, English is not my native language. Therefore – relax!

The 9/11thology; its difference from a conspiracy theory, and the list of the most difficult 9/11 questions answered by this new exact science.

After thinking for a while, I decided that 9/11 events were meaningful and important enough to name a science after them. We still have so-called “Sovietology”, for example, even though there is nothing else to study about the “Soviets” that became extinct like woolly mammoths. There are pseudo-sciences that purport to undertake some “serious” studies on non-existent things such as the so-called “terrorism”, for example, or on obviously artificial things that would never ever come into existence if not for the joint efforts of the American CIA and the Israeli Mossad – such as so-called “Islamism”. In this respect it would be really unfair if such an important event as 9/11 would miss having its own special science intended to undertake a serious dedicated study on all 9/11 actual events, their chronology, their causes, their consequences, their technical details, publicity in regard to them, public opinions in regard to them, legal matters in regard to them, political matters in regard to them, linguistic matters in regard to them, and so on.

9/11 was such an important milestone in history, that without any doubt it deserves having a special science dedicated to its study. Therefore I made it so bold to found this new science, and, since no one else has bothered to do it before me, I take an honor to claim to be its founder. Moreover, since I am its founder, I have an apparent right to find out an appropriate name for this new science.

After some considerations I decided to name this new science “9/11thology”. It sounds peculiar, but it has its apparent meaning – and in any case “Sovietology”, “Egyptology” or “Archaeology” sounded initially as peculiar, but eventually people got used to these words and they began to sound OK to the listeners. Besides, since the word “9/11thology” itself is quite unique, it would always be easy to find anything related to it on the wilderness of the Internet using typical search-engines – because it is unlikely this peculiar word could be mistaken with anything else.

Here it is: we have a new science named “9/11thology” and I sincerely hope the new word “9/11thology” would find its way to dictionaries one day and would become a commonly spoken word. Of course, as any new science this one is still incomplete, but I would say that I have made quite a few first important steps in establishing this new exact science, so that with our common efforts in the future we could develop it into a full-fledged scientific discipline that one day might even be taught in some university.

What is “9/11thology”?

There are quite a few questions in regard to the actual 9/11 perpetration, to its cover-up, and to consecutive turn of events (such as the U.S.-initiated wars in Iraq and Afghanistan and the so-called “War against Terror”). Practically, no commonly known 9/11 conspiracy theory could answer any of these important questions. Some of these questions are not answered at all, while some others are somehow answered, but the actual answers are far from being satisfactory.

Most of the 9/11 conspiracy theories will offer you only these answers:

1. Q. Who was the chief 9/11 perpetrator? A. the U.S. Government/U.S. secret services/U.S. military (or, as a variety – The Israeli Mossad in collaboration with its American colleagues).
2. Q. What struck the Pentagon? A. A certain cruise missile (or, as a variety “a small plane loaded with explosives”).
3. Q. Why the U.S. Government does not admit it honestly? A. Because it was the owner of this missile and the actual perpetrator of the Pentagon strike.
4. Q. Why did the Twin Towers collapse? A. Because they demolished them in a process known as a “controlled demolition”.
5. Q. Still the question remains: how it was technically possible to bring them down? A. They used numerous charges of conventional explosives attached to every core- and perimeter- column on every floor of the Twins and detonated them synchronously as it is a technology known to be used in a demolition industry (or, as a variety – they used thermite, or so-called “nano-thermite”, or thermite in addition to explosives, to additionally melt those steel core- and perimeter- columns of the Twin Towers).

Basically, all commonly known conspiracy theories (except only a “mini-nukes conspiracy theory” and a “clandestine nuclear reactors conspiracy theory”) in regard to the 9/11 offer nothing more than is mentioned above. The “mini-nukes-“ and “clandestine nuclear reactors-“ conspiracy theories offer a little bit more than that – they attempt to somehow explain technicalities of the unexplainable collapse of the WTC Twin Towers at near freefall speed, and a peculiar “ground zero” name peculiarly awarded to the World Trade Center demolition grounds. However, neither of these two additional “nuclear” conspiracy theories could offer any satisfactory explanation, neither in regard to the WTC Twins’ pulverizations, nor in regard to the WTC-7 collapse; and neither of them could offer any explanation whatsoever in regard to the Pentagon attack.

Let us disregard for a while these two additional “nuclear” conspiracy theories and concentrate mostly on the classical explosives/thermite/so-called “nano-thermite”/explosives+thermite conspiracy theories, since they are the most widespread. I intentionally failed to mention here any argumentation in regard to either existent or non-existent passenger planes that supposedly struck the WTC Twin Towers, since their existence/non-existence is irrelevant to our current topic and arguing over it would only distract our attention from important points.

Let us imagine, that the 5 questions above have been answered satisfactorily. Still, there are some seemingly logical questions available, which none of the conspiracy theorists have ever bothered to answer. Note: Some of these questions can only be perceived by advanced 9/11 students, who are familiar with the subject at least a little bit. If you are a novice, you might need to educate yourself first by studying some basic details of the 9/11 affair and taking a look first at at least some commonly known conspiracy theories.

These are the questions that are seemingly logical, but so far remain unanswered:

1. Why did the U.S. high-ranking officials (including also those belonging to the opposition of Bush Administration) so easily agree with the ridiculous “findings” of the infamous 9/11 Commission in regard to the WTC destruction? If there was any argument among them, it was not about the practicability of the ridiculous “kerosene theory”, but exclusively on the quality of U.S. military preparedness and on the quality of the American secret services’ response to an alleged terrorism threat. Why wasn’t the ridiculous “kerosene theory” challenged by those high-ranking guys and gals?
2. Why did all foreign high-ranking officials, including those countries that traditionally oppose U.S. policies, so easily agree with the ridiculous “findings” of the 9/11 Commission and challenge neither its ridiculous “kerosene theory” coupled with its ridiculous interpretation of the Pentagon strike, nor its unsubstantiated claims in regard to the supposed “hijackings”?
3. Why insurance companies were unable to effectively defend their positions in courts while being sued for insurance payments by new owners of the WTC property, when it was pretty obvious to everyone (lawyers and judges including) that controlled demolitions were used to bring down all 3 buildings – particularly the WTC-7, which did not suffer any “plane’s” impact?
4. Why an apparent missile attack on the Pentagon took place whatsoever? According to many conspiracy theories who claim it was the U.S. Government behind aerial attacks on the WTC and its consequent demolitions, it was also the U.S. Government that supposedly organized the attack against the Pentagon. But it is pretty obvious that the 9/11 Pentagon strike (which was indeed the hardest thing to be covered up) was nothing else than a profanation of the successful “aerial” attacks on the Twins and their destruction. There should not be even a slightest doubt that the WTC strike alone, without any additional and unnecessary attack on the Pentagon, would look much more beautiful and much more believable and it would achieve absolutely all its supposed goals – i.e. an unprecedented public outrage directed against Muslims, as well as much needed sympathies from various simpletons from all around the world. Still, the ridiculous attack on the Pentagon took place, seemingly despite any logic. The question is: Why?
5. What was the name and origins of that mysterious missile that struck the Pentagon on 9/11?
6. Why the U.S. government could not admit honestly to the public that it was a missile, not “AA Flight 77” – the Boeing-757, that struck the Pentagon in reality? It appears that it would be much easier to say the awful truth once and forever than to say beautiful lies many times for many years ahead, wouldn't it? It is pretty obvious that the U.S. Government "confidentially" admitted to all local and foreign high-ranking politicians that the Pentagon was struck by a missile, not by an airplane. At least two high-ranking U.S. officials afforded Freudian slips of the tongue accidentally saying that the Pentagon was struck by a missile. At least once such a slip of the tongue was afforded by Donald Rumsfeld, and at least once – by Tim Roemer, a former 9/11 Commissioner. This means that among the high-ranking U.S. politicians, the missile that struck the Pentagon is a matter of fact. There should not be any doubt either that this missile which struck the Pentagon was honestly reported as such to all high-ranking foreign politicians as well, otherwise they would never accept any of seemingly insane military actions by the United States in the 9/11 aftermath. Still, the main question remains: why the U.S. officials do not want to admit the Pentagon missile attack honestly to the general public?

7. Almost everybody who is interested in 9/11 knows that a so-called "doomsday plane" (a/k/a "strategic airborne command post" earmarked to conduct a retaliatory nuclear strike against the Soviet Union in case the USSR strikes first) was scrambled during the 9/11 events and was seen by many making slow circles over the White House. It was shown on various TV footages by different news channels and it is impossible to deny this obvious fact now. Nonetheless, the U.S. Government stubbornly refuses to admit it until today that the "doomsday plane" was indeed engaged. Why is the U.S. Government so stubborn on this particular issue?
8. Why F-15 and F-16 jet fighters scrambled in response to the Pentagon attack were promptly directed over the Atlantic Ocean and what did it have to do with the supposed "passenger planes"?
9. Why were another bunch of U.S. Air Force jet fighters also directed over the Atlantic Ocean, even before the Pentagon strike, thus constituting a totally different event than described in the above question?
10. Why did all three buildings – the WTC-1, -2 and -7 – collapse with near freefall speed? If they were demolished by ordinary explosives, as claimed, or by a combination of explosives + thermite, or by thermite alone, or even by so-called "nano-thermite" – it would apparently take at least 55 seconds (giving only half-a-second per floor) for upper parts of the Towers to reach the ground. This is because, even damaged by explosives/incendiaries, remnants of floors and steel columns would still provide some considerable resistance and would delay their collapse. Still, the question remains: why the Towers' tops fell down in a manner as if under them there were not any remnants of supposedly "blown-up" concrete floors and thick steel columns, but only air alone?
11. Why alleged thermite (as claimed by many conspiracy theorists) that was supposedly used by 9/11 culprits to "melt" the thick steel core- and perimeter columns, "melted" them, instead, into that well-known fluffy microscopic dust that was extremely volatile, rather than liquid?
12. Why was this dust microscopic? Why an approximate particle of it did not exceed the diameter of an average human hair? The existence of such a finely ground material can not be explained by supposed TNT or C4 explosive charges – you simply can not reduce thick steel into dust using explosives, irrespective of their distribution and quantity. Try to reduce a tank to dust using TNT or C4, or try to reduce to dust a railway track using these explosives. You would find out that it is simply impossible. Any specialist in explosives would confirm it – you don't actually need to experiment with TNT and steel bars in order to establish this self-evident truth (much in the same sense that you do not actually need to experiment with planes' impacts in order to establish another self-evident truth: steel targets cannot be penetrated by aluminum projectiles, irrespective of the latter's speed). Still, the above question remains: Why were the Twin Towers reduced to that fluffy microscopic dust, which allowed the Towers' tops to reach the ground with near freefall speed? Re-phrasing this question, we could put it this way: Why was the resulting dust from not only concrete floors, but also thick steel perimeter/core columns, so fine that it offered no resistance whatsoever – as if it was not thick dust, but thin air?
13. It is well-known that whenever a structure collapses and it causes human casualties, an architect of such a structure would always be arrested and tried for criminal negligence. It would be logical to expect that the architect of the Twin Towers must be arrested and tried for at least two different counts of crime: 1. He calculated the strength of the Twin Towers in such a wrong manner that the Towers were so easily penetrated by the Boeings 767, while according to the official claims the Towers were built to withstand an impact of the fully loaded Boeing 707 (that is much larger than the 767). 2. He miscalculated the structural strength of the Twin Towers that they could be so easily collapsed by fires. In addition to this, the architect of the WTC-7 must have been arrested and tried too – because his brain-child – the WTC-7 collapsed due to fires as well. However, we do not see that the architects of either of the failed projects were arrested and tried in reality. This was seemingly despite any logic. The question is – why the architects were not tried in court for their self-evident failures?

14. Why when the “chief hijacker” – Mohammed Atta – was found to be an agent of the Pakistani ISI, no action was undertaken by the American law enforcement agencies against their Pakistani colleagues? And why none of the U.S. Senators/Congressmen had ever insisted on taking such an action against the Pakistanis who were apparently caught “red-handed” with their infamous money transfer to Atta and so evidently proved their complicity with the alleged 9/11 perpetrators?
15. Why when many of the alleged “suicidal” 9/11 “hijackers” were found alive and kicking in only a couple of weeks following accusations published against them, this fact did not prompt any prominent U.S.- or foreign official to openly challenge the FBI’s 9/11 conspiracy theory which lost its entire credibility at once?
16. Why demolition grounds of the World Trade Center were peculiarly dubbed by the most particular nuclear name “ground zero” and even this transparent hint did not arouse suspicions of either the U.S. high-ranking officials or their foreign counterparts to the conclusions of the 9/11 Commission and to its ridiculous “kerosene/pancake-collapse” theory? Were all of these high-ranking officials – both domestic and foreign ones – uneducated enough as not to know that “ground zero” was nothing else than a standard ABC designation of a spot of a nuclear or a thermonuclear explosion and that it had no other meaning prior to that day? Still, the question remains: Why did none of these high-ranking officials raise his or her objections to the officially approved “kerosene/pancake-collapse” theory?
17. Why did high-temperatures, a/k/a the “longest-lasting underground fires”, persist, deep underground, on “Ground Zero” for as long as the end of December 2001? Did it have anything to do with thermite that usually cools down in a maximum of 10-15 minutes; or did it have anything to do with supposed “kerosene” that cools down even faster than thermite?
18. Why do almost all ground zero responders now suffer from leukemia and from various types of cancers typical to those evolving as a result of chronic radiation sickness?
19. Why the North Tower (that was struck first, but collapsed second, seemingly against any logic) could not have been demolished by the supposed 9/11 perpetrators before the South Tower in order to make the entire setup look logical?
20. Why in only a few minutes after the South Tower (in New York) collapsed, the Sears Tower in Chicago was ordered to be immediately evacuated, but the Empire State Building in New York did not get such an order?
21. Why was the most top-ranking in the demolition industry (and the most expensive of all demolition companies) “Controlled Demolition Inc.” hired to remove the debris from “Ground Zero”, considering that the actual World Trade Center had already been demolished by others and no highly-paid qualified demolition works were required any longer?
22. Why did the Salomon Brothers Building (the WTC-7) have to be demolished afterwards? Why was its demolition so necessary, despite the fact that it terribly spoiled an overall positive impression created by the 9/11 “atrocities” and attracted a lot of unnecessary suspicions? Would not it look much better if only the Twin Towers were destroyed by kerosene from the “terrorist planes”, when the WTC-7, which was not hit by any plane, be left standing? Try to answer this question (but based on the presumption that it was the U.S. Government that allegedly planned and perpetrated the 9/11 in order to dupe the public) and you will never be able to find an answer as to why the WTC-7 had to be demolished...
23. How was it possible to explain the WTC-7 collapse to various domestic and foreign high-ranking officials in a satisfactory manner? And how was it possible to explain it to the judges in law courts who decided insurance compensation cases in favor of the new owners of the WTC property,

- rather than in favor of the insurance companies, who were evidently defrauded?
24. Why did the U.S. law courts decide insurance claims in favor of Larry Silverstein and Co, and award insurance payment to Silverstein, despite the fact that Silverstein back in 2002 had publicly stated that it was him, Mr. Larry Silverstein, who gave his personal permission (if not his personal order) to “pull” the WTC-7 in a process known as “controlled demolition”? And why the insurance companies were not able to successfully use that admission of Mr. Silverstein to defend their cause – while his unprecedented admission, shown worldwide on TV, was recorded by many and was freely available even on YouTube?
 25. Why the FBI and the U.S. Government which refused to publish lists of supposed passengers of “hijacked flights” (at least for the first 6 years after 9/11), nonetheless, allowed the Columbia University's Lamont-Doherty Earth Observatory in Palisades to openly display their seditious seismograms showing two obvious underground mini-nuclear explosions (which are so “nuclear” that it could not be mistaken with anything else) that corresponded with the Twin Towers’ collapse? This unprecedented seismic “evidence” blatantly contradicts the official “kerosene/pancake collapse theory” and is openly published on their website http://www.ldeo.columbia.edu/LCSN/Eq/20010911_wtc.html – right within the U.S. jurisdiction, and no FBI wanted to remove it. Is this merely an excess of an alleged “freedom of speech” or of a “freedom of expression” in the United States? Where then are the lists of the passengers? Why they do not exist on the Internet within the frames of the same supposed excess? Why United Airlines and American Airlines did not publish those seditious passenger lists with the same ease and impunity the Columbia University's Lamont-Doherty Earth Observatory published its supposedly “seditious” seismograms? And why no one has so easily published any seditious videos that recorded details of the 9/11 Pentagon strike? The question remains: why this utterly seditious “seismic evidence” is not removed by the FBI from the U.S.-based Internet site with the same zeal they confiscated the Pentagon attack videos and the lists of the passengers?
 26. Why in the aftermath of 9/11 attacks the U.S. Government ventured into a ridiculous war against Iraq, supposedly “in search of weapons of mass destruction” while according to the official 9/11 conspiracy theory (“Al-Qaeda”->“hijackers”->“planes’ strikes” -> “kerosene”->“pancake collapse”->“ground zero”) neither Iraq, nor “weapons of mass destruction” had anything to do with the World Trade Center destruction and with the Pentagon attack and it was exclusively “Al-Qaeda” and “kerosene” who were to be blamed?
 27. Why was this ridiculous war against Iraq and it’s ridiculous pretext, nevertheless, accepted, and, moreover, approved by the majority of the U.S.- and foreign politicians who even sent their armies to participate in the Iraqi adventure? Were all those local and foreign politicians as naïve as to believe that Saddam Hussein was really responsible for the 9/11 hijackings and for the “kerosene initiated pancake collapse”? Still, the question remains: why all these high-ranking officials, especially the foreign ones, so readily accepted and approved the U.S.-initiated war against Iraq in connection with the 9/11 events?
 28. Why Saddam Hussein, who was known as the most ruthless secular dictator who wore a neck-tie and whose regime used to suppress the Islamic religion much more harshly than any other regime in the world, had to be linked to the supposedly “religious” organization that goes by the name of “Al-Qaeda” and thus – to the actual 9/11 perpetration?
 29. Why even after no supposed “weapons of mass destruction” were found in Iraq, this senseless war against the innocent Iraqis has continued with nearly the same amount of seemingly idiotic zeal as it had in its beginning in 2003?
 30. Why the U.S. Government, who was apparently involved in the most incredible and the most awkward cover-up in regard to the entire 9/11 affair, nonetheless, enjoy a lot of sympathies and even support in all its future ridiculous undertakings from among various high-ranking foreign and domestic officials? Are they not annoyed with that ridiculous 9/11 cover-up?
 31. How did the U.S. Government manage to compile several relatively populous 9/11 commissions tasked with hiding details of the 9/11 perpetration and that of the buildings’ collapse, and how did the U.S. Government manage to convince all members of these commissions to lie to the U.S. citizens so shamelessly? Is the U.S. indeed populated by such shameless liars who appear to occupy all high positions in the Senate, Congress, Justice system, police, military, the FBI, the CIA, and even in its engineering science? Is this picture indeed so grim?

32. If to presume that the 9/11 perpetrator was the U.S. Government (or the so-called “Bush-Cheney clique”, or the so-called “neocons” sect) as alleged by many, and their main goal was supposedly to lay their hands on Iraqi oil, why would they need to collapse the Twin Towers whatsoever? Wouldn't it be enough to only direct a couple of electronically “hijacked” passenger planes filled with carefully arranged corpses from a morgue (or even with live citizens as a variety) flown on autopilot into the Twin Towers and blame this action on very carefully selected “suicidal Muslim hijackers” – I mean those “hijackers” who would not be found alive by the very next week? Even if such aluminum planes would not be able to successfully cut through thick double-walled steel perimeters of the Twins and would simply smash themselves flat and fall back to sidewalks without actually causing any “kerosene initiated pancake collapse” at near free-fall speed, wouldn't such a desperate act of so-called “terrorism” reach all supposed goals in regard to the “Iraqi oil”? Wouldn't such an action be enough to cause an unprecedented public outrage directed against “evil Muslims”? Wouldn't it be enough to win sympathies of all simpletons inside and outside the U.S. who would approve of any military action against oil-rich “evil” Muslims states? Apparently, such a realistic scenario as described above would serve all supposed causes and achieve all alleged goals, however, without making the U.S. Government look stupid and without driving it into the most ridiculous cover-up as a result of which it badly lost its face both home and abroad. Wouldn't it? It is very clear that if the so-called “Bush-Cheney clique”, or the “neocons” sect, or the entire evil U.S. Government were the real 9/11 culprits they WOULD NOT NEED to actually collapse the Twin Towers. Even if they were in need to get rid of the Twins for some additional mercantile reasons, they still would not need to demolish them in such an awful manner. The “clique”/“neocons” could simply claim that the Twin Towers' structural integrity was allegedly damaged as a result of the aluminum planes' strikes and specialists had judged that the Towers were no longer safe to stand and had to be lawfully demolished (or disassembled) – giving way to some new grandiose project in Lower Manhattan. As any logical person friendly with common sense could see, neither the U.S. Government, nor the supposed “Bush-Cheney clique”, nor the so-called “neocons” needed to actually demolish the WTC Twin Towers in such a spectacular manner, thus attracting suspicions and even accusations of the 9/11 culpability. They could easily achieve all the alleged goals without demolishing the WTC and this fact is pretty self-evident. It is clear to any logically thinking person that the U.S. Government was not the 9/11 culprit and it did not plan to demolish the Twin Towers, simply because it did not need such an action in reality and could benefit from it under no circumstances. Still, as everyone could see, the U.S. Government resorted to demolishing the WTC, seemingly despite any logic. The question is: Why?
33. And, at last, if it were not the U.S. Government who organized the attacks on the WTC and on the Pentagon (and apparently it was NOT the U.S. Government, whether you like it or not), who was then the actual 9/11 perpetrator? What was his name and what was his nationality? Osama bin Laden apparently had an alibi – being a person with a moderate income he was unlikely capable to perform all those 9/11 miracles, including forcing the U.S. Government into demolishing the WTC and driving it into such a desperate post-9/11 cover-up... Still, the question remains – Who? Name? Nationality? Age? Address? Proof?

The new science – the “9/11thology” – answers all these questions without any exception. It answers them precisely and in an exact detail. You will have more than exhaustive answers to all above questions and to many other questions, in addition. Practically, no question of either technical- or conspiratorial-nature in regard to 9/11 will remain unanswered after you finish reading the first studying book ever available on this new exact science.

This ability to answer questions precisely is the very thing that makes a science an “exact science”.

For example, no one could call mathematics a “theory” because it is able to answer precisely to a question: “how much will be two plus two?”. Its answer “four” is verifiable – all you need to verify it is to have four apples and to be able to count till four.

However, some other sciences – like Darwin's theory of supposed “evolution” are not called “exact sciences”; they are called “theories”, because no one in This World has ever been able to verify them and no one has ever been able to come back from the Next World to either confirm or to disprove them.

Its ability to answer precisely such questions in regard to 9/11 makes the very difference between the 9/11thology and an ordinary 9/11 conspiracy theory. The 9/11thology is able to answer all the 33 questions mentioned above, while a conspiracy theory can not.

Just go ahead – read this book from the beginning to the end and you will have satisfactory answers to every one of the abovementioned 33 questions.

The last warning! The pharmaceutical warning that comes with the red pill.

I have to warn you that by choosing to read this seditious book you have chosen to take your red pill. This means that once you read it, your status will be changed at once and forever. You will become initiated.

If you were a conspiracy theorist or an advocate of one of those multiple conspiracy theories, you can no longer persist in your former theory, because otherwise your behavior will serve as proof that you are either a paid shill or an unpaid moron.

If you were a so-called “good citizen” and enjoyed your blissful ignorance in regards to the true nature of your government, as well as in regard to the true nature of the existing social order, you can no longer persist in your former delusion by pretending to continue being the so-called “good citizen”. It will not work. It will no longer be possible for you to remain the gullible “good citizen” if you know the contents of this book – because you will be converted into a miserable coward by your knowledge.

If you are a soldier or a cop, this is the worst. Because if after reading this book you continue to fight the so-called “terror”, the so-called “crime”, or the so-called “evil”, you would no longer be covered by your supposed “blissful ignorance”: You would know that in reality you serve liars and criminals and this will forever change your former status of the “soldier” or the “policeman”. Your new status will be: “an armed criminal”. Yet, it is even worse, if you are a judge. After getting the point of this book, it will no longer be possible for you to look at your reflection in a mirror without disgust if you prefer to continue serving the so-called “justice”. Others would, probably, continue addressing you as “Your Honor”, but you yourself would know that this title is no longer applicable to you personally.

In any case, you will no longer be able to claim your innocence based on your ignorance.

This book shares with you some awful secret.

Thus, after you read this book, you will no longer be ignorant and therefore you will no longer be innocent: you will know the secret. And you will not be able to flush out your memory in order to forget this secret.

You will not be able to spit out the red pill once you take it down.

Or, speaking in the language of George Orwell’s “Nineteen Eighty Four”, once you read this book, you will not be able to unread it.

Thus, if you take this warning seriously and prefer not to swallow the dangerous red pill, here is the blue pill for you:

Close this book now and forever. Read the Report of the 9/11 Commission, instead.

However, if you prefer to read this book further, be warned:

You are taking your red pill at your own discretion.

I do not enforce that prescription on you. Moreover, I do not even know the severity of your actual condition and I have no chance of setting a diagnosis in your personal case and so to be able to establish the proper dose and the necessity of the treatment. The red pill, therefore, is provided “as is”. The pharmacy relieves itself of any responsibility in connection with its usage. If you prefer to read further, it means that you make your own conscious decision to do so and you shall be solely responsible for the outcome of this auto-therapy.

You have been warned.

This was the last warning.

My testimony.

As I have already mentioned, there is a big difference between a conspiracy theorist and a witness. The difference is that a conspiracy theorist claims what he thinks/guesses/concludes, while a witness states what he knows. They also enjoy a very different legal status. The testimony of a conspiracy theorist is not admissible in legal proceedings. While the testimony of a witness is not only admissible in the court-room, but it is the primary evidence which is technically far more valuable than any documentary evidence.

There is a very big difference in approach to the claims of a conspiracy theorist and to those of an eye-witness (which many people unfamiliar with law and logic seem not to comprehend).

The difference is this. While a conspiracy theorist could be “right” or “wrong” in what he claims, a witness could not be “right” or “wrong”. A witness could only be a truthful witness, who says the truth, or a false witness who intentionally lies. In the first case he performs his citizen’s duties. In the second case he commits a crime punishable with imprisonment. I hope now, at last, you understand what the difference is and from now on you will no longer call this book a “conspiracy theory”?

The difference between the humble author of these lines and other people who advanced their claims in regard to 9/11 like Prof. David Ray Griffin, Prof. Steven E. Jones, Prof. James H. Fetzer, Prof. Morgan Reynolds, Dr. Judy Wood, so-called “Anonymous Physicist”, and other well-known and less-known 9/11 scholars is that not even one of them could testify under oath that he knows the truth and promises to say the truth, the only truth and nothing by the truth, primarily because they do not know the truth and are only guessing, while the humble author of these lines could testify under oath, because he knows the truth and does not need to guess.

Since many people attempted to claim that my video presentation (that first appeared on the Internet in March, 2010) and, consecutively, my book, were supposedly a new, although a “very plausible” 9/11 “conspiracy theory”, I am obliged to disprove this dangerous accusation in an official manner.

My version is not a “conspiracy theory”, dear accusers, because by calling it a “conspiracy theory” you intentionally, again, intentionally, try to diminish my legal status from being an important 9/11 witness, whose testimony is admissible in the court of law – to being a meager 9/11 conspiracy theorist, whose suggestions have no legal value.

But, please, be informed, dear accusers: this kind of cheap trick of yours does not work with the humble author of these lines. I am not a conspiracy theorist; I am a witness, who testifies as follows:

(see my testimony on the next page)

I, Mr. Dimitri Khalezov, swear to The Lord God Almighty that I say the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth and if I lie let God punish me in This World and in the World to Come, and testify as follows:

1) I indeed used to serve as a commissioned officer in the Soviet military unit 46179, which was the code-name of the Soviet Special Control Service – an organization primarily responsible for detecting nuclear explosions (underground or otherwise) everywhere in the world.

2) I indeed knew from the time of my former military service mentioned above about the existence of a so-called “emergency nuclear demolition scheme” of the World Trade Center in the city of New York, in the United States of America; and I knew about the existence of this so-called “emergency nuclear demolition scheme” of the World Trade Center in New York City during not less than ten years prior to the eleventh day of September, year 2001 (two thousand one) A.D.

3) I indeed used to know personally a very high-ranking and the very-well known official from the Israeli secret service who was using a bogus Arabic identity and a diplomatic cover for setting up various bogus Muslim terrorist networks in South East Asia and elsewhere and for organizing various false-flag terror actions, including those directly connected to the 9/11 perpetration and to the 2002 Bali bombing, at least. A photograph of this person appears below:

4) I was indeed invited by the abovementioned Israeli intelligence official to his celebratory breakfast early morning, 12 of September, 2001, Bangkok time (still evening of 11 of September in the United States). This celebratory breakfast took place in his diplomatic residence at: 15A, Bangkapi Mansion, 89, Soi 12, Sukhumvit Road, Bangkok, Thailand. And I indeed discussed with this Israeli intelligence official various proceeds of the 9/11 perpetration during this breakfast which was indeed a celebratory one.

5) I indeed honestly informed the U.S. authorities at the U.S. Embassy in Bangkok, Thailand, of all of the abovementioned facts providing them in a form of a detailed testimony and I could confirm that the U.S. authorities definitely know about all the four abovementioned facts, at least, from my testimony.

6) I could confirm that the U.S. authorities knew about terrorism-related activities of the abovementioned high-ranking Israeli intelligence official, as well as about my and his close relationship, even without me informing them as mentioned in the clause 5) above, and the U.S. officials indeed attempted to prosecute him. However, they abandoned all prosecution attempts against the abovementioned Israeli intelligence official and let him escape the prosecution by using another bogus identity. This particular fact that the U.S. officials knowingly let the abovementioned person escape justice is duly documented in several Thai law courts and I know the corresponding criminal cases' numbers and could provide them if necessary.

Anyone could use the text of the abovementioned testimony of mine in any legal proceedings, without modifying any word of mine and without taking any word of mine out of context.

I could repeat the above testimony of mine in front of the court of law of any country.

Dimitri Khalezov,
the witness.

Prologue. The largest “non-nuclear” blast ever...

"The car bomb is the nuclear weapon of guerrilla warfare."

-- Washington Post columnist Charles Krauthammer

It is not so, dear Mr. Krauthammer. It is vice-versa.

It happened a long time ago – at that time no one ever complained that those notorious “suit-case nukes” had been supposedly stolen from Soviet nuclear arsenals, no politician had come up with any public claim yet that “evil Iran” allegedly pursued its “clandestine nuclear weapons program”, and even “evil North Korea” had not yet been accused of developing its alleged nuclear weapons. It happened in remote 1983.

This largely forgotten nuclear perpetration was, indeed, the best of early “car-bombings” that became nothing less than a “golden standard” for future nuclear terrorism. Ironically, despite the fact that it was not performed by any “conventional” Muslim terrorists, it indeed inspired many of them and continues to inspire them even up to this day. Even though the true Muslim terrorists could not obtain any “suit-case nuke” (and the majority of those poor guys did not even suspect that such a thing even existed in This World), they all, nevertheless, were greatly encouraged by this particular event. The event itself was cunningly timed by its actual perpetrators to be the greatest political mistake of the then U.S. leadership – which at that time, after the first U.S. Beirut Embassy bombing, had decided to participate in the Lebanese Civil War and ordered the U.S. Navy to bombard Lebanese guerillas storming positions of Lebanese Government forces.

This is an official photograph (alias “file-photograph”) of 1983 Beirut barracks bombing – it is from an official site of U.S. Department of Defense, thanks to its courtesy. This is indeed the file-photograph of that event. It shall be known: conventional explosions do not feature any mushroom cloud. If you see anything like this all you have to do is to believe your eyes because you are not mistaken: you see a very nuclear explosion...

Official information on this bombing, at least, as provided by Wikipedia (comments in square brackets added by me):

The 1983 Beirut barracks bombing was a major incident on October 23, 1983, during the Lebanese Civil War. Two truck bombs struck separate buildings in Beirut, housing US and French members of the Multinational [peacekeeping] Force in Lebanon, killing hundreds of servicemen, the majority being US Marines. The blasts led to the withdrawal of the international peacekeeping force from Lebanon, where they had been stationed since the Israeli 1982 invasion of Lebanon. [The so-called] "Islamic Jihad" [organization hitherto unheard of] [reportedly] took responsibility for the bombing, but that organization is thought to have been a nom de guerre for Hezbollah receiving help from the Islamic Republic of Iran.

On around 6:20 AM, a yellow Mercedes-Benz truck drove to Beirut International Airport, where the 1st Battalion 8th Marines, under the US 2nd Marine Division of the United States Marine Corps, had set up its local headquarters. The truck had been substituted for a hijacked water delivery truck. The truck turned onto an access road leading to the Marines' compound and circled a parking lot. The driver then accelerated and crashed through a barbed wire fence around the parking lot, passed between two sentry posts, crashed through a gate and barreled into the lobby of the Marine headquarters.

By the time the two sentries had locked, loaded, and shouldered their weapons, the truck was already inside the building's entry way. The suicide bomber detonated his explosives, which were [allegedly] equivalent to 12,000 pounds (about 5,400 kg) of TNT. The force of the explosion collapsed the four-story cinder-block building into rubble, crushing many inside. It is said by a US federal district court judge in his ruling to have been the largest non-nuclear blast ever (deliberately) detonated on the face of the earth. [Do not believe this claim, because it was a deliberate lie. When there were standard 10-ton (20,000 pounds of TNT) aviation bombs available and, moreover, widely used – even during World War II. To claim that a laughable 5.4 tons of TNT was “the largest” blast was nothing, but ridiculous. This blast was, of course, larger than any known non-nuclear blast, because this particular blast was a nuclear one.]

According to Eric Hammel in his history of the Marine landing force, "The force of the explosion initially lifted the entire four-story structure, shearing the bases of the concrete support columns, each measuring fifteen feet in circumference and reinforced by numerous one and three quarter inch steel rods. The airborne building then fell in upon itself. A massive shock wave and ball of flaming gas was hurled in all directions." In the attack on the American barracks, the death toll was 241 American servicemen: 220 Marines, 18 Navy personnel and 3 Army soldiers. Sixty Americans were injured [and unlikely they had any chance to survive, because of received doses of radiation exceeding nominally "lethal" ones by several times].

This was the deadliest single-day death toll for the United States military since the 243 killed on 31st January 1968 – the first day of the Tet offensive in the Vietnam war. [This meant that one suicide bomber with a mere 5.4 tons of the TNT could instantly inflict casualties at the same rate as those inflicted during a full day of heavy fighting by the entire regular North Vietnamese army at its strategic full-scale offensive.]

About 2 minutes later, a similar attack occurred against the barracks of the French La 3^{ème} Compagnie, 1^{er} Régiment de Chasseurs Parachutistes (3rd Company of the 1st Parachute Infantry Regiment), 6 km away in the Ramlet al Baida area of West Beirut. Another suicide bomber drove his truck down a ramp into the 'Drakkar' building's underground parking garage and detonated his bomb, leveling the eight-story building. In the attack on the French barracks, 58 paratroopers were killed and 15 injured, in the single worst military loss for the French since the end of the Algerian war.

In addition, the elderly Lebanese custodian of the Marines' building was killed in the first blast. The wife and four children of a Lebanese janitor at the French building also were killed. Many of the French soldiers had gathered on their balconies moments earlier to see what was happening at the airport [where their American colleagues had been just nuked]. | End of the Wikipedia quote here.

The unfortunate French soldiers had apparently seen an interesting picture similar to that captured by the above photograph when they had gathered on their balconies moments earlier to see what was happening at the airport ...

Probably, if one would make a competition for the best picture of a mushroom cloud of an atomic explosion, this photo would undoubtedly win the first prize – it is the ideal one: an atomic mushroom cloud should look exactly like this one – vapor and dust separately...

This particular photo, of course, was not made by those poor French paratroopers, because unlikely their photo-cameras could survive the second nuclear blast; it was taken by someone else. But, probably, from their balconies the French soldiers could see something like that before the second “truck” with alleged “TNT load” has “arrived” to their own barracks.

It is suspected, however, that there were not any trucks at all. The two “mini-nukes” were simply planted inside both premises by “someone” whose visit was not suspicious to either the French or the American servicemen. It shall be suspected as being a truly “inside job”. The man, who installed both “mini-nukes” in both premises, must have been well-known to both – the French and the Americans – and must have been above any suspicion...

Culprits: Despite the apparent “success” of the attack (I guess it is clear to everybody that to instantly send to Hell several hundreds of infidels is an apparent success – at least, judging from the point of view of any true Muslim warrior), nobody claimed responsibility for it. This was the strangest feature of this particular act of alleged “terror”: No “terrorists” were in a hurry to come up to claim their laurels... It became even more weird when one hitherto unheard of organization, bearing the exceptionally idiotic name “Islamic Jihad”, has eventually stepped forward to claim responsibility for this bombing by an anonymous telephone call.

It is probably known that “Jihad” itself is a typically Koranic term – meaning “Holy War against unbelievers who suppress Muslims”. Logically, “Jihad” is “Islamic” by default, and no Muslim would ever name any organization “Islamic Jihad”, since the “Jihad” itself couldn’t be anything, but “Islamic”. Such a name could have only been invented by non-Muslims, moreover, by those non-Muslims, who were in a real hurry. If they only had time to use their brains a little bit longer, they would have chosen some other name.

Just to illustrate how strange it sounds to real Muslims, try to imagine, that, let’s say, after some despicable act of terror in North Korea, the next day, all North Korean newspapers would publish information that an organization named “Imperialistic Capitalism” claimed responsibility for that act of terror. Now, please, try to imagine that combination of these two words: “Islamic Jihad” indeed sounds about as idiotic as in the above example.

Moreover, the circumstances in general surrounding this nuclear bombing and the eventual appearance of hitherto unheard of “Islamic Jihad” with its claims looked exactly as idiotic as in the above example too. Up to this day it is not known anything at all about that mysterious “Islamic Jihad”. Neither an address of its headquarters, nor names of its leaders, nor any if its political agenda has ever been known. All what was known about this peculiar organization is that from time to time someone telephoned to mass media and claimed that this “Islamic Jihad” was responsible for such and such nuclear bombing.

This so-called “Islamic Jihad”, in fact, became so much associated with nuclear bombings that for some concerned security officials words “nuclear” and “Islamic Jihad” began to sound like synonyms. It was not therefore surprising when on 9/11 the very first responsibility was claimed by the very same organization, at least, so it was reported by many TV channels about noon time September 11, 2001...

Later it was claimed that “Islamic Jihad” was allegedly nothing else, than a nom de guerre for Hezbollah (which was a Shi’a Revolutionary organization, inspired by teachings of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini) – at least, so the abovementioned Wikipedia article claims citing various official sources.

It shall be known, however, that Hezbollah in Lebanon was officially inaugurated 2 years after the Beirut barracks bombing occurred. Hezbollah had come into existence only in 1985. Despite that the U.S. investigators several years later attempted to claim that Hezbollah had organized the 23 of October, 1983, bombing while still being “underground”, nobody took their bizarre claims seriously. Hezbollah has never existed “underground” and it is well-known fact. Once it had been created it immediately proclaimed itself publicly.

Anyhow, in response to the belated claims of the U.S. investigators, Hezbollah, as well as Iran and Syria (neither of whom could have had any nuclear, not even mini-nuclear, weapons back in the ‘80s), have firmly denied any involvement in that despicable double nuclear bombing of American and French peacekeepers.

Possible motives: “someone”, who initially instigated the civil war in Lebanon, needed that war to go on, implementing a well-known principle: “divide and rule”. Those American and French peacekeepers were apparently unwanted. That is why it was “politely” hinted that they were not really welcome. The peacekeepers had to leave. They left and the civil war in Lebanon continued to the benefit of a certain small country.

However, this was not all. The United States Government was caught by that development virtually with their pants down. For some reasons it did not dare to admit it publicly that the American peacekeepers were unwelcome in Lebanon – to the extent that it had been decided to show them the door by annihilating some of them using an atomic bomb...

Actually, it was the biggest strategic mistake of the U.S. Government. Had the U.S. administration admitted it honestly then, in 1983, that both – the First U.S. Embassy Bombing, and the Marines Barracks Bombing – were indeed nuclear events, the U.S. officials would not need to lie continuously about all those “suicidal” and “non-suicidal” “truck-“, “van-“ and “car-bombings” for the next 25 years to come.

Moreover, there would be a pretty good chance that due to a broad public interest in regard to possible origins of the “mini-nukes” in hands of the so-called “terrorists”, these “terrorists” would not dare to use their “mini-nukes” again, and therefore neither the 1995 Oklahoma-, nor the 1993 WTC-, nor the 1996 Khobar Towers-, nor the 1998 US Embassies-, nor any other nuclear bombings would ever occur. If subjected to public scrutiny from the very beginning, these nuclear bombings would never be blamed on “Iran”, “Iraq”, “Hezbollah”, “Sendero Luminoso”, “Tamil Tigers”, “Al-Qaeda” or Colombian “FARC”.

The discerning public would quickly figure it out who was really capable of manufacturing such precise mini-nuclear devices and would quickly draw the correct conclusions. Perhaps, even 9/11 could have been avoided in such a case...

As one of the Beirut barracks bombing’s eye-witness – the then, “embedded” with the Marines, NBC News Correspondent Jim Maceda would put it 25 years later: “...a ground zero that would, inexorably, lead to the Ground Zero, a generation later...”³”

He was 100% right, this perspicacious Mr. Maseda: it was indeed the very Beirut’s ground zero in lower case letters that led to the Manhattan’s Ground Zero in Capital letters... And it happened due to that apparently wrong decision of the Reagan Administration – which elected not to explain to the gullible public what the term “ground zero” really meant in the then English language...

Still, the U.S. Government, which decided to lie, rather than to say the awful truth, had to respond somehow to an intense public outcry that followed the bombing. Thus, the Reagan Administration ventured on an adequately unprecedented measure in response to the unprecedented Beirut barracks bombing.

Only a day later, the U.S. army launched a totally unexplainable and unprepared surprise Grenada Invasion, which attracted understandable international criticism and eventually cost the United States much more damage than the very “non-nuclear” blast in Beirut it was intended to distract attention from.

If the U.S. marines in Lebanon by 23 of October 1983 were still considered as being true peacekeepers by almost every nation (including Arabs and other Muslims), the U.S. marines that landed on Grenada shore on 25 of October 1983 were condemned as true aggressors by almost everyone, including the Americans themselves. Still, it was a chance for the U.S. Government to distract the undue public attention from the true physical nature of the mysterious Beirut blast a/k/a “the largest non-nuclear blast ever (deliberately) detonated on the face of the earth”... And apparently that timely “small victorious war” against small Grenada worked out. Exactly as another “small victorious war” would do later in similar circumstances in a popular 1997 Hollywood movie “Wag the dog”...

It is good to remember this story, because it will be helpful in understanding the true position of the U.S. Government in its unprecedented 9/11 cover-up and in its infamous “war” against the so-called “terror” that followed those apocalyptic events...

P.S. There is yet another interesting thing with this unprecedented “largest non-nuclear bombing” (that produced the perfect atomic mushroom cloud along with the “ground zero” designation of its spot).

Now it might sound unbelievable, but during the first two decades following the actual Beirut Barracks bombing, it was “politically incorrect” to mention this bombing as a historical event of any importance (not to say that it was extremely “politically incorrect” to mention the infamous Grenada invasion along with the Beirut Barracks bombing in any historical timetable – because the two unprecedented events were too seditiously close to each other). Both events – the 23 October 1983 Beirut Barracks bombings and the 25 October 1983 Grenada invasion that served as the attention distraction/cover-up for the former – were scheduled to be forgotten as soon as possible (or, speaking in the Orwell’s “newspeak” terminology, both were relegated to the status of “unevents”).

Here is an example of what I am trying to say. Please, look at this dictionary (it is a huge dictionary; you can imagine how big it is by comparing the volume’s size against that of a matches box, an AA-battery and an SD-card added to the photo for scaling purposes):

Above – Webster's Encyclopedic Unabridged Dictionary of the English Language 1994; Deluxe edition. ISBN 0-517-11888-2; Library of Congress Catalog Card No. 89-3785.

Exactly as it is stated on its front dust-cover, this dictionary is based on the Random House Unabridged Dictionary, First Edition, published for the last time under that name in 1983. Since then, it was published under a new name – the “Webster’s Encyclopedic Unabridged” in 1989, 1994 and 1996 (genuine editions), and, allegedly, in “1987”, “1991”, “1993”, “1996”, “1998”, “2001” (fake, backdated editions with modified definition of “ground zero” that were in reality manufactured in 2004-2005).

Perhaps, you remember this dictionary of mine if you watched my first video presentation about the WTC nuclear demolition that was first published on YouTube in March 2010 – in that video I used this very dictionary to demonstrate the pre-9/11 definition of “ground zero”, which is, just to remind you:

This seditious dictionary that was fortunately acquired by me prior to the 9/11 events (now it is very difficult to find its genuine edition, because the fake backdated one replaced it in most libraries and in the second-hand book-stores), in fact, serves many purposes. It does not only show us the genuine definition of “ground zero” as it used to be in the largest unabridged English dictionaries of the pre-9/11 era. Much more importantly, this dictionary will help us later to unmask the most dangerous work of the so-called “good guys” and their skills – i.e. to debunk the backdated faked “second edition” of the Random House Unabridged Dictionary of the alleged “1987” edition with the “broadened” definition of “ground zero”.

However, in this particular case we need this dictionary for some different purpose. While its genuine pre-9/11 definition of “ground zero” is an example of how “politically incorrect” this dictionary is today, there is another example that reveals the vice-versa: the “political correctness” of that dictionary (at least judging by the standards of the “political correctness” of the ‘80s and the ‘90s). At the back of this dictionary, after the main body of its actual dictionary text, there is an add-on chapter named “Chronology of Major Dates in History”. Look what it says about that “minor” 23 October 1983 Beirut barracks bombing (on the photo below there is a corresponding fragment of its page 1693):

As you can see – despite mentioning three other bombings, as well as thefts, assassinations, massacres, executions, crashes, shooting down of airliners, and even collisions in Afghan tunnels, the so-called “largest non-nuclear” bombing of the U.S. Marines in Beirut that took place on October 23 1983 is not mentioned at all, while the unprecedented Grenada invasion (that took place in reality on 25 October 1983) is “modestly” mentioned as a presumably “unimportant” event under the “19 October 1983” entry that pertained to another event.

From this presentation you can judge yourself – how “politically incorrect” the actual Beirut Barracks bombing was in its time... And you do not even have to doubt that the main reasons behind its actual “political incorrectness” were both – its true perpetrator (since the alleged organization bearing the idiotic name “Islamic Jihad” was perceived accordingly by thinking people those days and could not dupe them), and the supposedly “non-nuclear” designation “ground zero” awarded to the spot of that allegedly “non-nuclear” bombing by the U.S. defense specialists...

John Walcott, FBI agents, and haz-mat suits.

"If liberty means anything at all, it means the right to tell people what they do not want to hear."
- George Orwell, Preface to Animal Farm (1946)

To begin with, I would like to quote some statements concerning one of the 9/11 heroes – Detective John Walcott, a “Ground Zero” responder, who spent a considerable amount of time in the WTC site cleaning the rubble of the World Trade Center. He spent enough time there to develop a peculiar disease: acute myelogenous leukemia in its terminal form.

Two paragraphs of this statement from a scary article “Death by Dust”⁴ managed to contain and to reveal to us practically all those “unexplainable” peculiar things – which the reader will need as a basic premise to understanding the main point of this book:

“...Because Walcott was a detective, he ended up spending his five-month stint not just at Ground Zero, but also at Fresh Kills. As much as he choked on the Lower Manhattan air, he dreaded the Staten Island landfill. Walcott knew everything in the towers had fallen - desks, lights, computers. But apart from the occasional steel beam, the detritus that he sifted through there consisted of tiny grains of dust - no furniture pieces, no light fixtures, not even a computer mouse.

At times, the detectives would take shelter in wooden sheds, in an attempt to get away from what Walcott likes to call "all that freaking bad air." One day, he was sitting in the shed with his colleagues, eating candy bars and drinking sodas, when some FBI agents entered. They were dressed in full haz-mat suits, complete with head masks, which they had sealed shut with duct tape to ward off the fumes. As Walcott took in the scene, contrasting the well-protected FBI agents with the New York cops wearing respirator masks, one thought entered his mind: What is wrong with this picture?...”

Yes, Mr. Walcott, unfortunately something was wrong, very badly wrong with that picture...

Those FBI agents, who were not ashamed to wear those full haz-mat suits, moreover, sealed shut with duct tape, in front of unprotected “commoners”, knew the “third” and the ultimate truth I am going to talk about in this book. That is why they do not suffer now from leukemia or from any other kinds of terminal cancer. The FBI agents will apparently live long and fulfilling lives, despite briefly visiting “Ground Zero”...

If you would only open a contemporary dictionary to look at the actual meaning of this peculiar term, you won’t need to ask that question; you would understand immediately what was wrong with “Ground Zero”:

All possible meanings of “ground zero” as defined by The New International Webster’s Comprehensive Dictionary of the English Language (Deluxe Encyclopedic Edition 1999, ISBN 1-888777796), page 559.

It should be mentioned here also that Mr. John Walcott eventually managed to survive, unlike many of his colleagues who used to work at “Ground Zero” and who were less lucky... On December 17, 2007, it was briefly mentioned in some Internet news⁵ that John Walcott at last underwent some peculiar (and an extremely painful) operation – a bone marrow transplantation. From now on, he could continue to live

⁴ The entire story from which I am quoting is here: <http://www.villagevoice.com/news/0648.lombardi.75156.2.html>

(on special immuno-depressant drugs that would prevent his transplant rejection; and without leaving his house due to the fact that his immune system no longer exists and any kind of infection could easily be fatal).

For someone who does not know what the “marrow transplantation” means, I am obliged to explain. The marrow transplantation is required for patients who suffered heavy doses of either penetrating or residual ionizing radiation (or both) and whose own bone marrow (that is responsible for blood regeneration) is completely killed by these heavy doses of radiation.

It is a peculiar property of radiation – it always strikes bone marrow cells most heavily compared to any other cells of man’s body. That is why the majority of victims of radiation suffer from leukemia – the heavier the radiation dose was – the more of their bone marrow is killed and the heavier is their leukemia.

John Walcott, apparently, suffered from the heaviest possible condition – all the time before he obtained his bone marrow transplant, he lived exclusively on donors’ blood, because his own blood was not regenerating at all.

In addition to killing or severely damaging bone marrow, ionizing radiation, especially when someone inhales or ingests radioactive dust or radioactive vapor, could cause various kinds of cancer that could affect virtually any part of a man’s body, or even a few parts simultaneously. However, it is pretty easy for dishonest doctors and health officials to give some plausible “explanations” in regard to these cancers. They can claim that it is due to “asbestos”, “toxic fumes”, “toxic dust particles” etc. But when it comes to the bone marrow damage, these cheaters are helpless. The bone marrow damage could only be caused by ionizing radiation.

When you hear that someone needs marrow transplantation, all you have to do is to believe your ears:
it is a case of radiation poisoning.

That is exactly why those FBI agents wore full “haz-mat” suits with head masks even sealed shut with duct tape “to ward off the fumes” while visiting “Ground Zero”. They wanted to suffer not from leukemia, neither from any cancer. And when they additionally sealed shut their head masks with duct tape, they did it not “to ward off the fumes” as believed by John Walcott. They did it in order to ward off radioactive dust and especially radioactive vapor, which they wanted neither to inhale, nor to ingest.

More about the author of this book and why this book appeared.

Actually, many friends of mine used to continuously ask me to write this book for the last few years, but I was always hesitating.

It would never be possible for me to write this kind of book without properly being identified as its author. Even if I tried to hide my identity, it would not be successful anyway – serious guys would discover immediately who did it, so I really had no chance to stay anonymous.

However, I did not want to be famous even to a lesser extent – all my life I preferred to be a small guy, unknown to anyone and I was always happy with that state of affairs. This was the only reason behind my unwillingness to write anything like that.

My unwillingness to write a book on this topic did not mean that I did not want to share with others something important that I knew about terrorism. Yes, I did not want to write any book, but I did honestly inform several different secret services of a few countries (including also those of the United States, of course) about things I knew. Moreover, I did that a very long time ago. I felt my conscience was clear even if I would not proceed to any further step.

Nonetheless, once I had accidentally encountered the abovementioned story of poor John Walcott somewhere on the Internet, I finally set up my mind and at last decided to write this book. It was not my friends, but those cowardly FBI agents wearing full haz-mat suits, who managed to finally convince me to reveal the truth about “Ground Zero” to others.

I am well aware that many so-called “American patriots” will hate me for this book (not even to mention those FBI agents in haz-mat suits, and scribblers at their pay who are parasitic on “terrorism”-related topics). I am anticipating how all of them will lash out at this book. But, frankly, I do not really care about their opinions, especially considering that these guys and gals who parasitize on the concept of so-called “terrorism” (as well as zombies who believe them) do not have opinions of their own anyway.

The main reason for me to write this book was that I did not believe that those FBI agents wearing haz-mat suits should alone enjoy their exclusive knowledge about 9/11. It would be simply too unfair for the rest of the descendants of Adam – who do not expect to be reduced to resemble those poor creatures described by George Orwell in his immortal “Animal Farm”.

This book will allow other people to get to know also everything that happened on September 11, 2001: why there were no pieces of furniture or of a computer found among “unexplainable” fine dust, why the WTC buildings collapsed with almost freefall speed, why the former WTC site was promptly dubbed “Ground Zero”, why all former “Ground Zero” workers now suffer from leukemia and other kinds of cancer, and why all those FBI agents, who had exclusive knowledge, wore full haz-mat suits while denying these very haz-mat suits to others...

Let the author of this book introduce himself first:

My name is Dimitri Khalezov (according to my former Uruguayan and some other documents of mine: “Dimitri Kolesov”; according to my original Soviet documents: “Dmitri Alekseevich Khalezov” or, simply “Dmitri Khalezov”; or, in Cyrillic alphabet – “Дмитрий Алексеевич Халезов”).

I was born 11 of August 1965.

I was formerly a commissioned officer in the Soviet military unit 46179, otherwise known as the "Special Control Service⁶ of the 12th Chief Directorate of the Defense Ministry of the USSR".

The 12th Chief Directorate itself was an organization responsible in the Soviet Union for safe-keeping, production control, technical maintenance etc. of the entire nuclear arsenal of the state. The same organization was also responsible for maintaining both Soviet nuclear testing grounds in Novaya Zemlia archipelago and near Semipalatinsk (now Kazakhstan) and for conducting all nuclear tests (practically only underground ones), as well as for the ecological safety of such nuclear tests. That is why I possess some specific knowledge which you will encounter below.

After dissolution of the Soviet Union, I quit the Armed Forces.

Later, due to some specific knowledge possessed from my former military service, I was involuntarily involved in certain terrorist activities (luckily to myself more as a victim, than as an organizer of such activities). Because of my involuntarily involvement, I somehow managed to get to know not only certain exact details of the 9/11 attacks – both against the Pentagon and against the World Trade Center – but even exact names of some of its main perpetrators, which are not known today – at least, officially.

Someone might (and apparently will) think: "Why should we listen to your ravings, boy? Don't you know how many idiots who claim to possess "specific knowledge" have appeared since September 11, 2001, to this day? You are probably 1001st – who claims to "know everything"... Why should we read your stupid book and take your idiotic claims seriously? Do you think we are not tired yet of reading all these crazy stories about September 11, lol?"

Well, I will answer this reasonable question.

I am not that small boy, actually – even the U.S. Government has already acknowledged my being a "big guy": I was the first person who was officially arrested in 2003 on accusation of supplying travel documents to a certain, well-known Mr. Hambali⁷ – an alleged affiliate of a certain Mr. Osama bin Laden and an acknowledged leader of a so-called "Jemaah Islamiah" terrorist organization. Hambali was described as nothing less than "the Osama bin Laden of Southeast Asia" and was blamed by President G.W. Bush for arranging that well-known meeting of the would be 9/11 hijackers in Kuala-Lumpur, Malaysia, in 2000, and for planning one more similar attack by hijacked planes against some skyscrapers in Los-Angeles.

The author of these lines, in turn, was officially accused by the U.S. Government for arranging fake travel documents for Mr. Hambali and for other major operation planners of "Al-Qaeda" and "Jemaah Islamiah" terrorist organizations – including allegedly helping September 11 hijackers and the 2002 Bali bombers. Though unofficially, my humble person was accused by the U.S. Government in something much more serious than that... While Mr. Hambali was arrested August 11, 2003, I was arrested right after him – August 13, 2003.

Actually, I was one step away from my extradition to the United States after my arrest in Bangkok, Thailand. Ironically, my extradition did not take place, not because I was too small and did not know anything. It was exactly vice-versa: the extradition had not taken place precisely because I knew too much. Someone thought it wouldn't be good for the U.S. Justice to get such a guy revealing the full truth about 9/11 in a court room. That is why I was eventually excluded.

All of this is just to confirm that my claims are not as stupid as they might appear at the first glance – I really know many things about 9/11.

At the next page there is a confidential document, copied from my case-file in the Thai Criminal Court – this chart composed by the American FBI purports to represent an actual conspiracy of the infamous 2002 Bali Bombing – particularly links of senior operational planners of the so-called "Jemaah Islamiah" and the so-called "Al-Qaeda" to those who could supply them with appropriate travel documents. In this

However, most importantly – you can see one of the true organizers of 9/11 perpetration on the same row, right. Unfortunately, his photo is not so clear in this secret chart, but it does not matter – I have a clearer one, which you will encounter later in this book.

As you can see from this chart, I am not such a little guy, actually. The American FBI put me in the very same row with the chief perpetrator of 9/11 – just next to him. Considering my status, awarded to me by the very U.S. Government, I have an obvious privilege to be listened to.

I would dare to claim that I will name in this book at least one hitherto unknown chief perpetrator of the 9/11 attacks, including even showing his photographs and a photocopy of his passport. I will name here, in addition, at least two of his subordinates – also including photographs and photocopies of their passports.

Moreover, I would dare to claim that I will explain in this book everything that has really happened with the World Trade Center and with the Pentagon – in precise detail, and I will also explain not only what has happened, but also why it has happened.

However, to anticipate any possible mistrust, I would like to state in advance that neither a demolition of the World Trade Center, nor the Pentagon attack had anything to do with either the U.S. Government, or with Osama bin Laden. Their chief organizer was another organization, one of the most important members of which, thanks to Satan, I happened to know personally.

Below is a photo of a Uruguayan diplomatic passport, presented to me. It was a gift from a man, who was one of the main 9/11 planners and a former deputy director of the Mossad. This passport was purported to be a sign of “appreciation” by his organization for certain “consultation services” provided by me prior to the September 11 attacks. The date of issuance of this diplomatic passport was September 17, 2001.

A certain Mr. "Hambali", alias Nurjaman Riduan Isamuddin, a leader of the "Jemaah Islamiyah" ("JI") terrorist organization and a closest affiliate of a certain Mr. Osama bin Laden. Mr. "Hambali" stands accused of organizing 2002 Bali bombing, as well as organizing of a meeting of then would be September 11 hijackers in Kuala-Lumpur, Malaysia in 2000 and their safe travel to the USA via Thailand. President Bush Jr. also blames "Hambali" for even greater role in September 11 plot.

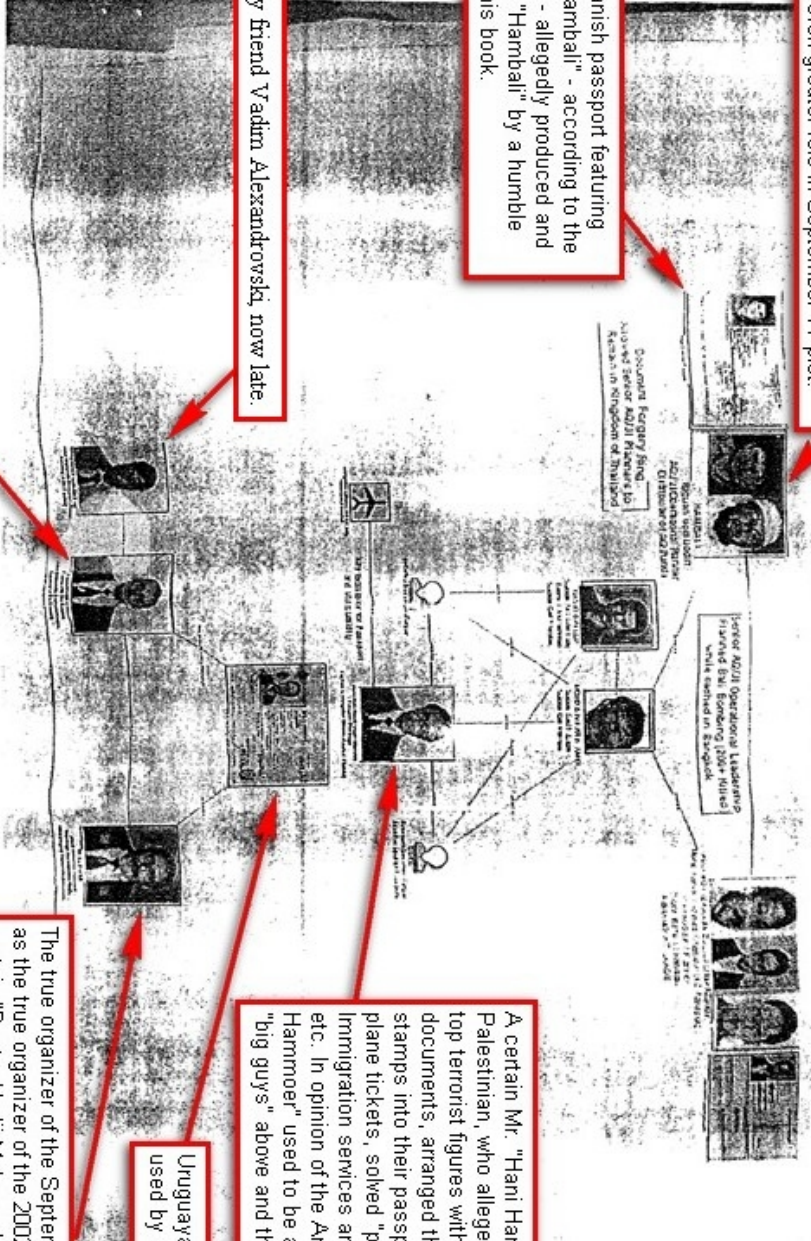

Forged Spanish passport featuring photo of "Hambali" - according to the FBI's claim - allegedly produced and supplied to "Hambali" by a humble Author of this book.

My friend Vadim Alexandrovski, now late.

A humble Author of this book - in opinion of the American FBI - equal in stature and in danger to the old gentlemen to the right.

Composed by the American FBI confidential chart intended for their Thai colleagues, which purports to show alleged links of senior operational planners of the "Al-Qaeda" ("AO") and the "Jemaah Islamiyah" ("JI") organizations to alleged passport forgers gang in Thailand. This chart is available in case-files of criminal cases No. 605/49, 6009/48, 2534/49, 5729/48 - all at the Criminal Court of Southern Bangkok. This one is a legally obtained copy of that document.

AO/JI Senior Operational Planners' Links to Document Forger in Thailand

A certain Mr. "Hani Hammoer", allegedly a Palestinian, who allegedly used to supply top terrorist figures with appropriate travel documents, arranged their exit- and entry-stamps into their passports, arranged their plane tickets, solved "problems" with the Immigration services and airport authorities etc. In opinion of the American FBI, "Hani Hammoer" used to be a link between the "big guys" above and the "big guys" below.

Uruguay diplomatic passport used by Mr. "Hani Hammoer".

The true organizer of the September 11 attacks, as well as the true organizer of the 2002 Bali Bombing - a certain "Doctor Hadji Mohamed Hussein", 80 years old (as in 2007), an alleged son of the former Grand Mufti of Palestine - late Hadji Amin Al-Husseini. The true name of this old gentleman, as well as his true nationality, will be disclosed further in this book.

Author of this book in December 1987 – in a rank of First Lieutenant in his new military aviation uniform.

I wasn't a pilot, but a military communication engineer; such an aviation uniform was issued to me when I was transferred from head-quarters of the 12th Chief Directorate of the Defense Ministry of the USSR to its Special Control Service and had to change my old uniform to the aviation uniform – worn by all officers of the then Soviet nuclear intelligence. It retained a tradition of wearing such an aviation uniform from the very beginning of this Service. At first, it was operating some airplane-based flying laboratories which were used to collect various data after the first atmospheric nuclear explosions – either domestic ones, or those of various adversaries of the USSR.

Later, some other methods were added to the nuclear control – such as seismic, ionospheric, radio intercepts analyzing, etc, which no longer required the officers to be always airborne, but the old traditional aviation uniform has remained in that Service.

By contrast, most of the remaining officers of the 12th Chief Directorate wore gunnery uniforms – being considered as specialists in arsenal-keeping affairs, even though their actual “arsenal” was a nuclear one.

Since my video appeared on the Internet in 2010, many skills immediately took an opportunity to accuse me of being an “impostor” who supposedly “had no relevance” to the military unit 46179. While some other skills started to claim that such an organization as the “military unit 46179”, a/k/a “Soviet Special Control Service”, allegedly “did not exist” (except in the sick imagination of the infamous impostor and conspiracy theorist that goes by the name “Dimitri Khalezov”). Some of the skills even managed to remove Wikipedia articles – that were describing the Special Control Service of the USSR/Russian Federation.

However, their desperate efforts cannot change anything – a thinking person could easily find proof of the existence of the said organization by searching the Internet for the “military unit 46179” or “Special Control Service”, or “Special Control Service of the 12 Chief Directorate”, or “12 Chief Directorate”, or, in Russian, for the following keywords: “воинская часть 46179”, or “в/ч 46179”, or “Служба Специального Контроля”, or “Служба Спецконтроля”, or “Служба Специального Контроля 12 ГУМО”, or “12 ГУМО”.

Here is its main building in Moscow:

Above: headquarters of the Soviet Special Control Service located on Rubtsovsko-Dvortsovaya Street, 2 (in Russian: “Рубцовско-Дворцовая улица, дом № 2”), Moscow city.

Left half of this huge building was occupied by the staff and the administration of the “Military unit 46179”, right half – by the Military Scientific-Research Institute of the Special Control Service (codenamed “Military unit 31650”).

The actual operational command center of the Special Control Service (codenamed “Military unit 63679”) those days occupied a separate building on the “Matrosskaya Tishina Street, 10” – just some 200 meters away, over the corner.

Above: location map of the Soviet Special Control Service and its neighbors from among other branches of the Soviet military. Red arrows show locations of the most important buildings. “1” – the main entrance to the Special Control Service headquarters building (the one shown on the previous photo) directly from the Rubtsovsko-Dvortsovaya Street. “2” – half of the building occupied by the “Military unit 31650” and “3” – half of the building occupied by the “Military unit 46179”. “4” – the operational building of the Special Control Service occupied by the “170 Operational-Coordination Center of the Special Control Service” and by its “844 Command Post” (codenamed “Military unit 63679”). It was not possible to approach this building from any street, unless passing first a check-point of the paratroopers’ (who guarded the entire compound), and then – the second checkpoint of the actual Special Control Service inside that was guarded by special guard-troops. “5” and “6” show buildings occupied by headquarters of the paratroopers’ forces (in Russian “VDV”) and that of the military transport aviation (in Russian “VTA”). Both – the paratroopers’ forces and the Special Control Service (both of whom wore aviation uniforms, by the way) were historically located within the same compound together with the headquarters of the military transport aviation, since the latter one was their actual carrier. The rest of the compound (to the right as on this photo) was occupied by a few units of the paratroopers and of the special guards, by the central command of the military topographic service, and by a special brigade of communication troops that belonged to the Moscow military circle.

If anyone bothers to go to this Wikipedia article about the 12th Chief Directorate in Russian: http://ru.wikipedia.org/wiki/12-е_Главное_управление_Министерства_обороны_России he would notice (after scrolling down about the two-thirds of the Wikipedia page) the abovementioned photograph of the headquarters of the Special Control Service, located on the Rubtsovsko-Dvortsovaya Street, 2, and, right under that photo, he would notice another depiction, this time of the emblem of the Special Control Service of the Ministry of Defense of the Russian Federation:

Above – the emblem of the Special Control Service of the Ministry of Defense of the Russian Federation, picture of which is located here: http://ru.wikipedia.org/wiki/Файл:Эмблема_ССК.png

The wording in Russian on the above emblem could be translated to English as follows:

Top: * Service [of] Special Control *

Bottom: * [of the] Ministry of Defense of the Russian Federation *

The actual depiction in the middle says the rest. I guess no one in sound mind would doubt, after looking at this emblem that the Special Control Service of the Ministry of Defense of the Russian Federation, that it had something to do with the nuclear explosions? Do not doubt that the Special Control Service of the Ministry of Defense of the former Soviet Union (I used to serve in that organization still in the Soviet Union times) had something to do with nuclear explosions either.

Actually, to be frank with you, I hate the above emblem, because it looks so stupid, if not to say “idiotic” to my taste. Moreover, it did not exist in the Soviet times.

The Soviet Army was firstly modest, and secondly – very secretive. Nothing extra was allowed to be attached to the military uniform those days. There was nothing that could indicate your actual duties, or could hint the name or the exact location of your actual military unit. The maximum you could do those days was to be able to recognize an infantry man from a paratrooper or aviation personnel from border guards. And nothing more exact than that. So, all servicemen of the then Soviet Special Control Service were dressed modestly, in the typical military aviation uniforms (though a few were dressed in black uniforms of the naval aviation) and you could not tell a difference between a serviceman of the Soviet nuclear intelligence and a serviceman of the military aviation of any kind. All were dressed exactly the same.

However, the Russian successor of the Soviet Army is by no way modest (and you can forget about any secrecy, of course) – now they proudly wear badges and emblems that describe their actual duties, not to mention the exact names of their actual military units. Today even the servicemen of the 12th Chief Directorate, the nuclear arsenal of the state, that was the most secret organization in the Soviet times, wear special emblems that indicate that they are indeed servicemen of the 12th Chief Directorate...

Anyway, the stupid and tasteless emblem of the Special Control Service of Russia discussed above is not a bad addition to my claims – the skills and the so-called “debunkers” would never be able to deny the obvious after looking at it.

In any case, to duly meet the accusations of the skills (who claimed that I allegedly had nothing to do with the said service) I am obliged to provide some scanned copies of original papers that fortunately survived a confiscation attempt by the Russian “FSB” (the rest of my military documents kept at my home were, unfortunately, confiscated by thugs from the Russian secret service who broke into my house in Golitsyno, Russia, and took almost everything, diplomas and family photographs inclusive).

Luckily, these few surviving papers are more than enough to establish the fact that makes the skills so desperate – i.e. the fact that I indeed used to be a serviceman in the Soviet Special Control Service, a/k/a “military unit 46179”.

However, to properly connect those papers (that are dealing with my service at the actual “military unit 46179”) to the actual story, I have to tell more of that story first.

The actual story of my appearance at this supposedly “mystical” organization (existence of which is being challenged by the skills today) was quite funny.

Of this 4th platoon of our class only I, Belov, Yakovenko, and Galkin ended up in the Special Control Service; Zadorojnyi (being an A-student) seemed to remain at the 12th Chief Directorate itself, while the rest were assigned to various other branches of the Soviet Armed forces after our graduation. Only one (Krylov) was assigned to the KGB, and none from our 4th platoon was assigned to the Navy (otherwise, you would see such guys in the Navy uniform).

Above – the author of this book during the graduation ceremony at the military college in Leningrad. 25 or 26 (can not remember exactly) of June 1987. Here I receive my diploma and an academic badge. My actual class' commander (the one who sent me and some other people to the 12th Chief Directorate) is seen at the next table (the third officer, counting from the left), preparing to hand a diploma to a guy behind me.

I graduated from a military college in the then Leningrad (now renamed back to "Saint-Petersburg") city at the summer of 1987 and, as any other newly graduated commissioned officer, I was awarded a 30-days leave before starting my military duties. The leave supposed to end around 28 or 29 of July 1987. The majority of graduates of my military college (as well as those of any other Soviet military college, actually) were assigned directly to their new positions in the Armed Forces or in the Navy by the very same order of the Minister of Defense that promoted them to the commissioned officer's rank ("Lieutenant"), because it was the standard approach in the then Soviet Army. The Minister of Defense of the Soviet Union in his "graduation order" usually awards the rank of a "Lieutenant" to each graduate of a military college and by the same order he appoints this particular graduate to such and such position in such and such regiment (military ship, military research institute, military hospital, or whatever), located there and there.

However, it was not so in the case of me and that of a few comrades of mine. Instead of being appointed by the Minister's of Defense's order directly to certain positions – such as a "commander of a platoon in such and such regiment", for example (as would the absolute majority of other newly graduated military officers), we were given upon our graduation ceremony peculiarly looking written orders bearing a certain address in Moscow and a certain telephone number. Those orders prescribed the holder upon the expiration of his 30-days leave to arrive to Moscow and to report to the so-called "Military Unit 31600" then located in an old-type mansion in a quiet compound on a quiet street, however, situated not so far from the busy main building of the General Staff. And only there we discovered how bad was the joke our class' commander at the military college played with everybody, the actual Soviet Armed Forces inclusive...

As far as I can recollect, besides the humble author of these lines (who was born curious and knew a lot about the Soviet Armed Forces and their secrets, even while being a cadet) and our class' commander at the military college (who actually "sold" us there) no one had a clue of what was the "12th Chief Directorate of the Ministry of Defense", a/k/a "Military unit 31600"... It was, in fact, such a secret organization those days that I used to encounter major-generals and even lieutenant-generals who served in the Soviet Army for 40 years, graduated from a couple of military academies, in addition to an initial military college, but, nonetheless, had never heard of what the 12th Chief Directorate was and what was its actual function in the Soviet military. Needless to say that in our military college probably a few (if any at all) commanding officers knew it either. Not to mention the actual cadets-graduates who simply had no clue where they were about to serve. Nonetheless, our class' commander at the military college (who was, in fact, a very clever and well-educated lieutenant-colonel with a good sense of humor) knew very well what the "12th Chief Directorate" was and he was fully aware what he was doing when he played that bad joke as a result of which you are reading this book now.

The author of this book in a cadet uniform around the time of being "sold" to the "buyer" from the 12th Chief Directorate.

In our military college there were a few grades of the cadets depending on their behavior, success in studying, and also depending on their attitude towards the superiors: the "good guys" (i.e. "A-students", prominent sportsmen, platoon-sergeants, but also "early" members of the Communist Party, informers, bootlickers, etc. similar folks); the "moderate guys" (i.e. cadets demonstrating moderate behavior and moderate success in studying and in the social work); the "bad guys" (i.e. those with poor results in studying), and the "Mafia" (i.e. those who demonstrated antisocial, "politically incorrect", or unruly behavior, abused alcohol, were often absent without leave, did not want to join the Communist Party, or were expelled from either the Communist Party, or from the "Komsomol", who had encounters with the local police, or were close to the criminal underworld, and so on). Of course, as you might sincerely expect, the humble author of these lines was from the "Mafia" category (I mean if I had the typical mentality of an obedient slave, a/k/a a "good citizen", you would unlikely be reading this book now).

Our class' commander was dreaming of retaliating on that "Mafia" category by getting us assignments at the worst possible places upon our graduation. Till some "buyer" from the 12th Chief Directorate came to our military college to choose the cadets (which was the rarest occasion that happened only once in a few years), the worst place to serve was considered to be the "anti-aircraft defense forces" (called by an abbreviator "PVO" in Russian). Their military units were never located in big cities, but rather 30-40 kilometers away from them, stressful because of their constant elevated state of combat readiness coupled with not so good prospects of promotion in the future. So, it seems that all of us were destined to be assigned to the anti-aircraft defense forces and we were already reconciled to that prospect.

When a "buyer", however, from the 12th Chief Directorate came to our military college a few months before graduation and solemnly declared that he was “from the most serious and the most secret organization of the Soviet Armed Forces and his organization requires the best people”, our commander judged that to serve at the 12th Chief Directorate would be even worse than to serve at the anti-aircraft defense. Military units of the 12th Chief Directorate were located even farther from the big cities (usually, at least 100 kilometers, if not 200 kilometers away), they were very tightly guarded (those days not only by the military alone, but by the KGB, in addition). Moreover, to temporarily leave a compound of such a military unit (let’s say, for merely fishing in a nearby river, not to mention going to the nearest city) every serviceman had to obtain special permission on a case-by-case basis, while to get permission to be visited there by one’s relatives was next to impossible.

So, our class’ commander thought that the best way to retaliate against those whom he considered “mafia” was to send them to serve there. He thusly called the naïve chap who was acting as a “buyer” from the 12th Chief Directorate (I remember it was a Major in a peculiar marine uniform – perhaps, because of being from a naval unit of the 12th Chief Directorate) into a room and also called into this room all those who were of the “mafia” category – as far as I can recollect, 17 or 18 people in total, about a quarter of them from my 4th platoon. There he began to shower praise on us, telling to the poor Major how good and how reliable we were (without telling him that none of us was a member of the Communist Party – that was the main requirement at the 12th Chief Directorate and that only a few of us were “A-students” – which was yet another requirement at the 12th Chief Directorate) and eventually convinced him to “buy” all of us at once. The Major in the peculiar marine uniform happily noted down our names and departed.

That is how we were “sold” prior to our graduation. However, because the 12th Chief Directorate was a very secretive organization, it had a peculiar procedure. Instead of submitting to the Minister of Defense (for his standard graduation-assignment order) vacant positions to be occupied by young lieutenants in concrete military units, it demanded that all graduates from all military colleges arrive at such and such date to such and such locality in Moscow (or even call in such and such day on such and such telephone number for further instructions – in a very much “spy-like” manner). Only after a personal interview with each of them, could they be assigned to their positions within military units of the 12th Chief Directorate. In this way even geographical locations and dummy numbers of the actual military units (i.e. arsenal bases where nuclear warheads were being kept and serviced) could remain obscure from those folks who were not entitled to know it.

My home was not so far from Moscow – in the town of Golitsyno (to be more exact, in a small village 5 km away from Golitsyno that served as “testing grounds” (a/k/a “polygon”) for antennas and used to house scientific and technical personnel of the Scientific Research Institute of Radio – where my parents used to work. Since my home was only 45 kilometers away, I could reach Moscow by a commuter train or by a car in less than an hour. The rest of the “mafia” members from my class in the military college were from other cities and even from other republics of the Soviet Union; none of them had any place to stay in Moscow. That is why the most of them arrived first to my home in Golitsyno 1-2 days prior to the day we had to report to the mysterious organization’s headquarters. After spending time having great fun the last couple of days, all of us dressed up and departed to the prescribed place.

When we arrived to the headquarters of the 12th Chief Directorate (that indeed looked like an old-style mansion in a very quiet compound on a very quiet street), we noticed that our group looked very different compared to the rest of the graduates from other military colleges that were crowded in the yard around the mansion. I guess we indeed looked like “mafia” by outward appearance, since you could easily distinguish hooligans from “A-students” even by their faces (not to mention that some of our folks were not yet completely sober from the previous night party at my home in Golitsyno).

In addition to all of that, a Soviet military tradition required that a serviceman had to report to the new place of duty wearing a full parade uniform (that in the Soviet Army was with the boxcalf boots, rather than short-boots). So, while the rest of the newly appointed graduates were properly dressed, our group was dressed in service uniforms (since we were not sure how we had to appear there – it was not actually a final place, in our opinion, but just some intermediate destination). Perhaps, the way we were dressed was considered as an “insult” to those commanders who were about to receive and to interview us.

I have to mention also that the 30-days leaves of different graduates were not ending on the very same day – because the actual travel time from the school in Leningrad to different home-towns of different graduates was different and the actual total length of the 30-days leave might vary – from 33 to 38 days. Thus, a few of our folks reported to the headquarters of the 12th Chief Directorate on some later dates, were interviewed by different officials and, as a result, were treated differently and a few of them were even left to serve there. However, the majority of us (including me) reported in bulk on the very same day.

Just to make the long story short: our group was immediately noticed – as something “different” in the crowded compound of the 12th Chief Directorate headquarters – and we were promptly invited in by a certain Colonel who introduced himself as an official from the personnel department of the 12th Chief Directorate responsible for interviewing the newcomers.

To say that the Colonel was not too pleased to see us is an understatement... He seated us and requested us to wait while our personal files were being delivered to him. Once he briefly looked through the first few files he almost fell in shock. His face turned red and he was speechless for a few minutes.

After that, probably not believing that someone could joke in such a manner with the most serious department of the Soviet Armed Forces, he asked:

“Who of you was a member of the Communist Party?” – Silence in response.

“Who of you was a member of the Komsomol (Communist Youth Organization, membership in which was almost obligatory in every Soviet high-school, not to say about a military college)?” – About half of our group answered positively.

“What??? How about the other half?” – “We were expelled from the Komsomol.”

“What??? For what?” – The answers varied from “I desecrated a Jewish cemetery” and “I attempted to rape a nurse in a hospital” to “I robbed a tailor shop while being drunk and was arrested by local police”.

The Colonel had no more questions. He asked us to wait and disappeared for about half an hour. Once he came back, he was in a bit better mood: “Sorry, guys, but we cannot entrust your keeping a nuclear arsenal of the state, because it is our policy that every serviceman in our Organization must be a member of the Communist Party, and, in addition, he must have an irreproachable service-record. None of you meets the requirements. However, I have some good news for you. Tomorrow you must report to another military unit, also here, in Moscow, and its commander will appoint you to your final duties.”

The poor Colonel had no choice. Our class’ commander in the military college played the worst joke – the graduates could not be sent back to a military college. It was technically impossible, especially because they were appointed “at the disposal of the Commander of the 12th Chief Directorate” by the highest order – signed personally by the Minister of Defense. Moreover, young lieutenants assigned in that way could not be transferred anywhere outside of the 12th Chief Directorate, because the Commander of the latter had simply no power over other branches of the Soviet Armed Forces. All transfers of servicemen from one branch of the Soviet Armed Forces to another branch could only be done on an individual basis and that required lots of negotiations between different high-ranking commanders. To arrange the transfer of our group to, let’s say, infantry or to the anti-aircraft defense forces would paralyze the entire personnel department of the 12th Chief Directorate for a few weeks, and, in addition, they would be obliged to provide for our accommodation in Moscow for the mean time. Apparently, you cannot lodge a commissioned officer into soldiers’ barracks – you have to provide him with a hotel, at least.

However, shortly before those events, one smaller military organization, the so-called “Military Unit 46179” (also known as the “Special Control Service” a/k/a “Soviet nuclear intelligence”) was re-subordinated to the 12th Chief Directorate from its previous patron – the Chief Directorate of the Chemical Forces.

Even though subordinated to the 12th Chief Directorate, the said Special Control Service had a distinctly different structure of its own. First of all, it had its own independent communication network, it had its own cryptographic department, its own uniform, its own traditions, it had its own scientific-research institute, its own military college and its own faculty at the Dzerjinski Academy; it had its own personnel department, its own financial department, its own transport department, its own command posts, its own computation center, its own officers’ club, etc., etc. The Special Control Service held even its own yearly championship among soccer teams of subordinated regiments that were located all over the Soviet Union and abroad (and this championship was completely separate from a similar soccer championship held among the military units of the 12th Chief Directorate itself). So it was like a structure within a bigger structure.

The Special Control Service was organized in such a manner that it could exist and function totally autonomously. In fact, in different times it was either a completely separate organization – subordinated directly to the Ministry of Defense, or sometimes it was a part of some bigger directorate – such as GRU [Chief Directorate of Intelligence of the General Staff of the Soviet Armed Forces], or a part of other chief directorates of the Soviet Defense Ministry. However, irrespective of its multiple subordinations and re-subordinations (often conducted for purely bureaucratic reasons), the Special Control Service was always an independent organization with its own structure that would never mix with its temporary “owner”. Understandably, its temporary “owners” did not try to interfere with the Special Control Service either and always treated the military unit 46179 and its subordinated network of smaller military units as something “alien” rather than “own”.

The Special Control Service once existed as a part of the GRU. It was logical – to have the smaller intelligence organization within the bigger intelligence organization.

Then someone decided that the Special Control Service was simply too important to be subordinated to the GRU (since the GRU itself was a directorate of the General Staff, while General Staff, in turn, was subordinated to the Ministry of Defense). Those days the Commander of the Special Control Service reported about detection of nuclear explosions of the USSR’s adversaries directly to the Soviet Politburo, while the chief of the GRU reported his findings to the Chief of the General Staff, he, in turn – to the Minister of Defense, and the Minister of Defense, in turn – to the Soviet Politburo.

Thus, considering its actual importance and the way of reporting, the Special Control Service was once made into a completely independent organization. It was elevated in status, and subordinated directly to the Ministry of Defense. It sounded logical too.

After sometime, those high-ranking folks thought that even though being very important, the Special Control Service was simply too small (less than 3.000 commissioned officers) to be completely independent and to be subordinated directly to the Ministry of Defense. Moreover, it was apparently inconvenient from the bureaucratic point of view. So, they decided to subordinate it to the 12th Chief Directorate. It was logical too – the nuclear intelligence department became a part of the bigger nuclear directorate (the 12th Chief Directorate was responsible for the entire Soviet nuclear arsenal).

Then someone decided that since the Special Control Service detected nuclear explosions, then it had something to do with the ABC service and it would be proper to subordinate it to the Chief Directorate of the Chemical Forces of the Soviet Army (that was responsible, besides other things, for the protection of troops against weapons of mass destruction of various kinds, atomic weapons inclusive). And it was done so. And again it sounded logical.

Then someone changed his mind and decided to re-subordinate it, and so on, and so on.

After being continuously kicked between the GRU, the Ministry of Defense, the 12th Chief Directorate, the Chief Directorate of the Chemical Forces, and so on, several times over, the Soviet Special Control Service once again ended up as a subject of the 12th Chief Directorate.

However, because the Special Control Service so often changed hands in such a manner, none of the commanders of the bigger directorates treated this slippery organization as “their own” because it was always expected that it could be taken away from them any time. Therefore, no higher commander in sound mind would ever send his best cadres to serve in the “military unit 46179” – because the risk losing these cadres due to the next reshuffling, that could happen any time, was simply too high.

Thanks to this attitude, the Soviet Special Control Service indeed suffered shortages of required personnel, as anyone could sincerely expect would be the case in such circumstances. So, it was not uncommon that the cadres sent to serve there were merely rejects from some bigger organizations.

Once our “gang” of graduates was rejected by the personnel department of the main structure of the 12th Chief Directorate (known as the “Military unit 31600”), its chiefs decided to get rid of us by sending us to the “Military unit 46179” (that had a personnel department of its own, however, unlike personnel departments of the “chief directorates”, this one had technically no rights to demand graduates directly from military colleges that were not their own; they had to beg for them from their temporary “patrons”). Thus, by the strangest twist of fate, all of our “mafia” members appeared at the gates of the then Soviet nuclear intelligence.

The reception at the Special Control Service was far warmer than that in the 12th Chief Directorate on the previous day. First of all, the mentality of the servicemen in these two organizations was completely different. If those who served at the 12th Chief Directorate were sullen, serious and totally devoid of any sense of humor (but what else do you expect from those folks who keep nuclear weapons capable of destroying the Earth several times over?), those who served in the then Soviet nuclear intelligence showed exactly the opposite qualities – they were simple, hospitable and cheerful.

Moreover, they were extremely happy to get at once so many graduates, because that organization badly needed lots of educated people those days. All of us were military communication engineers, specialists in data transmission, in telephonic and telegraphic communication, in communication security and in cryptography. I.e. we were exactly what the Special Control Service was craving for but could not get any of such specialists for the last five years at least – due to shortages of specialists all such positions in that organization those days were occupied by miscellaneous servicemen with improper specializations.

It was almost a celebration there upon our arrival. The Colonel from the personnel department, who received us at first, as well as two other Colonels who were the chief of communication and the chief I cannot remember of what, talked to us in the most friendly manner. They explained that we were the most lucky people to be appointed there, because the service in their organization was firstly very honorable, and, secondly, the promotion chances were very high as well, not to mention that monthly salaries (that depended on the geographical locations of the actual military units) were one of the highest in the then Soviet Armed Forces.

Indeed, most military units (regiments were called “detection laboratories” in the Special Control Service) of this organization were located either in resort-like places (such as, for example, in the city of Sukhumi on the Black Sea, in Abkhazia, or in Borovoe resort on a nice lake in Kazakhstan), or abroad, or in so-called “privileged” regions (such as Kamchatka peninsula, or in Sakhalin, or other Far East or Far North locations) where servicemen received double-salary, got double-year counting of the length of service, and enjoyed yearly leaves that were 50% longer than the usual 30-days.

After studying our personal files (transferred later on that day from the 12th Chief Directorate), one of the Colonels said that he did not actually care how many nurses we raped, how many tailors shops we robbed, and how many Jewish cemeteries we desecrated – but from now on we had a really good chance – to serve good and to be treated accordingly. Of course, all of us happily agreed with the proposal.

Each of us was taken to a large map on the wall, showed geographical locations of subordinated military units and asked where we would prefer to start the service – a privilege unprecedented by the standards of the Soviet Army – only those who completed the military colleges with “gold medals” (i.e. less than 1% of the entire cadet folk) were given a privilege to choose the place of military service. In our case such a privilege was awarded to what was called the “mafia” in our military college... My classmates quickly selected the best they could only dream of – those who needed double-salaries, long leaves and double-years counting selected Kamchatka Peninsula, some others – made a choice to go abroad, while others – preferred the resort locations. Our class’ commander might have committed suicide at once if he knew what happened...

It was not so with the humble author of these lines. The Organization badly needed someone to serve in Moscow too. The biggest facility of the Special Control Service – its actual operational center – was situated in Moscow. However, while remote military units could provide lodging at once to any new officer (since their commanders had a lot of vacant residential housing at their disposal), it was not so in the then Soviet capital. To get an apartment in Moscow those days you had to wait for 3-4 years minimum and you must be not less than a Major-General to get the apartment in the very day you are appointed to a position in Moscow. That was the situation with the residential housing in Moscow allotted to the Soviet Armed Forces’ organizations located in the capital.

To make the long story short, the three Colonels noticed that from among our “mafia” members I was the only one who had where to dwell. My dwelling place was not very far from Moscow and they thought that if they take me to serve at their headquarters, they did not need to provide for my lodging.

They asked if I agreed and I answered positively – why should I refuse to serve at the very headquarters where a lieutenant had more power than some colonel in a subordinated military unit?

That is how I became the serviceman at the “military unit 46179”.

I was a good serviceman, in fact. They liked me. And when it comes to me, I liked to study and even more – I liked to listen. As a result, soon I knew a lot of things. The awful things that led to the creation of this book inclusive...

However, for the mean time, I had to bring from my village to my new place of service a certain paper, confirming that I indeed resided not so far from Moscow.

The Soviet bureaucracy had to be respected:

The above paper had to be shown to the chief of staff of the military unit 46179 as a proof that I indeed resided at the claimed address.

In exchange for the above, the chief of staff of the military unit 46179 had to issue a paper of his own that I, in turn, had to deliver back to my residence location and to show to the local authorities.

Here is that paper. Fortunately, it is the very paper that could prove now that I indeed served in the Soviet Special Control Service – i.e. to prove the fact, which the shills are trying so hard to debunk:

Later, I was transferred from the military unit 46179 to the military unit 63679 (by that time I was promoted from the rank of a "Lieutenant" to the rank of a "Senior Lieutenant"). The "military unit 63679" was just another military unit of the Special Control Service – it was the actual Command Post of this organization, those days detached from its administration. The military unit 63679 had two locations – one in Moscow, and one – in the city of Zagorsk (now re-named into "Sergiev Posad") – situated around 80 kilometers from Moscow. In Moscow this unit operated the main command post of the Special Control, and in Zagorsk – the reserve command post of the Special Control (actually, the second one was intended for the times of war, but our commanders for some reasons used it simultaneously with the main Moscow command post all the time).

Due to specifics of my actual position, I used to serve in both locations – sometimes in Zagorsk, sometimes – in Moscow. However, those days my official place of assignment was in the city of Zagorsk, because for some bureaucratic reasons the nominal headquarters of the “military unit 63679” was registered in Zagorsk and there were located all supporting services of that military unit – financial, medical, administrative, etc. That is why a new paper for the dwelling registration was issued to me.

And this is yet another paper that could confirm that I indeed served in the Special Control Service. The thugs from the Russian FSB, who broke into my home and confiscated all my military documents, did not bother to discover and to seize these seditious papers that pertained to my home registration. That is why now the shills and their masters have a good chance to see where I really used to serve...

Viva the Soviet bureaucracy:

Just to complete this lengthy explanation, I think it would not harm if I place here some photographs of my actual home (otherwise, the shills would claim that my home does not exist either, as they used to do with my military unit and with my humble self).

Here are a couple of winter photos of my home (the one I used to dwell while entering the military service and which was the very cause why I became appointed to serve at the headquarters of the Soviet Special Control Service in Moscow):

The location of my village cannot be mistaken with anything else, because it is marked by a huge, over 120 meters tall TV-tower located right in the village – the one shown in the above photo, and also by the last remaining in the Soviet (now Russian) Armed Forces real cavalry regiment that still uses real horses, real swords, and real cavalry uniforms. This unique cavalry regiment is quartered just across the road from my village – next to the TV-tower.

My home is indeed located at the following address (exactly as stated in the very first document shown above that confirmed my residence in the last day of July 1987):

By the way, it is funny, considering that our village is quite small, but the house of the infamous so-called “Lord of War” and the so-called “Merchant of Death” Victor Bout (who was recently extradited from Thailand to the United States on the most ridiculous charges) is also located in the very same village – merely a couple of hundred meters away from my home – on the other side of the TV-tower shown on the previous photo.

Just in case someone still does not believe that my home exists, here are a couple of screenshots from the “Google Earth” that show its location precisely (I hope you trust Google?):

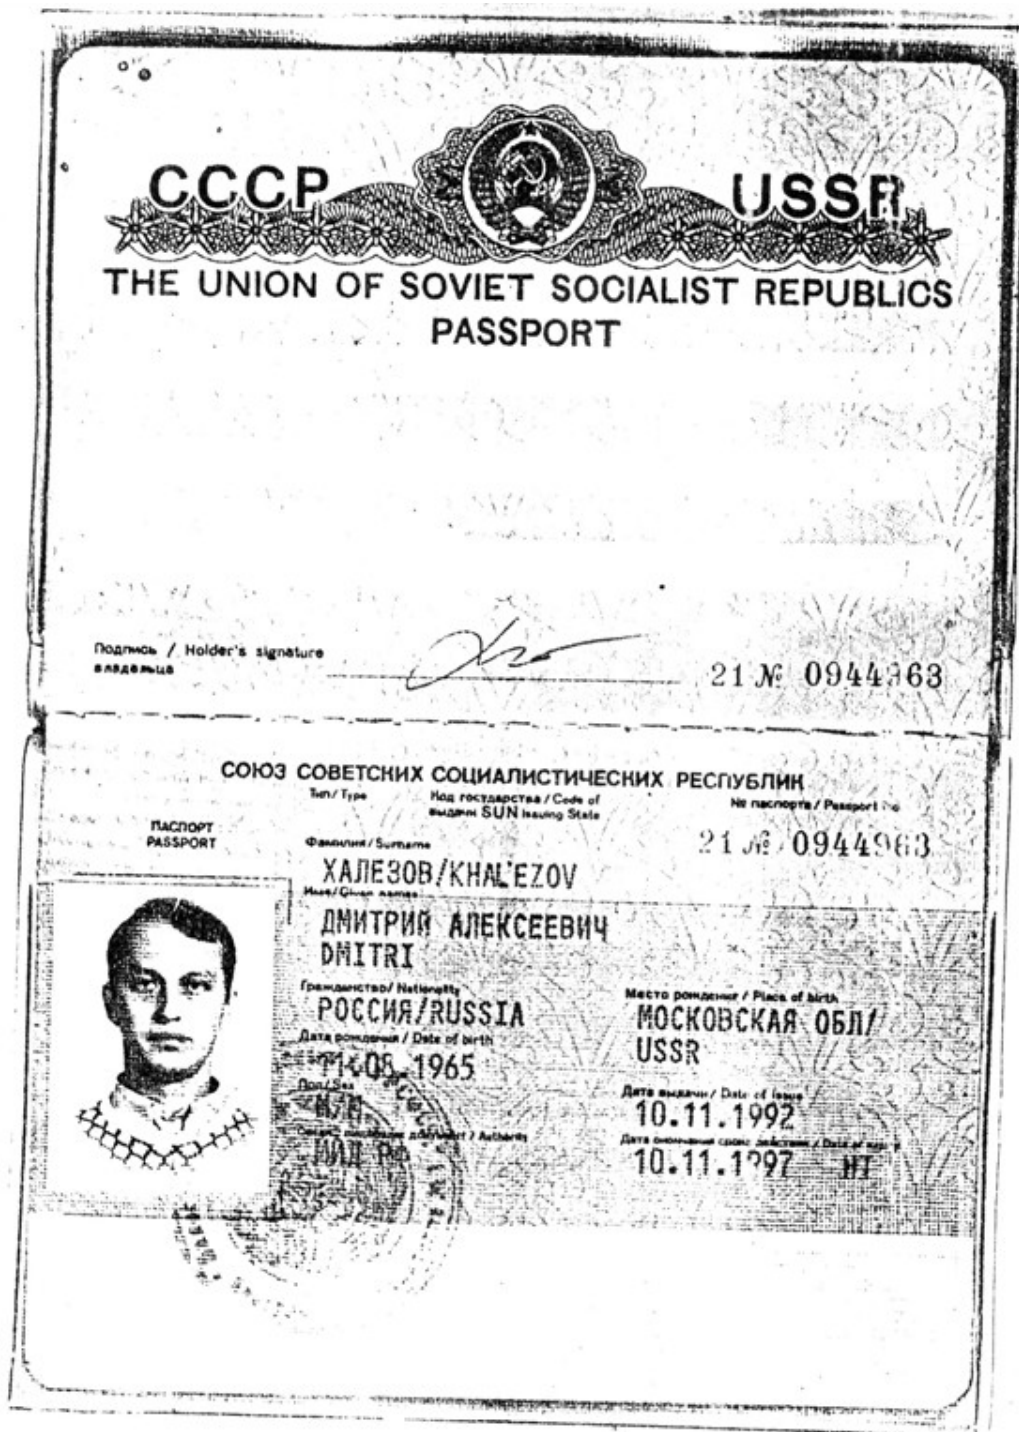

Above – a location map of my village. Shown with arrows: 1 – Moscow-Minsk Road; East direction is towards Moscow, West direction – towards Smolensk, Minsk, Warsaw. 2 – a so-called “second ring road” that circles Moscow by approximately 40-50 kilometers radius. 3 – town of Golitsyno (also a railway station of Golitsyno). 4 – an entrance to a closed military town of “Krasnoznamensk” (formerly known as the town of “Golitsyno-2” or “G-2” for short, or the town of “The 41st”) – the headquarters of the Soviet/Russian military space forces. It hosts a reserve mission control center and a primary mission control center for military satellites (comparable with the United States’ Joint Functional Component Command for Space and Global Strike). The entrance to this town shown by the arrow “4” is located at the 41st kilometer of the Moscow-Minsk Road (hence one of its former names). 5 – village of Sidorovskoe. 6 – village of Kobiyakovo. 7 – village of Taraskovo. 8 – village of Sumino (sometimes called “Novosumino”). 9 – the Guards 147th Artillery Regiment (military unit 61896). In the good old days in the same compound there was also stationed a special tactical rockets battalion armed with nuclear warheads; perhaps, it is no longer there. 10 – my home. 11 – an entrance to my village (officially named “Polygon 1” or “Antennoe Pole”, but also called “Antenka”, or “Jilgorodok”). 12 – the 11th Cavalry Regiment (military unit 55605) – the last real cavalry unit of the Soviet Army with real horses. 13 – military warehouses of the “Mosfilm” (the famous Moscow cinematographic studio, the largest in the Soviet Union and believed to be the eldest in Europe). These warehouses contain various antiquated military equipment (mostly real and functioning) that allows the Mosfilm to shoot real-looking WW2 battles, as well as battles of the ancient times. The neighboring cavalry regiment, which officially belongs to the Armed Forces, in fact, is being kept alive as the real cavalry mostly for the same reasons – to enable the cinematography to shoot the battles of bygone days. 14 – the northern end of a closed military town of “Kalininets”. “Kalininets” is the headquarters and the biggest residential housing of the famous 2nd Guards Tamanskaya Motor Rifle Division – the one of the Soviet/Russian Army’s “constant readiness” divisions, especially important for the defense of the Russian capital from the Western direction.

Finally, here is my last Soviet passport (I used to live in disguise, using other names, for almost 20 years and only recently I changed my name back to the original) a photocopy of which I managed to retrieve only a few days ago:

I sincerely hope that the above information is enough to establish (and to verify if necessary) the fact that the humble personality of the author of these lines indeed exists and that it indeed has some relevance to the former Soviet Special Control Service – despite the hysterical cries of the skills to the contrary.

About “ground zero” and “Ground Zero”. Introduction to the Orwellian “newspeak”: pre-9/11 and post-9/11 meanings of “ground zero”.

To begin with, I think it would be reasonable to remind some people (who have probably forgotten what the term “ground zero” used to mean before September 11, 2001) about the true meaning of these two words “ground” and “zero” peculiarly used together. There are few definitions from various sources. Here are entire, unabridged definitions – “as is” – exactly as provided by respective dictionaries:

The New York Times Everyday Dictionary (Published in 1982, Congress Library Catalog Card Number: 81-84903; ISBN 0-8129-0910-0).

Are you surprised? If you do not believe your eyes and prefer to run to the nearest bookstore to buy some dictionary, do not be in a hurry. When you arrive to such shop, you will be surprised even more, because it is no longer possible to find any dictionary with the pure old definition of this peculiar term. Those dictionaries printed before 9/11, such as mentioned above, that contained the only true single meaning of “ground zero” term, have been, a long time ago, removed from book-shelves and replaced with some newer ones.

Unfortunately, the very English language was one of the first victims of the 9/11 perpetration...

Instead of rushing to a book store, try to ask some of your friends if they have any – in case of good luck you might succeed in finding some old big English dictionary that was not victimized by a linguistic part of a 9/11 cover-up.

Etymology of this term is easily traceable. In the military specific part of the English language, there was a term “zeroing in on” which meant exact aiming of a weapon onto some target. With an advent of aviation bombs and especially missiles, this term changed a little bit – concerning missiles, bombs and other projectiles. The exact spot on the earth’s surface that is aimed at by such a projectile began to be called “ground zero”. It had nothing to do with either “explosion”, or “devastation”, but exclusively with “aiming of a projectile”.

When the first atomic weapons came into the existence, they were first made in a form of aviation bombs and missiles. Logically, the term “ground zero” expanded to embrace the exact hypocenter of an atomic (and later also hydrogen) explosion – since it was exactly “ground zero” as the aim of a projectile carrying its atomic load, so that “ground zero” in an old sense of “aim” and “ground zero” in a new sense: “hypocenter of a nuclear explosion” – always coincided.

Once again, this term has expanded, because nuclear bombs would more likely explode above the ground, rather than on its surface (if exploded in the air, an atomic bomb could cause much more destruction). Thus, “ground zero” began to mean not just an exact spot on the earth hit by a projectile before a nuclear explosion followed, but rather projection on to the earth’s surface of a hypocenter of such a nuclear explosion – be it on the ground, or above the ground (and later even below the ground).

Later it was also expanded in the same sense to embrace underwater nuclear explosions.

As you can expect, soon “ground zero” had completely lost its initial meaning (a target of a projectile) and people ceased to use this term in that particular sense. The second meaning (a spot on the ground of-, or a projection onto the ground of an exact hypocenter of a nuclear or a thermonuclear explosion) was to be its only meaning for the next 56 years since an atomic bomb was first tested. The “ground zero’s” initial meaning was totally out of use – practically no dictionary (with the rarest exception) did include the former meaning when defining “ground zero”. However, the majority of big dictionaries in the second part of the 20th century used to define this term only by its second meaning alone, which became the only practical meaning of this term: “a hypocenter of a nuclear (or a thermonuclear) explosion or its projection onto the earth’s surface”.

Interestingly, the “ground zero” expression used to be traditionally associated with the so-called “Manhattan Project” of 1942. It was so all the way down starting from 1945 and till about noon time of September 11, 2001. Ironically, since 9/11, this term began to be associated with another “Manhattan Project” – that of 1966 (the beginning of construction on the WTC), which has proven to be so disastrous only 35 years later...

Do not be surprised that almost all new English dictionaries, printed after 9/11, began describing “ground zero” as allegedly having more than one sense. Some of them even “remembered” its very first and completely forgotten meaning (“an aim of a projectile”), which was completely out of use for the last 50 years. In addition, at least 2-3, or in some cases even 5 new meanings have been ascribed to this term, ranging from alleged “great devastation”, “great disorder” and “busy activities” to some alleged “basic level” and “starting point”. Some preferred another approach: editors of new Longman dictionaries, for example, defined “ground zero” as a “place where a bomb explodes” without mentioning anything at all that such a “bomb” supposes to be only a nuclear or a thermonuclear one. In addition to all of it, now almost all dictionaries – either big or small – began to include this (to be exact “these”) definitions.

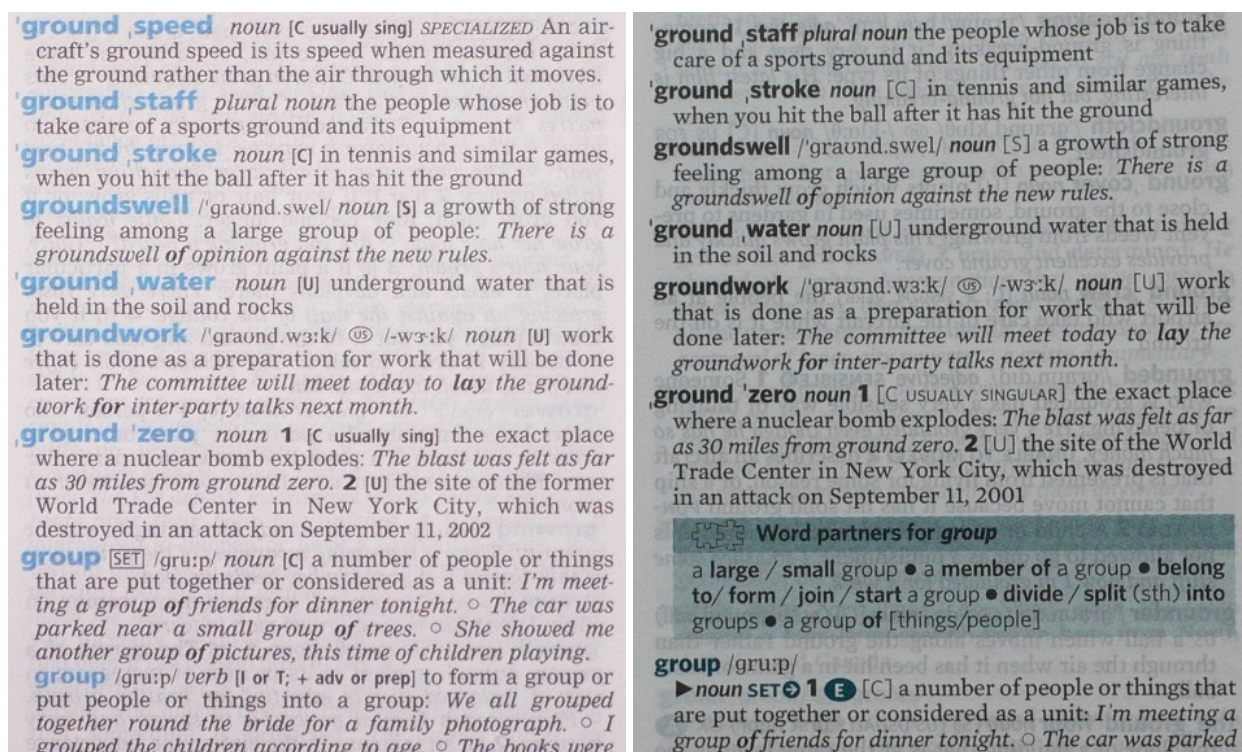

The term “ground zero”, obviously because of being too specific, prior to the September 11 affair, existed only in really big English dictionaries – such as Webster’s Unabridged, full Collins, full Encarta, and similar (and there it has only a single meaning). The lowest grade of the English dictionaries that used to include “ground zero” in the pre-9/11 era was the “Concise” or “Collegiate”/“College” type.

“Ground zero” was not included in any smaller dictionaries – such as those intended for students and for advanced learners. For example, the “ground zero” entry was absent in the Oxford Advanced Learner’s Dictionaries of 4th, 5th and 6th Editions, published before September 11, 2001. Even the Oxford’s 4th special “Encyclopedic” version (that was about 50% larger compared to a normal one) did not include any “ground zero’s” entry. Only the Oxford’s Advanced Learner’s Dictionary of 7th Edition first published in 2005 began describing this term, at last.

Post-9/11 editions of Macmillan English Dictionary for Advanced Learners and Longman Dictionary of Contemporary English, all kinds of new Merriam-Webster’s Dictionaries, all new American Heritage Dictionaries, and many other new dictionaries and encyclopedias after the September 11 affair began to include “ground zero” entry and to define it in a sense that it might allegedly have more than one meaning, trying all their best to divert attention of their readers from the former nuclear (and only nuclear) nature of that term.

By the way, the editors of the last mentioned above Cambridge Advanced Learner’s Dictionary have to be praised for not cheating their readers:

The Cambridge editors were brave enough not to include any misleading definition of “ground zero” into their post-9/11 dictionaries (even in the third edition of their Advanced Learner’s Dictionary of 2008/2010 the definition remained seditiously unupdated). The brave editors merely added the fact that the spot of the WTC destruction also bears the same name, in addition to the former single nuclear definition.

Do not underestimate this conduct of the Cambridge editors – they were indeed brave in publishing such politically incorrect thing, because what they did was in a sharp contrast to all other dictionaries editors at service of 9/11 cheaters...

It was reported that there were even attempts to prove that “ground zero” was allegedly used to describe that location long before September 11, 2001.

All these post-9/11 linguistic efforts in regard to “ground zero” are understandable, indeed. That peculiarly revealing name, rashly awarded by the Civil Defense’s dosimetrists to the demolition grounds of the former World Trade Center in New York, was obviously too revealing to leave that term in future editions of dictionaries with only its former sense alone...

Example of mutation of meanings of “ground zero” from 2000 through 2007 in various Longman’s dictionaries. Top left – Longman Advanced American Dictionary (first published 2000, ISBN 0 582 31732 0). Top right – Longman Dictionary of Contemporary English (edition 2003, ISBN 0 582 77649 X). An example of this term’s usage in the top right one is particularly impressive: have you ever heard that a certain explosion of a “bomb” could flatten buildings within 25 km (15.5 miles) radius? It is hardly possible, unless a “bomb” were something like 45 megaton (45.000 kiloton) in caliber or even mightier. Yet, the word “nuclear” is not there anymore... But in the original definition it was even in CAPITAL letters... Bottom left – Longman Advanced American Dictionary (second edition 2007, ISBN 978 1 40582 9540). Bottom right – Longman Dictionary of English Language and Culture (3rd edition 2005, 2nd impression 2006; ISBN 0 582 85312 5). Please note, that before it was the word “NUCLEAR” that was printed in capital letters in “ground zero” definition. Now it is another word, printed in capital letters: “TERRORISTS”. Note also, that those dictionaries on the left – one above the other – are the First and the Second editions of the very same dictionary: “Longman Advanced American Dictionary”, printed in 2000 and 2007 respectively. Here you can see a pure cheating of its reader: either before or after the “ground zero” definition, other words’ definitions (“ground work”, “ground water”, “group¹”) including even samples of their usage are all exactly the same. But not that of “ground zero”.

Here are a few more examples of mutation of “ground zero” definitions. These changes in definitions are especially interesting in the below examples, because here we have a chance to compare editions of similar dictionaries published before- and after 9/11. And these shameless changes are especially notable, because they seemingly have nothing to do with the 9/11 attack on the World Trade Center and with its sacred grounds now spelled with Capital Letters. Additional meanings are NOT about the WTC.

When you compare the two pairs, you will see that they are identical – positions of the words, fonts used, and even up to the number of the page. And indeed, it is understandable why they are identical. Because the notes on the Webster's Encyclopedic Unabridged Dictionaries state clearly that these dictionaries are based on the Random House Unabridged Dictionary. In fact, both of the Webster's Encyclopedic Unabridged are merely clones of the Random House Unabridged. The editors of the Webster's Encyclopedic Unabridged Dictionaries did not even bother to change page numerations – they used exact sets used to print their sources – the Random House Unabridged Dictionaries. That is why the pages of these two different dictionaries look identical – as if they were “twins”, while the actual dictionaries differ from each other only by their title, but not by their contents. The important thing to notice here is that the post-9/11 dictionaries in the above pairs were printed immediately after the WTC destruction. Moreover, the Random House Webster's Unabridged Dictionary (ISBN 0-375-42566-7) was published right on the very 11th day of September, 2001 (to be more exact – its ISBN was registered on the very day – 9/11; meaning that spin-doctors were busy during that apocalyptic day preparing their future linguistic cover-up, instead of joining others in prayers for the 9/11 victims). For those who might not believe my outrageous claim that the Random House editors could have been busy publishing a new dictionary right on the very day September 11, 2001, here is its ISBN number registered on that very day: 978-0375425660 and a link to the Amazon web page where you can verify it:

Here you can see that tricky editors of this famous Australian dictionary were so eager to please their U.S. masters that they even decided to remember the very first, historical meaning of “ground zero” and added it to the former lone meaning. Not to mention that now they invented an alleged “figurative” meaning of this purely technical term and, moreover, they want to start using it in your everyday speech – they even provide you an example on how it should be used...

Note also that the cheaters went as far as concocting backdated Webster's New World Dictionary of alleged "Third" edition with modified definitions of "ground zero" dating back as far as "1988", but that backdated fakery is dealt with in a separate book of mine, due to limited space in this book.

As you can see, Microsoft also wants you to begin using "ground zero" in your speech as soon as possible in various alleged "figurative" senses. It even offers you examples on how you should use it. The Microsoft envisages that programmers should now "learn programming from ground zero", while cops should use "ground zero" while describing a center of activities of the so-called "terrorists" (in between planning of how to issue to their slaves biometric passports and how to deprive the slaves from their former right to possess and to carry personal firearms by making just another massacre in some school).

Note also that the August 1999 edition of the full unabridged Microsoft Encarta dictionary (which is a real huge volume that won't fit into a standard book-shelf) contains less definitions of "ground zero" than its smaller – concise version, intended for students, that was published in 2001. Do you see any logic in this? By the way – the Encarta Concise dictionary above is claimed to be published by the Microsoft in August 2001, i.e. BEFORE 9/11. And Bill expects us to believe him...

Well done, Bill. Of course, we can not catch you red-handed with producing back-dated concoctions... Even if we undertake chemical analyses of glue, paper, ink, and material used for binding of your alleged "August 2001" book we won't be able to prove anything. Your concoction's claimed date is simply too close to the actual date you manufactured it.

But we will catch you in another way, Bill. In a way you don't even expect. Instead of challenging the actual date of the abovementioned shameful Microsoft's concoction, we will BELIEVE YOU.

We will believe that you, Bill, indeed published the abovementioned concise Encarta dictionary with the “broadened” definition of “ground zero” BEFORE 9/11 – exactly as you claim. Meaning that you indeed published that dictionary in August, 2001, in order to provide the “linguistic alibi” to the desperate American Government IN ADVANCE; i.e. IN ANTICIPATION of the nuclear demolition of the World Trade Center (with live people in and around the buildings). Why in anticipation? Guess why...

Because you knew in advance, Bill, that the WTC was going to be demolished by the nukes and the spot of its demolition would be called “ground zero”.

How do you like the idea, Bill? What would you prefer: to be sued in the court for producing back-dated fakes and inserting them into the Library of Congress in an illegal manner, or to stand trial in the military court together with Khalid Sheikh Mohammad and Co. for conspiring with them to demolish the World Trade Center?

Make your choice, Bill, because we are going to believe you :)

I have to mention here that I made very thorough research in regard to manipulations with “ground zero” definitions in all English dictionaries ever published. It took for me almost a year of hard work, but I eventually got all dictionaries of similar kind – their post- and pre-9/11 editions to compare.

This research will be published by me a separate book, because it runs well over 600 pages. Please, get it separately. Here due to a limited space I placed just a few examples of manipulations with “ground zero”; however, there are many more of them, but they are definitely worth a separate book.

I hope now you have got the idea – what really happened with the definition of “ground zero” in the post-9/11 dictionaries and how desperate was the U.S. Government that it even ordered the Random House’s publishers to publish a new unabridged dictionary with modified “ground zero” definition right on the very day – September 11, 2001.

Just try to realize this awful fact – the Random House editors were booking the ISBN for their would be new Unabridged dictionary with the cheating definition of “ground zero” right during the working hours of the eleventh day of September, 2001!

While the civil defense service’s dosimetrists (dressed in full lunar-looking haz-mat suits) were measuring radiation levels at “ground zero”, and unsuspecting firefighters were pulling people from under the rubble, (in the meantime accumulating radiation doses and inhaling vapors saturated with deadly alpha-particles), the Random House’s editors were busy modifying one of the most famous and the most reputable unabridged dictionaries of the English language (and their agents were busy registering the new ISBN number for the new book)...

However, the shifty folks from the Microsoft publishing house went even further and managed to obtain the ISBN number for their shameless concoction that pertains even to August 2001 – as if their dictionary were indeed published one month in advance – in anticipation of the tragic events...

Well... I have little to say in this regard... I leave it up to the reader to deliver a judgment over the moral aspect of this particular 9/11 effort...

Coming back to the actual modifications of “ground zero” definitions in the post-9/11 dictionaries.

It would be understandable, if some extra definitions of “ground zero” were added in regard to the demolition grounds of the WTC – like it was in the Cambridge Advanced Learner’s Dictionary, 2nd Edition – mentioned at the beginning of this Chapter, or like it was done in some Longman’s dictionaries – shown on the first set of 4 pictures in this Chapter.

Interestingly, it was not the case with the examples above in the Random House’s, the Merriam-Webster’s, the Chambers’, the Macquarie’s, the American Heritage, the Webster’s New World’s, the Macmillan’s, and the Microsoft’s concoctions.

It was other extra definitions added to the original meaning of “ground zero” (which moreover, conspicuously differ from each other – especially if you compare Random House and Merriam-Webster’s efforts).

It seems that neither of these abovementioned conspicuously different additional meanings has anything to do with Manhattan's Ground Zero. Though, as you could guess, in reality there was a direct relevance between such a "broadening" of the former definition of "ground zero", and the nuclear catastrophe that occurred on 9/11 in Manhattan that earned such a peculiar nuclear name to that place.

Those so-called "good guys" from the FBI who did all their best to conduct the unprecedented 9/11 cover-up, simply could not afford to leave this most revealing definition with its former sense, without "broadening" it at least a little bit.

We have to understand them, indeed... If they would not do such a "broadening" of the definition of "ground zero", it would not be only the FBI agents alone who would demand full haz-mat suits to be issued to protect their precious selves – like those FBI agents mentioned by poor John Walcott in the previous Chapter. Apparently, every ground zero responder and every Manhattan resident would demand his full haz-mat suit, too, along with a comprehensible explanation of what really happened at "Ground Zero".

NOTE: a full version of the article devoted to manipulations with "ground zero" definitions in all dictionaries, including debunking of backdated fakeries eventually grew so big in size, that I abandoned any attempt to insert it into the current book, and made it as a completely separate book, instead. This book is named D. A. Khalezov "9/11thology: "ground zero" term and manipulations with it in post-9/11 dictionaries of the English language." It is highly recommended to read, because in it I did all my best providing the solid proof that all alleged "pre-9/11" dictionaries with the "broadened" definitions of "ground zero" were in reality backdated fakeries printed in 2003-2004, intentionally "aged", and inserted into all libraries in the very best traditions of Orwell's "Nineteen Eighty-Four".

I feel that I must place here a certain additional disclaimer.

The problem was that from the very beginning, the skills were terribly unhappy with the fact that a certain Russian man, named Dimitri Khalezov, dared to point out to the manipulations with "ground zero" in the post-9/11 dictionaries, as well as to the original "ground zero" definitions in the genuine pre-9/11 dictionaries. It seems that before the humble author of these lines pointed it out, nobody bothered to remind the general public of what "ground zero" actually used to mean prior to the WTC destruction. Understandably, the man, who dared to remind of it, caused a lot of annoyance to the "professional", "full-time" 9/11 "researchers" who infested the Internet-forums and various 9/11 "truth-seeking" communities.

In fact, the annoyance of the skills over this matter was so extreme, that in 2008-2010 Internet-forums visitors who dared posting the above pictures of the dictionaries, or merely posting download links to zip-archives with these pictures, were banned at once from the forums. On several instances even those users who posted download links for these pictures of the dictionaries on specialized torrent-links sites were banned as well. I myself was "blacklisted" at least on 4 torrent-sites for merely offering torrent-users to download such zip-archives with the pre-9/11 dictionaries via torrents, for example. This is just to demonstrate how the skills were (and still are) annoyed with this "ground zero" dictionaries matter.

However, on the other hand, the inventive skills quickly found some "good use" of this dictionaries matter (that otherwise annoyed them so much): they began to claim that the supposed "theory", of that Russian guy who goes by the name of Dimitri Khalezov, is allegedly based on the mere fact that "ground zero" in the pre-9/11 dictionaries used to mean "the spot of a nuclear explosion".

This invention, in fact, proved to be so convenient for the skills, that it began to be widely accepted by almost all my opponents as the main means to confront, or, at least, to diminish the importance of my claims. It is not uncommon to encounter on some Internet-forum a statement that might sound like this: "Dimitri Khalezov bases his claims of the WTC nuclear demolition merely on the dictionary definitions of ground zero".

Hence is my little additional disclaimer:

It is not so, dear skills. My claims in regard to the WTC nuclear demolition are by no means based on the dictionary definition of "ground zero" as you try so hard to instill. My claims are based on the fact that during my military service in the Military Unit 46179 (a/k/a the Soviet Special Control Service tasked with detecting nuclear explosions) back in the '80s, I got to know about the existence of the built-in "emergency nuclear demolition scheme" of the Twin Towers of the World Trade Center in the City of New York.

Got it?

Why there are two “truths” about 9/11. Plebeians and Patricians.

Why I am talking about the “third” truth?

One may ask this question: how the truth, which is supposed to be an absolute thing, could be multiplied? And how could you number the truth?

Yes, such a question indeed would be reasonable. Of course, the truth is an absolute thing. The truth has no gradations. It can not be divided into several versions, and, of course, such versions shall not be numbered. Logically, there could be only two situations: when one is being informed honestly and another situation – when one is being cheated. In the first case we encounter truth, in the second – we encounter lies.

The problem, however, is that it was not me who concocted the first well-known public version of the so-called “truth” about 9/11. It was the U.S. Government who invented the so-called “truth” that has already stolen the first position. Thus, when it comes to me, the number “1” has been already booked by others.

What about the “second” “truth”?

Try to guess.

Do you sincerely believe that the U.S. Government would come up with only a single version of the so-called “truth” – the one intended for the gullible general public?

Please, be realistic. The U.S. Government does not deal only with the “commoners” alone. In every society there are not only the “plebeians”⁸, but some “patricians”⁹ as well. Besides the “plebeians”, the U.S. Government deals also with the United States’ own top political figures, who are not so gullible, with United States’ own high-ranking military and police officials. It deals also with leaders of foreign countries (and not necessarily only pro-American ones) each of whom boasts its own intelligence apparatus and its independent sources of information. It deals with the United Nations Organization, with NATO, with the IAEA¹⁰, and with its own U.S. Justice System.

What do you think – would all those mentioned high-ranking figures, both local and foreign, and all these international organizations be so easily satisfied with the “public” version of the “truth” about 9/11?

Of course, they would never be satisfied. Therefore, for the “patricians” there was another kind of the so-called “truth” invented – an “awful” and “confidential” one – being quite plausible to make them believe in it, and in the same time being “awful” enough to easily convince those “patricians” not to disclose it to the “plebeians” (presumably, for the plebeians’ own “good”). This “confidential” kind of “truth” about 9/11 has apparently engaged the number “2” spot.

⁸ “Plebeians” (or “plebs” for short) – in ancient Rome citizens of common descent, not deserving, commoners; this word had also two more derogatory meanings – one implying that those commoners do not possess horses, so in case of war they would be enlisted into infantry only; and another one – implying that those commoners could easily be manipulated by rulers, who could easily make those citizens to feel happy by simply providing them with enough food and who could easily occupy those plebeians with entertainments – such as public shows – mainly in order to distract their attention from real political problems. In all modern European languages, this ancient word managed to retain at least two of its derogatory meanings – in a sense of “undeserving”, and in a sense “could be easily cheated” – i.e. implying that mouths of such modern plebeians could be easily shut up by a hamburger and by an abundance of TV shows.

¹⁰ “IAEA” stands for the “International Atomic Energy Agency”: the UN body responsible for atomic, radiation etc. control and for alleged “peaceful” and “safe” development of the nuclear power industry and various kinds of scientific nuclear research; it is also considered by many as being a watchdog of imperialism – who suppresses development of nuclear weapons by those nations who did not have it yet, thus, allowing big imperialist nations, who already possess such nuclear weapons, to continue their traditional nuclear black-mail of less developed countries.

Since the first two digits have been already booked, I had no other choice than to assume for the ultimate truth (the one without quotation marks) the first available number – i.e. the number “3”.

That is exactly why I call it the “third” [in quotation marks] truth [without quotation marks] about 9/11.

One might immediately come up with another reasonable question: what would be the nature of that “awful” and confidential “secret” version of the “truth” which the U.S. Government might supposedly intend for those “patricians” and which is supposed to be the second so-called “truth”?

Well, I will try to be as exact as possible in answering this reasonable question.

Firstly, I would like to honestly inform you that I was not included in a list of the “patricians” who were supposed to be confidentially initiated into exact details of the “awful” and “secret” version of the so-called “truth” about 9/11. The U.S. Government had forgotten to invite my humble self and has not even bothered to send it to me later in writing. Neither has any one of those “patricians”, who were initiated into the “secret” version of the so-called “truth”, ever shared it with me in full – those “patricians” apparently, know how to keep their secrets.

I have to be honest – I simply do not know (I mean I do not know from any official or at least from any reliable source) what the exact contents of the second so-called “truth” about 9/11 are.

However, it does not mean at all that I am merely speculating here. What is most important – even if I do not know the exact confirmed details of the second so-called “truth”, I know for sure that this second “truth” indeed exists in reality.

I have encountered, several times, certain security and intelligence officials from a few different countries (including those from the United States). While discussing this subject with them I always had a strong feeling that those officials had been seriously warned by their superiors to this effect: the superiors themselves had already known each and every piece of the “awful truth” about either the Pentagon attack, as well as about the World Trade Center nuclear demolition, and whatever the new information was you might try to convey to them, they were no longer interested in it.

However, the most important thing is that I know very well the “third” truth – the one without quotation marks. The point is that all those, who have concocted the “second truth”, must have based their claims on some real facts; otherwise their concoction wouldn’t be digestible.

What I am trying to say is this: I know for sure some real facts which could have been used (and which were indeed used) in the creation of the second “truth” for the “patricians”. Therefore, even if I had honestly admitted that I could be mistaken in regard to the exact details of the second version of the so-called “truth”, such an admission only applies to a merely theoretical possibility of an error. I am almost certain that in reality I am not mistaken.

By the way – the mere attitude of several security and intelligence officials which I have mentioned above shows to us how destructive the nature of this “second” so-called “truth” is: those who were unlucky to be initiated into it became totally “immune” to the real truth – which in our case is the “third” truth.

Indeed, the very commoners who were spared by the “second truth” would be in a much better position... They do not know anything yet, they are not satisfied with the “first” version of the “truth” and many of them are apparently eager to get to know the real truth, at last.

By contrast, those who were “initiated”, are simply no longer interested in any new “story”, because it seems to them that they already “know everything” and nobody could tell them any more.

Unfortunately, they are mistaken, they are very badly mistaken. Thus, not only the “plebeians” have been cheated by the U.S. Government. The “patricians” have been cheated as well.

Coming to the question: What is the actual nature of this supposed “second” so-called “truth” ?

Again, I can not guarantee the exact 100% accuracy of my answer, but I still put it to be very close to 100%. If I am not mistaken (and I am certain that I am not), that very “awful”, secret version of the so-called “truth” intended by the U.S. Government to be distributed confidentially only among the “patricians” is this:

The U.S. Government “confidentially” claims that:

1) The World Trade Center Buildings 1 and 2 had been destroyed by certain low-caliber nuclear devices (“mini-nukes” or SADM¹¹) which belonged to either Saddam Hussein or to Osama bin Laden (or both) – which had been smuggled into the WTC 1 and 2 prior to the planes’ impacts and went off one-by-one in their lowest underground floors at about 1 kiloton in TNT yield.

2) The WTC-7 was destroyed by the same kind of low-caliber portable nuclear devise which has been smuggled into the basement of that building and went off at about 1 kiloton in TNT yield at around 05.30 PM the same day (luckily, with no additional casualties).

3) The Pentagon had been attacked by a certain hi-tech armored supersonic cruise missile provided by Saddam Hussein. Moreover, the missile was equipped with a certain thermonuclear (formerly known as “hydrogen”) warhead, also provided by Saddam Hussein, but this thermonuclear warhead, thanks to the late mother of Jesus Christ, did not go off and was found unexploded; this very hydrogen warhead, which has a caliber of about 500 kiloton¹² in TNT yield, is currently confiscated by the FBI, and, on the request of any unbelieving “patrician”, could be “confidentially” demonstrated to him – along with “confidential” genuine photographs showing this unexploded warhead laying about between the Pentagon’s Rings “C” and “B”.

4) The U.S. Government confidentially and sincerely requests all the “patricians” – of either home or foreign breed – to “understand” the position of the U.S. Government which supposedly can not afford to admit the dangerous truth to the “plebeians” – in order to avoid a tremendous public panic, an uncontrollable evacuation, and even possible collapse of the American financial system and even its entire economy due to such a panic.

5) Moreover, the U.S. Government confidentially claims that the same kind of “mini-nukes”, though at lower yields – at only 0.01 – 0.1 kiloton of TNT equivalent – were repeatedly used by the alleged “Muslim terrorists” even after September 11 – i.e. in the infamous October 12, 2002 Bali bombing, in two attacks in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, in 2003 and 2004, in an attack against the Australian Embassy in Jakarta on September 9, 2004, and in several other instances. In addition to this, the U.S. Government confidentially claims, that the “Muslim terrorists”, in fact, have had their “mini-nukes” even long before 9/11 – and successfully used these “mini-nukes” in bombings against American Embassies in Kenya and Tanzania in 1998 on an anniversary of the Hiroshima bombing, in the Khobar Towers bombing in Saudi Arabia in 1996, in the bombing of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building in Oklahoma in 1995, and in the 1983 Beirut barracks double nuclear bombings against the U.S. Marines and French paratroopers, as well as in the first, unsuccessful WTC bombing in 1993.

¹¹ “SADM” – stands for “Special Atomic Demolition Munitions” – also called a “mini-nuke”, or sometimes even a “suitcase nuke” – a small nuclear charge, which has an explosion power of approximately 1 kiloton in TNT yield (one kiloton is the same as 1,000 Tons); actually, it could be also more than 1 kt in some cases – it is still considered being “mini” when it is up to 5 kiloton or 5,000 Tons of TNT – which has a weight of less than 70 kg and could be carried by one man. This kind of device was primarily intended to be used by specially trained military saboteurs in demolitions of large objects (such as tunnels, bridges etc.) which are too big to be demolished by any reasonable amount of ordinary explosives; of course, “mini-nukes” could also be used against other important targets – such as large gatherings of people, or at meetings of important officials etc. Most “mini-nukes” have a variable yield and could be set to explode at only a few percentage points of their full intended capacity; that is to say that a 1kt charge could be set to explode at only 10, 15, 100, 200, 300 etc. ton in the TNT yield.

Apparently, this kind of “secret” so-called “truth” of 9/11 attacks purports to “explain” a lot of otherwise “unexplainable” technicalities. It “explains” to a certain extent¹³ that peculiar fine dust, to which almost 80% of the Twin Towers’ structures were instantly reduced. It somehow explains otherwise unexplainable high-temperatures and “long-lasting” deep underground fires. It explains streams of radioactive vapors, emanating from the pile at “Ground Zero” for weeks and months after the WTC demolition. It somehow “explains” the almost total absence of any dead bodies and even of body parts in the rubble of the WTC. It also somehow “explains” that “unexplainable” high speed with which both the WTC Twin Towers collapsed. It explains otherwise unexplainable cases of chronic radiation sickness among former “Ground Zero” workers and nearby Manhattan residents. It explains, at last, the very name “Ground Zero¹⁴” – promptly awarded to the actual WTC demolition site. And, in the case with the Pentagon, it explains otherwise the “unexplainable” trajectory and unprecedented penetrating capability shown by that flying object which actually struck the Pentagon.

But what is most important – such a “secret” version of the so-called “truth” explains to everybody the otherwise unexplainable 9/11 cover-up (I mean that shameless distribution of the incredible “plebeian version” of the “truth” – moreover, totally unchallenged by any high-ranking officials – neither in the USA, nor outside of it). It explains the otherwise unexplainable desire of the U.S. Government to get rid of the WTC debris as soon as possible and at any cost – as much as even to export the debris to another country. Moreover, it explains the otherwise unexplainable desire of the U.S. Government to attack and to topple the Iraqi regime – which, according to the first – the “plebeian version” of the “truth” – had absolutely nothing to do with the actual 9/11 perpetration.

One might ask another question – how many people were indeed initiated into the “second” kind of the so-called “truth” and how many people in reality know the “third” one – which is without quotation marks?

It is quite difficult to answer it exactly, but we may try to guess:

The “third” and ultimate truth is known to, at least:

- The actual organizers of the 9/11 attacks and the WTC demolitions, of course (most of them are not Americans, do not worry, and even those who are, are not American officials);
- To my humble self, since I personally knew some of those mentioned above and also I know a lot of technical details; it is also known to several of my friends, and, since the release of my video-presentation, to many of those who spent their precious time watching that 4+ hours long video);
- To some top figures in the Mossad (an Israeli intelligence service);
- Definitely – to some top figures from the American FBI, who were apparently reasonable enough to understand everything that has happened in reality;
- Definitely – to several figures inside the U.S. Government – since they have been reported to by the FBI about the exact findings (still, it is not necessary that the U.S. President is one of those);
- to a few (probably “few” could in reality be equal to “tens” or even “hundreds” of) construction engineers who knew certain secret details about the WTC construction (if only they are still alive);
- Definitely – to the Russian President Putin and to some top figures from his intelligence service;
- Apparently – to some top figures in the French Government as well as in its intelligence services;
- Definitely – to a few American nuclear weapons manufacturers and to a few American nuclear weapons distribution controllers, as well as to certain officials from the U.S. Office of Secure Transportation (OST) that is the part of the U.S. National Nuclear Security Administration within the U.S. Department of Energy;
- Definitely – to some officials from the Department of Buildings who have their duty to register, to approve and to finally permit the implementing of the skyscrapers’ in-built demolition schemes;
- Obviously – to some specialists from a company named “Controlled Demolition Inc.” which is rightly suspected to be a primary designer of the WTC demolition scheme;
- Possibly – to some officials who register patents – because the actual demolition scheme of the WTC skyscrapers, however secret it might be, has been apparently patented as a “know-how”;
- I hope if you will be patient enough to read this book – you could also be added here.

¹⁴ “Ground Zero” – in commonly known military jargon means a hypocenter of a nuclear explosion; its dictionary’s definitions provided in the very first chapter of this book.

The second “confidential” or “patrician” version of the so-called “truth” is known to at least:

- other figures in the U.S. Government (except those who are entitled to know the ultimate truth);
- members of the U.S. Senate and Congress;
- the Attorney-General and other top officials within his department;
- the rest of senior FBI officials (except those who are entitled to know the ultimate truth);
- important members in the New York and New Jersey governments (if only they were not initiated into the ultimate truth);
- senior American diplomats;
- top figures in the U.S. military, navy, intelligence (except those entitled to know the ultimate truth);
- top figures in the U.S. police, FEMA¹⁵, possibly even top figures among NYFD¹⁶ firefighters;
- top figures within the U.S. Justice System;
- top figures within the U.S. Health System;
- top figures within the FAA¹⁷ who had to officially support the first kind of “truth” about the “planes”;
- all members of various “commissions” (such as the 9/11 Commission, the NIST Commission, the FEMA Commission, etc.) appointed to “inquire” into the perpetration and to produce their reports;
- various engineering experts invited to help to concoct the cover-up story and to make it look plausible from the technical point of view;
- various public relations experts (a/k/a “spin-doctors”) invited to help to concoct the cover-up story and to make it look plausible from the logical point of view;
- some senior seismic specialists – in both military and civil seismic detection systems;
- those specialists whose duty is to exercise permanent radiation control particularly in New York City and in the entire United States;
- some military specialists in the ABC¹⁸ field;
- apparently some hand-picked workers and engineers who worked at “Ground Zero” at final stages of its cleaning – especially those who were entrusted to design and to build those final protective sarcophaguses over the spots of the former WTC Towers;
- some officials who worked in the New York underground train system (since they apparently noticed certain effects of the underground nuclear explosions – especially in the WTC proximity);
- at least some medical doctors who were appointed to treat “Ground Zero” patients;
- possibly some lawyers who represent “Ground Zero” patients in law courts (but this particular one is only guessing – I can not be really sure about this group, though I suspect it to be the case);
- definitely some owners and top managers of several insurance companies, who were forced to pay huge sums in insurance claims in such doubtful circumstances;
- top officials of the United Nations Organization;
- all officials of the IAEA;
- all officials of the NATO;
- all top figures of foreign countries – kings, presidents, prime-ministers, chiefs of intelligence services, chiefs of internal security services, defense-ministers, possibly – some senior police officials and other senior statesmen and, possibly, their ambassadors – at least those to the USA.

And the last – I mean “the first” – publicly available version of the “truth” – intended for “plebs”, - alias “9/11 Commission Report” – as you probably guess, is known to everybody else, who was not included in either of the two groups above.

As I guess that at last I managed to intrigue my reader into reading this book further, let me comment on the abovementioned so-called “patrician” version of “truth” of 9/11, or the “truth” Number Two:

This “confidential” version of “truth” for “patricians” is nothing else than a blatant lie.

Since I am not really interested in disproving here the first – I mean the “plebeian” version of the 9/11 “truth”, please, do not even expect me to do it here.

¹⁵ “FEMA” stands for “Federal Emergency Management Agency” - which is an agency of the United States Department of Homeland Security. It is perceived by thinking people as the main tool of the so-called “New World Order” whose actual duty will be to send all so-called “citizens” to concentration camps when the time will come.

¹⁷ “FAA” stands for “Federal Aviation Administration” of the United States.

¹⁸ Dealing with consequences of various Weapons of Mass Destruction: Atomic, Biological, and Chemical – hence is “ABC”.

The “plebeian” so-called “truth” is so incredible, so illogical, and so cheap, that to indulge oneself into attacking the poor U.S. Government, accusing it of lying and going into disproving of such a poor concoction as the “findings of the 9/11 Commission” would be just nothing else than utter disrespect to oneself and an unforgivable loss of precious time.

I feel that my primary duty is to disprove only the “patrician” version of the so-called “truth” or the so-called “truth No.2” – because that one is much more dangerous, especially from the psychological point of view. The mere existence of the second “truth” represents a serious danger that the truth without quotation marks would not be accepted.

I promise you that this most dangerous kind of lie will be effectively disproved below – and not even a stone standing will be left of the “patrician” version of the so-called “truth”. And then, once the building of that second “truth” is completely demolished, I will proceed to build the final building on that already clean ground.

As everybody knows, a new building could only be built on either new grounds, or, if the grounds were previously occupied by another structure, the previous structure has to be completely demolished first and its debris has to be removed from this construction site. Exactly the same as above applies to any revelations. Since the ultimate truth and especially the one about such an apocalyptic event as 9/11 is indeed tantamount to a revelation, it has to be treated as such.

For this reason, I would like to request my readers’ forgiveness – please, forgive me that I have chosen such a “round-about” way, instead of simply and straightly telling the full truth “as is”.

Please, try to understand that I had to take into consideration a lot of psychological aspects of how to serve the truth in the nicest and the most comprehensible way – especially in the situation where the intended receivers of it have been already cheated so many times that they might simply become unreceptive.

In any case, if you only bother to read this book till its end, you will understand absolutely everything that happened on that fateful day – September 11, 2001. This book will absolutely answer all your possible questions related to those events. And, what is most important, nobody will ever be able to cheat you again. Thus, instead of becoming unreceptive to the truth, you will become unreceptive to any lie.

There is yet another important consideration to be discussed here.

You may have heard the story from American book publishers that a book will lose 50% of its sales for each mathematical formula that appears in any given book.

This is the reality of America today and I have to reckon with this sad fact... The average reader became too lazy, and, moreover, badly spoiled by cheap, easy to read pulp fiction that replaced any serious literature since the '50s. An attempt to add mathematical formulas to this narration, will indeed decrease interest of the majority of potential readers, with the greater part of them losing interest in reading it completely. On the other hand, since this book deals with the technicalities of the WTC destruction and with some other technical things, to make it completely “easy to read” was not possible. I would have to sacrifice too much of important information in this case.

This book definitely contains some technical data. However, unlike some other guys, who want to appear very “scientific-looking” while presenting their evidence (without realizing that they scare away most readers), the author of this book has preferred a totally different approach. Instead of emphasizing those digits, chemical formulas, fission sequences, and engineering computations, which could only scare away an innocent reader and would never prove anything to him, I decided to stress in this book only logical facts as primary points, while giving all those technical details just a secondary value, presenting them (only when really necessary) on a familiarization level.

Due to this approach, I believe, this book could be easily readable and could be easily understood by everybody who is familiar with just elementary logic alone. It is not necessary at all to be familiar with any nuclear weapons or with any other high-tech stuff in order to understand everything that is being explained here.

How should we call this third truth – which is without quotation marks, considering that the first “truth” is its “plebeian” version, and the second one – is considered to be a “truth” for “patricians”?

I thought about it for quite a while and eventually decided as follows: in former Rome there were only two groups of those free citizens: plebeians and patricians (slaves were not even counted).

Since both of these two groups in our case have been already fed up and supposed to be replete with their respective versions of the so-called “truth”, the third one supposes not to be in their wish-list. Probably, only those descendants of Adam who live outside Rome, in this case might be interested in it.

As you probably remember from the history of Christianity, the teaching of Jesus Christ was not the thing wanted in contemporary ancient Rome. Therefore, the first who embraced the truth in that case were Barbarians, who used to live outside Rome and who were considered “un-humans” (i.e. being neither patricians, nor even plebeians) by those Roman citizens, who considered only themselves being “humans”...

As a result of that attitude, the Barbarians managed to become Christians some 300 years before the Romans...

Based on the above consideration, I think that the truth without quotation marks should be called the “barbarian” version of truth – as opposed to “plebeian” and “patrician” versions.

You could also think that the author of this book is himself a “Barbarian”, because he is definitely neither a patrician, nor a plebeian... I myself also believe that I shall be classified as the Barbarian, especially considering that I came from the former Soviet Union – the most “rogue” state (far more “rogue” than poor North Korea, Syria or Somalia), whose official aim was to completely destroy the existing social structure – where poor humans could be so easily duped despite even being patricians...

Let us call this truth about 9/11 the “barbarian” version of the truth. I think it is very fair, especially considering that this truth without quotation marks is destructive to modern imperialist rulers to about the same extent as the former Barbarians were destructive to the former Roman Empire.

Since the author of this book is apparently a Barbarian, who does not speak good language of the plebeians, nor that of the patricians, and moreover, does not know how to be “politically correct” in a sense of modern plebeian politeness, his language in this book, as well as his manner of expression, might appear rude and inappropriate, not even to say grammatically or stylistically incorrect.

For this reason, I would like to ask for your forgiveness in advance – I am the Barbarian anyway, and English is not my native language, never mind that I have never been taught any so-called “political correctness”.

One might also ask yet another question – why I have chosen such a peculiar name for this book – which includes a phrase: “...defending the U.S. Government...”? Does the U.S. Government really deserve to be “defended” after all those unprecedented amounts of lies?

Yes, I think so. One has to be fair even towards those who are unfair themselves. Even the worst kind of criminals shall be provided with advocates in the criminal courts’ hearings. And even the worst criminals shall not be accused of crimes which they did not commit in reality. Every criminal has to be accused only of those particular counts of offenses which he [allegedly] committed. Moreover, all those alleged crimes have to be proven accordingly: any accused, however “bad” he might be in person, shall enjoy benefits of the doubt.

Please, be fair – the U.S. Government, whose alleged participation in the 9/11 perpetration is more than doubtful, has to enjoy benefits of the doubt in exactly the same manner as any other accused.

By the way – in real judicial proceedings quite often the following situation occurs: some wrongfully accused person, in an attempt to defend himself, often resorts to a lie – i.e. for example, he denies having been in the area where a crime has been committed. When he is eventually “caught” with such a lie, it might look to some primitive people that this mere fact that he was lying to the Justice is supposedly “the best proof of his guilt”.

Thus, if one does not know how to lie effectively, he is risking aggravating those suspicions against him which might easily lead to a wrongful judgment.

If you see that someone has come into the abovementioned situation – i.e. when in order to defend himself he had attempted to lie and had been caught with the lie – instead of attacking such a poor chap, you should rather try to protect him and to clear him from such a dangerous situation. Then you can undoubtedly call yourself “fair”.

Coming back to the U.S. Government.

Nowadays many people around the world have developed a new kind of “hobby”. They routinely collect and analyze various inconsistencies of the official 9/11 conspiracy theory, and, since it is not so difficult a job to prove that it is a lie, they accuse the U.S. Government of being the main perpetrator of 9/11.

However, in reality the only problem of the poor U.S. Government was that it did not know how to lie beautifully. Of course, such a poor “accused” should be defended, because by its cumbersome lies the poor U.S. Government has almost “proven” its non-existent guilt and is currently just one step away from a final guilty verdict – for a crime it has never committed...

Yes, the U.S. Government is definitely guilty for:

- its cover-up of the entire 9/11 affair, including faking documents and hiding evidence;
- its shooting down innocent passengers on several civil flights during the 9/11 panic;
- its cheating the “plebeians”;
- its cheating the “patricians”;
- its cheating poor “Ground Zero” responders and Manhattan residents;
- its unprecedented war against the so-called “terror”, which does not exist in reality;
- its outrageous persecution of innocent Muslims;
- its extrajudicial detentions of some people in Guantanamo Bay without bringing them to the Justice;
- its various violations of basic human rights;
- its massive encroachment on civil freedoms;
- its manipulating of the U.S. own Justice System;
- being a bit of an old-fashioned person, I presume that the members of U.S. Government are also guilty for not committing suicide (i.e. for not shooting themselves to death after their unprecedented failures of 9/11) and, instead, for making it as bold as to even ballot for the second terms in the 9/11 aftermath (though, perhaps, this particular presumption of mine is unfair – maybe I am too old-fashioned; in reality, those shameless folks from the present generations of politicians have never committed the “right thing” since the ‘50s).

However, whether you like it or not, the U.S. Government is NOT guilty of planning the 9/11 attacks. It did NOT plan them and it did NOT know anything about them in advance. That is exactly why I would like to clear the U.S. Government from that count.

Hence is the name of my book.

Someone might have yet another question – why “V for Vendetta” and “R for Reality” was used in the title of this book?

I refuse to answer this question. If you are not able to understand it yourself, then you would not be able to understand it even if I answer. However, if you are able to understand it yourself, then you do not need my answer anyway. In neither case would you really need my answer. That is exactly why you won't have it.

If you want to educate yourself on this topic, just go to a cinema and watch this very movie: "V for Vendetta" or rent a video-CD and watch it in privacy of your home. For your further understanding, just compare the pictures of "Ground Zero" in New York with those depicted on the DVD package with this particular movie – the one which is used in the cover of this book.

However, you do not have to worry; this in particular has nothing to do with the technicalities of this book.

Actually, at first, I did not even plan to use this mysterious phrase in its title and wanted to restrict myself only to the "third truth" and to the "defending of the U.S Government".

This book was intended to be very simple, technical, logical, and understandable and without any mysticism whatsoever. But when the book had been already completed, one friend of mine has pointed it out to me that near the punched-out hole in the Pentagon's Ring "C" there has been a strange letter "V" painted on the wall. In his opinion, it was nothing else than "V" for "Vendetta", because shortly before that he saw a movie of the same name.

He advised me to see it as well. But when I took the DVD with that movie, I was simply shocked, because a picture used on the DVD package reminded me of "Ground Zero", what was left of the former World Trade Center in New York City.

Actually, due to various hardships and disappointments which chased me all my life, I grew so hardened, so cynical, and so tired of various surprises, that it would be very unlikely that now anybody could still be able to tell me anything really shocking – that I would really take close to my heart. However, that time I was really impressed. And at that moment I remembered that the chief organizer of the 9/11 attacks (whom I used to know personally for almost three years) was known firstly for his apocalyptic pretensions, and secondly, for his vindictiveness.

Thus, at the last moment, I decided to add this puzzle to the title of my book and corresponding pictures – to its cover. I guessed it would make the book look more "apocalyptic", because it apparently deserves it, considering its topic. When you read this book, you will see another, less "apocalyptic" and more humanistic reason of why the 9/11 attack was obviously a Vendetta and by whom this Vendetta was exacted. It will be quite easy to understand if you only read this book attentively.

So, please, do not worry – you wouldn't really need to solve this puzzle concerning the strange letter "V" in order to understand the actual meaning of this book. I did really my best to make it as understandable as possible.

Irrespective of understanding about the hidden meaning of the strange letter "V" strangely inscribed in the inner wall of the Pentagon's Ring "C", you will have a clear picture of everything else, namely: who did it and how he did it.

As I have promised at the beginning of this book, no question of technical nature would remain. You will understand where that microscopic fluffy dust came from, why the WTC Twin Towers as well as the WTC-7 all collapsed with near freefall speed, what kind of "flying object" struck the Pentagon, why a "Doomsday Plane" was seen flying on the September the 11th, who sent the infamous "anthrax letters", and why neither of these technicalities could be honestly explained to the general public by the U.S. Government.

Brief introduction to nuclear weapons. Destructive factors of nuclear explosions.

This particular chapter was absent in an original version of this book, because I wrote the book based on a presumption that everybody knows about nuclear weapons anyway and it would be just a waste of time and of paper explaining this topic. However, several people who read the original version of the book, requested me to add this chapter. They said that in fact not so many people in the world know much about nuclear weapons, and, due to their lack of basic knowledge, they might easily misunderstand some important points of this book. According to their request, I add here this small chapter.

I will not go deep into exact technical details of nuclear weapons, because if someone wishes to study it deeper he could find a lot of information on this topic on the Internet. I explain only basic points needed for understanding of the rest of the book. My explanation here will be on a familiarization level only, so, please, do not blame me for being so primitive in this regard. Those many readers, who are certain to know about nuclear weapons, could easily jump over this chapter, thus saving their precious time, and only those who know nothing about nuclear weapons are encouraged to read what is said below.

Nuclear (old-fashioned name “atomic”) weapons are a group of extremely powerful weapons that utilize a great amount of the potential energy that is normally used to hold together elementary particles (protons and neutrons) that constitute a nucleus of every atom. If you are able to cause an atomic nucleus to fission, to split into separate elementary particles, all that enormous energy that used to hold them together would be instantly released. That is the very principle of any so-called “nuclear fission reaction”.

These nuclear reactions, in turn, could be “slow” or “controlled” ones (such as used in nuclear reactors of nuclear power plants or in those of nuclear powered ships and submarines), and “fast” or “instant” or “uncontrolled” ones – where the entire tremendous potential energy of the entire fissionable material used as the nuclear fuel is released at once (“atomic blast” or “nuclear explosion”).

Instrumental in such a nuclear reaction (which is also called a “chain nuclear reaction”) are free neutrons that can “bombard” atomic nuclei, thus causing them to split and release both the free energy and more neutrons. The latter, in turn, continue to do the job in regard to the remaining and not yet bombarded atomic nuclei within a core made of a fissionable material. The entire process of such a chain nuclear reaction takes milliseconds, if not less.

The power of atomic or “nuclear” explosions is traditionally measured in its TNT explosive equivalent, which, in turn, is usually measured in kilotons (kt or Kt) and megatons (mt or Mt). Sometimes it is also measured in fractions of a kiloton (such as 0.1 kt or even 0.01 kt etc.) – especially in the case of mini-nuclear explosions caused by low-yield portable nuclear land-mines, so-called “suit-case nukes”, SADM, and other similar small nuclear munitions. As you can expect, a “kiloton” is an equivalent of 1,000 tons of TNT, while a “megaton” is an equivalent of 1,000,000 tons of TNT, or an equivalent of 1,000 kilotons. In modern English it is common to refer to the power of a nuclear explosion as “its TNT yield”. For example, if you hear that such and such nuclear explosion was “half-Megaton in TNT yield” it means that the TNT equivalent of that nuclear explosion was 0.5 Megaton, or 500 Kilotons, or 500,000 tons of TNT.

Fortunately, not every atom could so easily fission, but only atoms of several rare and expensive isotopes of certain chemical elements, namely that of Uranium-235 and Plutonium-239. Several other rare isotopes of chemical elements such as Thorium and Neptunium could apparently fission too, but so far there are no reports of their usage for that reason; at least, they are not used as such on an industrial scale (however, there are reports of Americium and Californium used in modern so-called “micro-nukes”).

Both – Uranium-235 (also called for short “U-235”) and Plutonium-239 (for short “Pu-239”) – are very expensive materials, which, besides their actual cost, are extremely difficult to obtain.

Uranium that occurs in nature usually contains less than 1% of the required isotope of Uranium-235, while the major part of crude natural Uranium is represented by a non-fissionable isotope Uranium-238, as well as by some other “useless” isotopes. To obtain fissionable nuclear material, natural Uranium has to be “enriched” by removing “useless” isotopes and so by increasing the percentage of Uranium-235. The minimum level of “enrichment” of U-235, for a reason of creating nuclear weapons, is over 80%, while in reality, all countries who produce Uranium-based nuclear weapons enrich the Uranium U-235 isotope to at least 90-95% or higher – up to 100%.

Uranium that is going to be used as a fuel for nuclear reactors also has to be enriched by U-235, though to a considerably lower percentage. Usually, “reactor-quality” Uranium contains from 3-4% to 15% of U-235, while Uranium fuel for naval reactors, where a higher efficiency factor is desired, could be enriched to much higher percentage – up to 40% or even 60% (still falling short of that of the so-called “weapon-grade” Uranium).

The Uranium enrichment process is a very expensive and quite a slow process that requires huge industrial capacities. Moreover, nowadays there are many internationally imposed restrictions that were especially designed not to allow so-called “rogue” countries to indulge in any Uranium enrichment even for a reason of obtaining only a “reactor-quality” material.

The situation with Plutonium-239 is slightly different. It does not actually need any enrichment (moreover, it is not even possible from the technical point of view to enrich Plutonium-239). The problem is that this element does not exist in a natural form. It could only be obtained from working nuclear reactors in very small quantities. It is nothing, but a by-product of the usual Uranium-based nuclear reaction in such nuclear reactors. Plutonium-239 is about 10 times more expensive than Uranium-235 and working reactors accumulate its quantities very slowly – mere hundreds of grams per year. However, usage of Plutonium-239 allows manufacturing nuclear weapons much smaller in size than the Uranium-based ones.

All fissionable nuclear materials have a special property called “critical mass”. Critical mass is the mass of a fissionable material required to produce an instant nuclear reaction (or “nuclear blast”). It would not be possible to achieve any nuclear explosion unless you have the critical mass of such nuclear material in one piece; however, once you have it, the nuclear explosion would follow automatically.

To escape any premature nuclear explosion, the mass of the nuclear material is separated into 2 (or more) sub-critical masses that are kept separate. When a nuclear explosion is desired, these sub-critical masses are joined together using some special mechanism and the explosion follows immediately.

The critical masses of fissionable materials are reported to be as follows: Uranium-235: 50-52 kg (depending on its exact level of enrichment and on its exact geometrical form – the spherical form always has the lowest critical mass compared to the cylindrical or other forms); Plutonium-239: 10-11 kg (also depends on its geometrical form.) Besides, Plutonium-239 has 4 different crystallization phases, so the said parameter is for its most common, “natural” crystallization phase, while for its other crystallization phases it could be as low as 4-5 kg only.

Critical mass is determined by the mere number of free neutrons capable of escaping a piece of fissionable material and thus excluded from the chain reaction that causes an atomic blast. When you have a piece of Uranium-235 smaller than 50 kg or a piece of Plutonium-239 smaller than 10 kg, or when you do not have a proper geometry of such a piece (for example, you make this piece too long or too flat rather than a spherical one) too many neutrons would be able to escape this piece through its surface. Thus, it would not be enough neutrons required for a chain reaction. When a piece of fissionable material is well-calculated (it is of a right geometrical form to decrease to the minimum its surface) and it contains the right mass of actual fissionable material within itself, you have all the basic premises for the chain nuclear reaction.

It is very easy to imagine that you can create some special “screen” (or reflector) around the core of your actual fissionable material that would additionally prevent free neutrons from escaping the core. By using this “screen”, usually made from otherwise useless Uranium-238, you might decrease the actual critical mass of the fissionable material needed.

Another method of decreasing critical mass is a so-called “implosion”. For example, you have an 8 kg piece of Plutonium-239 made into a spherical form. It would not explode, because it is much lower than the required critical mass (normally, 10-11 kg) and so too many neutrons needed for a chain nuclear reaction would escape from inside the core via its surface. Thus, the number of needed free neutrons within this Plutonium-239 core would never grow to become critical and nuclear explosion would never be possible. However, if you position well-calculated charges of conventional explosive materials around the Plutonium-239 core and detonate them synchronously, it will compress the core from every direction and even 8 kg of it could easily grow into an over-critical mass due to its compressed state and the chain nuclear reaction (a/k/a “nuclear blast”) would follow immediately. The same thing could also be performed in regard to Uranium-235.

Another part of a typical nuclear device is a so-called “neutron initializer” – a device that “adds” a great number of neutrons to the abovementioned scheme at the last moment, thus increasing both – speed and the possibility of a chain reaction. However, such a device is considered to be an optional one, since a mere critical mass of fissionable material alone is believed to be enough to cause a nuclear explosion at once.

This was some necessary basic knowledge about the design of purely nuclear charges.

The efficiency factor of a typical nuclear charge is not very high. Even if you have 50 kg of Uranium-235 inside your bomb, it does not mean that all the 50 kg would be involved in the nuclear chain reaction. The 50 kg are required to be there in order to reach the critical mass, but it does not mean that all this Uranium-235 would be used in a nuclear explosion. The most advanced designs of modern nuclear weapons scarcely allow into a chain nuclear reaction 2 kg of Uranium or so from among the available 50 kg... In the first, more primitive design of nuclear weapons, it was not more than a half-kilogram of Uranium that was really engaged in a chain reaction. If you are able to cause a mere 1 kilogram of Uranium-235 into a chain reaction, you may expect a yield of your atomic blast to be somewhat near 20 kiloton. The first atomic bomb dropped by Americans on the Japanese city of Hiroshima in 1945 was officially designed to be only 18 kiloton, but it is widely believed that due to many flaws in its design it went off at much lower yield – not more than 13 or even 12 kiloton only¹⁹.

Judging by this information, you could imagine that it is not really feasible – to achieve yields greater than 40 kiloton even if such a nuclear bomb is manufactured by a highly developed country – such as USA, France, or Russia. Less advanced designs of nuclear bombs could scarcely achieve yields of 20 kiloton, while all those fearful “atomic bombs” that could allegedly be assembled in one’s kitchen, or inside one’s cave in Afghanistan, would obviously never be able to achieve yields of 10 or a maximum of 12 kiloton (which is still, however, enough to make something resembling the Hiroshima event).

Although some sources claim that “pure fission” nuclear bombs (meaning “atomic”, not “hydrogen”) could allegedly achieve yields of 500 kiloton – like the alleged “Ivy King” test, described by this Wikipedia article: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Ivy_King that refers to the alleged “four-critical-mass-bomb”, it is hardly believable. Perhaps, it could be true to a certain extent (I mean it might have been a real nuclear explosion, but with exaggerated digits published). But I would rather presume that it was merely a scam intended to impress the gullible back in the earlier ‘50s (a scam akin to the infamous “Moon landing”) and there was no any nuclear explosion at all in that particular case. It is hardly possible to achieve the alleged half-megaton yield with the device properties of which are described in the said Wikipedia article.

On the other hand, today’s demands are not actually high yields of nuclear explosions, but exactly vice versa: nuclear explosions with lower yields are on the wish-list nowadays. It is required that modern nuclear charges (especially nuclear land-mines, so-called “suit-case nukes”, and other similar stuff) would be able to explode at yields of 0.1 kiloton, 0.01 kiloton, sometimes 0.2 or 0.3 or 0.5 kiloton, and never more than 1 kiloton. Moreover, it is required that such small nuclear charges would not have fixed yields, but variable ones – so that an end-user would be able to manually set the desired yield of explosion right at the moment of laying such a nuclear charge under its target. Such precise mini-nuclear munitions are badly needed today. They could be used in cases of assassinations of important people or groups of people, in demolitions of heavily fortified structures, as well as for destroying big bridges, tunnels, dams, etc., in targeting underground bunkers, and in cases when it is desired to use nuclear weapons clandestinely, without attracting undue attention from controlling services and without informing the general public that nuclear weapons are actually being used.

Thus, while primitive nuclear weapons designs cannot achieve really high yields because of the reasons mentioned above, these primitive designs cannot achieve precisely low yields either. It is actually the same matter – one has to be able to control and not just “control”, but “precisely control” the exact amount of fissional material that would be involved into a chain nuclear reaction. It is quite difficult, indeed, to make any workable nuclear bomb whatsoever, but it is a much more difficult task to be able to control the exact amount of material that would actually explode.

¹⁹ For those discerning readers who like to dig deep right to the truth, I have to say that there are some serious inconsistencies when it comes to the Hiroshima bombing, and I have deeply studied all these inconsistencies, of course. However, for the sake of presenting the truth about 9/11 in a clear and understandable manner, I have to skip discussing the Hiroshima case here. Thus, here and further, I would presume the version of the Hiroshima bombing that is alleged by the officially approved version of history.

Take it as a basic premise: while some old nuclear player, let's say the United States, France, Russia, or Israel, could manufacture an atomic bomb that could explode at 40 kt in TNT yield, the same level of technology might allow the same country to manufacture a precisely wrought mini-nuclear device that could cause a precisely calculated mini-nuclear explosion of 0.3-0.1 kt or even 0.01 kt in TNT yield (equal to only 300-100 tons, and 10 tons of TNT respectively).

On the other hand, if some nuclear beginner (such as you in your garage, or Osama bin Laden in his cave) could theoretically be able to assemble some primitive a/k/a "crude" atomic bomb, he would never be able to achieve any control over how much of its fissionable material would really participate in a chain nuclear reaction (or "explosion"). A maximum of what such a "designer" could do – is to make his bomb to be able to explode whatsoever and to keep his fingers crossed: in case of good luck it might achieve 12 kiloton, in case of bad luck – maybe 7 or 8 kiloton. Such a nuclear beginner cannot even dream about achieving any precisely calculated yield – such as 1 kiloton, not even to say about fractions of it. I think I managed to make it clear enough.

Our conclusion is that it is not possible to make an atomic bomb mightier than 40 kiloton even by a developed nation; while under-developed nations could not achieve even 20 kiloton (a possibility for such an under-developed nation to produce any "mini-nuke" is absolutely excluded). Still, all modern strategic nuclear charges are much mightier – their yields are measured in hundreds and thousands of kilotons. How do they manage to achieve these incredible yields?

Besides nuclear charges (formerly called "atomic"), there are also thermonuclear (old-fashioned name "hydrogen") charges. This reaction releases much greater amounts of energy than an ordinary nuclear explosion described above. If purely nuclear charges work by the principle "Fission" alone, these thermonuclear charges work by the principle "Fission-Fusion". The term "fusion" in this case refers to a process of a "nuclear fusion" that means synthesizing atomic nucleuses of atoms of heavy hydrogen, known also as deuterium and tritium. Such a reaction is impossible in natural conditions (since it requires temperatures of several millions degrees Celsius which is not possible to achieve by any conventional means).

Scientists decided to greatly improve destructive powers of nuclear weapons by combining into one piece, two reactions: an ordinary nuclear reaction (that creates those high temperatures required to start such a heavy hydrogen fusion process) and the actual thermonuclear or "fusion" one. Thus, any and every thermonuclear bomb or other munitions necessarily contains at least one "ordinary" nuclear charge that is called in this case a "fission primary trigger" or simply a "fission primary". It is intended to trigger the much more powerful thermonuclear reaction. More advanced modern thermonuclear charges include not even one, but two "ordinary" nuclear charges – the one mentioned above "fission primary" and another one – a so-called "fission spark plug". The latter is intended to additionally "ignite" the thermonuclear reaction itself once the rest of the required conditions are achieved.

All these thermonuclear charges, in turn, can be sub-divided into two categories: so-called "clean charges" and so-called "dirty charges". "Clean" ones use the principle: "Fission-Fusion" only. "Dirty" ones use the principle: "Fission-Fusion-Fission". The last one works like this: first an ordinary nuclear (fission) reaction occurs; it ignites a secondary – thermonuclear reaction (fusion). The latter is followed by such high-temperatures that it becomes possible to achieve a fission reaction in otherwise non-fissionable materials – such as that otherwise useless depleted Uranium-238. A tertiary nuclear reaction follows the thermonuclear one – Uranium-238 also begins to fission. This adds even greater amounts of energy to the secondary thermonuclear explosion and increases a total yield of such munitions by almost two-fold.

A basic difference between "clean" and "dirty" thermonuclear charges is that the latter has an outer hull usually made of Uranium-238 (a non-fissionable material which would be involved in the tertiary nuclear fission reaction because of the special conditions created by the secondary thermonuclear explosion).

Why they use terms "dirty" and "clean" in regard to these designs? It is because in a "clean" thermonuclear explosion only a fraction of its total explosive yield is contributed by its primary fission nuclear reaction. The major part of its energy is contributed by its fusion reaction, which is considered being much "cleaner" in terms of radioactive contamination compared to the fission one (that releases a lot of harmful radio-nuclides into the environment). Still, even "clean" hydrogen bombs are dirty enough – they badly contaminate the environment making it uninhabitable for years (the exact time depends on their exact yields).

By contrast, so-called “dirty” thermonuclear charges gain almost half of their entire explosive energy from their tertiary fission nuclear reaction (meaning from fission of that Uranium-238 outer hull). Such a fission reaction is about as dirty as any fission of primary Uranium-235 or that of Plutonium-239, but a much greater percentage of material in that case would be involved in the reaction, because of the special conditions created by the thermonuclear reaction that triggers it. Considering all of this, a “dirty” thermonuclear bomb is many times “dirtier” than an ordinary nuclear bomb. And anyhow even a “clean” thermonuclear bomb is still “dirtier” compared to an ordinary nuclear bomb.

The main thermonuclear material used in modern thermonuclear weapons is usually deuteride of lithium, while sometimes it is enhanced by additions of pure tritium.

There are some additional varieties of thermonuclear charges. For example, it is possible to create a “dirty” variety of it where its third fissionable stage (that is traditionally made out of non-fissionable and cheap Uranium-238) would be made out of Cobalt, instead. This kind of bomb would be much “dirtier”. In fact it would be “dirty” to the extent that it would make lands around its explosion uninhabitable for at least a thousand years. Only a couple of “cobalt bombs” detonated over the United States would turn the entire territory into a lifeless radioactive desert completely unsuitable for future inhabitation for the next 1000, or maybe even 1500 years. Only about 15-17 “cobalt bombs” skillfully positioned around the Earth and detonated would make our entire planet uninhabitable forever.

For this reason, such “cobalt bombs” were dubbed “weapons of those who lost the conventional nuclear war”. The “cobalt bombs” are indeed weapons of losers judging by logic. It is not known how many bombs of this kind have been ever produced and whether they are still in combat-ready state or not. But it is known that none of such “cobalt bombs” has ever been tested due to its being too dangerous. Still, there are reasons to believe that these “weapons of losers” remain in service and continue to contribute their share to the nuclear deterrent. However, nobody, except only a few people, knows it for sure.

Besides these, there are possibilities to increase the amount of energy of a thermonuclear explosion spent on the creation of free neutrons rather than on the creation of other destructive factors; such a concept has been implemented in so-called “neutron bombs” which emit greater numbers of fast neutrons compared to “ordinary” nuclear weapons. These fast neutrons could easily penetrate even a thick armor of a modern tank killing everyone inside, which is near impossible to achieve with “ordinary” gamma-radiation and small numbers of the usual fast neutrons in the case of an “ordinary” nuclear or thermonuclear explosion. However, these scary “neutron bombs” are not very huge in yield – usually around 1 kiloton only. Still, they are capable of effectively killing every living being, even those hiding behind thick armor at distances of well over a kilometer from hypocenters of their explosions.

The efficiency factor of thermonuclear charges in general is much higher than that of ordinary atomic charges and therefore much greater yields can be easily achieved. The mightiest hydrogen bomb ever built was the famous Soviet “Tsar-bomba” that boasted an explosive yield of 100 megaton in its “dirty”, and about 50 megaton – in its “clean” variety. It was detonated in atmospheric conditions in its “clean” variety (with its tertiary stage removed) on October 30, 1961, and it indeed achieved a yield of ~58 megaton, to the horror of the entire world. The largest commissioned thermonuclear warheads possessed by the United States- and Soviet militaries were less mighty – only 25-27 megaton. Still, it was not easy to construct them and especially difficult to achieve their effective delivery to their intended targets due to their tremendous weight. However, yields of several megaton could be achieved relatively easy, not to mention yields of several hundreds of kilotons, and such munitions are considered being much more useful today than those mammoth ones that were made in the ‘60s.

All modern thermonuclear charges are also precisely wrought and precisely calculated devices and they could also feature variable yields. While old multi-megaton munitions (5-10 megaton warheads and 25 megaton bombs) are still being maintained by both – Russia and the United States, they are considered an obsolete kind of weapon. Modern military doctrines favor usage of warheads of somewhat between 200 - 500 kiloton due to their much easier deployment and greater accuracy. Back in the ‘60s and ‘70s one big intercontinental ballistic missile (ICBM) could be equipped with a single ~10 megaton warhead that could completely destroy a single city, now the same size of missile is equipped, instead, with somewhat 10 or even more MIRVs each featuring 0.5 megaton which is still enough to destroy a big city. Thus, if an old missile could destroy a single city with a 10 megaton blast, a new missile could effectively destroy 10 cities with 10 x 500 kiloton blasts each (500 kilotons is still more than 40 times the size of the first atomic bomb dropped on Hiroshima).

I hope I managed to make it more or less clear and to educate the reader at least a little bit about what those nuclear and thermonuclear weapons are.

What about the destructive factors of an atomic blast? They are, actually, the same when it comes to either a nuclear- or a thermonuclear blast. These destructive factors in regard to nuclear and thermonuclear blasts do not differ in principle, but only differ in their properties (due to thermonuclear blasts being much more powerful than nuclear ones). Traditionally, it is believed that there are three main destructive factors of nuclear explosions and two additional ones, which are:

1) Air-blast wave (also called “shock wave”) – the most efficient destructive factor that causes the most visible devastation and kills a good half of all atomic blast’s victims by either its direct hit, or by its secondary effects – such as flying glass from broken windows or building debris.

It is represented by a hard air-front with an extreme overpressure that travels to every direction from a hypocenter of a nuclear explosion with a supersonic speed, killing and smashing everything on its way. Its exact killing distance directly depends on the exact yield of an actual nuclear or a thermonuclear explosion and could range from hundreds of meters to tens of kilometers from ground zero. The destructive power of the air-blast wave is traditionally described by its overpressure measured (in the English-speaking world) in “pounds per square inch” (“psi”).

Many people mistakenly believe that such an air-blast wave from nuclear explosions is caused by merely “pushing” off the air around the explosion in every direction by the very explosion in the middle. It is not so, in fact (I mean, it is not so primitive). This phenomenon owes its existence exclusively to high temperatures in close proximity to the hypocenter of a nuclear explosion.

At the very first stage of any chain nuclear reaction the entire energy that is instantly released exists only in a form of so-called “primary radiation” that falls mainly within X-rays spectrum. Remaining parts of its spectrum – gamma-rays, alpha-rays, beta-rays, neutrons, visible – are also present (and, in fact, they form a third destructive factor – called “penetrating radiation”), but their percentage in the total energy of a nuclear explosion is negligible compared to that represented by the X-rays (less than 1%). Further behavior of X-rays largely depends on the physical conditions around the hypocenter and you will have entirely different pictures of events when you compare atmospheric-, underground-, underwater-, and over-atmospheric (or “exo-atmospheric”) nuclear explosions.

In the case of an atmospheric nuclear explosion, its primary radiation is absorbed by atmospheric gases in distances of several meters around its hypocenter. Absorption of this primary radiation leads to the creation of a zone of extremely overheated air that is traditionally being referred to as “nuclear fireballs”. The radius of the fireballs continues to grow because the energy from its inner hotter parts continues to be transmitted to its outer colder parts. This, understandably, causes the decrease of the temperatures in the middle. At the moment when the temperature of the expanding fireballs decreases to roughly 300,000 degrees Celsius, the speed of its future expansion decreases to be comparable to the speed of sound. At this moment the formation of the air-blast wave begins. Its expanding front breaks away from that of the nuclear fireballs (that loses its speed of expansion) and, separated in such a manner, the air-blast wave continues to expand to every direction with the still supersonic speed. For a very brief moment following the breaking-away of the front of the air-blast wave, the temperature of the fireballs’ surface slightly decreases and the fireballs do not start to emit any thermal radiation yet. However, soon (in milliseconds), the temperature in the fireballs surface again increases to several thousand degrees Celsius forming that well-known orange shining sphere that begins to emit deadly thermal radiation – another main destructive factor of every atmospheric nuclear blast, which is described below.

2) Thermal radiation is nothing but a pretty ordinary heat that is being irradiated, in enormous quantities, in a form of light (including that in its invisible infra-red and ultra-violet spectrums) from a shining sphere (commonly known as “nuclear fireballs”) that surrounds the hypocenter of any atmospheric nuclear explosion.

This is the second most powerful destructive factor, because it causes severe burns to people that could lead to their deaths very quickly (not even to mention that it often simply burns them to death right away). In addition to direct burns, thermal radiation causes various inflammable materials to inflame and so causes widespread fires, thus causing additional casualties, not to mention zones of conflagrations especially in cities and forests that are impossible to extinguish; of course, it is not possible to survive in such zones of conflagration. Thermal radiation from megaton- and especially from multi-megaton thermonuclear explosions is so powerful that it is capable of evaporating entire rivers and lakes in distances of up to several kilometers from ground zero.

Thermal radiation may last from fractions of a second in the case of mini-nuclear explosions, seconds in cases of kiloton-yields blasts, and up to tens of seconds in case of multi-megaton blasts.

Its exact killing distance also directly depends on the exact yield of an actual nuclear or thermonuclear explosion (as well as it greatly depends on how high above the earth's surface this explosion occurs) and could range from hundreds of meters to tens of kilometers from ground zero. In case of a huge multi-megaton blast the killing distance of thermal radiation could easily reach even 50 kilometers, for example, and thus by about two-folds exceed the corresponding killing distance of its air-blast wave.

It should be clearly understood that both abovementioned destructive factors – air-blast wave and thermal radiation – pertain exclusively to a nuclear explosion in atmospheric conditions. If there is no air around a nuclear explosion, neither fireballs, nor consequent factors could be formed. The enormous quantities of the nuclear explosion energy released mainly in the form of X-rays would not be spent for heating any air around due to its absence. That is why deep underground-, underwater-, and over-atmospheric- nuclear blasts do not feature these two most dangerous destructive factors.

It shall be mentioned also that many people mistakenly believe that a source of thermal radiation is the initial flash of a nuclear blast. It is not so. An initial “flash” that produces white visible light akin to a photo-flash right at the moment of a nuclear blast pertains to its “primary radiation” that besides X-rays, gamma-rays, etc. includes full visible spectrum (which makes it white). Thermal radiation emanates from nuclear fireballs (which do not occur immediately, but with some delay) and its color is not actually white, but orange – similar to the color of our sun (the fireballs are also akin to the sun by their physical nature).

3) Ionizing radiation (also called “penetrating radiation”, which I believe is more correct in this case) – is the third most powerful destructive factor. It is represented by a hard front of penetrating radiation that consists of gamma-rays and high-energy neutrons instantly released during an actual nuclear explosion as a part of its primary radiation (that travel from its hypocenter in every direction with the speed of light).

The X-rays part of the primary radiation that carries out the major part of the total energy released by chain reaction (~99% of the entire energy) would be spent as described above on heating surrounding air (this, in turn, would form the nuclear fireballs). However, those neutrons and especially gamma-rays that would have much greater penetrating capability would not be absorbed by the surrounding air so easily and could travel much farther from ground zero compared to the X-rays.

This particular destructive factor does not represent any major danger to immovable property, but exclusively to live beings, because it causes their radiation sickness (also called “radioactive poisoning”) of various degrees which could likely lead to their deaths or to extreme damage to their health.

The penetrating radiation in this case is instant, so it does not last any considerable period of time. Its exact killing distance directly depends on the exact yield of an actual nuclear or a thermonuclear explosion. However, unlike the two abovementioned main destructive factors, it has much narrower range. Its range could vary from several hundreds meters in case of a mini-nuclear explosion of only 0.01 kiloton to only a few kilometers in case of a multi-megaton thermonuclear explosion (even in case of incredibly huge 100 megaton blast it won't reach 10 kilometers).

It is also notable that the killing distance of this particular destructive factor exceeds that of the above two (that of the air-blast wave and thermal radiation) in the case of mini-nuclear explosions, it is almost equal to that of those two in case of explosions of several kiloton yields, but it is far shorter than killing distances of the first two destructive factors in cases of megaton- and in especially in cases of multi-megaton yields (please, view a table below for comparison).

It should be mentioned also that ionizing radiation has a so-called “cumulative effect” – meaning that doses of ionizing radiation acquired on several different instances could be summarized to calculate their potential harmful effect. Moreover, doses of received penetrating ionizing radiation and doses of ionizing radiation acquired on account of radioactive contamination could be summarized in the same manner for such a calculation, because they do not differ much when it comes to their harmful effects.

It should be known also that exact doses of penetrating radiation capable of causing various degrees of radiation sickness are not truly established, due to only a few patients having suffered from these kinds of sickness during the entire history of nuclear science. Medical doctors do not possess much data to draw any exact conclusions. For this reason, for example, in the Soviet Union and in the United States there were different views on which doses are dangerous and to which extent they are dangerous to health.

In the Soviet Union at the time of my own military service it was believed that doses between 50 and 100 rem cause light radiation sickness; 100 to 150 rem – moderate ones (with mortality rate of up to 50%); 150 to 200 rem – heavy ones (with mortality rate up to 90%); and between 200 to 250 rem – extremely heavy ones (with mortality rate up to 99%); while doses of over 250 rem were considered to be nominally lethal. It was also believed then that doses of less than 50 rem did not cause any noticeable harm, so it was established that a 25 rem was an acceptable dose in combat conditions, and half of that (12.5 rem) – an acceptable dose in non-combat conditions.

In the United States, however, the same doses are about twice as much compared to the former Soviet Union. It is believed in the United States that a nominally lethal dose is 500 rem and sometimes even 600 rem. It is further believed in the United States that doses between 100 and 200 rem cause light radiation sickness (with mortality rate of 10%); doses between 200 and 300 rem cause moderate radiation sickness (with mortality rate of 35%); doses between 300 and 400 rem cause severe radiation sickness (with mortality rate of 50%); doses between 400 and 600 rem cause acute radiation sickness (with mortality rate of 60%); and doses between 600 and 1000 rem cause acute radiation sickness (with mortality rate near 100%).

Anyhow, it is very difficult to establish which of these two sets of data is closer to truth, considering lack of clinical experience. Besides, usage of the term “acute” had different meanings when used in the former Soviet Union and in the United States. In the Soviet Union “acute” when applied to radiation sickness means “as opposed to chronic” – meaning that even light radiation sickness could be an acute one. While in the U.S. “acute” means “as opposed to less severe”, meaning that “acute” is the heaviest condition of sickness.

4) Radioactive contamination – subdivided, in turn, into so-called “induced radiation” and so-called “residual radiation”.

Radioactive contamination is considered to be a mere after-effect of an atomic blast, rather than its immediate destructive factor. Still, it is destructive enough to be taken into the most serious consideration.

Induced radiation is a property of certain common materials that could become radioactive themselves after being subjected to ionizing radiation of a nuclear explosion. It is especially notable in the case of a so-called “neutron bomb’s” explosion. A “neutron bomb” exploded at a distance of 700 meters from a modern tank would not just instantly kill everyone inside of it; it would also induce its own radioactivity in the tank’s armor. Let’s say if a new crew would sit in the said tank to substitute for the dead, they would still receive lethal radiation doses in only 24 hours because the tank’s own armor became radioactive.

Residual radiation results from various highly poisonous short-living and long-living radio-nuclides that become abundant after a nuclear explosion. These dangerous materials always condense on and thus contaminate tiny microscopic particles of dust (microscopic dust is always present during surface nuclear explosions as well as in cases of nuclear explosions in the air not sufficiently high above the earth’s surface). These tiny particles are first sucked into ascending nuclear fireballs when their thermal radiation ceases and their temperature begins to decrease, forming that well-known to everybody atomic mushroom cloud. Inside the cloud these particles become radioactive. Later those radioactive particles are blown by wind and could end up a great distance from ground zero forming so-called “radioactive fallout”. Not every nuclear explosion creates radioactive fallout, but only that exploded on the surface or being close enough to it. For example, a nuclear explosion of 20 kiloton that occurs 200 meters above the surface supposes not to cause any radioactive fallout. For 1 megaton explosion such a “safe” altitude is 1 kilometer above the surface.

These highly radioactive materials are especially dangerous and especially abundant when a nuclear explosion happens underground but not sufficiently deep to be a “contained” one. A great part of the total energy of such a shallow sub-surface nuclear explosion is spent on creating enormous quantities of deadly radioactive dust, as well as radioactive vapors – far greater in comparison with that of a surface- or an air-burst. Practically, when a nuclear explosion creates a crater, you can assume that all volume of soil removed from this crater, would be contaminated with the greater part of it converted into microscopic radioactive dust. This microscopic radioactive dust represents a mortal danger to every living being. Its particles are simply too small to permit anyone to protect himself against them by conventional means.

These tiny yet deadly particles could easily penetrate any kind of commonly used materials that could be used as improvised respirators; no conventional windows or doors could protect premises from their penetration. Besides, these microscopic particles of radioactive dust could be easily airborne for long periods of time and they could be moved to great distances by wind and thus they might descend somewhere far away in an effect commonly known as “radioactive fallout”. Another danger of radioactive dust is that its individual particles are too small to be seen by a naked eye (unless in huge quantities), so one would never have a chance to notice them before inhaling or ingesting. The same factor also greatly complicates any cleaning of such tiny radioactive particles – they could easily remain in some small crevices on various surfaces even after extensive de-contamination (or how they call it “deactivation” in the ABC jargon) measures undertaken in order to remove them.

Radioactive vapors are probably less dangerous than radioactive dust, because they could not be blown by wind too far, so radioactive vapors represent major danger only in close proximity to ground zero, but at the very ground zero and around it the vapors are by no means less dangerous than radioactive dust.

If you swallow a particle of radioactive dust or that of radioactive vapor and this particle ends up somewhere in your gastro-intestinal tract or in your lungs (which is even more dangerous) it will remain there and continue to irradiate you from inside your body for prolonged periods of time. Radiation from inside the body is far more dangerous than “outside” penetrating radiation from which you are at least partly protected by your skin which stops most dangerous alpha- and beta-radiations. From inner radiation you are not protected at all.

Health effects caused by penetrating ionizing radiation (that is an integral part of the primary radiation of a nuclear explosion) as described above and health effects caused by radioactive dust/vapor could be compared to some extent, but there are also some differences between them.

Comparable is that either of them in big doses could kill you right away in about the same manner. Each of them usually causes radiation poisoning (also called “radiation sickness”) but symptoms caused by their doses that are lesser than “definitely lethal” ones are different.

Penetrating ionizing radiation in huge doses (unless it kills you right on the spot or causes you to die in a couple of hours) would cause acute radiation sickness in a heavy or a moderate form. In a course of such acute radiation sickness you might die or you might recover (mortality rates are usually 90% for heavy and 50% for moderate forms of radiation sickness). In case you manage to recover from acute radiation sickness on your own (meaning really on your own, not on account of a bone marrow transplantation), your body would slowly but surely recover to its former state. It might take several months and even a couple of years in a heavy case to achieve a complete recovery, but it would be really a complete recovery at the end. Those, who manage to recover in that way, do not suffer from radiation anymore. They have neither a higher risks of developing any cancer, nor any other noticeable adverse effects on their health compared to any normal person.

A totally different picture occurs when someone is being subjected to a harmful irradiation from inside his body on account of inhaled or ingested radioactive particles. Such particles harm the body from inside by alpha- and beta-radiations, rather than by gamma-radiation (which is the main case with penetrating radiation). Normally such a process of irradiating your body from inside does not cause any acute radiation sickness as described above (unless its effect is combined with that of a dose received from recent penetrating radiation, of course). It would rather harm your body slowly. Slowly, but surely. In huge doses it would most likely damage your bone marrow (often completely), and, in addition, it would create various opportunities for development of cancers, plus it might open ways to secondary infections that result from weakening of your immune system. In lesser doses radiation from inside your body would probably create only various opportunities for development of cancers.

It shall be understood that penetrating ionizing radiation (the destructive factor No.3) usually causes acute cases of radiation sickness that typically lead to quick deaths of patients. However, radioactive contamination (the destructive factor No.4) usually causes cases of chronic radiation sickness (that could be indeed logically and literally called “radiation poisoning”). The latter typically lead to slow deaths of patients from seemingly extraneous causes – such as various cancers, blood diseases, or secondary infections. It is also possible to observe combined effects – especially when someone has been subjected to both – ionizing penetrating radiation, plus to inhaling or ingesting of radioactive dust or radioactive vapor soon after that.

5) The fifth and the last destructive factor of any nuclear and thermonuclear explosion is its so-called “Electromagnetic Pulse” often referred to as “EMP”.

A nuclear explosion will instantly release not only enormous quantities of neutrons alone, but that of electrons as well, since electrons are even more numerous than neutrons. In addition, gamma-rays released by a nuclear explosion, would also create additional electrons, because each gamma-quant striking an atom of surrounding air would kick an electron out of it, thus ionizing air around. Besides, each of these electrons will be able to kick out more electrons when they strike neighboring atoms. It looked more like a kind of a chain reaction where only one gamma-quant would be able to eventually kick out of atoms up to 60,000 electrons. Soon all these enormous quantities of freed electrons due to their relatively light weight and high speed will quit an immediate zone around the nuclear explosion where they have been just born and will fly to every direction. This will create a strong horizontal current, which, in turn, will act like a giant spark that creates an extremely strong wideband electromagnetic radiation.

In the meantime, many atoms in that area will be positively ionized with the departure of the electrons (that are negatively charged, as you probably remember). The positively ionized atoms left will attract a great number of electrons from neighboring areas. These will concentrate right under the nuclear explosion area (fair to an airburst), since those negatively charged electrons will become “interested” in high concentrations of positively charged ions above. This effect will additionally cause a strong vertical current that too will emit a strong electromagnetic pulse.

A combination of these electromagnetic events will severely interrupt any kind of radio communications that depend on the conditions of an electromagnetic field. In addition, it will induce extremely high-tension currents in various conductors – including electric power lines, transformers, antennas, communication cables, transistors, circuit boards, etc. These high-tension currents will cause serious damage to all these items – you can expect that even thick high-voltage power lines will be damaged, not to mention smaller ones. Of course, such EMP will also damage beyond repair all sensitive electronic- and electric devices – such as computers, communication equipment, various electrical appliances, cars, train’s, and aircraft’s electronics, not to mention smaller and more sensitive microelectronic devices all of which will be instantly destroyed. You could roughly imagine that as a result of the EMP impact there would not remain anything electrical in workable condition around at all – it would appear that you come back to the first part of the 19th century when electricity had not been used yet.

Only a small fraction of the total energy of a nuclear explosion would be spent on creating its EMP (a truly negligible amount compared to that percentage of its total energy spent on creating of its air-blast wave and thermal radiation), but still, such EMP could achieve enormous power output of up to 100,000 Megawatt or more.

When it comes to a high-altitude nuclear explosion (i.e. in a situation when a nuclear or a thermonuclear charge is detonated well above the Earth’s troposphere) you will see even a more dangerous picture. Since there is no thick air there that is a pre-requisite for the two main destructive factors – air-blast wave and thermal radiation – the entire energy of such an over-atmospheric nuclear explosion that could have been spent in the atmospheric conditions on these two main factors, would be spent, instead, on the creation of the EMP alone. It is expected that roughly 100,000 times the energy would be spent on the EMP creation compared to the “normal” situation described above. In addition to the higher amounts of the energy spent on the EMP creation, gamma-rays would be able to travel to far greater distances in the exo-atmospheric conditions, because they would no longer be stopped by the air (because the air is very thin at those high altitudes).

A single powerful thermonuclear explosion detonated at an altitude of 500 km would create an ionized zone of about 2.500 km in radius and being as thick as 80 km. The Earth’s own magnetic field would whirl trajectories of electrons into a spiral, thus causing an extremely strong current lasting several microseconds. That would be enough to create an extremely powerful EMP that would affect all electronic equipment on the earth’s surface beneath this 2.500 km zone.

Actually, only two, or maximum three thermonuclear charges skillfully detonated in the rights spots above the U.S. territory would at once render useless absolutely all electrical and electronic devices in the entire United States, including its defensive radars and warning systems.

It is, by the way, one of the first options that would be used in an event of a major nuclear attack against the United States. First, submarines should launch several of their ballistic missiles with an intention of creating a strong EMP in order to damage all communication lines and so to prevent further transmitting of alarms to either civilians or military. Second – other submarines positioned not very far from U.S. territory would launch the rest of their missiles onto well-known stationary positions of ICBMs, as well as against other most important military targets including long run-ways that could be used by strategic bombers. And third – you can expect (in another 10-15 minutes) arriving warheads of ICBMs launched from across the oceans from their stationary positions – against the rest of important targets.

It seems that the U.S. strategic forces supposedly employ similar tactics when planning their own nuclear strikes against their adversaries.

Ironically, this property of nuclear explosions to create strong EMP is also used for defensive reasons. All those notorious anti-ballistic missile defenses that are being handsomely paid from the taxpayer's money actually have no way of physically intercepting ballistic missiles warheads that fall from space at hypersonic speeds. You can try to physically intercept a cruise missile, since it does not differ much from an ordinary plane, but you have no chance to do the same thing in regard to a ballistic missile because of both – its tremendous speed and the total absence of any atmosphere in where it usually travels.

All those notorious ABMs are primarily designed to defeat incoming adverse warheads by “friendly” thermonuclear explosions nearby. Such a “friendly” thermonuclear explosion that occurs in the over-atmospheric conditions will create a very strong EMP akin to the one described above. It supposes to damage electronic components of an attacking warhead – rendering useless its main electronic parts – its guidance system and its system that is responsible for detonating its actual thermonuclear charge. This is the only way so far available to protect oneself from ballistic missiles of one's enemies...

For example, commissioned in 1975, U.S. long-range anti-ballistic missile LIM-49 “Spartan” was armed with no more no less but 5 (f-i-v-e) m-e-g-a-ton thermonuclear warheads for purely defensive reasons.

Whether it is really workable or not is very difficult to say. It seems that it is not. Such system obviously would never be able to protect the entire country from a large number of attacking missiles and individual warheads in the case of a well-planned massive surprise nuclear strike. I think it is self-evident. In addition, such a “friendly” nuclear explosion with the strong EMP would apparently cause about the same amount of damage to the U.S.'s own electronics on the ground compared to an “unfriendly” nuclear explosion designed to the same effect.

To continue this idea, I would say that it is difficult to imagine what would actually cause more damage – a real enemy warhead that could partly incinerate just one city only, or a “friendly” EMP – that would render useless all electric and electronic devices in a territory of maybe 2.500 km (>1.550 miles) in radius, simultaneously causing to crash several thousand airborne aircraft, cutting power in hospitals, creating disasters on railways and in nuclear power plants, etc... Still, some big guys spend big money on the creations of such ABM systems... OK, it is actually not our business – let them continue to spend.

From now on, I guess, it is more or less clear to a reader what are the three main and the two additional destructive factors of a typical nuclear- or a thermonuclear blast.

Here some useful tables showing sizes of corresponding killing distances pertaining to main destructive factors of nuclear / thermonuclear blasts in the atmospheric conditions, and their remaining parameters calculated for various yields (no full data is available for mini-nuclear explosions, but only some):

However, we have considered above only four kinds of nuclear explosions – the one on the surface, the one slightly above the surface, the one slightly below the surface, and the one in the over-atmospheric (“exo-atmospheric”) conditions. There are more varieties of nuclear explosions, still. There are also underwater nuclear explosions, as well as deep underground nuclear explosions.

What is particularly important for us to learn, in order to understand the main point of this book, is about the deep underground nuclear explosion and its physical properties.

We already know that if we detonate a nuclear (or a thermonuclear) charge in the atmospheric conditions the major part of its tremendous energy would be spent on heating surrounding air that would result, in turn, firstly in the creation of mighty supersonic air-blast wave, and, secondly, in the creation of a large shining area of the orange color, akin to our sun, that would irradiate heat a/k/a “thermal radiation”.

In the same time we also know now that if we detonate such a nuclear (or a thermonuclear) charge on a very high altitude where air is thin or absent, it would not spend any energy on heating surrounding air, since there is actually nothing to heat. Because of this there would be neither air-blast wave, nor any thermal radiation created, which is self-evident.

Almost the entire energy of a nuclear explosion in such over-atmospheric conditions that would have been otherwise spent on heating of the air and consequently on creating air-blast wave and thermal radiation would be spent, instead, on creating an enormous Electromagnetic Pulse.

But what would happen if we bury some nuclear (or a thermonuclear) charge sufficiently deep underground, in a small hole and detonate it in these conditions? What would the entire tremendous energy of such an explosion be spent for?

Try to guess what will happen in that case. The tremendous energy released by the nuclear explosion in a form of X-rays would be spent, instead of heating the air, on heating of its rock surroundings. It will melt and vaporize certain quantities of rock until the entire energy of such an underground nuclear explosion is used up in such a process. That is it.

Such an explosion will cause neither any air-blast wave, nor any thermal radiation. Its ionizing radiation will be stopped by surrounding materials and thus it cannot travel up to the earth’s surface. The same thing will happen with the free electrons – all of them will be stopped by surrounding rock; thus no noticeable EMP could be created as well. However, such an underground explosion will still release great amounts of highly poisonous radio-nuclides resulting from chain reaction into the surrounding melted and vaporized rocks.

Secondly, even though it won’t cause any air-blast wave, it would cause some noticeable shock to the Earth akin to an earthquake that will travel to great distances across the Earth in the form of seismic waves. These will be definitely detected by various seismic control services in the same manner they usually detect natural earthquakes.

The resulting picture after such a deep underground nuclear explosion will look like this: there will be a cavity under the earth's surface that results from the disappearance of the vaporized rock. The size of this cavity directly depends on the explosive yield and on the hardness of surrounding soil and could be easily calculated.

Just for example – a 150 kiloton yield deep underground nuclear explosion could vaporize enough rock to create a cavity of up to 100 meters in diameter (50 meters in radius). Though, this cavity will be created not only by the actual disappearance of the rock, but also as a result of an additional expansion of the cavity by the high pressure of the vaporized rock in gaseous form inside the cavity seeking to expand the cavity to every direction.

Here is a table²⁰ that might help readers to imagine potential sizes of such cavities created by deep underground nuclear explosions of various yields. Quantities of vaporized and melted materials of various kinds (in tons) are shown on “per kiloton of yield” basis:

Rock type	Specific mass of vaporized material (in tons per kiloton yield)	Specific mass of the melted material (in tons per kiloton yield)
Dry granite	69	300 (±100)
Moist tuff (18-20% of water)	72	500 (± 150)
Dry tuff	73	200 - 300
Alluvium	107	650 (±50)
Rock salt	150	800

Such a cavity left by a recent nuclear explosion of ~150 kiloton will be extremely hot for at least a year and will contain extremely dangerous quantities of various radioactive materials in highly concentrated gaseous and liquid forms.

If a nuclear explosion is poorly contained, all these radioactive gases would quickly find their way through rock crevices onto the earth's surface and eventually – into its atmosphere. Moreover, it will happen in a relatively short period of time, thus causing noticeable and dangerous levels of radioactive contamination on the surface. In addition to it, some poorly contained underground nuclear explosions could even cause certain amounts of radioactively contaminated soil to go through onto the surface, thus adding radioactive dust that is the most dangerous thing.

If this explosion is well-calculated, it is considered to be “fully contained”, so it supposes not to release any noticeable amounts of radioactivity into the atmosphere and all those highly poisonous radioactive materials are supposed to remain inside the cavity. However, this is only in theory. On practice, even during those “fully contained” underground nuclear explosions, radioactive gases inside the deep underground cavity would, nonetheless, find their ways onto the Earth's surface and so – into its atmosphere. Though, it will happen in a much slower rate compare with the situation above. If in case of the “poorly contained” underground nuclear explosion all those radioactive gases could break into the Earth's surface at once, thus causing dangerous levels of radiation, in the case of “properly contained” nuclear explosions, the radioactive gases would seep slowly, in little quantities, moreover, being somehow “filtered” on the way up by thick layers of soil.

Thus, even during those “fully contained” underground nuclear explosions, it is traditionally presumed that the dangerous radioactive gases could (and would) seep onto the Earth's surface during about two weeks little-by-little, and therefore it is considered to be dangerous to remain about the spot of such explosion for any prolonged periods of time.

Of course, the amounts of radioactivity that remain inside the deep cavities left by underground nuclear explosions would represent a major danger to health. Therefore, no research could be undertaken to study effects of such an underground nuclear explosion (even if someone wears heavy protective gear) until at least three years would pass. Only after then, some studies of it could be undertaken, but all researchers must wear protective gears, and, besides, they must carefully calculate amounts of radioactivity and their time spent there in order to avoid damage to their health.

I hope this extra chapter indeed helped some readers to educate themselves at least a little bit in regard to nuclear weapons and it will be easier for them from now on to understand the rest of this book.

“Mini-nukes” – a brief introduction.

I decided to insert here this small chapter, because it seems to me that in the course of narrative in this book we will always encounter these “mini-nukes”, references to them, suspicions of them, and either real or imaginary consequences of their supposed use. I think it would be a big miss not to enlighten a reader of what that “mini-nuke” is in advance.

In the United States they normally refer to it as “SADMs” – which stands for “Special Atomic Demolition Munitions”. Some people mistakenly read this abbreviation as “Small Atomic Demolition Munitions” – as opposed to “MADM” – which stands for “Medium Atomic Demolition Munitions”.

The term “mini-nuke” is obviously an unofficial term, and probably it is not correct from the logical point of view. Nevertheless, it is being widely used, so we have no choice than to use it as well. Besides the term “mini-nuke” – which generally refers to a portable nuclear charge of 1 kiloton in TNT yield, there is also another term: “micro-nuke”. The latter one purports to refer to even smaller nuclear charges – probably with their yields of around 0.01 kiloton (i.e. 10 tons of a TNT equivalent).

There is yet another term: “suitcase-nuke” – which probably refers to the latest generation of “mini-nukes” small enough to fit into an attaché-case. It should be noted, though, that neither of these terms is logically correct: a modern hydrogen warhead is actually small enough to fit into a medium-sized “suitcase”. Such a thermonuclear warhead would be capable of destroying an entire city with a population of a couple of million people, because its yield is equal to 20 “Hiroshima-sized” bombs. However, it would not be logical to call such a thing a “suitcase-nuke”, despite it could probably fit into a suitcase. In any case, it should be understood that all those terms are conventional and colloquial rather than exact and legal.

The first generation of those “mini-nukes” with reasonably small yields – 2-5 kiloton or even less – were developed in the ‘50s. They were conceived without any malicious reason whatsoever. The first “mini-nukes” were designed to help combat engineers (otherwise called “sappers” or “pioneers”) to demolish large objects, which were simply too large to be demolished by any reasonable amount of conventional explosives – such as, for example, big bridges.

Later it was found out that probably the best tactical use for the “mini-nukes” was to deploy them in order to stop or to hinder advances of enemy forces in critical sectors of own defense. For example, a “mini-nuke” detonated in the middle of strategically important tunnel would without any doubt stop the enemy’s advance for a considerable amount of time, while it would never be possible to target the middle of such a tunnel with any other means of delivery of nuclear weapons – except by only bringing a nuclear charge in by hand. Those “mini-nukes” could also be used to demolish other important large objects in order to harm the enemy by one means or another. Primarily it is: dams, bridges, electric power stations, various port’s installations, rail-way junctions, large reinforced buildings, etc.

Thus, the first generation of “mini-nukes” was intended for more or less “honest” use and the “mini-nukes” were earmarked to be supplied mostly to various engineering forces. Those first “mini-nukes” mostly looked like tubes 15-20 cm in diameter, almost 1.5 meters long, and they weighed over 70 kg.

They were the most primitive nuclear devices in which the so-called “cannon scheme” – the most primitive solution for the nuclear weapons – was implemented: the critical mass of Uranium 235 was separated into two sub-critical pieces, positioned in opposite ends of the tube. A smaller piece (a “bullet”) was then shot by using explosives, instead of gun-powder, towards the bigger piece (a “target”) within a barrel, which was the main part of such a “mini-nuke”. When a small piece met the big piece, the mass of Uranium from sub-critical became critical and the nuclear explosion followed. Such a “mini-nuke”, considering its shape and its weight, was designed to be carried by two soldiers. It did not have any variable yield (i.e. it could only explode at maximum yield – let’s say, 1 kiloton or 2 kiloton) and it was not really convenient for any “hidden” or “dishonest” use – such as nowadays mini-nuclear bombings.

Since it was designed to be used exclusively in one’s own defense, it was nothing else than the weapons of defense – without any way to use it in an offensive. It could be even scarcely called “weapons” at all since it was not actually intended to kill enemy soldiers; it was more a military demolition charge than a kind of weaponry.

In the ‘60s, there appeared a new generation of “mini-nukes” where a so-called “implosive scheme” was implemented. They looked like a large pot – so, despite their heavy weight (still well over 50 kg), they could be successfully carried by one strong soldier. This second generation of “mini-nukes” has already boasted variable yields – for example, 1 kiloton nuclear charge could be set to explode at 0.8, 0.5, 0.3, etc. – and down to 0.2 kiloton – which was at minimum equal to only 200 tons of TNT. The second generation of “mini-nukes” was not so “honestly” intended as the first one: besides combat engineers, it was also earmarked for specially trained military saboteurs – who could secretly deliver such a thing into the enemy’s rear and to install it right at the most vulnerable part of enemy defense. In the United States for example, there were special groups of two soldiers each created, which were continuously trained to secretly deliver and install SADMs in various circumstances – parachute delivery, under-water delivery etc. That is how the second generation of “mini-nukes” from weapons of defense was elevated to the weapons of offence.

In reply to the U.S. efforts, Soviet saboteurs from KGB and GRU managed to secretly install a number of “mini-nukes” right inside the United States own territory, not counting Western Europe where they installed them too. It is believed that up to this day an unspecified number of Soviet “mini-nukes” remains installed inside the United States, and, despite their obviously expired shelf-lives, they remain in workable condition. It is known also that in several instances these “mini-nukes” have been transported in the disguise of diplomatic mail and kept in diplomatic premises.

It shall be mentioned also that such a concept of “mini-nukes” usage was immediately loved by some third-world dictators – particularly by the then dictator of Uganda General Idi Amin. Idi Amin sincerely believed that all Western imperialist countries unfairly enjoyed their unearned wealth (which they primarily earned by robbing their former colonies in the 19th and 20th centuries), and therefore he advanced a concept of a “nuclear blackmail”. According to his views, several advanced third-world countries should unite their efforts in development of clandestine nuclear weapons; to produce a large number of “mini-nukes”, which should be delivered in the disguise of diplomatic mail into embassies to those “rich” countries. Idi Amin saw himself then as the chief nuclear blackmailer – who would become a kind of modern “Robin Hood”, demanding fair re-distribution of wealth from the “rich” nations to the poor ones.

The second one was probably the last generation of overt development of “mini-nukes” – because soon after they were prohibited whatsoever and as such all “mini-nukes” were supposedly (means “officially”) de-commissioned. The United States reportedly put these SADMs out of commission in 1968, while the Soviet Union did not even need to officially de-commission them, because it has never officially admitted to have any “mini-nukes” in the first instance. From now on, there has been only clandestine development of “mini-nukes” – in circumvention of the official prohibition. Since the second generation of them, the “mini-nukes”, as a class of weapons, were relegated to the same status as chemical weapons and biological weapons – officially they are prohibited, officially nobody has them, but in reality everybody has them and even continues to develop them. However, officially “mini-nukes” supposedly “do not exist”.

In the ‘70s and ‘80s, “mini-nukes” became much smaller than before. Due to the usage of Plutonium-239 (and reportedly even some other rare nuclear materials), instead of Uranium-235, it became possible to achieve weight of the third generation of “mini-nukes” as only several kilograms. Firstly, it was slightly over 25 kg, and then it became even smaller with the development of precise technologies. It is believed that now it could be as light as slightly over 6 kg and as small as a hand-grenade. This generation of “mini-nukes” could be sincerely called “suitcase nukes” – since one could really fit one of them into an attaché-case. (Though, you could obviously fit into an attaché-case a standard U.S.-made 155mm- or a Soviet-made 152mm atomic artillery shell, which existed in the beginning of the ‘60s; that is why the very concept of using the “suit-case nuke” term is slightly controversial.)

The explosive power of such portable nuclear munitions could be up to 1 kiloton or even more, and all modern “mini-nukes” have variable yields. It is claimed that now they could explode not only at minimum of 0.1 kt (equivalent of 100 tons of TNT), but even at 0.01 and 0.015 kt – at two additional “micro-modes” equal to only 10 and 15 tons of TNT respectively.

Apparently, there are also bigger “mini-nukes” which could achieve yields of up to 15 kiloton (they also have variable yield) and they are still smaller in size in comparison with those 1 kiloton “mini-nukes” of the second generation. Moreover, there are thermonuclear charges which could easily destroy a medium-sized city, which are small and light enough, so that one could lift them with his two hands and hide them in a suit-case. However, these are not prohibited and not even called “mini-nukes”; because it is actually not a size of a portable nuclear device, and not even its weight that makes it “mini” – it is its yield only. Generally speaking, anything which is less than 5 kiloton in yield is called “mini-nuke” and is prohibited.

“Why it is prohibited?” one might ask? The main reason is because it contradicts the very concept of nuclear weapons.

The main concept of nuclear weapons is this: they are not going to be used in reality. Here we come closer to the real reasons behind the prohibition of the “mini-nukes”. Why did they decide to prohibit the “mini-nukes”? Because the “mini-nukes”, due to their relatively small explosive power, do not fit into the main modern concept of nuclear weapons: they cannot serve as means of a nuclear deterrent. They are simply too small for that purpose. Yet the “mini-nukes” are too dangerous, because they could be used clandestinely in some none-nuclear conflict being unnoticed by controlling services.

The “mini-nukes”, if used in a local conflict, would give their user an extremely unfair advantage over enemy. Let’s say the United States starts a war with Canada and begins secretly killing Canadian soldiers with “mini-nukes” claiming it was “large conventional bombs”. Would it be fair, considering that Canada abstained from producing nuclear weapons of her own, while being definitely capable of making nuclear weapons from the technological point of view? This is one of the main reasons to prohibit the “mini-nukes”.

The second reason is that the sheer possession of “mini-nukes” in one’s arsenal might encourage him to secretly use them – because of their being too small and not too powerful, it might seem to one that to put them to use does not actually elevate an ordinary armed conflict to a level of a nuclear conflict. As such, the “mini-nukes” might be put to use one day with relative ease. To make it sound official, we could say that adding low-yield warheads to the world’s nuclear inventory simply makes their eventual use more likely.

Because low-yield nuclear weapons blur the distinction between nuclear and conventional war, they are prohibited. While the nuclear weapons in a common sense are unlikely to be ever used, the “mini-nukes” (if any) are exactly vice-versa: they are very likely to be used. And that is exactly why all nuclear weapons of less than 5 kiloton in TNT yield are officially prohibited.

Despite the fact that they are officially prohibited, the “mini-nukes” are being secretly developed, primarily because they could be effectively used in assassinations of important people. Thus, reasons behind their clandestine development are about the same as reasons behind development of some effective poisons intended for clandestine use.

Readers, who remember the history of the World War II, might probably recollect one well-known assassination attempt against Adolph Hitler: a certain army officer brought a portfolio full of high-explosives equipped with a timing detonator into Hitler’s meeting room and “forgot” this portfolio right besides Hitler. However, when it actually went off, Hitler was not killed, because there was a huge leg of a billiard table between him and the blast that saved his life. This is the problem – you cannot inflict really big damage, and, what is the most important – you cannot expect to inflict any guaranteed damage with small amounts of conventional explosives. A “mini-nuke” will eliminate any uncertainties – if it is detonated in a big room, or even in an adjacent room, or even at a basement of a small building, it would guarantee you that a targeted person or a group will be killed with a probability of exactly 100%.

Thus, “mini-nukes” are needed for some reasons. They supposedly are not available, but, unfortunately, they are – exactly as those highly effective poisons are. Moreover, “mini-nukes” are widely used today. There were at least 50 well-known “mini-nuclear” bombings during the last 15 years (most of them against the United States); plus there was an unspecified number of “mini-nuclear” bombings which went largely unnoticed. Some of the most famous “mini-nuclear” bombings – particularly those having direct relevance to the 9/11 affair – will be discussed later in this book. However, to begin with, it is important only to understand that “mini-nukes” do exist in This World, and that they are available to some rogue guys.

Which countries could produce “mini-nukes”? “Mini-nukes” of the first generation, since they are quite primitive, could be theoretically made by anyone in his kitchen as long as one has in his possession over 50 kg of highly enriched Uranium-235 along with some specific knowledge. It does not actually require any advanced technology (though a certain level of technology is still apparently required). Such a thing could theoretically be produced not only by a “rogue” government, but even by some determined group of individuals in any country. However, there would not be any guarantee that such a “mini-nuke” would really explode as “mini” and that its yield would not accidentally exceed that of the Hiroshima-bomb.

“Mini-nukes” of the second generation could be theoretically (again t-h-e-o-r-e-t-i-c-a-l-l-y) produced by India, and by China, but probably not by Pakistan and definitely not by North Korea. Some elder nuclear players – such as France, the UK, and Israel would probably be able to produce them as well.

“Mini-nukes” of the third generation could only be produced by the United States, Russia, Israel, and, probably, by France. Of course, highly-developed countries such as Japan, Sweden, Germany, or Canada would apparently be able to produce the third generation-, not to say about the second generation “mini-nukes” if they really want to, but these countries do not produce any nuclear weapons – at least, right now.

Let us conclude. A modern “mini-nuke” is a portable nuclear charge, designed to explode at variable yields, at minimum of 0,01kt (10 tons of TNT), or 0.015kt (15 tons of TNT); as well as 0,1kt (100 tons of TNT); 0.2kt (200 tons of TNT); 0.3kt; 0,4kt; 0,5kt etc. – up to 1 kiloton (1000 tons of TNT) and even more – up to several kilotons. The actual yield is determined by its end-user, who could set the required yield right before the explosion.

Despite the traditional concept, which suggests that a “mini-nuke” is something of 1 kiloton yield, some “mini-nukes” could be as powerful as up to even 5 kiloton in TNT yield (they also feature smaller variable yields). It is rumored that there are also “micro-nukes” supposedly as small as AA-size battery – which explode only at several tons of TNT yields (at least, so was claimed by Condoleezza Rice and by some other officials). However, the author of these lines has never heard about any one like that from any specialist (irresponsible conspiracy theorists and their ravings are not counted), that is why he doubts their alleged existence.

However, we do not even need such miniature nukes in our case: what we will need for our consideration for future understanding of this book are those “mini-nukes” that are about the size of a 0.5L bottle or slightly more – of a size of a 2L bottle.

These 3rd-generation “mini-nukes” could only come from the USA, Russia or the former Soviet Union, from France, or from Israel. By no means could they be made in India, China, Pakistan, Brazil, North Korea, South Africa, Iran, Iraq, Egypt, Libya, Syria, Somalia, Sudan, not even to say about Afghanistan. If someone sincerely believes that Saddam Hussein and Osama bin Laden could produce such a “mini-nuke”, it is better to believe then that Osama bin Laden – together with Mullah Mohammed Omar – could land on the Moon – to repeat a corresponding feat of the Americans of the late ‘60s. Such a scientific feat as the Moon landing would be much more likely for the so-called “Muslim terrorists”, especially considering their level of development of precise technology in their respective countries and the true state of nuclear science in their respective societies as well.

There is one more detail, which you might probably find interesting. Heavy “mini-nukes” of the second generation and small “mini-nukes” of the third generation can be relatively easily recognized by inquirers even after their explosions. An old “mini-nuke” normally uses at least some Uranium-238 in its reflector – so after a nuclear explosion Uranium-238 could be found in its residue. Small modern “mini-nukes” do not use any Uranium at all, so nothing like that could be found in their residue after the explosion, but only Plutonium alone. So if it is found that some mini-nuclear bombing has been done using the latest generation “mini-nuke” and it is still blamed on “Al-Qaeda” or “Hezbollah”, a reasonable person shall understand immediately that he is being cheated.

People in developing countries could still theoretically produce a crude “kitchen-made” nuclear device of the most primitive “cannon-type” design if they could only obtain some 50 kg of highly enriched Uranium-235. However, it is absolutely impossible that any kind of cottage-industry would ever be able to produce any workable nuclear charge made out of Plutonium. Even if so-called “terrorists” manage to obtain some Plutonium-239 from the black-market, they would never ever be able to make any nuclear bomb out of it, not even to say about a “mini-nuke”, because the technology required to produce Plutonium-based nuclear charges is too precise. A workable Plutonium-based nuclear charge could only be manufactured by a developed country within frames of an extensive national program.

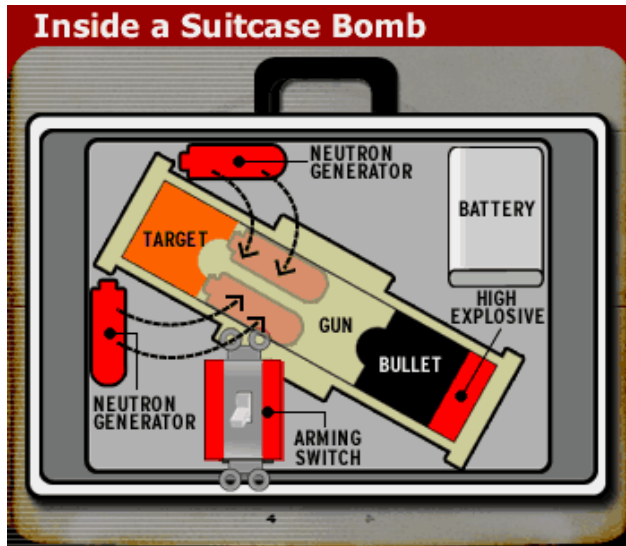

I think it is necessary to provide basic knowledge in regard to the usage of the two nuclear materials – Uranium-235 and Plutonium-239 – in construction of nuclear charges. It seems that nuclear ignorance in this respect is widespread.

Here is, for example, what Americans believe a “mini-nuke” supposedly looks like – the below picture was found on this website: <http://www.nationalterroralert.com/suitcasenuke/> . This webpage bears a file name: “Suitcase Nukes – Homeland Security National Terror Alert” and it was apparently intended to increase the public awareness of potential nuclear threats coming from the so-called “international terror”. Here is one of the “pearls of speech” from that webpage:

“A suitcase nuke or suitcase bomb is a very compact and portable nuclear weapon and could have the dimensions of 60 x 40 x 20 centimeters or 24 x 16 x 8 inches. The smallest possible bomb-like object would be a single critical mass of plutonium (or U-233) at maximum density under normal conditions.

The Pu-239 weighs 10.5 kg and is 10.1 cm across. It doesn't take much more than a single critical mass to cause significant explosions ranging from 10-20 tons..."

They are too naïve, these guys... Are they really sure that in order to get such precise micro-yields as only 0.01-0.02 kiloton it “doesn't take much more than a single critical mass”? And are they really sure that such a device as shown in this picture could really be made out of Plutonium-239? They are way too naïve, these guys from the Homeland Security...

I guess that from the picture above it is clear that this design represents the very design of the old, first generation “mini-nuke” (which looked like a long tube – as I described it above) and also similar to the first primitive atomic bomb dropped by the Americans on Hiroshima in 1945. Two sub-critical masses – “bullet” and “target” – are shot towards each other and once they join together their combined mass gets critical. It is called a “cannon-design” (sometimes, also called a “gun-type”) of the nuclear weapons design. In fact, in the ridiculous design above only the “bullet” is designed to be shot, while the “target” remains stationary, since the “designers” did not place any “high explosive” charge behind the target.

The problem is that Uranium-235 boasts a critical mass of about 50 kg. This means that a “bullet” and a “target” when they joined together must reach some over-50 kg mass; otherwise, such a nuclear charge won't explode.

The picture above shows the most primitive, so-called “canon design” of a nuclear charge. It seems that to make such a “crude” charge is easy, but it only seems so. The problem is that when you try to join two pieces of Uranium, once you get them close to each other and their corresponding “neutron fields” overlap this will cause a “slow” nuclear reaction to start. This “slow” nuclear reaction will instantly heat up these two pieces of Uranium, and when you try to get them even closer – they will be overheated, melted, and vaporized.

You will never have a chance to actually join these two pieces – they will be always vaporized before you could get them to physically touch each other. Besides themselves, these two pieces of Uranium will also vaporize any joining device and their environment. In order to really join the two sub-critical masses of Uranium into one over-critical mass required for the “fast” nuclear reaction (alias “nuclear explosion”) you need to move them towards each other pretty fast. The required “joining speed” for Uranium 235 is nothing less than 2.5 km/sec (over 1.5 miles/sec). Only in this case will you have a chance to join these two pieces before the “slow” nuclear reaction will vaporize them.

Even the most advanced modern long-barreled anti-tank- or anti-aircraft cannon could speed up its corresponding [and only sub-caliber] shell to slightly over 1,200 m/sec (slightly over 0.75 miles/sec) and not any faster. While typical speeds of rifle/machinegun bullets are in between 700 to 900 m/sec. This is just to illustrate that to reach speeds of 2,500 m/sec in such a short barrel as shown in the above picture, with such a huge chunk of metal acting as the “bullet”, is quite a difficult task, if not an impossible one. Still, it is possible to achieve, if you use, instead of ordinary gun-powder, a well-calculated combination of “slow” and “fast” explosives, and a barrel – slightly longer than the one shown in the above picture.

It is possible to imagine that Osama bin Laden in his famous cave in Afghanistan would produce such a “crude” nuke (if only someone would be so kind as to supply to him over 50 kg of pure Uranium-235), but by no means would such an imaginary “mighty muslim bomb” be “mini”. Osama would most probably need to use a cut off piece of an anti-aircraft cannon’s barrel (as the Americans themselves used in their first Hiroshima bomb) and such a primitive nuclear charge would never ever fit into any suitcase – as shown above. At best case it would fit into a middle-sized truck.

All those scary “suit-case nukes” are presumed to be made out of Plutonium only, because Plutonium-239 (or “weapon-grade Plutonium”) in its most common crystallization phase has the critical mass of less than 11 kg. This is five times less than the critical mass of Uranium. The problem with Plutonium-239, however, is that it has a much higher power intensity (or reactivity) than that of Uranium-235. Therefore, you need speeds of about 12 km/sec (~7.5 miles/sec) to actually join two sub-critical pieces of Plutonium into one over-critical before the two pieces would be overheated and vaporized.

If you in your kitchen, or Osama bin Laden in his famous cave could still theoretically achieve speeds of 2.5 km/sec – required to join the two pieces of Uranium-235 (by using a well-calculated mixture of TNT and RDX instead of gun-powder), no mortal in This World would ever be able to achieve speeds of 12 km/sec – required to join the two pieces of Plutonium-239... Thus, the abovementioned method of joining the two sub-critical masses of Plutonium-239 into one over-critical mass does not work. It is technically impossible. And this unfortunate fact is well-known to all specialists in nuclear weapons.

How to make Plutonium to produce a nuclear explosion? Scientists were lucky to notice that speed of detonation waves inside metals is about 6 km/sec. Thus, if you detonate two conventional charges on both sides of a metallic item and let the two detonation waves propagate towards each other – their combined speed would be exactly 12 km/sec. This could be used to compress Plutonium-239 material into a critical mass. This particular invention was the only solution that allowed nuclear scientists to get around the abovementioned limitation and to be able to detonate Plutonium-239.

Plutonium-based charges do not use that primitive “canon-design” (a/k/a “gun-type”), as shown above. They use, instead, a so-called “implosion scheme” – where a slightly sub-critical mass of Plutonium-239 is being compressed into a critical mass by well-calculated simultaneous explosions of conventional explosive materials, charges of which are positioned equally around the Plutonium nucleus.

Practically, the Plutonium nucleus in real nuclear weapons is being compressed in such a manner not from only two directions, but from every direction – where charges of conventional materials are positioned in sphere around the Plutonium in the same manner as sections of a typical football.

How it might look like, you may imagine from the below picture (an official picture, by the way) which purports to reveal the supposed design of the infamous “Fatman” – an alleged Plutonium-based second American “atomic bomb” allegedly dropped on the Japanese city of Nagasaki on August 9, 1945.

An official claim as to the alleged design of the so-called “Fatman” – the alleged “Nagasaki bomb”.

Here figures 6 and 7 show us pentagonal (12 units around the core) and hexagonal (20 units around the core) explosive lenses respectively; figure 12 – an actual Plutonium nuclear material supposedly in Delta crystallization phase (claimed to be 6.2 kg only) that is supposed to be imploded in order to reach an overcritical condition – as described above.

As you could probably guess, the alleged “Fatman” (that reportedly weighed, by the way, well over 2.5 tons, despite its actual nucleus which was supposedly a mere 6 kg) has never existed in reality. It is pretty clear today that it was a bogus device designed to swindle the gullible U.S. Government – if you look carefully at all ravings of 1945 Manhattan charlatans with eyes of a person armed with the latest available knowledge. While it was quite easy to dupe simpletons in 1945, it is not so easy to continue to do it today – in 2013. If you try to read with your eyes OPEN (I mean “to read between the lines”) officially published accounts of the alleged “atomic bombing of Nagasaki” – especially comparing it with officially published accounts of the atomic bombing of Hiroshima – you will understand what I mean. The published descriptions of the August 9, 1945, “second atomic bombing” bear striking resemblance to the descriptions of how the aluminum “terrorist planes” managed to penetrate steel perimeters of the WTC, and how kerosene managed to melt those steel perimeters (along with the cores) into fluffy microscopic dust. Just read all that is available about the Nagasaki bombing with your eyes open and you will get the point.

Anyhow, the lay-out of the implosion scheme shown on the above picture of the alleged “Nagasaki bomb” is quite realistic. This is the only way to make Plutonium-239 explode.

Now, at last, when you understand how to detonate Plutonium-239, try to imagine whether it is easy to make a “suit-case nuke” based on the implosion scheme or not; and what level of technology is required, considering that the alleged “Fatman” claimed to have weight well over 2,500 kg.

The problem of the “implosion scheme”, however, is that the implosion charges (or how they call them “implosion lenses”) should be precisely calculated and precisely wrought – and this you can achieve in neither your kitchen, nor inside a cave in Afghanistan.

Moreover, detonators that would detonate all these conventional explosive charges around the Plutonium nucleus, have to be precisely synchronized – practically on a microsecond level (even millisecond-level synchronization is not enough). If these implosion charges would detonate even slightly asynchronously, the detonation wave which supposes to compress the Plutonium from every direction, would, instead, destroy the Plutonium nucleus and would render your nuclear charge useless.

Only a few developed countries possess such a precise technology which may enable them to produce Plutonium-based nuclear weapons. And only a couple of countries are capable of miniaturizing these nuclear weapons to a size suitable to fit into an attaché-case (taking into consideration, of course, that in such a case not a “canon scheme” shown on the “suit-case” picture, but an “implosion scheme” is used).

To illustrate how difficult it is to miniaturize such a Plutonium-based charge to a size needed to fit it into an attaché-case, here is one good example. India has embarked on the development of Plutonium-based nuclear weapons (since India does not have any Uranium and all its nuclear weapons are Plutonium-based) as early as at the beginning of the ‘50s. However, despite its considerable financial and intellectual resources, allocated within frames of an extensive (and high-priority) national program, India was not able to come up with any really workable Plutonium-based nuclear charge before the mid-70s.

This is, by the way, the very proof why the alleged Plutonium-based “Fatman” allegedly dropped on Nagasaki on 9 of August, 1945, was just the “alleged” one. If you are a realistic person (and I hope you are), you should understand that it was technically impossible for those Manhattan Doctor Quacks to come up with such a precision device in 1945 – amidst the war and taking into consideration their true scientific and technological potential at that time.

Anyhow, the first really workable Indian nuclear charge detonated underground in 1974 was very far from being “mini” – the Indians had to use a crane to lift it, since it weighed over one and half ton. Its actual implosion scheme featured 12 explosive lenses weighing over 100 kg each (despite that the actual Plutonium nucleus – i.e. the main component of the charge was less than 10 kg). And it was in 1974 – i.e. 20 years after India had first embarked on its nuclear weapons research...

The first Indian nuclear charge was not a precise device either – it was meant to explode at something between 10 and 13 kilotons, while it was claimed that it achieved a yield of only 8 kiloton. Add here that the first workable Indian nuclear charge was not a combat-quality either. It was of a laboratory quality. It was a long way to go then – to transform their scarcely being able to explode whatsoever first nuclear charge into a highly-reliable, well-calculated nuclear weapon suitable to be used in a real ballistic missile's warhead.

Do not forget also, that India is quite an advanced country that boasts a very high scientific potential, as well as a certain level of high technology. The world science and technology (fruits of which were available for the Indians) made huge steps forward – if you compare the situation of the mid-'40s with the situation of the mid-'60s, for example, not to mention the earlier '70s. It means that in 1974 the Indian researchers could afford themselves much more compared to those members of secretive Manhattan project during the last months of the World War II. Do not doubt that Indian researchers could afford more expenses as well. They definitely got more cash from the Indian Government on their program than the 1945 Manhattan charlatans got from the U.S. Government on their scam.

Still, it is quite obvious that even up to this day (as in 2013) India is not advanced enough to produce any "mini-nuke". At best, India could produce nuclear warheads (that weigh several hundreds kilograms) for some medium-sized strategic ballistic missiles.

Israel is much more advanced than India when it comes to the precise technology. It has the most efficient intelligence apparatus, capable of stealing any kind of technological and military secrets (not to say that it is capable of stealing ready nuclear weapons that could be used as an example to follow). Thus, considering that its own nuclear weapons, which were being intensively developed starting from the mid-'60s, were primarily Plutonium-based, Israel is the only "rogue" state capable of producing the second and the third generations' "mini-nukes" – in addition to the United States, Russia, and possibly France. (It is not actually known for sure if France is capable of producing them or not, but it is definitely confirmed that Israel is.)

Forget about the notorious "nuclear ambitions" of Osama bin Laden that are so shamelessly used by spin-doctors to scare simpletons. Neither him, nor Saddam Hussein, nor Kim Jong Il, nor late Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini or his followers in Iran, would ever be able to produce any "mini-nuke" on their own.

The alleged "mini-nuke" depicted on it cannot be made out of Uranium, because it won't be possible to set 50 kg of Uranium to be able to explode in this kind of scheme: its barrel is too short; and the probable weight of such a "suit-case nuke" would be simply too heavy to lift (unless you are a superman from a Hollywood thriller capable of firing a hand-held six-barreled machine-gun, of course). On the other hand, such a "mini-nuke" cannot be made out of Plutonium, because it is not possible to cause Plutonium into a chain reaction using such a "cannon-scheme" as shown, since it is well-known that Plutonium explodes only in an "implosion scheme".

Although hidden from the plebeians, there was in fact intense nuclear hysteria unleashed after all those well-known mini-nuclear "car"-bombings in the '90s, and especially after the supposed "mini-nuking" of the World Trade Center on 9/11. The U.S. Government attempted to somehow blame this "mini-nuclear" terror on allegedly stolen Soviet "suitcase nukes". These, according to their hysterical cries, allegedly ended up in the hands of so-called "Al-Qaeda" and other "terrorist" organizations.

Those alleged "suit-case nukes" were claimed to be stolen from Soviet nuclear arsenals in the beginning of the '90s during a period of general confusion regarding transformation of the former Soviet Union into Russia and corresponding confusion of transferring nuclear arsenals from former Soviet Republics to the newly created Russian armed forces.

To enhance this claim, two well-known political clowns – Russian Generals Lev Rokhlin and Alexander Lebed – were deployed. They came up with well-publicized "public revelations" that well over 100 of these "suitcase-nukes" were allegedly "stolen".

For example, in an interview with the newsmagazine "Sixty Minutes" General Lebed said:

"I'm saying that more than a hundred weapons out of the supposed number of 250 are not under the control of the armed forces of Russia. I don't know their location. I don't know whether they have been destroyed or whether they are stored or whether they've been sold or stolen, I don't know."

Just try to analyze what he is trying to say here from a logical point of view: “I don’t know, I don’t know, I don’t know” – in fact this is a very high class of cheating. You cannot even catch him with his lie, because he “does not know”. Yet, almost every simpleton in the world immediately believed that the so-called “suit-case nukes” were indeed stolen and there is not even the slightest doubt about it...

After their strange “revelations”, both of these two Generals imitated their “unexplainable” deaths, so it became very “obvious” for the simpletons that the alleged Soviet “suit-case nukes” were indeed “stolen” – and that everyone who dares to speak up about the “truth” shall soon die some “unexplainable” death.

This is how a real mini-nuke looks like. H-912 transport container for Mk-54 SADM; U.S.-made.

Does the nuke on the picture above look like a “suit-case”? A Soviet-made one looked about the same – simply because the Soviet nuclear weapons designers did not bother to invent their own device; they preferred to copy the American one... It is self-evident that this kind of device could only use an “implosion scheme” – considering its mere shape.

This info is for those who believe the “late” General Lebed’s ridiculous claims.

It shall be known also that a primitive “cannon-type” scheme is indeed PRIMITIVE, so it cannot be used in mini-nukes by definition, because it simply cannot offer any small yields due to its primitivism, while mini-nukes apparently require not just small yields, but precisely small, moreover, variable yields.

I guess the majority of simpletons, who have already come to believe this beautiful nonsense, will not change their opinions anyway. However, I hope that reasonable people will if I enlighten them a little bit on this topic.

So, here it is: the Organization, which was responsible in the former Soviet Union for the safe-keeping of the entire nuclear arsenal of the state, has never ever lost any control of even the smallest piece of nuclear weaponry entrusted to it. This particular Organization was staffed with very serious and very responsible people, who understood their responsibilities very well. When these people at the end of the ‘80s noticed that some parts of the Soviet Union began to grow politically unstable, they immediately proposed to their superiors to evacuate all nuclear arsenal bases from such potentially unstable locations into central Russia and so it was done.

Well before the Soviet Union ceased to exist all its nuclear arsenal bases were re-located into safe places within Russian territorial jurisdiction.

Several strategic warheads issued to end-users (i.e. attached to ballistic missiles at service or to strategic bombers at service) indeed found themselves within territorial jurisdictions of several former Soviet Republics immediately after dissolution of the Soviet Union. However, all of them were soon returned to the Russian Federation without any loss. Even during their being outside of Russia, these strategic warheads were never actually controlled by any local military or by any local government. All of them remained under firm control of the then still indivisible CIS Strategic Forces – commanded by some specially appointed top General, who continued to perform his duties for a couple of years more as if the former Soviet Union still existed. Only after all strategic weapons were securely transferred into the Russian jurisdiction, Russia began to reform the former Soviet Strategic Forces into her own.

What about tactical nuclear weapons? (not even to say about “mini-nukes” – which are officially prohibited, by the way, and the mere fact of their proven existence is tantamount to a great political scandal) – there was no chance that such things could have been stolen from anywhere. The point is that neither of such tactical nuclear weapons was actually issued to any end-user and therefore all of this nuclear weaponry was always kept in a very secure manner in the abovementioned nuclear arsenal bases. It was not possible to steal any Soviet “mini-nuke” even in the darkest times of the former Soviet Union, or in the earliest times of new Russia, and any claim to the contrary is nothing but a blatant lie.

Neither of those two supposedly “late” Russian Generals – who “revealed” to the gullible public the awful “secret” of allegedly stolen “suitcase nukes” has ever had any relevance to the Soviet nuclear weapons, and most probably none of them have ever seen any nuclear weapons at all in his life. And it is highly unlikely that any of these two had any access to the Soviet or Russian nuclear weapons registrar – in order to get to the very source of their ridiculous and seemingly “unexplainable” claims.

Interestingly, in the light of the recent nuclear hysteria of the U.S. Government, the seemingly “unexplainable” claims of these two clowns appear, in fact, quite explainable. These irresponsible public “revelations” of the two supposedly “late” Russian Generals were made with the sole reason – to somehow mask the real supplier of “mini-nukes” to so-called “international terrorism”. They were merely hired by “someone” to claim such a thing and to “die” later – to enhance their “revelations” by the fact of their “unexplainable deaths” (a cheap and a very common trick, routinely used by the so-called “good guys”, by the way). These two “late” guys got good money for their job and were resettled within frames of the notorious “witness protection program”. One must not have any slightest doubt in this regard.

In fact, there is one more “Doctor Quack”, this time an officially live one – a certain well-known former GRU Colonel Stanislav Lunev. This Soviet GRU defector now “consults” the U.S. Congress on the supposed “nuclear dangers” in regard to allegedly stolen Soviet “mini-nukes”. From amongst the most famous claims of this charlatan is this: he claims that Soviet suit-case nukes were allegedly Plutonium-based canon-type (Remember? Now, even you know that Plutonium could only explode in an implosion-scheme due to its high reactivity and the canon-type won’t work!).

Lunev. The suitcase nuke a la Lunev is supposedly based on Plutonium-239 core that was allegedly designed as a primitive “gun-type”.

Another ridiculous claim of Lunev before the U.S. Congress was that he tried to defend supposedly “late” General Lebed’s claims saying that those allegedly “missing in registrar” suitcase nukes were in fact secretly installed in the U.S. territory during the Cold War times.

Try to implement your logic when analyzing this particular claim. What do you think: if the “mini-nukes” were really issued to end-users to be permanently installed in the enemy territory (without any chance to be ever returned) – would they be accounted for in the registrar as “missing”, or as “used”/“spent”???

Yes, some “mini-nukes” have been obviously installed in the U.S. during the Cold War, but not even one of them had ever been stolen from either the former Soviet- or from Russian nuclear arsenals. You can be absolutely sure about it.

However, several larger nuclear warheads (of half-megaton in TNT yield) have been indeed stolen. However, these were not stolen from any Soviet nuclear arsenal. They were stolen from some navy end-users long after the so-called “Perestroika”.

Moreover, one of those stolen half-megaton thermonuclear warheads was used in the Pentagon attack on 9/11. It will be described in detail at the end of this book.

For now I would like to stop about that, since this particular Chapter was about the “mini-nukes” only.

Now, as I guess, it is more or less clear what the modern “mini-nuke” is and who is capable of producing such a thing, let us proceed to the conspiracy theories and to the rest of this book.

Reminding about the exact events of September the 11 for those who might have already forgotten them.

I guess that the vast majority of readers of this book still remember the exact events of September 11, 2001, more or less clear. However, I write this book aiming on a long-term prospect. Thus, I have to presume that someone might get hold on it many years later, when the 9/11 attacks will be such a well-forgotten past as Saddam Hussein's offensive against the Islamic Revolution in Iran in 1979 at the expense of the American taxpayer, which continued for 10 years, wholehearted support by the United States of Pol Pot's regime of Democratic Kampuchea against the Vietnamese, or the U.S.-sponsored mujahidin fighting against the Soviet "infidels" in Afghanistan in the '80s, which continued for about the same length of time.

Such forgetfulness in regard to the 9/11 events might easily prohibit some future reader from thorough understanding of this book and its points.

Only because of such a reason – that the 9/11 events one day might be (and definitely will be) forgotten – I would like to remind how 9/11 looked in its contemporary time – in September 2001.

Those readers, who are very sure that they could still remember those events clearly enough, could easily jump over this chapter – thus saving their precious time – and to go straight to the next chapter.

However, it will do no harm to refresh one's memory by reading this chapter over even if someone thinks he is sure to remember everything. Another review of material always helps in studying.

Besides, it is very unlikely that you could indeed remember any and every small event and their exact timeline. Even if you are an advanced 9/11 scholar and you are sure that you remember everything, you might still be surprised when you read the below timetable and notice there were quite a few very important events that somehow managed to miss your attention before.

Just in case someone feels bored reading over all these events, I have made it easier for him by marking the most important events that one MUST review with inscription "important!" in bold. To take notice of those marked events is highly recommended for better understanding of the rest of the book.

This chapter is sub-divided into two parts – the smaller one will represent in short an official claim and the bigger one – a more detailed account of events in chronological order.

Part 1. Official claims and 9/11 events in short.

The official governmental story (otherwise, known as the “Official Conspiracy Theory”) sounded roughly like this:

On that date, September 11, 2001, 19 suicidal “terrorists”, aiming to go to Paradise, associated with a terrorist organization called “Al Qaeda” – allegedly armed with box-cutting knives – managed to hijack four airplanes, took over pilot controls and managed to successfully fly three of them until crashing into public buildings they had targeted: one into each of the two Twin Towers of the World Trade Center in New York, and one into the Pentagon near Washington, D.C. The WTC Twin Towers were completely destroyed and the Pentagon was seriously damaged. Passengers on the fourth hijacked airliner were believed to have overpowered the hijackers, and in so doing prevented that airplane from being similarly used, although it too crashed, in a field in Pennsylvania, and all aboard were killed. In all, more than 3,000 people were killed in that day’s precisely coordinated attacks.

These flights were supposedly hi-jacked:

American Airlines Flight 11– from Boston to Los Angeles, a "Boeing 767", hit the North Tower (WTC-1) at 8:46 AM (time is based on alleged seismic data); neither debris nor passengers’ bodies have ever been found.

United Airlines Flight 175 – from Boston to Los Angeles, a "Boeing 767", hit the South Tower (WTC-2) at 9:03 AM (time is based on alleged seismic data); neither debris nor passengers’ bodies have ever been found.

American Airlines Flight 77 – from Dulles to Los Angeles, a "Boeing 757", supposedly crashed into the Pentagon at 9:37:46 AM (neither debris nor passengers’ bodies have been ever found where they were supposed to be found).

United Airlines Flight 93 – from Newark to San Francisco, a "Boeing 757", "crashed in a field in southwest Pennsylvania just outside of Shanksville" at 10:03:11 AM (neither debris nor passengers’ bodies have been ever found where they were supposed to be found).

The alleged hijackers:

Flight 175: Marwan al Shehhi (pilot), Fayez Ahmed Banihammad, Mohand al Shehri, Hamza al Ghamdi and Ahmed al Ghamdi;

Flight 11: Waleed M al Shehri, Wail al Shehri, Mohamed Atta (pilot), Abdulaziz al Omari and Satam al Suqami;

Flight 77: Khalid al Mihdhar, Majed Moqed, Nawaf al Hamzi, Salem al Hamzi and Hani Hanjour (pilot);

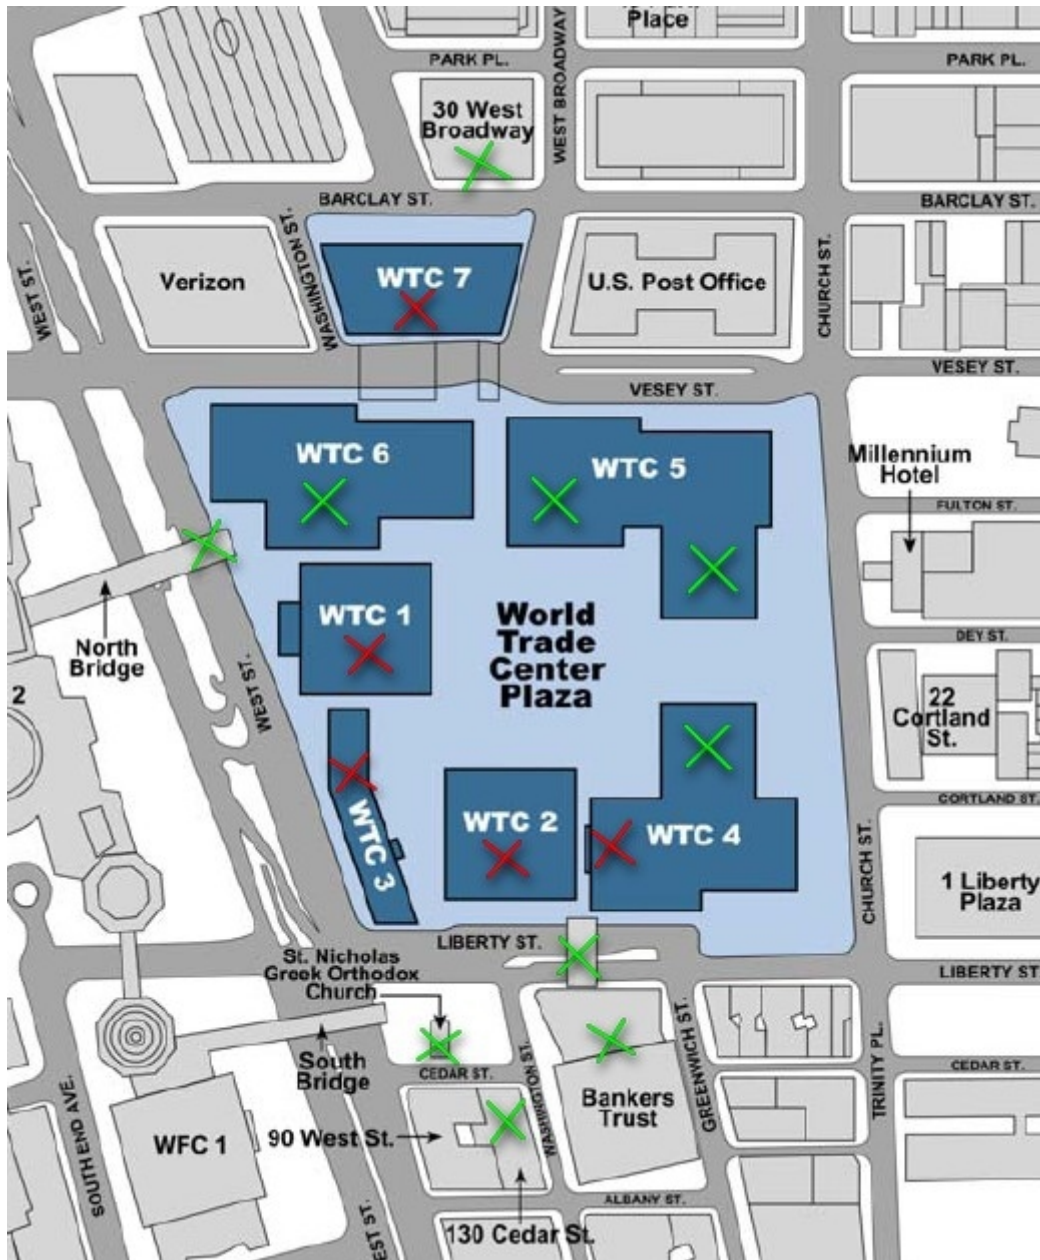

Flight 93: Ahmed al Haznawi, Ahmed al Nami, Ziad Jarrah (pilot) and Saeed al Ghamdi.

Damage:

The Pentagon was damaged by both the impact and the ensuing fires, so badly, that its entire sector of about half of one of its five wedges as deep as up to its internal buildings row No. 2 (Ring “B”) had to be completely demolished later and built again virtually from zero. However, the actual impact caused severe damage only to the Ring “E” (Pentagon’s outer row of buildings or its façade), which almost immediately (in precisely 29 minutes) collapsed, and lesser damage – to the next two rows (Rings “D” and “C”) which were later demolished in the impact sector.

After standing for almost 30 years, and 56 minutes after being hit on September 11, 2001, the “South Tower” (the WTC-2) went from being one of the tallest steel framed buildings in the world to a pile of totally pulverized remains in 10.2 (by more moderate estimates in 11-12²¹) seconds at 9:59 AM. It is officially claimed that the steel core columns of the Tower were weakened by the burning of the plane’s fuel which caused the Tower’s collapse.

After standing for almost 30 years, and 102 minutes (1 hour and 42 minutes) after being hit, the “North Tower” (the WTC-1) was similarly destroyed in 8.4 (by more moderate estimates in 11-12) seconds at 10:28 AM. The official explanation about causes of the Tower’s collapse was the same as in regard to the WTC-2.

Damage to the WTC: marked with red cross – building was completely pulverized (reduced to microscopic dust either completely or in its major part); marked with green cross – building was damaged beyond repair either by falling debris from the Twins, or by subterranean shock (or both) and had to be demolished later.

²¹ The 9/11 Commission says that the South Tower collapsed in “ten seconds” and the NIST (the National Institute of Standards and Technology) says that tops of the buildings came down “essentially in free fall.” However, many people argue that judging by many available video-clips which depicted the collapse it could be even 11 to 12 seconds before the upper parts of the building actually reached the ground. In any case – whether it was 9, 10, 11 or even 12 seconds, it was unbelievably fast and very close to the freefall speed.

The “Marriott World Trade Center” (the WTC-3) was razed simultaneously with the collapse of the WTC-1 and in the process it was instantly reduced to the same kind of microscopic dust as the WTC1 and WTC2.

4 World Trade Center (the WTC-4), 5 World Trade Center (the WTC-5), and 6 World Trade Center (the WTC-6) were damaged beyond repair by falling debris of the WTC-1 and WTC-2 during their collapse and later had to be demolished.

In addition, the St. Nicholas Greek Orthodox Church (not part of the WTC complex located across Liberty Street – just opposite the eastern corner of the WTC North Tower) was destroyed by the collapse of the WTC-2, and the Deutsche Bank Building (at 130 Liberty Street) was damaged beyond repair and was later also demolished.

Later another two buildings had to be demolished in the same direction: 4 Albany Street and 130 Cedar Street – located behind the Deutsche Bank and St. Nicholas Church correspondingly.

Devastating damage sustained by an underground train system (“tube” of which used to cross the WTC site right under the footprint of one of the Twin Towers) has never been disclosed in detail and up to this day remains obscure. No witnesses’ accounts, from among those who might have been inside the tube, in regard to the Twin Towers’ collapse have ever been made public either.

On September 11, 2001, at precisely 5:20:33 PM (based on alleged seismic data), the 47-story “Salomon Brothers Building”, or 7 World Trade Center (the WTC-7) also collapsed straightly down onto its footprint with a near freefall speed – despite being quite far from the Twin Towers and despite being spared by any terror action or by any debris falling from the Twin Towers during their collapse seven hours earlier.

Yet another building suffered irreparable damage at the moment of the WTC-7 collapse (despite of being located quite far from the actual WTC-7) and has to be demolished later: it was the Fiterman Hall located behind the WTC-7 at 30 West Broadway.

FEMA²²’s provisional study on the WTC-7’s collapse was inconclusive and the collapse of WTC-7 was not included in the final report of the NIST²³ investigation into the collapse of the World Trade Center when it was published in September of 2005.

The infamous Report of the “9/11 Commission” did not mention the WTC-7 collapse as well, as if it was not worth mentioning.

For the sake of clarity, it shall be also mentioned that while the 9/11 Commission established the “guilt” of the so-called “Al-Qaeda” and of its leader – Osama bin Laden in connection with this affair, it was not so with any official U.S. agency.

The American FBI, tasked with the criminal inquiry into 9/11, was not able to find any connection of the 9/11 affair to any so-called “Al-Qaeda” or to Osama bin Laden personally. That is why, in the official FBI’s “List of 10 Most Wanted” Osama has never been wanted in connection with the 9/11 attacks. Right until his announced death in 2011, Osama was wanted by the FBI (and so mentioned in that List) only in connection with the infamous “car-“bombings of U.S. Embassies in Kenya and Tanzania on an anniversary of Hiroshima bombing in 1998, but not because of 9/11.

Part 2. Real events in chronological order.

Now we are about to come to the more detailed account of events in chronological order. In this second part I will not mention all related events, because if I would mention all of them, this chapter would be about twice as big as the rest of the book. I will remind readers of only the basic important facts, plus only a few extra details, which might have missed someone's attention, but might represent a certain interest for a researcher. Falsified and doubtful statements (such as most of the 9/11 Commission Report's ravings) will be omitted here, with a very few exceptions, and only well known events and only the most important statements will be included.

Even though this particular book calls for an unbiased perception of reality in general, still, it is highly recommended to review all these 9/11 events (especially media statements) under a certain bias: please, try to make a few presumptions first, before starting to review the events, and you will be surprised at the end, because the actual development of these 9/11 events and statements will match the presumptions, which are suggested to be as follows:

- there were no actual passenger planes that hit the Twin Towers; the planes were digital images existing only in media-releases; while two actual aircraft quietly sunk in the Atlantic Ocean;
- all Airfone-calls were made by 9/11 perpetrators; while all alleged mobile-phone calls (if any were made at all) were either bogus or invented later in the ensuing cover-up attempt;
- all those "witnesses" who claimed to "see" the planes were prepared in advance and they lied to the media (except only those "witnesses" who were forced to lie to the same effect by the FBI as a part of its ensuing cover-up; so if the first group were real accomplices of the perpetration, the second group was only accomplices to the desperate cover-up attempt; you have to distinguish the two groups of the false "witnesses");
- the Twin Towers were brought down by a certain controlled demolition procedure because such a possibility to demolish the Twins was their in-built feature; the WTC-7 later shared the same fate;
- this "certain" controlled demolition procedure was nothing else than a built-in demolition feature of the WTC buildings 1, 2 and 7 that existed in these buildings from the time of their construction;
- this "certain" in-built controlled demolition feature was based on nothing else than very powerful thermonuclear charges positioned deep underground beneath each building (hence the nuclear name "ground zero" immediately awarded to the WTC nuclear demolition grounds);
- moreover, such a built-in demolition feature was not only peculiar to the World Trade Center in New York; it was also a part of the United Nations Building in New York and of the Sears Tower in Chicago, and, almost certainly, even that of the Petronas Towers in Kuala-Lumpur, Malaysia (try to remember this and you will find a lot of peculiar "coincidences" in the below chronology of 9/11 events);
- the Pentagon was hit not by a subsonic aluminum plane, but by an armored supersonic missile;
- moreover, this missile was equipped with a nuclear warhead – that led the United States to the most serious atomic alert during its entire history (including scrambling of "doomsday planes");
- understandably, the U.S. Government felt that:
 - it was by no means an act of terror, but an act of outright nuclear war;
 - the United States was indeed attacked by a "faceless coward";
 - the United States narrowly escaped being decapitated on account of the nuclear warhead of the missile not going off merely due to the failure of a detonator;
- the U.S. Government decided to collapse the Twin Towers by their in-built nuclear demolition scheme because it sincerely believed some false reports produced by the 9/11 perpetrators who claimed that not only one nuclear warhead was used against the Pentagon that day; they claimed that there were two nuclear warheads allegedly stuck in the upper floors of the WTC Twin Towers and they were about to explode; so the U.S. officials believed these claims and decided to collapse the Twin Towers in order to prevent the city of New York from being annihilated by these half-megaton thermonuclear explosions at 300 meters high altitudes; they simply preferred the lesser of two evils;

- after the Twin Towers had been demolished, some U.S. officials (particularly from the FBI) began to immediately search for a “nice” explanation as to their peculiar pulverizations and as such they resorted to the most typical “terrorist activity” – mini-nukes’ bombings – i.e. so-called “car-bombings” or “van-bombings” in the WTC basements that was the alleged factor that brought down the Twins (this would also help them to explain obvious nuclear effects in the area);
- several passenger planes were shot down by the U.S. Air Force during an unprecedented panic.

The second part of this chapter – i.e. 9/11 events in chronological order – have been reconstructed mostly by using a very comprehensive 9/11 timeline as kindly provided by this website:

http://www.cooperativeresearch.org/timeline.jsp?timeline=complete_911_timeline . However, several reconstructed events were acquired from other websites, from several published witnesses’ accounts of events, from contemporary newspapers, and from several video-recordings of contemporary 9/11 TV news channels which are still available today on websites such as YouTube²⁴ and in private collections.

September 5 – [the most important!] The Department of Energy’s nuclear bomb squad, known as the Nuclear Emergency Search Team (NEST), was in Europe for an exercise called Jackal Cave²⁵. The alleged “exercise” (that allowed the squad to be absent from the United States on 9/11) was scheduled to last till September 15, 2001. The unit was created in 1975 following an extortionist’s threat to detonate a nuclear device in Boston if not paid a ransom. Since then, the group has been responsible for evaluating nuclear threats and, if the threat is judged credible, by searching for and disabling a nuclear device²⁶. Thus, when after the Pentagon nuclear strike, someone would claim that it was allegedly a “nuclear strike” against the Twin Towers too and two alleged thermonuclear warheads were supposedly stuck in the Towers’ upper floors and were about to annihilate New York City by 500 kiloton explosions, there would be no appropriate professionals present in New York who could evaluate this particular claim of the alleged nuclear threat...

September 9 – Ahmad Shah Massoud – a hero of Afghani resistance, who was dubbed by Western press as “Che Guevara of the ‘80s”, and one of the most respected leaders of the Northern Alliance²⁷, is assassinated by suicide bombers. The two suicide bombers posing as interviewers hid explosives in their video camera and were to ask him some interesting questions such as “what are you going to do with Osama bin Laden if you defeat the Taliban and seize power in Kabul?” shortly before detonating their bomb. The timing of the assassination, two days before 9/11 attacks on the United States, is considered significant by “commentators” who “believed” Osama bin Laden ordered the assassination supposedly “to help his Taliban protectors and ensure he would have their protection and cooperation in Afghanistan”.

September 11, 6.45 AM – [important!] At least two workers of an Israeli-owned instant-messaging company “Odigo” receive messages – warning of the attack. Odigo’s U.S. headquarters are located two blocks from the WTC. The source of the supposedly “anonymous” warning is unknown; it was reported later that the actual warning allegedly contained some obscene anti-Semitic wording. It is widely believed today that this unexplainable warning to this particular Israeli-owned instant-messaging company was intended to be used as pretext to “beautifully” (means with the minimum possible amount of suspicions) inform all Israelis and other Jews who permanently worked in the WTC not to report to work on September 11. Apparently, it worked out flawlessly – none of the Israelis reported to work on September 11 and none of them were killed. Besides, the mere fact the initial warning was received (and apparently transmitted to all clients) by no one else other than the instant-messaging company, will later relieve many Jews from giving proper answers to the ensuing inquiry, which would obviously have a reasonable question: “Why did not you report to you work at the WTC this morning and who was the one to pass that peculiar advance warning to you?”

September 11, 6.47 AM – [extremely important!] The WTC Building 7’s Alarm System is placed on “TEST” status for a period due to last eight hours. This ordinarily happens during maintenance or other testing, and any alarms received from the building are generally ignored²⁸. It is officially “unknown” until now what kind of “Alarm System” that was and what kind of “alarm” it was designed to transmit to the WTC complex. However, it is suspected that it was the alarm of nothing else than the built-in demolition feature of the WTC Twin Towers that was designed to be initiated from the WTC-7 building.

September 11, 8.00 AM – [important!] A new owner of the WTC, Mr. Larry Silverstein, who has an appointment on the 88th floor of the North Tower with his tenants, prefers, instead, to go to see his dermatologist with whom he claims to have an appointment. Two of Silverstein’s children – his son, Roger, and daughter, Lisa – who work for his company and have been regularly attending meetings with WTC tenants at “Windows on the World” (the restaurant at the top of the North Tower) both are late to their work. It saved their lives.

September 11, 8.19 AM – Flight 11 attendant Betty Ong calls Vanessa Minter, an American Airlines reservations agent at its Southeastern Reservations Office in Cary, North Carolina, using a seatback Airfone from the back of the plane. Ong speaks to Minter and another employee, Winston Sadler, for about two minutes. Then, at 8.21 AM., supervisor Nydia Gonzalez is patched in to the call as well. Ong says, “The cockpit’s not answering. Somebody’s²⁹ shot [later edited to “stabbed”] in business class and... I think there’s mace... that we can’t breathe. I don’t know, I think we’re getting hijacked.” Asked what flight she is on, she mistakenly answers, “Flight 12”, though a minute later she corrects this, saying, “I’m number three on Flight 11”. She continues, “And the cockpit is not answering their phone. And there’s somebody shot [later edited to “stabbed”] in business class. And there’s... we can’t breathe in business class. Somebody’s got mace or something... I’m sitting in the back. Somebody’s coming back from business. If you can hold on for one second, they’re coming back.” As this quote shows, other flight attendants relay information from the front of the airplane to Ong sitting in the back, and she periodically waits for updates. She goes on, “I think the guys are up there [in the cockpit]. They might have gone there – jammed the way up there, or something. Nobody can call the cockpit. We can’t even get inside.” Ong’s emergency call will last about 25 minutes, being cut off around 8.44 AM. However, the recently installed recording system at American Airlines reservations center contains a default time limit, and consequently only the first four minutes of it will be recorded – the rest of the conversation was reported in spoken. Gonzalez later testifies that Ong was “calm, professional and in control” all through the call. As Flight 11 supposedly “approaches” New York and the World Trade Center, it appears to be quiet on board. Vanessa Minter, one of the employees receiving Ong’s call, later recalls, “You didn’t hear hysteria in the background. You didn’t hear people screaming.” In a composed voice, Ong repeatedly says, “Pray for us. Pray for us.” Minter and Nydia Gonzalez, the reservations office supervisor, assure her they are praying. Seconds later – at 8.44 AM, the line goes dead. Amy Sweeney, another Flight 11 attendant, has also made an emergency phone call from the plane. This also ends at 8.44 AM.

September 11, 8.20 AM – Flight 11 stops transmitting its IFF³⁰ beacon signal. But this was claimed later so it can not be independently verified: it could be true or it could be lie as well.

September 11, 8.41 AM – [important!] Flight 175 Reports suspicious Flight 11 Radio transmission: the pilots of Flight 175 tell ground control about Flight 11, “We figured we’d wait to go to your center. We heard a suspicious transmission on our departure out of Boston. Someone keyed the mic[rophone] and said, ‘Everyone stay in your seats.’ It cut out.” An alternate version: “We heard a suspicious transmission on our departure from B-O-S [Boston’s airport code]. Sounds like someone keyed the mic and said, ‘Everyone, stay in your seats.’” The final transmission from Flight 175, still discussing this message, comes a few seconds before 8:42 AM. The 9/11 Commission will conclude later that Flight 175 was then “hijacked” within the next four minutes. [A simple thought that pilots of Flight 11 (an American Airlines flight) and pilots of Flight 175 (a United Airlines flight) logically had no reason to conduct such a peculiar conversation and conducted it primarily because both had been accomplices to the same count of cheating did not occur to the inquirers...]

September 11, 8.42 AM – United Airlines Flight 93 takes off from Newark International Airport, bound for San Francisco, California. It leaves 41 minutes late because of heavy runway traffic.

September 11, 8.43 AM – Later it was claimed that it was at that time Boston flight control had first contacted NORAD³¹’s Northeast Air Defense Sector (NEADS) to notify it of the hijacking of Flight 11, but its personnel there had initially mistaken it for a simulation as part of an exercise. Soon after realizing that it was not a part of the planned exercise, but a real incident, NEADS orders to scramble fighters to go after Flight 11 and then calls NORAD’s operations center in Cheyenne Mountain, Colorado, in order to get NORAD commander in chief’s approval for it.

September 11, 8.43 AM – Later it was claimed that at this moment NORAD is first notified that Untied Flight 175 was hijacked. However, this claim could not be independently verified.

September 11, 8.44 AM – Flight attendant Amy Sweeney is still on the phone with American Airlines flight services manager Michael Woodward, describing the conditions on Flight 11. The plane is supposedly nearing New York City, but the coach section passengers are still quiet, apparently unaware a hijacking is in progress. Sweeney reports, “Something is wrong. We are in a rapid descent... we are all over the place.” Woodward asks her to look out of the window and see if she can tell where they are. According to ABC News, she replies, “I see the water. I see the buildings. I see buildings.” She tells him the plane is flying very low. Then she takes a slow, deep breath and slowly, calmly says, “Oh my God!” According to Woodward’s account to the 9/11 Commission, Sweeney’s reply is, “We are flying low. We are flying very, very low. We are flying way too low.” Seconds later, she adds, “Oh my God, we are way too low.” These are her last words. Then Woodward hears a “very, very loud static on the other end.” Sweeney’s call has ended at about 8.44 AM, according to the 9/11 Commission – the same time as Ong’s call on Flight 11. two minutes before her plane supposedly crashes into the WTC.

September 11, 8.46 AM – [attention, important!] A huge explosion occurs inside the WTC “North Tower” between its 93rd till 99th floors followed by intense fires and black smoke. Nobody understands anything for a quite some time, but it is later reported that it was a passenger plane that hit the WTC Tower One on its southern side and completely disappeared inside the building. Many people, including high-ranking U.S. officials were still unsure if it was really a plane or something else. Many high-ranking U.S. officials, especially from secret services and from the military, who learnt about the explosion before the very first news report released by CNN two minutes later were initially inclined to believe that it was either a cruise missile or even some surface-to-air missile which struck the WTC Tower accidentally. Though there were no videos available which could show an alleged “plane” immediately, later in the evening it was “discovered” that some two French cameramen “luckily” managed to capture the plane approaching North Tower and even the exact moment of the impact – it was followed by some huge orange fireballs suddenly bursting out of that façade of the Tower which is supposed to be hit head-on (so the direction of fireballs propagating was diametrically opposite to the course of the “plane” itself – while in the case of the South Tower later it would be vice-versa: direction of the fireballs propagating would coincide with the direction of the supposed “plane’s” course). That only available movie shot by the French was widely shown in various news TV releases late in the evening of September 11 and on the next day. The immediate images shown on the TV during first hours did not show those fireballs, but only some black smoke and the actual hole, supposedly punched in the Tower’s steel perimeter by the entire plane – including even the very ends of its wings and the top end of its tail.

Hole supposedly punched by the plane in the steel perimeter grid of the WTC North Tower – as shown on TV soon after the black smoke became thinner and the visibility improved.

September 11, 8.46 AM – it is claimed that two F-15 fighters, at last, get the order to scramble from Otis Air National Guard Base in Massachusetts in accordance with the previous NEADS order to find Flight 11, approximately 190 miles from the known location of the plane and 188 miles from New York City.

September 11, 8.47 AM – It is claimed later that at that moment the transponder signal of United Airlines Flight 175 has changed; but this claim could not be independently verified: it could be true or it could be a lie as well.

September 11, 8.49 AM – CNN becomes the first major network that begins to show the WTC crash, claiming that it has unconfirmed reports that this morning a plane has crashed into one of the towers of the World Trade Center.

September 11, 8.49 AM – Majority of the U.S. top officials, including even top intelligence officials, top military brass and even NORAD operational staff, learned from CNN TV report of the WTC crash for the first time. An absolute majority of them believed immediately it was only an accident. United Airlines managers have also first learnt about the WTC accident from CNN news on TV.

September 11, 8.50 AM – CIA director George Tenet is informed that the WTC is attacked by the plane; Tenet [supposedly] comments to former Senator David Boren with whom he is having breakfast at the St. Regis Hotel in Washington, DC: “You know, this has bin Laden’s fingerprints all over it.”

September 11, 8.50 AM - New York and Boston Flight Control allegedly concluded that it was allegedly American Airlines Flight 11 that has hit the WTC North Tower (but these events were claimed much later). They believed it was Flight 11 simply because it has disappeared and then they learned from CNN news that some plane supposedly hit the WTC, but not because they were able to trace its actual track and trajectory.

September 11, 8.50 AM – American Airlines headquarters in Fort Worth, Texas has been called by an American employee at La Guardia Airport in New York City, and informed that an aircraft has hit the World Trade Center. However, it does not yet know that this was Flight 11.

September 11, 8.50 AM – It is alleged (later) that United Airlines Flight 175 has been lost.

September 11, 8.50 AM – CBS news began to report on the WTC crash, saying first they do not know what type of plane it might be – so it could be a small Cessna plane or anything larger than that.

September 11, 8.50 AM – NY1 TV shows a live image of the North Tower being filmed from the Empire State Building and saying that they do not have much detail about what has happened but reporting that the New York Fire Department is responding with a large number of crews.

September 11, 8.50 AM – TV Channel 4 shows a live image of the North Tower emitting black smoke and interviewing live in the telephone one witness who claims to be “Tony Arrigo” and who claims that he saw the “big-big plane – most probably Boeing 737 – that crashed into the World Trade Center”.

September 11, 8.50 AM – Rich Miles, manager of United Airline’s Chicago system operations center, receives a call from a mechanic at an airline maintenance center in San Francisco. The mechanic informs Miles that a female flight attendant from Flight 175 has just called to report, “Oh my God. The crew has been killed; a flight attendant has been stabbed; we’ve been hijacked.” Then the line goes dead. A dispatcher monitoring the flight then sends messages to the plane’s cockpit computer but gets no response.

September 11, 8.51 AM – About two minutes after its initial news CNN adds a live account of events – a voice of a vice-president of finance for CNN Sean Murtagh, who is on the telephone; Mr. Murtagh miraculously happened to be somewhere with a good view of the WTC scene and he claims to see the plane hitting the North Tower with his very eyes. He says: “I just witnessed a plane that appeared to be cruising at slightly lower-than-normal altitude over New York City, and it appears to have crashed into -- I don't know which tower it is -- but it hit directly in the middle of one of the World Trade Center towers. It was a jet. It looked like a two-engine jet, maybe a 737.”

CNN Live screen at between 8.51 and 8.52 AM (ET) shows a hole supposedly punched by an aluminum plane in the steel perimeter of the North Tower. Running text on the left frame says it is a voice of CNN vice-president Sean Murtagh – an alleged eye-witness who allegedly saw the plane penetrating the North Tower.

September 11, 8.51 AM – Fox News reports tragic news – a plane that crashed into the WTC; the plane is believed to be a “Boeing 737”.

September 11, 8.51 AM – It was claimed later that at that moment radio-contact with American Airlines Flight 77 has been lost.

September 11, 8.52 AM – ABC begins to report about the WTC accident, saying there are major fires and there was an explosion in the World Trade Center; they do not know what exactly happened, but there is one report saying that it was a plane that hit the tower.

September 11, 8.52 AM – Two F-15s take off from Otis Air National Guard Base. This occurs six minutes after being ordered to go after Flight 11 (which has supposedly crashed); 26 minutes after flight controllers were certain Flight 11 was hijacked; and 39 minutes after flight controllers lost contact with Flight 11.

September 11, 8.52 AM – Passenger Peter Hanson calls his father from Flight 175 and says, “Oh, my God! They just stabbed the airline hostess. I think the airline is being hijacked.” Despite being cut off twice, he manages to report how men armed with knives are stabbing flight attendants, apparently in an attempt to force crewmembers to unlock the doors to the cockpit. He calls again a couple of minutes before the plane supposedly crashes. (These claims, of course, can not be independently verified, but it seems that all calls from Flight 11 and Flight 175 were indeed real, though not necessarily “genuine”, unlike the alleged calls from other flights – which are suspected of being fabricated in an ensuing cover-up.)

September 11, 8.52 AM – [attention, extremely important!] NBC Live joins other news agencies and begins its own reporting on unfolding WTC events. NBC news anchor Katie Couric interviews an eyewitness, a certain Ms. Jennifer Oberstein, who comes on the phone. The witness describes that she looked up at the World Trade Center Towers, because, she says, it is normal to look up at these Towers when you pass by, and then she saw a huge explosion, and she proceeds then to describe the explosion and smoke. NBC new anchor is apparently more interested in what exactly plane it was and asks her: “Do you have any idea what kind of plane it was?” Jennifer: “I am sorry?” Katie: “Do you have any idea what hit the World Trade Center?” Jennifer (who seems not to understand at all what they are talking about): “What it was?” Katie: “Yah, what kind of plane - we are getting reports that an airplane hit the building.” Jennifer: “Oh? I... I didn't even know that... Honestly... I was walking up and looked up and saw big boom and fires and... and... I have to tell you that we were all saying around here that it will be very interesting that if it were a bomb it would so high up! So, perhaps, it was a plane...” (Several minutes later many witnesses will call to NBC who will claim that they “saw” and “heard” the first plane that hit the North Tower describing it as “Boeing 727” or “737”.)

September 11, 8.53 AM – Flight controllers declare that United Airlines Flight 175 is hijacked.

September 11, 8.54 AM – [attention, extremely important!] CNN Live re-transmits footage shot by WNYW which shows how Fox's reporter Dick Oliver on the street tries to interview several passers-by in an attempt to find out what exactly happened with the WTC Tower; one woman who was an eye-witness says it was a huge explosion and a large section of the building is blown out; when asked if it [the tower] was hit by something, she clearly answers NO, “it was inside”, and she repeats it twice – “it was inside, because papers and everything was coming out of the building as a result of this explosion”, when asked what was on the side wall, she says, she did not see anything.

CNN Live screen at 8.54 shows footage provided by WNYW where a woman on the street, who witnessed the first explosion, clearly testifies that it was an explosion from inside and she repeated it twice in an affirmative manner: “it was inside”.

September 11, 8.55 AM – CNN reporter Don Dahler, who is not far from the WTC, reports that several minutes ago there had been a huge explosion, and there was a sound of something like a missile, and definitely not a sound of a prop plane. He repeats that it was definitely not the sound of a prop plane or of anything of this kind. He says it was a woofing sound which might be the sound of a jet or of a missile.

September 11, 8.55 AM – President G. W. Bush (who is at that moment in Sarasota, Florida, at the Emma E. Booker Elementary School for a photo-op to promote his education policies) is informed of the WTC crash; he proceeds with his school project apparently thinking it was too minor of an incident to be interrupted. Bush also suggests at that moment that the pilot might have had a heart attack.

September 11, 8.55 AM – WNYW (New York Channel 5) begins its most controversial reportage, which will result in ignominy only 7 minutes later. It interviews over the telephone some two witnesses (obviously shills, prepared in advance) – a woman and a man, both of whom claimed to see a large passenger plane, probably a “Boeing 727”, which flew over Lower Manhattan and struck the World Trade Center North Tower, providing also some alleged details on the plane behavior before its impact. This interview will continue right up to the explosion in the South Tower, which will happen at 9.02.59 AM.

September 11, 8.56 AM – It is claimed [later] that signal from transponder of Flight 77 disappears.

September 11, 8.57 AM – Rumors have started circulating through the civilian air traffic system that the plane that hit the WTC was a small Cessna.

September 11, 8.57 AM – Fire department commanders at WTC Tower One advise Port Authority police and building personnel to evacuate Tower Two. According to the 9/11 Commission, the reason for this was not concern of a possible second plane, but because the fire chiefs judged the impact of the plane into the North Tower to have made the entire WTC complex unsafe. However, the supposed jet fuel that might have been spilled from the aircraft which supposedly hit the North Tower has mostly burned up by this time.

September 11, 8.59 AM – NBC Live news anchor reports that they have information the plane that hit the World Trade Center was a small commuter plane. He will repeat this information a minute later.

September 11, 9.00 AM – A United Airlines dispatcher allegedly reports to his superiors at United Airlines' headquarters that Flight 175 has been lost.

September 11, 9.00 AM – [attention!] A public announcement is broadcast over loudspeakers inside the WTC Tower Two (the "South Tower", which is yet to be hit), saying that the building is secure and people can return to their offices. Initial panic subsided and many people who just began to get out of their offices have decided to stay in and so have abandoned their initial evacuation attempts. Until now it is unknown who exactly made this public announcement and who should be held responsible for it.

September 11, 9.00 AM – National Security Adviser Condoleezza Rice later claims she is in her White House office when she hears about the first WTC crash just before 9:00 AM. She recalls, "I thought to myself, what an odd accident." She reportedly speaks to President G. W. Bush around 9.00 AM on the telephone, and tells him that a twin-engine plane has struck the WTC tower. She says, "That's all we know right now, Mr. President." Rice later claims, "He [Bush] said, what a terrible, it sounds like a terrible accident. Keep me informed." Rice too thinks it is too unimportant an accident and proceeds with her usual national security staff meeting.

September 11, 9.00 AM – Vice President Cheney later says he is in his White House office watching the television images of the first WTC crash wreckage. According to his recollection, he was puzzled. "I was sitting there thinking about it. It was a clear day, there was no weather problem – how in hell could a plane hit the World Trade Center?" His staff members elsewhere in the White House are apparently unaware of the emerging crisis.

September 11, 9.01 AM – [attention, important!] An unidentified woman in the La Guardia control tower speaks to a Port Authority police officer. La Guardia is one of two major New York City airports. The Port Authority patrols both the WTC and the city's airports. The woman asks the officer what happened at the WTC, and the officer replies that he has learned from the news that a plane crashed into it. Around the same time, one flight controller in the tower says to another, "But you don't know anything." The other responds, "We don't know. We're looking at it on Channel 5 right now." Nothing on the later released transcripts shows that the La Guardia controllers knew that the planes flying into their airspace had been seized by terrorists, or that military aircraft were in pursuit over the Hudson River as it was alleged later. Port Authority officials appear to be equally oblivious. All of it clearly indicates that officials whose duty was to control airspace in Manhattan area were totally unaware of any alleged "planes" allegedly flying in the zone of their control and got the news only from TV broadcasts.

September 11, 9.01 AM – The WTC building 7 is evacuated before the second tower is hit. All individuals in the Secret Service's New York field office, located in WTC 7, were ordered to evacuate after the first attack, and they are in the process of doing so when a second explosion occurs in the South Tower a minute later.

September 11, 9.02 AM – WNYW continues its broadcast which began with interrogation of the two witnesses at 8.55 AM – one of the witnesses claims to be a certain Mr. "Jim Friedl". Their supposed to be "live" TV screen showing the WTC background is strangely brownish – seeming to be digitally modified, despite an obvious fact that it was perfect weather, ideal visibility, and the sky behind the World Trade Center continued to remain strikingly blue – unaffected by black smokes, rising from the North Tower. Later it will be found that the supposedly "live" picture was shown with a certain 17 seconds delay. Suddenly, for only 4 frames, the background is changed to "bluish" with slightly different focus of the camera, and then – changed to a distant view of the WTC Twin Towers, obviously being shot from a helicopter, this time with a strangely absent background color and with no actual background whatsoever.

Shortly before the explosion in the South Tower, which would happen only moments later, it shows an image of a plane, suddenly approaching the Tower from the right and quickly disappearing inside the building; a moment later it shows something which was not supposed to be shown – namely how the nose of the penetrating aluminum plane sticks out of the Tower on the opposite side after “penetrating” all double steel perimeters (on both sides) and even some steel cores in the Tower’s middle. The most laughable part of this particular manipulation was that the second “plane”, unlike the first one, was not supposed not to penetrate the entire Tower’s body (meaning its two opposite façades), because it was believed to hit it under some angle – it was supposed “to penetrate” only two adjacent façades, over the corner; so by no means would a nose of this plane ever stick out of the opposite façade – like it is shown on that frame. A few frames later it shows three black frames in a row – without any picture at all. Then only, starting from the 4th frame, those famous orange fireballs began to appear from inside the South Tower. All of it happened too fast to recognize any foul play immediately. This cheating would be noticed by researchers only some time later after detailed studying and only after logical suspicions arose that aluminum aircraft would never be able to completely disappear inside the steel Towers...

September 11, 9.02 AM – The BBC reports that a “twin-engine plane”, “possibly Boeing 737”, was the plane that has crashed into the World Trade Center North Tower, and at this time huge orange fireballs were bursting out of the side of the second (South) Tower. The BBC anchor talks to some man (“Stephen Evans”) who is alleged to be right at the WTC spot, who, in turn, claims there was an aircraft that hit the 1st Tower and reports that there are a lot of people in the building and there is panic and chaos. However, despite the second explosion (in the South Tower) having already occurred a few seconds ago, the BBC anchor corrects herself by saying that it is not confirmed whether there was any plane or not and, despite continuing explosions and chaos, it is not really clear whether there was any plane crash or not and what went on.

September 11, 9.03 AM (precisely 9.02.59) – A huge explosion occurs between the WTC “South Tower’s” floors 77th and till 85th, followed by huge orange fireballs and throwing some debris, office parts, and even people’s bodies to the streets around from the explosion zone.

Above – the explosion in the South Tower which is in front; the North Tower emitting black smoke is to the right; the sky in the background on this genuine photograph is perfectly blue (unlike in bogus videos showing how the aluminum plane penetrates the South Tower – on those videos the background is either completely absent or, at best, the color of the “sky” behind the WTC does not look real).

All main news agencies almost immediately reported (since it was a direct coverage of the incident with the WTC-1 and attention of all major news agencies was riveted to the WTC North Tower) that it was a second passenger plane which hit the WTC South Tower. Various footage of the approaching plane under several different angles is shown on live TV coverage by all the main news agencies, but all of them with unexplainable 17-19 seconds delay in comparison with the real time. The “plane” is believed to be one of the suspected hijacked “Boeings 757” or “767”. Later it is reported that it was American Flight 77 that struck the WTC “South Tower”. This claim about Flight 77 was maintained till the late evening, but some agencies continued to maintain it even the next day – 12th of September, until about midday.

September 11, 9.03 AM – [attention, very important!] CNN Live (but with an unexplainable 19 seconds delay) shows a supposedly “live” image of the second plane approaching the South Tower and penetrating it – which is followed by huge orange fireballs and flying debris. The CNN screen on its left top corner bears an inscription “COURTESY WABC” which means that the video is not CNN’s own, but has been supplied by a third party. The entire background behind the Twin Towers is clearly digitally erased (this particular job was quite rude, in fact). At the very moment, without actually seeing the picture courtesy WABC, CNN news anchor talks to its reporter on the WTC spot, who, in turn, reports a second huge explosion, without mentioning anything at all that it might have been caused by a plane. After receiving an update, CNN news anchor says that perhaps it was a plane, but, stressing that “let’s not speculate” he maintains the word “perhaps” – by repeating this word twice.

September 11, 9.03 AM – [attention, very important!] Fox News 5 news anchor discusses with a former FBI agent whether the first impact could be an act of terrorism, when the supposedly live picture on TV bearing “WABC” logo shows the second plane hitting the other Tower and completely disappearing inside – followed by huge orange fireballs. Despite the fact that the picture is supposedly “live”, when the Fox News anchor decides to replay this video of the second impact only 3 minutes later, he will comment: “I thought it first happened... I thought it [the first and supposedly “live” footage] was a replay, but in fact we saw that live perhaps two minutes ago...” – which supposes to mean that even Fox News own staff was unsure at that moment as to the origins of the supplied footage and was told that it was allegedly “live” only after it had been actually shown on the TV. In reality, however, even that so-called “live” picture has been shown with an unexplainable 19 seconds delay compared to the real time.

Supposedly “live” TV screen as shown by Fox News 5 at 9.03 (delay with the real time is 19 seconds). Fox News anchor himself did not believe it was a “live” footage and 3 minutes later he will say that he thought initially that this one was already a replay. He himself will learn it was allegedly “live” only 3 minutes later.

September 11, 9.03 AM – The New York Police Department (NYPD) Chief of Department Joseph Esposito calls for the initiation of something called “Operation Omega”. This puts New York on the highest state of alert, and requires the protection of sensitive locations around the city. NYPD headquarters is secured and all other government buildings are evacuated.

September 11, 9.03 AM – The chief of the Defense Protective Service which guards the Pentagon raises the building’s state of alert by one level, from “normal” to “alpha,” which only requires spot-inspections of vehicles and increased police patrols.

September 11, 9.04 AM – [attention, very important!] The WTC building 7’s evacuation was hastened due to a warning that a third plane was scheduled to strike the WTC-7.

September 11, 9.04 AM – Office of Emergency Management staff requests air security over New York.

September 11, 9.04 AM – New York flight control informs NORAD that Flight 175 has been hijacked.

September 11, 9.04 AM – All takeoffs and landings in New York City are halted without asking for permission from Washington.

September 11, 9.04 AM – [attention, very important!] The CBS news anchor, who was initially supplied with some "live" footage of the Twin Towers, showing the second approaching plane – the very same footage as was supplied to other major news agencies, has missed the actual impact of the "second plane", because at that moment he was interviewing a woman said to be somewhere near the WTC. He decides to replay the moment of the impact and the approaching plane, but this time he uses his own CBS footage to show the moment of impact. CBS' own footage, shot from another spot, clearly shows huge orange fireballs suddenly bursting out of the South Tower, but it does not show any plane. The CBS news anchor complains that he can not see any plane at all – and suggests that it might be a mistake. However, a woman he is interviewing claims it was a plane. A few minutes later the CBS news anchor, for some unknown reason, decides to replay the same footage again and this time he confirms that now, at last, he "could see a plane", while actually nothing could be seen.

September 11, 9.05 AM – A Counterterrorism Coordinator [further will be called as "anti-terrorism tsar"] Richard Clarke recommends to vice-president Dick Cheney and National Security Advisor Condoleezza Rice to evacuate the White House stating that "It's an al-Qaeda attack and they like simultaneous attacks. This may not be over." However, his recommendation is ignored.

September 11, 9.05 AM – New York Mayor Rudolph Giuliani is informed of the first WTC crash while having breakfast at the Peninsula Hotel on 55th Street; he interrupts his breakfast and after leaving the hotel, he quickly proceeds south.

September 11, 9.06 AM – All flight control facilities nationwide are notified that the Flight 11 crash into the WTC was probably a hijacking case.

September 11, 9.06 AM – President G. W. Bush (who is in a class-room with children) is notified about the second plane's crash. He prefers, however, to continue with the children for the next 7 to 10 minutes.

September 11, 9.07 AM – [attention, interesting] CNN repeats footage of the second plane approaching and disappearing inside the South Tower, supplied by the WABC, and its news anchor wonders if there was any kind of navigation equipment used – such as some electronic devices implanted into the building which could guide aircraft so precisely into the towers.

September 11, 9.07 AM – [attention!] R. Giuliani meets Police Commissioner Bernard Kerik at Barclay Street, on the northern border of the WTC complex. Instead of going to the $13 million emergency command center opened by Giuliani in 1999, specifically for coordinating responses to emergencies, including terrorist attacks, which is located on the 23rd floor of building 7 of the WTC, they head to West Street, where the fire department has set up a command post, and arrive there at around 9.20 AM.

September 11, 9.07 AM – The Federal Aviation Administration's (FAA) Command Center sends a message to all the nation's air traffic facilities at this time, announcing the first hijacking.

September 11, 9.08 AM – Boston and Newark flight control centers halted all takeoffs and landings. Departures nationwide heading to or through New York and Boston airspace are canceled.

September 11, 9.08 AM – [attention, extremely important!] The two F-15s scrambled some time ago (nobody could confirm what time exactly they had been scrambled) to find Flight 11 in New York skies are now ordered to circle in a 150-mile window of air space off the coast of Long Island. It is not clear whether they had reached New York City before being directed over the ocean. It happened because NORAD "allegedly" [but surely] managed to trace the two hijacked planes – Flight 11 and Flight 175 – heading away from Baltimore and Boston to over the Atlantic Ocean. (This particular piece of information remains undoubtedly the most seditious part of the entire 9/11 evidence and it is no longer publicly discussed; however, it was voiced by Senator Mark Dayton³² on July 30, 2004.)

September 11, 9.08 AM – By this time, officials at American Airlines' System Operations Control in Fort Worth, Texas had [later edited to "mistakenly"] concluded that the second aircraft to hit the World Trade Center might have been Flight 77, because communications with Flight 77 have been lost shortly before 9.00 AM. [Flight AA 77 is the flight that would be officially alleged later to have hit the Pentagon.]

³² Transcript is available here: <http://www.911truth.org/article.php?story=20040805095600503>

September 11, 9.09 AM – Multiple erroneous reports of hijacked aircraft appear in the system; the FAA Command Center reports that 11 aircraft are either not communicating with FAA facilities or flying unexpected routes.

September 11, 9.09 AM – [attention, extremely important!] Certain confusion occurs because Flight 77 is confirmed to have crashed near the Ohio-Kentucky border by local police and even by the Indianapolis Flight Control Center. It was later claimed that the mistake was quickly corrected. However, the report of the downed plane persists. Shortly before 10 AM, Dale Watson, counterterrorism chief at the FBI, will say to counterterrorism “tsar” Richard Clarke over a video teleconference, “We have a report of a large jet crashed in Kentucky, near the Ohio line.” According to USA Today, “The reports are so serious that [FAA Administrator Jane] Garvey notifies the White House that there has been another crash”.

September 11, 9.12 AM – Renee May, a flight attendant on Flight 77, allegedly uses a cell phone to call her mother in Las Vegas. She tells her mother that the flight has been hijacked, and that everyone has been asked to move to the back of the plane. She asks her mother to call American Airlines and let them know Flight 77 has been hijacked. Her mother (Nancy May) calls the airline. Serious people have never believed this ridiculous claim, but it has been, nevertheless, included in the 9/11 Commission’s official report. It shall be noted that by that time Flight 77 had already been assumed crashed – see the above entry for 9.09 AM.

September 11, 9.13 AM – Burning fires in the South Tower began to subside, because the alleged jet fuel has almost burned out.

September 11, 9.15 AM – [attention, important!] Brian Clark, the executive vice president of the brokerage firm Euro Brokers, was on the 84th floor of the South Tower, where his firm’s offices are, when the explosion occurred. He headed out, going down Stairway A, which was the only staircase in the tower that remained intact from top to bottom, and was soon joined by Stanley Praitnath, who also worked in the South Tower. They reached a point that Clark later guesses to have been around the 77th or 78th floor, where the stairway walls are cracked, allowing them to look through. This would have been around the lower end of the floors where the supposed plane impacted. Clark, however, sees no large fire. He later says, “You could look through the cracks and see flames. They were just quietly licking up, not a roaring inferno. And there was some smoke there, but again I think the stairs were pressurized, pushing the air out so we had less smoke in the stairway than you might imagine.” This apparently contradicts later claims that the tower was subjected to “extreme fires” prior to its collapse. Clark and Praitnath continued down the stairs and made it out just minutes before the collapse. They are two of only four people who were at or above the impact zone after the explosion, who were able to escape from the South Tower. A further 14 people were able to get out of the building from its 78th floor, which is the lower part of the impact zone.

September 11, 9.15 AM – American Airlines orders no new take-offs in the U.S.

September 11, 9.16 AM – [attention, important!] CBS TV shows new footage of the plane hitting the second WTC Tower – this time the direction of the approaching plane is towards the camera and plane is clearly shown as taking a sharp descending course before actually disappearing behind the South Tower. (Later this particular footage would be dubbed “diving bomber footage” by various 9/11 researchers.) This is the same kind of footage with that strangely “blue” entire background, as well as the Twin Towers – as the second “bluefish” frame of the WNYW footage as shown above. A CBS news anchor comments: “a new footage; it looks like Hollywood, but it is real”.

New footage as shown by CBS 5 at 9.16 AM (ET). On the two frames above is clearly shown some plane taking a visibly descending course before hitting its target (on other footage the trajectory of the second plane was clearly parallel to the ground). On fireballs, the CBS anchor comments it looks like Hollywood.

September 11, 9.16 AM – President G. W. Bush leaves the Sarasota classroom where he has been since about 9.03 AM and returns to an adjacent holding room where he is briefed by his staff about the events. The president also speaks with National Security Adviser Condoleezza Rice, New York Governor George Pataki, and FBI Director Robert Mueller. Bush learns from Mueller that the planes that hit the WTC were commercial American aircraft, and at least one of them had apparently been hijacked after leaving Boston.

September 11, 9.16 AM (7.16 MT) – [attention, important!] CNN honestly informs that not only had the two plane crashed to the towers, but also the fact that the towers were made of steel with aluminum and steel facing.

CNN Live TV screen at 9.16 AM ET (7.16 MT). Text on TV screen reminds that the WTC buildings were made of steel with aluminum and steel facing (suggesting doubts by CNN's own producers that it could have been penetrated so easily by an aluminum plane).

September 11, 9.16 AM – Bill Halleck, an American Airlines air traffic control specialist at the airline's System Operations Control (SOC) in Fort Worth, Texas, phones an official at the FAA's Herndon Command Center, to ask about the status of New York City air traffic. During their two-and-a-half minute conversation, Halleck says American [Airlines] thinks Flight 11 crashed into the WTC, and says that Flight 77 is "missing." Presently, he receives an update from someone else at SOC, indicating that Flight 77 may also have crashed into the WTC. He wonders how it could have gotten to New York, but updates the FAA official on this news.

September 11, 9.17 AM – The FAA shuts down all New York City area airports.

September 11, 9.18 AM – The FAA Command Center finally issues a nationwide alert to flight controllers to watch for planes disappearing from radar or making unauthorized course changes.

September 11, 9.18 AM – CNN first suggests that the planes might have been hijacked, referring to Associated Press; however, a CNN reporter citing the FBI source says at the very same moment that the FBI is not sure if the planes were hijacked and is only beginning to investigate into this matter.

At 9.18 AM (ET) CNN Live shows the following text on its screen:

“BREAKING NEWS
AP: PLANE WAS HIJACKED BEFORE CRASHES”.

However, in the same time, a CNN reporter citing some source from the FBI says that the FBI is not sure yet about any hijacking and is only beginning its investigation.

September 11, 9.19 AM – Fox News 5 reports: “We got a report from the FBI that a seven thirty seven was hijacked.”

September 11, 9.19 AM – “NBC Live” reporter in the Pentagon says he was informed by the Pentagon officials that no military jets have been scrambled at that moment in response to any hijacking, but says that it might be possible that some jets of the National Guard have been scrambled following orders of some local Governor, but the Pentagon does not have any information in this regard and can not confirm this.

September 11, 9.20 AM – [attention, important!] A CNN news anchor, while commenting on an amount of damage which might have been inflicted by the second plane, especially stressed that they [CNN] do not have any videotape of the second plane – implying that all footage showing the second plane’s impact repeated several times by CNN, was indeed supplied by a third party.

September 11, 9.20 AM – United Airlines orders no new take-offs in the U.S.

September 11, 9.21 AM – The New York City Port Authority closes all bridges and tunnels in New York City.

September 11, 9.21 AM – NEADS is contacted by Boston flight control. Colin Scoggins, Boston Center’s military liaison, tells them, “I just had a report that American 11 is still in the air, and it’s on its way towards – heading towards Washington.... That was another – it was evidently another aircraft that hit the tower. That’s the latest report we have.... I’m going to try to confirm an ID for you, but I would assume he’s somewhere over, uh, either New Jersey or somewhere further South.” The NEADS official asks, “He – American 11 is a hijack? ... And he’s heading into Washington?” Scoggins answers “yes” both times and adds, “This could be a third aircraft.” Somehow Boston has been told by FAA headquarters that Flight 11 is still airborne, despite being alleged to have hit the WTC North Tower 36 minutes ago.

September 11, 9.21 AM – [attention, important!] United Airlines dispatchers are told to advise their flights to secure cockpit doors. Flight dispatcher Ed Ballinger has already started doing this on his own a couple of minutes earlier. Sending electronic messages one by one, at 9.24 he sends a message to Flight 93 reading: “Beware of cockpit intrusion. Two aircraft in New York hit Trade Center buildings.” Flight 93 pilot Jason Dahl acknowledges the message two minutes later, replying, “Ed, confirm latest message please Jason.” This is the last vocal contact from the cockpit of Flight 93. This claim, however, could not be independently verified and there are reasons to believe that this claim was not true – the point is that the actual Flight 93 (that was shot down by U.S. Air National Guard later) was empty of passengers and empty of pilots, flying on an autopilot, in reality.

September 11, 9.22 AM – [attention, important!] CNN news anchor again repeats that they [CNN] do not have any tape of the second plane to repeat how it crashes into the WTC [meaning that CNN does not have its own tape] and then they replay a tape showing how the second plane crashes into the Tower bearing an inscription in the left top corner: “COURTESY WABC”.

This movie shows an image of a plane approaching from the right and disappearing inside the tower's body before those orange fireballs burst out from the opposite side of the Tower. Nothing unusual could be noticed when seeing this footage live; however, when seeing it on a frame-by-frame mode, it is very clear that a couple of completely black frames strangely appear between the moment of the plane's disappearance inside the Tower and the moment when those famous orange fireballs start to appear. This clearly points, firstly, to a digital manipulation, and, secondly, to a very limited time allotted to perform such a digital manipulation – a person, who did that, apparently had no time to review his job and to remove those black frames. It is believed, due to a calculated margin between the then real time and these frames, which is only 17 seconds, that people, who did the digital part of the 9/11 perpetration, probably had not more than 10-15 seconds at their disposal. Moreover, the word "Live" on the above 4 frames was obviously added on different backgrounds (red on first two frames and blue on the 4th frame) as these two different pieces of video were hastily combined together (timing on the right low corner traditionally changes in CNN footage – showing ET, MT, PT etc. – so in the 4th frame it shows "PT", instead of "MT" – but it is normal for CNN, so nothing is wrong with it, because in reality these four frames only differ in less than a second from the first to the last). The most ridiculous, however, in this clip was that two CNN reporters talking to each other on the background did not mention a "plane" even once, talking only about how the entire building exploded. They repeated words "explosion" and "exploded" at least 6 or 7 times.

September 11, 9.23 AM – [attention, important!] NEADS is just informed that Flight 11 is still airborne and is heading towards Washington. NEADS mission crew commander Major Kevin Nasypany issues an order to scramble fighters from Langley, Virginia to chase the hijacked Flight 11. However, later this order to scramble the Langley fighters was alleged to have been issued allegedly "in response to the reported hijacking of American Flight 77, or United Flight 93", or some combination of the two. However, the true contemporary record of the report of Flight 11 heading south as the cause of the Langley scramble is reflected not just in taped conversations at NEADS, but in taped conversations at FAA centers, on chat logs compiled at NEADS, Continental Region headquarters, NORAD, and in other records.

September 11, 9.24 AM – The FAA's Great Lakes Regional Operations Center notifies the Operations Center at FAA's Washington headquarters of the simultaneous loss of radar identification and radar communications with Flight 77. This is almost 30 minutes after the supposed loss of contact which had been claimed to occur at 8.56 AM – shortly before Flight 77 has been alleged to strike the second WTC Tower. This is why this particular "news" is not believable at all – apparently, it was invented only after Flight 77 was finally "assigned" to strike the Pentagon [previously it was claimed to strike the second WTC].

September 11, 9.25 AM – CNN for the first time quotes some U.S. official who says that the WTC events are an act of terrorism.

September 11, 9.25 AM – [attention, important!] The FAA Command Center advises FAA headquarters that American Airlines Flight 77 is lost in Indianapolis flight control's airspace; that Indianapolis has no primary radar track and is looking for the aircraft. When exactly the Command Center first learned that Flight 77 was lost is unclear. American Airlines headquarters was allegedly notified of the loss of contact with Flight 77 before 9.00 AM, but had thought this was the aircraft that hit the second WTC tower minutes later.

September 11, 9.27 AM – All planes nationwide are ordered down in a reasonable amount of time.

September 11, 9.28 AM – CNN reports, quoting the Associated Press, that a U.S. official believes the attacks are believed to have been carried out by terrorists. Some sources claim that it has been mentioned then that the attacks were carried out in particular by terrorists belonging to "Al-Qaeda".

September 11, 9.29 AM – Still inside the Emma E. Booker Elementary School, President Bush gives a brief speech in front of about 200 students, plus many teachers and reporters. He says, "Today we've had a national tragedy. Two airplanes have crashed into the World Trade Center in an apparent terrorist attack on our country." At this moment the U.S. President first voiced an official definition of the 9/11 perpetration, classifying it as the "Act of terrorism". Ironically, very soon (after the Pentagon attack) it will be changed to the "Act of war". This is the last time most Americans will see of Bush until the evening.

September 11, 9.30 AM – [attention, important!] American Airlines confirms that Flight 11 crashed into the World Trade Center. This is almost 45 minutes after the attack occurred. Earlier, at around 9.16, an American air traffic control specialist had only told the FAA that the airline "thought" the first plane to hit the WTC had been Flight 11; now it is confirmed. However, Colin Scoggins, a civilian manager at the FAA's Boston Center, will later claim that American Airlines refused to confirm that its plane had hit the WTC for several hours afterwards.

September 11, 9.30 AM – CNN shows President G. W. Bush brief speech in Sarasota and at this time it first announces the 1st plane that crashed into the World Trade Center was an American Airlines [Boeing] 767 from Boston. Bush declares "A National Tragedy". He promises a "full-scale investigation".

CNN at 9.30 AM (ET) shows President G. W. Bush delivering a brief speech in Sarasota and for the 1st time it announces that one of the planes has been identified; its text on the screen reads: "BREAKING NEWS SOURCES TELL CNN 1 PLANE WAS AN AMERICAN 767 FROM BOSTON".

September 11, 9.30 AM – The headquarters of New York's Office of Emergency Management (OEM), which is on the 23rd floor of the WTC building 7, is evacuated. The headquarters was opened in 1999 and was specifically intended to coordinate the city's response to disasters such as terrorism. A senior OEM official orders the evacuation after being supposedly told by some Secret Service agent that additional commercial planes were allegedly "unaccounted for". OEM personnel do not initially respond to the evacuation order with a sense of urgency. They calmly collected personal belongings and began removing OEM records, but they were urged to abandon everything and leave the building quickly. Fire Commissioner Thomas Von Essen will arrive at WTC 7 shortly before the collapse of the South Tower, looking for Mayor Giuliani. Learning that the OEM headquarters has been evacuated, he later claims that he thinks, "How ridiculous. We've got a thirteen-million-dollar command center and we can't even use it." He says in frustration, "How can we be evacuating OEM? We really need it now." He will later tell an interviewer that he'd headed for the OEM headquarters because, "I thought that was where we should all be because that's what [it] was built for." All civilians were evacuated from WTC 7 earlier, around the time the second WTC tower was hit.

September 11, 9.30 AM – United Airlines orders all its planes to land immediately. American Airlines orders all its planes to land immediately 5 minutes later.

September 11, 9.30 AM – Flight controllers mistakenly suspect that Delta Flight 1989, flying West over Pennsylvania, has been hijacked. At some point, the Cleveland Airport flight control tower is evacuated for fear Flight 1989 will crash into it. However, Flight 1989 lands in Cleveland at 10.10 AM.

September 11, 9.30 AM – Emergency responders in the lobby of the WTC North Tower hear an unconfirmed report of a third plane heading toward New York. Consequently, Assistant Fire Chief Joseph Callan orders all firefighters to evacuate the tower. The third plane report is soon found to be incorrect and rescue efforts are resumed. The source of the incorrect report is apparently Richard Rotanz, the deputy director of the New York Office of Emergency Management (OEM), who is in the OEM command center on the 23rd floor of the WTC building 7. A certain Secret Service agent in WTC 7 reportedly told him there were unconfirmed reports of other planes in the air. It is also alleged that soon after hearing this false report of a third inbound plane, Mayor Rudolph Giuliani, Police Commissioner Bernard Kerik, and OEM Director Richard Sheirer will all leave the North Tower lobby and relocate to a temporary command post on Barclay Street (but according to another account of events R. Giuliani was there from the very beginning and had visited the lobby of the WTC North Tower only for a brief look).

September 11, 9.31 AM – [attention, extremely important!] Alarm is raised when a panel truck is stopped near the temporary command post, with a painting of a plane flying into the World Trade Center on it. Fearing that it might be a truck bomb, the New York Police Department immediately evacuates the surrounding area and calls out the bomb squad. NYPD temporarily detains the truck's occupants, who turn out to be a group of Middle Easterners [sic] who speak no English, and have rented the truck. No explanation is provided until now why the truck sported a picture of a plane hitting the WTC. However, all major news agencies released news shortly afterwards claiming some truck loaded with explosives allegedly struck the WTC and exploded.

September 11, 9.32 AM – The FAA notifies United Airlines' headquarters that Flight 93 is not responding to radio calls. This lack of response, combined with the plane's turning to the East (but not any alleged cellular phone "calls" from its board as later claimed), causes United Airlines to believe, by 9:36 AM., that the plane has been hijacked.

September 11, 9.32 AM – [attention, extremely important!] Dulles Airport flight controllers notice an unidentified target moving very fast from the northwest to the southeast. An object without transponder traveling at a very high rate of speed towards the White House in an obviously attacking course. Its speed is evidently supersonic, because all of those experienced air traffic controllers unmistakably take it for a military jet, not for a commuter jet, not even to say a large airliner. The Dulles flight control supervisor picks a direct telephone line to the White House and begins to relay to them information about a very fast unidentified aircraft moving towards the White House. There are no official reports that this object that travelled towards the White House "at a very high rate of speed" had been detected by NORAD's radars; it was officially confirmed that it was detected only by civilian ones from Dulles. There are all reasonable grounds to believe, however, that NORAD, which has superior detection capabilities, had not just only "noticed" the fast approaching "object", but had definitely identified it – i.e. the "flying object" was quickly and unmistakably recognized by its speed, shape and other characteristics – as to its type, class, a country of origin, and even to a type of its warhead. So, it appears that the atomic alert had rung over the United States before that "object" had actually arrived to the Pentagon five minutes later.

September 11, 9.32 AM – [attention, very important!] Secret Service agents burst into Vice-President Dick Cheney's White House office. They grabbed him under his arms and by his belt – nearly lifting him off the ground – and propelled him down the steps into the White House basement and through a long tunnel toward the underground anti-atomic bunker. National Security Adviser Condoleezza Rice is also rushed to the same underground bunker. The rest of the people in the White House were told to immediately run away from the building [apparently, to meet their imminent thermonuclear incineration only minutes later].

September 11, 9.33 AM – [attention, important!] The BBC reports (one year later) that pilot Major Dean Eckmann gets a message as he's flying from Langley, Virginia. "They said – all airplanes, if you come within 30 miles of Washington, D.C., you will be shot down." Apparently such a message had been transmitted over the radio.

September 11, 9.33 AM – [attention, extremely important!] An unidentified fast-moving object noticed a minute earlier by Dulles controllers turns away from the White House being only about three miles short of it and now is crossing the Capitol Beltway heading towards the Pentagon. However, it is still too high when it nears the Pentagon at 9.35 AM, crossing the Pentagon at about 7,000 feet up. The object makes a difficult high-speed descending turn. It makes a “downward spiral, turning almost a complete circle and dropping the last 7,000 feet in two-and-a-half minutes...” It gets very near the White House during this turn. Dulles controllers claimed that before executing such an unbelievable maneuver – the “fast-moving plane” is how they call it – has completely disappeared from their radar screens. Its last known position is six miles from the Pentagon and four miles from the White House.

September 11, 9.35 AM – [attention, extremely important!] It is claimed by a Representative Christopher Cox who was at meeting with Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld in the Pentagon building discussing missile defense, that both of them were completely oblivious of the incoming attack [as well as of the atomic alert that was rung two minutes earlier and which forced the U.S. Vice-President into the anti-atomic bunker under the White House]. Watching television coverage from New York City, Rumsfeld says to Cox: “If we remain vulnerable to a missile attack, a terrorist group or rogue state that demonstrates the capacity to strike the US or its allies from long range could have the power to hold our entire country hostage to nuclear or other blackmail. And let me tell you, I’ve been around the block a few times. There will be another event.” All his words would be proven to be suspiciously prophetic just only a few seconds later. His country would be soon held hostage to nuclear and other blackmail in the worst possible manner.

September 11, 9.37 AM – [attention, extremely important!] The flying object strikes the Pentagon’s West wall at a 45° angle slightly above ground level causing serious damage and fires in the building; following the damage and fires, some parts of the Pentagon building collapse – it happens 29 minutes after the impact. Rumsfeld immediately gets out of his office and goes to the impact spot to see what happened. The peculiar object approached the Pentagon at an altitude of less than 1 (one) meter above the ground, torn a hole about 2.5 meters wide in a light fence surrounding an external generator’s site, threw out of its way to the right side the actual generator (that was heavier and bigger in size than a typical truck) and still managed to penetrate the Pentagon Rings “E”, “D”, perpendicular row of the buildings between Rings “D” and “C”, and actual Ring “C”, and had lost its tremendous inertia in between Rings “C” and “B” where it was soon found and confiscated by the FBI. All photographs of the peculiar object after its crash inside the Pentagon and all films by Pentagon security cameras and by other security cameras around – all which might somehow capture the flying object as it approached and struck the Pentagon, are promptly confiscated by the FBI and have never been made public. All witnesses inside and outside the Pentagon who might have seen any details of the object whether during its flight or after its impact were forced to sign non-disclosure contracts. All Dulles air-traffic controllers who managed to see the apparently supersonic object on their radar-screens during its approaching Washington D.C. were told by the FBI to say to everybody that the object had travelled at only 500 mph speed.

Pentagon almost immediately after being hit by the “flying object” – before its wall collapsed. It is interesting to notice all standing lamp posts (later some of them were toppled to imitate that it was caused by the supposed “plane’s” wings). It is also clear that the “object” descended to its final altitude being very close to the fence. Two different sources of smoke are clearly seen: one from a generator and one – from the actual building. An entry punch hole in the Pentagon’s façade is visible – at the spot where the 2nd source of smoke is located.

The Pentagon 9/11 impact: penetration details. The “flying object” approached the Pentagon at a 45 degrees angle (means “horizontal angle”) flying at an altitude less than 1 meter above the ground, throwing aside a huge electric generator (bigger in size than a typical lorry), which happened to be on its way, and struck the West wall slightly above the ground, continuing at the same altitude and punching in and out holes in 3 rows of the Pentagon building (all together 6 capital walls plus one more perpendicular row of the buildings – in between Rings D and C). This particular picture was taken later – not in the day of an actual attack, because a nice green lawn in front of the Pentagon has been already damaged here by various construction equipment; at the evening of September 11 (even after departure of fire engines) it was still green and intact.

[attention, extremely important!] General Ralph Eberhart, the commander of NORAD, upon getting the news of the peculiar “object” (it is suspected that he got the news of the true nature of the “object” much earlier – while the “object” was still airborne, i.e. before it actually hit the Pentagon), immediately departs from his NORAD headquarters office at Peterson Air Force Base, Colorado, and drives to NORAD’s operations center in Cheyenne Mountain, about a dozen miles away. The reason he makes this “strange” journey is supposedly “unknown”, though it is reported that there are allegedly “superior communications capabilities available at Cheyenne Mountain”. However, for anyone who possesses even elementary knowledge about how the modern military functions in general, it is very clear that General R. Eberhart has departed from an unprotected command post to a protected one following a warning of a nuclear attack; otherwise, he would have no reason to do so, because “communication capabilities” in an unprotected command post are apparently much better in comparison with those in a protected command post buried deep underground. After his arrival to the Cheyenne Mountain operations center, its massive anti-atomic steel doors, which are designed to protect the Cheyenne Mountain’s contents from a thermo-nuclear blast in its immediate vicinity, are ordered shut for the first time in its history.

September 11, 9.37 AM – [attention, very important!] An E-4B “National Airborne Operations Center” (NAOC) or, in other words, an “Advanced Airborne Command Post” takes off from Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, near Dayton, Ohio, bound for an undisclosed location. The aircraft, which is supposedly “carrying civilian and military officials”, is launched in order to allegedly “participate in an alleged pre-scheduled military exercise” (which was interestingly not cancelled due to the unfolding unprecedented events). It is also claimed that the other three E-4Bs (there are altogether 4 of them in the United States) were already airborne at that moment because all of them were alleged to participate in some “exercise” on that morning. However, it is believed now that this “Boeing E-4B”, which otherwise is called a “doomsday plane” because it could only be engaged during a real nuclear war, had been scrambled at that moment because there was a confirmed warning of a nuclear attack against the United States. It is now believed that NORAD managed to understand that the “object” on the attacking course towards the White House was nothing but an enemy missile equipped with its usual thermonuclear warhead even before it arrived to the Pentagon – probably a few minutes before that. That is why the “doomsday” plane was scrambled even before the “object” actually hit the Pentagon. It is clear, considering that it took at least 2-3 minutes to prepare its take-off.

September 11, 9.37 AM – [attention, important!] several F-16 and F-15 fighters which are already airborne in several different locations near both – New York and Washington – are “strangely” directed over the Atlantic Ocean – in order to protect New York and Washington from unexplainable alleged “seaborne” attacks. Yet another plane – AWACS (Airborne Warning and Control System – designed to conduct a surveillance, and ‘command and control, battle management’, mainly – to provide an early warning of approaching enemy cruise missiles and aircraft) is scrambled and also directed over the Atlantic Ocean.

September 11, 9.37 AM – [attention, important!] Navy ships and aircraft squadrons that are stationed, or at sea, along the coast of the United States are, reportedly, “rapidly pressed into action” to defend the country. Several defense cruisers are positioned to watch any “seaborne” [sic.] attack, later followed by departures of five warships and two aircraft carriers to protect the East Coast. Later, the Navy also reported that an undisclosed number of Aegis guided-missile cruisers and destroyers also were underway, their magazines loaded with Standard 2 surface-to-air missiles. Positioned off New York and Norfolk, and along the Gulf Coast, they provided robust early-warning and air-defense capabilities to help ensure against “follow-on terrorist attacks”.

September 11, 9.37 AM – Immediately upon learning that the Pentagon has been hit, counterterrorism “tsar” Richard Clarke orders an aide, “Find out where the fighter planes are. I want Combat Air Patrol over every major city in this country. Now!”

September 11, 9.37 AM – Naval Operations Intelligence Unit in the Pentagon receives a phone call from the National Military Joint Intelligence Center (NMJIC); NMJIC warns that Flight 11 is still airborne and is heading toward Washington.

September 11, 9.38 AM – Vice-President Cheney telephones President G. W. Bush, who is on his way to the Sarasota airport, and tells him that the White House has been “targeted.” Bush says he wants to return to Washington, but Cheney advises him not to “until we could find out what the hell is going on.”

September 11, 9.38 AM – Mayor Rudolph Giuliani is told by his Chief-Of-Staff that the White House knows of seven planes that are unaccounted for.

September 11, 9.39 AM – NBC news begins to report on the Pentagon’s accident, without mentioning anything at all that it might have been caused by a passenger plane. Soon it is followed by other news agencies, who also say nothing about the true causes of the explosion. No media outlets record video footage of the Pentagon crash, and the cause of the crash remains unknown for some minutes afterward.

September 11, 9.40 AM – CNN Live Breaking News reports about “fires in the Pentagon” as only a line of text on its screen.

September 11, 9.40 AM – An air traffic manager Dennis Fritz, in the control tower at Johnstown-Cambria County Airport, 70 miles east of Pittsburgh, receives a call from Cleveland Air Traffic Control reporting a large, suspicious aircraft about 20 miles South of them, descending below six thousand feet. Despite the clear day, Fritz and his colleagues can see no plane approaching through binoculars. Soon afterwards, in response to another call from Cleveland, Fritz orders trainees and custodial staff to evacuate the tower, yet he is still unable to see any plane approaching. Less than a minute later, though, Cleveland calls a third time, saying to disregard the evacuation: the plane has turned South and they have lost radar contact with it.

September 11, 9.40 AM – The transponder signal from Flight 93 allegedly ceases. However, the plane can be – and is – tracked using primary radar by Cleveland flight controllers and at United Airlines headquarters. Altitude can no longer be determined, except by visual sightings from other aircrafts. The FAA Command Center is still suspicious of at least ten planes for one reason or another, all possible hijackings.

September 11, 9.41 AM – Colin Scoggins, Boston flight control’s military liaison, calls NEADS to alert it to Delta 1989, which is possibly off course and being tracked by Boston controllers. The flight is believed to be hijacked. However, unlike flights 11, 175, 77, and 93, Delta 1989’s beacon code, broadcasted from its transponder, is still working.

September 11, 9.42 AM – Within five minutes of the Pentagon being hit, the first group from the FBI’s National Capital Response Squad arrives there. Due to this being a terrorist attack, the Pentagon and its grounds are immediately declared a federal crime scene. Under the terms of a 1995 presidential directive, this makes them the exclusive responsibility of the FBI. The FBI immediately begins collecting evidence and is also responsible for recovering bodies. Its agents are able to confiscate security videos from a nearby gas station within minutes of the crash.

September 11, 9.42 AM – [attention, extremely important!] NBC reporter Jim Miklaszewski reports from the Pentagon site that while he himself did not hear any explosion, but only felt the building shake – because of him being on the opposite side of the huge Pentagon building – some military officials from near the helicopter port say that it was an explosion. He says that construction workers, who worked in the Pentagon building were seen taking flight and running from the explosion area as fast as they could. He proceeds to inform that one of the military officials said it looked like a bomb exploded near the heliport. However, a minute later he continues to report that the people there [in the Pentagon] are now beginning to say that it was indeed a “highly sophisticated” attack on the Pentagon. NBC news anchor says that they [NBC central office] have already a report that it was a plane that crashed into the Pentagon, but NBC reporter on site answers he is not sure at all about a plane – all he could confirm that it was an explosion only.

September 11, 9.42 AM – CNN reporter Chris Plante, who is on the opposite side of the Pentagon reports about huge fires in the Pentagon saying that it is unknown what caused the fires, since nobody has heard any big explosion; the building is being evacuated.

September 11, 9.43 AM – CNN news anchor Aaron Brown interrupts CNN reporter Chris Plante (who is reporting about the Pentagon’s fires) to inform breaking news: the White House is being evacuated too.

September 11, 9.43 AM – President G. W. Bush learns about the Pentagon attack while his motorcade is entering Sarasota’s Airport – almost when it drives near to the “Air Force One” (the presidential plane). Bush immediately boards the plane, but it won’t depart until 9.55 AM due to an excessively strict checking of the baggage of the other plane’s passengers by the security service.

September 11, 9.44 AM – [important! please, note that the NMCC³³ began functioning within only a few minutes starting from the Pentagon strike, which is a peculiar occurrence] NORAD briefs the NMCC teleconference on the possible hijacking of Delta Flight 1989. Four minutes later, a representative from the White House bunker containing Vice President Cheney, asks if there are any indications of other hijacked planes. Captain Charles Leidig, temporarily in charge of the NMCC, mentions the Delta Flight and comments, “that would be the fourth possible hijack.” Flight 1989 is in the same general Ohio region as Flight 93, but NORAD doesn’t scramble fighters toward either plane at this time.

September 11, 9.45 AM – The FAA’s National Operations Manager orders the entire nationwide air traffic system shut down. All flights at U.S. airports are stopped.

September 11, 9.45 AM – [attention, extremely important!] It is alleged (later) by the “9/11 Commission’s” Report that United Airlines allegedly had “learned” that it was Flight 77 that crashed into the Pentagon at that moment. However, it cannot be true, because 77 was an American Airlines flight, which had nothing to do with United Airlines. Moreover, the decision to blame the Pentagon incident on the hijacked plane had not yet been made in such a short time. It was at least an hour later when the FBI and the American leadership finally decided to blame that on the passenger plane. The first time when United Airlines “learned” about the “flight allegedly crashed into the Pentagon”, was at least an hour later, and in the first instance it was decided to blame the Pentagon attack on United Flight 175, because American Flight 77 at that moment was publicly declared to be the second plane which struck the WTC Tower 2 in New York. That is exactly why, United Airlines allegedly “learned” of the attack – it was simply because it was United Airlines’ own flight alleged to strike the Pentagon first. This news (that it was allegedly United Flight 175 that crashed into the Pentagon) was reported by many news agencies about an hour later. Some news agencies had continued to report it (mostly in newspapers and in the Internet on-line news-releases) until about midday September 12, 2001. Only late in the evening September 11,

2001, it was finally decided “to assign” American Airlines Flight 77 to the Pentagon, and United Airlines Flight 175 – to the WTC in New York.

September 11, 9.45 AM – Secret Service Director Brian Stafford informs counterterrorism “tsar” Richard Clarke that radar shows an aircraft heading towards the White House and decides to evacuate the complex (however, everybody in the White House was already running away from the building anyway, because of the first warning – shortly before the Pentagon’s crash). The Secret Service learns this by monitoring radar and over an open line with the FAA (the “hijack net”), which enable them to receive real time information about the hijacked aircraft. The Secret Service, which has been using an air surveillance system called “Tigerwall” (probably their own system) for some time, tracks both American 77 and United 93 as they approach Washington and assumes the White House is a target. (Make sure to note that Flight 77 was still confirmed being airborne even after it was alleged to strike the WTC-2 as long as 42 minutes ago, and even after it was alleged to strike the Pentagon – 8 minutes ago).

September 11, 9.45 AM – The Presidential Chief of Staff Andrew Card, the lead Secret Service agent, the President’s military aide, and Air Force One pilot Colonel Mark Tillman, confer on a possible destination for Air Force One around this time. According to witnesses, some support President Bush’s desire to return to Washington, but the others advise against it. The issue is still not decided when Air Force One takes off around 9:55 AM.

September 11, 9.48 AM – CNN cites a certain woman speaking from a Washington airport, who says she was somewhere in a parking lot of the airport when she heard a huge noise and that the Pentagon was struck by some airborne object, which also produced a terrible noise shortly before hitting the Pentagon. It is unknown whether this object was a plane or anything else; however, it was definitely some flying object. About the same time CNN reporter Chris Plante at the Pentagon site reports that according to several military officers there had been an explosion, indeed, but nobody could confirm what really hit the Pentagon. A certain officer working at the Pentagon (who was on the opposite side of the Pentagon) is cited that he saw a military helicopter on the other side of the Pentagon disappearing from the view beneath (toward where the helicopter landing pad supposed to be) and then it was followed by fireballs going to the sky. Nothing else is known so far.

September 11, 9.48 AM – [attention, important!] The Capitol is ordered to evacuate. Senator Tom Daschle, Majority Leader of the Senate, later states, “Some capitol policemen broke into the room and said, ‘We’re under attack. I’ve got to take you out right away.’” Speaker of the House Dennis Hastert, third in line of succession to the presidency behind Vice-President Cheney, is in the Capitol building with other congress people. Sometime after this, Hastert and other leaders are flown by helicopter to secret bunkers.

September 11, after 9.48 AM – [attention, important!] the “doomsday” plane – Boeing E-4B – Advanced Airborne Command Post is seen circling over the White House; CNN will report at 9.54 AM that it was first seen “10 minutes ago” (i.e. at 9.44 AM). This plane could only be engaged during a nuclear war. These planes are primarily intended to control nuclear forces from the air in times of crisis. They are capable of acting as alternative command posts for top government officials from where they can direct U.S. forces and execute war orders. The fact of its being airborne has never been accepted by the U.S. Government. Two government sources familiar with the incident will later tell CNN the plane was a military aircraft, but that its details are classified. Even by 2007, the Pentagon, FAA, and Secret Service will have offered no public explanation for this plane over the White House. However, later (probably in the spring of 2007) some U.S. officials would “unofficially” confess that it was indeed the “doomsday plane”.

September 11, 9.49 AM – NORAD gives the nationwide order to provide Combat Air Patrol over every major U.S. city.

September 11, 9.49 AM – The FAA orders the Pittsburgh control tower evacuated. Shortly before the order, Cleveland flight controllers called Pittsburgh flight control to say that a plane is heading towards Pittsburgh and the pilot refuses to communicate.

September 11, 9.40 AM – CNN reports that Stock Exchange Trading is suspended. Stock Exchange is not very far from that part of Lower Manhattan where the World Trade Center is.

September 11, 9.50 AM – [attention, very important!] Mayor Rudolph Giuliani speaking to ABC’s Peter Jennings claims he was given some advance warning of the South Tower’s collapse while at his temporary command post a small office building at 75 Barclay Street, about two blocks from the WTC. He will also tell this to the TV reporters during his improvised interview on the walk 20 minutes later – after the first Tower's collapse, but before the collapse of the second Tower.

Mayor R. Giuliani says he had information the WTC is going to collapse.

September 11, 9.50 AM – [attention, very important!] The CIA headquarters in Langley was evacuated; with an exception of only a few people who worked at the CIA's Counterterrorist Center and the CIA's Global Response Center. The CIA's entire staff is told to quickly leave the building and go home until further notice. [It shall be known that the CIA headquarters is one of the pre-designated most important targets of a nuclear strike by potential U.S. adversaries – it is probably next to the Pentagon, White House, and NORAD]

September 11, 9.52 AM – [attention, important!] CNN announces one of the most controversial pieces of 9/11 news – which several years later would force the American officials to admit something they did not want the Americans to know: that the so-called “doomsday plane” was scrambled in response to the Pentagon attack. JOHN KING, CNN SENIOR WHITE HOUSE CORRESPONDENT reports: “...Aaron, I'm standing in Lafayette Park, directly across the White House, perhaps about 200 yards away from the White House residence itself. The Secret Service has pushed most people all the way back to the other side of the park. I'm trying to avoid having that done to me at the moment. Just moments ago they started slowing evacuating the White House about 30 minutes ago. Then, in the last five minute people have come running out of the White House and the old executive office building, which is the office building right directly across from the White House. About 10 minutes ago, there was a white jet circling overhead. Now, you generally don't see planes in the area over the White House. That is restricted air space. No reason to believe that this jet was there for any nefarious purposes, but the Secret Service was very concerned, pointing up at the jet in the sky...”

September 11, 9.52 AM – [attention, extremely important!] Two firefighters [allegedly] climbing up the South Tower, Battalion Chief Orio J. Palmer and Fire Marshall Ronald P. Bucca, have [allegedly] reached its 78th floor, the lower end of the alleged impact. Over radio [genuinely], Palmer tells firefighter Joseph Leavey, “We've got two isolated pockets of fire. We should be able to knock it down with two lines.” He called for a pair of engine companies to fight the fires. Palmer radioed also that there were a lot of injured people found there and on the stairs below and he began to organize their evacuation down the stairs, asking for reinforcements. These were actually his last words, because only moments later the South Tower began to collapse. This was an initial story. There was the latest update to it too: the supposed “awful truth” eventually leaked out that the two supposedly “late” firefighters were sent upstairs for a totally different reason – they were sent to discover and to confirm about alleged “secondary devices” that were allegedly planted there and were “about to explode”. In this case, it would be safe to presume that both supposedly “late” firefighters, instead of running upstairs as claimed, departed in some get-away car and reported over their radios that they indeed “discovered” the so-called “secondary devices” while being at a safe distance from the WTC Towers that were doomed to be immediately brought down as a result of their report... Now it seems that these two supposedly “late” firefighters helped the 9/11 perpetrators to concoct the “awful story” that would be used to convince the U.S. officials to demolish the Twin Towers.

September 11, 9.53 AM – The National Security Agency (NSA) reportedly intercepts a phone call from one of Osama bin Laden's operatives in Afghanistan to a phone number in the Republic of Georgia. The caller says he has “heard good news” and that another target is still to come. The caller is also supposed to say that the attackers are following through on “the doctor's program.” After some long deliberations over that odd statement by various counter-terrorism specialists it was decided that it could only be a reference to the Al-Qaeda's number two leader, Ayman al-Zawahiri, who has a doctorate in medicine – since he was the only person who could be called “Doctor”. [The author of this book highly recommends trying to remember about this particular “doctor's program”: you might also have some opinion in this regard later.]

September 11, 9.53 AM – NBC reporter Jim Miklaszewski reports from the Pentagon site, mentioning once more, that they do not know what it was – a bomb or a plane; that one of the survivors, whose office was in the second floor of the Ring “D” (second from the outer row of the Pentagon’s buildings) describes the impact as “suddenly there was a terrific blast, and the second floor buckled upward and the third floor above him actually collapsed downward”. A CNN reporter a minute later rephrases it as: “the floor has just buckled under him and the roof has caved on him”. NBC reporter from the Pentagon site reports that here in the Pentagon they still do not know yet what it was. However, some eye-witnesses from outside claim that it was a plane.

September 11, 9.55 AM – [attention, important!] Counterterrorism “tsar” Richard Clarke institutes “Continuity of Government” plans. Important government personnel, especially those in line to succeed the president, are evacuated to alternate Command Centers. (This particular decision is a clear indication of a nuclear war, which has nothing to do with any terrorism.)

September 11, 9.55 AM – [attention, important!] Richard Clarke gets a phone call from the PEOC Command Center where Vice-President Cheney and National Security Advisor Rice are positioned. An aide tells Clarke, “Air Force One is getting ready to take off with some press still on board. [President Bush will] divert to an air base. Fighter escort is authorized. And... tell the Pentagon they have authority from the president to shoot down hostile aircraft, repeat, they have authority to shoot down hostile aircraft.”

September 11, 9.55 AM – [attention, important!] NBC Live reports from the White House that the picture is “utterly surreal”: the building is forcefully evacuated, following news of the Pentagon crash; staff there is running away at a very high speed. NBC reporter in the White House says: “...the most surreal of all of this morning was a white plane, a very big jet which is flying in an unusual pattern near the White House, near the Lafayette Park, very slowly, made one circle and they haven’t seen it since. There are a lot of concerns about what that plane might be... This was a totally white plane, looked unusual to all of us...” (Several years later it will be unofficially disclosed that it was the “doomsday plane” – which could be engaged only during a real nuclear war; it was scrambled in response to the Pentagon’s attack. It must be completely white, of course, because it is intended to be used in the case of a massive nuclear strike against the U.S.; its distinctive white painting, known to military specialists as “anti-flash white”, would protect it to some extent from thermal radiations of nuclear blasts that might happen around during its flight.)

September 11, 9.56 AM – Air Force One (the presidential plane) takes off from Sarasota; nobody on board has any clear idea as to its destination; they only wanted to get airborne as soon as possible. Air Force One takes off and quickly gains altitude going almost straight up like a rocket. Once the plane reaches cruising altitude, it flies in circles. Apparently Bush, Cheney, and the Secret Service argue over the safety of Bush coming back to Washington.

September 11, 9.57 AM – NBC Live reports that the first plane that crashed into the WTC was apparently an American Airlines flight from Boston to Los Angeles, which was hijacked in mid-air, because there was some transmission from that plane confirming it was hijacked – it is reported that hijackers “shot the pilot” (as if they could have firearms on board) and one of the hijackers took over the control of the plane.

September 11, 9.57 AM – ITV Live shows the damage inflicted to the Pentagon and reports that it has a report of three hijacked aircrafts – one of them apparently involved in the Pentagon crash; two of them – a “Boeing 767” and a “Boeing 737” crashed into the World Trade Center. A few minutes later the ITV news anchor will say that it was probably not even a plane, but possibly a helicopter, loaded with explosives, that crashed into the Pentagon. This report at the Pentagon site is interrupted two minutes later because it is reported that the South Tower of the WTC has just collapsed.

September 11, 9.58 AM – Live 9 Breaking News reports that one man who drove his car over the 14th Street Bridge near the Pentagon heard that something flew right over his car and struck the Pentagon followed by a tremendous explosion; the man says “it sounded like a small plane flying very-very low”.

September 11, 9.58 AM – [attention, extremely important!] In the lobby of building 7 of the WTC, EMS Division Chief John Peruggia is in discussion with Fire Department Captain Richard Rotanz and a representative from the Department of Buildings [please, remember about the unexplainable presence of that “representative from the Department of Buildings”]. As Peruggia later describes, “It was brought to my attention, it was believed that the structural damage that was suffered to the [Twin] Towers was quite significant and they were very confident that the building’s stability was compromised and they felt that the North Tower was in danger of a near imminent collapse.” Peruggia grabs EMT Richard Zarrillo and tells him to pass on the message “that the buildings have been compromised, we need to evacuate, they’re going to collapse.” Zarrillo heads out to the fire command post, situated in front of 3 World Financial, the American Express Building, where he relays this message to several senior firefighters. He says, “OEM says the buildings are going to collapse; we need to get out.” Fire Chief Pete Ganci’s response is, “who the f*ck told you that?” Seconds later, they hear the noise of the South Tower as it collapses. (P. Ganci, the New York City Fire Department’s highest-ranking uniformed officer, was killed during the collapse.) Others also appear to have been aware of the imminent danger. Fire Chief Joseph Pfeifer, who is at the command post in the lobby of the North Tower, says, “Right before the South Tower collapsed, I noticed a lot of people just left the lobby, and I heard we had a crew of all different people, high-level people in government, everybody was gone, almost like they had information that we didn’t have.” Mayor Giuliani also says he received a prior warning of the first collapse, while at his temporary headquarters at 75 Barclay Street.

September 11, 9.59 AM – [attention, very important!] Some witnesses near the World Trade Center feel the ground shaking just before the South Tower starts to collapse: EMT Joseph Fortis is heading across West Street, when, he says, “the ground started shaking like a train was coming.” He then looks up and sees the South Tower starting to collapse. Lonnie Penn, another EMT, is outside the Marriott Hotel, which is adjacent to the North Tower. He and his partner “felt the ground shake. You could see the towers sway and then it [the South Tower] just came down.” Battalion Chief Brian O’Flaherty is walking into the lobby of the Marriott Hotel. He says, “I hear a noise. Right after that noise, you could feel the building start to shudder, tremble, under your feet.” He then hears the “terrible noise” of the South Tower collapsing. Several witnesses also described some huge ball of flame, created by the exploding diesel fuel from the building’s own supply tank, shooting from the elevator shaft and out the doors of the South Tower just seconds before it began to collapse.

September 11, 9.59 AM – Counterterrorism “tsar” Richard Clarke is [allegedly] told in private by Dale Watson, the head of the FBI’s Counterterrorism Division, “We got the passenger manifests from the airlines. We recognize some names, Dick. They’re al-Qaeda.” Clarke replies, “How the f*ck did they get on board then?” He is told, “Hey, don’t shoot the messenger, friend. CIA forgot to tell us about them.” As they are talking about this, they see the first WTC tower collapse on television. [This alleged conversation is highly improbable; perhaps, it was invented in the ensuing cover-up; though it is theoretically possible that the 9/11 perpetrators indeed supplied the FBI’s Counterterrorism Division with the bogus passenger lists, prepared in advance, and being a part of the set-up, that might contain some alleged “terrorists” names.]

September 11, 9.59 AM – The top of the South Tower of the World Trade Center (presumably, above the “impact spot”) suddenly tilts to the southeast and began to crash all the way down spreading beneath itself first some debris and then only the fine dust – to which the entire Tower’s structure was instantly and unexplainably reduced.

Left – the top of the WTC South Tower tilts to the southeast (towards the wall opposite of the impact spot) at the beginning of its collapse. Right – the top of the South Tower collapsed about half-way down (in about only 5 seconds) crushing and spreading fine steel dust under itself.

The fall produced a sound of an avalanche – as if it were not a tower made of steel and concrete, but a kind of snowball. Relatively undamaged and heavy upper parts of the Tower’s structure managed to reach the ground with the speed comparable to freefall speed – so that the top of the Tower actually hit the ground in only 11-12 seconds counting from the moment it had first tilted. It was about the same speed a stone would gather being thrown from the Tower’s top. Thus, it should be considered that the “dusty” texture of the former Tower’s structure beneath the heavy upper part was indeed so “fine” that the top of the Tower did not meet any resistance at all in its fall – as if on its way down there was not even dust, but simply air alone.

The dust itself was not only just fine, but also extremely volatile and as such it was transformed into a kind of a huge cloud which instantly enveloped lower Manhattan and remained airborne for at least half-an-hour initially making a visibility equal to zero – one could not be able to see even his own hand close to his face. Only after sometime the visibility begun to improve and surviving people were able to get out of their hidings and to escape the dangerous areas.

It is believed that over 80% of the former Tower’s structure (including all steel core and perimeter columns, internal decorations, office materials, furniture, cables, computers, and even people inside) was transformed into this unexplainable fine dust thrown all around Manhattan. This fine dust in some areas was reported to be knee-deep. Moreover, the dust particles were reported to be so small (its particles in general did not exceed 100 microns in size, while some particles were as small as only 0.2 microns – for comparison: a width of an average human hair is from 70 to 100 microns, or 0.07 - 0.1 mm); so, the dust was so permeable that its particles had eaten deep into skin of survivors and caused some great deal of itching. It was reported that to wash this dust out from one’s skin was quite a difficult task.

Most of the people who did not perish inside the South Tower, but were in its close proximity in the open, were killed by falling debris, which covered quite a huge area around. Most of the people who were at that moment inside the North Tower’s lobby and inside other buildings managed to survive. After the descending dust had slightly cleared the air and visibility had improved, there had been a strange orange glow (but not any burning flames) noticed – which persisted for quite a long time over the former spot of the Tower, being higher than a pile left of debris; this orange glow was clearly visible from adjacent streets and has even been shown on TV by various news agencies covering the events.

Dust after the WTC collapse (after its initial subside).

September 11, 9.59 AM – [attention, very important!] CNN transmits a report of Jamie McIntyre who is covering the Pentagon explosion; he describes a “confusion” and cites some military officers who said that some airborne object apparently struck the Pentagon wall on its side facing the Arlington Cemetery; it is not yet known what was the object – plane or helicopter or anything else, but the security staff now is evacuating the Pentagon building. At that moment he is interrupted by CNN news anchor – because the South Tower disappears in a huge cloud of dust; he is visibly shocked – he does not know what to say and only says that the South Tower disappeared and only the North Tower is still standing.

September 11, 9.59 AM – Irish TCM news reports: “A huge explosion has occurred at the second of the two twin towers hit by planes in New York. The tower is now covered in smoke.”

September 11, 9.59 AM – NBC news anchor commenting on the WTC collapse suggests that the building might have enormous structural effect and this building would probably have to be brought down, but, he says, it is too early to speculate.

September 11, shortly after 9.59 AM – CNN shows direct footage of the South Tower collapse; CNN anchor cites a certain terrorism security expert (who was, in fact cited not only by CNN alone, but by many news agencies) who, after commenting on the "secondary explosions", claimed that "whether in fact there wasn't something else at the base of the towers, that in fact was the coup de grâce to bring them to the ground". Shortly afterwards this term "coup de grâce" was cited by many other news outlets and also repeated by CNN several more times – equally applicable after the collapse of the North Tower.

September 11, 10.00 AM – [attention, important!] President Bush is said to confirm his shoot-down order: "[Vice-President] Cheney recommended that Bush authorized the military to shoot down any such civilian airliners – as momentous a decision as the president was asked to make in those first hours." Bush then talks to Defense Secretary Rumsfeld to clarify the procedure, and Rumsfeld passes word down the chain of command.

September 11, 10.00 AM – It was later claimed that the transponder for Flight 93 (which was supposedly hijacked with its transponder turned off) briefly turns back on. The plane is at 7,000 feet. The transponder stays on until about 10:03 a.m. It is unclear why the transponder signal briefly returns.

September 11, 10.00 AM – NEADS receives a call from a NORAD unit in Canada, reporting another suspected hijacked aircraft, heading South across the border towards Washington, DC. This is one of the numerous mistaken reports of hijackings received during the course of the events. According to Vanity Fair, "In the barrage of information and misinformation, it becomes increasingly difficult for the controllers to keep count of how many suspected hijackings are pending. So far, it is known that three have hit buildings, but given the uncertainty about the fates of American 11 and American 77 – no one knows yet that this is the plane that hit the Pentagon – the sense at NEADS is that there are possibly three hijacked jets still out there, and who knows how many more yet to be reported. At this point, no one on the military side is aware that United 93 has been hijacked."

September 11, 10.00 AM – ABC repeats footage of the South Tower collapse and its co-author Don Dahler from ABC's "Good Morning America" reports: "...The entire building has just collapsed, as if a demolition team set off; when you see the old demolitions of these old buildings, it folded down on itself, and it is not there anymore..." Peter Jennings, an ABC news anchor, says: "... The southern .. tower ... 10 o'clock eastern time this morning, just collapsing on itself. This is a place where thousands of people work. We have no idea what caused this. Um .. If you wish to bring ah .. anybody who ever watched a building being demolished on purpose knows .. that if you're going to do this you have to get at the .. at the under infrastructure of a building and bring it down..."

ABC Live screenshot at 9.00 MT (10.00 ET) – ABC reporter Don Dahler reports from Manhattan that the building has just collapsed as if a demolition team set it off. At 9.01 MT (10.01 ET) ABC repeats its footage showing how the WTC South Tower was disintegrating into a cascade of a fine white dust; the North Tower is on the right.

September 11, shortly after 10.00 AM – [attention, important!] At the instruction of National Security Adviser Condoleezza Rice, Deputy Secretary of State Richard Armitage sends a cable out around the world saying the U.S. government is still functioning. The first thing that occurs to Rice, she will later say³⁴, is that it is important to get a cable out to all diplomatic posts around the world, to say the United States government has “not been decapitated by this attack.... I thought to myself, we need to let everybody know that we’re still up and running.” (This satisfactorily proves that the U.S. Government was indeed at the danger of the destruction and confirms the fact of nothing less than a nuclear war was under way, or at least presumed to be under way.)

September 11, 10.01 AM – NORAD orders F-16 fighters to scramble from Toledo, Ohio. Although the base has no fighters on standby alert status, it manages to put fighters in the air 16 minutes later, a “phenomenal” response time – but still ten minutes after the last [allegedly] hijacked plane (Flight 93) has [allegedly] crashed. The 9/11 Commission concludes these fighters, along with fighters from Michigan, are scrambled to go after Delta Flight 1989. (Delta Flight 1989 was not out of contact with air traffic controllers and was not hijacked.) Meanwhile, according to the 9/11 Commission, no fighters are ever scrambled to intercept Flight 93.

September 11, 10.01 AM – CNN repeats brief account of events: the two planes hit the Twin Towers in New York, the South Tower has just collapsed 2 minutes ago, there are fires in the State Department and huge fires at the Pentagon, Washington; the State Department, the Pentagon and the White House are being evacuated; it is not known yet what caused the explosion at the Pentagon, but it is obvious that the US Government is very concerned about what is happening in the Pentagon. At this moment CNN news anchor Aaron Brown again interrupts this to inform that there was a third, huge explosion in Manhattan which was the cause of collapse of the South Tower. CNN news anchors wonders if there was any warning prior to the collapse and whether it was any kind of a precautionary measure.

September 11, 10.02 AM – [take a note of this event, it is extremely important!] The Sears Tower in Chicago begins its evacuation. FOX5 news TV channel is the first agency to report this strange event. At 10.02 AM the evacuation of The Sears Tower is also reported by CNN news anchor Aaron Brown.

September 11, 10.03 AM – The BBC reports it is confirmed that it was a plane that crashed into the Pentagon.

September 11, 10.03 AM – [attention, important!] CNN Live shows on TV screen the following text line: “BREAKING NEWS: THIRD EXPLOSION SHATTERS WORLD TRADE CENTER IN NEW YORK” – in the background of it is visible still standing North Tower and only a pillar of dust which remains of the South Tower.

10.03 AM. CNN Live in its Breaking News claims that the WTC South Tower was destroyed by an explosion (being third counting- as the first two being the two planes' crashes).

September 11, 10.03 AM – NBC Live quotes a certain FBI agent, who is suspiciously philosophizing that almost everybody could easily access the WTC Towers and in fact “many instruments” could have been used to carry out the attack [referring to the demolition of the Tower, not to the planes' impacts].

September 11, 10.03 AM – According to “9/11 Commission”, the NMCC learns about Flight 93 hijacking at this time. Since the FAA has not yet been patched in to the NMCC's conference call, the news comes from the White House. The White House learned about it from the Secret Service, and the Secret Service learned about it from the FAA. NORAD apparently is still unaware. Four minutes later, a NORAD representative on the conference call states: "NORAD has no indication of a hijack heading to Washington, D.C., at this time. (Considering that all alleged "calls" by passengers who supposedly used their "cellular phones" were apparently invented much later, in the ensuing cover-up, there are all reasons to believe that all of the abovementioned officials will learn about the alleged "hijacking" of Flight 93 only when it was actually shot down a few minutes later.)

September 11, between 10.03 – 10.05 AM, the exact time unknown – [attention, very important!] one of the passenger flights (either American Airlines 77, or the flight from Boston to Atlanta, or United flight from Chicago to New York, or, most unlikely, United Flight 93) is presumed to be shot down by the U.S. Air Force jet-fighter, which has carried out the shoot-down order of the President. The aircraft, allegedly a "Boeing 757" (however, the aircraft type could be incorrect), presumed not to hit the ground as a whole piece as claimed, but is believed to totally disintegrate while still airborne, with its small parts scattered around a vast area – judging by the fact that the FBI cordoned the crash area of 3 mile wide and 8 miles long. It is presumed also that the shot-down flight could not have been targeted by the "Sidewinder" heat-seeking air-to-air missile because of two reasons – firstly, this missile would most probably target one of the plane's two engines and this kind of damage would unlikely cause the entire plane's disintegration, and secondly, it would never engage itself on its own plane because the plane is supposed to transmit the IFF beacon signal ("I am a FRIEND, not a FOE") which would not allow the missile to engage on it. It is therefore believed that this aircraft could only be struck by the fighter's cannons; this suspicion was confirmed when one of the F-16 fighters returned to its base with its entire 20-mm cannon munitions spent on some alleged "exercise" (this "exercise" claimed to occur amidst those 9/11 horrors as just pre-scheduled routine thing). Residents whose property is adjacent to Flight 93 crash site are immediately placed under house arrest. Only after two weeks they will be allowed to move freely.

September 11, 10.04 AM – CNN Live again shows on TV screen the following text line: "BREAKING NEWS: THIRD EXPLOSION SHATTERS WORLD TRADE CENTER IN NEW YORK" – in connection with the recent collapse of the South Tower. On the background is seen only the North Tower enveloped in a huge cloud of dust. A few seconds before its text read: "CHICAGO'S SEARS TOWER EVACUATED".

10.04 AM. CNN Live in its Breaking News claims that the WTC South Tower was destroyed by an explosion (being third counting as the first two were the two planes' crashes). Left: "Chicago's Sears Tower evacuated".

September 11, 10.05 AM – [attention, extremely important!] Fox News shows how its reporter on the dusty street near the WTC tries to interview a witness, obviously a shill, prepared in advance, who claims to see the 2nd plane hitting the South Tower. The staged interview is promptly interrupted by an angry man passing by who steals the show and firmly states that there was no plane, but a bomb.

Dialogue: Unwanted witness: "No second plane, it was a bomb! A bomb in the other building, not a second plane! That was a bomb! Who said a second plane?" Reporter: "That's what we are told! A second plane, we saw it on television" Witness: "No! I saw everything" Fox news reporter (very chilly): "All right, thanks a lot".

Fox News reporter (right) is obliged to listen to an angry man (left) who states it was a bomb, not a 2nd plane.

September 11, 10.06 AM – An emergency dispatch reports that apparently another plane, possibly with a bomb onboard, is heading towards the Johnstown airport (located about 14 miles north of Flight 93 supposed crash site). The control tower at the Johnstown airport has been evacuated earlier – at around 10 AM, following reports of a suspect aircraft heading towards it.

September 11, 10.06 AM – witnesses would later report seeing a small, white jet plane near the crash site, around the time Flight 93 reportedly goes down near Shanksville, Pennsylvania. Many witnesses would also claim later Flight 93 was shot down by this white jet plane.

September 11, 10.06 AM – NBC Live reports that while details of the second plane that crashed into the WTC are still unknown, it is confirmed now that a third plane has deliberately crashed into the Pentagon.

September 11, shortly after 10.06 AM – [attention, important!] it is publicly announced that one hijacked passenger flight was shot down by the U.S. fighter because it had been presumed to be heading towards some nuclear power plant; the news have briefly declared on TV by several news agencies, but have never repeated; however, it is claimed later that the plane was allegedly “hijacked” and then fell by “itself” because of some fighting on board between the alleged hijackers and brave passengers. Two days after the attacks, it is reported that an unnamed New England flight controller ignored a ban on controllers speaking to the media, reportedly claiming “that an F-16 fighter closely pursued Flight 93 [however, it is unknown whether in this particular case Flight 93 was involved or some other flight]... the F-16 made 360-degree turns to remain close to the commercial jet.” He adds that the fighter pilot “must’ve seen the whole thing.” He reportedly learned this from speaking to controllers who were closer to the crash. It is also reported that the FBI agents on the crash scene ignored testimonies of several witnesses who saw the military jet-fighter and even attempted to convince those witnesses that it was not a fighter, but a turboprop C-130, which was unarmed and therefore had nothing to do with an accident. The mere fact that the matter of “armed-unarmed” was discussed was self-evident that United Flight 93 was indeed shot down [however, it should be reminded again that it is unknown whether in this particular case Flight 93 was involved or some other flight]. Some people from NORAD – ignoring the ban – also claimed the same thing about a certain F-16 being in pursuit of Flight 93 and so noticed on NORAD’s radars.

September 11, shortly after 10.06 AM – Counterterrorism “tsar” Richard Clarke is told by an aide, “Secret Service reports a hostile aircraft [is] ten minutes out.” Two minutes later, he is given an update: “Hostile aircraft [is] eight minutes out.”

September 11, shortly after 10.06 AM – Counterterrorism “tsar” Richard Clarke is told by an aide, “United 93 is down, crashed outside of Pittsburgh. It’s odd. Appears not to have hit anything much on the ground.”

September 11, shortly after 10.06 AM – President Bush is told that Flight 93 (it was claimed later about the exact “Flight 93”, while during this report the flight’s number was probably not specified) crashed a few minutes after it happened, but the exact timing of this notice is unclear. Because of the Vice President Cheney’s earlier order, he asks, “Did we shoot it down or did it crash?” Several hours later, he is assured that it “crashed”.

September 11, 10.06 AM – [attention, important!] CNN Live shows on TV screen the following text line: “BREAKING NEWS: THIRD EXPLOSION COLLAPSES WORLD TRADE CENTER IN NEW YORK” – in the background of it is a distant view of still standing North Tower and huge clouds of dust.

10.10 AM. CNN Live in its Breaking News claims that the WTC South Tower was brought down by an [intentional] explosion (controlled demolition)

September 11, 10.07 AM – NEADS finally receives a call from Cleveland flight control about Flight 93, saying it has a bomb on board. Cleveland says it has lost the plane’s transponder, but passes on its last known latitude and longitude. NEADS is unable to locate it on radar because it has already crashed. That was actually the first time when NORAD’s officials have been informed about the alleged “hijacking” of Flight 93. A former senior FAA executive, speaking on condition of anonymity, will later try to explain this failure, saying, “Our whole procedures prior to 9/11 were that you turned everything [regarding a hijacking] over to the FBI [meaning: but not to NORAD or to NEADS, but to the FBI].”

September 11, 10.07 AM – NEADS receives a warning of an unidentified plane over the White House and issues an immediate order to one of the fighter pilots (already airborne) to divert and intercept target.

September 11, 10.07 AM – Armed agents deploy around the White House. Secret Service agents at the White House appear with automatic weapons drawn. Still no word on the whereabouts of the VP Cheney. Calls into the White House were not answered.

September 11. 10.07 AM – ABC interviews an eye-witness said to be “Don Wright” who is on the site of the Pentagon. He claims that at 9.35 he was looking out of his windows when he saw a small, two-engine commuter plane that has approached from the South and crashed into the Pentagon. He confirms it was a deliberate act. When asked by an ABC news anchor to confirm that it was indeed a “small commuter plane” he says definitely “yes, it was”.

September 11, approx. 10.08 AM – [attention, the most important!] – CBS camera-man, who is constantly filming the events, runs into the abandoned WTC building 7’s lobby. His move is being accompanied by strange signals of a certain sound alarm (that could only be heard inside the WTC-7, not outside of it). The actual alarm sound (long beeps followed by two short beeps constantly repeated) is distinctly different from alarm signals of fire-engines and ambulances that are heard outside. In the WTC-7 lobby the CBS camera-man encounters a certain William Bennette – a most suspicious personality who is dressed in a “Secret Service’s” vest and wears a VRU hood over his head (the VRU hood is intended as a means of breath protection against bio- and chemical- hazards and could be as well used for protection against radioactive dust and radioactive vapor).

lobby of the abandoned WTC-7. Right: Mr. Bennette at the end of the conversation. Note the construction helmet in his left hand.

Mr. Bennette in a remarkably calm and composed manner (considering the unprecedented collapse of the South Tower only a few minutes ago that supposed to horrify everyone, the toughest servicemen inclusive) urges the CBS man to leave and says that everyone has already gone from the Building 7 and only he remained there (according to him, he was there to control that nobody goes downstairs). Mr. Bennette refuses to elaborate, but tells the CBS camera-man his surname and admits to be from the Secret Service. Mr. Bennette holds in his right hand the VRU hood (that he removed from his head prior to starting the conversation with the CBS camera-man), but what is the most suspicious (if not to say – outright incriminating) in this scene is that in his left hand Mr. Bennette holds a typical construction helmet – a highly unusual thing to be worn by the Secret Service personnel (especially considering that the supposedly “unexpected” collapse of the South Tower has occurred only a few minutes ago, while the collapse of the North Tower was yet to happen).

We could only guess what reason Mr. Bennette (who is by no means a construction worker) was issued the construction helmet for at that moment (or, almost certainly, prior to that moment)...

September 11, 10.09 AM – Command Center allegedly reports to FAA headquarters at this time that Flight 93 has crashed in the Pennsylvania countryside.

September 11, 10.10 AM – [attention, extremely important!] All U.S. military forces are ordered to Defcon Three (or Defcon Delta), which was the highest alert for the nuclear arsenal in 30 years. (This one was yet another clear indication of the unfolding nuclear war. Most probably, by this time an unexploded thermonuclear warhead of the peculiar “object” that hit the Pentagon has been cooled down enough to be recognized at last to be a real thing, not a joke.)

September 11, 10.10 AM – [attention, important!] CNN again shows footage of the collapse of the South Tower, followed by the same text on the TV screen: “THIRD EXPLOSION COLLAPSES WORLD TRADE CENTER IN NEW YORK”.

10.10 AM. CNN again claims that the WTC South Tower was destroyed by the “third explosion” (being third counting as the first two – the two planes’ crashes).

September 11, 10.11 AM – Irish TCM news reports: “Paul Begala, a Democratic consultant, said he witnessed an explosion near the Pentagon. “It was a huge fireball, a huge, orange fireball,” Begala said in an interview on his cell phone. He said another witness told him a helicopter exploded”

September 11, 10.11 AM – [attention, important!] NBC Live news anchors decides to replay a tape showing in detail how the WTC Tower is crumbling to a cloud of small debris and dust, starting from top, and in the same moment he connects to a woman, who is an NBC reporter on the WTC site, to ask about her opinion, because she has witnessed the actual collapse; the woman says it looks to her that the Tower has been demolished.

September 11, 10.12 AM – CNN reports an explosion on Capitol Hill; but then announces this is untrue only 12 minutes later.

September 11, 10.13 AM – Fox News 5 reporter taking interview from the Pentagon witnesses says she has heard a “loud boom” a couple of minutes ago, the witnesses from the Pentagon confirm that they also have heard the second explosion. Fox News reporter says it is believed that Washington Monument has been targeted.

September 11, 10.13 AM – [attention, extremely important!] CNN reports³⁵ on the evacuation of the United Nations building in New York City. Counterterrorism “tsar” Richard Clarke apparently began arranging the evacuation a short time before this³⁶. This seemingly “unimportant” piece of evidence would later prove to be one of the most valuable, indeed – about as valuable as the fact of the evacuation of the Sears Tower in Chicago that started 11 minutes earlier. It would be revealed later that the United Nations Building too had its built-in nuclear demolition scheme based on an underground thermonuclear charge – exactly as did the WTC buildings 1, 2 and 7 and the Sears Tower in Chicago.

September 11, 10.13 AM – [attention, important!] CNN Live again shows on TV screen the following text line: “BREAKING NEWS: THIRD EXPLOSION COLLAPSES WORLD TRADE CENTER IN NEW YORK” – in the background of it is visible still standing North Tower and only a pillar of dust which remains of the South Tower. At this moment, CNN news anchor Aaron Brown interviews Randy Mastro, former Deputy Mayor, New York, who explains to him how the city’s emergency services and leadership are going to respond to the tragedy. This interview is interrupted, because CNN receives news of an explosion on Capitol Hill. It is also reported about fires at the Washington’s Mall and that some plane has hit the Pentagon.

10.13 AM. CNN Live in its Breaking News claims that the WTC South Tower was brought down by an [intentional] explosion (controlled demolition).

September 11, 10.15 AM – [attention, very important!] Following the arrival of General Ralph Eberhart, the commander-in-chief of NORAD, incredibly massive steel doors designed to protect from a nearby thermonuclear blast internals of the Cheyenne Mountain, Colorado, where NORAD’s operations center is located, are ordered to be closed for the first time in its history – due to some “peculiar” internal alert, nature of which remains officially undisclosed. (This one was one more and final indication of the unfolding nuclear war.)

September 11, 10.15 AM – The front section of the Pentagon, that had been hit by the peculiar flying object, collapses. A few minutes prior to its collapse, firefighters saw warning signs and sounded a general evacuation tone. No firefighters were injured.

³⁵ <http://www.cnn.com/2001/US/09/11/chronology.attack/> (it is also confirmed by New York Times, 9/12/2001).

³⁶ <http://www.amazon.com/exec/obidos/ASIN/0743260244/centerforcoop-20> [Clarke, 2004, pp. 14-15]

Pentagon's wall collapses 29 minutes after the attack.

September 11, 10.15 AM – Fire and rescue workers at the Pentagon in response to the attack are evacuated to a nearby highway overpass, due to the warning of another hijacked aircraft flying towards Washington, DC, currently 20 minutes away. The warning is passed on by Special Agent Chris Combs, the FBI's representative at the Pentagon crash site. Combs received this information from the FBI's Washington Field Office, which is in direct contact with the FAA. According to a report put out by the government of Arlington County, Virginia, updates are announced of the approaching aircraft "until the last warning when [it] went below radar coverage in Pennsylvania, an estimated 4 minutes flying time from the Pentagon."

September 11, 10.15 AM – NEADS calls Washington flight control at this time. Asked about Flight 93, flight control responds, "He's down." It is clarified that the plane crashed "somewhere up northeast of Camp David.... That's the last report. They don't know exactly where." The crash site was in fact about 85 miles northwest of Camp David.

September 11, 10.15 AM – Less than 30 seconds after hearing that Flight 93 has crashed, NEADS receives a call informing it of yet another suspected hijacking in its area.

September 11, 10.15 AM – [attention, very important!] CNN news anchor Aaron Brown says that they have one eye-witness, a pilot, who claims to see how the second plane has crashed into the World Trade Center. He asks the pilot over the phone: "Sir? Can you tell me your name?" There is a clear silence in response. A few seconds later Brown urges the "pilot" to talk this time without insisting for his name. The "pilot" says: "This morning we are at the mid-town Manhattan at the 31st floor in the building facing south; we saw a seven sixty seven flying low down the center of Manhattan Island, heading towards downtown Manhattan; at about maybe twenty blocks north of the World Trade Center we saw the plane veered to the left and flied directly into the north side of the South Tower..." Aaron Brown: "This was... er... the second plane to get the tower, correct?". The "pilot": "This was the first plane, a seven sixty seven..."

September 11, 10.16 AM – [attention, important!] CNN Congressional Correspondent Kate Snow reports about the evacuation of the Capitol; people are running away from the building; the situation, according to her, is very chaotic. She says also that she saw some plane circling above the Capitol; it is unclear whether this is a civil or a U.S. military plane, but it seems to her that this plane might be a source of worries of the local security. She also says at 10.17 AM that five minutes ago there was something sounding like an explosion. She says it sounded like a "loud boom". She says she is on Pennsylvania Avenue, about two blocks away from the Capitol.

September 11, 10.16 AM – [attention, extremely important!] The BBC's reporter Jim Fish reports from the United States that General Richard Myers is cited by Associated Press as saying that it was a plane from New York to Washington (i.e. not AA Flight 77, neither UA Flight 175) that hit the Pentagon. Later this particular version about "Washington-bound flight" would be repeated by CNN at 5.37 PM, stating that Mrs. Barbara Olson (who allegedly called her husband Ted Olson from a hijacked plane that was about to strike the Pentagon) was allegedly on the flight bound to Washington, and not on AA Flight 77. Flight 77 would be eventually "assigned" to the Pentagon, but it won't happen until the late of 9/11 evening. Jim Fish continues citing one unnamed U.S. official that the second plane that hit the Twin Towers was a plane from New York (implying that it was AA Flight 77, rather than UA Flight 175, since the latter one was from Boston, not from New York). Jim Fish is interrupted at that point by the BBC's news anchor who wanted to listen to another important witness.

September 11, 10.17 AM – [attention, important!] NBC Live on TV reports from the WTC site saying "they worry that another building" (meaning the North Tower – since the South Tower has already collapsed) “may come down”. Only moments later NBC news anchor says: “Now I am told that there is concern that the second one is collapsing as well”.

September 11, 10.18 AM – NBC reports that Yassir Arafat, the leader of the PLO (Palestinian Liberation Organization) has condemned what has happened here in New York.

September 11, 10.19 AM – CNN news anchor Aaron Brown makes a brief account of today’s events and he mentions, among other things, that they [CNN] have been told by American Airlines, that one of their planes, a seven six seven, has been hijacked out of Boston today, but they do not know which of those two planes that hit the towers was that hijacked plane.

September 11, 10.20 AM – It is publicly reported that alleged fires at the State Department were caused by a car bomb.

September 11, 10.20 AM – [attention, important!] CNN news anchor Aaron Brown talks to a certain “David” who is in the Capitol and who claims to have on the phone line a certain “Barbara”, a wife of his friend, and this Barbara while driving her car, witnessed the plane as it hit the Pentagon. Barbara says over the phone that she saw a large commercial plane, which was flying too fast and too low; she says she saw it clearly how it has happened. When Brown asks her if she believes that it was a commercial airliner that hit the Pentagon, she answers definitely “Yes”. She say it was flying at 45 degrees (probably meaning vertical angle), but she cannot see any details of the airline or the type of the aircraft. When asked by Brown how big were the fireballs, she avoided answering this question.

September 11, shortly after 10.20 AM – [attention, important!] It is publicly reported that an explosion in the Pentagon was caused by a car bomb.

September 11, 10.22 AM – In Washington, the State and the Justice Departments are evacuated, along with the World Bank.

September 11, 10.22 AM – CNN Live Breaking News reports that the first plane that hit the World Trade Center was American Airlines Boeing 767 from Boston.

September 11, 10.22 AM – [attention, important!] CNN Live Breaking News for the first time reports a plane hit the Pentagon by its text line on the TV screen only – without providing any further details.

September 11, 10.23 AM – CNN reports that the evacuation of the State Department was caused by fires, in only a next second it again repeats for the third time that it was the third explosion that brought down the South Tower of the World Trade Center.

CNN TV screen at 10.23 AM (ET). CNN reports about fires at State Department and for the fifth time confirms that the World Trade Center Tower in New York was brought down by the third explosion.

September 11, 10.23 AM – The Associated Press reports, “A car bomb explodes outside the State Department, senior law enforcement officials say.” Counterterrorism “tsar” Richard Clarke later claimed that he has heard these reports at this time and has asked Deputy Secretary of State Richard Armitage in the State Department to see if the building he’s in has been hit. Armitage supposedly goes outside the building, finds out there’s no bomb, and calls his colleagues to inform them that the reports are false.

September 11, 10.24 AM – Jane Garvey, head of the FAA, orders the diversion of all international flights with US destinations. Most flights are diverted to Canada.

September 11, 10.24 AM – NBC Live reports that a car-bomb exploded near the State Department.

September 11, 10.25 AM – CNN reports that there was no explosion on Capitol Hill as reported earlier.

September 11, 10.25 AM – [attention, very important!] UK Channel 5 reports probably the most interesting of all September 11 news. Its news anchor, reporting on the South Tower collapse, says precisely as follows: "What we can see is that sections of the other tower are also crumbling [the other Tower will start to collapse only 3 minutes later – so we at this moment cannot see anything at all] - now the reason this is happening, according to the website for the World Trade Center, they're actually telling us that the structure, the outside cladding of this building is integral to the safety and security of it. Once you penetrate that apparently the very structure of the building is under threat and that's why one tower has already collapsed." (This meant that some WTC official had the presence of mind to even provide live updates to the World Trade Center's official web-site at the very moment of those unprecedented events were unfolding. Even the event of collapse of the South Tower has been duly updated on the web-site – well before the North Tower began to collapse.) The news anchor then continues to explain on his own that the North Tower is now also "crumbling", because of some structural damage, and says that "it is currently in the process of collapsing", mentioning also that what we could see in the TV is the live picture (North Tower was still intact then); about a minute later – at 10.28 AM (ET) the North Tower indeed begins to collapse.

UK Channel 5 Live TV screen at 10.26 AM (ET) when its news anchor says that the North Tower is in “process of collapsing” – according to the WTC own web-site. At 10.28 AM the North Tower indeed begins to collapse.

September 11, 10.27 AM – NBC Live reports from the Pentagon that according to military officials another hijacked plane was detected being 27 miles away and heading towards Washington. NBC reporter Jim Miklaszewski says that Pentagon security officials announced over loud speakers that all people near the Pentagon and even pedestrians walking near the Pentagon have to take cover immediately.

September 11, 10.27 AM – [attention, very important!] Some witnesses at the WTC site feel the ground shaking just before the North WTC tower starts collapsing: Fire Patrolman Paul Curran is in front of the US Customs House (WTC 6), next to the North Tower. He says, “all of a sudden the ground just started shaking. It felt like a train was running under my feet.... The next thing we know, we look up and the tower is collapsing.” EMS Lieutenant Bradley Mann is heading toward the EMS staging area on Vesey Street. He'd felt the ground shaking prior to the first collapse. He says, “The ground shook again, and we heard another terrible noise and the next thing we knew the second tower was coming down.”

September 11, 10.28 AM – [attention, very important!] The top of the North Tower of the World Trade Center tilts to the south (the impact spot of an alleged “plane” was on its north side, meaning, that exactly like it was the case with the South Tower, it tilted to the “wrong” direction relative to the spot of “impact”) and then started to crash down. After the antenna (on its roof) starts to move, the next sign that the top section of the building is moving downward is on floor 98, at the top of the “impact zone”.

The top of the North Tower at the very beginning of its collapse.

The rest of the North Tower collapse had an exact pattern of the collapse of the South Tower 30 minutes earlier. The heavy and relatively undamaged top of the Tower began to crash down, as if only being under the influence of gravity alone – crashing beneath itself first some debris and then – only that very fine dust to which the entire Tower was instantly reduced. The Tower's top managed to reach the ground with the same speed of free fall – like in the case of the South Tower 30 minutes earlier – so the entire destruction of the North Tower took about 11-12 seconds only. The rest of details you can see in the above description of the South Tower's collapse, because they were exactly the same, with probably only two extra details in comparison with the South Tower:

1) the roof antenna of the North Tower was more or less clearly visible even after the undamaged top of the North Tower has finally reached the ground – since the antenna was quite high (360 feet or 110 meters) it was still sticking up vertically for probably 12-14 seconds before slowly disappearing downwards as if it was melting from beneath; and 2) one adjacent building - the WTC-3 – the Marriott Hotel (former Vista Hotel) was instantly reduced to the same dust as the North Tower itself.

Most of the people who did not perish inside the North Tower, but were in its close proximity in the open, were killed by the debris, which was falling around quite a huge area. Again, some people who managed to hide themselves inside other buildings were able to survive. The huge cloud of dust after the North Tower's destruction again enveloped the entire Lower Manhattan and greatly reduced visibility in the WTC site and around it, because it remained airborne for a quite some time. Probably, in 10 minutes or so the visibility slightly improved and all who managed to survive the second collapse began getting out of their hidings and leaving this horrible scene. The strange orange glow – similar to that in the case of the South Tower – became clearly visible from adjacent streets after the visibility has been improved.

September 11, 10.28 AM (10.28a ET time on CNN screen) – [attention, very important!] CNN Breaking News shows in their direct coverage on TV how the North Tower is collapsing in precise detail and commenting that the White House is being evacuated due to an alleged “credible threat to it as claimed by the Secret Service” and “there is also a large fire at the Pentagon and the Pentagon is being evacuated” (without mentioning anything this time that it might have been hit by any plane).

CNN Live at 10.28 ET shows the very beginning of the North Tower' top collapse – followed by the Tower's complete disintegration into a cascade of fine dust.

September 11, 10.30 AM – [attention, very important!] CNN producer Rose Arce reports from the WTC site how the North Tower has collapsed. She mentions, among other things, some extremely important information: the top of the Tower before its collapse “suddenly started to shake”.

CNN Live TV screenshot at 10.30 AM (ET). CNN producer Rose Arce reports from the WTC site that the top of the tower “suddenly started to shake” before its collapse.

September 11, 10.30 AM – NBC Live reports that the second plane that crashed into the World Trade Center is believed to be a “Boeing 727” or could be even a “Boeing 757”. NBC says it has confirmed report about the first plane – which is confirmed to be American Airlines Flight 11 Boston to Los Angeles and that yet another plane has reportedly crashed into the Pentagon.

September 11, 10.32 AM – [attention, very important!] – The BBC world new anchor cites CBS as saying that 2 planes crashed to the WTC were one from Boston (implying that it was AA Flight 11), and one from Dulles (implying that it was AA Flight 77, rather than UA Flight 175).

September 11, 10.34 AM – There are reports of a car bombing at the State Department. CNN news anchor Aaron Brown says that they are going to verify these reports.

CNN Live in its Breaking News, referring to Associated Press, reports a car bombing at the State Department at 10.35 (ET).

September 11, 10.34 AM – [attention, extremely important!] – The BBC world repeats footage of the North Tower’s collapse and its screen shows running text saying that “Buildings are being evacuated in Chicago after explosions in New York and Washington”. In fact, it was not “buildings”, but only one single building evacuated in Chicago: “The Sears Tower”. It is very important to take note of this particular detail, taking into consideration that it was not Empire State Building in New York that was evacuated, but the Sears Tower in Chicago. Later, when we come to study about the demolition scheme of the Twin Towers you will understand why this particular detail of the “evacuation of buildings in Chicago” is worth remembering..

The BBC screen at 10.34 AM repeats the North Tower’s collapse and forming of a cloud of dust. Running text below reads: “Buildings are being evacuated in Chicago after explosions in New York and Washington”.

September 11, 10.36 AM – [attention, important!] White House declares the Washington area “a free-fire zone”. That meant that Air Force pilots were given authority to use force (means to fire at any airborne object), if the situation required it, in defense of the nation’s capital, its property and the people.

September 11, 10.36 AM – [attention, important!] CNN Live interviews a former New York Police Commissioner Howard Safire, who, among other things, mentions that the World Trade Center was designed to withstand a direct impact of the Boeing 707.

September 11, 10.37 AM – [attention, important!] CNN reports of a 747 down near Pittsburgh (other news agencies reported it as well). Downed plane later said to be a 767.

September 11, 10.39 AM – [attention, very important!] Vice President Cheney tries to bring Defense Secretary Rumsfeld up to date over the NMCC’s conference call, as Rumsfeld has just arrived there minutes before (he was out supposedly “observing damage” inflicted by the impact on the Pentagon’s wall). Cheney explains that he has given authorization for hijacked planes to be shot down and that this has been told to the fighter pilots. Rumsfeld asks, “So we’ve got a couple of aircraft up there that have those instructions at the present time?” Cheney replies, “That is correct. And it’s my understanding they’ve already taken a couple of [!] aircraft out.” Then Rumsfeld says, “We can’t confirm that. We’re told that one aircraft is down but we do not have a pilot report that they did it.” (Here they were talking of at least one passenger plane already shot down, but maybe even two).

September 11, 10.40 AM – [attention, very important!] CNN shows how the wall of the Pentagon has collapsed – the live picture shows a nice green lawn in front of the Pentagon absolutely undamaged, as well as many standing lamp posts (which were supposed to be toppled by the plane’s wings if there was any plane involved). At this minute CNN news anchor also reports that it was a fourth explosion in Lower Manhattan – which brought down the second World Trade Center Tower.

9.40 AM (ET) CNN Live shows a nice green lawn and several standing lamp posts in front of the Pentagon after part of it has collapsed. The movie is apparently not CNN's own, but provided by WUSA.

September 11, 10.42 AM – [attention, important!] the FAA tells the White House that it still cannot account for three planes in addition to the four that have crashed. Vice President Cheney later says, “That’s what we started working off of, that list of six, and we could account for two of them in New York. The third one we didn’t know what had happened to. It turned out it had hit the Pentagon, but the first reports on the Pentagon attack suggested a helicopter and then later a private jet.” (The FAA at that moment was not talking of any aircraft used in attack against anything like the WTC or the Pentagon – it was talking about those planes confirmed to have crashed; there were four of such crashed already confirmed at that moment. Cheney, who knew for sure that the Pentagon was hit by a certain supersonic cruise missile from the very beginning, and not by a private jet, and not by a helicopter, obviously has invented the abovementioned story much later – during the ensuing 9/11 inquiry.)

September 11, 10.42 AM – [attention, important!] Some fighter pilots hear a message over a shared channel: “Attention all aircraft monitoring Andrews tower frequency. Andrews and Class Bravo airspace is closed. No general aviation aircraft are permitted to enter Class Bravo airspace. Any infractions will be shot down.”

September 11, 10.42 AM – CNN while reporting on the recent crash of a part of the Pentagon mentions that until now it is uncertain whether it was a plane or a helicopter that has crashed into the Pentagon.

September 11, 10.43 AM – CNN reports that the second plane is suspected to be heading towards the Pentagon. At that moment CNN cameraman moves his camera several times back and forth towards the damaged part of the Pentagon and along the green lawn in front of the entire Pentagon, showing the entire lawn intact, with all lampposts standing and without any sign of a plane’s crash whatsoever.

CNN cameraman at the Pentagon site moves focus of his camera along the lawn in front of the Pentagon, showing that there is no any sign of a large plane’s crash whatsoever. In the same time the Pentagon officials report the “second plane”, thus implying that the “first” one was also a plane. It is 10.43 AM (ET).

September 11, 10.45 AM – All federal office buildings in Washington are evacuated.

September 11, 10.45 AM – [attention, very important!] Russian President Vladimir Putin phones the White House, wanting to speak with the U.S. President. With Bush not there, Condoleezza Rice takes the call. Putin tells her that the Russians are voluntarily standing down a military exercise they are conducting, as a gesture of solidarity with the United States. (However, there are hard reasons to suspect that conversation was far more serious than only “solidarity” – it will be clear later, at the very end of this book; besides, there are also some other claims that it was the U.S. side which kindly requested Putin to stop that military exercise, because the United States was a little bit “nervous”; Russia at that moment was practicing – no more no less – an attack by its strategic bombers against the United States).

September 11, 10.45 AM – Second hijacked plane said to be heading for Pentagon. An F-16 jet scrambled to deal with the situation. CNN news anchor briefly mentions the news.

September 11, 10.46 AM – U.S. Secretary of State Colin Powell cuts short his trip to Latin America (he is in Lima, Peru) to return to the United States.

September 11, 10.47 AM – CNN reporter on the Pentagon site Chris Plante reports that there are reports of the second hijacked aircraft approaching the Pentagon and it is expected to arrive to the Pentagon any time soon; he says he personally saw that an F-16 fighter jet circling above the Pentagon a few minutes ago has now headed west in response to the alleged threat.

September 11, 10.48 AM – Police confirm the crash of a large plane in Somerset County, Pennsylvania.

September 11, 10.49 AM – CNN reporter Chris Plante on the Pentagon site reports that he spoke to one of the Pentagon officials, who have said that a plane inside the Pentagon building has been identified as a “Boeing SEVEN SIXTY SEVEN”. He repeats it one more time: “a full-sized airliner – Boeing SEVEN SIXTY SEVEN”, and continues to report that “...at this point they are waiting for the arrival of a possible second plane. They say that fighter jets have been scrambled to address this matter...” (Please, note, that initially it was claimed that United Airlines Flight 175 was the plane that struck the Pentagon – so it coincided with initial claims of the Pentagon officials at this moment – since UA 175 was a Boeing 767, while eventually it was blamed on American Airlines Flight 77 – which was a Boeing 757.)

September 11, 10.50 AM – [attention, very important!] Footage by the BBC shows a peculiar strikingly white plane, seems to be a special kind of the Boeing 747, flying very slowly in the protected airspace above the White House (view from Lafayette Square). Later it was found to be nothing else than the so-called “doomsday plane” that could only be engaged during a real nuclear war.

The BBC screen at 10.51 - 10.53 AM showing the peculiar white plane flying slowly over Lafayette Square.

September 11, 10.50 AM – [attention, very important!] CNN reports one of the most controversial pieces of information, which would later lead to serious suspicions that the U.S. Air Force shot down not only United Flight 93 alone, but some other plane as well – may be American Flight 11, or Untied Flight from Chicago to New York, or even both. CNN’s anchor Aaron Brown interrupts CNN’s reporter at the Pentagon site to say that an extraordinary piece of information has been just received from Washington: “...It’s extraordinary bit of information coming out of Washington now. Let me add to something that we said earlier. We have a report now that a large plane crashed this morning north of the Somerset County airport, which is in western Pennsylvania, not too terribly far from Pittsburgh, about 80 miles or so, a “Boeing 767 jet.. [Apparently meaning that the former CNN report of a 747 crash now has been amended – the plane has been at last identified as 767.] Don’t know whose airlines it was, whose airplane it was, and we don’t have any details beyond that which I have just given you. We don’t know -- we don’t know -- if this is somehow connected to what has gone on in New York and Washington, but we do know that another plane has crashed, this one about 80 miles south of Pittsburgh, or at least to southeast of Pittsburgh.” However, the text in CNN Live TV screen at that very moment still says that it was a “Boeing 747” – which is outdated information referring to old news first reported at 10.37 AM. (Note that UA-93 was a “Boeing 757”, so neither reported “747”, nor “767” really match flight UA-93.)

CNN text at 10.50 ET still says it was a Boeing 747.

September 11, 10.54 AM – CNN reports that Israel has evacuated all its diplomatic missions around the world.

September 11, 10.55 AM – Following an alarm that Air Force One is targeted, its pilot undertakes an evasive maneuver – rapidly pulling his plane high above normal traffic. At that moment Air Force One still flies alone – being unprotected by any fighters escort – despite that such a fighters escort has been demanded quite a long time ago.

September 11, 10.57 AM – New York Mayor R. Giuliani speaks to the television channel New York 1 and offers a message of reassurance to the people of New York City.

September 11, 10.57 AM – New York Governor George Pataki says all state government offices are closed.

September 11, 10.58 AM – [attention, important!] CNN confirms its earlier information that a passenger plane, a Boeing 767, later believed to be a Boeing 747, has crashed near Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

September 11, 10.59 AM – CNN reports from the WTC site that dust from the Tower's collapse is minimal two inches thick everywhere. It was not possible to see one's own hand because of dust and the people had to make masks in order to be able to breath, followed by footage of the people around the WTC site covered in dust.

CNN shows dust around the WTC at 10.59 AM (ET).

September 11, 11.00 AM – [attention, extremely important!] ABC reports that the fate of Flight 77, a Boeing 757 from Washington, Dulles to Los Angeles, with 58 passengers, 2 pilots and 4 flight attendants, it still uncertain. ABC claims that "it is not certain whether that's the one that went into the Pentagon or whether it's one of the other aircraft that went into the Twin Trade Towers".

September 11, 11.00 AM – [attention, extremely important!] Lauren Ashburn from "USA Today" interviews Jack Kelley, a foreign correspondent of "USA Today", who is said to have just returned from Israel. Jack Kelley possesses some extraordinary piece of information in regard to the Twin Towers' collapse. He claims that some FBI officials have a "suspicion" that the Twin Towers were brought down by explosives packed in some cars that were allegedly parked in the basements of the Towers.

Dialogue:

Lauren Ashburn: "Joining me is Jack Kelley, now he is a foreign correspondent - war correspondent - and just came back from Israel. He has some information about these attacks. Jack, what can you tell us happened, first in New York." Jack Kelly: "Um, apparently what appears to happen was that at the same time 2 planes hit the building, that there ... that the FBI most likely thinks that there was a car or truck packed with explosives underneath the buildings, which also exploded at the same time and brought both of them down." Lauren Ashburn: "Now that's the first time were hearing that, so 2 planes and explosives that were in the building, is that correct?" Jack Kelley: "That is the working theory at this point, that is still unconfirmed but that is what the FBI is going on at this point."

Jack Kelley from USA Today is being interviewed by Lauren Ashburn

The information, revealed by Jack Kelly, in fact, remains one of the most seditious pieces of the entire 9/11 evidence. It confirms that the U.S. Government has indeed concocted some second "truth" for the prominent people's consumption: the Twins were allegedly brought down by "mini-nukes" belonging to terrorists that were supposedly hidden in an underground parking lot (it is well-known to any high-ranking security official or to any prominent politician that the so-called "car-bomb" is merely a non-revealing name of a mini-nuke that is used by officials in open publications in order not to scare the plebs).

Ironically, a few years later, "USA Today" would "acknowledge" that its former star reporter, Jack Kelley, used to fabricate quotes and entire stories... However, it seems that this one he did not fabricate – he simply revealed to the public everything that he was told by the FBI that was not sure at that moment if their "mini-nukes theory" would be for everybody or only for the exclusive consumption of high-ranking officials.

Later, at 04.25 PM the same day, in his interview to Lauren Ashburn shown by CBS, Jack Kelley would mention as a matter of fact, besides the hijacked planes, terrorists led by Osama bin Laden, also planted "car-bombs" – as if the existence of the alleged "car-bombs" had been already an established fact.

September 11, 11.00 AM – [attention, very important!] NORAD implements a little known plan to clear the skies and give the military control over U.S. airspace. The plan, Security Control of Air Traffic and Navigation Aids (SCATANA), was developed in the 1960s as a way to clear airspace above the U.S. and off the U.S. coast in the event of a confirmed warning of a nuclear attack by the Soviet Union. It should be noted that this plan has nothing to do with the earlier orders by FAA- all planes down. NORAD issued its own order roughly 30 minutes after the FAA issued its order. It should be noted also that this plan could not have been implemented in an event of an unconfirmed nuclear attack, but only a confirmed one.

September 11, 11.00 AM – More skyscrapers and tourist attractions are evacuated, including Walt Disney World, Philadelphia's Liberty Bell and Independence Hall, Seattle's Space Needle, and the Gateway Arch in St. Louis.

September 11, 11.01 AM – [attention, very important!] New York Mayor R. Giuliani urges citizens to stay at home and orders an evacuation of the area south of Canal Street. CNN re-transmits his warning over its TV channel. The way this warning sounded reminds one of a typical alert of a civil defense system in the time of a real war.

September 11, 11.03 AM – [attention, extremely important!] MSNBC news anchor Rick Sanchez reports one of the most seditious pieces of information about the 9/11 perpetration – he cites some police officials who "believe" that the Twin Towers might have been demolished by certain "explosive devices" packed in vans that were parked in the basements of the Towers. He says precisely as follows: "Police have found what they believe to be a suspicious device and they fear that it may lead to another explosion..." "...I spoke with some police officials moments ago, Chris, and they told me they have reason to believe that one of the explosions, besides the ones made with the planes, may have been caused by a van that was parked in the building that may have had an explosive device in it."

MSNBC Live screen at the moment Rick Sanchez reports a peculiar piece of information about a “van packed with explosives” that might have been the cause of the Twin Towers’ collapse. On the left frame there is a screen text that says hot news: United Airlines confirms crash of 2nd plane.

The information, revealed by Rick Sanchez here, confirms for the second time that the American Government has indeed concocted the second “truth” for the “patrician” consumption claiming that the Twin Towers were allegedly brought down by “mini-nukes” belonging to the terrorists.

September 11, 11.04 AM – CNN again shows pictures of the Pentagon, featuring undamaged green lawn in front of the damaged part of the building – along with all standing lamp posts and followed by footage of the rescue efforts at the Pentagon scene. CNN Military Affairs Correspondent Jamie McIntyre covers the rescue efforts; he mentions, among other things: “...it was an aircraft, at least some kind of an aircraft, and there is at least one witness who has identified it as a civilian aircraft that hit the side of the building...”

CNN Live at 11.01 AM (ET) shows the Pentagon.

September 11, 11.05 AM – [attention, very important!] New York Mayor R. Giuliani again urges all those who work or live south of Canal Street to walk directly north in an orderly fashion.

September 11, 11.08 AM – CNN reports that “...a [Boeing] 747 en route from Chicago to New York city crashed in the Somerset County, Pennsylvania, at about 80 miles to the south-east from Pittsburg, Pennsylvania... that’s the accident...”

September 11, 11.10 AM – [attention, very important!] CNN shows its earlier footage referring to the time before the Twin Towers collapsed. CNN reporter interviews one man on the street asking him what happened; the man with “ABM” logo on his shirt says that he was inside the Tower on B-1 floor when the explosion occurred, he says lifts were blown off; then, according to him, about 10 minutes later the second tower “went off”; he confirmed that he personally saw the second explosion with his very eyes, when it burst out of the second building; he says he was late to get out of the building because he was helping others to get out of it – practically dragging them out. The man did not even imply that it might have been any planes that hit the Towers – he was clearly using terms such as “explosion”, “went off”, “blown off”, etc. Later this man was identified as Mr. Kenneth Johannemann. (Later – on August 31, 2008, Johannemann presumably committed suicide by way of a gunshot wound to the head. His death was a surprise to everyone and instantly raised suspicion amongst 9/11 researchers.)

CNN interviews an eye-witness Mr. Kenneth Johannemann who did not see any plane at all, but only the explosions (an earlier footage).

September 11, 11.11 AM – [attention, very important!] The BBC repeats footage from the Sarasota school where President G.W. Bush delivers his first 9/11 speech. The running text on the BBC TV screen informs that a plane which has crashed in Pennsylvania was a Boeing 747 en route from Chicago to New York (rather than the Boeing 757 – i.e. UA Flight 93 from Newark to San Francisco as claimed later).

The BBC screen at 11.11 AM says it was a 747 jetliner from Chicago to New York crashed in Pennsylvania.

September 11, 11.11 AM – NBC Live interviews an eye-witness at the Pentagon site said to be “Steven Gerard” who claims to see that it was a plane that struck the Pentagon He says: “I was just casually looking out of my window and in the corner of my eye I saw what looked like maybe a 20-passenger turbo-jet... coming in the shallow angle like it was landing – right into the side of the Pentagon...”

September 11, 11.15 AM – [attention, important!] Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld speaks with President Bush, and tells him that the Department of Defense is working on refining the rules of engagement, so pilots will have a better understanding of the circumstances under which an aircraft can be shot down.

September 11, 11.16 AM – [attention, important!] Russian President Vladimir Putin phones President Bush while he is aboard Air Force One. Putin is the first foreign leader to call Bush following the attacks. He earlier called the White House to speak with the president, but had to speak with Condoleezza Rice instead. Putin tells Bush he recognizes that the U.S. has put troops on alert, and makes it clear that he will stand down Russian troops. US forces were ordered to high alert. Bush later describes, “In the past... had the President put the – raised the DEF CON levels of our troops, Russia would have responded accordingly. There would have been inevitable tension.” Bush therefore describes this phone call as “a moment where it clearly said to me, [President Putin] understands the Cold War is over.”

September 11, 11.18 AM – American Airlines reports it has lost two aircraft. American Flight 11, a Boeing 767 flying from Boston to Los Angeles, had 81 passengers and 11 crew aboard. Flight 77, a Boeing 757 en route from Washington's Dulles International Airport to Los Angeles, had 58 passengers and six crew members aboard.

September 11, 11.20 AM – Taliban news conference announced.

September 11, 11.21 AM – [attention, important!] CNN briefly mentions news as only a text on its TV screen saying that American Airlines confirms the loss of two of its flights, one of the lost American Airlines flights – Flight 11 was from Boston to Los Angeles; and the second lost American Flight was Flight 11 from Dulles to Los Angeles; and that one United Airlines jet crashed near Pittsburgh.

4 frames with CNN texts on TV screen within a minute between 11.21 and 11.22 AM (ET).

[attention, important!] Then, CNN news anchor Aaron Brown from behind the frames says as follows:

“...we are now getting a report from American Airlines which says one of its flights - its flight from Boston to... I believe... to Los Angeles, correct me guys if I am wrong [meaning that "guys" from American Airlines are still on the line listening to what he is saying] is... is... is down. What they say is they lost contact with it ...81 people on board... this would be the second American Airlines flight to have been involved presumably and there is yet another flight this one from Dulles to Los Angeles is down with 54 passengers on board... So, again... there are two American Airlines one - Dulles, Washington D.C., to Los Angeles, the other - Boston to Los Angeles, both American Airlines planes, reported by the Airlines to be down; it is also believed that an American Airlines plane 767 was involved with one of the hits on the World Trade Center as well... We don't know the reason why is American and not any other... we won't speculate this to whether there is or not... we just tell you what the facts are... as we get them and that's what we have... American says two of its planes down... and I assume that is two other than one hit the Trade Center...”

At this point Brown is interrupted by another reporter who wishes to say something:

“...and we have a report of a crash in the Somerset County, Pittsburgh...” Brown: “er.. right, right... er... I believe that a seven six seven or as we are getting reports, perhaps a seven forty seven, which does not quite fit into what we believe, flies from Chicago to New York, is also down as well and I do not know the Airlines involved there... Let me just go back... er... OK, I do now - it is United Airlines plane... so we have a number of planes down and number of planes involved in these attacks... er... Boston to Atlanta if I am reading the notes correctly... ahead... an American Airlines seven sixty seven with 81 passengers on board, 9 flight attendants, 2 pilots, is the flight 11 reported down, this is American Airlines flight 11, and American Airlines flight 77 - which is a seven five seven jetliner - Dulles airport outside of Washington to Los Angeles International with the 58 passengers on board, 4 flight attendants, 2 pilots, also reported down. And then there is a United Airlines jet that crashed er... about 80 miles, er... 80 miles to the south-east of Pittsburgh. ”

At this point Aaron Brown is interrupted by another reporter who says that there is a report that another hijacked plane is heading towards Washington.

September 11, 11.25 AM – [attention, very important!] The BBC world news anchor says that American Airlines has confirmed loss of its two flights, and "they know that" two more aircraft were involved, one of them being a United Airlines 737" [according to later versions, none of "737" was involved in 9/11 events].

September 11, 11.26 AM – [attention, extremely important!] CNN reports that the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention is preparing bioterrorism teams to respond to the incidents in a precautionary move. The preparation is not based on any known bioterrorism threat. (However, it is suspected that it was based on a known radiation alert.)

At this point the running line of text (yellow color) on CNN TV screen says the following: "Part of Pentagon collapses after airliner reportedly crashes into military nerve center" – the word "reportedly" has been used in this case as if it has not been firmly established yet whether it was indeed a passenger plane that crashed into the Pentagon.

CNN TV screen between 11.26 and 11.27 AM (ET).

September 11, 11:27 AM – CNN reports that United Airlines says that United Flight 93, en route from Newark, New Jersey, to San Francisco, California, has crashed (without mentioning that it crashed in Pennsylvania and without mentioning how many passengers were on board). CNN reporter says it is not sure if they are talking about the same plane that crashed earlier in Somerset County, Pennsylvania that Aaron [Brown – CNN news anchor] was talking about. The airline also says that it is "deeply concerned" about another flight. Later it will be revealed that the matter of concern was United Flight 175.

September 11, 11.30 AM – [attention, very important!] General Wesley Clark, former supreme commander of NATO says on TV (as reported by CNN, which conducts an on-line live conversation with Clark):

"This is clearly a coordinated effort. It hasn't been announced that it's over. We don't know how it will finally conclude. There is likely to be more trouble before this concludes. We've got to protect the American people first. We're still hearing reports of aircraft that are out there. There is no way of knowing when all of the possible incidents have taken place or been aborted by whoever is behind this. We have to be ready for whatever will happen next. Only one group has this kind of ability and that is Osama bin Laden's; it has to be the first suspicion..."

General Clark delivers quite a lengthy speech (the above are only excerpts from it), he speaks about the hijacked planes and even he says they [the military] know about several car-bombings, however, he does not say anything that it was exactly a plane that crashed into the Pentagon – it sounds especially suspicious.

September 11, ~11.30 AM (approximate time³⁷) – [attention, the most important!] NBC reporter Pat Dawson discusses the comments of Albert Turi, the Chief of Safety for the New York City Fire Department. He says: “...The Chief of Safety of the Fire Department of New York told me that...er...shortly after 9 o'clock here had roughly 200 men in the building trying to effect rescues of some of those civilians who were in there...er... and that basically he received word of the possibility of a secondary device, another bomb going off. He tried to get his men out as quickly as he could but he said that there was another explosion which took place and then an hour after the first hit here, the first crash that took place, he said there was another explosion which took place in one of the towers here. So obviously he, according to his theory, he thinks that there were actually devices that were planted in the building. One of the secondary devices he thinks that took place after the initial impact was, he thinks, may have been on the plane that crashed into one of the towers. The second device, he thinks, he speculates, was probably planted in the building...er... so that's what we have been told by ...erm... Albert Turi who is the Chief of Safety for the New York City Fire Department, he told me that just moments ago.” The reporter then goes on to describe continuing explosions which are blamed on faulty gas lines. “...the bottom line is, that according to the Chief of Safety of the New York Fire Department, he says that he lost a great many men in those secondary explosions and he said that there were literally hundreds if not thousands of people in those towers when the explosions took place. He said everything above the 60th floor was extremely difficult to get to as you can imagine.”

NBC TV screen between 11.17 and 11.59 AM (ET) showing its reporter Pat Dawson voicing an unprecedented admission of Albert Turi about certain “secondary devices” in the planes, and other “secondary devices” planted in the buildings.

September 11, ~11.30 AM (approximate time³⁸) – [attention, extremely important!] An ABC news anchor says that he spoke to a chief of safety for the New York Fire Department who said that he received a word about certain “secondary devices” in the buildings and one of such “bombs” just went off; he said he believed that these actual devices were implanted into the buildings.

September 11, 11.43 AM – [attention, important!] There are unconfirmed reports that a spokesman of the radical Islamic Jihad movement said that the “attacks were a consequence of US policy in the Middle East.” It is claimed therefore that Islamic Jihad may be responsible for the attacks. [Please, try to remember these particular comments about “Islamic Jihad”, you might find it interesting if you re-read Prologue to this book where there are more details provided on this mysterious organization.]

³⁷ This interview with Albert Turi is one of the most seditious parts of the 9/11 evidence. Therefore, the original NBC 9/11 footage that supposed to contain it was removed from any and every publicly accessible on-line archives. That particular hour with the NBC footage (known as “NBC Sept. 11, 2001 11.17 AM - 11.59 AM”) is conspicuously missing in any dedicated video collection. All former YouTube pages that used to host this excerpt prior to 2010 were removed either. I have in my possession only a cut part of that seditious footabe, which I uploaded to YouTube: http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=TTYMzTH_ZPc ; unfortunately, it was without any initial time-mark; therefore, it was impossible to establish the exact time when this information was broadcast by NBC. It could be anything between 11.17AM and 11.59AM. Thus, I have no choice than to assign to this piece of info the “approximate time ~11.30 AM”.

September 11, 11.43 AM – ABC and Associated Press both report, citing Mayor R. White, that a certain United Airlines plane has safely landed at Cleveland Hopkins International airport because of a report of a bomb aboard the plane; United has identified the flight as Flight 93; in the same news release United has repeated its concern for another plane – Flight 175. This mysterious news release remains up to this day the most controversial piece of information of 9/11 – none of the independent investigators could confirm whether it was really Flight 93 that was one of the two planes shot down over Pennsylvania or it was indeed United Airlines flight from Chicago to New York as reported earlier. According to this report, all the passengers of Flight 93 have been safely evacuated upon landing. The situation with independent inquiry into this matter is aggravated by the “no speak the truth” ban imposed on air-traffic controllers, flight dispatchers and other airlines staff by the FBI and by the refusal of the U.S. Government to reveal to the public all passenger-lists pertaining to various flights involved in a 9/11 mess-up.

September 11, 11.59 AM – [attention, very important!] United Airlines confirms that Flight 175, from Boston to Los Angeles, has crashed with 56 passengers and nine crew members on board. Emergency personnel at the scene say there are no survivors. This will later lead to serious suspicions that U.S. Air Force shot down not only United Flight 93/or Chicago-New York flight and American Flight 11, but also United Flight 175. The mere fact that they were talking about the “scene” of a crash, already makes it impossible to later switch to a new story that Flight 175 might be the one to crash into the Pentagon, as they began to do a couple of hours later, not even to say about the WTC 2nd Tower – as they began to do later in the evening.

September 11, 12.00 Noon – President Bush arrives at the Louisiana Barksdale Air Force Base headquarters in a Humvee escorted by armed outriders. Reporters and others are not allowed to say where they are. Bush remains in this location for approximately one hour, recording a brief message and talking on the phone.

September 11, 12.04 PM – Los Angeles International Airport, the destination of two of the hijacked American Airlines flights, is evacuated.

September 11, 12.05 PM – [attention, very important!] NBC reports the downed flights are identified as: American Airlines Flight 11 from Boston to Los Angeles; American Airlines Flight 77 from Dulles to Los Angeles; United Airlines Flight 93 from Newark to San Francisco; United Airlines Flight 175 from Boston to Los Angeles. (This is probably the most important and the most seditious piece of the news about the entire September 11; it is suspected that the U.S.’s own fighter-jets, in a panic ensuing from the WTC explosions and the Pentagon attack, actually shot down all four planes – the most “heroic” deed later ascribed to the non-existent Arabic “hijackers”).

September 11, starting from about noon and continuously all day and even the next day – Various TV news channels repeatedly show images of Palestinians apparently rejoicing over the attacks. The Palestinians are dancing, firing their guns to the air and giving away candies to the passers-by. Several videos of this kind were supplied to all major news agencies. It was found later that all of them were shot well in advance and kept waiting their hour – in reality, on some of these videos the Palestinians were celebrating some wedding, on another – were firing their guns to the air during some funeral.

Palestinians supposedly “celebrating 9/11 attacks”.

September 11, 12.05 PM – [attention, very important!] CIA Director Tenet tells Defense Secretary Rumsfeld about an intercepted phone call from earlier in the day at 9.53 AM [an interesting call whereby someone was talking about certain “Doctor’s plans”]. An al-Qaeda operative talked of a fourth target just before Flight 93 crashed. Rumsfeld’s assistant Stephen Cambone dictates Rumsfeld’s thoughts at the time, and the notes taken will later be leaked to CBS News. According to CBS, “Rumsfeld felt it was ‘vague,’ that it ‘might not mean anything,’ and that there was ‘no good basis for hanging a hat.’ In other words, the evidence was not clear-cut enough to justify military action against bin Laden.” A couple of hours later, Rumsfeld will use this information to begin arguing that Iraq should be attacked, despite the lack of verified ties between al-Qaeda and Iraq...

September 11, 12.08 PM – Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon has offered his country's condolences to the United States. "This has been a threat to freedom. It a turning point in the war against terrorism," he said. Israel will observe a day of mourning tomorrow in sympathy with the U.S.

September 11, 12.15 PM – San Francisco International Airport is evacuated and shut down. The airport was the destination of American Airlines Flight 77, which was one of the aircraft claimed to be second to strike the World Trade Center.

September 11, 12.15 PM – The Immigration and Naturalization Service says U.S. borders with Canada and Mexico are on the highest state of alert, but no decision has been made about closing borders.

September 11, 12.16 PM – U.S. airspace is cleared of aircraft except for military and emergency flights. Only a few transoceanic flights are still landing in Canada.

September 11, 12.26 PM – Russia put troops on alert. The country's air force meanwhile announced a series of emergency “anti-terrorist” measures to protect Russian air space. "The series of barbaric acts directed against innocent people fills us with indignation and revolt," said Putin in a telegram to U.S. President George W. Bush. "Such inhuman acts must not go unpunished," he said, according to the Interfax news agency. Putin later telephoned U.S. National Security Advisor Condoleezza Rice to ask her to convey his condolences to Bush. These strikes are "an unprecedented aggression by international terrorism" which "go beyond the borders of the United States," the Russian president said. "This is a challenge to the whole of humanity," he added, saying the unprecedented terrorist acts underlined "the relevance of the Russian proposal to unite efforts to fight terrorism." At least three money exchanges offices in the Russian capital refused to accept dollars. Cashiers said they had been given instructions not to accept the U.S. currency, universally used as a safe haven by Russians.

September 11, 12.30 PM – [attention, important!] it is publicly reported that the plane which hit the Pentagon has been identified as United Airlines Flight 175.

September 11, 12.35 PM – Mullah Abdul Salam Zaeef, the Taliban ambassador to Pakistan, said in reaction to the news of the terror attacks that "we want to tell the American children that Afghanistan feels your pain and we hope that the courts find justice."

September 11, 12.42 PM – NBC reports that according to latest information they received the “other plane they crashed into the World Trade Center” has been identified by American Airlines as their Flight 77, which was hijacked while carrying 64 people from Washington Dallas Airport to Los Angeles. And United Airlines says that its Flight 93, a Boeing 757, on the way from Newark, New Jersey to San Francisco crashed about 80 miles south-east of Pittsburgh, with 45 people on board, and the United says another of its planes, Flight 175, that was a Boeing 767, bound from Boston to Los Angeles, with 65 people on board also crashed, but the United does not say where that plane crashed. This means that even in the afternoon time, September 11, 2001, neither American Airlines, nor United Airlines could say definitely about the tracks of their planes and were not sure at all where their planes disappeared to.

September 11, 12.55 PM – [attention, very important!] It is reported by WB 11 TV that while it was a passenger plane that hit the North Tower, it was some “small” plane that hit the South Tower. Moreover, a terrorism expert, Professor Charles Bahn, who is interviewed by this TV-channel at this moment (a man in a blue shirt shown in two screenshots below) claims nothing less than the planes, which hit the Twin Towers, were pre-loaded with certain explosive devices and there should not be any doubt that the planes must have been taken over by the terrorists while still on the ground – in order to enable the terrorists to load the planes with the explosives before take-offs, according to this terrorist expert.

WB 11 TV screen shows running text at 12.55 PM saying: 'PASSENGER PLANE CRASHES INTO TOWER ONE SMALL PLANE CRASHED INTO TOWER TWO'. At a live background is only dust that remained of the WTC.

September 11, 1.02 PM – [attention, extremely important!] New York Mayor Rudolph Giuliani orders an evacuation of Manhattan South of Canal Street.

September 11, 1.02 PM – [attention, very important!] Rumsfeld [allegedly] informs President Bush that it had been “an American Airlines plane” that hit the Pentagon. Previously, there had been a question as to whether it was hit by a smaller plane or a helicopter. However, it was exactly during this particular conversation when it was decided that the United States was indeed attacked and it was not an act of terror, but an act of war – because Rumsfeld also told Bush at that moment, “This is not a criminal action. This is war.” [Apparently by that time a warhead at the Pentagon, had been cooled down and so could be at last studied and confirmed as being a thermonuclear one.] This phrase will be repeated by the U.S. President in his address to the American people and to the entire world only two minutes later.

September 11, approximately 1.03 PM – [attention, very important!] It appears that the peculiar nuclear term “ground zero” was publicly mentioned for the first time. FOX shows its infamous staged interview by reporter Rick Leventhal with a guy they identify as Fox freelancer Mark Walsh (who is in reality alleged to be Canadian actor Mark Humphrey). “Mark Walsh” claims to see both [aluminum] planes cutting into the [steel] Twin Towers and then he goes into a lengthy explanation about the “structural damage” of the collapsed Towers (as if he has already read the report of the 9/11 Commission at that moment). This appears to be the “plowing of the ground” to plant the seeds of the aviation fuel pancake collapse theory and it is during this explanation that Mr. “Mark Walsh” mentions the “ground zero” words for the first time. Where this supposed “freelancer” managed to learn the term “ground zero” (which at that moment was still a Civil Defense’s designation of the place) remains a mystery up to this day. The true identity of “Fox freelancer Mark Walsh” remains a mystery too, although many people have recognized him as Mark Humphrey. Rick Leventhal repeats the “ground zero” words while describing the WTC spot a couple of minutes after that interview.

September 11, 1.04 PM – [attention, important!] President G. W. Bush, speaking from an undisclosed location, says that all appropriate security measures are being taken, including putting the U.S. military on high alert worldwide. He begins his speech with this pathetic sentence: “Freedom itself was attacked this morning by a faceless coward...” Bush asks for prayers for those killed or wounded in the attacks and says: “Make no mistake, the United States will hunt down and punish those responsible for these cowardly acts.” Moreover, at this very moment Bush first changes the official name of the September 11 perpetration from the previous “Act of Terror” to the new: “Act of War”.

September 11, 1.04 PM – President Bush announces that the U.S. military has been put on high alert worldwide.

September 11, soon after the President’s speech – [attention, very important!] CNN reports one of its most seditious 9/11 claims from the Pentagon site (it has never been repeated and was excluded from CNN’s own news transcripts published later). CNN reporter Jamie McIntyre:

“...From my close-up inspection, there is no evidence of a plane having crashed anywhere near the Pentagon; the only actual side of the building has crushed; there are no large tail sections, wing sections, er... fuselage... nothing like that anywhere around that would indicate that the entire plane crashed into a side of the Pentagon...”

At these words a CNN cameraman moves focus of his camera from the actual Pentagon building to a largely intact green lawn in front of the Pentagon and moves his camera to several directions showing different parts of the lawn – starting from the bridge on the right and then following the entire lawn – just to make sure that anyone watching TV would not doubt what he is saying and that there are indeed not any signs at all of a plane’s crash. (Later, the same CNN reporter will claim that he was at the Pentagon site and saw with his very eyes wreckage of a passenger plane – so that all those “conspiracy theorists” should not have any doubt that it was indeed American Airlines Flight 77 that allegedly crashed into the Pentagon...)

CNN cameraman moves his camera from the Pentagon building which has just collapsed to a green lawn in front of the Pentagon to illustrate that there is no any evidence at all of a plane’s crash at this site.

September 11, 1.27 PM – CNN reports that another building in New York is on the verge of collapse. The building near the collapsed World Trade Centre towers was hit and damaged by falling debris. CNN reports it looks likely to fall down. It remains unknown what building they did mean at that moment.

September 11, 1.27 PM – A state of emergency is declared by the city of Washington.

September 11, 1.30 PM – President Bush leaves Louisiana on Air Force One, and flies to Nebraska’s Offutt Air Force Base, where the U.S. Strategic Command is located.

September 11, 1.30 PM – [attention, important!] President Bush calls Mike Morell, his CIA briefer, to his cabin near the front of the plane. He asks Morell who he thinks is responsible for the attack. Morell replies, “I would bet everything on bin Laden.” He lists some of Osama bin Laden’s previous attacks: the 1998 attacks on the American embassies in Kenya and Tanzania, and the 2000 attack on the USS Cole in Yemen. Bush asks about the Palestinian extremist group, the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine (PFLP). Morell says it is unlikely this group could be responsible for the day’s attack, as PFLP simply doesn’t have the capability for something like this. Bush asks how long it will take to know “if bin Laden is to blame". Based on previous attacks, Morell says, it will probably be a matter of days. Bush says that if anything definitive is learned about the attack, he wants to be the first to know.

September 11, 1.44 PM – [attention, important!] The Pentagon announces that aircraft carriers and guided missile destroyers have been dispatched toward New York and Washington. Around the country, more fighters, airborne radar (AWACs), and refueling planes are scrambling. NORAD is on its highest alert.

September 11, 1.46 PM – [attention, important!] Afghanistan's hard-line Taliban rulers condemn the devastating terrorist attacks in New York and Washington and reject suggestions that Osama bin Laden could be behind them. "We never support terrorism. We too are targets of terrorism," Abdul Hai Muttmain, the Taliban's spokesman in the southern city of Kandahar, told The Associated Press in a telephone interview. Muttmain, who is the spokesman for the Taliban's reclusive leader Mullah Mohammed Omar and one of the most senior Taliban officials, dismissed allegations that Osama bin Laden could be behind the attacks in the United States. "Such a big conspiracy, to have infiltrated in such a major way is impossible for Osama," said Muttmain. He said Osama bin Laden does not have the facilities to orchestrate such a major assault within the United States.

September 11, 2.00 PM – Senior FBI sources tell CNN they are working on the assumption that the four airplanes that crashed were hijacked as part of a terrorist attack.

September 11, 2.00 PM – [attention, very important!] U.S. "shadow government" is formed. Initially deployed "on the fly," executive directives on government continuity in the face of a crisis that date back to the Reagan administration are put into effect. Approximately 100 midlevel officials are moved to underground bunkers and stay there 24 hours a day. Presumably among them are a number of FAA managers, members of a designated group of "shadow" managers, who slip away from their usual activities around midday. Officials rotate in and out of the shadow government on a 90-day cycle. (This was another clear indication of the unfolding nuclear war. It should be also noted that the "shadow government" was 100% Republican-represented.)

September 11, 2.00 PM – [attention, very important!] F-15 fighter pilot Major Daniel Nash returns to base around this time, after chasing Flight 175 and patrolling the skies over New York City. He says that when he gets out of the plane, "he [is] told that a military F-16 had shot down a fourth airliner in Pennsylvania."

September 11, 2.02 PM – [attention, extremely important!] Russian TV news program "Сегодня" ("Today") presents the account of today's events in the USA. Its news anchor Alexander Khabarov lets have the floor to the NTV's international editor Filipp Trofimov, who, among others details, reports one of the most important pieces of the 9/11 evidence (verbatim in Russian): "...ПВО США обнаруживают четвёртый лайнер предположительно направляющийся к Пентагону. Истребитель отводит угрозу. Самолёт падает недалеко от президентской резиденции Кэмп-Дэвид...." An exact English translation: "... anti-aircraft defense of the USA discovers the fourth airliner – presumably heading towards the Pentagon. A pursuit plane wards off the threat. The aircraft falls down not very far from Camp David, the presidential residence..."

Screenshots of the Russian TV program "Сегодня" ("Today") at 2.02 PM-2.03 PM (New York time).

It is difficult to establish which of the two shot down planes was reported at that news release – Flight 93 or Flight 77; it could be any of them, or even some other flight, since it is suspected that up to 4-5 flights could have been shot down during the 9/11 panic.

September 11, 2.30 PM – The FAA announces there will be no U.S. commercial air traffic until noon EDT Wednesday at the earliest.

September 11, 2.49 PM – At a news conference, Giuliani says that subway and bus service are partially restored in New York City.

September 11, 2.50 PM – [attention, important!] President Bush arrives to Nebraska Air Force Base. Bush stays on the plane for about ten minutes before entering the United States Strategic Command bunker at 3.06 PM (this is a very deep underground structure intended to be used in case of a nuclear war).

September 11, 3.12 PM – It is claimed that the terrorists who hijacked four planes and attacked the U.S. Pentagon and World Trade Centre are believed to have flown the planes themselves. Terrorism experts say the suicide mission could only have succeeded with the use of trained terrorist pilots. Gene Poteat, President of the Association of Former Intelligence Officers said, “They flew the planes themselves. No pilot, even with a gun to his head, is going to fly into the World Towers.”

September 11, 3.15 PM – President Bush convenes the first meeting of the National Security Council since the attacks occurred. He begins the video conference call from a bunker beneath the base. According to Condoleezza Rice, he begins with the words, “We’re at war.”

September 11, 4.00 PM – [attention, very important!] CNN National Security Correspondent David Ensr reports that U.S. officials say there are "good indications" that Saudi militant Osama bin Laden, suspected of coordinating the bombings of two U.S. embassies in 1998, is involved in the attacks, based on "new and specific" information developed since the attacks. (This is another implication of the second "truth" – it transparently hints that the "new and specific information" is nothing else than the alleged "car-bombs" allegedly used to destroy the Twin Towers from beneath were not different from the mini-nukes supposedly used by "Osama bin Laden & Co." to destroy the U.S. Embassies in Kenya and Tanzania on an anniversary of the Hiroshima bombing.)

September 11, 4.10 PM – [attention, very important!] CNN had reported that WTC-7 is in the danger of collapsing or may have already collapsed.

September 11, 4.14 PM - [attention, very important!] CNN mentions that the so-called "Islamic Jihad" has allegedly been commenting on the events (information on this particular topic comes from Israel).

September 11, 4.14 PM – [attention, important!] CNN news anchor Aaron Brown reports: “We’re getting information that one of the other buildings... Building 7... is on fire and has either collapsed or is collapsing... now we’re told there is a fire there and that the building may collapse as well.”

CNN Live TV screenshot at 4.14 PM (ET). The WTC-7 is the lone tall building on the right. Text on the screen (right frame) reads: BREAKING NEWS AMERICA UNDER ATTACK BUILDING 7 AT WORLD TRADE CTR. ON FIRE, MAY COLLAPSE. On the left frame CNN reports claims that came from Israel where it is reported that the so-called “Islamic Jihad” allegedly commented on the events leaving implication that it must have been at least suspected of being behind the attacks (considering that in the past the so-called “Islamic Jihad” took responsibility exclusively for mini-nuke bombings, known to the plebs as “car-“ and “truck-bombings”, this is the most transparent “hint” to the “initiated patricians” that the World Trade Center suffered nothing less than explosions of the mini-nukes, since the mini-nukes are the well-known “Islamic Jihad’s” specialty).

September 11, 4.27 PM – [attention, important!] The area around building 7 is being evacuated, supposedly because senior firefighters have determined it is in the danger of collapsing.

September 11, 4.29 PM – [attention, extremely important!] FOX 5 News reporter Elisabeth Leamy reports over the phone from near the Pentagon that an F-16 fighter-jet from the DC National Air Guard shot down the 4th passenger aircraft presumably heading towards the Pentagon. The DC National Air Guard was acting, according to Elisabeth Leamy, on simultaneous, but independent requests of the local Mayor and also of the White House.

FOX5 screen at 4.29 PM (ET) during Elisabeth Leamy’s report about the 4th passenger aircraft being shot down by the F-16 fighter-jet from the DC National Air Guard.

September 11, 4.53 PM – [attention, important!] The Radio Five Live show’s presenter will incorrectly claim that building 7 has already collapsed, saying, “25 minutes ago we had reports from Greg Barrow [The BBC’s New York reporter] that another large building has collapsed just over an hour ago.”

September 11, 4.54 PM – [attention, important!] NBC reporter Dan Abrams reports that WTC-7 is believed to be in jeopardy – according to officials; they are “concerned that the building may fall as well” and they are even [suspiciously] “concerned the way wind has been moving”.

NBC Live at 4.54 PM (ET) – NBC reporter Dan Abrams points to the WTC-7 (a building far on the right).

September 11, 4.54 PM – [attention, important!] The BBC domestic television news channel, the BBC News 24, reports, “We’re now being told that yet another enormous building has collapsed... it is the 47-story Salomon Brothers building [i.e. WTC-7].”

September 11, 4.56 PM (EST) – [attention, extremely important!] The BBC international channel, the BBC World, reports one of the most seditious pieces of the entire September 11 evidence that could shed some light to the confidential part of the so-called “truth” in regard to the causes of the WTC-7 collapse (as confidentially fed to various high-ranking officials, domestic and foreign ones).

The BBC news anchor says precisely as follows:

“...we have got some news, just coming in, actually, that the Salomon Brothers building in New York, right in the heart of Manhattan has also collapsed; this comes with a warning from the British Foreign Office couple of hours ago to British citizens that there is a real risk, ...let me get the exact words... the.. the British Foreign Office... the Foreign Department of British Government said there was a strong risk of further atrocities in the United States.. and it does seem as if there is now an another one with the Salomon Brothers Building collapsing. We got no word yet on casualties...”

The WTC-7 had not yet collapsed at that moment (it would collapse 24 minutes later), but it had been prematurely reported as “collapsed” since even a matter of casualties had been discussed. But the most important part of this statement is that the WTC-7 was apparently brought down in the same manner as the Twin Towers, being a “third” of the same kind, and, most importantly, that the collapse of the WTC-7 was nothing less than the third [terrorist] “atrocious”, apparently counting the first two “terrorist atrocities” as those applied to the WTC-1 and the WTC-2. This is the clearest indication that:

1) The WTC-1 and WTC-2 had collapsed from some “atrocious” causes which had nothing to do with the terrorist planes’ impacts (since the WTC-7 wasn’t hit by any plane, but collapsed from the very same kind of “atrocious”, at least, it was so according to the British Foreign Office, which distributed its warning to this effect around 2 hours prior to its collapse);

2) That all the three buildings – the WTC-1, the WTC-2 and the WTC-7 – were destroyed by nothing else than certain nuclear devices (“atrocious devices”) which represented news that was too dangerous to have been honestly released to the general public, but only (confidentially) to some high-ranking people. Actually, it shall be known that the term “atrocious” in this context is just another synonym of the typical “mini-nuclear” bombing – akin to the “car-” or “truck-bombing”. In the lexicon of the security officials terms such as “car-bomb”, “truck-bomb”, “Islamic Jihad”, and “atrocious” – all refer to the nuclear terrorism. Thus, if the word “atrocious” is used in this particular context, it shall be interpreted as if the British officials openly admitted that the WTC-1 and WTC-2 were destroyed by the mini-nukes, and the WTC-7 was destroyed by the mini-nuke too (although, in reality it was not even destroyed yet at the moment it was so reported).

The BBC World at 4.56 PM (EST) – during its unprecedented premature report on the collapse of the Salomon Brothers Building (a/k/a the collapse of the WTC Building 7 – that would only collapse 24 minutes later) as an alleged result of a “further terrorist atrocious”.

September 11, 5.07 PM – [attention, important!] The BBC’s New York reporter Jane Standley reports collapse (as if it had already happened some time ago) of the “Salomon Brothers Building” (official name of the WTC-7) live on TV while the very WTC-7, still intact, had been clearly visible on her background. The BBC news anchor claims (before switching to Jane Standley) that building 7 “collapsed” not because of any new terrorist attacks (as suggested by the BBC 5 minutes ago), but because it was allegedly “weakened” by the morning attacks. The WTC-7 will collapse in reality only 13 minutes later. Ironically, at the end of her report, when she begun describing devastation at the WTC site, Jane Standley compared it to devastation caused by a huge (she eventually found a right word after some hesitation) ...atom bomb.

The BBC reporter Jane Standley at 5.07 PM EST reports from New York that the 47-story Salomon Brothers building (the WTC-7) has collapsed as if it had already happened some time ago. The very WTC-7 is still clearly visible over her left shoulder (this is a live coverage and her background is a real contemporary picture). The following text line is clearly visible on the TV-screen:

“TERRORISM ATTACKS IN US

The 47 storey Salomon Brothers building close to the World Trade Center has also collapsed”.

The WTC-7 will collapse only 13 minutes later.

September 11, 5.10 PM – [attention, important!] The BBC World repeats the claim; its reporter says: “I was talking a few moments ago about the Salomon building collapsing and indeed it has... it seems this wasn't the result of a new attack but because the building had been weakened during this morning's attack.”

September 11, 5.13 PM – [attention, important!] The BBC World shows nice green lawn in front of the Pentagon building with all standing lampposts and its reporter says that they [the BBC] have information that the terrorist plane slammed into the ground floor of the Pentagon (rather than striking it from above). It shows a witness who says that first it was a bomb, but later it was told to him that it was a plane (much to his surprise). The witness proceeds to describe then, using his gestures, how the plane dove to strike the ground floor of the Pentagon, rather than its roof or its upper floors, and how its impact was followed by fireballs that spread up at the Pentagon's wall.

September 11, 5.15 PM – [attention, important!] Afghanistan's Taliban rulers have rejected claims that Osama bin Laden was behind today's attacks on New York and Washington. They say Osama did not have the means to carry out such well-orchestrated attacks. Osama bin Laden has been given asylum in Afghanistan.

September 11, 5.19 PM – CNN Breaking News shows its interview with Tom Clancy, a writer, questioning him about his opinion concerning extremism, suicide bombers etc. Text on CNN Live screen reads: “BUILDING 7 AT WORLD TRADE CTR. ON FIRE, ON VERGE OF COLLAPSE”. Beneath, running line of text reads: “NATO URGES ALL NON-ESSENTIAL EMPLOYEES TO LEAVE HEADQUARTERS IN BRUSSELS, BELGIUM”. About 2 minutes later, the interview is suddenly interrupted because there is some development in New York – it is believed that building 7 has collapsed, because there has been a new huge cloud of smoke over Manhattan and also the color of smoke has just changed.

CNN at 5.19 PM reports that the WTC-7 is on fire and on verge of collapse. It will indeed collapse only a minute later.

September 11, 5.21 (precisely 5.20.31) PM – [attention, extremely important!] 47-story building 7 of the World Trade Center complex collapses. No one is killed. It is claimed that the evacuated building is damaged when the twin towers across the street collapsed earlier in the day. It collapses precisely down in its footprint in 6.6 seconds, which is just 0.6 of a second longer than it would have taken a free-falling object dropped from its roof to hit the ground. The entire WTC-7 structure (including steel bars, concrete and the rest of materials – including internals) was also pulverized to unexplainable fine dust – exactly as the Twin Towers during their collapse. The dust cloud from the WTC-7's collapse has also enveloped a large area of Lower Manhattan. Witnesses also reported the ground shaking before its collapse.

The WTC-7 collapses in a cloud of dust.

September 11, 5.22 PM – [attention, important!] CBS News anchor Dan Rather comments that the collapse is “reminiscent of... when a building was deliberately destroyed by well-placed dynamite to knock it down.”

September 11, 5.23 PM – [attention, very important!] NBC News reporter Pat Dawson reports from near the WTC spot about the WTC-7 collapse: “...that they were afraid that another building in the complex - we later learned it was building 7, the one we showed you half hour ago; and just moments ago that building collapsed...”

NBC news anchor asks him: “We are just curious - is there any other building in danger of collapsing?”

Pat Dawson answers: “When we spoke to the Port Authority officials, as I've said probably in almost an hour and a half, they indicated that they were worried about a couple of buildings, but really they concentrated on building 7; that is the one that just fell literally moments ago; er... they did indicate that they specifically thought that there was another building that was in trouble; they just said they were nervous and there was a couple of buildings... and then specifically they sited building 7 - which is the building we have just referred to...”

5.23 PM (ET) NBC Live shows only a cloud of dust as all that is left of the WTC-7 – from about the same position where Dan Abrams was pointing to the WTC-7 half-an-hour ago; on the right Pat Dawson is talking about his conversation with the Port Authorities officials about their specific concern about the WTC-7.

September 11, 5.29 PM – [attention, important!] Many local news agencies report that building 7 has just collapsed without providing any details except that it was 47 stories high. It is claimed in the same news releases that the two planes crashed into the Twin Towers of the WTC (without stating any flight numbers) and that further 266 passengers on board the four crashed passenger planes are presumed dead – without adding that any of the planes might have been crashed into the Pentagon.

September 11, 5:30 PM – [attention, important!] CNN Senior White House Correspondent John King reports that U.S. officials say the plane that crashed in Pennsylvania could have been headed for one of three possible targets: Camp David, the White House, or the U.S. Capitol building.

September 11, 5.30 PM – [attention, extremely important!] The little known New York City agency named “Department of Design and Construction” (DDC) is appointed to oversee the WTC demolition site cleanup operation. At exactly 5.30 PM a group of workers assembled by DDC chief Kenneth Holden and his deputy, Michael Burton, gains permission to explore the WTC ruins. Under Burton’s direction, the team of “unbuilders” subsequently undertakes what journalist William Langewiesche has later described as “the most aggressive possible schedule of demolition and debris removal.” Later, however, it was found that a company bearing a peculiar name “Controlled Demolition Inc.” was actually appointed to remove the debris from the WTC site.

September 11, 5.30 PM – [attention, important!] ABC shows footage how the WTC-7 had collapsed, several times from several different vantage points, and repeats each of them several times. ABC reporter Bill Blakemore reports from the site that some firefighters standing around were a little bit shocked and have said that they would have even more work to do. The police are quoted as saying that “they feared that the WTC-7 was going to come down and they were evacuating people from around it”.

ABC repeats one of several available videos of the WTC-7 collapse shortly after it had collapsed.

September 11, 5.37 PM – [attention, very important!] CNN reports one of the most seditious pieces of 9/11 information: it claims that the Pentagon was hit by some hitherto unheard-of hijacked passenger plane bound to Washington. It is reported that a certain Mrs. Barbara Olson (a notoriously hawkish right-winger and CNN TV pundit, a third wife of an even more hawkish right-winger, Ted Olson, whom President Bush Jr. had appointed Solicitor-General after Olson persuaded the Supreme Court to appoint his election-losing client to the Presidency by a margin of one vote) was allegedly one of the unfortunate passengers on the hijacked flight, bound “to Washington”, which crashed into the Pentagon, killing all people on board. It is claimed that “late” Mrs. Barbara Olson allegedly called to her husband, moreover, called twice, using her cellular mobile phone, from aboard the hijacked flight – allegedly describing how the situation with the hijacking was unfolding.

CNN TV screen portrays Mrs. Olson in a manner as if she were already dead – followed by her years of birth and of alleged “death”. CNN news anchor Aaron Brown reports: “We heard earlier that Barbara Olson, frequent commentator here, was on the flight... they were going to Washington and they’ve been hijacked,... to Washington, she called her husband, said the hijacking was on the way, she said that for what she could tell that hijackers.. she did not indicate how many, except there were more than one, who’re with just knives and cardboard-cutters and that they herded all people on board of this flight to the back of the plane, including a pilot, and she asked her husband, the solicitor-general, Ted Olson, whom many of you will recall... he argued a post-election case before the Supreme Court... said to her husband: what could I do... and shortly after that that plane with Olson in it and many more... crashed into the Pentagon...” (Later it will be claimed that Barbara Olson was on the “hijacked” American Airlines Flight 77 from Dulles to Los Angeles, which will be “assigned” to hit the Pentagon – being the third plane on this particular task – after the initially mentioned United Flight 175 and the mentioned here “Washington-bound” flight.)

CNN TV screen between 5.37 and 5.38 PM (ET) shows ostensibly “late” Barbara Olson, who was alleged to call her husband twice from aboard a hijacked Washington-bound plane using a mobile phone. Running text on the right reads: “EUROPEAN UNION OFFICIAL DENOUNCES ATTACKS AS “ACT OF WAR BY MADMEN””.

September 11, 6.04 PM – [attention, very important!] NBC shows its earlier footage of the damage inflicted to the Pentagon – first for a few seconds it shows a huge burning electric generator, thrown to the right side by the flying object that struck the Pentagon, and a hole made by this flying object in a fence surrounding the generator and still undamaged grass before the fence; after that NBC reporter interviews one man, said to be “Mike Walter” who claims to see that it was definitely an American Airlines jetliner that struck the Pentagon, because he says there were two huge letters “AA” clearly visible on its fuselage (but not on its tail as it is supposed to be).

NBC screen at 6.04 PM shows the burning generator in front of the Pentagon and a certain Mr. Mike Walter.

CBS Live 9 screen at about the same time shows Mr. Mike Walter in front of the Pentagon talking about an alleged American Airlines flight allegedly flown over him that hit the Pentagon.

Interestingly, the same person – Mike Walter – who is said to be from “USA Today” is giving another interview near the Pentagon – this time to CBS Live 9. He says he was stuck in traffic and he definitely saw that it was an American Airlines jet that flew very low and struck the Pentagon. It is especially interesting, because till today there is one quite seditious video clip available on YouTube where Mike Walter during his morning interview to CBS says clearly as follows: "... I mean it was like a cruise missile with wings that went right there [pointing to the impact spot] and slammed into the Pentagon..."

September 11, 6.10 PM – [attention, very important!] New York Mayor R. Giuliani urges New Yorkers to stay home on Wednesday if they can.

September 11, 6.45 PM – President G. W. Bush arrives back at the White House aboard Marine One and is scheduled to address the nation at 8:30 PM. The president earlier landed at Andrews Air Force Base in Maryland with a three-fighter jet escort.

September 11, 7:02 PM – [attention, important!] CNN's Paula Zahn reports the Marriott Hotel near the World Trade Center is on the verge of collapse (in reality, it had already been pulverized instantly together with the North Tower during the latter's collapse) and says some New York bridges are now open to outbound traffic.

September 11, 7.05 PM – [attention, very important!] NBC reporter Anne Thompson appears to be the second reporter who used the peculiar nuclear term "ground zero" in regard to the World Trade Center demolition site. She is saying how she witnessed the Twin Towers collapse, and at this time she is already referring to the WTC site as "my ground zero". Moreover, she refers to the actual collapse of the Twin Towers as "the first explosion" and "the second explosion" correspondingly, and says that someone has told her that they have to leave, because they are waiting for "the third explosion" – apparently referring to the demolition of the WTC-7.

Soon after the WTC-7 collapse NBC reporter Anne Thompson already refers to the WTC site as "ground zero". The screenshot on the left is footage shot several hours earlier, because it is much lighter there and the WTC-7 has not collapsed yet, but even in that footage she already uses the nuclear term "ground zero".

September 11, 8:30 PM – President G. W. Bush addresses the nation, saying "thousands of lives were suddenly ended by evil" and asks for prayers for the families and friends of Tuesday's victims. "These acts shattered steel, but they cannot dent the steel of American resolve," he says. Bush says the U.S. government will make no distinction between the terrorists who committed the acts and those who harbor them.

September 11, 9:57 PM – New York Mayor R. Giuliani says New York City schools will be closed Wednesday and no more volunteers are needed for the Tuesday evening's rescue efforts.

September 11, 10.29 PM – [attention, extremely important!] FOX 5 News reports again repeating its earlier information that the F-16 fighter-jet from the 113th Wing of the DC National Air Guard shot down the 2nd passenger aircraft presumably heading towards the Pentagon. This time a certain uniformed servicewoman from the DC National Air Guard said to be Lt. Col. Phyllis Phipps-Barnes speaks to the FOX reporter and confirms that the 2nd passenger aircraft (the reference was most probably to Flight 93) was indeed shot down.

FOX5 screen at 10.30 PM -10.32 PM (ET) shows the US National Air Guard's servicewoman said to be Lt. Col. Phyllis Phipps-Barnes who confirms to the FOX reporter that her unit has shot down the "2nd passenger plane heading towards the Pentagon".

September 11, 11:54 PM – CNN Washington Bureau Chief Frank Sesno reports that a government official told him there was an open microphone on one of the hijacked planes and that sounds of discussion and "duress" were heard. Sesno also reports a source says law enforcement has "credible" information and leads and is confident about the investigation.

September 11, end of the day [attention, extremely important] – FEMA units began to arrive to New York from other cities of the United States and began being deployed at and around "ground zero" for an alleged "bio-terrorism" drill (which was peculiarly allowed amidst these unprecedented events). It shall be understood, though, that such a "drill" was nothing but a beautiful pretext for FEMA stuff to wear full haz-mat suits and to perform some necessary measurements of radioactivity at and around "ground zero" (still spelt then in the lower-case letters) areas without attracting undue attention from totally unprotected commoners who did not wear neither full haz-mat suits, nor even elementary respirators or gas-masks.

September 11, end of the day – [attention, extremely important!] A peculiar video-footage surfaces that purports to show the alleged "first plane" claimed to strike the WTC North Tower at 8.46 AM that morning. The footage is supplied to all major news agencies and is shown by many of them on TV that evening. It is claimed that some French movie-making crew, shooting a supposed documentary about a probationary firefighter, managed to occur with their video-camera switched on in exactly the right time and the right place – with a good view of that façade of the North Tower which was about to be hit.

The French crew (that consisted of two infamous Naudet brothers³⁹ – Jules and Gedeon) shooting a scene of their documentary "suddenly hears" a sound of a turbofan airliner. This follows by all participating actors throwing back their heads, which, in turn, follows by a camera-man re-directing his video-camera to the supposed source of the sound. The camera-man manages to trace the alleged plane passing right over his head up to its "impact" to the North Tower (meaning right up to the explosion in the North Tower).

The footage features: sound of a moving plane during the otherwise innocent documentary scene, all actors throwing back their heads at the sound, an image of a silverfish silhouette of a "plane" moving very fast towards the North Tower and disappearing inside its steel façade, and an actual explosion that tears the façade, followed by huge Hollywood-style orange fireballs.

This video is available on YouTube, for example, here⁴⁰ or here⁴¹.

Here are some screenshots from it:

CNN shows a peculiar footage supplied by a French film-crew that managed to “accidentally” capture at 8.46 AM the alleged “1st plane” on its flight and how it managed to penetrate steel perimeter columns of the North Tower. On the 2nd frame actors suddenly threw back their heads at the “sound” of the approaching “plane”.

The movie also shows in quite a detail how some cutting charges of explosives eat in succession into the steel perimeters apparently imitating the long wings of the “plane” cutting through the steel. Interestingly, in that case, the direction of the fireballs propagation was towards the camera-man, thus, being diametrically opposite the course of the supposed “plane” (as everybody could see in the case of the South Tower, it was vice-versa: the direction of the orange fireballs propagation coincided with the direction of the alleged plane’s movement).

September 11, end of the day – [attention, important!] NBC closes its news session for today with the following brief account of events: two planes hit the two Twin Towers in New York, which later collapsed (neither aircraft types, nor numbers of the two flights are elaborated); the Pentagon was hit by a third plane (neither an aircraft type, nor a flight number is elaborated); another plane – which was heading to its target, but crashed in Pennsylvania – the flight number is not elaborated, but the aircraft type is established – it is a “Boeing 767 (seven sixty seven)”; the WTC-7 collapse is not mentioned at all. Osama bin Laden, a Saudi dissident, is suspected to be behind the attacks.

September 11, end of the day – [attention, very important!] ABC appears to become the third news agency that uses a peculiar nuclear term “ground zero” in regard to the WTC demolition site. Two ABC reporters, near “ground zero”, interview a responder said to be a volunteer from California. Dialogue: ABC reporter: “- I just wanted to know how much fires is there; you said you were at ground zero, how much fires left?” Volunteer from California (who wears only a cheap home-made respirator mask around his neck, rather than a full haz-mat suit): “- Well, in the building seven there were no fires there whatsoever, but there was one truck putting water on the building, but it collapsed completely... And then, there are other buildings that were in flames, still coming up within the World Trade Center One, but not a lot.” ABC reporter: “- And you said you saw melted tour-buses, melted cars?” Volunteer: “- The cars that were right down there were just unbelievable, they were twisted and melted into nothing...”

ABC interviews a volunteer near “ground zero”.

September 12, 02.06 AM (ET) – [attention, very important!] CNN releases an updated version of news about the flight that allegedly hit the Pentagon: it is now claimed that it was American Airlines Flight 77. Mrs. Barbara Olson now is claimed to have been onboard Flight 77 when she made her two calls to her husband using her mobile phone. The rest of the story and its exact details are repeating the previous version – where Mrs. Barbara Olson was said to be on some Washington-bound flight (the first story was released at 5:37 PM, September 11, and it was immediately removed from the CNN website – in either video or text form – and it is available now only in its “seditious” version, thanks to some people who managed to record the live CNN footage on a VHS tape and then – made it publicly available).

September 12, earliest morning hours [attention, very important!] – several men in strangely “lunar-looking” full haz-mat suits are first noticed at “ground zero” (still not elevated to Capital Letters yet). The rest of the people there are totally unprotected, not counting that some of them wear self-made masks or respirators which they obtained on their own. These protected men were apparently FEMA officers measuring radioactivity at the site or either military ABC specialists doing some similar job.

September 12 – [attention, extremely important!] ISI⁴² Director Lt. General Mahmood Ahmed, extending his Washington visit because of the 9/11 attacks, meets with U.S. officials and negotiates Pakistan’s cooperation with the U.S. against al-Qaeda. It is rumored that later in the day of 9/11 and again the next day, Deputy Secretary of State Richard Armitage visits Mahmood and offers him the choice: “Help us and breathe in the 21st century along with the international community or be prepared to live in the Stone Age.” Pakistan’s President Pervez Musharraf will write in a 2006 book that Armitage actually threatens to bomb Pakistan “back to the Stone Age.” Secretary of State Powell presents Mahmood seven demands as an ultimatum and Pakistan supposedly agrees to all seven. Mahmood also has meetings with Senator Joseph Biden, Chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, and Secretary of State Powell, regarding Pakistan’s position. In only a few days it will be found by the Indians that a peculiar money transfer of 100,000 USD to the chief “hijacker” Mohammed Atta on personal orders of Mahmood Ahmed was made prior to 9/11. The Indians will publish this information in their newspapers and it would be quickly re-printed everywhere in the world. However scandalous, this revelation would not prompt the U.S. security officials to undertake any action either against their Pakistani colleagues in general, or against General Ahmed in particular.

September 12, morning new releases – [attention!] The “hijacked” planes are finally and officially (as to be reported to the public) assigned to their targets – Flight 11 is claimed to hit the WTC-1 (the North Tower), Flight 175 (previously assigned to the Pentagon) is claimed to hit the WTC-2 (the South Tower), Flight 77 (previously assigned to the South Tower) is claimed to hit the Pentagon, Flight 93 (previously claimed to aim on some nuclear power plant) is now claimed to aim on either the White House or on the Capitol; it is claimed that a group of brave passengers attempted to wrestle control of the hijacked Flight 93 from the hijackers and as a result of the ensuing fighting on board the aircraft fell somewhere in Pennsylvania – as a whole piece, not as small debris scattered around a big area.

September 12, evening – [attention, extremely important!] FEMA officer Tom Kenney appears on TV while it is also claimed that FEMA units arrived to New York for some supposed “bio-terror drill”. Kenney speaks to reporter Dan Rather right at “ground zero” and says that they [his FEMA unit] arrived on late Monday night (meaning the 10th) and went into action on Tuesday morning (meaning the 11th), and not until today (that being said on Wednesday evening) did they get the full opportunity to work the entire site [which shall be interpreted as “radiation levels were still too high in some areas and so his superiors prohibited working in those areas”]... He begins his interview with these words: “To be honest with you...”

There is a controversy in the timing he mentioned – it appears to many conspiracy theorists that FEMA had involved into an execution of the actual September 11 attacks since it had “suspiciously” arrived there “in advance”. However, it is not so simple, as it might appear at the first glance. Firstly, it was not an idea of FEMA’s own stuff to claim such a thing, but that of the then New York mayor Rudolph Giuliani who then badly needed to produce some plausible explanations in regard to two otherwise unexplainable things:

- 1) he needed to explain why did he set his command post outside of WTC-7 during the initial 9/11 events; and,
- 2) he needed to explain apparent decontamination procedures and other protective measures undertaken (including facts that some people wore full “lunar-looking” haz-mat suits). Tom Kenney himself, by the way, did not wear any haz-mat suit and it appears that his unit was not informed at all about radioactivity at “ground zero”.

Moreover, a wife of Tom Kenney revealed that her husband went to New York only after the 9/11 attacks.

Tom Kenney from FEMA describes how they arrived in New York on late Monday night being ready for some “bio-terror drill”. He begins with these words: “To be honest with you, we arrived on late Monday night...”

Thus, the initial issue of the timing of Kenney's deployment is overshadowed by the revelation that FEMA was allegedly planning the “bio-terror drill”, so-called TRIPOD, in New York City for September 12th, and allegedly had equipment in place before the 11th.

In his testimony to the 9/11 Commission former New York City mayor Rudolph Giuliani said:

“... the reason Pier 92 was selected as a command center was because on the next day, on September 12, Pier 92 was going to have a drill, it had hundreds of people here, from FEMA, from the Federal Government, from the State, from the State Emergency Management Office, and they were getting ready for a drill for biochemical attack. So that was gonna be the place they were going to have the drill. The equipment was already there, so we were able to establish a command center there, within three days, that was two and a half to three times bigger than the command center that we had lost at 7 World Trade Center. And it was from there that the rest of the search and rescue effort was completed.”

Of course, the “drill for biochemical attack” was the perfect pretext to explain to the gullible public the otherwise unexplainable presence of haz-mat suits, decontamination liquids, and other peculiar stuff (that had obviously nothing to do with the “conventional collapse” of the WTC buildings), as well as his suspicious desire not to use his Office of Emergency Management located inside the WTC-7 from the very beginning of events. The attempt to cheat the public in such a manner was quite awkward, and, instead of answering some questions, this attempt brought about even more questions and suspicions: it began to appear to many conspiracy theorists who believed these claims that FEMA indeed moved to near “ground zero” well before the events, that some FEMA officials were accomplices to the actual perpetration... But it was not so, of course. FEMA has never arrived with all its “bio-chemical” appliances before 9/11 events. They did it later – when they received an alert that some nuclear explosions have just occurred in the middle of Manhattan. The problem was that they simply did not know how to lie beautifully...

September 12 – [attention, extremely important!] It was later claimed by the CIA Director George Tenet, he had bumped into Pentagon adviser Richard Perle in the White House who tells him, “Iraq has to pay a price for what happened yesterday, they bear responsibility.” (It is difficult to understand what Saddam Hussein's Iraq had to do with 9/11 based on the official claims of the U.S. Government – alias “9/11 truth for the public consumption”, but when you will read this book further you will understand why Saddam Hussein had been suspected.)

September 12 and later on [attention, very important!] – Workers involved in the cleanup find that much of the World Trade Center towers and their contents have been pulverized to dust. Charlie Vitchers, a construction superintendent who oversees the operation, says:

“Apart from recoveries, we didn't find one thing. Nothing. Not even a file cabinet.... As we were working on the pile, people were saying, ‘We're not finding anything.’” He adds, “We weren't going to find anything that was made out of wood. But you think we would have found a computer.... We found cell phones. We found shoes. But with regard to furniture, nothing, not a thing, not a desk, not a wall panel.... For the most part there was nothing in the pile of debris that was recognizable.”

Crane operator Bobby Gray says:

“I don't remember seeing carpeting or furniture. You'd think a metal file cabinet would make it, but I don't remember seeing any, or phones, computers, none of that stuff. There were areas where there were no fires, which is not to say that they didn't experience tremendous heat anyway. But even in areas that never burned we didn't find anything.” He comments, “It was just so hard to comprehend that everything could have been pulverized to that extent. How do you pulverize carpet or filing cabinets?”

According to Greg Meeker of the US Geological Survey, “Six million sq ft of masonry, 5 million sq ft of painted surfaces, 7 million sq ft of flooring, 600,000 sq ft of window glass, 200 elevators, and everything inside came down as dust” when the towers collapsed [he prudently avoided mentioning that almost entire steel of the WTC Twin Towers and the WTC-7 was pulverized too].

Some people will later claim that this complete pulverization of the WTC is evidence of the towers having been brought down deliberately, using explosives [but, in reality, it was not “explosives”, of course].

September 12 – There are reports of whole rows of seats with passengers in them being found, as well as much of the cockpit of one of the planes, complete with the body of one of the hijackers, and the body of another stewardess, whose hands were tied with wire.

September 12 – [attention, extremely important!] All news agencies report that a passport of an alleged “hijacker” Satam al Suqami was found in the rubble around the WTC site. Some agencies mistakenly report at the same moment that it was a passport belonging to a leader of the “hijacking crew” and alleged “pilot” Mohammed Atta. Later this error has corrected and the Saudi Arabian passport of Satam al Sukami in fairly undamaged condition had been demonstrated to the public.

September 12 – [attention, important!] Several cars belonging to the alleged “hijackers” are discovered parked in various airports. In the cars are reported to be found some flying manuals in Arabic language, videotape named “How to fly a commercial jet”, copies of Holy Qu’rans (some also with personal inscriptions by Osama bin Laden’s own hand), and several suicidal letters left by hijackers who claim that by the time one might read these letters their authors would be already in Paradise – among Houris.

September 12 – [attention, important!] A suitcase belonging to the alleged “lead hijacker” Mohammed Atta, which was miraculously not loaded onto a plane at his “last” departure, is discovered. Interestingly, a 4 pages long instructional suicide letter is found in the suitcase. It was established (later) that the letter was written by a female’s hand.

September 13 – The airport in Islamabad, the capital of Pakistan, is shut down for the day. A government official later says the airport had been closed because of threats made against Pakistan’s “strategic assets”, but does not elaborate. The next day, Pakistan declares “unstinting” support for the U.S., and the airport is reopened. It is later suggested that Israel and India threatened to attack Pakistan and take control of its nuclear weapons if Pakistan did not side with the U.S.

September 13 – All members of Saudi Royal family and all members of bin Laden’s family being currently in the U.S. are flown (seems to be forcefully flown) out of the United States (but not actually deported).

September 13 – [attention, important!] The White House announces that there is “overwhelming evidence” that [Osama] bin Laden is behind the attacks [nonetheless, even 10 years later, the FBI would still insist that it had no any evidence whatsoever to link Osama bin Laden to the 9/11 attacks; therefore Osama was officially wanted in the infamous “10 most wanted” FBI’s list and on corresponding FBI’s web site only for his alleged participation in the so-called “car-bombings” of the U.S. Embassies in Kenya and Tanzania on an anniversary of Hiroshima bombing in 1998].

September 13 – [attention, important!] A pair of severed hands bound together with plastic handcuffs discovered on a roof of a nearby building; the hands reported to belong to some flight-attendant. Fire Lieutenant John McCole sees even a body bag with a tag on it saying, “Possible Perp - pilot.” McCole later comments: “I found it pretty amazing that someone’s body could remain so intact after crashing through a skyscraper into the middle of an inferno.” However, black-boxes (flight recorders) which are so strong that considered being nearly indestructible are reported not to be found, being presumably “destroyed in the Towers’ collapse”.

September 13 – Investigators say they have found debris from Flight 93 crash far from the main crash site. A second debris field centers around Indian Lake about three miles from the crash scene, where eyewitnesses reported seeing falling debris only moments after the crash. More debris is found in New Baltimore, some eight miles away. Later in the day, the investigators say all that debris likely was blown there. Another debris field is found six miles away, and human remains are found miles away. State police and the FBI have cordoned off an area where there is plane debris, about six to eight miles from the main crash site. After all of this is discovered, the FBI still “stresses” that “no evidence [has] surfaced” to support the idea that the plane was shot down. A half-ton piece of one of the engines is found 2,000 yards away from the main crash site. This was the single heaviest piece recovered from the crash. Days later, the FBI would say the wide debris field was probably the result of the explosion on the impact. The Independent [UK newspaper], nevertheless, will later cite the wide debris field as one of many reasons why widespread rumors remain that the plane was shot down.

September 13 – [attention, important!] It is reported that the many phone calls made by passengers from the hijacked flights are normally technically impossible to make. A major cell phone carrier spokeswoman claims, “Those were a series of circumstances that made those calls go through, which would not be repeated under normal circumstances.” Supposedly, the calls worked because they were made when the planes were close to the ground. However, it was challenged by many independent observers that the majority of those alleged calls from the planes were made when the planes were supposed to be on their cruise altitudes.

September 13 – CIA director George Tenet presents to the U.S. President a plan to fight “global terrorism” which purports to achieve victory in weeks. The main part of this plan is to utilize the Northern Alliance to fight the Taliban.

September 14 – [attention, very important!] The FBI finally comes up with a complete list of alleged hijackers: the nineteen men, including seven trained pilots, are named as being responsible for hijacking the four American airliners to destroy the two World Trade Centre towers and damage the Pentagon. It is claimed that at least five of the 10 hijackers had been traveling under Saudi documents or came from Saudi Arabia to gain entry to America and flight-training schools in Florida. Saudi citizens are not required to get FBI clearance to obtain flight training in America.

The 19 hijackers were: Marwan Al Shehhi, Fayez Ahmed, Mohald Al Shehri, Hamza Al Ghamdi and Ahmed Al Ghamdi on United Airlines Flight 175 which destroyed the World Trade Centre; Waleed M Al Shehri, Wail Al Shehri, Mohamed Atta, Abdulaziz Al Omari and Satam Al Suqami on American Airlines Flight 11, which also destroyed the World Trade Centre; Khalid Al-Midhar, Majed Moqed, Nawaq Al Hamzi, Salem Al Hamzi and Hani Hanjour on American Airlines Flight 77, which crashed on the Pentagon; and Ahmed Al Haznawi, Ahmed Al Nami, Ziad Jarrahi and Saeed Al Ghamdi on United Airlines Flight 93 which crashed in Pennsylvania.

Of the 19 names, at least two-thirds had surnames associated with the south-west corner of Saudi Arabia or Yemen, which is where the bin Laden family originates. America remained on its highest state of alert, with fighter aircraft still circling the skies over seven of its major cities and FBI agents on duty at all major airports. The Secret Service, responsible for the security of America's senior leaders, kept Vice-President Dick Cheney away from President George W. Bush, a precaution only usually taken in time of war.

September 15 – The peculiar nuclear term “ground zero” is rapidly appropriated by all mass media and it became the most common term to refer to the WTC demolition site. During the first few days it was written in lower-case letters. However, in a few days all of a sudden it was elevated to “Ground Zero”. Though, some mass media outlets continued to use this term with lower-case letters for about two weeks.

September 16 – The peculiar nuclear term “ground zero” is adopted even by the purportedly circumspect “New York Times”.

However, interestingly enough, this term had never been adopted by rescue workers on site who used the term “The Pile”, referring to the pile of rubble that was left after the buildings collapsed.

September 16 – [attention, extremely important!] Spanish-language “El Mundo” publishes a suspicious “revelation” – in an article bearing name “TRAGEDIA / APOCALIPSIS USA MI HERMANO BIN LADEN” it cites certain US officials, claiming that there is “latest” information that Al-Qaeda’s emissaries allegedly succeeded buying from Ukraine 3 (three) pieces of Soviet-made mini-nukes known as “RA115” and “RA116” – an extremely seditious claim that in the context of the recent events could only be interpreted as follows: it was allegedly 3 Soviet-made suit-case nukes of Al-Qaeda that actually brought down the three WTC buildings – the Twin Towers and the WTC-7. The article’s actual name also leaves no option to doubt as to what they really mean in this particular “revelation”. This seditious article would stay on the “El Mundo’s” web site right up to the first days of March, 2010, but would be removed at once when a video presentation from the humble author of this book referring to that article appeared on YouTube.

September 17 – [attention, important!] Osama bin Laden issues his first direct denial of involvement in the attacks: “The US is pointing the finger at me but I categorically state that I have not done this,” he was quoted as saying by the Pakistan-based Afghan Islamic Press news agency.

September 17 – U.S. Attorney-General John Ashcroft asks Congress for stronger anti-terrorism laws, including wider phone-tapping powers.

September 17 - President George Bush has urged Americans to return to work and put the economy back on track six days after the devastating airborne suicide attacks on New York and Washington.

September 17 – [attention, very important!] The British Independent reports that the alleged “hijacker” Abdulaziz al Omari, a pilot with Saudi Airlines, recognizes himself on a set of photos of hijackers published by the FBI. He visits the U.S. consulate in Jeddah to demand explanations.

September 18 – [attention, very important!] The then head of the Environmental Protection Agency Christine Todd Whitman releases her official public report saying “New York air is safe to breathe” – which meant the people could continue to lead their normal life even around “Ground Zero” and workers on the WTC site could continue to work unprotected. Several years later when the people begun to suffer from cancer her report was mildly dubbed “controversial”. It was officially revealed later that it was Condoleezza Rice's office that gave final approval to those infamous EPA press releases; Rice was then head of the National Security Council “the final decision maker” on EPA statements about lower Manhattan air quality.

September 17 – [attention, important!] Five letters containing anthrax powder are believed to have been mailed at this time, to ABC News, CBS News, NBC News and the New York Post, all located in New York City; and to the National Enquirer at American Media, Inc. (AMI) in Boca Raton, Florida.

September 21 – [attention, very important!] George Pataki, the then Governor of New York, guides a CNN reporter at “Ground Zero” – he explains in detail how the WTC building were completely pulverized to the smallest particles, and besides that, he explains that incredible underground fires under the WTC rubble, six floor down the ground, continue to burn.

September 21 – [attention, very important!] Los Angeles Times reports that the alleged “hijacker” Wail M. al Shehri was found alive: “...a man by the same name is a pilot, whose father is a Saudi diplomat in Bombay. “I personally talked to both father and son today,” said Gaafar Allagany, head of the Saudi Embassy's information center...”

September 23 – [attention, very important!] It is discovered that the FBI has concocted a bogus personality of the “hijacker Abdulaziz al Omari” by combining particulars of two different persons – 1. Abdulaziz al Omari – the pilot and 2. Abdulaziz al Omari – an electrical engineer, whose passport was reported stolen in 1995 in the United States, when he studied electrical engineering at the University of Denver. Both al Omaris were found almost instantly in Saudi Arabia. The incident was barely reported, except by the BBC.

In the same article the BBC referring to various Arabic newspapers reports that the alleged “hijacker” Khalid al Mihdhar – who also believed to be a co-pilot of Hani Hanjour (who has allegedly crashed American Airlines Flight 77 into the Pentagon) may still be alive (at this time, various Arabic newspapers reported to interview him).

September 23 – [attention, very important!] Telegraph UK reports that another alleged “hijacker” – Salem al Hazmi – was found alive in Saudi Arabia; he had just returned to work at a petrochemical complex in the industrial eastern city of Yanbo after a holiday – when he learned that the FBI named him as one of the “hijackers”.

September 23 – [attention, very important!] Telegraph UK reports that yet another alleged “hijacker” – Saeed al Ghamdi – a student “Airbus-320” pilot undergoing pilot training courses in Tunisia – is found alive. He is quoted as saying: “I was completely shocked. For the past 10 months I have been based in Tunis with 22 other pilots learning to fly an Airbus 320. The FBI provided no evidence of my presumed involvement in the attacks.”

September 23 – The BBC cites “Asharq Al Awsat” newspaper, a London-based Arabic daily, which says it has interviewed Saeed al Ghamdi.

September 23 – [attention, very important!] Telegraph UK reports that one more alleged “hijacker” – Ahmed al Nami – an administrative supervisor of Saudi Arabian Airlines – is found alive. He is quoted as saying: “I'm still alive, as you can see. I was shocked to see my name mentioned by the American Justice Department. I had never even heard of Pennsylvania where the plane I was supposed to have hijacked.” He had never lost his passport and found it “very worrying” that his identity appeared to have been “stolen” and published by the FBI without any checks.

September 27 – [attention, very important!] One more alleged “hijacker” – Waleed M. al Shehri (also a pilot with Saudi Airlines and brother of Wail al Shehri) is found alive. Incident is barely reported.

September 27 – [attention, extremely important!] New York City officials order 2000 gallons of the foaming agent called Pyrocool FEF which contained, according to a vague explanation of some fire official, some “two powerful ultra-violet absorbers intended to absorb the high-energy emissions”, which has to be added to water used by firefighters to extinguish “unexplainable long-lasting underground fires” under the debris of WTC buildings 1, 2, and 7.

September 28 – [attention, extremely important!] The firefighters began to use the abovementioned chemicals when spraying with water the underground fires under the wreckage of the WTC. Deputy Chief Charles Blaich of the New York City Fire Department also confessed that “The foam also extinguished the fires in World Trade Center No 7, the wreckage of a 40-story office tower.”

October 1 – [attention, important!] Guardian UK reports that it was discovered that a certain man with a Saudi Arabian passport left the UAE on the day of the attack(s) for Karachi in Pakistan, after receiving transfers of “surplus” funds of $15,000 [meaning that those alleged “suicidal hijackers” who intended to go to Paradise could not take the remaining money with them and therefore decided to return the money to their earthly masters prior to their departures to the Heaven] from three hijackers, Mohamed Atta, Walid al-Shehri [who had been already found alive] and Marwan al-Shehhi [who will be found alive later]. The money was transferred from the US to the UAE two days before the attack.

October 2 – [attention, important!] Robert Stevens, a photo editor at the American Media Inc. tabloid The Sun in Boca Raton, Florida, is admitted to the John F. Kennedy Hospital emergency room in Atlantis, Florida suffering from disorientation, a high fever, vomiting and inability to speak.

October 4 – [attention, important!] Robert Stevens is publicly confirmed to have inhalation (pulmonary) anthrax. It is the first known case of inhalation anthrax in the U.S. since 1976. United States Department of Health and Human Services Secretary Tommy Thompson downplays terrorism as a possible cause, suggesting Stevens may have contracted anthrax by drinking water from a stream. Officials emphasize that since anthrax is not contagious, there is no reason for the public concern.

October 5 – Robert Stevens, 63, dies – he becomes the first fatality in the anthrax attacks.

October 6 – October 9 – [attention, very important!] An anthrax attack No.2 – Sometime within this range, two more anthrax letters are mailed, targeting Democratic Senators Tom Daschle (Senate Majority Leader) and Patrick Leahy (Judiciary Committee Chairman).

October 7 – Anthrax spores are found on Robert Stevens's computer keyboard. The American Media building is closed and workers are tested for exposure.

October 7 – The War in Afghanistan begins as the U.S. military operation “Operation Enduring Freedom”, was launched by the United States, with the United Kingdom, in response to the September 11 attacks. It was the beginning of the dubbed “War on Terror”.

The stated purpose of the invasion was “to capture Osama bin Laden, destroy al-Qaeda, and remove the Taliban regime which had provided support and safe harbor to al-Qaeda”. The war continues even up to this day (as on September 2008) with Osama bin Laden still at large. The pro-Pakistani and pro-Saudi (and pro-American by default) Taliban government was indeed kicked out of Kabul – mostly, thanks to the forces of Afghani Northern Alliance – which performed the bulk of ground military operations against the Taliban. Only after that U.S., British, etc. occupational forces begin to land on Afghani territory and to be permanently stationed there and a new puppet government was installed in Kabul by occupational forces.

Interestingly, these occupations led to a tremendous increase in poppy cultivation, and, correspondingly, to the tremendous increase of heroin production in that area, also known by its nick-name the “Silver Triangle”. While the Taliban government seriously fought drugs production in Afghanistan, it was not so with the new puppet government (which reminded some older people of those old good times when the CIA was the main driving force behind the heroin production in the Golden Triangle during Second Indo-China War).

Still, Taliban did not surrender all its territory up to this day (as on August 2013) and, moreover, it eventually reorganized and went on the offensive, recapturing quite a sizable part of Afghani territory from the new puppet Afghani government.

October 8 – [attention, extremely important!] The “Times of India” reports one of the most scandalous revelations about 9/11. It is reported that Pakistani ISI Director Lt.-Gen. Mahmood Ahmed ordered his aide to wire transfer about $100,000 to would be chief “hijacker” Mohammed Atta prior to the 9/11 attack.

October 9 – [attention, extremely important!] “Wall Street Journal” confirms the above revelation.

October 10 – [attention, extremely important!] The above revelation is also reported by AFP. Moreover, it was discovered that the “aide” who actually wired the money to Mohammed Atta on General Ahmed’s orders was no one else than a certain Sheikh Ahmed Omar Said, who would be accused later of “kidnapping” and “murder” of unfortunate journalist Daniel Pearl in February 2002 (Daniel Pearl, prior to his supposed “murder”, would reveal information about the alleged “nuclear aspirations” of Osama bin Laden.) ABC new would later report: federal authorities have told ABC News they’ve now tracked more than $100,000 from banks in Pakistan to two banks in Florida to accounts held by suspected hijack ringleader Mohamed Atta”.

October 12 – The (already opened) anthrax letter to NBC News is found and turned over to the FBI. Only a trace amount of anthrax remains in the letter.

October 13 – NBC News letter tests positive for anthrax.

October 15 – [attention, very important!] The letter to Senator Tom Daschle is opened. The anthrax in the letter was described as a “fine, light tan powder” which easily flew into the air.

October 15 – [attention, important!] President G. W. Bush announces that a letter sent to Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle had anthrax in it.

October 16 – [attention, extremely important!] Tests confirm the presence of anthrax in the letter sent to Senator Tom Daschle. The anthrax powder is found to be extraordinarily pure and fine. Many in the media start calling it “weapons grade” material, but federal officials call that an exaggeration. Authorities suggest this could only be produced with sophisticated knowledge and equipment, possibly by a state-funded organization. One possible source would be from one of the approximately 20 institutions in the United States which study anthrax, and have had relatively lax security procedures. Another would be Iraq or the former Soviet Union.

October 17 – Thirty one (31) Capitol workers (five Capitol police officers, three Russ Feingold staffers, 23 Tom Daschle staffers), test positive for the presence of anthrax (via nasal swabs, etc.). Feingold’s office is behind Daschle’s in the Hart Senate Building. Anthrax spores are found in a Senate mailroom located in an office building near the Capitol. There are rumors that anthrax was found in the ventilation system of the Capitol building itself. The House of Representatives announces it will adjourn in response to the threat.

October 19 – Tom Ridge, Director of Homeland Security, briefs the media on “potential anthrax threats.” Ridge reports the tests conducted on the anthrax found as spores at the AMI building in Florida, the material from NBC News letter and the anthrax from the Daschle letter are all “indistinguishable,” meaning they are from the same strain. Governor Ridge also reveals the FBI has found the site (mailbox) where the letters were first placed.

October 22 – Tom Ridge reports at a White House press conference on the two new deaths of postal workers possibly from anthrax exposure. Federal officials publicly announce that two D.C. area United States Postal Service workers have died from what appears to be pulmonary anthrax contracted from handling mail.

October 23 – It is confirmed that the two postal handlers died of inhalation anthrax. The men were identified as Joseph P. Curseen, 47, and Thomas L. Morris Jr., 55.

October 25 – [attention, very important!] Tom Ridge gives an update on the scientific analysis of the anthrax samples. The anthrax from the Daschle letter is described as “highly concentrated” and “pure.” The material is also a “very, very fine powder” similar to talcum powder. The spore clusters are smaller when compared to the anthrax found in the New York Post sample. The opinion is the anthrax from the Daschle sample is deadlier. The New York Post sample is coarser and less concentrated than the Daschle’s sample. It is described as “clumpy and rugged” while the Daschle’s anthrax is “fine and floaty.” Although they differ radically (in the qualities of their preparation), Ridge emphasizes both anthrax samples are from the same Ames strain. (Ames strain of anthrax bacterium – “Bacillus anthracis” – was a typically American “home” strain – first found in the United States, in Texas in 1981 – when extracted from the body of a dead cow. It was nothing else than the United States’ own “gold standard” for development of vaccines against anthrax and testing their effectiveness, starting from beginning of ‘80s. So as such this particular strain could not have been used in biological weapons programs of any country other than the United States, because the former Soviet Union/Russia, Iraq, Syria, Israel, and other secretive countries use other strains of this bacterium for their respective programs. Moreover, considering that the America’s standard for developing vaccine was against this Ames strain – it would be just simply stupid to expect that the Iraqis, the Soviets, or the Syrians would base their biological weapons on this very strain – from which the United States are the most protected.)

October 26 – A so-called USA PATRIOT Act, commonly known as the “Patriot Act”, an Act of Congress, is signed into law (Public Law 107-56) by President George W. Bush. The mocking acronym designed by spin-doctors had absolutely nothing to do with the so-called “patriotism” and stood for: Uniting and Strengthening America by Providing Appropriate Tools Required to Intercept and Obstruct Terrorism Act of 2001. It substantially expanded the authority of U.S. law enforcement agencies for the ostensible purpose of fighting “terrorism” in the United States and abroad. Among its provisions, the Act increased the ability of law enforcement agencies to intercept telephone and e-mail communications and to search through medical, financial and other records; eased restrictions on foreign intelligence gathering within the United States (ironically, the main beneficiary from that particular provision became the Israeli Mossad, which from now on could spy right inside the hitherto sovereign territory of the United States without any fear of prosecution); expanded the Secretary of the Treasury’s authority to regulate financial transactions, particularly those involving foreign individuals and entities; and enhanced the discretion of law enforcement and immigration authorities in detaining and deporting immigrants suspected of terrorism-related acts. The act also expanded the definition of terrorism to include “domestic terrorism,” thus, enlarging the number of activities to which the Patriot Act’s expanded law enforcement powers can be applied. This Act has delivered a crushing blow to the few last remaining civil liberties in the United States, which remained from the good old times.

November 16 – [attention, important!] The undelivered anthrax letter addressed to Democratic Senator Patrick Leahy (Judiciary Committee Chairman) is found in the impounded mail at the State Department mail facility in Sterling, Virginia.

November 20 – [attention, extremely important!] A suspiciously peculiar article named: “Osama plot revealed: How he got the bomb” is published by the “Washington Times” – as if it were allegedly well-established that Osama has indeed gotten that “bomb” at that moment. In this article it was claimed: “...American and British reporters who followed the Northern Alliance into town [of Kabul], and a reporter for the London Times appeared to have struck the mother lode... ..In a dispatch from Kabul, he described documents which he said appeared to be instructions on how to build “a Nagasaki-type atomic bomb.” Another peculiar statements sounded like: “...What Osama and his rocket scientists and particle-beam physicists apparently were working from..” and this: “...Some discovery. The good guys are closing in on Osama and his cave and it is not clear that Osama and his team of highly paid mullahs actually assembled a mighty Muslim bomb...”. These were more than transparent hints that some top-ranking so-called “good” guys “closing on Osama and his cave” had not even slightest doubt that Osama bin Laden possessed nuclear weapons, and not just only nuclear weapons alone, but even the missiles required to do these nuclear weapons’ delivery [do not forget that the nuclear warhead was delivered to the Pentagon by a missile]. It was not specified on which grounds those so-called “good” guys based their peculiar acceptations.

December 5 – The Leahy letter is opened at the American bio-facility USAMRIID, Fort Detrick, Maryland.

December 5 – The United States House of Representatives committee chairman Henry Hyde holds a hearing on the anthrax attacks and biological weapons.

December 16 – [attention, extremely important!] DNA testing of the anthrax in the Leahy letter matches the Ames strain. After this finding the FBI investigation into the anthrax attack slowly died down and soon it was no longer puffed up for the general public consumption.

December 24 – [attention, extremely important!] “Wall Street Journal’s” reporter Daniel Pearl reported unprecedented information about alleged ties between the ISI (“Inter Service Intelligence” – the main intelligence organization of Pakistan) and a Pakistani “terror” organization, “Ummah Tameer-e-Nau”, that was allegedly “working on giving bin Laden nuclear secrets” before September 11. Soon Daniel Pearl would be “kidnapped” in Pakistan and this alleged “kidnapping” would be very well publicized – followed by an intense, professionally orchestrated anti-Muslim hysteria. Despite the intense hysteria and appeals to the “mercy” of his alleged “kidnappers”, Daniel Pearl would be “murdered”. A strange movie depicting his alleged “decapitation” by the “kidnappers” would be widely circulated over the Internet and even shown on TV, followed by even more intense anti-Muslim hysteria. All this news about his alleged “kidnapping” and “murder” would greatly enhance credibility of his otherwise incredible claims that Osama bin Laden was allegedly in pursuit of nuclear weapons prior to the 9/11 attacks. Later it would be found that the chief “kidnapper” of supposedly “late” Daniel Pearl was no one else than Sheikh Ahmed Omar Said – the very person who was discovered to transfer those infamous 100.000 US dollars to the would be “9/11 hijacker” Mohammed Atta – on personal orders of the then Chief of the Pakistani ICI – Lt.-General Mahmood Ahmed. Sheikh Ahmed Omar Said would be arrested and promptly “executed” – so he would not be available for any comment (at least, under his previous name). Later, one more of Pearl’s “kidnapper” and “cutthroat” would be arrested – infamous Khalid Sheikh Mohammad (alias “KSM”) – who would “confess” that it was indeed him, who with his “blessed right hand” cut off the “head of that American Jew – Daniel Pearl in the city of Karachi”. Thus, if anyone had doubts that Osama bin Laden was in pursuit of nuclear weapons, he should, at last, lose his former doubts and to believe that “something” was “apparently serious” behind the ridiculous claims of “that American Jew Daniel Pearl”, who supposedly paid with his very head for revealing such an awful “nuclear truth” about so-called “Muslim terrorism”.

June 6, 2002 (a year later) – [attention, extremely important!] An unprecedented atmospheric nuclear explosion occurs over the Mediterranean Sea, around 34°N 21°E (between Libya and Crete, Greece). The power of the airburst was later estimated to be at least 24 kilotons in TNT yield – i.e. twice the size of the atomic bomb dropped on Hiroshima. Though obviously important, this atomic blast – mildly dubbed as the “Eastern Mediterranean event” – was hidden from the general public. Except that it received unbelievably little coverage in a few scientific publications where it was defined as an “explosion of an asteroid – about 30 ft (slightly over 9 m) in diameter – that managed to “pass undetected” on its approach to the Earth”. No studies have been undertaken in regard to this unprecedented “event”, which in other circumstances could have easily incinerated a middle-sized town, killing near all its inhabitants.

September 10, 2002 (a year later) – [attention, extremely important!] Mr. Larry Silverstein appears in PBS documentary named “America Rebuilds” where he voices an absolutely unprecedented admission that shocks the entire world – claiming that it was indeed him, Mr. Larry Silverstein, who had personally given his approval on September 11, 2001, late afternoon, to demolish the building 7 in a process commonly known as a “controlled demolition”.

October 12, 2002 (a year later), 11.00 PM, local time – [attention, extremely important!] – an unknown high-tech nuclear device explodes at a yield of about 0.010 kiloton (~10 tons of TNT) in monsoon sewage in the middle of a busy street in the famous Balinese resort Kuta – just next to several bars, night-clubs, and restaurants – all packed with foreign tourists. It is believed that at least over 1000 people were instantly incinerated – i.e. reduced to plasma, vapors, and unrecognizable small ashes, while some badly burned body parts found at some distances from ground zero could have been ascribed to at least 187 different victims. At least over 1000 of “lucky” people who stood farther from the explosion and managed to survive its air-blast wave were badly burned by its thermal radiation and promptly airlifted by a few military aircraft to Australian, Singaporean and Taiwanese hospitals. Still, practically none of those burned had any chance to survive, because, in addition to burns to about 45% of their bodies, all of them had received doses of ionizing radiation exceeding nominally lethal ones by several folds. Most of them would die from radiation sickness in the first 2 to 13 days. Many more from among those who were not burned still received heavy doses of radiation and would die in the next 30 days. The total number of victims of this “conventional” bombing definitely exceeded that of the Twin Towers’ collapse a year earlier.

Following an intense public outcry, some central Indonesian newspapers begin to publish articles where it was openly stated that the device exploded in Bali was probably a “micro-nuclear bomb”. Several high-ranking Indonesian politicians attempted to make parliamentary inquiry to this effect. As one could expect, almost immediately all these “dissenting opinions” were squashed. As it became a trend, this unprecedented “micro-nuclear” bombing was established to be a “conventional” explosion of only 1 ton of cheap home-made explosives packed in a jeep-like vehicle. Some scapegoats – akin to infamous nuclear bomber Timothy McVeigh – were promptly enlisted from among local Indonesian “terrorists” and made to confess that it was allegedly a “conventional” bombing perpetrated by the so-called “Jemaah Islamiah” terrorist organization – allegedly affiliated with the so-called “Al-Qaeda”. Still, there were quite a few unforgivable slips of tongue in the future event’s coverage in European media where peculiar terms such as “millisecond”, “mushroom cloud”, “ground zero” were widely used – which immediately attracted the attention of many people who otherwise might not even notice that the Bali bombing had something to do with nuclear weapons. The entire soil from around the Balinese ground zero had been promptly removed on personal orders of the Indonesian president who was advised to do so by the American secret services, and thrown into the deep sea in an unknown location. This was done in order to prevent independent sampling of radioactive residue in the future. Still, some specialists managed to collect residue samples before that and to establish that it was an apparently pure Plutonium-based charge of the latest generation, which presumably did not use any Uranium reflector around its core.

March 20 to May 1, 2003, – Iraqi Invasion begins, spearheaded by the United States, backed by British forces and smaller contingents from Australia, Poland, and Denmark. A number of other countries were involved in its aftermath. The invasion marked the beginning of the current Iraq War. According to the President of the United States, George W. Bush, and former Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, Tony Blair, the reasons for the invasion were "to disarm Iraq of weapons of mass destruction (WMD), to end Saddam Hussein's support for terrorism, and to free the Iraqi people". None of the alleged weapons of mass destruction has been so far found in Iraq (this being said on August 2013); but the war in Iraq and an alleged search for the weapons of mass destruction continues even up to this day.

Disassembling the 9/11 project.

As I have already explained in regard to the methodology, the 9/11 affair was such a complex project, that we will have no chance to understand it in its entirety, unless we subject it to a “reverse engineering” first. Only in this case we could get to its actual “source code”.

Now we will start disassembling it (as I have promised, at the end of this book, we will assemble it back, for the proper review of the 9/11 project as a whole thing).

I would like to begin with some preamble:

Unfortunately, there are quite a big number of the so-called “conspiracy theorists” – i.e. people, who do not believe any officially approved interpretation of events concerning 9/11 and attempt to seek the truth independently, using different methods.

Particularly, the situation with these “conspiracy theorists” is being aggravated by the fact that the U.S. Government, as well as the FBI, apparently have some sensible reason (which will be also described below in exact detail) to hide the entire truth about 9/11 from the plebs.

The mere fact that the truth until now is being intentionally kept hidden from them, encourages more and more conspiracy theorists to continue to come up with the most bizarre theories.

Since I myself do not wish to be mistaken with any “conspiracy theorists” of the kind mentioned above, I am obliged first to devote some time to these very “conspiracy theories”. Otherwise, there would be a real danger that my own information would not be understood the way it deserves to be understood.

Thus, before I proceed, I would like to make a very brief overview of more or less common so-called “conspiracy theories” which nowadays are being widely circulated over the Internet, being published in various books and being discussed in various kinds of mass media.

However, before I touch the conspiracy theories I am talking about, let me briefly mention some of the facts that led the “conspiracy theorists” to their theories.

Suspicious facts about 9/11 and the “nuclear card” from the sleeve of the U.S. Government...

Mentioned below are several main factors and other “peculiar” circumstances – which, understandably, attracted reasonable suspicions and had actually caused some public dissatisfaction with the official interpretation of the WTC Towers’ collapse (a/k/a the “Official Conspiracy Theory” – the “OCT”), and, moreover, triggered those attempts by numerous truth-seekers to find the truth independently.

These factors, in turn, are subdivided into several groups – according to their nature:

1) Attracting general suspicions that cannot be grouped according to any particular technicality:

1.1. The fourth “victim” of the supposed “terrorism” (counting as the first three: the WTC 1, 2 and the Pentagon, in chronological order) – namely the WTC building 7 – neatly and almost quietly collapsed late in the afternoon September 11, 2001, at about 5.20 PM EST, without any valid reason whatsoever. The WTC-7 collapse was unexplainable to such an extent, that the officially appointed so-called “9/11 Commission” preferred not even to bother explaining such a “minor” occurrence and apparently deemed it being too unimportant to be mentioned in its official report.

1.2. Not just that the abovementioned WTC-7 had suspiciously “collapsed” at about 5.20 PM EST; its “collapse” had been prematurely (20 minutes before the actual collapse) reported by the BBC. In that incredible footage, which shocked the entire world, the New York BBC reporter Jane Standley at 5.07 PM EST disclosed to the public an awful secret – talking about the “collapse” (as if it had already happened some time ago) of the “Salomon Brothers Building” (the name of the WTC-7) while the very WTC-7 was still intact, and had been clearly visible on her background. One might only wonder from where she managed to obtain such hot info 15 minutes in advance...

1.3. Only hours before the 9/11 attacks, the hero of Afghani resistance, one of the most respected leaders of the Afghani “Northern Alliance”, and the sworn enemy of the Taliban (and, presumably, of “Al-Qaeda”) – Ahmad Shah Massoud – had been assassinated by two suicide bombers, supposedly deployed against him by Osama bin Laden. That event was then well-publicized and it did serve its purpose – to link Osama to the 9/11 attacks. It indeed seemed then to everybody that Osama bin Laden had obviously embarked on a global offensive against all of his enemies simultaneously. However, soon the dirty story about that assassination on the eve of 9/11 had been totally forgotten. The mere fact that this story, which seemed to be so valuable the month following 9/11, is not being puffed up any longer leads to a reasonable suspicion that “someone” wanted only to “dig under” Osama that time. If it were really Osama bin Laden, who attacked the United States, it would be also Osama who assassinated Ahmad Shah Massoud in the same time. Why then not continue to exploit that story until today? Suspiciously against logic, the story of Ahmad Shah’s 9/11 assassination was abandoned by all spin-doctors.

1.4. None of the terrorist organizations known in that day stepped forward to claim any responsibility for the 9/11 attacks, despite their apparent success (not to say about the apparent beauty of their near flawless performance that is supposed to make any true terrorist organization proud). It was very unusual and suspicious.

1.5. The amount of money spent on the entire 9/11 inquiry was reported to be a ridiculous 600.000 USD (six hundred thousand American dollars). This was in a sharp contrast with the 40,000,000 USD (forty million American dollars) – spent on investigating some shameful affair of former U.S. President Clinton with a certain Monica Lewinsky. Most of that ridiculously small amount, however, was spent on obtaining GPS devices – which were routinely attached to any and every piece of the WTC debris. (I mean to anything bigger than a particle of fine dust). It was done in order to make sure that those truck drivers, who were entrusted to bring the debris from “Ground Zero” to Staten Island’s “Fresh Kills” (from where the debris was destined to be further exported to Korea) – would never deviate from their approved paths and would not accidentally deliver some piece of the WTC debris to some independent inquiry board or would not hide it for some other reason. Therefore, independent investigators managed to obtain not more than 200 pieces of debris from the entire WTC volume which contained millions of tons of steel.

1.6. In some speech (which has been shown⁴³ on TV, but never repeated) U.S. Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld claimed some peculiar things about the allegedly “shot down” passenger Flight 93 – “over Pennsylvania”. However, the official story claimed that the plane “fell down itself” – because some brave passengers on board staged a fight with the supposed “hijackers” (one could only guess how they got to know of this alleged “fight” – do they possess any CCTV camera recordings?). Moreover, later there was another interview aired (and again never repeated) where some reliable eye-witness – from among journalists sent there to investigate the scene, and also some coroner from that locality – claimed that there was not any sign of a plane’s crash in that spot in Pennsylvania where the FBI claimed the plane allegedly fell...

1.7. In the abovementioned slip of the tongue by Rumsfeld, the true meaning was something like “the terrorists shot our plane over Pennsylvania”. According to the very first news released on September 11, 2001, it was confirmed that Flight 93 was shot down by a certain U.S. Air Force pilot, in a rank of a Major. The Major (it is difficult to remember his name now, since the news has never been repeated) was also presented on TV-footage that day and even said a few words: it was claimed that Flight 93 was going to strike a nuclear power plant and therefore it was decided to shoot it down. Later it was rumored that it was a certain Major Rick Gibney, from “Happy Hooligans” in the North Dakota Air National Guard based in Langley Virginia, who was honored by the Governor of North Dakota and the US Senate for his defense of Washington D.C. and U.S. Congress on 9/11/2001. However, Rick Gibney himself has refused to comment even now. It was especially suspicious because the FBI rejected accounts of witnesses who wished to testify that besides the actual passenger Boeing fallen from the skies, they saw a much smaller plane around which looked for their eyes like a commuter-jet. Instead, the FBI explained⁴⁴ to them that it was “a turboprop C-130 and it was unarmed and has nothing to do with the accident”. The mere fact that the FBI concentrated on that subject (“armed-unarmed”) and linked that subject to the accident, probably testifies for itself. Other similar claims are here⁴⁵.

1.8. In other interview (which was in its “uncensored” form published even on the Department of Defense’s own website as long as until late 2006) Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld afforded yet another unfortunate slip of the tongue – he mentioned that while it were “planes” that hit the World Trade Center, it was a “missile” that hit the Pentagon⁴⁶.

1.9. Besides Rumsfeld, one more high ranking official managed to afford a Freudian slip. It was Tim Roemer, the former 9/11 Commissioner, who managed to slip up in his televised CNN interview⁴⁷ saying something like it was a missile that “opened pride of our [Pentagon] fortress”.

1.10. There were some well-known claims during the earliest September 11, 2001 news broadcasts that there were also some alleged trucks with the explosives used in the perpetration; none of these claims about “trucks”, however, has been ever repeated later – not even once.

1.11. A certain Mr. Francis (Frank) Albert De Martini, on-site construction manager for the World Trade Center, once gave the most peculiar interview, recorded on video on January 25, 2001. In this – largely available⁴⁸ on the Internet recording, he spoke of the resilience of the Towers as follows:

⁴³ Aired by CNN on December 24, 2004 -12:00 ET: <http://edition.cnn.com/TRANSCRIPTS/0412/24/nfcnn.01.html>
DONALD RUMSFELD, SECRETARY OF DEFENSE: “And to change that way of living, would strike at the very essence of our country. And I think all of us have a sense if we imagine the kind of world we would face if the people who bombed the mess hall in Mosul, or the people who did the bombing in Spain, or the people who attacked the United States in New York, shot down the plane over Pennsylvania and attacked the Pentagon, the people who cut off peoples’ heads on television to intimidate, to frighten -- indeed the word “terrorized” is just that. Its purpose is to terrorize, to alter behavior, to make people be something other than that which they want to be”.

⁴⁷ It is for example available here: <http://www.toxicjunction.com/get.asp?i=V2031>

⁴⁸ It is for example available here: <http://www.prisonplanet.com/articles/november2004/141104designedtotake.htm>

“...The building was designed to have a fully loaded [Boeing] 707 crash into it. That was the largest plane at the time. I believe that the building probably could sustain multiple impacts of jetliners because this structure is like the mosquito netting on your screen door - this intense grid - and the jet plane is just a pencil puncturing that screen netting. It really does nothing to the screen netting⁴⁹...”

The peculiar thing was not only that the aluminum Boeing 767, which managed “to penetrate” the steel WTC Tower only 8 months later, despite his prediction, was about the same size as the Boeing 707.

The peculiar thing was that besides this suspicious interview with such a suspicious topic, Mr. De Martini himself, who had an office on the 88th floor of the North Tower, has been strangely missing (presumed dead) since the 9/11 attack, having supposedly remained in the North Tower “to assist in the evacuation”.

Mr. De Martini had first worked at World Trade Center when “Leslie E. Robertson Associates” hired him to assess damage from the so-called “truck bombing” in 1993 – i.e. he was initially hired in connection with the terror act (moreover, an act of a nuclear terrorism, since it is known to all specialists that the first WTC bombing in 1993 was a mini-nuke’s explosion).

It is also presumed that Mr. De Martini knew much more secrets about the WTC than only the well-known fact that it apparently could not have been penetrated by an aluminum passenger plane; and those other secrets that he knew about the WTC were much more awful.

1.12. Right at the moment of the WTC attack, both chairmen of the House and Senate Intelligence Committees - Senator Bob Graham and Representative Porter Goss (Goss was a 10-year veteran of the CIA’s clandestine operations wing) were having a peculiar breakfast meeting⁵⁰ with Pakistani Lt.-General Mahmood Ahmed – then a director of the ISI⁵¹. Later, however, it was found that it was exactly Mahmood Ahmed – the attendee of that breakfast, who ordered that $100,000 be sent to the alleged “hijacker” Mohamed Atta⁵².

(Author’s note: in any case such a peculiar finding does not necessarily mean that Mohammed Atta was indeed a hijacker on the payroll of the Pakistani ISI. It only proves that Mohammed Atta was a guy who worked for Pakistani intelligence at least, and, possibly, for the CIA as well. As such, he could be later easily employed to be a “hijacker” in a backdated manner – i.e. “posthumously”. Thus, while most of “conspiracy theorists” would apparently treat this fact as if it were Bob Graham, Porter Goss and Mahmood Ahmed – who have jointly conspired to attack the WTC, the humble author of this book has another opinion. Porter Goss has simply used an opportunity that his Pakistani colleague was in the U.S. and asked him to give him some of his guys – to be used in the ensuing 9/11 cover-up, because the FBI, CIA, etc. might not have time to hand-pick appropriate “hijackers” and could not cope alone. Following such a request, Gen. Mahmood Ahmed gave documents and photos of Mohammed Atta to his American colleagues, took Atta back home and simply changed his name there; how could he refuse such a request if all secret services routinely help each other?)

1.13. Immediately after the 9/11 attacks, the U.S. Government indulged itself into an absolutely incredible, unprecedented cover-up, trying to hide the entire truth about either – the Pentagon and the WTC attacks, as well as about technicalities of the WTC collapse. Moreover, that cover-up was presented in the most cumbersome and in the most ridiculous way – showing total unpreparedness of the U.S. Government to lie beautifully and convincingly – which is in fact totally unexplainable from any reasonable point of view. If the U.S. Government prepared 9/11 in advance, as alleged by the conspiracy theorists, then the 9/11 cover-up must have been prepared in advance as well; this is pure logic. And, if the 9/11 cover-up was prepared in advance, it must have been much more beautiful and much more convincing than the hastily prepared desperate lie called “The Report of 9/11 Commission” actually is.

1.14. The majority of the so-called “international terrorists” – captured anywhere around the world, are being peculiarly kept outside the United States’ territorial jurisdiction and their arresters and their “inquirers” are obviously not in any hurry at all to bring any of such “terrorists” to the American Justice. As of 2013, i.e. 12 (t-w-e-l-v-e) years later, not even one so-called “terrorist” was arraigned in any U.S. court. Of course, this unexplainable attitude attracts reasonable suspicions – if there are any real “terrorists” among those arrested, and if those so-called “terrorists” who are allegedly “arrested” are indeed being kept in custody as claimed. And that this notion about “Guantanamo Bay” and other extrajudicial detention facilities is not just a mere fiction itself – similar to the story of the alleged attack of the “Flight 77” on the Pentagon or to the tale about Santa-Claus...

2) Attracting suspicions that something was wrong with the new WTC owners in connection with the WTC attacks:

2.1. The entire WTC property had been acquired shortly before September 11, 2001, by a certain company of a certain Mr. Larry Silverstein, who immediately insured it, making sure to include into an insurance contract a certain unusual kind of insurance – namely against “terrorist acts”.

2.2. The WTC property (especially the right to operate its various security systems) finally came under Silverstein’s company’s actual control in the very last week before September 11. It is well-known fact that Silverstein urged the Port Authority officials, supervising the transfer to speed up the process, which otherwise was supposed to take at least three months time. This urge of his is highly suspicious – at least, it points to the fact that either Silverstein or at least those behind him must have been well aware of the imminent 9/11 attacks, as well as of their exact timing. Moreover, it shows that the scheduled timing of these attacks could not have been postponed – the 9/11 perpetration must have happened exactly on the eleventh day of September, 2001.

2.4. A suspicious “emergency drill” had been scheduled for September 11, 2001, to take place on the 97th floor of the WTC South Tower. A team of technology consultants from California were supposed to visit an investment firm Fiduciary Trust for this drill. (Fiduciary Trust had offices on the 97th floor.) No further details were reported as to what it entailed, or who the “technology consultants” were⁵³. However, the impact spot of the first “terrorist plane” was in between 95 and 106 floors.

2.5. At 6:47 AM, September 11, 2001, the WTC Building 7 Alarm System was placed on “TEST” status for a period due to last eight hours. This ordinarily happens during maintenance or other testing, and any alarms received from the building are generally ignored⁵⁴. [Please, try to remember this particular info; it is extremely important for understanding future events described in this book.]

2.8. Everybody who had offices in the WTC-7, known to be a “command center” of the entire WTC property, was suspiciously ordered to evacuate⁵⁵ even before the second aluminum “terrorist plane” penetrated the steel South Tower. By contrast, everybody who worked in the South Tower itself was oddly assured that everything was OK, the situation was “under control” after the first impact in the North Tower and the evacuation of the South Tower was not necessary⁵⁶. (Actually, only true “cowards” were supposed to escape from the South Tower prior to its being hit also due to such an assurance.)

2.9. September 11, 2001, morning, Mr. Larry Silverstein, who was supposed to be at the 88th floor of the North Tower at 8.00 AM – to attend some important meeting with his tenants, suspiciously preferred to visit a dermatologist doctor⁵⁷, with whom he allegedly made an appointment, which could not be missed. Mr. Larry Silverstein's children – his son Roger and his daughter Lisa – both of whom used to regularly attend meetings with his tenants in the World Restaurant on top of the North Tower, September 11 morning, were both suspiciously late to their work⁵⁸ ...

⁵⁶ At 9.00 AM a public announcement was broadcast inside the WTC Tower Two (the South Tower, which has yet to be hit), saying that the building is secure and people can return to their offices, - New York Times, 9/11/2002, also available on this Internet address: <http://www.nytimes.com/2002/05/26/nyregion/26WTC.html>

3) Attracting suspicions that something was wrong with the Israelis in connection with the WTC attacks:

3.1. The mere fact that a new owner of the WTC property – a certain Mr. Larry Silverstein – appears to be a Jew.

3.2. Data recovery experts later looking at 32 hard drives accidentally salvaged from the 9/11 attacks (somebody unexpectedly took them out before the Towers' collapse and thus inadvertently saved them for the future inquiry – the harddrives were apparently scheduled to perish together with the buildings) have discovered a surge in credit card transactions from the WTC in the hours before and during the attacks. Unusually large sums of money are rushed through computers even as the disaster unfolds. Investigators said: "There is a suspicion that some people had advance knowledge of the approximate time of the plane crashes in order to move out amounts exceeding $100 million. They did not expect the hard drives would end up with the inquirers and thought that all records of their transactions could not be traced after the mainframes were destroyed."⁵⁹

It is known, however, that the Jews in general and the Mossad in particular are the biggest specialists in a credit card fraud – especially in a high-scale one.

Unsurprisingly, despite the abovementioned harddrives unexpectedly fell into the hands of the inquirers and the scam became exposed, it did not result in any arrest or prosecution of those apparent accomplices of the 9/11 perpetrators, which were involved in the scam.

3.3. There were not any citizens of Israel (not even one) killed in the World Trade Center – while all other countries claimed to lose at least some of their respective citizens. Even such small counties that do not have many of its citizens in the United States – as Indonesia, Bangladesh or Kenya – have lost at least several of their citizens due to the WTC attacks, not even to say about European and other big countries – because each of latter had lost tens or even hundreds of their citizens. While there were well over 4000 (four thousand !) Israelis permanently working at the WTC 1 and 2, none of them has reported to work that morning of September 11, apparently being warned in advance that something dangerous was going to happen. Not even a single Jew of non-Israeli origin was killed during the 9/11 events either – all of them were warned not to report to work that morning too.

One could only wonder: if the Mossad operatives had known everything in advance and have cared about how to protect descendants of Jacob⁶⁰ from descendants of Ishmael⁶¹ that seriously – why then the Mossad officials had failed to warn their American colleagues about any upcoming perpetration by Arabs – as seriously as they managed to warn the Jews? Did it really mean that only the descendants of Jacob alone had a right to be saved? Or it meant something even much more sinister?

3.4. The State of Israel, however, has officially admitted during the initial counting of WTC victims, that even though there was no Israeli killed in the Twin Towers, there were some Israelis killed in those "hijacked" planes (in those aluminum planes that managed to penetrate steel of the Twin Towers). However, since it became more or less clear now to everybody that those "hijacked" planes were never actually hijacked, such an admission of the state of Israel appears to be even more suspicious and attracts even more doubts in regard to the true roles of the Israelis behind the entire 9/11 affair.

3.5. It was officially claimed that four hijackers on the "hijacked" flight 11 allegedly got up from their seats and shot (later edited to "stabbed") passenger Daniel Lewin, a multimillionaire who once belonged to the Israel Defense Force's "Sayeret Matkal", a top-secret counterterrorism unit.

⁵⁸ New York Observer, 3/17/2003 - <http://www.observer.com/node/47252>

⁶⁰ Jacob (his another name was "Israel") – a grandson of Abraham – from whom Jews descend.

⁶¹ Ishmael – a son of Ibrahim (Arabic pronunciation of Abraham) and uncle of Jacob – from whom Arabs descend.

Lewin was allegedly sitting on seat 9B in front of one of the three “hijackers” in business class; the alleged killing was mentioned in an alleged phone call from a flight-attendant Betty Ong that started at 8:20 AM⁶².

Besides, Ms. Ong (who is presumably “late” by now), otherwise talking “calmly and reasonably”, managed to forget her exact flight number and claimed that it was flight 12, but later corrected herself and said she was on Flight 11. Particularly important, of course, is not that Ms. Ong forgot her flight number (this forgetfulness could be discounted considering the supposed “extraordinariness” of the situation).

Particularly important are these facts:

1) The organization “Sayeret Matkal” is a deep-penetration unit that has been involved in assassinations, the theft of foreign signals-intelligence materials, and, what is particularly important in the theft and destruction of foreign nuclear weaponry⁶³. Please, try to remember this particular fact (about the “theft of foreign nuclear weaponry”); later on, in a course of this narrative, you might find it interesting – so now make sure to remember this: “...involved in the theft of foreign nuclear weaponry...” – it is really important;

2) It was not possible to bring any firearms on board the plane (in order to be able to “shoot” Mr. Lewin) and the alleged “hijackers” were allegedly armed with only box-cutting knives;

3) The plane(s) apparently were never hijacked, whatsoever (primarily, not only because aluminum cannot penetrate steel, but because most of the alleged “hijackers” were found alive after 9/11).

3.6. Immediately after the 9/11 attacks, the FBI managed to arrest many citizens of Israel apparently suspecting them of direct involvement with the actual perpetration; however, soon all of them were released without any charge and, moreover, all were cleared of any suspicion (why then was it necessary to arrest them at first instance, one might ask?)

3.7. A former Prime-Minister of Israel, Ehud Barak, suspiciously appeared in the BBC office in London on September 11, in the afternoon, for a pre-arranged televised interview that suspiciously coincided with the time of attacks (the Twin Towers had collapsed not a long time ago from the time of his speech at the BBC office).

Well, you might say that it was a mere “coincidence” – that the timing of his interview with the BBC so strangely coincided with the 9/11 attacks. However, it was not so simple. The suspicious point was that the main part of his speech (without any doubt prepared in advance) concerned terrorists who just attacked the United States. It seemed that Mr. Barak has not been even visibly surprised with the unprecedented events just unfolding on the other side of the Atlantic Ocean while he was giving his pre-scheduled interview. It was pretty obvious that Barak was well prepared for such a development (not to say that his speech, written in advance, was well prepared). Who prepared for him this speech? And who arranged for him that BBC interview, right in the right moment? It seems that these important questions have not been addressed so far by any official inquiry...

3.8. Immediately after the 9/11 attacks, all TV-channels were supplied by “someone” with footage showing jubilating Palestinians, dancing, giving away candies and firing their AK-47s into air – being supposedly “so glad” with the WTC civil casualties. The footage of jubilating Palestinians produced the needed effect on the gullible Western TV-spectator, of course. It was found later, however, that their jubilation was for some other occasion and the footage was shot well in advance and kept waiting for its hour. It should not be difficult to guess which nation could be behind such a set up and yet the question remains: who prepared such footage? Who fed it at the right time to the TV-channels? And, what is the most important: what was the conclusion of the official inquiry in this particular regard? Silence in response... The matter of suspiciously timely feeding of the footage with the “jubilating Palestinians” was not even investigated.

⁶² United Press International, 3/6/2002:

⁶³ New Yorker, 10/29/2001; United Press International, 3/6/2002.

3.9. It might sound “politically incorrect” and even “blasphemous” for the perception of a modern Western slave, but the fact remains and it is obvious for any free-minded person: the state of Israel in general, as well as its secret services and its military, were undoubtedly the main beneficiaries of the 9/11 attacks. Israel, its secret services and military derived from the 9/11 affair incomparably more benefits than even the United States and its own secret services and military.

It should be remembered that as a result of the 9/11 affair the state of Israel immediately enjoyed a lot of sympathies from all around the world – as the supposed “advanced post” of the world’s fighting against so-called “terrorism” which is automatically presumed being the “Muslim terrorism”. It should be reminded also that all such former sympathies towards Israel were effectively lost before 9/11 – due to the world community’s growing dissatisfaction with Israel’s brutality towards Palestinians and Israel’s openly aggressive and terrorist policies towards neighboring Arab states. However, these badly needed by Israel sympathies were all re-gained at once after 9/11 – which effectively changed perceptions of the majority of simpletons all around the world.

Just an example: Former Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, when asked what the 9/11 attacks meant for relations between the U.S. and Israel, replies, “It’s very good.” Then he edited himself: “Well, not very good, but it will generate immediate sympathy.” – As reported by the New York Times, 9/12/2001⁶⁴. Apparently, Benjamin Netanyahu has said exactly what he has meant.

It should be said also that besides those much needed sympathies, the state of Israel managed to secure a lot of credits and other kinds of substantial help not only from its usual patron – the United States’ taxpayer, but from those of many other states as well.

I guess it is very logical when investigating any crime to look first – who might have benefited from such a crime (Latin: “Qui bono?”)? Following this logic, our conclusion in regard to possible 9/11 motives would be very particular.

Did any Arabs or any other Muslims benefit from the attacks against the WTC and against the Pentagon? Apparently “No”.

Did Israel benefit from those attacks? Definitely “Yes”.

Did the Arabs or other Muslims need these 9/11 attacks? Definitely “No”.

Did the Israel need these 9/11 attacks? Apparently “Yes”. It needed them badly.

These facts made many people suspect the Israelis involvement in 9/11 and their suspicions are well-grounded.

4) Attracting doubts that the Twin Towers have collapsed because of the “reason” established by the official so-called “inquiry”, which actually claims that the Towers collapsed because the high-temperatures had allegedly caused their steel core to melt:

4.1. Almost 80% of the WTC Twin Towers (as well as the WTC-7) had been reduced to unexplainable fluffy fine dust – an effect, which can be explained by neither alleged “high-temperatures”, nor by alleged “melting of steel-cores”.

4.2. It was estimated by various specialists (who calculated the amount of fuel that could have been carried by the “planes” and the speed of its combustion) that even if it were true that those fires inside the Twin Towers might cause their collapse, still, it wouldn’t be the cause in the case of the WTC destruction. The point is that the alleged aviation fuel, supposedly spilled by the “planes”, had been largely burned out prior to either of the Twin Towers’ collapse. The aviation fuel in the case of the South Tower must have been completely burned out by 9.13 AM (while the Tower actually collapsed at 9.59 AM). And in the case of the North Tower – which has been hit earlier – the aviation fuel must have been completely burned out by 8.57 AM (while this Tower actually collapsed at 10.28 AM).

⁶⁴ Could be found in the Internet: <http://www.nytimes.com/2001/09/12/international/12ISRA.html>

4.3. Neither the combustion temperature of aviation fuel (kerosene), nor combustion temperatures of commonly known materials used in offices' interiors would ever be able to weaken the Tower's steel bars (not even to say about melting them). Moreover, it was established that none of the recovered later remnants of those steel core columns from those around the heat source had ever reached 250 degrees Celsius (482°F), while it is known that to melt steel 1600 degrees Celsius (2912°F) is required, and at least over 600 degrees Celsius (1112°F) is required to make steel any weaker.

4.4. Speeds of the Twin Towers falls (as well as the speed of the WTC-7 fall) were close to the speed of free-fall. The actual collapse of the WTC 1 and 2 took only 11-12 seconds (a maximum, according to the most "protective" estimates – 14). Their upper parts managed to reach the ground with nearly the same speed as a stone dropped from the Tower's top. However, if the government theory of the so-called "pancake collapse" would be true, such a collapse would take at least a hundred seconds (if not more) – giving only one second to each "pancaked" floor of the Tower...

4.5. The fact that the South Tower, where fires began much later than those in the North Tower (since the South Tower was "hit" by the supposed "plane" much later), still, nevertheless, managed to collapse first – contrary to any logic.

4.6. It's a well-known fact that the first workers who were appointed to remove debris from the WTC demolition site were from a peculiar company bearing the most interesting name: "Controlled Demolition Inc."

5) Attracting suspicions that the Twin Towers have been indeed demolished intentionally, not collapsed accidentally:

5.1. The last two abovementioned considerations.

5.2. The proven fact of an intentional demolition of the WTC 7 late afternoon September 11, 2001.

5.3. The fact that many policemen and even some firefighters had been ordered out of the buildings (by radio) prior to the buildings' collapse.

5.4. New York Mayor R. Giuliani claims that he has been informed of the South Tower's collapse prior to its actual collapse.

5.5. Large amounts of gold were stored in vaults in the massive basement below the WTC, and some of this was obviously being transported through the basement on that morning of September 11. Several weeks later, recovery workers discovered hundreds of ingots in a service tunnel below the WTC 5, along with a ten-wheel lorry and some cars (which were, presumably, transporting the gold). The lorry and cars had been crushed by falling steel, but no bodies were reported⁶⁵ found with them, so presumably they were abandoned before the first WTC collapse, at 9:59 AM. There was no logic in transporting this gold amidst the panic caused by the fires alone unless someone knew for sure that the Towers were going to be demolished soon.

6) Attracting suspicions that the Twin Towers (as well as the WTC-7) were all demolished not by any ordinary explosives, but by using some nuclear devices:

6.1. The mentioned above "unexplainable" fine dust to which almost 80% of the steel Twin Towers' structures and over 95% of the steel structure of the WTC-7 were reduced. It attracts suspicions that all the three buildings had suffered nothing else than a hit by a certain blast-wave⁶⁶ of a nuclear explosion.

6.2. Totally unexplainable completely- and partly molten pieces of steel bars found at the WTC demolition site.

⁶⁵ New York Daily News, 10/31/2001; London Times, 11/1/2001

⁶⁶ It will be explained later in exact detail what was the true effect of that "unexplainable" fine dust, but primitively thinking, it could be said that it was because of the suspected "blast-wave" – it would be true to a certain extent.

6.3. “Unexplainable” high-temperatures (at least twice as much as the maximum combustion temperature of kerosene) registered under the WTC debris even several weeks later. These temperatures were high enough to melt boots of firefighters at “Ground Zero” just in a few hours.

6.4. “Unexplainable” so-called “underground fires”, admitted to be the “longest-lasting in history”, under the WTC debris – particularly under the WTC-1, WTC-2, and WTC-7 and the fact that these so-called “underground fires” had not yet been extinguished until the middle of December 2001.

6.5. Smoke rising from under “burning” debris should have been black, not white. However, it was clearly white; because it was not smoke. It was vapor (radioactive vapor to be exact) – from the deep spots of underground nuclear explosions.

6.6. Seismic records of detected underground nuclear explosions which coincided to the second with the beginnings of the WTC Towers’ collapse – some seismograms are widely available.

6.7. “Unexplainable” streams of radioactive vapors emanating for weeks and months from underneath of debris piles of the WTC-1, WTC-2, and WTC-7 and being intense enough to be visible even from space (photographs made by spacecrafts clearly showing such streams of radioactive vapors are widely available, also on the Internet).

6.8. Cases of apparent chronic radiation sickness suffered by all “Ground Zero workers” (i.e. by those who spent considerable amounts of time cleaning the site and extinguishing those “longest-lasting underground fires”). These resulted in many cases of leukemia and myeloma – the most typical diseases caused by chronic radiation sickness – and also in many cases of various kinds of cancer, which otherwise cannot be explained at all.

6.9. “Unexplainable” high rate of mortality among “Ground Zero” workers – several thousands of whom, despite their generally young age, have already passed away as to this date (being said in 2008), with many others being so sick that, unfortunately, they will follow those already deceased any time soon.

6.10. Absolutely “unexplainable” odd desire of the U.S. Government to get rid of all the WTC debris as soon as possible, which extended as far as to exportation of the WTC debris to another country.

6.11. The fact that several FBI investigators (who apparently knew the truth very well) during their brief visits to the WTC site wore nothing else than full haz-mat⁶⁷ suits.

6.12. The fact that New York Mayor R. Giuliani ordered the immediate evacuation of people south of Canal Street at about noon of 9/11 and the closure of schools the next day (when it has not been decided yet if the officials would honestly admit the nuclear explosions or would hide them from the public).

6.13. The fact that starting from 28 of September, 2001, the firefighters, who were desperately trying to extinguish those “longest-lasting in history” underground fires under the debris of the three former buildings – WTC-1, WTC-2 and the WTC-7, were ordered to mix into their water some two really odd and hitherto unheard-of components – certain so-called “powerful ultra-violet absorbers”. These suspicious substances with more than suspicious names, according to an unintelligible official explanation⁶⁸, were intended to “absorb high-energy emissions from the fire”. These ravings for anyone, capable of reading between the lines, would mean nothing else than this: the poor firefighters, who did not even suspect that something was so badly wrong, were ordered to mix into their water certain chemical components, which were intended to be used by ABC military units in deactivation procedures in cases of radioactive contamination.

6.14. The mere fact that the WTC demolition site starting from September 11, 2001, has been dubbed both – officially and unofficially – “ground zero” (not in Capital Letters yet), which in a commonly known military jargon meant (up to that date) nothing else than a place of a nuclear explosion⁶⁹.

Author’s note: Especially notable, however, was the fact that despite the fact that U.S. officials had already dubbed the WTC demolition site “ground zero”, and such an odd name had been already accepted by everybody (including mass media), the “ground zero” workers among themselves still referred the site as only “the Pile”. The “ground zero” responders were prohibited by their own superiors from using the “ground zero” words to call the place. It might sound unbelievable today, but then, in September-December 2001, the responders were indeed taught by their superiors that it was allegedly “disrespectful” to call the WTC debris by that “ground zero” name and they were explicitly prohibited to call it as such. The set expression “ground zero” was strictly banned among the responders. It is understandable – those who sent the gullible responders to work on the site of 3 recent nuclear explosions, without providing them any adequate training in handling nuclear hazards and without issuing them any protective gear, apparently did not want the responders to use those seditious words from the military ABC jargon because it might allude them to the awful truth. Most of the ground zero responders were former servicemen who might recollect what the odd expression used to mean in the military lexicon and some of them would surely recollect it, if they were allowed to freely use those seditious words in their everyday speech. The so-called “good guys” could not afford it. Therefore, they forced the responders to call that place “The Pile”, instead.

6.15. The fact that at the very last stage of “ground zero” cleaning – right at the time when the workers would eventually reach the very foundations of the WTC buildings 1, 2 and 7 (and would be able to see what exactly happened with these WTC foundations) – New York Mayor R. Giuliani⁷⁰ has without any understandable reason limited the number of the “Ground Zero” workers to a mere 75 – probably, leaving only the most trust-worthy ones, who would for sure keep their mouths shut.

6.16. An absolutely “unexplainable” silence and the total absence of any evidence concerning the Towers’ collapse has been provided from the side of witnesses from the underground train system (“PATH”) – despite the fact that the “tube” of the underground train was crossing the WTC site almost at the footprint of one of the Twin Towers and such evidence would be exceptionally valuable. It points to the sad fact – no people in the PATH were able to survive the underground nuclear explosions designed to demolish the Twin Towers (I guess everyone agrees that these people in the deep-underground PATH station would undoubtedly have survived the “kerosene-initiated-pancake-collapse” of the Twin Towers from above?).

7) Attracting suspicions that the abovementioned suspicions of possible nuclear demolitions of the WTC are more than reasonable, and that the U.S. Government (which itself might exploit these very facts and secretly blame those nuclear demolitions of the WTC on some so-called “Muslim terrorists”) in reality had concocted the double “truth” to explain the otherwise “unexplainable” WTC collapse – one, commonly known kind of “truth” – for the gullible general public, and another – “awful” and “secret” kind of “truth” – to be “confidentially” fed to some discerning persons who, due to either their high positions or due to their specific knowledge (or both), would never be satisfied with the first kind of “truth”:

7.1. The U.S. Justice, known to be quite impartial (at least up to that date) and also believed not to be so easily bent under any pressure from the US Government, in any court case which concerns the WTC- be it civil claims of dying “Ground Zero” workers – demanding compensations, or any attempts to sue the FBI into releasing some essential evidence, or attempts to protect their innocence from the side of accused “terrorists”, and in many other WTC related cases – always takes the side of the U.S. Government and accepts its bizarre 9/11 story “as is”. It accepts it as if this ridiculous interpretation were proven both – technically and legally. Such an attitude leads us to a reasonable suspicion that top figures in the U.S. Justice System have been already fed the “secret version of truth” and, in the same time, have been subjected to a promise not to reveal it to others for the sake of supposed “national security”.

7.2. The U.S. Justice in an absolutely unexplainable manner agreed with the most ridiculous claim of George W. Bush⁷¹ that all those so-called “terrorists” or even ordinary fighters – whose only guilt is being simple soldiers who try to protect their motherland with AK-47s against B-52 bombers and “Tomahawk” missiles – are allegedly subject to “military court trials” as being “war criminals”.

This is something really new in any jurisprudence. One could scarcely imagine that all those Viet-Kong guerillas, not even to say about regular North-Vietnam’s army soldiers, could have been treated as being subjects of military court trials for their simple participation in combat...

Actually, the military court itself is primarily intended to try offenders from within one’s own military – such as those who refuse orders, marauders, traitors etc. Subjecting a foreigner to a trial of a military court is rather an exception than a rule.

Moreover, those “quick” military trials held in tents (I mean drum-head court martial) suppose themselves to be an exception, rather than a common practice – the mere necessity to conduct a trial in a tent and process it in a simplified manner is only dictated by the field conditions and by nothing else. Never a

President Bush said yesterday that his order allowing foreign terrorism suspects to be tried in military tribunals is "the absolute right thing to do," despite fears expressed by both liberals and conservatives that long-cherished principles of American justice could be compromised. Bush signed an executive order last week allowing military trials of non-citizens who are members of the al Qaeda terrorist network or who are charged with aiding or committing acts of terrorism, or harboring terrorists. Such tribunals could be held in secret and could require a lower burden of proof for the government than a normal criminal proceeding. Civilians have not been subject to such trials since World War II. "I need to have that extraordinary option at my fingertips," Bush said after a Cabinet meeting yesterday. "I ought to be able to have that option available should we ever bring one of these al Qaeda members in alive. It's our national interests, it's our national security interests that we have a military tribunal available. It is in the interests of the safety of potential jurors that we have a military tribunal." Under the terms of the order, Bush will personally decide which cases should be handled by a tribunal. A senior administration official said that during several briefings on the issue, Bush was told that President Franklin D. Roosevelt had made those decisions himself, rather than delegating them to the Justice Department or the Pentagon. "It was the president who said, 'This will be my decision,' " the official said, confirming a report in Newsweek. "As the president, he can take into account all the considerations -- from diplomatic to military to law enforcement to intelligence -- about whether this is the proper method of adjudicating justice." The official said the tribunal could be used for foreign nationals arrested both within the United States and abroad. Bush said federal officials "will do everything we can to defend the American people within the confines of our Constitution, and that's exactly how we're proceeding." "These are extraordinary times," Bush said yesterday. "I would remind those who don't understand the decision I made that Franklin Roosevelt made the same decision in World War II. Those were extraordinary times, as well."

necessity to process a trial in a simplified manner was dictated by the gravity of an offence which is being heard in the court-tent. Indeed, it supposes to be vice-versa: only relatively minor and simple military offences should be heard in tents and in a simplified manner, while really grave and complicated offences should be transferred to higher courts (military or non-military) which have normal procedure.

Moreover, as long as there are no bullets whistling around the court-room, the trial supposes to be held in the normal conditions – even if it is a trial conducted by the lowest military court. And in any case, the “quickness” of any military trial being held in the field conditions is itself not a “severe tool” of punishment; it is rather an unfortunate unavoidable circumstance, which, as much as possible, should be avoided.

One might try to remember – such war-criminals as top Nazis, or those who are stood accused of genocides in Africa or in former Yugoslavia, have never been tried in quick military courts despite being apparent war criminals. Legal hearings in regard to them were always held in air-conditioned rooms rather than in a tent, and by normal judges, observing the full judicial procedure, rather than by a bunch of uniformed thugs who assume roles of the “justice”.

Besides, the U.S. Justice in an absolutely unexplainable manner agrees with the most illegal action of the so-called “fighters” against the so-called “terrorism” – i.e. with lasting for years extrajudicial detentions of the so-called “terrorists” in detention facilities such as Guantanamo Bay prison etc. without bringing those detainees to any court of law (not even to a military one).

Moreover, it agreed with all these cases of so-called “extraordinary renditions” – when the U.S. administrative officials assume an authority to arrest so-called “humans” without any arrest-warrant and to send them to whatever country they wish – such as Syria, Jordan, Egypt or Afghanistan, where such “humans” would be severely tortured by the American proxies.

The U.S. Justice System unexplainably agreed to all of these incredible actions, despite the fact that such performances are in reality nothing else than the most violent and the most shameless encroachment by the rogue administrative officials on the very U.S. Judicial System. One could only wonder – if those “terrorists” are really suspected to be guilty – why they couldn’t be tried in some U.S. criminal court then?

Such an unprecedented and shameful capitulation of the entire U.S. Justice System to a mercy of rogue administrative officials could probably be possible only when some really serious stuff is involved – such as weapons of mass destruction. I guess everybody understands that when facing things such as a nuclear warhead which is about to explode or an epidemic of Ebola which is about to spread, any judge would quickly surrender his entire authority to an appropriate specialist without any objection. While any judge would unlikely surrender his power in any other case. And it seems that in the particular case of 9/11 the supposed “nuclear threat” was exactly the cause. It does not look like the entire U.S. Justice System would so shamefully surrender its authority over so-called “international terrorism” if it were the only four supposedly “hijacked” planes involved and nothing more than that.

7.3. Medical doctors supposed to be professional enough to immediately understand that they were dealing with chronic cases of radiation sickness (in the case of sick “Ground Zero” workers, who suffered from “unexplainable” leukemia, myeloma and various kinds of radiation-induced cancers). However, interestingly enough, these doctors did not reveal their true diagnosis to their patients. It leads us to a reasonable suspicion, that those not many doctors, who were appointed to treat “Ground Zero” patients, were themselves initiated into some “awful” secret version of the “truth”, but again for the sake of the supposed “national security”, were forced to keep their mouths shut.

7.4. Insurance companies, which were up to that date never known to be eager to voluntarily pay any claim, especially a big one, in this extremely suspicious case of the WTC collapse – being rightly suspected to be nothing else than a case of the WTC intentional demolition (a/k/a “fraud”) – which was especially obvious with the WTC 7 collapse, still, nevertheless, have quickly paid huge sums of insurance claims almost without objections.

This leads to quite a reasonable suspicion, that owners or top-managers (or both) of such insurance companies have been confidentially fed a certain secret version of “awful truth” as well – while being forced in the same time to keep the secret. And such a solution has been also supported by the judges – in case of any fighting in court – since the judges themselves have also swallowed the same kind of secret “truth” and believed it.

Moreover, it is suspected that the insurance companies, although forced to pay the unprecedented (and obviously exaggerated) fraudulent insurance claims, paid them, in reality, out of some special funds that were secretly provided from the state budget (read from the pocket of the gullible U.S. taxpayer), because otherwise, the insurance companies would make too much noise, when forced to pay to the fraudsters in such dubious circumstances.

7.5. Top leaders of the biggest foreign countries (China, Russia, France, Germany, India, and Brazil, not to mention well-known American allies) unexpectedly and without any visible reason have all supported the most bizarre claims of the U.S. Government in connection of the WTC- and the Pentagon-attacks.

Moreover, all of them have unexpectedly supported the U.S. Government's outrageous "War against terror", its numerous violations of human rights, and its massive "legal" encroachment on these very human rights and civil freedoms.

All these peculiar facts lead us to a reasonable suspicion, that all these foreign leaders, who would apparently never become satisfied with the "public version" of the 9/11 "truth", were "confidentially" fed some other version of this "truth" – "secret and awful" – and were, at last, satisfied with that one.

7.6. The United States' own Senators and Congressmen suspiciously "easily" agreed with the official interpretation of the 9/11 attacks – on either the Pentagon or on the World Trade Center, as well as with the ridiculous technical explanation of the WTC collapse.

Moreover, all American high-ranking politicians suspiciously "easily" agreed to proceed with the "War against terror". Especially suspicious was the fact that while the U.S. Government did not have any official (i.e. open to the public) proof that Iraq had ever possessed any alleged weapons of mass destruction (primarily – nuclear weapons, of course⁷²), almost all the U.S. senators and congressmen unexplainably "easy" gave their final approval to proceed with the war against Iraq. All of it leads to a suspicion that the nuclear demolition of the WTC might have been a true case, and, moreover, this cause was used as a kind of "awful secret truth" to be fed confidentially to the U.S. high-ranking political figures.

7.7. The absolutely unexplainable desire of the U.S. Government to attack Iraq in connection with the 9/11 affair, despite the fact that the Iraqi regime had nothing to do with the 9/11 perpetration (at least according to the official version of the "truth" for the plebeians).

Another suspicious thing is the absolutely unexplainable desire of the U.S. Government to put an end to Saddam Hussein's power, disregarding the mere fact that Saddam Hussein was in reality the staunchest ally of the United States for years⁷³. This virtually unexplainable attitude of the U.S. Government towards Saddam Hussein attracts reasonable suspicions that during 9/11 some nuclear weapons might have been involved (or at least "confidentially" claimed to be involved). Because these are the only things which the so-called "Al-Qaeda" could not manufacture alone – it would apparently need some more powerful partner to obtain any nuclear weapons and a relatively well-developed rogue "Muslim"⁷⁴ Iraq suited such a role perfectly.

7.8. It is claimed by the CIA Director George Tenet that he bumped into Pentagon adviser Richard Perle in the White House who told him, apparently referring to the attack against the Pentagon which happened

⁷² Since chemical weapons in the case of Saddam Hussein were supplied to him by the Americans themselves – to fight Kurds, who were then inclined to both extremely dangerous "heresies" – Maoism and Islamic Fundamentalism in the same time – as well as to use these chemical weapons against even more dangerous Islamic Revolution in Iran – there was nothing really to complain about Saddam's chemical weapons. The cause of dissention in September 2001 was only the nuclear weapons allegedly possessed by Iraq and possibly used in the WTC nuclear destruction.

the previous day (or it could be that he was referring to both – the Pentagon and the WTC nuclear demolitions): "Iraq has to pay a price for what happened yesterday, they bear responsibility."⁷⁵

It is difficult to understand what Saddam Hussein had to do with 9/11 based on the official claims of the U.S. Government – alias "truth" for the plebeians. However, it is quite easy to understand why Saddam Hussein had been suspected – considering that only his country was developed enough (from among the rest of so-called "rogue" states) to be able (to be able in theory, at least) to produce modern missiles and nuclear weapons.

7.9. The above suspicion is also being supported by this more or less known (among 9/11 researchers) fact: a note, written by Department of Defense staffer Stephen Cambone in the afternoon of September 11, 2001, details Rumsfeld's strategy to link Osama bin Laden and Saddam Hussein as culprits of the attacks⁷⁶.

Here's a description of the text: "The released notes document Donald Rumsfeld's 2:40 PM instructions to General Myers to find the 'best info fast... judge whether good enough [to] hit S.H. [Saddam Hussein] at same time - not only UBL [Usama Bin Laden]".

Please, make sure to notice: it was still only 2:40 PM – even the WTC-7 has not collapsed yet. Yet, it has become clear that the U.S. Government had already decided that its longest-serving Middle-Eastern ally – Saddam Hussein, who was left there to rule even despite being totally defeated in the First Gulf War (because he was so badly needed by the United States to be always in power in Iraq) – now, only hours after the WTC and the Pentagon attacks, had to be "linked" to Osama bin Laden, and at last – had to be written-off and defeated in reality.

Of course, one might think that there was nothing really peculiar in such an idea to topple the Iraqi regime – because it became normal nowadays for many people to suspect that the U.S. Government has supposedly staged 9/11 attacks in order to create an opportunity to attack Iraq.

However, one does not have to be so primitive to think like this. Saddam was truly an American ally – if those in power in the United States were really craving so much to remove him, then they didn't need to destroy their World Trade Center. Saddam had been already defeated during the First Gulf War, in case you forgot this fact from the recent history – the U.S. army was just a step away from totally removing him

10 years ago – yet the United States had abstained from making that very last (and seemingly logical) step.

Obviously, the Americans did not want to remove Saddam, but they have been forced to do so by some “unexplainable” circumstances... One doesn’t have to forget about logic: the political agenda of Osama bin Laden (who claims to promote “Islamic values”) and that of Saddam Hussein (who was the worst enemy of Islam in the 20th century – to the extent that he did not even hesitate using chemical weapons to annihilate those “Islamists”) were so much different, that one must be completely insane thinking that Osama bin Laden and Saddam Hussein could ever come to any terms.

Osama bin Laden is known, among other things, for his attempt to assemble an alternative (means “alternative to coalition forces”) army of Islamic warriors to beat Saddam’s army out of occupied Kuwait prior to the First Gulf War⁷⁷.

7.10. An unexplainably suspicious leakage of sensitive information or maybe a governmental “slip of the tongue” occurred on November 20, 2001, when the “Washington Times” published its extremely suspicious article strangely named “Osama plot revealed: How he got the bomb”⁷⁸ – as if it were allegedly well-established that Osama has indeed gotten that “bomb” at that moment.

In this article, among other interesting things, the following was claimed:

“...American and British reporters who followed the Northern Alliance into town [of Kabul], and a reporter for the London Times appeared to have struck the mother lode... ..In a dispatch from Kabul, he described documents which he said appeared to be instructions on how to build “a Nagasaki-type atomic bomb.” This discovery quickly fueled speculation that al Qaeda had assembled a nuclear-weapons factory in the heart of downtown Kabul...”

Try to be realistic – what does it have to do with the alleged box-cutting knives supposedly used to transform the passengers “Boeings” into a kind of primitive weapons used to strike the Twin Towers and the Pentagon?

The article, however, contained even more peculiar phrases:

“...analysts in Washington and London felt compelled to say they were skeptical that Osama had actually assembled such a device...”

and

“...What Osama and his rocket scientists and particle-beam physicists apparently were working from..”

and this:

“...Some discovery. The good guys are closing in on Osama and his cave and it is not clear that Osama and his team of highly paid mullahs actually assembled a mighty Muslim bomb...”

⁷⁷ It is a well forgotten fact by now, but it is good to strain one’s memory a little bit and to recollect it: Osama bin Laden until the First Gulf War was an official friend of the United States – he was a hero of Afghani resistance during Soviet occupation of that country. On the other hand, Osama bin Laden was grateful to the Americans for their lavish help provided to the Afghani mujaheddins fighting for Islamic cause against the “godless Soviets”. It was the occupation of Kuwait by Saddam Hussein, to be exact, which first separated the two former allies – Osama bin Laden and the United States. Osama bin Laden offered to the then Saudi King Fahd to assemble an army of Islamic volunteers from various countries to beat the “godless” army of secular dictator Saddam Hussein out of occupied Kuwait. The Saudi King, however, disagreed (for some “not so clear” reason) and preferred to accept the American and other coalition troops who insisted to fight against Saddam’s army in Kuwait. As a result of this war, the American troops became permanently stationed in the Saudi land, which considered being holy for all Muslims. Such a desecration of the Holy Land by the unbelievers indeed deeply offended many pious Muslims, among them Osama bin Laden. They demanded that all the infidels had to leave their country, since they had nothing to do their after the war, and only when the “infidels” refused was it the first time they declared the United States an enemy of Islam. Now, considering all of this, one could have more or less a clear picture – if such a pious Muslim as Osama bin Laden could come to any terms with such a godless dictator as secular Saddam Hussein or not.

Please, note that officially, “Al-Qaeda” did use neither any nuclear weapons nor any missiles. What were they talking about? What “rocket scientists”? What “particle-beam physicists”? What “Muslim bomb”? Why all those ravings, in addition, had to be treated with skepticism by “analysts in Washington and London”?

One has to teach himself how to read between the lines – it is quite useful, especially, when you are being cheated and there are no other sources of information, except from cheaters.

7.11. Many people might have already forgotten it, but it would be good to recollect the story about “Wall Street Journal’s” reporter Daniel Pearl who used to write stories about Pakistani ISI that led to his well publicized alleged “kidnapping and murder”. On December 24, 2001, he reported⁷⁹ about alleged ties between the ISI and a Pakistani organization, “Ummah Tameer-e-Nau”, that was supposedly “working on giving bin Laden nuclear secrets” before September 11.

I guess it is clear enough to everybody that the so-called “freedom of press” exists only in theory. Practically all mass-media belongs to some serious guys, and none of their journalists, however “brave” and however “independent” they might appear to simpletons, would ever venture into any investigation of his own (especially on such a sensitive topic), unless someone orders such a journalist to proceed with it.

This story became even more suspicious after a strange movie was released by the “kidnappers”, where Daniel Pearl, who was about “to be murdered”, was forced to admit that “he was a Jew” – just before his throat was supposedly slashed.

The mere fact that the entire story about the alleged “nuclear connections” of the “supreme 9/11 perpetrator” and the following “kidnapping and murder” of the “Jewish journalist” was so well publicized, leads to very reasonable suspicions that some stakeholders were simply exploiting a certain “confidential” nuclear aspect of the 9/11 attacks.

Even more suspicions are attracted in this regard, because the very man who allegedly “kidnapped” and “murdered” Daniel Pearl, was no one else than Sheikh Ahmed Umar Said, the very individual who in 2000 was ordered by the Director-General of the ISI – the Pakistani intelligence – Lt.-General Mahmood Ahmed – to transfer those $100.000 to the would-be “9/11 hijacker” Mohammed Atta.

Sheikh Ahmed Umar Said was not sentenced to any imprisonment, but to “death” for this alleged crime (means he has already changed his name and re-settled, as you might expect). While “Chief 9/11 Clown” – the so-called “KSM” (alias “Khalid Sheikh Mohammad”) has admitted that it was indeed him who with his “blessed right hand” personally cut off the head of that American Jew Daniel Pearl. Considering this, it shall be presumed that the entire story with Pearl’s “kidnapping” and “murder” was a joint concoction of the two secret services – the American and the Pakistani – who needed to get something out of it.

What exactly did they want to get out of it? The answer would probably be this: they wanted to stress that Osama bin Laden was in pursuit of nuclear weapons. First, he supposedly approached Pakistanis, and when that did not work, he switched to beg for it with his former enemy – Saddam Hussein. Unlikely, it could be interpreted otherwise.

7.12. The U.S. authorities were expected to explicitly deny authenticity of all publicly available seismograms which might record underground nuclear explosions under the WTC. Such a denial would be indeed a logical step, since these very seismograms contradict the general position of the U.S. Government concerning the official (“plebeian”) explanation for the WTC collapse. I hope any reasonable person agrees that free circulation of seismograms showing underground nuclear explosions endangers the integrity of the official conspiracy theory (the “kerosene-pancake-collapse theory”, I mean).

Therefore the U.S. Government supposed not to tolerate such seismograms – all of them must have been classified and their free circulation must have been strictly prohibited. However, suspiciously enough, the U.S. Government did not deny authenticity of the “seditious” seismograms’ boldly publicized by the Lamont-Doherty Earth Observatory of the Columbia University. Neither did the U.S. Government order the immediate removal of these seismograms from the Internet. This leads to another reasonable suspicion, that the U.S. Government itself exploits these very seismograms as a kind of “proof” that the “awful” version of the confidential “truth” for the “patricians” is indeed “true” and that the “Muslim terrorists” have indeed demolished the WTC by some nuclear explosions.

⁷⁹ Wall Street Journal, 12/24/2001.

7.13. The sheer ferocity with which the U.S. Government pursues its so-called “War against terror”. It seems that it won’t be so ferocious if there would only be simple “hijacking” involved, without anything more dangerous than passenger planes converted into a primitive kind of weapon.

7.14. It is probably known to everybody that an official “pretext” to start the war against Iraq was nothing else than the alleged weapons of mass destruction supposedly possessed by Saddam Hussein. It is also well-known that after the invasion of Iraq and its defeat no weapons of mass destruction have been ever discovered. This fact alone caused a lot of noise amongst both political elite and commoners to the extent that many proponents of the war against Iraq have badly lost their face before the public and before their respective parliaments.

Nevertheless, even after that discovery (no weapons of mass destruction found in Iraq) the war against this country has continued. Even up to this day, none of the politicians who were proponents of this totally “unexplainable” war has ever come up with any remorse. All of them stubbornly continue to maintain that the war against Iraq was allegedly the “right thing”. Just one example – mentioned by General Myers in 2005 (i.e. 4 years after) addressing the public with this statement:

“Defeating the Iraqi insurgency is as important to the United States as winning World War II was 60 years ago. The United States must win in Iraq because the outcome and consequences of defeat are greater than World War II⁸⁰.”

One could only wonder – is it really comparable – the World War II and some local war involving some remnants of a useless regime of a third-world’s dictator? Interestingly enough, for some high-ranking guys, having some higher military education, they are comparable...

7.15. The mere Iraqi war itself is an apparently losing bargain for the United States – contrary to a common opinion that this war is allegedly “beneficial”.

Try to be realistic – what is really beneficial in this war? That the oil prices soared up like never before since the Islamic Revolution in Iran? Is that really “beneficial” for the United States, who is an oil-buyer, not an oil-seller? Or maybe what is really “beneficial” is an unprecedented so-called “sectarian violence” – namely that bloody and apparently endless war between Sunni and Shi’a followers of Islam, not to mention fighting between Arabs and Kurds, and Arabs and Turkmen? The war which the Americans would never be able to stop?

The problem is that Saddam Hussein was really a powerful and ruthless secular dictator, who was the only person able to control Iraq, which is otherwise uncontrollable. It would never be possible to re-install any dictator of this kind in Iraq in the 21st century... All now remaining world dictators were installed much earlier – they simply survived from the ‘60s and early ‘70s. They managed to come to power when such a thing was still possible – i.e. in the very last wave of an anti-colonial (or in some cases an anti-communist) struggle, when such a term as “democracy” was simply out of use.

I hope everybody understands that to install any dictator of the same kind – I mean a dictator capable of using sarin or mustard gas against his own citizens – is no longer feasible. That is exactly why American politicians, who were apparently reasonable enough to call a spade a spade, have clearly realized the true value of having such an asset as Saddam in the Middle East. The American political elite liked Saddam Hussein very much and wanted him to remain in power in Iraq as long as possible. That is exactly why Saddam was left to rule there despite being officially defeated in the First Gulf War – when all simpletons in the world sincerely (but in vain) expected that in a couple of days the American troops would take Baghdad and would at last topple that hateful Iraqi regime, which dared to attack a small independent country named “Kuwait” at the end of the 20th century amidst the universal peace.

I guess it is clear enough that the U.S. Government would never be able to restore any secular order (or any order at all) in occupied Iraq. Just try to realize that the Americans have simply bogged down in some extremely dangerous affair which indeed is far more destructive to the United States than their adventure in Vietnam four decades earlier.

⁸⁰ Published in: http://www.usatoday.com/news/washington/2005-09-26-myers-iraq_x.htm

The Iraqi one seems an even crazier adventure, because during the American's arrival to Vietnam there was an ongoing fighting all over the world between the Reds and the bourgeoisie, so the outcome of the battle in Vietnam was actually a matter of survival for the capitalist society which seemed to be then in the greatest danger of being threatened by the world-wide communist revolution. By contrast, in the case of the Iraqi invasion nothing seemed to be as serious as in the case with Vietnam. Another problem is that while the Americans managed to eventually withdraw from Vietnam relatively "easy", it does not seem that they would really be able to do so in the case of volatile Iraq which they have so beheaded.

Based on all these facts, try to reconsider if that war against Iraq was really a "good idea" when it comes to the United States' own interests? Just try to be honest and to use elementary logic. I guess the answer will be "No". Nonetheless, the U.S. leaders have ventured into this unprecedented Iraq war and they continue to stubbornly maintain that the cause was allegedly "right". Until now they apparently do not feel any remorse whatsoever.

This really indicates that something was being hidden from the general public in regard to this incredible Iraq war. This "something" was apparently a nuclear component of the 9/11 attacks.

What about, for example, President G.W. Bush's claims as late as October 2003 while visiting Thailand's Royal Army Headquarters:

"...Today, our nations are challenged once again. We're threatened by ruthless enemies unlike others we have faced. Terrorist groups hide in many countries. They emerge to kill the innocent. They seek weapons to kill on a massive scale. One terrorist camp in the mountains of central Asia can bring horror to innocent people living far away, whether they're in Bali, in Riyadh⁸¹ or in New York City. One murderous dictator pursuing weapons of mass destruction and cultivating ties to terror could threaten the lives of millions⁸² ...".

It is very easy to notice that the U.S. Government is without any exaggeration obsessed with the notion of the alleged "weapons of mass destruction" in the hands of those so-called "terrorists" and "dictators", while in accordance with the official version of the "truth", it were only simple aluminum-made "Boeing-767's" and "757's" and nothing more dangerous than that.

7.16. The mere fact that almost immediately after the WTC demolitions and the Pentagon attack the U.S. Government, which apparently believed that the attack of hijacked planes on some buildings was an act of terror and not of war, had unmistakably changed the official name of the 9/11 perpetration from the initial "Act of terror" to the well-known "Act of war".

It was too fast a change to think that it was because some spin-doctors had already interfered at that moment. It was too short a time to suspect anything like this – apparently, that change from the "Act of terror" to the "Act of war" was a genuine action that had nothing to do with any spin-doctors.

7.17. Unprecedented claims of the U.S. Government, which after 9/11 attacks claimed that in order to protect the "interests" of the United States; it won't hesitate to use nuclear weapons against Arabs and other Muslims. It went as far as even claiming to be determined to annihilate the very Muslim holy places (such as Mecca) using atomic bombs! These absolutely outrageous and seemingly irresponsible ravings of the U.S. president by no means could have been even voiced if there were no nuclear weapons involved in the first place in attacking against the very United States.

The most peculiar and the most suspicious fact, however, is that those "atomic" ravings of G.W. Bush, however irresponsible, were not opposed even to the slightest extent by a majority of other countries governments (neither by the United Nations Organization). This state of affairs indicated that at least top political figures in the world "saw" some "reasons" behind such an irresponsible claim.

⁸¹ Ramadan nuclear bombing would happen in Riyadh only a month later – in November 2003; so here G.W. Bush probably referred to a previous nuclear bombing in Riyadh – in November 1995. Bali nuclear bombing happened in 2002, prior to this speech. Note that New York City had been also mentioned by Bush along with the other two places.

7.17. The largely unnoticed, but still absolutely unprecedented claim of the Russian Government – which has followed suit with similar ravings. While claiming to “strictly adhere” to the previous Soviet principle never to use any nuclear weapons first against any country, the Russian Government managed to adopt a new unprecedented, “unexplainable”, and utterly outrageous amendment to its former nuclear doctrine. It claimed that Russia retains its alleged “right” to use its nuclear weapons first against so-called “terrorist” targets. Unlikely would the Russian Government adopt such a scandalous amendment if there were no nuclear weapons used by the so-called “terrorists” first. Apparently, this could only be the true (and justifiable) cause of such an amendment.

7.18. Unprecedented information was published on September 16, 2001, by the Spanish-language “El-Mundo”, in an article “TRAGEDIA / APOCALIPSIS USA MI HERMANO BIN LADEN” which in English translation sounded precisely as follows:

“NUCLEAR PERIL. Latest information out of the US is that the [Al-Qaeda’s] leader’s emissaries succeeded in purchasing out of the Ukraine 3 mini-nukes known as RA115 and RA116. These can be carried in a suitcase, 700 of them were manufactured in the Soviet Union. Russian sources admit they have lost at least 100 of these.”⁸³

Both – the context of the actual events and the article’s name left no room for any ambiguity.

7.19. Starting from September 18, 2001, there was the, largely forgotten by today, so-called “anthrax attack”. Letters containing alleged “anthrax spores” were mailed to several news media offices and to two Democratic US Senators, supposedly “killing” five people and “infecting” 17 others.

The unprecedented crime officially remains unsolved, but not only does it “remain unsolved”, it remains suspiciously and totally forgotten. It seems that the U.S. propaganda machine is not interested in promoting this “heinous crime” anymore, because it seems that it has already served its purpose: to convince some democratic politicians to agree to attack the Iraqi regime – at least, if not because of its alleged “nuclear” arsenal, then because of its arsenal of biological weapons. (Iraq was one of the very few countries known to produce the anthrax spores in an “appropriate” form – exactly like the one which was allegedly “mailed”).

A logical and unbiased analysis of potential causes of this “anthrax attack” would probably lead to only one conclusion: “someone” badly needed to attack and to dismantle the Iraqi regime and this decision was indisputable for some hard reason. All those who might not agree, had to be “convinced” by some extraordinary measures – even such extreme as mailing them the “anthrax powder”, supposedly manufactured by Saddam Hussein.

The mere fact that the “anthrax attack” was no longer being discussed publicly, reveals that it was an apparent “inside job” that has already served its purpose and now ought to be forgotten as soon as possible.

However, even being an apparent “inside job”, the “anthrax attack” does not logically prove any alleged participation of the U.S. Government in the actual 9/11 attacks. It rather proves to the contrary – that the U.S. Government was in such a desperate situation after 9/11 attacks, that it even ventured on to the “anthrax attacks” – only to make sure to “confidentially” promote its main cause: fighting against alleged (and sincerely believed in) “weapons of mass destruction” that could have been used by some “rogue” guys to attack the United States and who might repeat it again and again.

7.20. The second attempt similar to the “anthrax attack” mentioned above: the infamous “2002 Bali Bombing” in which there was a real “mini-nuke” (though at the lowest possible yield – probably at only 0.01kt – maximum at 0.015 kt) used.

⁸³ <http://www.elmundo.es/2001/09/16/cronica/1047765.html> TRAGEDIA / APOCALIPSIS USA MI HERMANO BIN LADEN. Note: this article was removed from the El Mundo’s web site in the first days of March, 2010, after an interview was published on YouTube where the author of these lines referred to this article and nuclear claims in it. It is still available, however, here: http://www.bibliotecapleyades.net/archivos_pdf/elmundo_binladen.pdf

Otherwise, it could be found in any big library which keep archives of all major newspapers in either language. ⁸⁴ In the very first news which was released for the public as NEWS BRIEF: “Indonesian Nightclub Bombing, Called an ‘Act of terror’”, by Fox News, October 12, 2002, they managed to afford an unforgivable slip of the tongue: “The explosion went off about 11 P.M. Witnesses on the popular tourist island said that the flames spread”

The “truth” of that Bali perpetration was immediately prepared in two versions: for the “plebeians” it was allegedly some ordinary explosives used (though in incredibly huge amounts – 1 ton (!) of TNT which “terrorists” managed to fit into a small, jeep-like vehicle). But for those trust-worthy “patricians”, whose opinions were crucial in approving the war against Iraq, it was honestly informed that it was an awful “mini-nuke” (potentially supplied by the Iraqi dictator). Such a claim was supported by all necessary (and probably genuine) forensic evidence.

7.21. The fact that almost immediately after the Pentagon attack (before 10.00 AM) there was the peculiar plane noticed by many people making circles around the White House. It was nothing else than the Boeing E-4B “Advanced Airborne Command Post”, known as the “doomsday plane” – which could be engaged only during real nuclear war.

The mere fact of such a plane being airborne was tantamount to a proof that something resembling a nuclear war or at least a suspicion of the imminent nuclear war had been under way at that moment. Again, if someone thinks that it might have been a spin-doctoring, such an argument is void: if it were really intended as a public show, then the U.S. Government would exploit this story further – everywhere it would maintain that the “doomsday plane” was airborne because the Government took the war against the so-called “terror” threat that seriously. However, it did not happen – the U.S. Government, unexplainably, hides the fact that the Boeing E-4B was indeed airborne – instead of promoting this fact.

Here is one example:

“...9/11 Commission co-chair Lee Hamilton told CNN that he was aware of the incident [with that Boeing E-4B being identified flying over the White House] and that it had simply never seemed important enough to make it into the commission's report. He called conspiracy theories involving government complicity in 9/11 "ludicrous." The plane was previously identified as the E-4B a year ago by one researcher on a forum associated with the 9/11 conspiracy film, Loose Change. CNN acknowledges that, despite its identification, the absence of the aircraft from official investigations together with the Pentagon's denial that it was a military plane and the insistence by the Pentagon, the Secret Service and the FAA that they have no explanation for the incident, may continue to raise suspicions...”⁸⁵

This odd desire to hide from the public any truth about the “doomsday plane” even several years later, only confirms that the fact of such plane being airborne has never been intended for the public consumption and therefore it was excluded from the “9/11 Commission’s Report” i.e. from the “plebeian version of truth” about 9/11.

Considering that it had never been intended to be a public show, one has to use logic and to presume that something was genuinely serious at that moment – meaning that the U.S. Government sincerely believed that there had been a real nuclear attack on the United States and that was the only reason behind its decision to scramble the “doomsday plane” accordingly.

7.22. There is still one more virtually unknown fact about the 9/11 development: at 11.00 AM, September 11, 2001, NORAD Commander-in-Chief General Ralph Eberhart (who was inside the Cheyenne Mountain bunker) ordered a limited version of a little known plan to clear the skies and to give the military control over U.S. airspace. This NORAD plan, by the way, had nothing to do with the previous order by the FAA to order all planes down. NORAD issued its own order roughly 30 minutes after the FAA issued its order.

The plan – Security Control of Air Traffic and Navigation Aids (SCATANA) – was developed in the 1960s as a way to clear airspace above the U.S. and off the U.S. coast in the event of a confirmed warning of a nuclear attack by the Soviet Union⁸⁶. The main reason was that NORAD simply could not cope with over to another club and burned several other buildings on the same block and a dozen cars. The place was packed, and it went up within a millisecond ...” That was enough. The term “millisecond” is reserved for nuclear explosions. Such a peculiar terminology immediately attracted due attention of independent specialists and it was quickly established that it was indeed a “mini-nuke” used in Bali bombing case. Surviving victims received burns and radiation injuries as expected; many of them died within the next day or two because of heavy radiation injuries – exactly as expected. However, the majority of the following deaths were reported (if reported at all) to the public as being allegedly of “burns”.

four thousand “extra” airborne targets (meaning legitimate passenger planes permanently flying over the U.S.) in the event of a massive attack against the U.S. by enemy’s planes and missiles. Please, make sure to notice words “confirmed” and “nuclear” in the previous sentence and note that in case of unconfirmed warning of a nuclear attack such a plan could not have been implemented.

7.23. There is yet another indication that it was nothing else than a nuclear war, which, unfortunately, went largely unnoticed: at least according to some official information⁸⁷ the FBI had [allegedly] issued an odd warning that an [alleged] plane originating from San Diego might be hijacked and specifically targeting Cheyenne Mountain, Colorado, where NORAD⁸⁸’s operations center is located. In response, the massive steel doors designed to protect the mountain from a nuclear blast were closed for the first time in its history. It happened at 10.15 AM September 11, 2001.

Of course, someone might say that these anti-atomic doors were closed for the first time in history in order to protect NORAD’s own mountain (where its combat operations center is being hidden beneath more than 2,000 feet of granite) – from the supposedly hijacked passenger plane, made largely from aluminum. What could I say? One has an apparent right to entertain his own opinion...

Please, try to be realistic – NORAD officers were not as stupid as to close these huge anti-atomic doors in fear of an aluminum plane. They would simply not believe that the “terrorists” might target their mountain (especially considering that they had to penetrate at least 2,000 feet of granite to reach to anything important in such a case), while there was a big choice of other high-priority targets, relatively unprotected – the White House, for example, or the Capitol, or maybe the Empire State Building in New York, or the Sears Tower in Chicago; even some nuclear power plant would be a much better choice. NORAD’s own granite mountain would probably be the last item in the wish-list of those so-called “terrorists” (if they only knew about its existence at all). These anti-atomic doors were closed following a standard (and confirmed) nuclear alert – NORAD was informed that the Pentagon was hit by an unexploded nuclear warhead and NORAD’s own command post could be (and logically expected to be) the very next target. Of course, at this news those doors were closed. For the first time in history.

The picture above shows how the anti-atomic-blast doors leading to NORAD anti-atomic Cheyenne Mountain's internals look like. Does anyone seriously believe that these doors, which have never closed before, would be shut in fear of the "hijacked" passenger "Boeing" which might allegedly target NORAD? Especially considering that the necessity to close these incredible doors (designed actually to withstand an impact of air-blast wave from a thermonuclear explosion of a highest possible caliber nearby) in such a case would only arise if there was a suspicion that the "hijacked" passenger "Boeing-757" was aiming nowhere else than right at the door-frame...

7.24. The mere fact that immediately after the Pentagon attack General R. Eberhart, the commander of NORAD, immediately departed from his NORAD headquarters office at Peterson Air Force Base, Colorado, and moved to NORAD's operations center in Cheyenne Mountain. The reason he makes such an odd journey is allegedly "officially unknown", though it was officially claimed that there were superior communications capabilities available at Cheyenne Mountain.

However, for anyone who possesses even elementary knowledge about how the military functions in general, it is very clear that General Eberhart did not do anything strange: he simply followed instructions on how to behave in case of an emergency. It is normal for military commanders to move from their usual "peaceful" headquarters to some protected underground command posts during a war. Thus, the NORAD's commander has moved from the unprotected NORAD's command post to the protected one following a warning of a nuclear attack. Otherwise, he would have no reason to do so, because "communication capabilities" in an unprotected command post are most probably better in comparison with those in a protected command post buried deeply underground.

It was immediately after his arrival that those incredible anti-atomic doors of NORAD's operations center were ordered to be shut for the first time in history.

7.25. On September 11, 2001, 9.55 AM, i.e. just only 8 minutes after the attack against the Pentagon, (thus proving to be an action in direct response to the particular strike against the Pentagon) the Counterterrorism "tsar" Richard Clarke instituted the so-called "Continuity of Government plans".

This means that in case of the physical destruction of the United States leadership and even in case of the physical destruction of the 1st generation of its successors, the U.S. Government plans would still be processed even by the 2nd and even by the 3rd generation of successors, who would assume responsibilities of the demised U.S. Government.

Following the implementation of the abovementioned program, important government personnel, especially those in line to succeed the President, are evacuated to alternate Command Centers. This particular decision was the clearest indication of the unfolding nuclear war, because "Continuity of Government plans" is too serious a step to be associated with any so-called "terrorism". It had absolutely nothing to do with any terrorism or with any hijacked passenger planes.

7.26. On September 11, 2001, 10.10 AM, i.e. 23 minutes after the attack against the Pentagon, all U.S. military forces have been ordered to Defcon Three (or Defcon Delta), "The highest alert for the nuclear arsenal in 30 years⁸⁹" – which apparently had nothing to do with any hijackings.

7.27. The mere fact that on the evening of September 11, 2001, the U.S. Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld (who personally observed damage to the Pentagon immediately after the impact) was not sure at all if Osama bin Laden was really involved. He rather thought that he was not, and the evidence was not clear-cut enough to justify a military action against bin Laden⁹⁰. Rumsfeld was certain, instead, that Saddam Hussein was involved in the attacks; he had no doubt about it⁹¹.

7.28. The mere fact that it was claimed that FEMA allegedly planned in advance a certain "bio-terror drill" (or a "biochemical drill" as New York Mayor R. Giuliani claimed) – apparently in order to justify obvious decontamination measures undertaken at "ground zero" (then still spelled in low-case letters) in regard to radioactivity.

7.29. The official "investigation" was reluctantly started by the Bush Administration no earlier than 184 (!!!) days after "the biggest terrorist attacks in history". From the first day following September 11, President G.W. Bush fought against the creation of a 9/11 commission. Only after enormous pressure did he finally give in. But even then he refused to testify under oath or on the record.

This fact alone should indicate to any thinking logical person that the U.S. Government did not really need any publicly-available results of inquiry, because the truth of the 9/11 attacks was too awful to inform plebs honestly about it. Moreover, it would be a loss of time (not to say about the loss of face) for the U.S. Government to launch a bogus inquiry intended only for the cover-up, while the real investigation was needed at that moment.

It shall be presumed then, that it was some secret investigation launched by the U.S. Government in regard to the 9/11 perpetration immediately after the attacks, and this secret investigation had nothing in common with the plebeian version of the "truth" (the "kerosene-initiated pancake collapse" of the Twin Towers and the aluminum Boeings penetrating 6 capital walls of the Pentagon). It is pretty obvious, that the U.S. Government was busy investigating the 9/11 affair in the secret manner and classified results of such investigation were intended exclusively for its own confidential consumption. While in the same time, in order to appease the demanding plebs, the U.S. Government reluctantly (again reluctantly) created the "9/11 Commission" (184 days after the actual perpetration, just to remind you), because not doing so would make the entire affair looking too suspicious for the simpletons.

7.30. During contemporary 9/11 news coverage, at least two news reporters from two different agencies – MSNBC news anchor Rick Sanchez, and USA Today foreign correspondent Jack Kelley – both confirmed a truly suspicious version of events. They stated that according to police and the FBI it was "suspected" then that the Twin Towers were brought down by some alleged "car-bombs" or even "truck-bombs" allegedly parked in the basements of the Towers by the so-called "terrorists".

This is actually the clearest indication that the U.S. officials were talking about "mini-nukes" that were routinely used by various terrorists prior to 9/11 while being reported to "plebeians" as "truck-bombs". When you read this book further, you will understand what I mean here. In the professional lexicon of security officials "car bombings" and "truck bombings" are merely explosions of mini-nukes that can't be reported to the lay public as such.

Thus, it shall be presumed that at around midday September 11, 2001, it had already been decided by certain U.S. officials to blame the collapse of the Twin Towers on the alleged terrorist "mini-nukes". This was actually the very thing that the 2nd confidential "truth" of the U.S. Government continues to maintain up to this day. (The 16 September, 2001, Spanish El-Mundo's article mentioned above – about the three alleged "Soviet-made" mini-nukes allegedly acquired by Osama bin Laden's operatives in Ukraine – is just the clearest indication of the same attempt; the Spanish journalists were just not careful enough to double-check the current "confidentiality status" of the "second truth" – they apparently thought it was the plebeian version, while it was by then upgraded to the "secret" version for the consumption of the mid-ranking "patricians".)

7.40. Finally, one more piece of the most seditious information was leaked recently. The New York Times in its article⁹² "U.S. Rethinks Strategy for the Unthinkable" by WILLIAM J. BROAD claimed that President Bush was informed by the chief of the CIA about "confidential information" regarding "Al-Qaeda" allegedly hiding an atomic bomb in New York during the 9/11 events.

Unfortunately, all of these peculiar coincidences, along with slips of the tongue and inadvertent leaks, prove to us that certain nuclear weapons have obviously been involved in the 9/11 perpetration. Moreover, it proves that the U.S. Government, which decided to play the "nuclear card" in order to win itself a maximum of possible convenience in this "terrorism" game, now apparently exploits two versions of "truth" about 9/11, which are both untrue. They only differ in their applications: while one is intended to cheat "plebs", the other one is intended to cheat the "patricians".

In reality, however, there is also a "third" or "barbarian" version of the truth about 9/11, which is not intended to cheat anyone. It will be explained in this book in exact detail.

⁹² The New York Times 01/15/2010 http://www.nytimes.com/2010/12/16/science/16terror.html?_r=1&src=my

Moreover, unlike U.S. President George W. Bush, who plainly refuses to testify under oath or on the record (which clearly points to his and his Government's lies in regard to 9/11), the humble author of this book is ready to testify either under oath or on the record. This, by the way, makes the very difference between a testimony of an eye-witness and an otherwise useless conspiracy theory.

Speaking in terms of a card-game, I will put it this way: if we imagine that future contents of this book would be nothing else than a kind of a virtual card-game between us, the truthers, and the U.S. Government, in which the U.S. Government would always try to play its nuclear card in order to cheat us (in the same manner as if we were those gullible "patricians"), we would not allow it to do so. It would be proven that that this very "nuclear card", even though not being fake of itself, was not taken out of the deck, but out of the U.S. Government's sleeve and therefore it must not be allowed into the game.

Above – Condoleezza Rice attempts to play the “nuclear card”: she shows to the “patricians” how small a modern “mini-nuke” could be in order to convince them that the war against “terrorists” who might possess such stuff and against “dictators” who might supply that stuff to those “terrorists”, is indeed a matter of survival for the modern so-called “democracy”.

Yes, nuclear demolitions of the World Trade Center buildings 1, 2 and 7 have indeed taken place. And yes, the Pentagon has been indeed attacked by the 500 kiloton thermonuclear warhead, which failed to explode. But still, all these facts shall not be perversely interpreted. Neither of those involved nuclear charges belonged to any Arabs or to any Muslims. Fairness of any card-game requires almost the same approach as the fairness of the judicial system – which supposes to abide by the ancient principle: *Pereat mundus et fiat justitia*⁹³.

P.S. Coming back to the fundamental principles of the Justice.

I have to remind you once again, that even the worst criminal, even the most disgusting criminal shall only be accused of those counts of crimes that he has really committed. I personally do not believe that the U.S. Government had planned and perpetrated the actual 9/11 attacks. Moreover, I am sure that the U.S. Government was merely a victim of those attacks. The 9/11 setup was so sophisticated that it managed to force the U.S. Government into demolishing the World Trade Center, and, moreover it brought the U.S. Government into such a desperate situation, that it had only two choices:

1) to commit mass suicide (i.e. each of its member had to honorably shoot himself – in an old-fashioned manner);

2) to lie continuously for the rest of their lives.

Since nobody in this society has committed suicide out of honor for the last 50 years, at least, it would be improper to expect such a conduct from folks like George W. Bush or Condoleezza Rice. And if the top figures were unable to do the “right thing”, why should we expect it from the rest of them – like those so-called “counter-terrorism tsars”, CIA- and FBI directors and so on? Modern bipeds are unable to commit suicide out of honor, even those of them occupying the most honorable positions of the heads of states (that technically are equal to feudal sovereigns). Those folks simply have no honor anymore. Therefore, they had no choice than to follow the option “2”. They preferred to send gullible ground zero responders to their deaths – to clean the place of recent nuclear explosions, while they themselves prepared to lie for the rest of their lives.

Still, with all my personal disgust towards those bipeds who claim to be “humans” and who constitute the U.S. Government, I maintain that the U.S. Government has to be accused strictly of those crimes it has committed. Thus, it must be cleared of all counts of alleged crimes that it did not commit in reality

Since the author of this book, even though being a “Barbarian”, does not feel like being a so-called “judge” in a drum-head court martial, he will try his best to be as fair as possible: the U.S. Government will enjoy being defended to the best of the author’s ability.

Vortex

Do you know what a “vortex” is? I mean the “vortex” in the case of flying turbofan aircraft?

In case you don't know it, you can have a clue from below photographs:

Vortex, in the case of the aircraft, is an effect created by their turbofan engines that spin the air of up to 30,000 rounds per minute. It is usually invisible, unless the aircraft flies through clouds or through smokes; however, the spinning of the air is always present. You cannot avoid this effect. In fact, the exhaust of the turbofan engines is so strong, that it would at once blow away a car that happens to be in the immediate proximity of the engine, not to mention blowing away standing people or spinning a volatile cloud of smoke. Even the hottest clouds of burning napalm would be affected by the vortex caused by the aircraft engines exhaust – as it was demonstrated during the Vietnam War where napalm was widely used. However, in our particular case the point is that there was no vortex effect at all during the moments the supposed “terrorist planes” penetrated either of the Twin Towers.

I believe that there is one extremely important piece of video evidence that is an absolute “must see” by everyone who is seriously interested in 9/11. Please, make sure to watch it before continuing to read this book: <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Xj1mVD2-HM> It is that important, that you have to interrupt reading right now and watch it first. I discovered this video on YouTube in March 2008. It was uploaded by the user “thatshit” (<http://www.youtube.com/user/thatshit>) and was named “No real Planes @ 911”. The video lasted only three and a half minutes. It had no words, only music, but it managed to say it all...

I have little to say in addition to what is shown by that short video... It was the best piece of the 9/11 research I have ever discovered. In only three and a half minutes, it managed to say more than a multi-volume technical report... Its modest author, who did not even mention his name, managed to make the most valuable contribution to the 9/11 research treasury.

You must watch this video on YouTube live, and, preferably, do it right now, before continuing reading, but I decided to place here a few screenshots from it, just to provide a clue of what this video is about:

No Planes

In fact, I was so much impressed by the above video, that I decided to make my own contribution to the no-planes claims and so I added my own considerations that you will see in the next chapter.

Conspiracy theories about 9/11 in a sense: “How did they manage to arrange the planes?”

“...The building was designed to have a fully loaded 707 crash into it. That was the largest plane at the time. I believe that the building probably could sustain multiple impacts of jetliners because this structure is like the mosquito netting on your screen door - this intense grid - and the jet plane is just a pencil puncturing that screen netting. It really does nothing to the screen netting ...”

Francis (Frank) Albert De Martini, on-site construction manager for the World Trade Center.
January 25, 2001.

Frank Albert De Martini during his unprecedented interview on Jan 25, 2001.

Some remaining perimeter- and core columns of the Twin Tower at “Ground Zero”.

These double-walled square steel columns shown on the above picture (that numbered 59 per each of the 4 façades of the Tower) were 18 3/4 inches (476.25mm) in cross-section and were positioned ~0.65 meters apart of each other on the Towers' perimeters. They represented the very “mosquito netting” Mr. Frank Albert De Martini was talking about on January 25, 2001, when he ascertained that no jet plane could damage this “netting”.

Do you think it would be reasonable to believe this WTC on-site construction manager? Or we should doubt his claims and believe that these steel columns could be penetrated by an aluminum plane?

This is a well-known fact that the actual Twin Towers were the very first civilian buildings especially designed to withstand impacts of large airliners. Before their construction only nuclear power plants were routinely designed with the ability to resist the planes. Leslie Robertson, one of the two original structural engineers for the World Trade Center, once stated that, "The twin towers were in fact the first structures outside the military and nuclear industries designed to resist the impact of a jet airliner, the Boeing 707."⁹⁴

In this light, it would be utterly unreasonable to expect that two "Boeings 767" – which are the same size as the "Boeing 707" – would ever be able to topple the towers in one way or another (not to mention about the alleged penetrating the steel Towers' perimeters as if the Towers were made from butter, but the planes – from steel).

Let us consider first some suspicious 9/11 circumstances, which attract reasonable suspicions that:

- there were no physical "terrorist planes" that might have struck the WTC Twin Towers;
- that primary explosions and ensuing fires inside both Twin Towers had been all organized from inside the buildings;
- that the planes might have been "digital" – meaning the "planes" (to be more precise – "digital images of these planes" – added to videos by some computer video-editing software) existed only in the TV-footage, but not in reality.

Here are the suspicious circumstances I am talking about:

1. WTC Building 7 managed to collapse despite being spared by any "terrorist plane" – which led to a reasonable suspicion that the WTC collapse in general had nothing to do with any planes and the WTC 1 and 2 would collapse anyway. Someone obviously needed them to collapse and they would collapse irrespective of whether there were any planes or not. Therefore, there should be quite a big chance that there were no planes at all, because the planes were not actually needed.

2. There were claims that some odd "calls" have allegedly been made by some passengers – who all claimed that the planes have been "hijacked by terrorists". All these "calls" have been allegedly made using nothing else than cellular mobile phones. It is well-known, however, that cellular phones do not function at all on board those flying planes, considering both – the plane's speed and altitude. Even if to imagine the unimaginable and presume that in certain highly favorable circumstances a certain mobile phone managed to catch a signal from a ground cell-tower, it still won't be able to make any call lasting more than a couple of seconds before the fast-moving plane would carry this cell-phone away from such a cell-tower interrupting the connection.

It is technically impossible to make any lasting cell-phone call (or even any cell-phone call whatsoever) from an airborne passenger aircraft. Such desperate lies, purported "to prove" to us that there were indeed some planes hijacked, should lead us to an exactly opposite presumption: that there were NO planes, since the spin-doctors are trying so hard to prove that there allegedly "were".

3. Pilots of all four supposedly "hijacked" planes failed to dial the Standard Distress Code. In an event of hijacking, all airline pilots are trained (not just "trained" but "well-trained", actually) to quickly key in an emergency four-digit code into their plane's transponder. This would surreptitiously alert air traffic controllers, causing the letters "HJCK" to appear on their screens. The action, which pilots should take the moment a hijack situation is known, only takes seconds to perform. Yet during the alleged "hijackings" of flights 11, 175, 77, and 93 none of their pilots did this.

4. A well-known fact, that no more, no less – 8 (eight! out of 19 declared) alleged “hijackers” – who were later found alive and kicking in different Arabic countries, have proven to be totally innocent, and some of them even plan to sue the U.S. Government for falsely accusing them of being 9/11 perpetrators. To add insult to injury, refusal by the FBI and by the U.S. Government to release passenger-lists (as well as an additional proven fact that at least Mohammed Atta was an agent of the Pakistani secret service ISI) suggests that there were no hijackers at all.

5. Total failure to obtain passengers-lists concerning the 4 supposedly “hijacked” planes by any truth-seekers (being said in 2008; perhaps, later the passengers-list would be concocted and revealed, at last). To reveal this particular evidence was always denied by U.S. officials on pretexts of the “national security”. One might only wonder – what was the real “danger to the national security” in publishing those lists – is it the same as to reveal exact positions of American ICBM⁹⁵s?. It is probably the most serious evidence that speaks against the “hijackings” – the unwillingness of the U.S. Government to reveal to the craving truth-seekers this simple stuff such as the passenger-lists.

6. Despite an obvious fact that there were quite a lot of professional video-cameras which were positioned in various spots of New York, and all pointed to the WTC, and all of such cameras had been continuously filming the fires in the North Tower, not even one of such professional cameras (able to provide a really high quality and the highest possible resolution of their video-recordings) was able to catch any “plane” hitting (not even to say approaching) the South Tower. All that such professional cameras managed to capture were only those well-known Hollywood-style orange fireballs with some flying debris, suddenly bursting out of the South Tower’s side.

Moreover, the mere “Hollywood-style” of the flames leads to a reasonable suspicion that some Hollywood pyrotechnics might have been involved.

7. All videos, without any exception, showing the second⁹⁶ “plane” – allegedly “approaching” the South Tower – have been nothing else than supposedly “casual” amateur videos”. Their amateurish operators managed to somehow focus their cheap hand-held video-cameras on a very fast flying object (still being quite far from its supposed target), and, moreover, managed to successfully follow such a very fast flying object – right up to its impact, still perfectly keeping it in both frame and in focus.

Such an unbelievable level of “professionalism”, demonstrated by several amateurs simultaneously, led to a reasonable suspicion that all these supposedly “casual” and “amateurish” videos were indeed nothing else than products of some cheap (really cheap – considering their quality⁹⁷) computer manipulations.

It shall be presumed (because it is pretty self-evident) that these manipulated videos have been supplied under some clever pretexts to all main news agencies outlets by some well-organized and also well-synchronized network of accomplices of the true 9/11 perpetrators.

In the photo below you can see a screenshot from one of such supposedly “casual” movies. Here, an “amateurish” cameraman managed “to capture” an alleged Boeing-767 (if it were United Flight 175) or a Boeing-757 (if it were American Airlines Flight 77, as it had been claimed initially), supposedly moving at its cruise speed (~ 500 mph) and was about “to penetrate” the steel perimeter of the South Tower.

⁹⁶ Only one video exists shot by two French cameramen which managed “to capture” the first plane allegedly hitting the North Tower; this movie appeared late in the evening of September 11 and is the only one available of this kind. It is also presumed to be falsified – as well as those movies purporting to “show” the second alleged plane.

Moments later Hollywood-style orange flames would burst out from the opposite façade of the South Tower.

Above – a screenshot from one of supposedly “casual” movies showing the “second terrorist plane” that is about to penetrate the steel perimeters of the WTC South Tower.

8. Exactly the same as above could be said about all supposedly “amateurish” photos showing the “planes”. There was a suspiciously big number of supposedly “amateurish photographers”, who, using cheap photo cameras, apparently functioning at that moment on automatic, most probably “landscape”, if not “portrait”, modes (a fixed aperture with an auto-detected shutter speed intended to photograph stationary objects) managed, nevertheless, to successfully capture such a fast moving object as a low-flying passenger plane. This astonishing feat, suitable for a professional sport-photographer, armed with a professional photo camera and with years of experience in this field, was performed on 9/11 by the supposed “amateurs”; and not just by one, but by many...

9. The “plane”, striking the WTC South Tower, was shown as flying at its full cruise speed. However, it was immediately proven by aviation specialists that no passenger plane could technically fly at such a high speed considering the low attitude of its actual trajectory.

10. A well-known claim by the U.S. Government is that all the allegedly “hijacked” planes allegedly flew to their targets with their transponders “turned off”. However, it is known to every toddler that it is technically impossible to turn a transponder off from inside the plane. Such an option is out of reach of any pilot and could only be performed by technicians prior to take off (and since it would be a crime to perform such a thing and to let any plane fly without a working transponder, nobody would do it, apparently).

11. An unexplainable ban was imposed by the FBI on all flight controllers, prohibiting them to speak to the media. It should be presumed – considering the ban – that all four flights indeed have been shot down, or, as a variety, that two of them were directed over the Atlantic Ocean and sunk there – as first suspected.

12. Much later after September 11, 2001, when the exact details of events were deemed to be largely forgotten, President Bush Jr. claimed that he allegedly “saw” the first “plane” hit the North Tower in live TV footage right immediately after the event and definitely before the second “plane” hit the South Tower⁹⁸. Moreover, he repeated this claim on several occasions⁹⁹.

However, it is well-known that there was no footage of the first plane hitting the North Tower ever shown on TV on September 11, 2001. The only video of the “first plane” was actually discovered the next day – September 12, 2001. That was the “lucky” footage of the first plane, supposedly shot by two French reporters, the infamous Naudet brothers; but even that one had never been aired on September 11 to be seen by Mr. Bush on TV as claimed. Such an unprecedented lie by the U.S. President suggests that there could not be any plane at all, simply because he so awkwardly claimed to the contrary.

Above – a screenshot from the video of the “first plane” supplied by the Naudet brothers at the moment of the explosion in the North Tower.

The above photo is a unique screenshot from the infamous footage supplied by the Naudet brothers. It shows the explosion in the North Tower (that was alleged to be penetrated by the first aluminum plane). The actual value of this shot is that it shows pieces of aluminum cover of equal lengths being thrown away to every direction by the explosion that apparently originates from inside the North Tower. The importance of this unprecedented evidence will be explained later. Another important piece of evidence provided by this unique shot is the absence of the vortex that must have been necessarily caused to the smokes+fires cloud by the spinning turbines of the supposed “plane”.

13.Initially, the second “plane” which supposedly struck the South Tower was claimed to be Flight 77¹⁰⁰, while United Flight 175 at that moment had been only a matter of concern (since it claimed to have been lost¹⁰¹) – and then, all over sudden, there happened an abrupt change in the entire story. The modified story claimed it was the “United Flight 175” that allegedly penetrated the WTC. This change in the story led many people to a reasonable suspicion that everything was not so clear with air-traffic controllers who were supposed to be the only authority in this matter and to be the only reliable source of such information as the planes’ paths, turns and trajectories. If you cannot be sure even about any professionalism (and honesty) of the very air-traffic controllers, would it be reasonable then to believe the FBI – which came up with an alternative version later?

⁹⁹ <http://www.whitehouse.gov/news/releases/2002/01/20020105-3.html> ; and also CNN news: <http://www.cbsnews.com/stories/2002/09/11/60II/main521718.shtml>

It was clearly stated in the above newspaper article that it was American Airlines Flight 77, a Boeing 757, which was the second plane, that crashed into the WTC Towers.

Note, that according to the context of the above article, it had already been confirmed that United Flight 93 had crashed near Pennsylvania, it had been confirmed that the Twin Towers had both collapsed, it had been confirmed that the Pentagon was attacked, it had been confirmed that United Flight 175 was “missing”. Even the Taliban leader had already publicly announced that such an act could not have been the work of any ordinary people, but only of governments and that announcement had been duly addressed by the media. Nonetheless, it had been firmly maintained in that moment that it was American Airlines Flight 77 that crashed into the World Trade Center.

Please, read the text of the above article and note – it was not that Flight 77 was “believed”, or “presumed”, or “said”, or “deemed”, or “suspected”, or “reported”, or “claimed”, or “surmised” to be the other plane that crashed into the towers. It plainly “was” Flight 77 that crashed into the towers.

If one would also consider those alleged phone calls from the hijacked planes, and think about those “sure” air-traffic controllers who “knew” everything, one would never even doubt that Flight 77 could have been mistaken with any other flight in this case. Everything was supposedly “under control” and such a grave mistake as to confuse the two flights, moreover, belonging even to different airlines, was absolutely impossible.

14. All news releases published the next day following 9/11 in regard to the Pentagon attack have one very peculiar, yet easily noticeable inclination in their presenting of the news material to a reader. Instead of concentrating on the Pentagon’s damage, or on the Pentagon’s casualties, or on Flight 77 details, the news managed somehow to stress that the main purpose of the FBI was indeed to find at least some

¹⁰¹ At some moment there was even news that it was United Flight 175 which allegedly crashed into the Pentagon – in several instances (late on Sept. 11 and even on Sept. 12) such news was officially released – such as which could be found here: <http://www.newscientist.com/article.ns?id=dn1282&print=true> evidence of Flight 77's existence. The actual news releases sounded roughly like this: "the FBI agents, working on the site of the Pentagon crash were successful, at last, in finding at least some evidence of the plane's existence and could now, at last, say: yes, now we have solid proof that it was a passenger Boeing 757..."

15. A total fiasco (despite abovementioned claims of the alleged "success") suffered by the "inquirers" who attempted to blame the Pentagon attack on the alleged "Flight 77". In reality, the "inquirers" were unable to explain the total absence of any "crashed" plane's parts. The "inquirers" failed to say anything at all regarding the unbelievable maneuverability and the unprecedented penetrating capability shown by the supposed passenger "Boeing 757".

That "Boeing 757" managed no more, no less:

- to approach its target on a "hedge-hopping altitude" – apparently plowing the grass lawn with its huge turbofan engines;
 - to throw aside a huge electric generator, which happened to be on its way;
 - and to further crash through 4 (four!) rows of the Pentagon's buildings at a 45 degrees angle;
- all of it – without leaving any trace of its wings or tail either inside the Pentagon, or anywhere around it.

All of it led to a reasonable suspicion that if there were no plane in the case of the Pentagon, there might be as well no planes in the case with the Twin Towers.

Above – one of the earliest photographs of the undamaged Pentagon's lawn after the 9/11 impact.

On the photo above you can see the undamaged Pentagon's lawn. This photo has been taken after the Pentagon's wall had collapsed and the main fires had been extinguished. In this particular case the FBI agents have not brought into the scene any parts of the "hijacked plane" yet.

Close to the right side of the scene, behind some light fence, is clearly visible a huge electric generator (which seems to be even bigger than the yellow fire-engines on the left) – thrown to its right by the so-called "plane" which approached from the right at 45 degrees angle before hitting the Pentagon's wall slightly above its ground level.

The red arrow shows an approximate direction of attack by that projectile, nature of which is being disputed, the red circle – the spot of the impact. The yellow arrow shows the direction to which the electric generator had been thrown out of the way of the projectile.

The photo below is another view of the scene taken almost immediately after the Pentagon wall has collapsed. The direction of the camera that took the below photo is more or less the same as the direction of the projectile that hit the Pentagon. The photographer in this case looked through the hole made by the projectile in the fence around the generator towards the hole made by the projectile in the Pentagon's outer wall.

Please, note on the above photo that the hole made in the light fence surrounding the generator's site is way smaller than that would have been made by the fuselage of the passenger plane. Another notable thing is that no damage could be observed that should have been made by the plane's wings, as well as by its turbofan engines beneath the wings. Further towards the Pentagon, we can clearly see cable reels that must have been in the way of the plane (if any plane were involved, of course).

The projectile that hit the Pentagon flew towards it at the altitude of roughly 1 meter above the ground (judging by the fact it made the hole in the generator's fence and by the location of the entry hole in the outer Pentagon's wall). If it were a plane, flying at the altitude of 1 meter above the ground, it would surely annihilate the entire fence, not just make hole in it, and, moreover, it would smash those cable reels, in addition. Besides, as you could probably imagine, the turbofan engines of the plane would have ploughed the lawn before the Pentagon, which did not happen in reality.

Moreover, the projectile that actually hit the Pentagon showed an unprecedented penetrating capability that could not belong to any aluminum-made plane. After penetrating the first (outer) row of the Pentagon buildings (named "Ring E"), the projectile penetrated also Ring "D", plus one more perpendicular row of the buildings in between Rings "D" and "C", then also penetrated the actual Ring "C" and lost its inertia in between Rings "C" and "B" – where it was found and confiscated by the FBI.

16. An apparent absence of any sign of the alleged "crash", except only Ahmed al Nami's youth hostelling card allegedly found on the crash site of Flight 93 in Pennsylvania. The crash site of Flight 93, supposed to be in Pennsylvania, according to both the claims of the "9/11 Commission" (which claimed that Flight 93 fell itself following the alleged "fight" between brave passengers and cowardly hijackers), and that of U.S. Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld (who claimed that Flight 93 has been "shot down over Pennsylvania"). Add here that "hijacker" Ahmed al Nami managed to miraculously survive his supposedly suicidal mission and was found two weeks later alive and kicking in Saudi Arabia – being apparently innocent of any "hijacking". All of it leads to a reasonable suspicion – that Flight 93 was indeed shot down and fell apart and thus it did not hit the ground as a whole piece (this will be discussed in detail in a separate Chapter of this book).

Ahmed al Nami's youth hostelling card found on the Flight 93's crash site as supplied by the FBI. Ahmed al Nami himself was later found alive and kicking, being absolutely innocent.

17. A well-known fact that there was a "passport" of one of the alleged "hijackers" – allegedly "found"¹⁰² relatively intact somewhere on the WTC site.

¹⁰² <http://news.bbc.co.uk/1/hi/world/americas/1546927.stm> ; this alleged finding was reported by many news services initially, but since later it was found to be a ridiculous claim, the story of the "passport" slowly died by itself, the US propaganda machine preferred not to exploit this shameful claim any more, so it was never repeated.

18. And yet another fact – shown also in some popular “Ground Zero” video – that there was some lower part of a plane’s retractable landing gear found in the rubble – oddly featuring a rubber tire remarkably undamaged by any fire, as well as spared by the general pulverization.

Both facts demonstrate that some apparent manipulation with evidence has been involved. This leads to a conclusion that someone was really eager to “prove” to us that there was indeed a plane involved. Then it would be very logical of us to presume exactly to the contrary – i.e. that there were not any planes.

Left – an illustration from Chapter 1 of FEMA's report shows how a few pieces of aircraft debris supposedly “passed entirely” through the Towers – FEMA and the FBI claimed that the undamaged landing gear shown above penetrated through even the second steel perimeter of the North Tower on its way out.

Right – the landing gear of one of the “hijacked” Boeing-767 found at the corner of West and Rector Streets the next day after September 11 (another landing gear was “found” on the opposite site – being ostensibly from another “hijacked flight”). It was clearly seen on TV screen, however, that neither of the “planes” that supposedly penetrated the Twin Towers had its landing gear down; the gears were inside the planes’ fuselages at the moment of the impacts and must have disappeared inside the Towers – together with the rest of the planes (at least, judging by ordinary logic).

Let us consider now the alleged penetrating capabilities of typical passenger planes that are known to be made mainly from aluminum.

Some people might argue (and indeed the most of the shills will argue) claiming that, besides aluminum, there are some titanium and steel and even depleted uranium used in the passenger planes’ construction, but, hey, folks, we are not so stupid to fall for this silly argument, are we? Even if there is a certain amount of titanium or steel used in some parts of an aluminum plane, it does not convert the actual aluminum plane into an armor-piercing shell, does it? Most of a flying object named a “passenger airliner” remains nothing other than an empty aluminum tube flying at sub-sonic speed. Do you agree with this logic?

Many people at first did not pay any close attention to the actual Twin Towers’ construction and thought intuitively (being influenced by the fact that the planes managed to break in so easily) that outer façades of the Twin Towers were simply made from huge glass panes alone (which would, understandably, allow the planes to break in). However, later, to their utter dismay, thinking people found out that the Twin Towers in reality were made of some very thick steel columns – not different from its steel core columns and such densely positioned steel columns indeed constituted their outer perimeters.

Above: in this official sketch you can see how these thick core structures have been positioned in reality – not only in the Towers’ middles, as believed by many people, but also on their entire perimeters.

Once this, at last, became clear, it became also clear that no plane (which is largely made of aluminum) would ever be able to crash in its entirety (including even ends of its wings and tail, not to say of its large turbofan engines beneath its wings) through such densely positioned thick steel perimeter columns and to completely disappear inside the Towers.

Some elder people could probably remember what the effect was of hitting American main-battle ships and aircraft-carriers by Japanese kamikaze-planes if such a plane hit the ship onto its board. The plane was just broken apart (without penetrating the ship’s board) and simply fell down. In case of a non-armored ship – a maximum of what could really penetrate into the ship was the steel motor of the plane, but never any other part of a plane – such as its wings, tail or its fuselage.

Please, look at this picture:

Damage inflicted by a kamikaze attack on a non-armored US ship (an armored ship such as a typical main battleship akin to the USS “Missouri” could not have been penetrated whatsoever) .

Based on this premise, one could make his own estimation looking at the pictures of the core columns below:

Above: profiles of remaining core WTC columns found at “Ground Zero”; their comparative thickness could be easily estimated; actually they feature walls 2.5 inch thick; such thick columns made of steel constituted both – the cores and the entire perimeters of the Twin Towers.

To imagine how thick the 2.5” is, here is a good example to compare with: front armor of the best tank of the WWII period – T-34 – was only 1.8 inch (4.5 cm) and it was single-walled. Yet there were practically no armor-piercing artillery shell available at that time that would be capable of penetrating such front armor.

Does anyone seriously believe that the aluminum-made “Boeing” could really break, in its entirety, (including its tail, wings and large turbofan engines) through the above-shown steel perimeter columns? Placed only one meter apart of each other?

However, even though it is impossible to believe, in accordance with some “study” undertaken by the National Institute of Standards and Technology, the supposed plane, which was “traveling at an estimated speed of around 500 mph”, managed “to sever” no more, no less, but exactly “33 of the building’s 236 perimeter columns and damaged another one”¹⁰³.

¹⁰³ National Institute of Standards and Technology, 9/2005, pp.39; also available on this Internet address: <http://wtc.nist.gov/NISTNCSTAR1CollapseofTowers.pdf>

Actually, it might be little bit difficult to comprehend that it is impossible for an aluminum item to penetrate steel; so, exclusively for this reason here is some hint – as a basic premise. It is well-known that armor-piercing artillery shells are made of materials stronger than the actual armor they are intended to penetrate.

Normally, armor-piercing shells are made of Wolfram¹⁰⁴ (Americans also produce armor-piercing shells which contain, instead of very expensive Wolfram, Uranium-238, which is otherwise useless material, yet capable to penetrate armor due to it being much heavier than actual steel).

Armor-piercing shells made of aluminum apparently do not exist – it is self-evident and I do not even need to prove it. Aluminum swords do not exist, nor do any other cutting/piercing tools made of this metal. The mere notion that an aluminum item might cut steel sounds a little bit “strange”, if not crazy.

It shall be also noted that armor-piercing shells fired against tanks or other armored items, travel to their targets with a speed at least three times as much as the speed of sound. Even though they are made of Wolfram, this fact alone is not enough to achieve steel-piercing capability – very high speed is the second required factor. Speed of a typical armor-piercing shell fired from anti-tank cannon is actually over triple sound-speed – it is at least 1000 meters per second, and normally even faster than this, while a maximum cruise speed of whatever passenger Boeing is subsonic – less than 250 m/sec in the best case.

However, in order not to mislead you into the wrong thinking, I have to add that the speed of a plane in this case does not actually matter. I told you about the speed of armor-piercing shells just to increase your general knowledge. You should understand that even if the “terrorist plane” were flying at Mach 4 speed, even in this case it wouldn't be able to penetrate steel. The point is that aluminum cannot penetrate steel irrespective of the speed of the impact. An aluminum item would always smash flat upon its impact with a steel surface (providing, of course, that the steel surface is thick enough – I mean, thicker than foil). In reality, the higher the speed of its impact the flatter will be the resulting smashed aluminum item.

¹⁰⁴ Wolfram is also often called “tungsten” – especially when referring to different projectiles made out of it.

To have a better understanding of what I am trying to say, please, make sure to watch this short video on YouTube: http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=H55dr_GNRu4 named “Lehrvideo für Benesch, Freeman, Sallylein1977, 1234proximus und andere 9/11-Desinfo-Flicker”.

You do not need to understand German in order to understand that video. It provides only the visual explanation, without words. That short video merely shows what would happen with a can of Coca-Cola shot at a speed of a passenger Boeing to a concrete wall. You will be surprised to see what such a fast-flying (and apparently heavy enough) aluminum projectile could do to the concrete wall. After watching that video, you would have a much better understanding in regard to the possible damage the passenger Boeing could inflict to either the concrete wall of the Pentagon or to the steel perimeter columns of the Twin Towers.

After thinking a while, I decided to place here a couple of photos of that Soviet T-34¹⁰⁵ tank I was talking about. I believe using these will make my claims more illustrative. Additionally, it might serve as a certain defensive measure against the shells who would otherwise accuse me of “cheating” (I have to always protect my credibility from the shells’ assaults, unfortunately). Here are the promised photos:

Above – a driver's compartment of the T-34 tank showing the driver's seat and gears through an open hatch and through an additional hole cut in the front armor. The thickness of the cut armor is painted in red. Below – a typical steel perimeter column of the upper parts of the WTC Twin Tower found at ground zero.

It is good to look at these Twin Towers' perimeter columns again and realize, at last, that their thick walls were more than comparable with armor used to make main-battle tanks. To penetrate such a column alone would be a challenge for an armor-piercing shell fired from a long-barreled anti-tank cannon at point-blank range.

I cannot resist placing here some quote from an article written by Gordon Duff – a famous web-journalist, a retired U.S. intelligence officer, who writes for the Veterans Today¹⁰⁶ on-line journal.

This particular article was written by Duff who was under an apparent impression after reading the earlier free edition of my book. The actual article, named “WHEN WILL THE CRIMES OF 9/11 END? DISINFORMATION, SPYING, INTIMIDATION, & THE BIGGEST COVER-UP IN AMERICAN HISTORY.” was published here: <http://uncensored.co.nz/2010/10/17/gordon-duff-when-will-the-crimes-of-911-end/>

It was published in October 17, 2010.

The point was that before the humble author of these lines had voiced the point that aluminum could not penetrate steel by definition, irrespectively of the impact speed, nobody seemed to even think about it. So many thinking people were duped by the TV that embedded the cartoon physics notion into their minds – I mean the cartoon picture of aluminum planes cutting through the steel perimeters of the Twin Towers as would a knife through butter. However, after I voiced that point, many thinking people began to regain their consciousness along with the temporarily lost ability to analyze the reality on their own.

Here is what Gordon Duff wrote in that article (apparently, being still under the strong impression of the above discovery); “...Suffice it to say that the naked lies the government has foisted on the public for so long are both irrational and patently insane.

This is where Khalezov shines. He has a way of cutting through the manure.

It is funny to read a Russian discuss 9/11.

One area that we can deal with today and, perhaps, put one minor thing to rest is how the World Trade Center was built and why an aircraft, why 500 aircraft could never hurt it.

Oh, you say, the plane flew right through the building, passing through the thin glass windows and out the other side.

Yup, that’s how it seemed.

How Khalezov describes the outer walls of the WTC is through comparison with a World War II T-34 Russian Tank.

His point is that each of the beams that made up the outside of the building, space 3 feet apart, had four sides, each not only harder but thicker than the armor on a tank.

The analogies used by Khalezov were compelling. His first point, of course, is that anti-tank rounds are never made of aluminum. You don’t use aluminum knives. Aluminum can’t cut steel.

We could go further:

Crashing a Boeing 767 into 20 massive 4 sided hardened steel girders, highly supported and interlaced, cutting through them and eventually bringing down the largest building in the world would be the equivalent of throwing a beer can at a garbage truck.

Want more? Cutting a steel knife with a piece of cheese? Derailing a freight train with a thrown marshmallow? OK, that one is a bit much, but you get the picture.

Aircraft are made of lightweight and very thin aluminum. The WTC had a massive outer wall of heavy steel, thick enough to armor a tank, a similar center structure around the core and a second wall for a plane to pass through. No possible amount of aluminum in any shape or configuration at 400 miles per hour or 2000 miles per hour could pass through one steel beam much less dozens.

Pages are spent describing this point nobody has discussed other than Khalezov...”

I am indeed proud of, how Gordon has put it, “finding the way of cutting through the manure”. Today, at the end of 2012, it seems that the majority of people have gotten the point: aluminum cannot penetrate steel, irrespective of the mass and of the speed of the aluminum-made projectile. It seems easy to understand today, because it looks pretty self-evident. It was not so, however, only three years back. The seemingly obvious fact that aluminum could not penetrate steel used to be overridden in people’s minds by the cartoon physics notion from the fake 9/11 TV footage and therefore did not seem actually “obvious” for many. The switched on “zombie-box” (how we call the TV-set in Russian) seemed to have switched off their common sense. Luckily, it all changed today. And I am indeed proud of it – it was me, the humble author of these lines, who changed the people’s perception in this regard by simply stating the obvious: the king was naked!

Above – an H-type 2.5 inch thick steel perimeter column of the upper parts of the WTC Twin Tower found at ground zero (the thickness of its main walls is the same as the thickness of the column on the above picture).

Interestingly, this concept of “penetrating steel-walls” is applicable only to the case of an armor-piercing shell because the latter faces the task of penetrating only walls that are perpendicular to its way. Let us look at the profiles of these perimeter columns (diagrams provided by the NIST report were taken from here: <http://wtcmmodel.wikidot.com/nist-core-column-data>). Here are two types of such columns (the second one is an H-type), but both types have similar thickness of the walls that suppose to be parallel to the course of the plane’s wings. Now imagine that an armor-piercing artillery shell (shown by green arrows) will either have to penetrate two walls in the first case or a single wall in the second case of an H-type column.

However, an aluminum plane wing (shown by a red arrow) faces a bigger task – in addition to the walls that are perpendicular to its way, it has to cut two more walls – that are parallel to its way, because each of such columns has actually 4 walls (or 3 walls – in the case of the H-type column), and not just two. And these two walls parallel to its way would evidently have much greater “thickness” (shown by yellow arrows)...

Now imagine that an aluminum wing of a plane was acting like an “aluminum sword” that had to cut about 20 (!!!) inches of steel. Or at least 16 inches of steel – in the case of H-shaped columns (the shells seem to have a habit of emphasizing that in the upper floors in the impact area of the North Towers the perimeter columns were particularly H-shaped). But it does not actually matter – whether the actual thickness of these columns was particularly 20 inches or 16 inches. Even 16 inches of steel would never allow an aluminum wing of a plane to cut it as if it were a sword cutting straw.

I also strongly suggest you watching this video that shows what happens with a standard steel-core bullet shot from AK47 when such a bullet hits a steel plate: <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=8bSoRIG4PnM>

Now, I guess, it will be a little bit easier to contemplate those alleged armor-piercing capabilities of the aluminum “Boeings 767” – after comparing such with an artillery armor-piercing shell. But the NIST report wants us to believe that an aluminum plane allegedly cut through steel in the manner shown below:

© 2001 Scott Myers

We could only wonder why the “9/11 Commission” or those “engineers” from the above mentioned NIST, who managed even to count the exact number of the “severed” steel columns, did not want then to try to make some penetrating experiment with some written-off passenger “Boeing 767” and with several of those columns? That kind of experiment would be a really good thing to prove to the doubtful guys that it was really the “terrorist planes” that did demolish the World Trade Center...

The abovementioned realization led many people to believe that since the aluminum kind of planes apparently could not be involved in such a feat, then only the “digital” kind of planes could really break through those dense double-walled steel perimeters of the now defunct Twin Towers...

Detailed view of the damage supposedly inflicted by the alleged passenger “Boeing-767” to the WTC North Tower’s steel perimeter columns (a live person could be seen there, in addition).

Please, look at the photos above. It can be clearly observed that perimeter bars were all cut by a few ridiculously straight lines, moreover parallel to each other, so a shape of the supposed “impact hole” does not match a silhouette of a plane even remotely. Actually, explanation to this ridiculous phenomenon is quite simple.

As you can see from these pictures, the Twin’s perimeters were made not from steel columns alone. There was also additional aluminum coating fixed on outer sides of the steel perimeter columns. However, unlike the steel columns (which were more or less solid from bedrock up to the Tower’s tops), the aluminum coating was arranged in much shorter vertical segments. If you look at the above picture’s detail carefully you will notice certain horizontal lines parallel to each other repeating on equal intervals – that are slightly visible on undamaged parts of the Tower’s façade.

These lines are nothing else than joining points of the aluminum coating pieces and show what was the actual length of each piece of the aluminum coating.

You can easily orientate this diagram by “Exterior-Interior” arrows show at the right. Actually, the diagram was intended to provide a clue about the thermal insulation of the perimeter columns (shown here as “grey matter”), but in our particular case we are not interested in the insulation. We are interested in what is shown below it (i.e. directed outwards) – i.e. “Typical Column Aluminum Cover”. This is what I am talking about. In the color photos above you can see these shiny aluminum covers as distinctly separate details compared to the actual steel perimeter columns. Please, make sure to notice that there is a lot of empty space in between the actual steel and the outer aluminum cover (as shown by the above diagram). If you remove some thermal insulation, you could place lots of explosives in between steel and aluminum (I marked that space where you could place the explosives, instead of the insulation, with the red strokes).

Now, I guess, you have already understood the actual composition of the perimeter columns and we can make our conclusions regarding the abovementioned ridiculous phenomena – the “stepped” shape of the impact holes shown in the above color pictures.

The problem of the 9/11 perpetrators was that they needed to position their hollow-shaped charges of conventional explosives (that were designed to imitate the impact holes – the planes' silhouettes) not inside the Tower, but OUTSIDE the Tower. Their explosive energy should have been directed inwards to make the entire set-up look plausible. If they would position these charges inside the Tower, then the entire section of the Tower that was supposed to be "hit by a plane" would not fall inside the Tower as it was supposed to be. It would be blown out of the Tower, and, instead of the "landing gear" and the "plane's engine", simpletons would find on a sidewalk pieces of the Tower's own perimeters.

Apparently, it was not an option. To attach the cutting charges outside the Twin Tower's façades was not an option either – they would be visible by people.

Therefore, the tricky 9/11 perpetrators placed their hollow-shaped charges in between the outer aluminum coating and the actual perimeter steel columns. Most probably, for this reason the perpetrators partly removed the thermal insulation – to free the space between steel and aluminum for the installation of the cutting charges.

For people who are not familiar with hollow-shaped charges, I have to briefly explain what a "hollow-shaped charge" is and what it is intended for and why. The problem is that in a typical explosive charge its explosive energy goes equally to every direction. Mostly, of course, its goes by the way of "least resistance" and therefore it "refuses" to cut steel – it "prefers" to go by surrounding air and not into an armor plate. Therefore to use "normal" explosive charges to cut steel is impossible. They just refuse to do the job. So-called "hollow-shaped charges" are specially designed charges of explosives (usually used in anti-tank weaponry) that direct almost the entire explosive energy in one direction – in this case towards an armor-plate that is a target.

Coming back to our case. The 9/11 perpetrators placed their hollow-shaped charges in between the outer aluminum coating and the steel perimeter columns. The explosive energy of the charges was directed inwards – in order to precisely cut the steel bars in the right spots – thus, to imitate the "plane" precisely. And, indeed, it worked – as you could see in the color pictures above – the inner steel bars (that appear to be of "rusty" color as opposed to the bluish-shining aluminum coating) were indeed cut in the right spots to imitate the complete planes silhouettes precisely. Moreover, cut ends of these steel bars are additionally bent inwards – exactly as supposed to be.

Nonetheless, the 9/11 perpetrators badly miscalculated something. Even though most of the explosive energy of the hollow-shaped charges was directed inwards – towards the steel, some relatively minor part of the explosive energy was directed backwards – creating a kind of "recoil effect". This managed to blow out the aluminum coating. However, instead of actually "cutting" this aluminum coating, the unruly explosion simply tore out the entire pieces of aluminum at their full lengths and threw them back to the sidewalks.

Therefore, depending on the vertical disposition of the hollow-shaped charges, in some parts it was a single vertical length of aluminum bar torn out, in some other places – double vertical length, in some other parts – triple vertical length, etc. Therefore these "impact holes" look so ridiculously stupid – being a kind of a "stepped" shape, instead of a perfect silhouette of a "plane" as supposed to be if there were only steel bars alone.

I was always dreaming to find some good quality pictures that show pieces of that outer aluminum coating flying away at the moment of explosion. However, because such pictures were considered "highly seditious" by the concerned U.S. authorities, they were all censored and it was near impossible to discover them anywhere on the Internet for many years. Nonetheless, maybe because of my good luck, I was eventually able to find one of such pictures by mere accident (or, perhaps by God's grace).

On 16 of July, 2011, I accidentally noticed in one of Bangkok's book stores a special edition of a certain magazine named "Life". The edition was titled "Brought to JUSTICE" and was entirely devoted to the then recent alleged "death" of Osama bin Laden (who was claimed to be "killed" by some U.S. commandos somewhere in the sovereign territory of an independent state of Pakistan and whose body was hastily drowned in the nearest deep sea somewhere 2,000 kilometers away). Usually, I have no interest in any propaganda materials, especially of such type, but this time I was waiting for a friend and had nothing to do. So I took the magazine from the stand and lazily flicked through it.

<- The cover of the magazine I am talking about.

Besides a few high quality portraits of Osama and his relatives and a few ridiculous propagandist photos, on pages 8-9 of that magazine was placed the most seditious shot of the explosion in the South Tower – exactly the one I was dreaming to have! Of course, I immediately bought that magazine and scanned the photo out of it. The photo belongs to a certain Naomi Stock. I feel that I have simply no right to deprive my reader of seeing this absolutely unprecedented shot and I sincerely hope that Ms. Naomi Stock will not mind if I place her photo here along with the claim that this is very important 9/11 evidence that was long hidden from the community:

This unique high-quality picture shows in detail those pieces of aluminum coating of equal length, flying away from the explosion, just by a split second ahead of the orange fireballs coming from within the Tower. Some of those pieces of the aluminum coating are seen in that photo in more or less exact detail. Another interesting thing is that here the pieces of aluminum coating are flying in both directions – to the right (i.e. by the supposed “course” of the alleged “plane”), as well as to the left – i.e. in the direction that is exactly opposite to the supposed “course” of the alleged “plane” (the “plane”, according to the official story and according to the video shown on TV, approached the South Tower from the left).

Actually, after I published my discovery of the above photo, some of my listeners suggested that it might not be the only photo that showed the aluminum coating pieces during that explosion, and, perhaps, more of such photos could exist. Indeed, there must have been many of such photos, because at the moment of the explosion in the second Tower, many video- and photo-cameras were riveted to the Twin Towers filming/photographing the fires in the first Tower, and many of such cameras supposedly captured the second explosion in more or less precise detail. However, the high-quality photos showing those pieces of aluminum coating flying out as a result of the explosion were considered “seditious”, and the so-called “good guys” intentionally prohibited their circulation. Neither of such photos was duly addressed by technical experts working for the NIST inquiry or for the infamous “9/11 Commission” either.

Anyhow, one of my good friends – Victor Bauer from Germany (who helped me a lot with accumulation of materials, with promoting my works and with defending them from shills) – sent me one more good photo that clearly shows those pieces of aluminum coating during the second explosion (that was designed to imitate the supposed “impact” of the “second plane” that allegedly penetrated the South Tower). Here is it:

Unfortunately, I do not know who the author of this nice photo is and I feel pity that I cannot express my thanks to that person. However, I sincerely hope that if he recognizes his photo in this book he would not object that it was used here as one of the most important pieces of 9/11 evidence.

There is another interesting detail in regard to those photos showing the ridiculously “stepped” structure of the holes supposedly made by the “planes”.

If you carefully look at the previous photo named “Detailed view of the damage supposedly inflicted by the alleged passenger “Boeing-767” to the WTC North Tower’s steel perimeter columns” (look at the yellow arrow) you will notice a woman, desperately holding to one of the sticking up columns. This woman could be seen clearly in the enlarged portion of one of such photos shown below. She was recognized as Mrs. Edna Cintron, who was still hoping to get rescued at that last moment. Unfortunately, she was killed in the North Tower collapse. However, in that last moment of her life she demonstrated to the world (by her mere presence at that supposedly “hot” spot where steel columns were supposed “to melt”) that the U.S. Government was cheating the people.

Enlarged view: Mrs. Edna Cintron caught on a camera moments before the North Tower started to collapse.

Actually, many innocent people, who read this, might ask this reasonable question: but what about eye-witnesses who saw the “planes”?

The answer is this: the number of eye-witnesses who DID NOT SEE ANY PLANES is about equal to the number of the “eye-witnesses” who allegedly “saw” the “planes”. But the mass media preferred to include into their aired footage mostly of those “eye-witnesses” who claimed to see the “planes”.

After reviewing all available contemporary 9/11 footage, I noticed that almost all of the earlier witnesses, interviewed by various news agencies – such as the BBC, CNN, NBC, ABC, CBS neither saw, nor heard any “planes”, but saw and heard only the explosions. (Except, of course, those bogus “witnesses” who were an integral part of the actually 9/11 perpetration – such as the vice-president of finance for CNN Sean Murtagh, for example, who was first to call to the CNN office claiming to see with his very eyes how an aluminum plane penetrated steel perimeters of the WTC North Tower). I took a few statements of such genuine witnesses who did not see any “plane”, but only explosions, from those 9/11 news footage and uploaded these videos to YouTube. You can watch these videos and make your own conclusions.

Coming back to the witnesses who allegedly “saw” the planes. The entire 9/11 production was a grand deception. If someone managed to produce falsified images of the aluminum “planes” cutting into the steel perimeters of the Twin Towers with the same ease as if the planes were made from steel but the Towers were made from butter, and managed to feed this footage of cartoon physics to all mass media outlets, would it be reasonable to presume that someone would also prepare in advance a sufficient number of bogus “eye-witnesses” who would claim that they “saw” the “planes”?

Of course, we have to presume so. All those “eye-witnesses”, who allegedly “saw” how aluminum planes penetrated those steel double-walled perimeters of the Twin Towers, were merely actors hired by the 9/11 perpetrators to lie to the mass media and to the public. (Moreover, unlike those false witnesses recruited by the FBI to lie in the ensuing cover-up, these were hired in advance, prior to the actual 9/11 events, which elevates them in status to being direct accomplices to the 9/11 perpetration.)

The 9/11 perpetrators should not be allowed to dupe us with their cartoon physics videos and their false witnesses’ statements conveyed by their “zombie-boxes”. The laws of physics never took a holiday on 9/11. It is the common sense of gullible people watching the TV who have appeared to have taken that holiday instead...

Does it mean that all of the eye-witnesses who allegedly “saw” the planes were necessarily accomplices of the 9/11 perpetrators? Of course, it is not necessary.

The problem is that common people often want to appear “important witnesses” who “saw everything”. Specialists in law and law enforcement (such as judges and inquirers) know this peculiarity very well. Specialists in mass cheating (such as spin-doctors) apparently know this peculiarity too and could exploit it when planning an event.

That is why the tricky 9/11 perpetrators made sure to mix into the crowd of would be 9/11 spectators, in all important locations, several prepared actors (being either members of the Freemasonic Order, or typical Mossad’s “sayanim”) who would shout “Plane!” and “I saw a plane!” Such cries (followed by shocking TV footage showing the “plane”), would be enough to convince the crowd around them that it was indeed a plane.

In this situation many innocent people in the crowd would lose their “innocence” at once and would also claim that “we saw the plane with our very eyes”. Because they wanted to appear “important witnesses” who “saw everything”. This is the trick of the trade well known to all specialists in mass cheating. And after that such “eyewitnesses” could not retract their silly statements and confess that they did not actually see how aluminum planes were penetrating steel twice as thick as the tank’s armor, because such a confession would be tantamount to a severe loss of face. Thus, you could sincerely expect that such “eyewitnesses” would lie forever maintaining that they indeed “saw the planes” till their deathbed. And those who planned 9/11 could wholly expect it.

Additionally, I highly recommend you to review a collection of photos, compiled by my friend Marc Pinke. These pictures clearly show street level of different streets after the explosions on tops of the Twin Towers. In neither of these photos you could see any remnants of any “plane”, but merely office internals thrown away by the explosions. The photos are here: <http://groundzeronukes.com/no-planes.cfm>

To close this chapter, I highly recommend you watching this video:

This is so far the best and the most comprehensive research on the 9/11 “planes” made by a famous 9/11 researcher and a specialist in video compositing, Collin Alexander alias “Ace Baker”. This video is an absolute “must see”.

Oh, we almost forgot about the “hijackers”. In order to hijack planes you need some hijackers, don’t you?

Do you think that the hijackers piloting the planes would not survive their obviously suicidal missions and would have perished? You are badly mistaken if you think so.

On the photos below there are the hijackers from the 9/11 Commission’s Report. Look at how many of them managed to remain alive and kicking even up to this day:

Found alive after 9/11

Hijackers marked on the above photos as “found alive” were indeed found alive in a couple of weeks following 9/11 either in Saudi Arabia, or in Morocco, or in Tunisia.

It was reported by the FBI and claimed in the “9/11 Commission” Report that it was the following 19 “hijackers”:

Flight 175: Marwan al Shehhi (pilot), Fayez Ahmed Banihammad, Mohand al Shehri, Hamza al Ghamdi, Ahmed al Ghamdi;

Flight 11: Waleed al Shehri, Wail al Shehri, Mohamed Atta (pilot), Abdulaziz al Omari, Satam al Suqami;

Flight 77: Khalid al Mihdhar, Majed Moqed, Nawaf al Hazmi, Salem al Hazmi, Hani Hanjour (pilot);

Flight 93: Ahmed al Haznawi, Ahmed al Nami, Ziad Jarrahi (pilot), Saeed al Ghamdi.

From among the 19 hijackers named by the FBI, the following eight were found alive:

Wail and Waleed al Shehri (2 brothers),

Abdulaziz al Omari,

Mohand al Shehri,

Saeed al Ghamdi,

Ahmed al Nami,

Salem al Hazmi (the brother of Nawaf al Hazmi),

Marwan al Shehhi;

Some sources put the number of confirmed alive “hijackers” to even 9 – adding Khalid al Mihdhar who was also confirmed to be alive.

Since the “9/11 Commission” and the FBI published a security photo of 2 brothers Nawaf and Salem al Hazmi allegedly passing together the Dulles Airport security control, then Nawaf has to be automatically excluded also, along with his already proven to be innocent brother Salem.

Due to the same logic, two other alleged Flight 77 “hijackers” – Khalid al Mihdhar and Hani Hanjour, depicted on the same set of concocted security camera frames – together with Nawaf al Hazmi – have to be deemed innocent automatically.

Since Mohammed Atta was found to be an agent of the Pakistani ISI, he has to be excluded as well: it must be presumed that the role of an alleged “hijacker” was assigned to him later by his employers, who indulged themselves in the cover-up.

It is the right approach especially considering that Atta was “captured” by a security camera allegedly passing airport security shortly before the 9/11 flight together with Abdulaziz al Omari and again on September 10 near Fast Green ATM located in the parking lot of UNO restaurant, 280 Maine Mall Road, South Portland, Maine [<http://www.fbi.gov/pressrel/pressrel01/100401.htm>] and again with Adulaziz al Omari. Abdulaziz al Omari was found alive later and stated that he had never known Mohammed Atta and both “evidence” photos were falsified by the FBI. On the official photo below, which is available on the Internet¹⁰⁷, you could see, according to the official description¹⁰⁸, the following:

“Two men identified by authorities as suspected hijackers Mohammed Atta (R) and Abdulaziz Alomari (C) pass through airport security September 11, 2001 at Portland International Jetport in Maine in an image from airport surveillance tape released September 19, 2001. REUTERS/PORTLAND POLICE DEPARTMENT-Handout HS/HB”

Since 4 out of 5 of Flight 11 “hijackers” have already proven innocent, the last remaining one – Satam al Suqami – has to be deemed innocent also. Especially considering that it was his passport allegedly “found” by the FBI on the WTC demolition site and also because it was claimed by FAA that it was exactly him, Satam al Suqami, who allegedly shot (later edited to “stabbed”) a certain Israeli passenger Daniel Lewin on board of Flight 11.

An alleged “martyrdom video” of Atta with Ziad Jarrah (an alleged pilot of Flight 93) is also available¹⁰⁹ which effectively clears Ziad Jarrah (a Christian and a known Mossad stooge in Lebanon) from any 9/11 complicity (except only from his participation in an ensuing 9/11 cover up).

Besides this, thanks to the FBI, which “established” that “hijacker Mohamed Atta on Flight 11 called hijacker Marwan al Shehhi in Flight 175 as both planes sit on the runway”. They presumably confirm the plot is on. [Time, 8/4/02 (B)]”, the entire hijack crew of Flight 175 must be stricken out from the list of the culprits automatically.

By this logic (when the 14 out of 19 alleged “hijackers” were effectively excluded due to their alibis – including the entire “hijacking crew” of Flight 11 and 2 “pilots” from the 3 remaining flights), the FBI could no longer claim that there were any hijackings of the four planes whatsoever. It is obvious, that one could with the same ease strike out from the list the 5 remaining “hijackers” using a little facts and some elementary logic.

Situation with the alleged “9/11 hijackings” is being especially aggravated by the fact that the FBI refuses to release the long demanded passenger-lists (being said in November of 2008) for these four supposedly “hijacked” flights attracting due suspicions that the entire story about “hijacked” planes is similar to a tale about Santa Claus.

Now, I guess, you realize, at last, that due to unprecedented penetrating capabilities of aluminum and due to unprecedented survivability rate among the suicidal hijackers, the conspiracy theories in regard to the 9/11 “planes” have no deniable right to exist...

There are quite a few conspiracy theories in regard to the “hijacked” planes. Some of them are plausible to a certain extent, some are not. Among them are these (at least from among those known to me):

¹⁰⁹ http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Mohamed_Atta#Martyrdom_video

1) It was really passenger planes, full of passengers – hijacked by those 19 Arab “terrorists” – exactly as the U.S. Government began to claim starting from September 11, evening time.

This particular conspiracy theory is the most inconsistent – due to the fact that 8 of the alleged 19 hijackers were found alive (and some of those remaining whose fate is “uncertain” – have strong alibis, due to awkward FBI’s concoctions); while the U.S. Government stubbornly refuses to release to the public passenger lists of the supposedly hijacked flights – even up to this day (this being said in November 2008).

2) It was really passenger planes, full of passengers – “hijacked” by the U.S. Government, which used remote controls (intended to wrestle the plane from real possible hijackers and to fly it in a “drone” mode until landed – but in this case the planes were flown in a “drone” mode until crashed into the WTC).

3) It was really passenger planes, full of passengers – “hijacked” by the Israeli Mossad – in the manner described above – by using remote controls.

4) It was really passenger planes, full of passengers – “hijacked” by the Freemasonic Order (by the New World Order’s folks otherwise known as “good guys”) – in the manner described above – by using remote controls.

5) It was specially prepared “look-like passenger” planes, but, instead of the passengers, loaded with big amounts of explosives – capable of penetrating steel perimeter columns of the Twin Towers; while pilots and hand-picked passengers of the 4 claimed flights were accomplices of the perpetrators, who stole the actual planes and changed their own identities while pretending to be “dead”.

6) It was big airliners (with explosives) in the case of the Twin Towers and some supersonic jet-fighter (as a variety – “Tomahawk” or AGM-86C cruise missile) in the case of the Pentagon; while pilots and hand-picked passengers of the 4 claimed flights who pretended to be “dead” now were accomplices of the perpetrators.

7) It was specially prepared planes loaded with missiles which were fired first at the Twin Towers’ steel perimeters a moment before the impact in order to make holes for the actual planes, so that they could disappear inside; while pilots and hand-picked passengers of the 4 claimed flights who pretended to be “dead” now were accomplices of the perpetrators.

8) It was a flying saucer (UFO type) hiding between the Twin Towers before each impact, which managed to cheat everybody by producing some high-quality moving holographic images of the two “planes” visibly “penetrating” the Towers, while the actual “impacts” and holes in steel perimeters were made by pre-positioned explosives and the orange flames – by some Hollywood pyrotechnic stuff. Passengers and pilots of Flights 11 and 175 (especially those who made calls) were accomplices of the perpetrators, while Flights 77 and 93 were shot down by the U.S. Government which was in great panic at that moment and the rest of the alleged calls and other “evidence” was faked later in the course of the ensuing cover-up.

9) Both planes, approaching the Twin Towers and penetrating their steel perimeter columns were faked by a well-organized and well-synchronized network of camera-men and photographers which managed to quickly add images of moving planes (prepared in advance) to contemporary images of the Twin Towers by using some computer software.

Those people had trained themselves well in advance to proceed with such a job quickly and efficiently and managed to complete the required job in only a few seconds. Then these digitally modified images of the “planes” supposedly “approaching” and “penetrating” the Twin Towers were added in near real-time to the contemporary footage and supplied by this well-organized network to all major news agencies (of course, with an appropriate wholehearted facilitation of the so-called “good guys” who own and run all these news agencies).

This enabled them to show these concocted events to the public in almost real time with negligible 17-19 seconds delays (these unexplainable 17-19 seconds delays indeed existed in reality – none of the major news outlets showing impacts managed to show them in real time – an unexplainable delay of 17 seconds, at minimum, was present in each case).

It is presumed also that some professional cameramen working for these news agencies might have been accomplices of the perpetrators as well. The 9/11 “fake planes network” consisted of both – professional and amateurish cameramen, some “casual” amateurish “photographers”, plus necessary “eye-witnesses”, of course, who supposed “to see” the “planes” with “their very eyes” and to report what they “saw” to all main news agencies, as well as to shout that in the crowds of innocent spectators in order to convince the simpletons around.

One of the classical examples of this cheating was a movie concocted by a certain Evan Fairbanks – a “freelance camera-man”, then 40 years old, who managed to “capture” how the second aluminum plane penetrates those steel perimeter columns of the WTC South Tower and supply his concoction to ABC.

Famous concoction of the “2nd plane penetrating the South Tower” by Evan Fairbanks – as shown by ABC.

However, it is difficult to suspect this person in any wrongdoing, because Fairbanks managed, in addition, to shoot the best footage of the South Tower’s collapse, himself being nearly under the Tower and narrowly escaping being killed. Even when he ran away from falling debris, he kept his camera filming unfolding events – thus, providing us with really invaluable footage. He acted apparently like a hero; you have to give him his due. And, due to certain psychological problems, you cannot suspect a hero of any wrongdoings. That is why his concoction with the “2nd plane’s impact” was easily swallowed.

But do not forget, though, that some brave enemies of yours also act like heroes. Don't they?

Fascists also fought during the World War II like heroes. But this fact did not prevent the Nazi heroes from maintaining their death camps. Not to mention fanatical Japanese samurais – who were brave enough to assault a machine-gun position brandishing a sword. Though, their apparent heroism did not prevent the Japanese heroes from using the same sword to behead prisoners of war.

It is good to always keep that reality in mind when assessing a possibility whether a hero could do anything wrong to you. Apparently, he can – if the hero is a real and convinced enemy of yours.

Apparently, those New World Order folks, who slowly, but surely, are installing on our Planet a global concentration camp under auspices of the so-called “globalization”, so-called “international laws”, fighting for so-called “human rights”, “security”, “anti-terrorism”, “guns control”, “anticorruption”, “rights of children”, against “money laundering” and “human trafficking”, and so on, have their own brave folks, who are ready to die for their cause and for their organization. You should know that many members of the Freemasonic Order are as devout to their sect as the former Communists were devout to the Communist Party. And some of these “brave soldiers of the New World Order” could be indeed as brave as the Japanese samurais during the WWII.

Though, the apparent bravery of the abovementioned folks should not mislead you into believing that those brave folks fight for your freedom or for anything good for you. They indeed bravely fight for your ENSLAVEMENT. They want you to be complete slaves in the future global concentration camp, the slaves who will bear an implanted identification microchip under their skin, the slaves, who will be prohibited to possess gold or silver coins and any kind of weapons, the slaves who will be deprived of their right to have a family as well as of any and every former right or liberty of a human.

This is the way to overcome the abovementioned psychological problem that does not allow us to suspect a “hero” in any wrongdoing. Brave Mr. Evan Fairbanks has intentionally cheated you, people. And he has cheated you because he worked hard to advance the global concentration camp on this Planet. I hope you got the point.

Let us look at some screenshots from the famous footage where brave Evan supposedly managed to “accidentally” capture the “second [aluminum] plane” penetrating thick, double-walled steel perimeter columns of the South Tower and completely disappearing inside of it without any trace and without even any sound.

The presence (to be exact the “absence”) of a sound of the “plane” you can see from the behavior of a man accidentally captured in the frames. This man did not react to the “plane’s” approaching and crashing through thick steel bars into the Tower. However, he reacted immediately to an explosion above him followed by the orange fireballs.

Do you think it is because the sound had to travel down to him and it took too long? No, it was not so. You can make your own calculations if you are familiar with physics. Apparently, this man managed to hear a sound of the real explosion immediately. But he oddly failed to hear the sound of the approaching “plane” and that of its “crash”.

This particular theory (the 9th one) maintains that there were no planes that hit the Twin Towers in reality and both planes were digitally faked.

However, when it comes to the fates of the 4 actual physical passenger planes, officially acknowledged being lost in 9/11, this theory subdivides itself into several versions:

9.1 All pilots, flight-attendants and hand-picked passengers of all the 4 flights were accomplices of the perpetrators; so all 4 aircraft involved were either stolen and disappeared without a trace or sunk in the Atlantic Ocean and so also disappeared without a trace.

9.2 None of the planes was involved and the entire story of the hijacked planes was faked by the FBI later; so all planes were intact and later some of them were simply re-registered to make this story look plausible.

9.3 Pilots, flight-attendants and hand-picked passengers of Flights 11, 175 and 77 were accomplices of the perpetrators, and stole (sunk) their planes, while Flight 93 was shot down by the U.S. Government in panic.

9.4 Pilots, flight-attendants and hand-picked passengers of Flights 11 and 175 were accomplices of the perpetrators (the planes were directed to the Atlantic Ocean where they sunk without any passengers on board whatsoever – exactly as NORAD had initially suspected when it diverted the first two jet-fighters over the Atlantic Ocean), while Flights 93 and 77 were shot down by the U.S. Government in panic; but later debris and dead bodies from Flight 77 were used by spin-doctors to cover up the Pentagon attack.

9.5 Pilots, flight-attendants and hand-picked passengers of Flights 11 and 77 were accomplices of the perpetrators and they stole (sunk) their planes, while Flights 93 and 175 were genuinely shot down by the U.S. Government in panic.

9.6 None of the flights were involved with the perpetrators; all four unfortunate flights were shot down in panic.

In case if someone is interested in the personal opinion of the author of this book in regard to the planes, I think the most plausible one is the abovementioned version 9.4; moreover, I am almost certain that this is exactly the right one. So here are my arguments for its support:

I believe that two planes – obviously AA Flight 11 and UA Flight 175 – were both staffed with accomplices of the 9/11 perpetrators. There were no passengers in the planes whatsoever; all boarding passes have been issued to some “dead souls”, which never boarded either of the planes in reality. However, it is also possible, as a variety, that there were live “passengers” who received boarding passes in person and have passed in person a pre-flight control, but then there was some trick implemented, so that instead of going into a plane they went into some bus unnoticed and this bus secretly drove them away from the airport.

One of the best proofs of this is that there were virtually no people in the Los Angeles airport waiting to meet the unfortunate passengers of the “hijacked” planes. So, in any case I have no doubt that there were no passengers on the planes at the moment they took off, not even extra stewardesses – because all without any exception stewardesses were accomplices of 9/11 perpetrators and so all “unnecessary stewardesses” simply left the planes together with the “unnecessary passengers” before their take-offs.

However, at least two stewardesses were left on each flight to make Airfone calls. The two stewardesses of Flight 11 made real calls using Airfones from those empty planes on their way over the Atlantic Ocean, claiming that the plane was “hijacked”. Then both stewardesses simultaneously terminated their calls exactly two minutes before the explosion in the North Tower – as a matter of precaution (not to accidentally overlap the time of conversation with the time of the scheduled explosion). After this, both stewardesses and pilots (or a single pilot, possibly) all left the plane on parachutes, were picked up by either some speed-boat or a helicopter, got their money, obtained new identities, and have been re-settled (most probably not in the United States but elsewhere); while their aircraft successfully sunk in the Atlantic Ocean without any trace.

As a variety it is also possible that they attempted a kind of emergency landing on water and then get out and destroyed the aircraft by some explosives. But this is very improbable – it would be very dangerous to let such a huge plane float in waters of the Atlantic, due to a variety of reasons. First of all, it could have been accidentally photographed by some satellite. Secondly, it might be impossible to land on water safely if the waves were too high at the moment. Therefore, it is much more probable that they left the plane on parachutes.

Another possibility (I would bet on this particular one) is that the folks who prepared the 9/11 production had dismantled the entire Airfone equipment in advance from the Flight 11 (or produced an exact copy of it so that the communication coming from such modified Airfone equipment would be identified as if it were coming from the genuine Flight 11). In this case, the stewardesses would have made the Airfone communication while in a safe location and not from onboard the doomed Flight 11. While the actual Flight 11 without any crew whatsoever was flown entirely on an autopilot towards the Atlantic Ocean till crashing there in some reasonably deep location that would not allow any recovery operation. This arrangement is quite probable as well – as I have mentioned above, I personally would bet on this one. Perhaps, it is even more feasible than the dangerous parachuting above the Atlantic Ocean described above.

Similar actions were performed with the second plane – which was Flight 175.

The rest of the planes – such as Flight 93, Flight 77, flight from Chicago to New York, and, probably, flight from Boston to Atlanta, were all genuinely shot down by the U.S. Air Force (or by U.S. National Guard's fighters – carrying out the shoot-down order of the U.S. President – issued following a genuine panic.

Of course, since it was necessary “to assign” one plane to the Pentagon attack later – one of the shot down planes was used for this reason. Apparently, the choice of the U.S. officials fell on AA Flight 77. All passengers of that flight (already dead by that time) were quickly relocated from its actual crash-site to a morgue that dealt with the supposed victims of the Pentagon “crash” (in fact, it was exactly as I said here – you can easily find a lot of relevant information as to the relocating of bodies of the dead passengers from Flight 77 from some not so clear location to the morgue, if you only search the Internet for witnesses accounts to that effect).

Of course, I could be mistaken in regard to exactly which planes sunk in the Atlantic Ocean, so this is only a personal opinion of mine that it was AA Flight 11 and UA Flight 175 – I do not have any proof, but only a couple of suspicions.

Among them these:

NORAD apparently managed to trace that the two planes intended for the Twin Towers disappeared over the Atlantic Ocean and had re-directed the first pair of jet-fighters over the Atlantic Ocean – and this particular action had happened before the missile has arrived to the Pentagon. Such re-direction of these two jet-fighters over the Atlantic Ocean had absolutely nothing to do with the Pentagon attack that had not yet happened at that moment. Yes, it is well-known that the second bunch of the jet-fighters was re-directed over the Atlantic Ocean later – in response to the Pentagon attack – to watch for more cruise missiles that might approach the East Coast from the ocean side. However, it shall be understood that the second bunch of the jet-fighters was sent over the Atlantic much later and it was a distinctly different case.

As it has been mentioned in another chapter, on July 30, 2004, one U.S. Senator – Mike Dayton made an unprecedented statement that, understandably, was ignored by the Senate, and, unfortunately, received unbelievably little coverage elsewhere. Surely, Senator Dayton's statement deserves most serious attention, because it contains certain seditious details regarding the behavior of NORAD operatives and that of the scrambled fighter-jet's pilots. However, before we consider this extremely important piece of 9/11 evidence, I would like to draw a distinctive line separating our understanding of the events (since we are dedicated 9/11 researchers, moreover, the Barbarians, free from any slavish complexes) and understanding of Senator Dayton (since he is merely a Patrician, a lay man who tends to believe everything that is said or shown in the TV-box).

I guess you are reasonable enough to realize that NORAD cannot be blamed for its apparent failure to properly intercept the digital planes that managed to approach New York City undetected and managed to penetrate steel perimeters of the Twin Towers with the same ease that the planes were made from steel, but the Twin Towers – from butter. NORAD by no means could be blamed for such a failure because it is designed to detect and to intercept only physical flying objects – those existing and flying in reality. NORAD is desperately helpless against those digital planes that exist only in fake TV footage and in sick imaginations of the “eye-witnesses” who convinced themselves that they allegedly “saw” those planes. I hope you understand that NORAD would never be able to detect those “planes” that allegedly hit the Twin Towers. However, it does not mean that NORAD was unable to detect the physical planes. The physical planes were indeed detected and NORAD reacted in accordance with what it had detected.

Let us briefly remember the 9/11 timetable. September 11, 9.08 AM – The two F-15s scrambled some time ago (nobody could confirm what time exactly they have been scrambled) to find Flight 11 in New York skies are now ordered to circle in a 150-mile window of air space off the coast of Long Island. It is not clear whether they had reached New York City before being directed over the ocean. It happened because NORAD “allegedly” [but surely] managed to trace the two hijacked planes – Flight 11 and Flight 175 – heading away from Baltimore and Boston to over the Atlantic Ocean. (This particular piece of information remains undoubtedly the most seditious part of 9/11 evidence and it is no longer publicly discussed; however, it was voiced by Senator Mark Dayton on July 30, 2004.)

I hope you got the point. Now let us read what was actually said by Senator Dayton. The full statement of his can be found here: http://911blimp.net/rpt_Dayton2004.html , but we are particularly interested in this small excerpt from his speech:

“...And this was not an occasional human error failure. This was nothing but human error and failure to follow established procedures and to use common sense. And, unfortunately, the chronicle is not over. NORAD mission commander ordered his only three other planes on alert in Virginia to scramble and fly north to Baltimore. Minutes later, when he was told that a plane was approaching Washington, he learned that the planes were flying east over the Atlantic Ocean, away from Baltimore and Boston, so that when the third plane struck the Pentagon, NORAD's fighters were 150 miles away, farther than they were before they took off...”

Here Senator Dayton revealed extremely seditious information that the U.S. officials tried to hide at any cost. At the height of the 9/11 events, military pilots sent towards New York in order to intercept hijacked planes learned that both hijacked planes (those very planes that were alleged to hit the World Trade Center, do not make any mistake) were heading away from Baltimore and Boston towards the Atlantic Ocean. Thus, the pilots got the order to follow the planes towards the Atlantic Ocean. And so they did.

NORAD did not make any mistake in this case. Its operational staff indeed managed to discover the two flights heading towards the Atlantics and directed the pilots for the fighter-jets accordingly. After about 20 minutes a cruise missile would be launched from the Atlantic Ocean that would hit the Pentagon and it too would be properly detected by NORAD which would send the second bunch of the jet-fighters towards the Atlantic – but this time not to intercept the hijacked planes, but to guard against further possible “seaborne attacks”.

All of it is very clear to a serious 9/11 researcher who considers the 9/11 events in their entirety. However, it might not be as clear for Senator Dayton who does not understand what really happened and therefore blames NORAD for its supposed “unpreparedness” and “negligence” in connection with the described actions of the latter.

Indeed, the abovementioned actions of NORAD to direct two bunches of fighter-jets towards the Atlantic Ocean would look ridiculous and bordering on a criminal negligence if we presume that the Twin Towers were hit by Flights 11 and 175, while the Pentagon was hit by Flight 77 as officially claimed.

However, it is not so if we assume the “politically incorrect” version and presume that the Twin Towers were hit by the digital planes that existed only in TV footage, while physical Flights 11 and 175 sunk in the Atlantic Ocean, and the Pentagon was hit by a cruise missile fired from some “innocently-looking” ship (or even from a submarine) taking its position in the Atlantic Ocean. In this case, all the abovementioned actions of NORAD are correct. This would be our understanding as dedicated 9/11 researchers. It is not so, however, when it comes to Senator Dayton. He might not belong to the group of the “initiated” folks at the top of the U.S. political establishment who are entitled to know every particle of the 9/11 truth not mattering how “politically incorrect” this truth might be. Senator Dayton most probably belongs to the flock of the “commoners” who are entitled either to the public version of the 9/11 “truth”, or to some intermediate version of the “truth” – intended for mid-level official. Therefore, the indignation expressed by Senator Dayton regarding NORAD's actions in the abovementioned speech before the Senate is understandable.

Anyhow, I guess we have finally established that two planes indeed disappeared in the Atlantic Ocean and most probably were the very planes that were officially blamed for the attack on the Twin Towers.

One of these two planes missing over the Atlantic Ocean was undoubtedly Flight 11, while the second plane could be either United Flight 175, or American Flight 77 (because it was exactly Flight 77 that was first claimed to be the second plane which hit the South Tower).

However, suspicion falls on exactly Flight 175 – it will be further explained why.

1) UA Flight 175 pilots made that suspiciously strange call to flight controllers where they reported some alleged “suspicious” radio-transmission from the cockpit of AA Flight 11. This is probably the best proof that pilots of Flight 11 (which was American Airlines) and Flight 175 (which was United Airlines) were accomplices who just performed some pre-scheduled hoax procedures.

I guess you understand that the pilots of these two flights, belonging to different companies, simply had no reason to monitor sounds in each other cockpits and to report their “findings” to flight controllers.

2) Unlike American Flight 77, United Flight 93, and flight from Chicago to New York, which were all under control until “downed” (at least according to many contemporary news releases by CNN, BBC, ABC, NBC, Associated Press, and many others), United Flight 175 was purely “missing”.

Until the late evening, September 11, 2001, it was nothing else than a “matter of concern” – which means that flight controllers and airlines dispatchers had no trace of UA Flight 175 whatsoever.

3) An image of the aircraft that disappeared inside the South Tower – as “captured” by several “cameramen” and shown by almost all big news agencies on semi-live (I mean with 19 seconds delay) TV footage, was apparently intended to represent a United Airlines-, rather than an American Airlines jetliner. It is because instead of red “AA” letters on its tail, there was some obviously blue sign – apparently purported to represent the logo of United Airlines.

Therefore it should be more likely Flight 175, than Flight 77, that was intended “to hit the South Tower” and to sink in the Atlantic Ocean. At least I believe so.

This how it looked like on that footage:

This is the second terrorist “plane” which is about to penetrate the thick double-walled steel perimeter and to completely disappear into the South Tower.

Since the plane on the screenshot above features an obviously blue tail, it could not have been intended to be American Flight 77, as initially claimed, because American Airlines paints red “AA” letters on white tails on its aircraft. It should have been intended to represent only United Airlines. Thus, it would be logical to presume that this particular image was supposed to represent United Airlines Flight 175.

Considering the entire above, if I were that FBI inquirer who was tasked with investigating the 9/11 affair, I would not think long trying to figure out accomplices of the 9/11 perpetrators – I would quickly round up the following guys and gals (or, at least, would try to trace where they are hiding in order to arrest them):

- 1) Every “passenger” mentioned in a passenger-list of American Flight 11 – along with all the flight’s stewardesses and pilots;
- 2) Every “passenger” mentioned in a passenger-list of United Flight 175 – along with all the flight’s stewardesses and pilots;
- 3) Every airline staff and every security official who was responsible for making seat bookings, for issuing boarding-passes to, for security-checking of, and for allowing to enter the actual aircraft to the two groups mentioned above;

- 4) Every “camera-man” who produced either video- or photographic images of approaching “planes” – because all of these “reporters” and “photographers” logically could only be genuine, proven, self-evident accomplices of the actual 9/11 perpetrators (especially taking into consideration the very thickness of the steel Tower’s double-walled perimeters);
- 5) Every “eye-witness” who was able to “see the planes” that hit the Towers and reported that to any news agency. Except those, of course, who were ordered by the FBI to lie in its ensuing cover-up attempt. And except those apparent idiots who did not see any plane in reality, but only wanted to appear “important witnesses”. However, the latter’s possible “prima facie” evidence I would establish only after having them arrested first, considering that giving a false testimony constitutes a crime of itself, especially in such serious circumstances as occurred in that particular case. Do not forget that each such “eye-witness” who “saw the planes” was doing nothing less than provoking the U.S. leadership into shooting down real passenger planes. It might have been a joke, of course, but in this case it has been an apparently bad joke. If you don’t know – any “joker” who only “jokes” that he allegedly has a bomb on board of a passenger plane will end up in prison – without any joke whatsoever. Just imagine, that all these 9/11 “jokers” were much more dangerous.

But, unfortunately for the United States of America, the humble author of these lines was not that exact FBI inquirer tasked with investigating the 9/11 affair. The inquiry was entrusted to some other guy, who might have a very different opinion and a very different approach to the task entrusted to him... He might follow another conspiracy theory in regard to the “hijacked” planes – from among those listed above...

Many people, especially from among mainstream so-called 9/11 “truthers” led by Prof. Steven Jones, asked me – why did I touch the no-planes/planes argument whatsoever? Didn’t I know that this issue is very annoying to the mainstream “9/11 Truth” society, because it supposedly divides the “truthers” over this issue? Why didn’t I concentrate on mechanics of the actual WTC nuclear demolition leaving aside the no-planes/planes argument?

To be honest with you, I thought for a while about it. Indeed, the mere fact that I placed myself into a “no-planers” camp might easily scare away from this book a large number of people. However, I decided to leave here my critics in regard to the government-sponsored “planes theory” and to openly state that I do not believe there were any “planes”. I am not a coward, after all, but a truth-seeker. Why should I be afraid of the opinion of the crowd if I know it for sure that the crowd is wrong?

Yes, I am well aware that my position on this issue will scare away some people, but I do not care. I am after the truth, not after the satisfaction of morons who believe that aluminum projectiles could penetrate thick WTC steel while simultaneously causing black frames on video footage in the middle of the impact scene. Moreover, I am certain that if someone believes that aluminum planes would be indeed capable of penetrating steel WTC perimeters, such a person would never believe that the Towers were pulverized by underground nuclear explosions and even the most revealing “ground zero” definition would not help him to realize this obvious fact. Such a person would rather believe his guru – Prof. Steven Jones – who stubbornly insists that it was physical planes that penetrated the steel columns of the WTC, and it was so-called “nano-thermite” which allegedly melted the steel columns into fluffy microscopic dust.

Since my video presentation “9/11thology” was published on the Internet and was widely discussed, I noticed that a lot of people, at last, came to the realization that aluminum planes could not penetrate the steel perimeters of the World Trade Center by definition. And I feel a little bit proud of it now.

Before my video went public, the so-called “no-planers” camp was merely a small group of individuals who were considered “outcasts” by both – so-called “main-stream truthers”, and by so-called “good citizens” who believed the Report of the 9/11 Commission. But soon after I first voiced an opinion that no aluminum projectile could penetrate steel, irrespectively of its actual speed, I noticed that the “no-planers” camp grew considerably.

Perhaps, it was a well-known psychological phenomenon described in a famous fable of the naked king, whom no one dared to call naked, trying hard to convince themselves that the king was dressed despite seeing exactly the opposite with their very eyes. Perhaps, in this case the humble author of these lines played the role of that child who first shouted – “the King is naked!” – thus freeing everyone to express his own opinion.

Before my video appeared, most so-called “no-planers” were routinely ostracized, ridiculed, and even banished from various Internet forums and from “truthers’ societies”. It is all changed now. To openly state that aluminum cannot penetrate steel is no longer “politically incorrect” on the Internet forums today and more and more people have begun to express their opinions openly in this regard. Here is just a recent example expressed by people while discussing my video presentation on one of the Internet forums

An apparent government shill who performs a full-time job to derail dangerous discussions on the Internet forums (of course, he strongly opposes both – “no planes” and “nuclear demolition” versions) says: “There’s no way it could have been a fuel loaded plane slamming into each tower at over 500mph taking out several floors and creating a massive inferno....nah” [meaning he ridicules anyone who might dare to doubt this supposedly “obvious” notion]

A thinking person’s reply: “Yes, intuitively, a large fast moving aircraft represents a lot of energy, and one would think it reasonable for an aircraft to do a lot of damage to a building on impact. What do you think would happen - hypothetically - if the aircraft was stationary in the air, and someone picked up one of the enormously massive WTC towers, swung it violently, and hit the aircraft at an impact speed of 500 mph ? Would it flatten the aircraft do you think, or would the aircraft go clean through the moving building and turn it to dust ? Have a think about the above hypothetical question, because whether the aircraft was hitting a stationary tower, or the tower hitting a stationary aircraft, the physics of the situation is identical. The intuitive response to the damage from a ‘fast moving aircraft’ may not be quite so intuitive.” [It did not convince the shill, as you might expect, but at least, it might convince my reader.]

Note that on the pictures above the steel perimeters look small from this point of view. However, you can easily overcome this optical illusion if you imagine that the aluminum passenger aircraft which supposedly penetrated these steel double-walled perimeters in its entirety (without even the smallest part of the aircraft falling back to sidewalks below) would not look “too big” either – its wings span would be less than the width of the Tower’s façade. Besides, I hope you still remember how each of the massive perimeter columns looked like in its cross section...

Damage inflicted to the wall of the Verizon building by surviving perimeter assemblies.

On the photo above you can see what type of damage was inflicted by such steel perimeter columns to a high-quality brick wall of the Verizon building upon impact. Based on this observation, you can imagine what would happen with a typical passenger airliner (which is merely an empty tube covered by thin aluminum skin) if such an airliner were parked beneath the Twin Tower and hit by such a perimeter assemblage falling from above. I hope you have no doubt that the airliner would be just flattened?

You will lose all doubts as to how a passenger aircraft is flattened if you watch the video below (it is enough to watch only the first one and a half minutes of it in order to understand what I mean – the rest of the video you can skip): <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=fqaD6k0lhbg>

Now imagine that it does not actually matter – whether a moving aircraft hits a stationary steel structure, or a stationary aircraft is being hit by a moving steel structure. Just remember – what actually matters in this case – is a so-called “relative velocity” (i.e. speed of one impacting object in relation to another, or the “speed of impact”, irrespectively of which of the two impacting objects moves relative to the eyes of the observer). Thus, to believe that the Boeing 767 could penetrate these perimeter columns in its entirety, is just insane.

But why then, one might ask, does Prof. Steven Jones, the leader of the 9/11 Truth movement, so staunchly deny this “no-planes” version – to the extent that he banishes from his ranks all those who might doubt there were physical planes involved? Does he not know the laws of physics? Or does he sincerely believe the laws of physics took a holiday on 9/11?

The answer is obvious. Prof. Steven Jones is a physicist who knows the physical properties of aluminum and the physical properties of steel very well. Not to mention that he is a nuclear scientist who apparently knows very well what “ground zero” really means (does anyone seriously doubt that an American nuclear scientist is aware what “ground zero” used to mean before 9/11?). However, it does not prevent Prof. Steven Jones and Co. from staunchly denying the “nuclear demolition” version along with the “no-planes” version.

The so-called “main-stream” 9/11 Truth movement was from the very beginning hijacked by impostors who claimed to be “dissidents” supposedly “fighting for the truth”. However, in reality they work hard to help the U.S. Government to continue hiding the 9/11 truth from the public. For that reason they were appointed to lead those sincere truth seekers who are unhappy with the 9/11 Commission Report in the wrong direction. And this sad fact is self-evident.

Do you not believe me? Well. Read the paragraph above – regarding the Internet discussion – and try to form your own opinion in regard to the supposed penetrating capabilities of an aluminum plane. Review the pre-9/11 definitions of “ground zero”. Remember that Prof. Steven Jones is a NUCLEAR SCIENTIST who must know for sure what “ground zero” did mean before 9/11. And now, finally, try to form your own opinion regarding the main 9/11 Truth movement leader’s honesty and scientific integrity.

It is very easy, indeed, to understand why the U.S. officials spend so much effort to quash any discontent when it comes to the “no-planes” argument. If the “no-planes” truth is established, then the U.S. officials would have no choice than to arrest all those who filmed the “planes” and many of those who “saw” them (but apparently all of these are members of the powerful Freemasonic Order and are the most obedient servants of the New World Order folks – meaning that the very “good guys” must be arrested in this case). The next thing the U.S. Government would be obliged to admit is that it shot down at least two passenger planes – Flights 93 and 77. And then it would have no explanation whatsoever why it actually demolished the Twin Towers.

The “planes” theory is indeed a corner stone in the U.S. Government’s (not to mention the so-called “good guys”) defense against public accusations. Therefore you could sincerely expect that all of them – the desperate U.S. Government and the so-called “good guys” (who badly exposed their faces in this particular case) – to defend this till the end. It is a very serious point, indeed.

In any case, since my work in any case is an open challenge to Prof. Jones’ so-called “nano-thermite” demolition theory, I can’t afford disregarding the “planes theory” even though it is not the primary point of the book. These theories are too intertwined to challenge one and to leave the other intact.

Please, note that the author of these lines does not base this book upon any particular conspiracy theory in regard to those planes, and his private opinion is nothing else than his private opinion only. This book explains who organized 9/11 and why the Twin Towers actually collapsed – disregarding the fact of whether there were any real planes involved or not. So, irrespectively of your personal preferences – whether you sincerely believe that the two aluminum planes really hit the Twin Towers and managed to penetrate their thick double-walled steel perimeter columns – like those shown in the above picture. Or you prefer to believe WTC on-site construction manager Mr. Frank Albert De Martini and think that the alleged “planes” were either holographic or digital and they existed only in the news footage – in either case you can read this book further without any fear. It does not actually deal with the planes matter: it deals exclusively with technicalities of the WTC collapse and with the conspiracy behind their collapse.

Or, to be more precise, I would say that I am less interested in how the 9/11 perpetrators managed to allow empty aluminum tubes to penetrate those steel columns, but more – in how the 9/11 perpetrators managed to instantly transform those steel columns into that peculiar fluffy microscopic dust (that allowed the Twin Towers' tops to fall down at near freefall speed as if under them were not any remnants of thick steel columns, but only thin air.)

The main point of this book is not aluminum “planes”, but steel dust. It seems that I was the only person on this Planet (from among those who dared to go public, at least) who managed to provide a satisfactory explanation on how it was possible to transform steel structures of the Twin Towers into this fluffy dust.

P.S. This is the most recent addition.

I feel obliged to inform my reader that Prof. Steven E. Jones, who used to be the most active of all known so-called “truthers” as well as the most ruthless administrator of the main-stream “truthing” society, which he ran using almost dictatorial methods, suddenly quit the scene and disappeared from public view around the beginning of 2012.

To give him his due, it shall be mentioned that Jones resisted till the end – stubbornly maintaining that the so-called “nano-thermite” could allegedly cause “ground zero” designations (along with chronic radiation sickness in the gullible ground zero responders), and that aluminum could penetrate steel. However, with the bulk of the former “truthers” finally switching their brains “on” (and so realizing that Prof. Jones, being a nuclear scientist, could unlikely be oblivious of the true meaning of the term “ground zero” – like it could be perceived from this¹¹⁰ web discussion, for example), the situation became desperate for him. He could no longer defend his ridiculous notions without being ridiculed and accused of being the shill.

It shall be presumed that Jones’ handlers realized that they lost both – the so-called “nano-thermite” argument, and the “aluminum could penetrate steel” argument (do not forget to thank the humble author of these lines for both – he was the one who initiated both arguments), and therefore they decided to withdraw him from the scene before it was too late. It could not be interpreted otherwise, because by the moment Jones deserted the “truthing” battlefield, the arguments about the nuclear demolition of the WTC and about the suggested armor-piercing capabilities of aluminum reached their peak.

Apparently, the so-called “good guys” did not want Jones to be humiliated and discredited in the full public view because he might be useful, still, in the future. Those folks from behind the so-called “curtain” managed to successfully utilize him twice – in the infamous “heavy watergate” affair, a/k/a “the murder of cold fusion”^{111 112}, and in their recent attempt to concoct the story of the so-called “nano-thermite” (which was “discovered” by Prof. Jones “in the WTC dust”, just to remind you, some 7 years after 9/11 – coincidentally with the attempt of the humble author of these lines to publish his claims about the WTC nuclear demolition for the first time).

Perhaps, his handlers from behind the infamous “curtain” hoped that they could still use him one more time, and so, they thought that the gullible plebs with their notoriously short memory should forget Prof. Steven E. Jones as soon as possible in connection with his 9/11 efforts – exactly as they forgot him in connection with the “heavy watergate” affair prior to his “discovery” of the so-called “nano-thermite”.

But the memory of the cynical Barbarians is not that short, is it?

So, we shall preserve the memory of Prof. Steven E. Jones forever.

Prof. Stephen E. Jones CIA Mole

The fact of Prof. Jones’ deserting the battlefield of the 9/11 “truthing” does not mean, of course, that his handlers agreed to surrender their current positions to “nukers” and to “no-planers” without resistance. It is not so, of course. They will continue to defend their positions. So, before Jones quit the scene, he passed the baton to folks like Richard Gage and Niels Harrit who continued to promote his stories in public TV like vacuum salesmen. In the years 2012-2013 you could even observe certain activities that were unimaginable by the standards of so-called “political correctness” of the first post-9/11 decade: the shills were admitted to the supposedly “alternative” television (such as English language “Russia Today”, not unknown “Al Jazeera”, and Iran’s “Press TV”, which are indeed perceived by simpletons as something “free”) and they began to promote their “nano-thermite” crap to the millions of gullible spectators watching these supposedly “free” TV-channels. These TV spectators, in the absence of any plausible alternative version of the WTC demolition, of course, subscribed to the so-called “nano-thermite” story. That is to say that despite Prof. Jones’ withdrawal, “his” ideas are still alive and even kicking. However, I sincerely hope that this book will help to finally defeat them, along with defeating the shills who continue to sell the so-called “nano-thermite” to the gullible public.

Conspiracy theories about 9/11 in a sense: “How did they demolish the World Trade Center?” and disproving these conspiracy theories.

Now, as I guess it became more or less understandable why so many “conspiracy theories” have their undeniable right to exist, let me proceed to these very theories.

As I have already mentioned, I will make a brief overview of the most common “conspiracy theories” (from the technical point of view).

All of such “conspiracy theories” suggest that the entire 9/11 affair was nothing else than an “inside job” and that no one other than the U.S. Government was supposedly its main perpetrator. I.e. they claim that it was the very U.S. Government that had allegedly organized all these outrageous (and possibly nuclear) attacks on their own citizens.

“...We must speak the truth about terror. Let us never tolerate outrageous conspiracy theories concerning the attacks of September the 11th; malicious lies that attempt to shift the blame away from the terrorists, themselves, away from the guilty...”

Remarks by President G. W. Bush to the United Nations General Assembly¹¹³
U.N. Headquarters, New York, New York
November 10, 2001
9:38 A.M. EST

The author of these lines totally agrees with President G.W. Bush in the abovementioned sense. Nobody shall tolerate those outrageous conspiracy theories in regard to the September the 11th attacks.

Ironically, the most outrageous of all 9/11 conspiracy theories is the one concocted by the U.S. Government – namely the “Report of the 9/11 Commission”, alias the first “truth” intended for the plebeian consumption. However, the second “truth” intended for “confidential” consumption of the patricians is by no means less outrageous than the first one, because it is also deliberate and cynical cheating, probably even more cynical than the primitive cheating of the plebeians.

Even though the rest of conspiracy theories are less outrageous than the abovementioned two, they shall not be tolerated as well. Let us speak the truth about “terror” – exactly as President G.W. Bush has urged us to do.

I would like to state in advance that all of these remaining “conspiracy theories” were worked out by the people who knew nothing of what exactly happened with the WTC and who did speculate only. With all due respect to these people, who have their undeniable right to voice their private opinions amidst the atmosphere of lies and suspicions, I am obliged to state that:

- 1) Unfortunately, all these so-called “conspiracy theories” (at least, those known to me and therefore addressed below) are in no sense better than the well-known “truth” No.1 concocted by the U.S. Government’s spin-doctors for the consumption of the plebs.
- 2) Even though the U.S. Government absolutely rightly deserves to be suspected as being the chief perpetrator of 9/11, considering its outrageous post-9/11 behavior, in reality it was not guilty. It did not know anything in advance about the 9/11 attacks and had nothing to do with the actual perpetration (except, of course, being involved in the ensuing cover-up, except sending gullible ground zero responders to their certain deaths, and except a declaration of the so-called “War” against so-called “Terror”...). There should not be the slightest doubt concerning the U.S. Government’s total innocence in regard to the actual 9/11 attacks.

- 3) The 9/11 conspiracy theories, unfortunately, are not as “innocent” as they might appear at the first glance. They do not help truth-seekers to find the truth. They rather prevent them from finding the truth. Moreover, most of the 9/11 conspiracy theories (if not ALL of them) are being promoted by shills, appointed by the so-called “good guys”. It is because the conspiracy theories actually help the “good guys” to hide the truth about 9/11 from you, innocent folks.

So here is it:

Conspiracy theory No.1 (the earliest and the most commonly known). Many people allege that the U.S. Government has used a big number of cleverly placed charges of conventional explosives in almost every floor of the WTC Twin Towers. Moreover, they claim that a synchronized detonation of these charges in a process known as “controlled demolition” (“CD”) would allegedly cause each of the Twin Towers to be reduced to fine dust (including even office furniture, as well as its entire vertical steel bars).

This particular theory, in turn, is being subdivided into several independent theories which differ mostly only due to different fantasies of so-called “engineers” and other speculators who advocate them. Some advocates of such a theory even claim that charges of C4 (or whatever other) explosives had been allegedly embedded into the concrete floors and walls of the Towers as long ago as the time of the WTC construction. Obviously, detonators should have also been “embedded” in such a case, otherwise the entire scheme wouldn’t be really workable. The later presumption suggests that during the entire life time of the Twin Towers their gullible tenants were spending something like 8 hours a day (i.e. a good third of their lives) inside the monstrous explosive device that was ready to go off at any moment (and also to do so accidentally).

Without even considering any of such sub-theories separately, I would rather comment on all of them at once: it is self-evident that this particular claim cannot be true. None of the commonly known conventional explosives (and not any conventional explosives whatsoever) would ever be able to reduce the entire 400 meters tall and extremely robust Tower made of thick steel to such fine dust – including even the Tower’s internals (such as office furniture, mechanical equipment, cables, tubes, elevators, computers, decorations, and remaining people).

It should be mentioned also that many people either maliciously or innocently attach too much importance to the fact that all Twin Towers’ “concrete” was completely pulverized. In the same time these folks tend to ignore a much more important phenomenon – that steel was completely pulverized, in addition to the alleged “concrete”.

Shifting the stress from the pulverization of steel to the “pulverization of concrete” allows governmental shills, who hijacked the 9/11 Truth movement, to easily promote their “conventional controlled demolition” theories, thus, shifting away attention of their flock from the dangerous truth about the nuclear demolition of the WTC discussed in this book.

In fact, judging from the merely psychological point of view, it is easy to understand why so many simpletons believe the WTC was “imploded” by conventional means, based on the alleged fact that “all concrete was pulverized” in the absence of any mentioning of pulverized steel. It indeed looked like a normal, conventional “controlled demolition” judging from this point of view. However, a serious 9/11 researcher should not be duped by this particular approach.

The problem is that the Twin Towers did not have much concrete in their constructions. Yes, the volume of concrete used, in accordance with an official WTC documentation, was indeed huge and everyone could verify these digits. However, one has to understand that this concrete was mostly used not in the upper parts of the Twins, but almost exclusively on the creation of their basement infrastructure, its foundations and also the so-called “bathtub”.

The volume of concrete used in the actual Twin Towers bodies was unbelievably little – it was only used in very thin floor slabs and nowhere else. Thus, the corresponding share of concrete in the WTC dust was negligible compared with the share of steel each Tower actually consisted of.

From now on, I hope, everyone understands that when he hears about an exaggerated importance of the “WTC pulverized concrete” he is being cheated by government appointed shills (whose primary intention is to create an impression that the WTC Twin Towers were allegedly a kind of an ordinary construction that could logically have been demolished by a conventional “implosion” commonly used in a civil demolition industry).

Let us look carefully at the actual design and at the supposed possibility to use commonly known controlled demolition methods in regard to the Twin Towers. First of all, let us look back at the controlled demolition history.

Despite the common misconception, there have been no steel-framed skyscrapers ever demolished by an implosion anywhere in the world, at least up to this day (this being said in August 2013). Primarily, because most of those skyscrapers are new buildings and their time to be demolished has not come yet. The tallest building ever demolished by an implosion was only 47-stories high. It was the Singer Building in New York City that was built in 1908 and demolished in 1968 due to its being obsolete. This building was a much weaker structure compared to the incredibly strong hollow-tube type steel-frame skyscrapers being built today.

In bygone days when buildings were brick-walled and concrete-paneled, their bearing structures used to be concrete supporting columns and concrete supporting girders. Sometimes these concrete bearing structures were reinforced by insertions of metal bars, but sometimes they were plain concrete. In either case it was possible to calculate the right amount of conventional explosives to be attached to these bearing structures at the right spots (or to be placed into holes drilled in bearing structures) in order to break them all at once and so to cause the building to collapse into its footprint – which is the main goal of any controlled demolition.

However, it is no longer possible to use this approach with modern steel-framed buildings – such as, for example, the former Twin Towers of the World Trade Center, World Trade Center building # 7, or the Sears Tower in Chicago. The point is that there wasn't any "bearing structure", in its former sense, used in the WTC Twin Towers – the entire Tower was essentially a "bearing structure".

The Twin Towers' steel-frame consisted of exceptionally thick double-walled steel perimeter and core columns. You have already seen them; as you remember, we have already discussed their steel structures in the chapter of this book devoted to the supposed armor-piercing capabilities of the aluminum planes. However, I feel it is important to repeat it once more. Here are a couple of the WTC core columns:

The thickness of the perimeter column shown on the photo above can be easily estimated by scaling it against the workers’ palms. The thickness of the core columns shown on the previous photo could be easily estimated as well. In fact, their thickness is equal to that of the perimeter columns.

These steel columns were incredibly thick – each wall measuring 2.5 inch (6.35 cm), so the entire thickness of either of the columns was 5 inch (12.7 cm). (Here I am talking about the thickness of the columns at the particular height of the supposed “planes” impacts; below that point they were even thicker and their thickness increased towards the lower floors of the Twin Towers.)

The above is one more picture (from the NIST report) showing the Twin Towers perimeter columns during their construction. You can perceive from it, by the way, that there were no reasons for huge volumes of concrete to be used, as mistakenly believed by many. The concrete was used only in thin floor slabs and nowhere else in the Twin Tower's bodies. Here is a sketch of the steel bearing structure of the WTC Twin Tower; it shows how densely were positioned those perimeter- and core steel columns:

From the sketch above (it is an official sketch too, from the official NIST report) you can get one more confirmation that there was no concrete used in the Twin Tower's construction, except only in the thin slabs of their floors.

The perimeter structure contained 59 such steel columns per side.

The core structure of the Tower consisted of 47 rectangular steel columns that run from the bedrock to the Towers' tops.

This co-called "tube-frame design" was a totally new approach which allowed open floor plans rather than columns distributed throughout the interior to support building loads as it was traditionally implemented in previous structures. The Twin Towers featured load-bearing perimeter steel columns (square in cross-section) positioned one meter from each other ("one meter from a center of one column to the center of a neighboring column", I mean) on the Towers' façades to form an exceptionally rigid structure, supporting virtually all lateral loads (such as wind loads) and sharing the gravity load with the core columns.

Considering that the Twin Towers' steel frames consisted of double-walled steel columns that were almost twice as thick as the T-34 tank's front amour, it would not be possible to find any solution to break such columns simultaneously in many spots in order to achieve an "implosion" effect – the basic goal of any controlled demolition. No explosives would ever be able to tear through such front armor of a tank (except only a hollow-charge shell which would still not be able to tear a complete piece of such armor, but only to burn some narrow hole through an armor plate).

It was, of course, technically possible to break some of these steel columns in certain spots, using exceptionally huge amounts of hollow-shaped charges attached to each individual column, but even such an incredible solution would not help to achieve the desired "implosion effect". The Towers were simply too high and too rigid – their steel cores would have had to be simultaneously broken in too many spots on every floor, which no one could afford. And even if they could, still, such a solution would not lead to the desired effect – there would not be any guarantee that such a high-raised structure would fall strictly down onto its foot print. It might have scattered its debris as far as a quarter of a mile, considering its mere height.

I think it is clear now that it was impossible to bring the WTC Towers down by any kind of traditional controlled demolition.

Add here that both the WTC Twin Towers and the WTC-7 collapsed at near freefall speeds, due to the fact that the entire structures beneath the heavy undamaged Tower's tops were completely pulverized: these incredibly strong steel structures simply ceased to exist.

Let us look into this peculiar steel pulverization effect more carefully. Let us imagine the unimaginable and presume that the WTC bearing structures shown above were simultaneously broken in many spots by incredibly huge number of hollow-shaped charges of conventional explosives attached to any and every perimeter- and core- column in, let's say, 5 meters intervals along the entire Tower's length (in order to cut the steel bars into equal 5 meters long segments to be conveniently loaded into trucks – as alleged by some 9/11 conspiracy theorists).

First of all, let us calculate how many hollow-shaped charges we would need to implement such a demolition solution. We have 59 perimeter columns on each of the 4 façades – altogether 236 perimeter square columns. Plus, we have 47 core rectangular columns. In total, we need to simultaneously break 283 steel tubes. Do not forget also that each of the 283 tubes has its own perimeter consisting of actually four walls (before I called them "double-walled", but I think maybe I was wrong methodologically, since any square shaped tube has actually four walls rather than two).

Note that each of such walls is thicker than the front-armor of a tank – do not forget this important detail.

We would need 4 hollow-shaped cutting charges in order to cut each of such steel tubes – each charge has to be attached to either side of every steel bar.

In order to cut all 283 columns, at one level only, we would need $283 \times 4 = 1132$ charges.

In order to cut at least 350 meters of each Twin Tower (leaving their remaining upper parts intact – in order to imitate the actual 9/11 style of their collapse) into 5 meters long segments we would need to cut each steel bar at $350/5 = 70$ spots by vertical measurement.

Now we multiply $1132 \times 70 = 79,240$. We would need nothing less than 79,240 charges of conventional explosives per Twin Tower!

Do not forget that in addition, we would also need 79,240 detonators.

And, don't forget, a corresponding wiring system to detonate all of our charges in a synchronized manner.

And a corresponding ability to secretly install such a demolition system that no tenant in the WTC Towers would notice.

Do you seriously believe it is feasible? Some conspiracy theorists seem to believe so...

What do you think about the weight of each of such hollow-shape cutting charges? How many kilograms of TNT or other explosive materials should each charge contain in order to be able to cut the 2.5 inch steel wall considering such wall's width?

Let us again imagine the unimaginable and presume that each of such charges would contain a mere two kilograms of TNT (in reality it should be more than that, I think; it is very unlikely that 2 kg would be sufficient, but for simplicity sake let us presume that only 2 kg per charge is needed). How many kg of TNT we would need to explode in total?

$79.240 \times 2 = 158.480$ kg or almost 160 tons.

Now, at last, try to imagine what kind of deafening sound would be produced from a simultaneous explosion of nearly 160 (!!!) tons of TNT, dynamite, or C4.

Do you think that all those witnesses who "heard explosions" during the WTC collapse indeed heard explosions of 160 tons of TNT detonated simultaneously? Are you serious?

Do you realize how much it is – the 160 tons of TNT? Perhaps, you don't... Well. I will try to engage your imagination. Let us begin with this grenade:

OCO, D/A 50530

Hopefully, all of you know this famous German/Soviet grenade F-1 (that is, perhaps, the longest serving infantry weapon tracing its service history back to the WWI era), or at least have seen this grenade in some movie.

Do you know how much TNT is used in this deadly weapon (that features a killing distance of 200 meters)? Take your guess... Only 60 (s-i-x-t-y) grams of TNT is used in it. You can check this obvious fact in a related Wikipedia article: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/F1_grenade_\(Russia\))

Let us proceed to the second step. Now imagine that TNT has specific gravity 1.65 (approximately equal to that of soap; not exactly, the TNT is a bit heavier, but comparable, nonetheless, at least for the reason of imagination). Thus, a bar of TNT and a bar of soap are similar, judging by their weight and size (and they even look similar, especially if we talk about the old-style laundry soap).

Above left – typical Soviet-type bars of TNT; 200 grams (in man’s right hand) and 400 grams (in man’s left hand). Above right – typical Soviet-type laundry soap, 220 gram pieces.

Now try to imagine, how much soap you could fit into a typical truck. And now imagine how much soap you could fit into a typical railroad car? And now, please, imagine how many railroad cars you would need to fit the total amount of TNT required to demolish only one of the Twin Towers (the 160 tons). Imagined?

And now, please, imagine what kind of sound would be produced by a simultaneous explosion of that amount of TNT carried by our imaginary freight train.

I hope you got the point.

An enormous explosion of over 100 tons of TNT at high altitude would be heard all over New York City. In addition, it would shatter all glass panes in a couple of miles distance around, and knock down everyone around by its enormous air-blast wave which would resemble that of an atmospheric atomic blast.

Oh, we almost forgot about the floors. In order to demolish the Twin Towers by conventional explosives we would need not only to cut each of the multiple vertical steel bars in multiple spots. We would have to cut also each floor slab into some reasonably-sized chunks. Wouldn't we?

Please, make further calculations.

Now let us consider a possible mechanics of the WTC collapse based on our above presumption that the steel bars of the Tower's structure were simultaneously cut in 5 meters long segments by our monstrous demolition scheme that used well over 160 tons of TNT.

Don't you think that all this mess of steel, cut into relatively large chunks, along with remaining floors, cables, lifts, internal walls, stairs and staircases, carpets, office internals, and so on, would considerably delay the Towers' collapse? Don't you think that in such a case the Towers' collapse would not be at freefall speed?

Anyone who watched video footage showing details of the each Towers' collapse should have noticed that there were no alleged 5-meter long chunks of multiple steel bars, neither any chunks of floors in the way of the heavy Towers' tops crushing downwards at near freefall speeds. There was only dust – fine, fluffy microscopic dust. This dust offered to the falling down Towers' tops no more resistance than would air. It was dust of steel, furniture, floors, lifts, cables, carpets, stairs, office internals, and all other inorganic and organic materials, people inclusive.

I think it is pretty self-evident that neither the WTC Twin Towers, nor the WTC-7 was demolished by the “conventional implosions” as alleged by the proponents of this particular conspiracy theory.

It is very clear that all three WTC buildings were PULVERIZED and not “imploded”. And their peculiar pulverization (mainly pulverization of steel rather than of the alleged concrete) occurred momentarily and without any deafening sound of enormous explosions of conventional explosive materials.

Above is an interesting diagram I found somewhere on the Internet. I can't resist placing this nice drawing here, since it clearly demonstrates that the speed of the falling down undamaged Tower's top was exactly the same as if under it was not the former steel structure of the Tower, but merely air alone.

Many people argue that certain squibs beneath the crushing downwards Towers' tops were anticipating their actual collapse and they looked like explosions. These relatively few squibs could be clearly seen in several video clips showing either of the Twin Towers' collapse, such as the two squibs shown on the picture below:

Above – a picture showing two squibs – the one on the right is clearly visible against the clear sky, the one on the front is not so clearly noticeable, but can be seen as well at about the same level.

I guess it is clear to every unbiased person that these squibs could not be counted as the “explosions” intended for the Tower's demolition. Firstly, if these were indeed the “demolition explosions” as claimed, such explosions must have been multiple. Do you agree that two (or even three, and even four, and even seven) of such “explosions” are obviously not enough to do the demolition job? And, in order to achieve the synchronous and symmetric cutting of the steel beams, such explosions must embrace the entire perimeters of the Towers, and not just two casual isolated spots. Do you agree with this logic?

Another thing is that the explosions are usually followed by smoke and certain fires. In this case it would be logical to presume that the smoke of such explosions would be of a different color than the dark-grey color of steel dust in the above snowball-like cloud. However, on the picture above we could clearly see that both squibs eject the very same color of dark-grey matter that could be seen a few floors above – being produced by the Tower's top falling down. I think it is very clear.

It should be mentioned also that the National Institute of Standards and Technology, which conducted a three-year “study” on the WTC collapse, rejected the suggestions that the WTC towers were brought down with explosives. Despite the fact that the NIST report in general is nothing else then the most shameless 9/11 cover-up, in harmony with the infamous Report of the 9/11 Commission, this particular reasoning of the NIST engineering experts was dictated by elementary logic and not by any governmental “kerosene-pancake-collapse” theory.

CTV [CTV, 9/12/2006¹¹⁴] asserts: “Flashes of light that seemed to indicate bombs detonating were not explosions. They were pockets of air being forced out of windows as the sagging floors pushed downward.”

The author of these lines agrees with that observation (later you will understand why).

Hollow-shaped charges of conventional explosives were obviously used in the WTC case – to imitate the impacts of the “terrorist planes” (i.e. to cut some perimeter steel bars in order to blame those holes on the “planes”). However, ordinary explosives could not have been used in bringing the Twin Towers down.

This theory is not plausible – neither in its pure form, nor even in combination with the Conspiracy Theory No. 2, which is below.

Conspiracy theory No.2 (so-called “thermite theory” – which is the next most commonly known theory).

Some people, understandably, can not reconcile themselves with a notion that aviation fuel (namely “kerosene”) might allegedly combust with such a high temperature that is enough to melt or to weaken the WTC core columns made of extremely thick steel – as the officially approved version of 9/11 events claims. Seeking the truth, such people have arrived at the conclusion that certain incendiary materials (such as the pyrotechnic composition known as “thermite¹¹⁵”) had been allegedly used by the 9/11 perpetrators to melt core structures of the WTC Towers. They support their claims primarily by this: somewhere at “Ground Zero” there had been several molten pieces of steel found and this apparently could not have been caused by the burning of fuel of any kind. Besides, some of proponents of this theory claimed that shortly before the collapse of one of the Towers, some sparkling fires were noticed followed by what appears to be a stream of molten metal, such as the one shown in the picture below:

Above – sparkling fire noticed at a single spot around the “impact area” shortly before collapse of one of the Towers.

This argument is weak – even if to imagine that on the above picture an instance of thermite reaction is indeed shown (as claimed). The problem is that if we imagine that someone demolished the Twin Towers with thermite, then one single isolated spot to burn thermite is obviously not enough. The supposed thermite charges must have been attached to e-v-e-r-y perimeter column (as well as to e-v-e-r-y core column), and not at one spot, but at many spots – at equal intervals – in order to cut every column into many pieces. However, this is not what we actually see in the above picture. One might try to imagine how it might look – if those conspirators have attached numerous thermite charges to each of those steel-bars – located not only at the Tower's middles, but also around their dense outer perimeters only one meter apart from each other. The entire Tower from top to bottom would have been transformed in such sparkling fire at once – and this would have looked very different compared to the isolated sparkling fire shown on the above picture.

Considering that such thermite charges would have had to have been positioned not just on one level only, but, let's say, in 1 meters interval vertically – you are welcome to make your own calculations as to the number of thermite charges required – similar to the calculations in regard to explosive charges above...

Now try to imagine how the targeted Twin Tower would look if all of those supposed thermite charges were simultaneously ignited. It would look something like an area of sparkling fire shown in the above picture, but in this case the ENTIRE TWIN TOWER, on EVERY OF ITS FOUR FACADES, FROM TOP TO FOOTPRINT would be embraced in such sparkling. A thermite reaction, if somebody doesn't know, produces extremely intense, blinding sparkly flames – similar to that of electric welding (because thermite is the very material used in electric welding). You can't simply look with your naked eyes into such a thing; you must wear a protective mask with dark glasses.

Did you see the entire WTC Tower sparkling from bottom to top at the entire area of each of its four 64 meters wide x 415 meters tall façades prior to its instant pulverization and collapse? The answer is "no". Yes, indeed there were a couple of some unusual sparkling fires somewhere in the Twin Towers prior to their collapse; these were clearly visible on some footage (like the one shown in the picture above). However, you have to understand that these were small and isolated sparkling fires and their supposed "importance" can not be exaggerated to such an extent as to claim that the entire Towers were allegedly "stuffed with thermite". It is simply ridiculous.

It was not technically possible to stuff the Twin Towers with thermite due to the very same considerations discussed in debunking the conspiracy theory No.1 above.

Besides, the actual Towers' views before their collapse did not reveal any enormous blinding sparkling torches that supposed to engulf the entire Towers' bodies from top to bottom and to be visible even from the most distant outskirts of New York City.

Moreover, even if this particular conspiracy theory struggles to somehow explain those molten pieces of steel found at "Ground Zero", it would never be able to explain the very fine dust to which 80% of the entire Tower's structure was reduced to – i.e. the very core structures made of thick steel the proponents of the "thermite theory" are talking about. If thermite is capable of melting steel, would it really mean that thermite would be also capable of reducing this steel to fluffy microscopic dust? Such a claim is not serious.

The initial "thermite theory" was born apparently out of desperation – simply because the truth-seekers could not find any other reasonable explanation to the "unexplainable" Twin Towers' collapse and also to "unexplainable" high temperatures found at "Ground Zero" several weeks later (which were intense enough to melt boots of firefighters who worked there for only a few hours). I hope it is self-evident that any potential thermite reaction would never be able to sustain any high temperatures for a few weeks – it would cool down in half-an-hour at the worst case.

Some proponents of the "thermite theory" also claimed that it must have been thermite which cut some steel columns found at "ground zero" precisely evenly – as it was shown on some pictures.

It is not true, apparently – some "precise cuts" of the said steel columns were caused by conventional explosives – i.e. by the very hollow-shaped charges used to create the supposed "impact" holes for the "terrorist planes". Such precisely cut ends of the steel columns (at least those on the perimeters) could be clearly seen at that picture which shows the detailed "impact spot" in the façade of the North Tower, where you could also see poor Mrs. Edna Cintron, desperately leaning on one of such "precisely cut" columns before the North Tower's collapse. It is clear that those cuts were caused to steel columns well before the collapse and could not be blamed on “thermite” which might have been used later to bring the Twin Towers down.

Alternatively, these columns might have been cut later by the ground zero responders who were tasked with removing the rubble and loading the columns onto the trucks. You can see such process at the picture below:

Above – a worker at ground zero cuts one of the remaining steel columns in order to facilitate its removal.

Unfortunately, the Theory No. 2 itself is not sustainable at all. It is not plausible even if someone would try to use it in combination with the abovementioned Theory No.1.

There is also a sub-variety of this incendiary theory – which claims that the evil U.S. Government allegedly “napalmed” the World Trade Center, but I think we do not need to bother to disprove it, because it is too bizarre to be even remotely plausible.

Conspiracy theory No.3 (the most infamous proponent – Prof. Steven E. Jones): the so-called “nano-thermite” theory. This theory is probably the most dangerous lie – not because it sounds plausible to any extent; it is actually more stupid and more ridiculous than either of the two theories discussed above. It is dangerous because nowadays it is being favored by the absolute majority of main-stream 9/11 “truthers” tricked into believing this nonsense by their shifty FBI-appointed leaders.

This is a relatively new theory. It surfaced not later than in 2007, but most probably in 2008. It was based on a “fact” that “some traces” of so-called “nano-thermite” were allegedly “found” in the WTC dust.

Suspiciously enough, these alleged “traces” were not found back in 2002, not even in 2003 when it would be logical to expect them to be found in the WTC dust. They were “found” only around 2007-2008. Which says a lot about this theory and its main proponent’s credibility.. The “discovery” of the so-called “nano-thermite” traces suspiciously coincided with the first attempt by the humble author of these lines to publish his book on the WTC nuclear demolition.

According to this “nano-thermite” theory, the evil U.S. Government allegedly “sprayed” (or “painted”) the entire steel columns of the WTC Towers with the so-called “nano-thermite” (perhaps, at the time of their construction) and this alleged coating was allegedly the very factor that destroyed the steel bearing structures of the Twin Towers.

However, this theory does not provide any plausible physical (or chemical) explanation in regard to how this so-called “nano-thermite” actually works. Supporters of this theory can’t even audibly explain what the so-called “nano-thermite” actually is – whether it is a kind of incendiary (like commonly known thermite or napalm), or it is a kind of explosive (like dynamite, TNT, RDX, or C4).

Nonetheless, despite this theory being incoherent, incomprehensible, unfeasible from the logical point of view, and, moreover, born in highly suspicious circumstances, it managed to win a lot of popularity among so-called “main-stream 9/11 truthers” led by Prof. Jones. It so happened that the “9/11 Truth” society almost unanimously supported this most bizarre notion and even attempted to prepare some legal charges based on this so-called “nano-thermite” theory against the U.S. Government.

Leaving aside our prediction what would happen in the court-room when this straw-man argument would be legally submitted to the court of law, we will try to disprove on our own this most ridiculous notion, which, nonetheless, stands in our way to the ultimate 9/11 truth.

Could it be true that so-called “nano-thermite” was indeed responsible for the WTC demolition as claimed by Prof. Steven E. Jones and his flock? There are primary points and secondary points which will help us to debunk this dangerous nonsense.

The primary points are these:

If the so-called “nano-thermite” exists not only in sick imaginations of 9/11 “truthers”, but also in reality, then, logically, it should belong to either of the two groups:

- a) explosives;
- b) incendiaries.

If the so-called “nano-thermite” indeed exists in reality and it is “explosive”, then the WTC Twin Towers could not have been demolished by the so-called “nano-thermite” due to considerations discussed during debunking of the abovementioned conspiracy theory No.1.

If the so-called “nano-thermite” indeed exists in reality and it is an “incendiary”, then the WTC Twin Towers could not have been demolished by the so-called “nano-thermite” due to considerations discussed during debunking of the abovementioned conspiracy theory No.2.

The secondary points are these:

Prof. Steven E. Jones, who is the author of this notion, is also a proponent of another infamous notion – that empty aluminum projectiles could allegedly penetrate thick steel targets. Unlikely it would be reasonable to believe a person who claims that hitherto unknown mysterious substance could allegedly “melt” steel into fluffy microscopic dust, considering that this very same person also claims that steel was allegedly susceptible to being cut using “aluminum cutting tools”. Do you agree with this logic?

If you add here that Prof. Jones is actually a physicist, it aggravates the whole thing. If he were a former priest or a former senator, it, perhaps, would be forgivable. But unlikely it could be forgivable to the physicist. In addition, it shall be taken into a serious consideration that being a nuclear scientist, Prof. Jones must have known what “ground zero” really meant in the then specific nuclear jargon. It did not mean “a place where a steel building has been melted by the so-called “nano-thermite” into fluffy microscopic dust”. It meant “a place of a nuclear or thermonuclear explosion”. And it is highly unlikely that a person holding a Doctorate in nuclear physics might not notice this more than transparent hint.

I believe that from now on the reader of this book would not bother trying to adjust reality to the bogus claims of the so-called “nano-thermite” theory, and realize, at least, that this senseless theory is intended only to dupe him and lead him away from the truth.

More technical details regarding my arguments with Prof. Jones’s flock you can see in a separate Chapter of this book named “Debunking the debunkers. Interesting argument – famous physicist Jan Zeman vs infamous impostor Dimitri Khalezov”.

Conspiracy theory No.4 (proponents – U.S. and foreign officials, 9/11 Commissioners, NIST Commissioners, FEMA Commissioners): the infamous kerosene-pancake-collapse theory (or as a variety “kerosene-progressive collapse” theory), also known as the “OCT” or the “Official Conspiracy Theory”.

The official conspiracy theory, as you could probably understand, is the least plausible, because those “patricians” who promote it for consumption of gullible plebeians, themselves do not believe it either. However, quite a few naïve people still believe even this theory.

The official conspiracy theory claims that burning kerosene from the supposed aluminum “planes”, along with fires caused by further burning of various office materials, allegedly weakened structural steel of the WTC Twin Towers and this caused the so-called “pancake collapse” (another, more recent version: the so-called “progressive” collapse) of both buildings.

Since some few gullible people still believe this ridiculous notion, I am obliged to devote a few lines to disproving this particular theory as well. The easiest way to disprove it, perhaps, is this: the Twin Towers' designers apparently had to take into consideration that one day some fire might occur inside these buildings. Therefore they had to design them with a certain degree of "overprotecting" or "reinsurance" – i.e. you don't even have to doubt that the WTC designers calculated the structural strength of steel frames in case of the worst possible fires – for example, fires, caused by a direct hit by a fully loaded largest commercial aircraft. And by no means could the WTC designers have been mistaken in their calculations (otherwise, you would see them behind bars nowadays; surprisingly, they are at liberty, still).

It would be just stupid of us to presume that the original WTC architects would design a 415 meters tall structure that should have been populated by perhaps 50,000 people, and sincerely hoped (and keep their fingers crossed) that no fires would ever happen inside their brainchild, because in case of bad luck the construction would collapse. Do you agree with this logic?

Besides, it shall be known that any architect should be arrested and tried in a court of law if any construction designed by him would ever collapse and cause some damage (not to say the loss of life). If the WTC Twin Towers indeed collapsed due to kerosene weakening their structural integrity, the original WTC designers, along with those who supplied them steel of presumably inferior quality, should have been behind bars now. This is the way the law functions in any civilized country, the United States inclusive. Did you see any of the WTC architects on trial so far? The answer is "no". This is the first and foremost proof that this theory of the "fires initiated collapse" is not sustainable.

For those who might still doubt my words, here are two pictures of the Windsor Building in Madrid, Spain, which burned like a giant torch for more than 24 hours in February 2005. According to an official description, during the 24 hours-long fire "...flames devoured the 106-meter-high building from the top down..." Still, it did not collapse, because it was a STEEL-FRAMED building. And steel-framed buildings are designed not to collapse, even as a result of the most intense fires burning for 24 hours. What do you think about little fires quietly leaking on several floors in each of the Twin Towers for about an hour only?

You can additionally assure yourself that the governmental kerosene theory can not be true by looking again at how thick the actual steel perimeter was- and the core columns of the Twin Towers.

Besides, do not forget that shortly before the Towers started to collapse there were a few people seen alive at the holes caused by the supposed “planes” and these people did not seem to suffer at all from any alleged high temperatures supposedly “enough to weaken steel”.

And, at last, this theory struggles to explain the cause of the Twin Towers’ collapse, but it fails to explain the most important 9/11 phenomenon: the pulverization of the major parts of the Tower’s bodies, steel inclusive. If burning kerosene and burning office materials could allegedly “weaken” steel it does not mean that they could also [instantaneously] reduce steel to fluffy microscopic dust. Do you agree with it?

Conspiracy theory No.5 (the most infamous proponents – Dr. Judy Wood and Prof. Morgan Reynolds): a laser-beams theory or so-called “directed energy weapons” theory, often abbreviated to “DEW”.

Some more advanced “theorists”, who obviously understand that neither of the above theories is plausible (nor a combination of the first two theories), claim that in such a conspiracy there must have been some sophisticated weapons used. They claim that laser or maser beams could be the only kind of destructive tools capable of reducing to dust the entire Twin Towers’ structures made of steel and concrete.

Proponents of this theory coined a good new word that was obviously missing in pre-9/11 English – the word “dustification”. They used this new word to describe the state of materials applicable to the Twin Towers shortly before they began to disintegrate into fluffy microscopic dust. If to call the actual process of their turning into dust by the word “pulverization”, there would be no word in the English vocabulary suitable to describe the physical process of them being no longer rigid structures, but piles of dust still sticking together for a little while. These folks proposed the neologism “dustified” for that and it seems that this word is indeed useful – I will also use it in my further explanations in regard to the Towers’ collapse.

This particular conspiracy theory is not as desperate as the above two, yet it is about as bizarre. This theory is quite difficult to be comprehended in full, and therefore it could be conveniently used in various speculations. This is not to mention that its chief proponents are rightly suspected to be the FBI’s skills...

In fact, there are quite a lot of innocent people who believe the so-called “DEW” theory and its proponents personally. Unlike other 9/11 conspiracy theorists, Ms. Wood and Mr. Reynolds went as far as to sue some U.S. officials in the court of law (using their bizarre theory as legal grounds for their accusations). Of course, their complaints were dismissed by the court, with prejudice, primarily due to being totally unsubstantiated.

I have to tell you frankly that even a better grounded legal case would be dismissed in such circumstances, because the U.S. Justice is apparently an integral part of the government-sponsored 9/11 cover-up. However, the bizarre ideas of Wood and Reynolds, which they dared to express even in legal papers, indeed greatly lightened the task of the judge for finding a pretext to dismiss the case.

Instead of describing this theory on my own, I would rather use some quotations from the abovementioned court-case (the court order¹¹⁶ mentions three plaintiffs, because in addition to the two abovementioned persons there was another co-plaintiff – a certain Mr. Edward Haas):

“Plaintiffs assert that NIST’s investigation is tainted by fraud and other serious misconduct. They contend that the NCSTAR 1 report constitutes a “fraudulent document,” in that it conceals the true cause for the collapse of the Twin Towers. Plaintiffs maintain that the alleged fraudulent nature of the investigation has furthered the deception, perpetrated upon the masses, that the WTC was demolished as a result of terrorists plowing two commercial airplanes, filled with thousand of gallons of jet fuel, directly into the Twin Towers at a high rate of speed. They claim that, through the employment of psychological operations, millions were deceived into believing that the destruction was caused by a terrorist hijacking that murdered thousands of innocent people inside. Plaintiffs theorize that what actually occurred was that the Twin Towers disintegrated after being struck by the United States military’s secret laser-like weaponry. All three plaintiffs explain that these “directed energy weapons” “are operational in Earth[’s] orbit, at high altitude, low altitude, at sea and on land, ranging in lethality from the capacity to do great damage such as that of destroying the World Trade Center Twin Towers in less than 10 seconds each, as occurred on 9/11/01, down to and including imposition of a disabling stun on human beings for crowd control and/or other psy ops [psychological operations] purposes.”

What other ravings would you need to dismiss the case if you were a judge?

The beginning of this lawsuit sounded quite reasonable – their initial statement claiming that “the NIST’s investigation is tainted by fraud and other serious misconduct. They contend that the NCSTAR 1 report constitutes a “fraudulent document,” in that it conceals the true cause for the collapse of the Twin Towers” is true.

However, it is not really difficult – to disprove such a poor concoction as the 9/11 Commission Report or the NIST report. It is much more difficult to prove to the court that your own claims in regard to the WTC destruction are correct. “Theorizing” is not acceptable in legal proceedings. Some expert opinions could be acceptable; however, not as bizarre as those claimed above about laser-beam-from-the-space based “psy ops” and laser-beams based WTC destructions.

If a real expert in physics appears in the court-room and would firmly state before the judge that an empty aluminum plane is not capable of penetrating those double-walled steel perimeter columns of the WTC with walls as thick as the tank’s front armor, the judge would have no choice than to believe his expert opinion, because what the expert claims is self-evident even for the judge.

If a real aviation specialist appears in the court-room and would firmly state before the judge that a passenger aircraft can not fly at its full cruise speed at an altitude claimed by the NIST’s and the 9/11 Commission’s reports, the judge again would have no choice than to believe such an expert opinion, because it is again self-evident, and, besides, it could be easily verified through questioning some additional aviation experts.

If a real communication expert appears in the court-room and firmly states before the judge that it is not possible to connect a cellular phone to a cellular network in order to make a successful (and, moreover, long-lasting) phone call from a typical cruise altitude of a commercial airliner, the judge again would have no choice than to accept his expert opinion, because it is pretty self-evident – the judge too has his own mobile phone and it is quite clear even for the judge that it is not possible to connect such a mobile phone to a mobile cell at a distance of nearly 5 miles.

In fact, many ridiculous notions established by the NIST and by the 9/11 Commission could be successfully disproved in the court-room by real experts supported by some good lawyers. However, it seems that real experts are not interested in disproving the governmental conspiracy theory, giving floor to plaintiffs akin to those mentioned above. I think it is not really necessary – to be an “evil” and “corrupt” judge – to be able to successfully throw away a case where some lunatics theorize that certain alleged “secret” super-human technology was allegedly used from space to destroy the WTC, and, simultaneously, for “controlling crowds” into believing something...

The biggest problem of those conspiracy theorists who promote this “directed energy weapons” theory is that they have no clue what they are talking about. If a physics expert who undertakes to disprove a claim that it is allegedly possible for an aluminum plane to penetrate thick steel could stage on practice some illustrative experiment (let’s say, making a piece of flying aluminum colliding with steel), the proponents of those “secret” beams-from-the-space could produce nothing at all to substantiate their bizarre notions...

From the merely technical point of view this bizarre theory can be disproved as follows.

Firstly, nobody could explain why such an alleged “laser beam” that was supposedly used to pulverize the Twin Towers was not able to pulverize them completely – why it actually left the Towers’ tops intact? If the claimed laser beams were really from space (i.e. from the above), why then it was not the other way around? It seems that according to this logic the Towers’ tops supposedly would be pulverized first, if their destruction started from top down.

Secondly, this theory even if it struggles to explain the Towers’ pulverizations, completely fails to explain the high temperatures and underground cavities, filled with molten rock at a depth of nearly 100 meters below the earth’s surface. Even to imagine that such a hypothetical “laser” or “maser” could instantly reduce steel into fluffy microscopic dust, does it also mean that the same process must also simultaneously dig enormous deep underground cavities filled with molten rock? Do you see any logic in this?

Besides, it can't be true even from the point of view of the energy consumption. To achieve the alleged functionality (I mean to be capable of the Twin Towers' pulverization), the power of such "beams" must have been so high that probably the entire American Electrical system would never be able to supply that amount of the energy to any alleged giant "laser" or "maser" at a time. Perhaps, only a thermonuclear explosion of over a hundred kiloton in TNT yield could theoretically supply the required amount of the energy to such a hypothetical giant "laser".

But if you go as far as to accept that such a thermonuclear charge of over hundred kiloton could have been used to supply the required energy to the supposed giant "laser", then you are ready to accept that such a nuclear charge could have been used. Then you are only one step away from the actual truth: if you accept that those who destroyed the WTC could use a huge thermonuclear charge for that reason, why don't you accept the obvious? That instead of using such a thermonuclear charge for supplying the required amount of the energy to an enormous hypothetical "laser", they simply used such a thermonuclear charge directly for destroying the WTC? This would be at least logical.

Conspiracy theory No.6: This particular conspiracy theory is the most serious and that is exactly why it shall be addressed in the most carefully manner.

Some people claim that the U.S. Government (or as a variety – Osama bin Laden's so-called "warriors of Islam", or possibly, also Saddam Hussein's secret emissaries) allegedly deployed low-caliber nuclear charges, Special Atomic Demolition Munitions (SADMs), commonly known as "mini-nukes", to demolish the Twin Towers by exploding these kind of devices in their basement floors. Some alleged "witnesses" went as far as even to claim to "hear explosions" on the WTC basement floors. In fact, this conspiracy theory became very popular especially during the last couple of years and even a special term "nukers" was coined to call its proponents.

Strange photograph found on http://www.globalsecurity.org/eye/html/wtc_nyc-091101-2.htm

Above is a very seditious photograph that was originally published on the NASA web site as an "image of the day" and claimed to be a "SPOT satellite image of Manhattan, acquired on September 11 at 11:55 AM EST". It was truly suspicious when this photo was removed the very next day from the official NASA web site and it could be no longer found in the NASA archives despite being the "image of the day" on such an auspicious date as September the 11th.

This image is apparently bogus because the three black spots shown on it have never existed in reality. They could not be found on any other contemporary image – either a satellite- or an aerial. It appears that this "seditious" photo was concocted by NASA on purpose. Someone tried very hard to "imply" that there were three (again not two, but three) alleged small atmospheric nuclear explosions in the WTC area – because only an atmospheric (and not an underground) nuclear explosion could cause such burning areas as those three shown on that image.

It does not matter that the hypocenters of the three implied “mini-nukes explosions” do not match the actual hypocenters of the explosions that brought down the WTC Twin Towers and the building #7 in reality. It does not matter that the bogus image was claimed to be shot at “11.55 AM EST” – i.e. when the third explosion (that destroyed the WTC-7) has not occurred yet. What matters is the very attempt to produce such bogus “evidence”. It is understandable why it was so done: it was not clear yet on September the 11th what would be a public version of the 9/11 “truth”. The most probable option the governmental spin-doctors apparently considered to feed to the gullible public was the “mini-nukes” story. Only a day later it was finally decided to blame the WTC collapses on kerosene, so the “mini-nukes” theory was left for the exclusive consumption of the mid-level politicians and mid-ranking security officials. Thus, the initial “evidence” concocted by NASA became “politically incorrect” and was promptly removed.

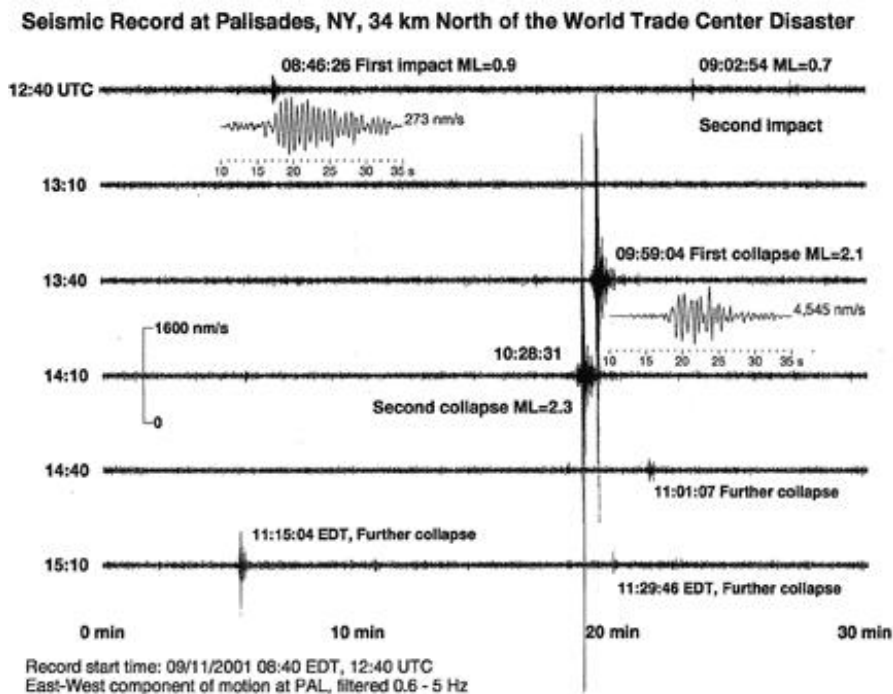

Coming back to the “mini-nukes theory”. This particular theory must be considered especially carefully, because there are all reasonable grounds to believe, that the very U.S. Government in its cumbersome and desperate attempt to conceal truth about the 9/11 attacks, exploits this theory as a “confidential” version of “truth” about 9/11 intended for various “patricians”.

I feel that it is my primary duty – to disprove this particular Theory No. 6 – irrespectively of whether such “mini-nukes” might belong to Osama bin Laden, to Mullah Mohammed Omar, to Saddam Hussein, to Larry Silverstein, to the Mossad, to the Freemasonic Order, or to the U.S. Government itself.

Here it is: even if this particular theory might look to some people very much like resembling the truth, (actually it is quite plausible in comparison with the rest of the bizarre theories above), still, it is very, very far from the actual truth.

Proponents of this particular theory normally use the following arguments to support their claims:

- 6.1. Seismic “evidence”. Fake seismograms “implying” that the WTC was demolished by “mini-nukes”.

One of such seismograms which purports to show the two alleged explosions of “mini-nukes” under the WTC South and North Towers – allegedly “filtered” in diapason 0.6 - 5 Hz.

Widely circulated in the Internet (and admitted by the U.S. Government to be true – one may only guess why the U.S. Government did not deny their authenticity???) two supposed seismograms from seismographs of the Columbia University's Lamont-Doherty Earth Observatory in Palisades, New York, 21 miles north of the WTC (shown above), allegedly recorded some suspicious seismic activity on September 11, 2001. To say precisely – they recorded nothing else than two underground nuclear explosions under the WTC site – at 9:59:04 and at 10:28:31 (those several seconds in time difference between actual beginnings of Twin Towers' collapse and the seismograph's recordings were due to the time required for seismic waves to travel 21 miles from Manhattan to Palisades).

The proponents of the "Conspiracy Theory No.6" (as we called it here) claim that this is allegedly a "proof" that the "mini-nukes" have indeed exploded under the WTC Twins.

I will not say anything first, but only put this preliminary question: are they really sure about "mini-nukes"? Just read further and you will also doubt that it might have been "mini-nukes".

On these seismograms (being widely circulated in the Internet and being freely available until now on the Columbia University website: http://www.ldeo.columbia.edu/LCSN/Eq/20010911_wtc.html) are clearly visible two supposed underground nuclear explosions – at 09:59:04 and at 10:28:31. These two were supposed to be nuclear explosions, without any doubt; they can not be mistaken with anything else – the two spikes are simply too short in time and too big in amplitude, to be mistaken with an earthquake...

Still, it does not mean that these seismograms are necessarily genuine – it could be as well a part of the U.S. Government's covert support for their concoction for the "patricians" and their "leakage" to the wilderness of the Internet might have been intentional. We have to be cynical when we deal with such types of easily available "evidence". Let us consider these seismograms more carefully.

- 6.1.1. What is most doubtful is that the U.S. Government and the FBI, who confiscated all videos of the alleged plane which hit the Pentagon, and who do not want until now (this being said in June 2008) to release passenger-lists of the four allegedly "hijacked" planes, nevertheless, still tolerate the presence of these seditious seismograms on the official web site of the Columbia University.

The mere fact of these seismograms' existence on the official web site, somewhere in the Internet within the U.S. jurisdiction, is the best proof that these seismograms are bogus. They apparently serve some special purpose beneficial to the U.S. Government (at least, covertly) and therefore they must be automatically presumed to be fraudulent.

Besides, the two seismic peaks in these seismograms are also too clear – it seems that someone made them by hand and a ruler – just to make sure that even a lay person would not miss to notice the two nuclear explosions on these pictures.

- 6.1.2. What is particularly doubtful in these seismograms is that the magnitudes of the seismic spikes are unreasonably low. It seems that "someone" had really tried his best to "prove" to us that it was "mini-nukes" and not anything stronger than that.

Moreover, magnitudes of these two spikes – 2.1 and 2.3 on the Richter scale respectively – also attract some doubts. The two nuclear charges which demolished the two Towers were supposed to be of the same caliber. It is because nuclear weapons (especially high-tech "mini-nukes" – which could only be produced by developed countries) are very precisely wrought devices, so both nuclear explosions were supposed to go off at the exact same yield.

Since both alleged nuclear explosions supposedly happened at the same location – with similar ground structure and similar distance to the seismic station – both of them should have caused seismic spikes with equal magnitudes. However, there could be a following effect: both nuclear explosions (presumed to happen underground) were supposed to create underground cavities – which are typical for any and every underground nuclear explosion. Since the positions of the two nuclear charges might have been close to each other, their respective cavities might in theory overlap each other (at least, in a rude approximation – if we disregard any precise mathematic calculations). In this case the energy of the second underground explosion communicated to the earth would be lower than that of the first one, because it would be partly decoupled by the adjacent (and probably overlapped) cavity left by the first explosion.

Strangely, in this particular seismogram it is vice-versa – the first spike is only 2.1 and the second one – is 2.3... This alone is not a proof, of course, it is only a suspicion, and in this particular sense I could be mistaken, but I am sure that I am not. Anyhow, these seismograms are false and it will be proven below by some other logical considerations.

- 6.1.3. Besides the abovementioned seismogram, the same webpage of the Columbia University site¹¹⁷ published the following table which purports to represent the 9/11 seismic events:

However, before analyzing the below seismic table, please, try to remember that:

- 1) aluminum projectiles can not penetrate steel targets even in theory;
- 2) suicidal hijackers can not survive their suicidal missions;
- 3) real planes' impacts can not cause black frames right in the middle of the impact scenes recorded by various video-recording equipment;
- 4) cellular phones can not function at the cruise altitudes of commercial airliners;
- 5) commercial aircraft can not fly at their full cruise speeds at altitudes of only 350 meters above the ground;
- 6) typical Saudi-Arabian passports are made from some pretty common paper and cardboard and they can not survive infernos caused by the impacts of fully loaded aircraft (in order to be later found somewhere below the spots of the supposed impacts).

Just remember that there were no physical planes that really hit the Twin Towers on 9/11. Thus, anything that deals with alleged effects of the alleged "planes" impacts must be presumed to be bogus by default.

Now, at last, you can look at the below table:

Here is a summary of seismic observations of the two impacts and the three collapses:

Date	Origin Time (UTC)	Magnitude (Richter scale)	Time (EDT)	Dominant Period	Signal Duration	Remark
09/11/2001	12:46:26±1	0.9	08:46:26	0.8 sec	12 seconds	first impact
09/11/2001	13:02:54±2	0.7	09:02:54	0.6 sec	6 seconds	second impact
09/11/2001	13:59:04±1	2.1	09:59:04	0.8 sec	10 seconds	first collapse
09/11/2001	14:28:31±1	2.3	10:28:31	0.9 sec	8 seconds	second collapse
09/11/2001	21:20:33±2	0.6	17:20:33	0.7 sec	18 seconds	Building 7 collapse

Location of the World Trade Center is 40.71°N and 74.01°W.

Do you see any cheating? If not, I will point it out to you. It will be proven below successfully, but just for the simplicity's sake, please take it now as if it is already a proven fact: the WTC-7 was also demolished by an underground nuclear explosion – exactly in the same manner as the WTC-1 and WTC-2. OK?

We see that those "seismic specialists" at service of the 9/11 cheaters wanted to prove to us that an underground explosion under the WTC-7 which actually caused its collapse was supposedly only a 0.6 magnitude seismic event, while the impacts of the "planes" as high as several hundred meters above the ground were respectively 0.9 and 0.7 magnitude seismic events? And they want us to believe them?

Here is the second very well known fact: when in 1993 some guys detonated alleged "over half ton of explosives" in the basement floor of the WTC (in fact it was a mini-nuclear explosion of about 0.1 kiloton, but this is the "patrician" truth and we will consider it in detail in a separate chapter) it was not detected by any seismic station – either in the Columbia University, or anywhere else.

Why it so happened? Because those folks who work in the Columbia University would "detect" only those things the U.S. Government and the FBI approve. The alleged "conventional explosion" of 1993 was supposedly "not detected" [for the plebeians] simply because specialists who worked in that seismic laboratory understood very well that a mere "half ton of TNT" exploded underground was still too little to communicate to our planet Earth enough energy to cause any noticeable seismic signal.

¹¹⁷ http://www.ldeo.columbia.edu/LCSN/Eq/20010911_wtc.html

Of course, even a conventional explosion of half-ton of TNT would still communicate some little energy to the Earth, but it would not be possible to notice such a minor seismic event against a general seismic background – which represents a kind of permanent “noise” of a certain magnitude. That is why, despite the fact that a real mini-nuclear explosion in 1993 was definitely detected (it supposed to cause a seismic signal of at least 2.5 or even higher on the Richter scale), it could not have been reported to the plebeians, for whom it was claimed to be a “conventional” explosion of a “half-ton”, undetectable by the seismic means.

What could we conclude analyzing this piece of information? First, we could be sure that those seismic “specialists” from the Columbia University are not as “independent” as they may appear. They would lie to us if the FBI orders them to do so. Thus, we have to be rather careful when dealing with these liars.

Secondly, we could guess that a half-ton of TNT exploded underground in the location of the WTC Twin Towers would be such a minor seismic event, that it would not be technically possible to detect it (and this postulate was successfully proven by the very specialists of the same seismic laboratory who refused to detect for the plebeian consumption the alleged “half-ton of TNT” explosion in 1993). How come then, that the two “planes’ impacts”, which happened above the ground had been detected by this seismic station? And moreover, not only “detected”, but detected with certain magnitudes comparable even to those of real “mini-nukes” explosions underground?

One does not have even to doubt that he is being cheated by these “seismograms”. Those rogue guys from the Columbia University who published such a concoction, were acting under the FBI’s instruction – which wanted to produce some plausible “evidence” that it was indeed terrorist “mini-nukes” (in the case of the WTC-1 and the WTC-2) and nothing explosive at all in the case of the WTC-7.

These suspicious seismograms were just a necessary part of the “patrician” version of the 9/11 “truth” and nothing more than that. In addition to this, the cheaters went as far as to trying to prove to us that there were some “planes’ impacts”, thus implying not only that aluminum projectiles could penetrate steel, but also that such processes could allegedly cause noticeable seismic signals... Just to conclude: these seismograms might be for the gullible “patricians”, or even for the most discerning “plebeians”, but they are definitely not for the “barbarians” like us and we shall not be duped by them¹¹⁸.

- 6.1.4. The magnitudes of the two alleged nuclear explosions shown by these seismograms. What do you think: which kinds of devices those magnitudes of 2.1 and 2.3 are supposed to belong to? I will quote here something verifiable – found after a long search on the U.S. Government’s website¹¹⁹. I am quoting:

“...A 1-kiloton nuclear explosion creates a seismic signal of 4.0. There are about 7,500 seismic events worldwide each year with magnitudes >4.0. At this magnitude, all such events in continental regions could be detected and identified with current or planned networks. If, however, a country were able to decouple successfully a 1-kiloton explosion in a large underground cavity, the muffled seismic signal generated by the explosion might be equivalent to 0.015 kilotons and have a seismic magnitude of 2.5. Although a detection threshold of 2.5 could be achieved, there are over 100,000 events worldwide each year with magnitudes >2.5. Even if event discrimination were 99% successful, many events would still not be identified by seismic means alone. Furthermore, at this level, one must distinguish possible nuclear tests not only from earthquakes but also from chemical explosions used for legitimate industrial purposes...”

Statement by Dr. Peter Leitner, Author: "Decontrolling Strategic Technology, 1990-1992," before the Joint Economic Committee United States Congress Tuesday, April 28, 1998. "Technology Decontrols: Striking at the Heart of U.S. National Security".

As everybody could see, the U.S. Government was actually obsessed with the “mini-nukes” which might be used against it as long ago as in 1998 – otherwise, the U.S. Congress wouldn’t even hold such a specific hearing. It should be noted in this regard, that the U.S. Embassies in Kenya and Tanzania¹²⁰ had not been bombed yet at that moment, and the 1983 nuclear bombing of the American marines in Beirut¹²¹ had been forgotten as 15 years had passed. However, at least three major terror actions were perpetrated recently where at least three “mini-nukes” have been used against the United States. One – in the first WTC bombing in 1993, one – in the 1995 Oklahoma bombing, and one – in the case of 1996 “Khobar Towers bombing” of the U.S. troops in Saudi Arabia.

¹¹⁹ <http://www.house.gov/jec/hearings/dualuse/leitner.htm>

Anyway, we are not interested right now in the actual development of that “mini-nuclear” intrigue (it will be discussed in detail later in this book). Now we are interested only in digits that could be derived from the above quotation: a fully contained underground nuclear explosion of one kiloton in TNT yield would create a seismic signal with magnitude of 4.0 – as claimed by the U.S. Government’s own specialist. While a fully contained underground nuclear explosion of 0.015 kiloton, as well as a properly decoupled (for cheating reasons) underground explosion of 1 kiloton would both create a seismic signal of about 2.5.

Since the supposed explosions of the “terrorist mini-nukes” in the lowest underground floors of the WTC Twin Towers would never be real underground nuclear explosions, they would communicate to the Earth much lesser amounts of the energy in comparison with the respective explosions of the same yield which are truly underground ones. I guess it is clear. If you simply bring a “mini-nuke” into a basement of the WTC (let’s say, into its lowest underground parking floor) and detonate it there, its energy, which would supposedly cause the seismic signal, would be largely disseminated in the basement. By no means such an explosion could be considered being truly “underground”. It would be a normal atmospheric nuclear explosion and it would be quite complicated to measure its exact yield based on the seismic data alone – which was designed to measure exactly only real deep underground explosions and not the explosions in spacious underground parking lots. In the latter’s case such a measurement would only be guessing.

Let us try to guess now – what those cheaters from the Columbia University attempted to tell us (if we were the gullible “patricians” or the “discerning plebeians”, I mean) by their “seismograms”?

Here is just one of the basic premises. It is believed that if some country possesses a ready underground cavity of 100 meters in diameter (such as the one left by a former underground explosion of ~150 kiloton), and if this country would detonate inside such a ready cavity a new nuclear charge of 1 kiloton (in order to secretly avoid the nuclear testing ban), such a secret explosion would not be detected at all by controlling services of other counties. It is because its seismic signal would be almost completely muffled by the existing cavity.

The above was just an example that one who is guessing could base his calculations upon, because it would be really difficult to guess if you do not have any basic data at all.

Again, what did those cheaters, who drew those seismograms with perfectly clear spikes of 2.1 and 2.3 in magnitudes, want to say to the “patricians”? In my opinion, they wanted to say the following: “terrorists” detonated two “mini-nukes” of 1 kiloton in TNT yield in the basements of the WTC, but their seismic signals were decoupled by empty spaces of the basements. Thus, it shows slightly above 2.1, instead of the 4 – expected in case of a “normal” deep underground explosion of one kiloton. The “patricians” are supposed to agree with such “logic” and to believe that these two suspiciously perfect spikes of nuclear explosions were indeed caused by the “mini-nukes” that demolished the WTC-1 and the WTC-2. While the WTC-7 was demolished without any “nuclear” spike at all – it simply “fell by itself”. And the “patricians” have apparently believed such a confidential “truth”.

- 6.1.5. I quote here again the phrase taken from the abovementioned Statement by Dr. Peter Leitner: “...Although a detection threshold of 2.5 could be achieved...” Does anyone understand what it means? It means that magnitude 2.5 is such a low magnitude that a specific seismic signal of 2.5 could be barely recognized at all against the noisy seismic background which has about the same peak magnitude. Even though he admits that it is still possible to distinguish a nuclear spike of 2.5, this would be an extremely difficult task to achieve.

Note: it was about 2.5. And what do you think about 2.3 and 2.1? Could their detection threshold be so successfully achieved as shown in the abovementioned seismograms? Where the two supposed “nuclear spikes” are so distinct against the completely absent background seismic noise which itself supposed to reach from time to time 2.5 in its maximum? Is your intelligence insulted yet?

¹²¹ This particular nuclear bombing is described in detail in the “Prologue” chapter of this book.

However, even this is not all. Not only have the 2.3 and 2.1 seismic spikes been successfully “detected” by those perspicacious guys from the Columbia University. They managed to successfully “detect” the alleged seismic signals of the “planes” impacts and even the “conventional” WTC-7 collapse, which, according to their ravings, has produced a seismic signal as low as only 0.6 (look carefully at the above table and the above seismograms for the confirmation).

Moreover, it shall be known that it is normal to filter seismic signals for a reason of distinguishing suspected nuclear explosions from ordinary earthquakes at 0.6 Hz alone. Sometimes they also filter the seismic data at 1.25 Hz alone. But look at that bogus seismogram picture above – they claim on it that the seismic signals were filtered in diapason raging from 0.6 till 5 Hz... And still those alleged “spikes” of such an unbelievably low magnitudes are distinct against absolutely noiseless background...

I will quote here again something important from the abovementioned Statement by Dr. Peter Leitner: “....There are about 7,500 seismic events worldwide each year with magnitudes >4.0... ..there are over 100,000 events worldwide each year with magnitudes >2.5...”

Now just try to imagine how many seismic events happens each year with magnitude >2, how many – with magnitude >1, and how many – with magnitude >0.5. Imagined? Now try to divide that imaginary number by 365 – to see how many of them happen every day. Now again – divide the resulting digit by 24 – to see how many of them happen every hour. And now – please, look at that “seismogram” again and take notice that it allegedly embraces a period of time of roughly 3 hours. Did you see any trace of those supposed extraneous seismic events? I guess everybody understands, that those rogue guys from the Columbia University simply laugh at us by using our supposed ignorance...

The above is a seismogram of the May 21, 1992, Lop Nor (Chinese nuclear testing ground) underground nuclear explosion believed to be in between 700 and 1800 kiloton in TNT yield. This seismogram was obviously filtered in much narrower frequency diapason since it is professional. It is just for comparison.

These are another two seismograms: the above – of a typical earthquake, below – of a typical nuclear test. This is how a real seismogram is supposed to look like. Try to compare it with that of the Columbia University.

I hope it is clear enough that these notorious “seismograms” concocted by the Columbia University were primarily intended to cheat some people (apparently, not the “plebeians”, but the “patricians”) to the effect that some “mini-nukes” have been allegedly used by those brutal “Muslim terrorists” to demolish the Twin Towers. But we have successfully proved it here that those “seismograms” themselves are cheating stuff.

Thus, anything what they purported to represent should be logically presumed to be cheating also: it was not “mini-nukes” that demolished the Twin Towers and the WTC-7, it was something different...

Later, in the Chapter devoted to the actual nuclear demolition of the Twin Towers, it will be proven that the people from Columbia University cheated us, again, and the real seismic events before the Towers began to collapse were well over 5.5 on the Richter Scale; but for now the abovementioned is sufficient.

- 6.2. Another argument of the proponents of the above theory is that the supposed Electromagnetic Pulse (EMP) of those alleged mini-nuclear explosions, in the basement floors of the WTC, was so “powerful” that it even caused passenger cars parked along some streets adjacent to the spot to explode with their doors burst open and to cause such cars to be partly burned down.

There were even some “eye-witnesses” hired to testify to this effect. The most peculiar thing was that several half-burned (for some truly unknown reason) cars have been indeed found on adjacent streets and have been photographed accordingly. This led to reasonable suspicions that this was nothing else than a special trick intended to “adjust” evidence to this particular claim.

It was especially suspicious, because such “half-burned” cars have been indeed nicely and exactly “half”-burned – such as shown on the left picture below. It is pretty obvious that these cars were not “half-burned” by any “mini-nukes”, but were subjected to blow-lamps and hammers of the FBI agents who were deployed around ground zero with a task to inflict the typical “atomic” damage. This “half-burned” car is no more “genuine” than the above “seismograms”...

Peculiar nicely “half-burned” police car in the immediate vicinity of the WTC.

Another police car – in even closer proximity to the WTC – which managed not to be “half-burned”.

We will review a few more pictures of the artificially half-burned cars later, but now let us try to look at the naturally half-burned car for comparison:

The most seditious picture of 2002 Bali Bombing. A naturally “half-burned” green car – the genuine forensic signature of an atmospheric nuclear explosion.

Here is a “naturally” half-burned car after a real “mini-nuclear” explosion – known as “2002 Bali Bombing”. It is just for comparison – compare it with that so nicely and so precisely “half-burned” police car above...

Please, note that this well-known effect of “half-burning” of cars during an atmospheric nuclear explosion in the open actually occurs not because of EMP. It occurs because of extreme heat caused by radiation from fireballs of the nuclear explosion in visible spectrum (which has the very same nature as normal light as received from our Sun, but much more intense).

Note also that the green car in the case of 2002 Bali bombing was not burned by ordinary flames, because its “shady” parts peculiarly managed to retain their green painting, which won’t happen in case of common fires. Those parts of the car which faced the nuclear fireballs were shortly subjected to intense irradiated heat, but not to actual flames.

You can also imagine what kind of burns such thermal radiation would cause to people’s skin: people who happen to be there would be also “half-burned” – the burns covering about 45% of their bodies.

Someone might wonder (we are talking about the photo of the Bali bombing) – why did the farther vehicle lose its painting completely even on its “shady” parts?

It is because its position was sufficiently closer to the hypocenter of the nuclear explosion and so it occurred within a zone of higher temperatures. The green car was apparently more “lucky” – its position was farther from ground zero¹²². The “micro-nuke” in the Bali case was indeed “micro” – its explosive yield was between 0.01 and 0.015 kiloton only – in this case every meter counts when it comes to the radiuses of its destruction zones; thus, the position of the farther car on that photo indeed makes the difference.

The consequences of the 2002 Bali bombing as shown in this “seditious” picture clearly testify that it was an “open” nuclear explosion, while it was not the case in the World Trade Center.

People in the case of the 2002 Bali bombing received heavy burns – very typical for an atmospheric nuclear explosion – i.e. burns covering exactly 45% of their bodies, plus heavy radiation injuries. Many of them died in the next couple of days, and almost all the rest – died in about 30 days time (30th-31st day is a standard “dead-line” – to die from moderate forms of radiation sickness). Moreover, all these people who wandered around this area of the recent nuclear explosion, had a good chance to die from radiation sickness too – because they apparently inhaled deadly microscopic radioactive dust – abundant in the shown zone.

Now, at last, you could imagine an approximate direction of propagation of thermal radiation in the case of that green car in the event of the 2002 Bali bombing. To figure out this direction is relatively easy by looking at the remaining green parts of the car and imagining that these parts were in a “shady” side regarding the actual nuclear fireballs. The actual “shade” that saved some green painting could have been provided by two factors:

- 1) by actual position of the green car towards the fireballs of nuclear explosion;
- 2) by some extraneous subjects partly shielding the car from thermal radiation emanating from the nuclear fireballs, such as some buildings in between, other cars, trees, etc.

Now, please, try to determine a potential direction of propagation of thermal radiation in the case of that nicely “half-burned” police car supposedly found in the WTC “Ground Zero”, as shown in the first picture.

It is not possible to figure out such a direction, unfortunately, due to the fact that “half-burning” is too precise (and too stupid, to say the least). The fact that you are not able to establish the direction of the suggested “thermal radiation” is the very proof of that “half-burned car” being false evidence. That car was apparently “half-burned” by a blow lamp...

Coming back to the claims about the alleged “EMP”. The claim about EMP is utterly unreasonable and could only be put forward by the people who know absolutely nothing about the true nature of such Electromagnetic Pulse resulting from a nuclear explosion (or possibly by those pretending not to know it).

The problem is that if it were true that there was such powerful Electromagnetic Pulse as claimed that it was even able to cause cars to burst open and even to half-burn them, then EMP would first damage all electronic devices in the surrounding area (starting from microelectronic devices, of course) and relatively robust passenger cars would definitely occupy last positions in a list of potential “victims” of that EMP.

I think that general ignorance of the gullible public should not have been exploited so shamelessly like in the case of this particular claim. It should be known that any Electromagnetic Pulse resulting from any nuclear explosion would completely and without any doubt interrupt any and every kind of communication channels – be it radio or even wired ones – around that area. This apparently did not happen around the time of the Towers’ collapse. Neither radio-communications between firefighters, nor any radio- or TV-news coverage had been interrupted. It should be noted that all various radio-communication equipment belonging to firefighters and to police officers and all electronic medical equipment belonging to paramedics (not to mention mobile phones, pagers, computers, TV-sets, radios, digital photo- and video-cameras and even digital wrist-watches of the ordinary people around the WTC) remained in working condition; if any were damaged it was only due to mechanical damage – caused by debris or by dust, but definitely not by any EMP.

Yes, there were also well-known shortages in electricity supplies, as well as some interrupts in radio-communications and in mobile phone services connected to the Twin Towers’ collapse, as well as some interrupts in a fixed telephone system. However, you could probably understand that all those shortages and interrupts had not been caused by any Electromagnetic Pulse as alleged. These interrupts occurred only because the collapsed Towers used to contain certain radio-communication repeaters and cellular transmitters. And, partly, also due to mechanical damage caused to the surrounding area – as a result of which there were some power-lines and fixed telephone-lines damaged. This was the very factor which caused some power shortages and some communications interrupts.

However, all the communication devices, even those that did not actually function immediately after the collapse, still, remained electronically undamaged and could resume their functioning later. You could be pretty sure that there had never been any Electromagnetic Pulse strong enough to be even noticed and this entire argument shall be discarded at once as the most ridiculous speculation.

However, the facts concerning EMP as mentioned above are good to remember for future use. It is because EMP is nothing else than an inalienable part of any and every nuclear explosion (except only a deeply buried underground one). Thus, the fact of the absence of any EMP in the abovementioned case would be needed for the future disproof of any lies in regard to alleged nuclear munitions which might supposedly “explode” in either the basements or even in the deepest underground floors of the WTC.

- 6.3. More about the “half-burned” cars.

The fakery with the “half-burned” cars around the WTC appears to be quite serious, because this FBI’s concoction was sincerely believed by many simpletons and now many gullible people try to base their theories on this particular false presumption.

I have encountered allusions to the “half-burned” cars in various discussions on the Internet and it seems that people are badly duped by this concocted story. I feel it would be a crime if I didn’t devote some time to disproving this particular fakery.

From the picture above (where the naturally half-burned green car during the 2002 Bali nuclear bombing is shown) you can have a clue – how the naturally half-burned car should look like and how it should be orientated towards the fireballs of a nuclear explosion that actually caused the half-burning.

Armed with this basic knowledge, let us subject to our critical review those few pictures of “half-burned” cars found around the WTC.

This particular collection of the “half-burned” cars was assembled by not unknown Judy Wood and is available on her web site: <http://www.drjudywood.com/articles/DEW/moretoastedcars.html>

These images of the “half-burned” cars are very popular among various 9/11 conspiracy theorists nowadays. Some minority of them try to stretch this supposed “evidence” to justify their bizarre “laser-beams-from-the-space theory” (like Judy Wood, who compiled the photos exactly for that reason, and her followers). However, the majority of such conspiracy theorists try to use this so-called “evidence” in a more direct way (exactly in the way it was intended by the “half-burners”) – i.e. as an alleged “proof” of a thermal radiation of supposed atmospheric nuclear explosions caused by the alleged “mini-nukes”.

Now I will prove to you that this so-called “evidence” is fake and it cannot be used for any theory at all, except for pointing the accusing finger at the shameless U.S. government agents who half-burned these cars in the immediate aftermath of the Twin Towers nuclear demolition. Let us begin with this picture:

What does the “half-burning” of a white car in front intended to represent?

I think the intention of the “half-burners” is pretty clear. They wanted to show (to those who would buy their concoction) that the white car was allegedly subjected to thermal radiation coming from the front side of the car, from above, under $\sim 45^\circ$ vertical angle. This would be a typical effect of an atmospheric nuclear explosion occurring slightly above the ground level (or at the ground level, because the nuclear fireballs might reach a certain altitude of tens of meters even if the actual detonation of a nuke took place right on the Earth’s surface).

What is wrong here? Apparently, if the half-burning was a genuine thing (I mean not caused by a blow-lamp of an FBI agent, but by thermal radiation of real nuclear fireballs) then it would burn the bonnet of this car, but would spare the two back posts (located to either side from the back window) because these would be in the “shade” of thermal radiation. However, in this picture we see quite an opposite effect – which is the best proof that it is indeed a fakery. Another important thing is conspicuously missing in this concoction – a supposed effect of an impact by air-blast wave that must come from the same direction as alleged “thermal radiation”. The car must have been smashed by the impact of the blast-wave directed from the front side, from above, under $\sim 45^\circ$ vertical degrees angle. However, it is not smashed here...

The car on the picture above is a much better work. Those “half-burners” took care not only to “half-burn” the car, but also to produce an effect of “smashing” from the same direction. So, this one is much more impressive than the poor concoction on the first picture. Still, if you look at it with a critical eye, you can see that this production is far from being realistic as well (just compare it with the green car from the 2002 Bali bombing case which we will hold as a “standard” of natural half-burning of cars by an atomic blast).

The above one is as poor a production as was the first car – the “half-burning” is too “precise” to be “natural”. Moreover, the expected effect of the air-blast wave was neglected to such an extent that the folks who produced this car did not even bother to smash (or at least to melt with a blow-lamp) a rotating beacon mounted on the car’s roof...

The above one again represents a much better work. The folks who produced this car did not forget to produce the effect of smashing (at least, they did not leave the rotating beacon on the car’s roof intact). Nonetheless, the actual “half-burning” does not match any reasonable orientation of the car towards the supposed source of thermal radiation and this is pretty obvious.

The next picture below is the most seditious, because it shows the very process of the “half-burning” of one police car.

Note that the “half-burning” of cars was oddly a very “selective” process. While the police car is being “half-burned”, the rest of the cars around are not.

Most probably, it was an order given to some police (and most probably FBI's) units to half-burn their own cars, and the policemen, being obedient government servants, did not dare to half-burn surrounding cars that were not theirs (at least, I have no other explanation to this particular discrepancy).

Besides, it is clearly noticeable on the picture above that the “half-burning” of the police car (“NYPD” letters on its door stand for “New York Police Department” in case someone doesn't know) has nothing to do with the actual Twin Towers' collapse. The Towers had collapsed some time ago – because here sidewalks and the actual car are covered in the well-known WTC dust, moreover, the dust, that used to be suspended in the air during first ~30 minutes, has already subsided, judging by the fact that the visibility here is almost perfect. The incriminating scene must have been captured by the photographer at least an hour- or even more after the actual WTC collapse.

Here is another seditious picture, but this time of a fully-burning car.

As you can notice on the very first picture, some cars were “half-burned”, while some others – were “fully-burned”. Apparently, the “fully-burned” cars were intended to represent cars that occurred closer to the hypocenter of the supposed “atmospheric nuclear explosion” and so came into the zones of high temperatures in their entirety. People, who organized this show, apparently knew how cars located on various distances from a hypocenter of an atmospheric nuclear explosion should look like. Therefore they ordered the job to be done accordingly. What is interesting to notice here is that the “burning” of cars is suspiciously “selective” again. The dark-red van is being surprisingly spared by the supposed thermal radiation... This is not to mention numerous leafs of paper scattered around that peculiarly refused to inflame from the supposed “nuclear fireballs” either...

I hope I made it clear to everyone that the infamous “half-burning” of cars around the WTC was nothing else than false evidence and we don’t have to bother considering any conspiracy theories based on it.

- 6.4. One more argument of the proponents of the “mini-nukes” theory is that they claim that many people who happened to be around the WTC area shortly before the Twin Towers began to collapse, allegedly developed such “typical after-nuclear” ailments, as they¹²³ call it “...burned or hanging skin, without fire, like so many Hiroshima victims...”.

Apparently none of such people have ever had any chance to see any “Hiroshima victims” in order to examine their skin; still, they continue to claim that nonsense.

The problem is that any kind of skin disease resulting from the nuclear explosion could only be caused by radiation – in either visible spectrum, as well as its infra-red and especially ultra-violet sub-varieties (i.e. by direct burns from its thermal radiation), or in invisible spectrum (i.e. by the direct impact of invisible gamma- and especially beta-radiations + neutron-rays emanating from the same source – which is normally referred to as “penetrating radiation”).

If we imagine that alleged explosions of the “mini-nukes” in the basement floors of the Twin Towers were so “open” that they even caused skin damage to some people, why then did the actual nuclear fireballs go unnoticed by anyone?

One might imagine that such nuclear fireballs should have outshined our Sun by at least 10-fold. Those who would be unlucky to look into such a thing directly would definitely lose their ability to see anything for at least a couple of minutes, if not for a couple of hours. Did anyone notice anything similar?

And in any case if there would be some radiation capable of damaging skin, then, automatically, there would be also very strong EMP (exactly as described in the above Clause 6.2) emanating from the same source. This, without a doubt, would have damaged all electronic devices in the surrounding area and interrupted all kinds of telecommunications.

In addition to EMP, there would have been another effect expected. All those visible and invisible rays, capable of damaging skin (including not only ultra-violet and gamma-rays, but also X-rays), would additionally destroy (overexpose) all photo films. Those days many people still had old-fashioned non-digital cameras, which used ordinary negative films, which were highly vulnerable to such radiation – even in case if this gamma-radiation enters not through its lens and an open shutter, but penetrates via the camera’s thin plastic case. Apparently, this did not happen in reality – everybody could still use their mobile phone and have their negative film developed without any slightest sign of its being overexposed.

In any case one shall remember that a nuclear weapon (even such a small one as a so-called “mini-nuke” of only 1 kiloton in TNT yield) is still an extremely dangerous thing. It would necessarily produce some ionizing radiation strong enough to lethally injure people in its close proximity and to seriously (with a probable rate of further lethality of 90% and more) – injure standing people even in distances of several hundred meters. Moreover, unlike radiation injuries caused by cumulative doses of radioactive contamination (that are usually chronic, proceeding in man’s body largely unnoticed but cause leukemia or various kinds of cancer several years later), radiation injuries caused by a hard front of penetrating radiation would always cause injuries that are acute – i.e. immediately noticeable: ailments within the first couple of hours and possible deaths within several days.

One might make his own calculation based on this premise. 1 kiloton of a nuclear explosion would produce a front of penetrating radiation with strength capable to fatally injure standing people in distances of up to 800 meters – because they would get lethal doses of 500-600 Roentgen (or you can measure it in “rem” units, which is about the same¹²⁴). In further distances (let’s say, slightly over 1 kilometer) standing people would acquire 200-300 R doses, which would cause extremely heavy cases of acute radiation sickness (with a rate of mortality up to 90%). And even in farther distances standing people would acquire still over 100 R doses which would cause not necessarily heavy cases of radiation sickness, but nevertheless acute¹²⁵ cases of it.

¹²³ This particular claim was found on this web site: <http://wtcdemolition.blogspot.com/>

The consideration above was applicable to a single nuclear explosion of 1 kiloton. Consider also that there should have been two (one for the WTC-1 and another one – for the WTC-2) “mini-nukes”, which supposed to go off shortly one after another. It shall be presumed then that everyone in this area and around should have been struck not by just one front of penetrating radiation, but by two. It should be known also that any kind of acquired radiation dose (be it from either instant penetrating radiation or from radioactive contamination) has a “cumulative” nature – meaning that different amounts of radiation doses acquired on several instances could be summarized. If someone has received a not yet lethal dose (but very close to the lethal dose) by penetration radiation from the first blast of the “mini-nuke”, then, from the explosion of the second “mini-nuke” 30 minutes later it would be guaranteed for him to get a dose about twice as much as the nominally lethal one.

The same calculation is also applicable to the people standing in farther distances. Let's say, someone, whose position was 1,5 km away from the spot, gets only 100 R from the first explosion of the supposed “mini-nuke”. His condition due to radiation sickness would not be life-threatening yet (he would also develop acute radiation sickness, but in a light form, which will probably in a couple of months heal itself even without any specific medical treatment). However, when he is struck by the front of penetration radiation from the second explosion of the “mini-nuke” only 30 minutes later, he would get another 100 R (so he will acquire 200 R in summary). This will cause already heavy condition – the ensuing acute heavy radiation sickness will be life-threatening – with a high probability of death.

Let us draw a logical conclusion. If any “mini-nuke” (especially if it were two “mini-nukes”, not just one) would really explode in the basement floors of the WTC Twin Towers as claimed – without any doubt it would cause a lot of cases of acute radiation sickness. These cases would range from lethal ones (when the people will die in a few days even despite medical treatment) and very heavy ones (when the people would require such a serious medical treatment as a bone marrow transplantation) to just light and medium ones – which would cause many people to feel immediately sick and remain sick for weeks and also cause some deaths, even despite medical treatment. Apparently, this did not happen as well – nobody is known to be hospitalized with any symptom of acute radiation sickness immediately after 9/11.

Actually, all cases of radiation sickness related to the WTC nuclear demolition (practically only among ground zero workers and among nearby Manhattan residents) were chronic rather than acute. They were caused not by penetrating radiation that supposes to instantly emanate from an actual nuclear explosion, but by radioactive contamination, especially by radioactive vapor – which was a totally different case.

Considering all said above, one may conclude that it was impossible that the alleged radiation in visible spectrum might have caused some skin diseases (as claimed) while in the same time there were not any noticed cases of acute radiation sickness caused by the penetrating radiation, which is an inalienable part of any nuclear explosion. Thus, the above argument is also nothing else than a ridiculous speculation.

neutrons, etc., all of them having damaging effects on organism. So, later there were adopted “correlating” measurement units, which purported to be more “correct”: such as “BER” (Biological Equivalent of Roentgen) – in the former USSR or “REM” (Roentgen Equivalent Man) in the United States; besides, there is also “RAD” unit (Radiation Absorbed Dose) – typically used to measure doses acquired from absorbed radiation (means not from penetrating radiation, but from radioactive contamination) - which for X-rays and gamma-rays is equal to “REM”. Just to spare you: without raking your brains, you could roughly presume that all of those units are about equal – when it comes to an actual nuclear explosion and to measurement of lethal doses – 500 R or 500 Rad or 500 Ber or 500 Rem would kill you in exactly the same manner. Still, many old-fashioned people (like the humble author of these lines) prefer to measure radiation doses in Roentgen units.

¹²⁵ “Acute” here means that such a radiation sickness is noticeable immediately – in a couple of hours, or maximum in a couple of days – as opposed to “chronic” – which might easily take its course scarcely noticed for years, but result in leukemia or in other kind of cancer at the end. It shall be known also that not only heavy cases of radiation sickness cause deaths, but the moderate ones cause deaths as well: 90% of people who suffer from heavy radiation sickness die on 10th or 11th day, while 50% of people who suffer from moderate cases of radiation sickness usually die on 30th – 31st days. People, who were struck by penetrating radiation of >3.000 Roentgens, could die in only a day or two; those who were struck by huge doses – let's say >8.000 Roentgens – could be killed right on the spot.

- 6.5. Another argument of the proponents of the “mini-nukes” theory is that they try to use the fact that there were practically no dead bodies and not even body parts found among the main pile of the WTC debris (since all what was found there was just only that well-known microscopic dust). This fact led some conspiracy theorists to yet another ridiculous speculation.

They claim that all people from the WTC Towers have been allegedly “vaporized” as a result of the explosions of those supposed “mini-nukes”.

This speculation shall be countered as follows: if the people have completely “vaporized” – why then the dust itself has not been “vaporized” as well? Is there any logic in such a claim?

It shall be understood that a potential explosion of a SADM (“mini-nuke”) would never release enough energy to “vaporize” people in distances over, let’s say, 35 meters from its hypocenter. It would kill them, of course – by an actual explosion, by extreme heat, by air blast-wave, and by ionizing radiation in combination. Most probably, it would also tear them apart and throw parts of their bodies everywhere around. But, still, it would not be able to completely vaporize their neutron-ridden, smashed, and charred remains – so a coroner would still have something to deal with even after an explosion of a “mini-nuke”.

One might make his own calculation based on this particular premise: 1 kiloton in TNT yield of a nuclear explosion is technically capable of vaporizing only 80 tons of dry granite rock, which is not actually much. Moreover, these mentioned 80 tons would only be able to vaporize exclusively from among its immediate surroundings (let’s say, 5 meters around its hypocenter); because in farther distances 1 kt in TNT yield would vaporize far less than 80 tons due to an apparent dissemination of its energy.

Considering that the Twin Towers were over 400 meters tall, it would not be possible to “vaporize” anything in their middle floors, not to say in their upper floors. Moreover, it shall be also understood that if the energy, instantly released from a nuclear explosion, would be enough to vaporize people, it would also vaporize any and every other material in the same proximity – including the very dust. Nobody could expect such an effect that some materials would remain, while all people would be selectively “vaporized”. It simply does not work that way. Especially considering that total incineration (not even to say about “vaporization”) of a man’s body requires temperatures almost as high as to melt steel (if someone does not believe – let him check what the typical temperatures are at any crematorium oven and also check as to how much time a corpse must remain in there to be completely incinerated). This argument is not sustainable at all.

- 6.6. Any explosion of a “mini-nuke” in the basement floor of the Twin Towers would never be a real “underground explosion” in a sense of a fully contained underground nuclear explosion.

It would still have all features of a typical atmospheric nuclear explosion, so it would feature at least a certain loud sound – resembling a burst of thunder – and this would reach quite far around the WTC area. Apparently, nobody had heard anything like that, if not counting several speculators who allegedly “heard some explosions in the basement floors”. Just try to imagine, that if 1 kiloton, which is 1,000 tons of TNT, would really explode in the basement floor as claimed. Would those speculators hear “some explosions” or they would simply lose their ability to hear for at least a couple of days?

It would necessarily feature an air-blast-wave, which without any doubt would shatter all windowpanes in every building around the WTC area (which apparently did not happen – many windows suspiciously managed to retain panes of glass even after both WTC Towers had already collapsed).

It would definitely cause a certain Electromagnetic Pulse – an inalienable part of every nuclear explosion – exactly as described in above Clause 6.2. This would, in turn, damage absolutely all electronic devices around this area and interrupt all telecommunications (including wired ones) – an effect, which was missing in reality.

At last – any imaginary explosion of a “mini-nuke” on the ground floor of the WTC Tower (how deep would the exact floor be does not matter – even at the deepest floor) would undoubtedly cause some debris and other products of an explosion to be thrown away through the lobby of the building and its lowest floors – onto adjacent streets. Just try to imagine that 1 kiloton in TNT yield of such a “mini-nuke” is still nothing less than ONE THOUSAND TONS of TNT – i.e. ONE THOUSAND TONS of a highly-explosive material.

For example, a large-caliber conventional aviation-bomb weighing only 5 tons normally causes several buildings standing close to each other to be destroyed at once. While a 10 tons conventional aviation bomb would destroy a good block of a city street. Thus, one could make his own calculations as to how far such an explosion of 1,000 tons of TNT (even if it happens in the deepest underground floors of the WTC) would throw debris through the WTC lobby... However, this did not happen.

There was apparently no explosion which might look like or sound like an “explosion”. Thus, the entire theory of “mini-nukes” – irrespective of whether such imaginary “mini-nukes” might belong to the “foreign” or to the “home” perpetrators – is beyond belief.

- 6.7. The last one is just an ordinary engineering consideration. If any “mini-nukes” would have really been exploded somewhere in the basement floors of the WTC Twin Towers as alleged – they would definitely cause the following effect. The explosion power of such a “mini-nuke” would never be enough to reduce to dust the entire 400 meters length of the rigid Tower’s structure; but it would definitely be more than enough to completely “undercut” it – that is to say “to sever the entire Tower from its foundation”. In only a second after such an explosion, the entire rigid Tower’s structure would fall over and crash with its entire length onto the surroundings. Though, the Tower’s structure even in this case would never disintegrate – it was made to be so strong that even in its potential fall to its side it would remain whole.

Apparently, this scenario was not what happened in reality – as everybody could see on his TV. The last “conspiracy theory” – that some “mini-nukes” allegedly exploded at the WTC Tower’s basements – shall be discarded as unreasonable, despite looking quite “believable” at first glance.

- 6.8. And the very last is some logical consideration. Suppose that someone would still stubbornly adhere to the “Conspiracy Theory No.6” – disregarding all technical considerations provided in the above Clauses 6.1 – through – 6.7 – and would still believe that the WTC Buildings No.1 and No.2 (i.e. the Twin Towers) were both demolished by the “mini-nukes”, which belonged to Osama bin Laden or to Saddam Hussein. Then there would be one very funny irregularity resulting from the following well-known fact.

Larry Silverstein makes his unprecedented admission about controlled demolition of the WTC-7 during his interview with PBS documentary “America Rebuilds” aired on September 10, 2002.

The new owner of the WTC property – a certain Larry Silverstein – had already admitted publicly that it was him, Mr. Silverstein, who personally gave a final order (or, at least, a permission) to “pull” building 7 in the late afternoon of September 11, 2001.

He said exactly in that interview:

“...I remember getting a call from the, er..., fire department commander, telling me that they were not sure they were gonna be able to contain the fire, and I said, “We’ve had such terrible loss of life, maybe the smartest thing to do is pull it [the WTC-7]...” And they made that decision to pull and we watched the building collapse...”

This was probably the most seditious admission, portions of which were reproduced in a PBS documentary aired on September 10, 2002, and entitled “America Rebuilds”. The most shocking part of his interview was not even that he has admitted that he (Larry Silverstein) had personally voiced the idea to demolish the WTC-7.

The seditious thing was, firstly, that there were no firefighters deployed to the WTC-7 in the late afternoon September 11, 2001. Therefore, we can conclude that Mr. Silverstein did not talk at all to any alleged “commander” of firefighters in regard to the demolition of building 7. According to *Chapter 5*¹²⁶ of FEMA's *Building Performance Study*¹²⁷, firefighters were never in building 7: "Preliminary indications were that, due to lack of water, no manual firefighting actions were taken by FDNY." Here is another account: "Given the limited water supply and the first strategic priority, which was to search for survivors in the rubble, FDNY did not fight the fires [in WTC 7]." – according to the *Fire Engineering, 9/2002*¹²⁸.

The second seditious thing was that even if there had been any decision to “pull” (i.e. to bring it down in a process of a controlled demolition), even in such a case the procedure of an actual controlled demolition would not be carried out by firefighters. I hope everybody understands that to demolish buildings is not a job of firefighters, but that of highly-qualified construction engineers, possessing specific demolition skills.

But the most seditious indeed is not even the two above considerations. The most seditious consideration would be this: if for example, someone has decided to “pull” (i.e. to demolish) a building in an urgent manner, amidst the supposed fires ravaging the building, then what do you think – how would that person be able to quickly bring into such a burning building a big number of charges of conventional explosives – along with all required detonators, to quickly make all necessary calculations, to nicely position these explosive charges and the detonators (despite the fires burning around), and to proceed undisturbed with such a precise job as a controlled demolition? Try to guess.

Of course, it would never be possible. To prepare a controlled demolition would take a few weeks at least.

Such a sudden decision to “pull” the WTC-7 could only be carried out in one and only one case: if a controlled demolition scheme was a built-in feature of the WTC-7. Moreover, such a built-in scheme (if any) could not be based on any conventional explosives. Those explosives would be damaged by fires in this particular case. While in general case it would simply be too unsafe to keep large amounts of conventional explosives, all equipped with detonators on a permanent basis, inside such a building.

The only possible presumption is that such a built-in demolition scheme was a nuclear one – which was safe at least during its “stand-by” stage. Unlike conventional explosives, nuclear charges can not explode accidentally, nor even as a result of any fire. Nuclear charges can not even be accidentally detonated – even from the result of some accidental explosion nearby¹²⁹.

Now, if one would take a closer look at what Mr. Silverstein has actually admitted, and would try to analyze a true meaning of his words, he would find that:

- 1) It was Mr. Silverstein, who demolished the WTC-7, and as such this action had nothing to do with any alleged “commander” of the non-existent firefighters (whom he tried to present as a “demolition team”);
- 2) Mr. Silverstein could only use in this case some built-in nuclear demolition scheme, because such an in-built demolition scheme, logically, could not have been based on any conventional explosives.

¹²⁹ Nuclear charges also contain some conventional explosive materials which are intended to “implode” the nuclear material which will reach its over-critical mass in the process of such an implosion. Thus, it might seem for some people that an accidental detonation of those conventional materials inside a nuclear charge might cause also an accidental “implosion” and accidental accumulation of over-critical mass which might lead to an accidental nuclear explosion. Fortunately, it would not be possible – the process of implosion requires highly (on a micro-second level) synchronized detonation of all conventional explosives. Any kind of an “unauthorized” detonation of these conventional explosives would never be so precisely synchronized, so as a result, an actual nuclear explosive material would never reach its over-critical mass – instead, it would only be destroyed by that ordinary explosion, so such a nuclear charge would be rendered useless. This is actually why nuclear charges can not accidentally detonate in a sense of nuclear explosion and that is exactly why they are considered much safer to keep in comparison with ordinary explosives, which could detonate at any time. The “unauthorized” detonation of such conventional explosives, however, could cause radioactive materials (especially highly poisonous Plutonium 239) to be thrown around, thus contaminating certain area. A good example of the fact that nuclear charges indeed could not detonate accidentally was demonstrated by the infamous “1966 Palomares B-52 crash” or “Palomares incident” occurred on 17 January 1966 and described by Wikipedia article: https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/1966_Palomares_B-52_crash

Theoretically, however, one could also presume for a little while that, instead of such a built-in nuclear demolition scheme, Mr. Silverstein used the third SADM a/k/a “mini-nuke” – similar to those two alleged “mini-nukes” which might have been used several hours back to demolish the Twin Towers in accordance with the Conspiracy Theory No.6. Let us have some fun and keep this “mini-nuke” presumption for a little while... just see what will happen next.

By the way – Mr. Silverstein’s abovementioned interview was so widely circulated on various websites, in books and in videos, that even if now someone would at last try to quash any further distribution of his unprecedented confession, it would be simply too late. Everybody who is familiar with elementary logic has gotten the point already: the WTC-7 was demolished with the prior permission of Larry Silverstein.

Coming back to the suspected nuclear stuff involved: the WTC-7 had been apparently demolished in the same pattern and by exactly the same kind of a nuclear explosion – exactly as the WTC Twin Towers.

The WTC-7 had been also first reduced to “unexplainable” fine dust and then had fallen strictly down – right onto its footprint with freefall speed, while also spreading large clouds of that “unexplainable fine dust” all around Manhattan.

There were exactly the same streams of radioactive vapors emanating from the debris of the WTC 7, as well as those emanating from the debris of the WTC-1 and WTC-2. There were the same “unexplainable” high temperatures – recorded weeks and months later under the debris of the WTC-7 (as well as high temperatures at the spots of the WTC-1 and WTC-2).

Firefighters had been ordered to use exactly the same radioactivity deterrents (transparently named “powerful ultra-violet absorbers”) to mix into their water – to be used to extinguish at last those very “unexplainable underground fires, the most long-lasting in history” – under the debris of WTC 7 – as well as they had been ordered to do so in regards to the debris of the WTC-1 and WTC-2.

Thus, if someone seriously believes that both WTC-1 and -2 had been demolished by the “mini-nukes”, he must automatically come to the very same conclusion in regard to the WTC-7. There was technically no difference – either in an actual pattern of the WTC-7 collapse, or in any features from its nuclear demolition, like the unexplainable “underground fires”, unexplainable “high-temperatures”, and streams of those radioactive vapors emanating from the WTC-7 demolition site for many weeks.

Now here is pure logic: if the two supposed “mini-nukes” that had allegedly demolished WTC-1 and -2 indeed belonged to Osama bin Laden or to Saddam Hussein (or to both), then the third “mini-nuke”, which has leveled the WTC-7, must also have been the property of Osama bin Laden or of Saddam Hussein. Do you agree with this logic?

Based on this presumption, we may further conclude that Mr. Silverstein – when he actually permitted or ordered to “pull” the WTC-7, had indeed permitted or ordered nothing less than to set off the third “mini-nuke” provided by Osama bin Laden or by Saddam Hussein. Didn’t he?

Or it is also quite possible that the third alleged “mini-nuke” belonged to Mr. Silverstein himself (it is indeed very much possible, at least from the point of logic, and, logically thinking, we would have to presume so).

Logically, there would be just only a few possible combinations in regard to who exactly owned those three “mini-nukes” (if there were indeed any) that might have been used to level the WTC buildings No.1, No.2 and No.7 respectively:

- 6.8.1. The third alleged “mini-nuke” belonged to Larry Silverstein, while the first two belonged to Osama bin Laden or to Saddam Hussein (or that each of the first two “mini-nukes” belonged to either of them as a variety); so while “Islamist terrorists” detonated their own “mini-nukes”, Mr. Silverstein answered them in a worthy manner – by detonating his third “mini-nuke”.

- 6.8.2. All the three alleged “mini-nukes” belonged to Osama bin Laden or to Saddam Hussein (or both) and Mr. Silverstein was only an operator entrusted by their respective owners to set off their “mini-nukes” when necessary;

- 6.8.3. All the three alleged “mini-nukes” belonged to the U.S. Government. The U.S. Government for some not so clear reason wanted to stage an unprecedented covert nuclear attack on its own citizens. However, instead of appointing an operator from among highly trusted secret agents or corroborative military officers, the U.S. Government appointed a lay civilian – Mr. Silverstein (who, in addition to his other personal faults, does not even know how to properly keep his mouth shut and makes such scandalous revelations about it) – to pull the trigger in either of the three cases accordingly;

- 6.8.4. While the third alleged “mini-nuke” belonged to Larry Silverstein, the first two belonged to the U.S. Government. Meaning that when the evil U.S. Government had detonated their own two “mini-nukes”, Mr. Silverstein had detonated his own one “mini-nuke”;

- 6.8.5. All the three alleged “mini-nukes” belonged to Larry Silverstein and the entire conspiracy to demolish the WTC by exploding these three “mini-nukes” belonged to Mr. Silverstein as well, and as such this conspiracy had nothing to do either with Osama bin Laden, or with Saddam Hussein, nor with any sinister conspirator within the U.S. Government.

Considering that combinations 6.8.1 and 6.8.4 are not logical, and combination 6.8.3 even though logical, is not serious, the only plausible remaining combinations are 6.8.2 and 6.8.5, while the most possible if to chose between 6.8.2 and 6.8.5 would be the last one. (One could scarcely imagine Larry Silverstein making a sinister agreement with a secret emissary of Saddam Hussein, not even to say about any secret emissary sent by Osama bin Laden – especially considering that Mr. Silverstein appears to be a Jew).

If someone still stubbornly adheres to the “mini-nukes conspiracy theory”, he must exclude from his list of possible conspirators the U.S. Government first. It is self-evident, that such an unprecedented admission of Mr. Silverstein automatically excuses the U.S. Government from any complicity (in a sense of the “mini-nukes” theory, I mean, not in any other sense).

Yes, the U.S. Government indeed participated in the ensuing 9/11 cover-up, but it does not mean that the U.S. Government had ordered to demolish the World Trade Center by its own mini-nukes or that the U.S. Government had ever planned such an incredible action in advance.

The only remaining possible culprits in this case (i.e. in case if the entire “mini-nukes” theory is true) are:

- Larry Silverstein (since he has already confessed as having something to do with the demolition);
- and:
- Osama bin Laden and Co. and/or Saddam Hussein and Co. (both have denied their complicity).

Considering the complicity of Mr. Larry Silverstein, at last, has been established, while the same question remains open in regard to Mr. Osama bin Laden and Mr. Saddam Hussein, we would better stop for awhile with this so-called “mini-nukes” theory or how we have called it – “The Conspiracy Theory No. 6”.

Again, considering all technicalities, described in the above Clauses 6.1 through 6.7, one might deem it successfully proven that the World Trade Center had not been demolished by any “mini-nukes” as claimed. It was technically impossible. I hope that by all the abovementioned considerations I did not leave a stone unturned of the entire “mini-nukes conspiracy theory”...

Now, as I believe I have, at last, somehow “cleared” the U.S. Government from the serious suspicions of conspiring with the 9/11 perpetrators by planting its own “mini-nukes” in the WTC buildings, I could actually proceed to explain what really happened with the WTC and who exactly was behind that perpetration.

However, before we proceed to consider the ultimate truth, we still have one more conspiracy theory to disprove. This theory is also very dangerous and so it must necessarily be addressed here.

Conspiracy theory No.7 or the first introduction to Nuclear Madness: This theory seems to have nothing in common with the so-called “truth” Number 2, intended by the U.S. Government to cheat the “patricians”. Nevertheless, this conspiracy theory is also extremely dangerous – because it was actually intended to cheat the “barbarians” – i.e., us.

Some people claim that the U.S. Government allegedly had two small underground nuclear reactors under each of the WTC Twin Towers and these alleged “nuclear reactors” for some unknown reason went out of control and DELIBERATELY melted in a process commonly known as “China Syndrome” – i.e. that the molten cores of the reactors allegedly melted their way down into the Earth.

Moreover, some of them (like a certain William Tahil – who wrote this book: “Ground Zero: The Nuclear Demolition of the WTC ...” – which is downloadable from the following Internet address: http://nucleardemolition.com/GZero_Report.pdf) went as far to even claim that the uncontrollable overheating of such an underground nuclear reactor would allegedly send shock-waves powerful enough to reduce the entire WTC Tower into fine dust.

In his introductory word on the very first page of his book Mr. William Tahil, B.A. claims precisely that there were nothing else than “two nuclear explosions”, but, he declares, “not atomic bombs have caused these two nuclear explosions”, but certain “...clandestine nuclear reactors buried deep beneath the towers...”

This particular theory, however dangerous it might be in its intention to cheat the “barbarians”, would still be disproved.

Firstly, nobody would ever be able to offer any plausible reason for which would the U.S. Government have such “clandestine” nuclear reactors “buried deep beneath” the Twin Towers.

Secondly, if such a thing as the so-called “China Syndrome” (a/k/a “nuclear meltdown”) would have really occurred – the entire ground water system under New York City and its surroundings would be severely poisoned forever. Even if the New York residents would only use bottled water, still other living beings (cats, dogs, birds, rats, insects etc.) would not be able to survive – which apparently did not happen.

Thirdly, it is not possible to explain how a small (or even a big) nuclear reactor beneath the rigid building – made of thick steel – would reduce such a building above itself into fine dust from the technical point of view. And what does the “dustification” of the structural steel have to do with the so-called “China Syndrome”? If the alleged “deep underground” “clandestine nuclear reactors” managed to cause the so-called “nuclear meltdown”, would it also mean that they “melted” the steel columns well above the ground level into fluffy microscopic dust? This kind of “logic” reminds us of the infamous Official Conspiracy Theory (according to which, as you remember, burning kerosene managed to “melt” the steel columns into the fluffy dust).

Proponents of this “clandestine nuclear reactors” theory in their desperate attempts to answer this question subdivide themselves into two groups.

One of such groups claims that concrete dust (they prudently omit mentioning steel dust) had been allegedly produced when an alleged overheated underground nuclear reactor’s “million degrees heat” had sent a certain, how they put it, “rapidly expanded water vapor 1000-fold in the concrete floors”. This is a maximum of what they could say, unfortunately. One does not need to be an engineer in order to comprehend that such gibberish has nothing to do with reality.

Another group (such as Mr. Tahil) tries to be more “realistic”. They claim that the alleged “clandestine” underground nuclear reactor simply exploded (apparently in the same manner as a usual nuclear charge might explode – since they operate by terms such as “nuclear explosion”). Thus, according to them, it had allegedly sent up the tower certain “shock wave”. This “shock wave”, according to them, was the very factor that has actually reduced the entire Tower structure into fine dust.

Yes, this one is quite close to reality, but there is one little problem.

Actually, Mr. Tahil appears to know at least a little bit about either chemistry or physics, since he quite freely operates in his book by certain scientific facts as well as by the specific terminology pertaining to these scientific disciplines. However, in the same time, it appears that he tries to exploit general ignorance of his potential readers, while himself being perfectly aware that whatever he claims in his book can not be true. If you read his book with your EYES OPEN you will notice that he mocks his reader.

The problem is that a nuclear reactor and a nuclear charge (such as an atomic bomb or an atomic landmine or any other kind of nuclear warhead / munitions) use distinctly different kinds of materials for their nuclear reactions, and their nuclear reactions themselves are distinctly different. If the first exploits a so-called “controlled” or “slow” nuclear reaction, the second one produces an “instant” or a so-called “fast” nuclear reaction, which in reality is nothing else than an actual atomic blast. In the former Soviet Union, for example, such elementary things have been taught to pupils during physics lessons in a secondary school and if Mr. Tahil would only try to translate his book into Russian and to distribute it in the former Soviet Union he would only be laughed at.

The main material which is being used in any nuclear reactor is a mixture of two different isotopes: of Uranium 235 and of Uranium 238. An actual proportion of U-235 and U-238 could differ for different kinds of reactors (usually richer in U-235 for mobile reactors – to increase their efficiency factor, and poorer – for stationary ones – to decrease their cost). However, in any case, the enrichment quality even of the richest possible nuclear fuel for mobile reactors would NEVER come even close to the grade required for the “fast” nuclear reaction. While a nuclear reactor’s fuel could be used in a “slow” nuclear reaction – i.e. to produce heat, under no circumstances could even the richest possible variety of any reactor’s nuclear fuel produce a “fast” nuclear reaction – known as an atomic blast.

To produce an actual nuclear explosion, one will need a so-called “weapon-grade” material – normally, highly enriched Uranium, which consists of almost pure isotope of Uranium 235, or its only alternative – Plutonium 239. Generally speaking – none of the nuclear reactors (which contain neither highly enriched Uranium 235¹³⁰, nor any critical mass of Plutonium 239¹³¹) may ever end up in an accidental nuclear explosion. In a sense of an “accidental atomic blast” absolutely all nuclear reactors are absolutely safe. Nuclear reactors might be unsafe in other aspects, but not in this particular one.

A nuclear reactor can not explode and that’s it. It is an axiom. Any claim to the contrary – that a certain nuclear reactor might allegedly end up in an accidental nuclear explosion – is the cheapest speculation possible. It is almost as ridiculous as to claim that some helicopter flight might go out of control and accidentally land on the Moon – the probability of the helicopter flying to- and landing on the Moon in the “accidental” manner is the same as the probability of a nuclear reactor producing an “accidental” nuclear explosion. A maximum of what could really “explode” in case of any nuclear reactor is vapor from an inner circle of its cooling system – in case it gets overheated. However, when it comes to the core of any nuclear reactor, it can explode neither in a sense of a nuclear explosion, nor in a sense of an ordinary explosion. The core of a nuclear reactor is not made of any explosive materials and therefore it could not “explode” in the sense of a chemical explosion. It is not made of a critical mass of a weapon-grade nuclear material and therefore it could not “explode” in the sense of a nuclear explosion. I hope the reader is logical enough to understand self-evident things that do not even require any additional “evidence”.

If someone thinks about Chernobyl at this point – forget about it. The Chernobyl event was a pure sample of a public cheating: an ensuing governmental cover-up of this “disaster” was not any better than that in the case of 9/11. The only difference between the Chernobyl “disaster” and 9/11 was that while the actual nuclear dangers at Manhattan’s ground zero were intentionally underestimated, in the case of the Chernobyl disaster, the alleged nuclear dangers were greatly exaggerated. The Chernobyl “disaster” was a pure act of sabotage. The reactor in the Chernobyl Nuclear Power Plant did not explode itself, it was “helped” to be exploded – by a “mini-nuke” smuggled into and placed under the reactor. This will be explained in detail in a separate chapter of this book, dedicated to the so-called “Chernobyl disaster”.

The point is that a core of an overheated nuclear reactor can not explode. Even if its controlled nuclear reaction one day turned uncontrollable, still, it won’t cause any explosion. The reactor’s core could only melt and that’s it. If someone does not believe me – let him consult any specialist on nuclear reactors or try to educate himself by reading some related articles in the Internet.

Based on this premise, we may conclude that the most bizarre “theory” represented by Mr. Tahil’s book is beneath criticism. The mere claim that some alleged “clandestine nuclear reactors” under the WTC Towers went out of control, overheated, and ended up in a “nuclear explosion” (and, yet, despite being “nuclear exploded”, they also melted in a process of the so-called “China Syndrome”), sounds even more ridiculous than all combined engineering claims in the infamous 9/11 Commission report.

¹³⁰ The poorest Uranium material which could be theoretically used in making an atomic blast should contain at least over 80 percent of Uranium 235 (practically in nuclear weapons the percent is much higher – usually, over 90% and up to 100%), while the richest possible Uranium material for reactors ever heard of contains less than 60% of U-235 (practically, however, even nuclear reactors on submarines, which require the maximum efficiency factor, never use any nuclear fuel with over 40% enrichment by Uranium 235, while all stationary nuclear reactors use nuclear fuel which contains less than 15% of Uranium 235, since it would be considerably cheaper).

¹³¹ Plutonium 239 is nothing else than a by-product of any controllable nuclear reaction. That is why even peaceful nuclear reactors could be used to slowly (really slowly – it takes many years in reality) accumulate some quantities of Plutonium 239, which, in turn, could be used to make an atomic bomb. However, it would never be possible that any critical mass of Plutonium 239 would be somehow accumulated as a whole 11kg piece of this material within any single nuclear reactor at any given time. Thus, it can not cause any nuclear explosion in a reactor even in theory.

However, despite his actual ravings about the alleged “nuclear explosion” of the alleged “clandestine nuclear reactors” being disproved by all the above considerations, still, there is something very badly wrong with the author of the abovementioned book.

Let me explain what is wrong. Let us try to imagine that someone plainly claims that a car featuring a carburetor-type engine would allegedly function if you fill its tank with a diesel fuel. What would you think of such a person? You would probably think that this person is simply ignorant and that’s it.

Now here is another situation to consider: let us imagine that we encounter an apparent specialist in car engines. He explains to you on a professional level how a car’s carburetor actually works, how to regulate it, what is the difference between a carburetor- and inject-type- of engines, what is an engine’s compression ratio, what is the octane number of gasoline, etc. However, at the end of his comprehensive explanation, he claims that you could easily use diesel fuel in a carburetor-type engine... What would you think of such a person? Would you think that he is just simply “ignorant”? Or you would rather presume that he is a clown, whose job is to make people laugh?

The problem is that Mr. Tahil by no means looks like a clown and his book is not intended as a kind of a comedy. Its author first explains to his reader scientific facts. He explains a fission sequence of Uranium. He explains what kind of radio-active isotopes are typically found after any nuclear explosion. He explains how seismic waves do propagate after a typical underground nuclear explosion. He explains a lot of other related facts – all on quite a scientific level. And after all of this, he still claims that nuclear reactors (and not even one, but two!!) might allegedly end up in a nuclear explosion? No, sorry, this person is not ignorant, unfortunately. This is something much more sinister than just ignorance...

It is highly recommended to download his book and to take a closer look into some of his points – then one would probably understand what exactly attracted my suspicions. The author of the “Ground Zero: The Nuclear Demolition of the WTC” is apparently not so “innocent” and definitely not as “innocently ignorant” as it might appear at the first glance... Mr. Tahil knows the subject very well; he understands very well all the processes of nuclear reactions – on both chemical and physical levels. You could be absolutely sure that, unlike those loony conspiracy theorists that you could encounter on the Internet, Mr. Tahil by no means suffers from any delirium – indeed, he is perfectly aware of what is talking about.

The problem, however, is that there are some reasonable grounds to suspect that Mr. Tahil knows not just “something”, but absolutely everything – of what exactly happened with the World Trade Center.

Apparently he knows about the WTC nuclear demolition scheme more than I do (later below you will understand where my own knowledge comes from and you may then compare it with that of his, if you so wish). I have arrived at this particular suspicion because the mere amount of knowledge possessed by Mr. Tahil in regard to the exact position and exact effects of these nuclear explosions under the Twin Towers is tantamount to his direct involvement in designing the actual WTC nuclear demolitions scheme. Even if he did not design it personally, then he must have been, at least, talking for several hours to its actual designer. By no means might any casual “innocent engineer” acquire such exact (and apparently top secret) information by simple guessing...

The conclusion is this – the author of the “Ground Zero: The Nuclear Demolition of the WTC” obviously knows the entire 9/11 truth – exactly as the author of these current lines does. However, there is a big difference between us. If I intend (it will be done below very soon, just be patient for awhile) to explain to my reader everything what really happened with the WTC, Mr. Tahil, who apparently knows the same things, if not more, for some unknown reason tries his best to mislead his reader.

After a long deliberation over what could be a reason behind such a scientific fiction, I concluded that the reason could probably be only this one: a certain “Mr. William Tahil, B.A.” has been hired by some true 9/11 perpetrators who have ordered him this work. It seems to me that in reality his bizarre, yet “scientific-looking” book was intended to serve as nothing else than an emergency “last-ditch” cover-up in case all other kinds of cover-up would fail and suspicions of the common people would come close to the truth.

One probably knows that the most dangerous kind of lie is one where there is the biggest percentage of truth being mixed into it.

For example, the lie (I mean the “truth” for the plebeian consumption) offered by the U.S. Government about 9/11 is not a dangerous kind of lie. Since there is not even a particle of a truth present in it, even to the most gullible and to the most primitive people its clear that this is a lie.

The second kind of lie (I mean the secret and “awful” kind of “truth” intended for “patricians” – which exploits alleged technicalities explained in detail in the abovementioned “Conspiracy Theory No. 6”) is much more dangerous. It contains some “honestly-looking” elements, which makes such kind of lie much more believable. Yet, still, it is possible (especially for a specialist) to disprove even the second “truth”.

However, the kind of “truth” provided by the book of Mr. Tahil is not simply “dangerous”. It is destructive; because it contains almost 98 percent of the truth and only about 2% of lie, which in this particular case would be the most poisonous 2%...

This is the exact reason why I suspected that his book was intended as a kind of highly destructive weapon to defend the real 9/11 perpetrators at the very last ditch of their defense – in case if they would be at last put in a corner and there would be no more room to retreat. The real danger is that if Mr. Tahil’s book would circulate widely and many innocent people would get its point, all of them would be severely “poisoned” with the wrong idea which is so dangerously close to the truth.

You could probably imagine that in such a case it would be impossible (judging from the merely psychological point of view) for these people to switch their minds to begin to believe the real truth – simply because the truth differs from this lie by too little a margin.

This is the psychological danger represented by this misleading work. It automatically attracts suspicions that this book was indeed ordered by some serious people, who understand not only about nuclear weapons alone, but about psychological weapons as well. Moreover, it seems that this particular story about the alleged “clandestine nuclear reactors” was indeed intentionally circulated among some “deserving patricians” and that at least some U.S. officials believe in this version too.

Former New York Mayor Rudolph Giuliani, at least on one occasion, made more than suspicious allusion to “nuclear reactors” when he was talking¹³² about the WTC destruction and peculiar “underground fires” that were according to him “dangerous for ground zero responders’ health”. You will later encounter a full version of the abovementioned speech of R. Giuliani at the end of the chapter of this book named “Some interesting testimonies of the 9/11 witnesses”.

My suspicions in connection with the book “Ground Zero: The Nuclear Demolition of the WTC” are indeed so serious, that we will come back to this book once more – when later in a course of the narrative we will discuss the exact technicalities of the WTC collapse.

Another peculiar thing is that Mr. Tahil begins his book with this epigraph:

“Ground Zero: the point on the ground directly under the explosion of a nuclear weapon” meaning that Mr. Tahil surely knows that “ground zero” is not the place where a nuclear reactor has exploded, but a place where a nuclear weapon has exploded.

Nonetheless, the preface to his book on the very first page contains this statement (“have you ever heard about “deliberate” core meltdown of nuclear reactors that could allegedly result in “nuclear explosions”?):

“What was the enormous source of energy that caused the destruction of the WTC? It was not a few thousand gallons of jet fuel. It was not even a few thousand pounds of conventional explosives. It was a Nuclear Explosion. Two Nuclear Explosions. But even more than that, these were not just atomic bombs. The explosions were caused by the deliberate core meltdown of two clandestine nuclear reactors buried deep beneath the towers.”

How do you like the above statement? Considering that these ravings are voiced not by an ignorant school-child, not by a loony conspiracy theorist from the Internet, and not even by a comedian à la “Mr Bean”, but by an apparent scientist? By a scientist who knows the fission sequence of Uranium, who is capable of explaining to you about radio-active isotopes, and who is, moreover, educated enough to know what “ground zero” used to mean in the pre-9/11 English language?

¹³² An article titled “Rudy Tuesday” published by The New York Magazine online: <http://nymag.com/news/features/28517/>

Try to contrast the level of Mr. Tahil's education and the level of his knowledge against his statement about the "deliberate core meltdown of clandestine nuclear reactors that caused nuclear explosions"... I hope you will make proper conclusions when you analyze this strange statement of his...

To conclude with the abovementioned book for now, I would say that Mr. Tahil presents to his reader quite a true picture of everything. His picture is so exact, that he even managed to place his imaginary "nuclear reactors" in their exact needed positions, Moreover, Mr. Tahil managed to guess the exact positions of his "nuclear reactors" not only in a sense of their depths, but even in a sense of their horizontal coordinates, which is the most suspicious exactness of his supposed "guessing".

However, the "true picture" of events, as presented by Mr. Tahil, has two relatively "minor" faults. These faults could still be easily corrected. You should take his book, and everywhere where there is mentioned a "nuclear reactor" – change it to an "underground thermonuclear charge". Additionally, instead of the digit "2" in regard to the exact number of the nuclear devices used, you have to use the digit "3", meaning: one nuke for WTC-1, one – for WTC-2, and one – for WTC-7.

And then you will get the true story about the WTC demolition with almost exact technical details.

Barbarian truth: the WTC nuclear demolition scheme and what benefits could be extracted out of the knowledge of it...

As you remember, we have reviewed the “patrician” version of the so-called “truth”, while the plebeian version of it was commonly known, so I did not even need to bother spending precious time to review it.

Finally, here is your Barbarian truth, the Barbarians:

The U.S. building regulations do not permit construction of skyscrapers unless some satisfactory demolition scheme is provided in advance by their constructors (at least, so it was in the ‘60s, in the ‘70s, and in the ‘80s).

Honestly speaking, I am not familiar with exact details of these regulations. However, I know it from several U.S. architects (who contacted me after my video presentation was published on YouTube in 2010) that such regulations indeed existed and that it was a particular issue during the construction of the WTC Twin Towers in New York (as well as during construction of the Sears Tower in Chicago).

Apparently, the Twin Towers’ constructors could not convince the appropriate authorities to permit these skyscrapers’ construction because of the following reason: there was a serious safety problem arising from the extreme height of the Towers. Engineers were not sure at all how to deal with them in case the Towers would begin to fall – because they would seriously damage their entire surroundings. Considering that the buildings were almost a half-kilometer tall, the problem was indeed very serious.

Besides, taking into account that the Twin Towers were a new kind of hollow-tubes steel frame buildings – where incredibly thick perimeter- and core- columns functioned as bearing structures, there would be definitely a problem in the future when they would become eventually obsolete. Considering the Twin Towers’ height and extreme rigidity, there was no acceptable engineering solution as how to bring them down nicely. Due to their long and extremely rigid internal steel cores and steel perimeters, there was absolutely no way for the Twins to fall straightly down – they could only fall over with their full 400 meters length and it seemed that nothing could be done to avoid it.

Understandably, you could not get permission from the Department of Buildings to build such a mammoth structure without offering first how you are going to demolish it either in the future, or even in case of emergency. Since traditional demolition methods would not work in the case of the WTC Twin Towers, nothing could be done to convince the Department of Buildings to permit their construction.

However, a solution was found.

It was kept secret from the American public and not many people in America knew about the true nature of this solution – probably only several hundred or even less people knew about it in detail.

The solution was as follows: beneath each of the Twin Towers there was to be a special borehole. Then, at a depth of about 50 meters beneath the lowest underground floor of each of the Towers, there were to be huge thermonuclear charges positioned – approximately 150 kiloton in TNT yield each (more than 10 times the size of the first atomic bomb dropped on Hiroshima in 1945). This was called an “emergency nuclear demolition scheme”. At least, it was known under such a peculiar name in the Soviet Special Control Service, where I used to serve at the end of the ‘80s; so I simply translated its Russian name back to English. Though, I presume in the original English it might have sounded differently than I call it now. If I am wrong in its exact English definition, I would like to apologize in advance.

As it is known, any real deep underground nuclear explosion will create a cavity beneath the Earth’s surface – by vaporizing rock or soil from among its immediate surroundings. Considering that Manhattan was built on granite rock, demolition engineers calculated that this particular 150 kiloton explosion would create an underground cavity of about 100 meters in diameter (ideally, the cavity should extend itself by 50 meters to any direction from an actual underground position of the nuclear charge – in a professional nuclear jargon called “zero-box”).

The cavity was supposed to reach to the end of its upper sphere, the lowest underground level of the Tower only, but without reaching the Earth’s surface. In such a case, there was not supposed to be any radioactively contaminated soil thrown away to the surface as a result of such a nuclear explosion. Thus, the radioactive contamination of the surroundings would be limited to only that caused by some radioactive gases escaping the cavity to the earth's surface. Of course, there was supposed to be neither any air-blast wave, nor any radiation, in either visible or in invisible spectrums, nor any Electromagnetic Pulse – since all these well-known destructive factors belong only to an atmospheric nuclear explosion, but not to one conducted deep underground.

The following turn of events (I mean the expected demolition scenario) was estimated to be as follows: immediately after such an underground nuclear explosion, there would be a cavity created with the diameter of about 100 meters. There would be extremely high temperatures resulting from the nuclear explosion inside the cavity: well over 5 thousand degrees Celsius (over 9 thousand degrees Fahrenheit), even after the initial cooling down.

Above – an approximate “final” size of an underground cavity created by a 150 kiloton nuclear explosion detonated deep underground in granite rock.

From the drawing above you could imagine how an underground cavity is supposed to look like if it were created by a sufficiently deep underground nuclear explosion of about 150 kiloton in TNT yield detonated in granite rock.

Above – basic demolition idea in regard to each of the Twin Towers of the WTC.

Looking at the next drawing above, you can imagine one of the Twin Towers on top of this cavity with its lowest underground floor slightly touching the upper sphere of the overheated cavity (the Twin Towers' lowest underground foundations were 27 meters below the Earth' surface). That was the original demolition idea.

Such a development would cause the Tower to lose its foundations completely and to be “sucked” into the cavity, and, in the same time – to quickly melt down. The temperature of the nuclear explosion is so high, that it would cause both steel and concrete alike to melt down almost immediately. In about 20-30 seconds or so the entire 415 meters long Tower was supposed to neatly immerse into the 100 meters cavity; because, in the same time the Tower would be completely molten.

The effect should look as if you heat a small metal cup and place into it vertically a long bar of ice-cream. Even if that bar of ice-cream is five times longer than the cup, it will quickly melt down and neatly fit into the cup, so that no ice-cream “debris” would spill around the cup. The idea was that the entire Tower would nicely fit into its own footprint – so that no debris would fall outside the footprint, and no surroundings would be damaged by any debris due to the presumable absence of any debris.

Whether this demolition scenario was based on a presumption that the Towers would be first reduced to dust by a pressure wave expanding upwards or not, I do not know. Though, logically, it seems that they should have foreseen that effect. There are reasons to believe that the demolition experts knew physical properties of underground nuclear explosions and so could predict the demolition scenario.

This nuclear demolition idea was not so bad from the engineering point of view. However, it would have been, of course, absolutely unacceptable to the lay population who feared any nuclear stuff-- most of all, without being able to properly appreciate the brave and modern ideas of engineers and other safety specialists.

Anyhow, the idea of demolishing skyscrapers by underground nuclear explosions remained controversial even among specialists, because nobody was able to come up with any reasonable solution concerning the imminent post-demolition radioactive contamination problem. Even if the actual underground cavity would not reach the Earth’s surface by its actual upper end (so that technically it would still be considered a “contained” nuclear explosion), there would still be a lot of radioactive vapors emanating from the two holes where the buildings just stood. Actually, some specialists had argued that the molten upper remnants of the so demolished buildings would serve as a natural sarcophagus that supposedly would contain the radioactive contamination quite successfully. Though, of course, nobody was sure about what would really happen due to the complete lack of experience in such a field. In any case, there remained a lot of controversies surrounding this idea. That is why the emergency demolition scheme of the World Trade Center was kept secret – the populace that was prone to “nuclear scares” supposed not to know about it, while the two nuclear charges were laid down beneath both Twin Towers and let wait for their H-Hour. Unfortunately, there was no other reliable emergency demolition scheme available, and, without it, it was impossible to convince the Department of Buildings to permit the Twin Towers construction.

Sizes of such 150 kt charges were far greater than that of any “mini-nuke”, of course. You could imagine how these charges looked like from the enclosed picture – where some Soviet-made 118 kiloton nuclear charge is depicted.

This is how some 118 kt nuclear charge looks like; bricks on its background could be used to scale its absolute size. 150 kt would be slightly bigger.

This is how a “mini-nuke” or “suitcase-nuke” of only 1 kiloton looks like. It is easy to imagine its absolute size by looking at its small details.

The third nuclear charge – under the building 7 – was apparently added later; maybe in the late ‘80s.

During my service in the Military, I had learned only about the nuclear charges under the Twin Towers.

It is suspected, however, that since adding the building 7 to the complex in the late '80s and making the WTC-7 the "command center" of the entire WTC property, the initial nuclear demolition scheme of the Twin Towers has been modified.

Initially, it was supposed to be the two vertical boreholes under each of the Twin Towers, but later it was changed to two horizontal fortified delivery tunnels starting from beneath the WTC-7 and leading to the zero-boxes beneath each of the Twin Towers at the same old depths (50 meters below their lowest foundations). In this arrangement, the demolition charges were supposed to arrive to their "zero-boxes" shortly before the actual demolition jobs by mini-railways. Why such a change in design of the scheme is suspected, and will be explained in detail later in another chapter.

Despite this plan being kept secret from the American citizens, the nuclear demolition scheme was well known to the Soviet side (at least, to the Soviet Special Control Service, where I used to serve). To be honest with you, I have no clue why the Soviet Special Control Service knew about it. It might have been either because of an official notification from the American side (due to the obligations under the U.S.-Soviet so-called "1976 Peaceful Nuclear Explosions Treaty"¹³³) or, maybe, as a result of some Soviet Union's own intelligence activities.

Actually, although it might look shocking for a lay person, it meant nothing really shocking for the Soviet specialists: they were not surprised much when they learned that their American colleagues decided to use the nuclear explosions to demolish some buildings. From the technical point of view there was nothing really astonishing in this news. In the Soviet Union there were also a lot of underground nuclear explosions used for purely civil purposes. The nukes were used for many things – from creating cheap underground gas-holders for natural gas to creating some large water reservoirs. However, the approach of the Soviet side, to the safety in this case, was strikingly different. Even though one nuclear explosion might create a kind of a large artificial lake in only a couple of seconds and this could be a very useful technique, the Soviet specialists would never dare to carry out any nuclear explosions for whatever reason in populated areas. Those "peaceful" nuclear explosions occurred only in remote areas, with definite prior permission of the Soviet Government, with obligatory informing the local governments, and under very strict safety control.

In accordance with the Soviet classification of that time, both – a legal status and a caliber (150 kiloton in TNT yield) of the nuclear demolition charges under the WTC Towers in New York fell under the conditions of the signed in 1976 between the USA and the USSR "Treaty on Threshold Limitations for Underground Nuclear Explosions Conducted in the Interests of the National Economy" (also known as simply the "1976 Peaceful Nuclear Explosions Treaty"). As such they were considered as "civil nuclear charges, not controlled by the military".

To be frank, I have to say that during my military service at the end of the '80s I knew very little about the actual nuclear demolition scheme of the Twin Towers (and nothing at all – about the nuclear demolition scheme of the WTC-7).

All I knew about it was only the fact of its existence, and the depth and the approximate yield of the nukes. The exact details of the nuclear demolition scheme discussed in subsequent chapters of this book I obtained (or managed to calculate on my own) much later – well after the 9/11 events.

Firstly, my knowledge of the scheme allowed me to understand what really happened with the Twin Towers and the WTC-7 on 9/11 and, based on this understanding, to make further calculations and conclusions.

Secondly, it relieved me from the necessity of guessing – how would they be able to demolish the Twin Towers? If not for my definite knowledge about the underground demolition nukes of 150 kiloton each, deep under the Twin Towers, perhaps, I would go wrong in my guessing and today I might have become an advocate of a certain ridiculous conspiracy theory...

Thirdly, it changed my life forever. It was because of this former service of mine in a nuclear department of the Soviet Armed Forces, and because of my knowledge of the WTC emergency nuclear demolition scheme, that I became virtually a "part of the game". I became acquainted with some real 9/11 planners and with perpetrators of the actual nuclear terrorism. This, on one hand, seriously complicated my life. On the other hand, it completely changed my understanding of many things. Wow! Now, I really know a lot of things! And I am sharing this with you now.

¹³³ http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Peaceful_nuclear_explosions

And, lastly, that knowledge has elevated my legal status.

My status was not elevated from “a conspiracy theorist” to “a nuclear demolition expert”. Please, do not get me wrong. I am by no means an “expert”, even though the shills would dream about it – if I proclaim myself an “expert”, the shills could assault my conclusions and accuse me of being an impostor, rather than an expert. No, folks, this cheap trick will not work with me. That knowledge of mine elevates my legal status not from the “conspiracy theorist” to the “expert”, but from “the conspiracy theorist” (although I have never been one in reality) to “the witness”. The small, modest, not enough educated, lacking the expert knowledge, perhaps, even stupid, but sincere w-i-t-n-e-s-s. It permits me to swear by the Name of The God Almighty that I indeed knew about the existence of the WTC emergency nuclear demolition scheme more than 10 years prior to the 9/11 events and that this knowledge of mine was obtained while serving in the Soviet Special Control Service – the organization responsible for the nuclear explosions’ detection and for the control of nuclear-related international treaties.

So, in order to counteract spiteful assaults of the shills, who, of course, claim that I am “impostor”, I could arrange my main statement in this particular way:

1) I am not sure at all how the nukes had demolished the WTC from the technical point of view – despite that I have attempted to provide the most satisfactory technical explanation ever made in relation to 9/11, I would not dare to swear to God that I know it for sure.

2) I can’t even swear that it was the nukes that demolished the WTC. I was not there, after all, and it was not me who pressed the “red buttons”. In this situation I would not dare to swear to God that I know it for sure. Maybe the original 150-kiloton demolition nukes were at the last moment substituted for mysterious beams-from-the-space – those envisaged by Dr. Judy Wood? Or maybe the original demolition nukes were disabled by those “giant lizard-looking aliens” as alleged by some other conspiracy theorists, and those “lizard-looking aliens” finished off the WTC by some “alien” means that we, stupid earthly bipeds, are not entitled to comprehend? Or, maybe, the original 150 kiloton demolition nukes were substituted for some small, nano-sized genetically modified insects? It might be that Professor Steven Jones meant the gluttonous white ants (genetically reduced to the nano-size) when he talked about his so-called “nano-thermite(s)”? Maybe he meant “nano-termites”, but his listeners mistook the word “termite” (zool.) for the word “thermite” (chem.)? And may be it was those voracious “nano”-termites that instantly chewed the WTC steel and so reduced it into the fine dust?

Please, treat the two points above as the last legal disclaimer of mine.

3) All I know in the capacity of the witness is this: there were huge thermonuclear demolition charges deep under the Twin Towers. These were intended for their emergency demolition and they were a part of the WTC construction.

4) In addition to it, I could swear (as any other man could do, actually), that the spot of the former World Trade Center bears the name “ground zero”, and that this particular Civil Defense’s designation (that was spelled properly with low-case letters for at least 3 days following September the 11th, 2001) was awarded to the place of the WTC collapse in less than two hours after the first of the Twin Towers fell.

5) Plus, optionally, I could testify, under oath, that in all, without any exception, pre-9/11 English dictionaries the definition of “ground zero” was this: “an exact hypocenter of a nuclear or a thermonuclear explosion, or its projection onto the Earth’s surface” and this highly-tailored military expression has never had any “metaphorical”, “colloquial”, “figurative”, “idiomatic”, or any other secondary meaning. And that after 2002 the desperate U.S. Government ordered to re-define “ground zero” in all newer dictionaries – by ascribing to it several alleged secondary senses. And, moreover, that the desperate U.S. Government ordered to produce some fake backdated dictionaries with “broadened” definitions of “ground zero”, and these fake backdated dictionaries (that appear to be published “before 9/11”) were inserted in all libraries, the Library of Congress inclusive. (I state so to promise that if any shill would dare to bring any of such backdated alleged “pre-9/11” dictionaries into a court-room in order to counter my claims, I swear I could produce the abundant proof that his concoction is indeed backdated and that his “pre-9/11” dictionary was printed in reality well after the year of 2001.)

I hope that my five points above have clarified my position in regard to my legal status and from now on the skills will lose legal grounds to continue accusing me of being an “impostor”.

I will repeat myself: it is not within my witness’ capacity to claim the truth in the last instance for either of the first two points listed above.

Yes, I could suggest that it was the pre-positioned 150 kiloton demolition nukes that stayed there for a few decades waiting for their H-Hour.

And yes, I could suggest how a deep underground thermonuclear explosion would instantly reduce steel to steel dust (and, indeed, it seems that I was the only the person in the world who was able to explain that phenomenon, at least – you will see my explanations in the very next chapter).

However, I could only suggest it. I am not an expert, after all. I am neither a specialist in designing nuclear weapons, nor a specialist in testing nuclear charges, nor a mathematician, nor a physicist, nor a geologist, nor a construction engineer, nor an architect, nor a specialist in demolitions in general, nor in nuclear demolitions in particular. I am merely a witness (not of the demolition, do not get me wrong – I am only a witness who served in the Soviet Special Control Service in the late '80s and got some little piece of sensitive information while there). Hope you got my point.

Nonetheless, my “lay person’s suggestion” (as opposed to the expert opinion) in regard to the mechanics of the nuclear demolition of the WTC, as well as my “lay person’s opinion” in regard to the rest of 9/11 mysteries, were appreciated at their true value by the majority of innocent people who were genuinely interested in understanding 9/11. It would not be a mistake to state that by December 2012 well over one million people understood what really happened with the World Trade Center after being acquainted with my humble non-expert suggestions.

I sincerely hope after reading the next chapter you will also join the ranks of the latter.

Barbarian truth: Nuclear Coup de Grâce or the H-Hour of the World Trade Center. Technicalities of the Twin Towers collapse from the “nuclear” point of view.

Above – two photos with details of the South Tower collapse – its beginning and its end.

Two pictures above clearly show us the South Tower's collapse. First, its relatively intact and more or less solid upper part had tilted to the “wrong” side (considering the position of the initial so-called impact spot).

Then, almost immediately, it began crushing all the way down with near the speed of free fall. On its way down, the top was spreading for a couple of seconds some relatively small debris and then – crushing under itself only fine dust, to which the entire Tower's structure has been “unexplainably” and instantly reduced. The North Tower managed to collapse in a similar way.

P.S. This particular observation is irrelevant to our problem now, but nonetheless, I would like to draw your attention to some interesting thing: on the second photo above you could clearly see those pieces of the outer aluminum coating of equal length that are descending ahead of the main cloud of steel dust. These belonged to the upper parts of the Tower, of course, because the coating belonging to the lower parts was reduced to “aluminum dust”, along with the steel that was reduced to the “steel dust”.

Coming back to our main problem: why the steel building was instantly transformed to such fine steel dust? And why the Twin Towers collapsed not as “neatly” as the engineers who created the emergency nuclear demolition scheme had apparently envisaged? To re-phrase the above question: why was there apparently “unplanned” debris and thousands of tons of fine steel dust flying around?

Before I proceed to the explanation of the particular WTC collapse, I am obliged to explain (at least briefly) what usually happens during a typical underground nuclear explosion. On the drawing below there are the four main stages of it depicted and described:

1) Nuclear explosion started to heat rock around its hypocenter.

2) Overheated rock vaporized. As a result of the disappearance of the vaporized rock a so-called “primary cavity” appeared. However, it is not empty. It is filled with the former rock now in a gaseous form. Extremely high pressure of the gases inside the cavity begins to expand the actual cavity at the expense of the neighboring areas of the still solid rock.

3) The actual cavity reaches its final “secondary” size - extremely high pressure of gases inside of it expands it from its former size (shown by a dotted line) to a bigger size (shown by a firm line). Since this expansion occurs at the expense of the neighboring areas of the rock, these neighboring areas of the rock become tightly compressed.

4) Final picture. White: the underground cavity (its secondary size); blue: a so-called “crushed zone” – totally pulverized rock (crushed into complete microscopic dust ~100 microns particle size); green: a so-called “damaged zone” – partly crushed rock.

Now we suppose that some nuclear charge of 150 kiloton of TNT yield is buried in a relatively hard rock environment – comparable to a hardness of the soil of Manhattan. In this sample we presume that such a charge is placed in a depth of 200 meters. What will be the consequences of its explosion?

First, there will be an underground cavity of about 50 meters in radius (or 100 meters in diameter). The center of this cavity will be at the former position of the nuclear charge, of course. The cavity will result because of the disappearance of the vaporized rock. It will happen because the entire tremendous energy of an actual nuclear explosion, which in the atmospheric conditions supposes to create a well-known atomic blast with all its well-known trade-mark destructive factors, in the case of an underground nuclear explosion will be exclusively spent on the vaporizing of surrounding materials.

Try to imagine what will happen next.

The cavity will be immediately surrounded by a layer of completely crushed rock. This second layer, immediately surrounding the cavity, is called the “crushed zone” in a professional nuclear jargon. The thickness of the second layer (the “crushed zone”) might depend on the hardness of the soil and also on the relative hardness of the soil in comparison with the hardness of the soil at the exact hypocenter of the nuclear explosion. Roughly it would be 100-150 meters thick. A shape of the “crushed zone” is usually not exactly “round”. It normally has an “elliptic” form – with its longest end facing upwards – i.e. towards the Earth’s surface. You can imagine that as a result of its “ellipsoidal” form, the horizontal radius of the “crushed zone” would always be smaller than the vertical expansion of this “crushed zone”.

The “crushed zone” becomes actually “crushed” because immediately after a nuclear explosion a cavity in the middle is being created by the pressure of gases resulting from the vaporized rock first. The cavity itself becomes empty not only because of the actual vaporized rock’s disappearance, but also at the expense of neighboring (outer) areas. The cavity expands to every direction due to the extreme pressure of the gases, which (even after an initial drop of it) could still likely exceed 200 atmospheres.

To make it simple: there are actually two stages of creating of such a cavity.

At the first stage a “primary cavity” is created – only because of the disappearance of the vaporized rock.

At the second stage a “secondary cavity” is created – it is actually the same instance of the cavity, but it is larger in diameter. It becomes enlarged to its “secondary” size, because the vaporized gases would press outwardly and would expand the “primary” cavity at the expense of the neighboring areas of rock. Outer areas become so tightly compressed that the entire surrounding environment (even if it were basalt or granite rock) would be completely “dustified” (using a new convenient word coined by Dr. Judy Wood). Later, since the matter became extremely fragile, it would be easily crushed into fine dust under the slightest mechanical pressure.

The state of being “dustified” in this particular case is, in fact, a kind of very interesting state of material. Except only after an underground nuclear explosion, it can not be found anywhere else in the nature. It looks like this: while remaining seemingly “solid”, the so “dustified” rock (or whatever other material) will be immediately reduced to microscopic dust under the slightest mechanical pressure. You can even crush this kind of material to fine dust by simply pressing it with your bare hands, for example – it is that fragile. It could be probably compared with an extra dry (means deprived of any oil) halva or with a snowball made from snow that was not sticky. Such a “dustified” material, yet still looking like “solid” matter, will be the only filling of the “crushed zone”.

The “crushed zone” will be immediately surrounded by the third layer – in the professional jargon called the “damaged zone”. This one in our sample could be as thick as about 50 to 150 meters. This zone would contain pieces of rock also damaged, but not actually “dustified” in the abovementioned sense. A surrounding area further beyond the “damaged zone” could be considered relatively intact¹³⁴.

Considering that in our sample the nuclear charge was buried only 200 meters deep, we can make simple calculations about the abovementioned layers dispositions towards the earth’s surface. We will have:

- 1) from the former position of the nuclear charge up 50 meters (the radius is a half of the diameter) there will be a cavity;
- 2) next 120-150 meters – some “crushed zone” and this one would almost reach the earth’s surface – especially considering that an actual form of that “crushed zone” is not round, but rather elliptic – with the longest end facing upwards;

¹³⁴ Even the third zone will be also somehow damaged; actually, geologists and professionals who detonate nuclear charges underground also distinguish a so-called “block-fractured zone” and other zones of lesser damage; however, in our case, for the sake of simplicity, we will disregard the rest of such layers and make a rude estimation that beyond the typical “damaged zone” the materials remain undamaged – it will be just easier for us to think like this.

3) the third layer – the “damaged zone” – will probably never be observed in the direction towards the Earth’s surface because in the areas where it reaches the surface it will be overlapped by the “crushed zone”;

That is how the “layered” soil structure, surrounding a typical underground nuclear explosion looks like in general.

Now, please, take a look at the drawing below. It is an illustration of the resistance of the surrounding rock when a cavity is located not “ideally deep” below the Earth’s surface:

Above – illustration of resistance of surrounding rock in the case of an underground nuclear explosion that occurs not sufficiently deep (i.e. too close to the Earth’s surface).

Evidently, the resistance of the rock towards the Earth’s surface will be much less than towards any other direction. Understandably, because everything goes by the way of least resistance, the cavity will be expanded mostly towards the earth’s surface; therefore it would never be ideally round. It will always be ellipsoidal.

Now let us take a careful look at the drawing below.

The left drawing approximately shows how the elliptic forms of the “damaged” and “crushed” zones will extend upwards while decreasing the depth of burial of a nuclear charge (i.e. with the depth of its “zero-box”).

When the nuclear charge is buried very deep (I mean really very deep – i.e. sufficiently far from the Earth’s surface) – the damaged and crushed zones will be almost round and concentric.

However, with the “zero-box” positioning closer and closer to the Earth’s surface, the forms of the upper spheres of the former concentric zones become more and more ellipsoidal. It is because with nearing the surface it would be “easier” for the pressure (which actually expands these zones) to propagate upwards – it encounters less resistance towards the Earth’s surface (providing that the depth is sufficiently shallow, of course).

The last situation depicted on the below drawing is when the propagating upwards fronts of the “damaged” and “crushed” zones, before reaching the Earth’s surface, have reached some underground foundations (a situation 5).

In a situation 4) these “crushed” and “damaged” zones would simply stop propagating upwards upon reaching the Earth’s surface. However, in a situation 5) they would apparently continue to propagate upwards; and not only would they just continue, they would reach much farther distances, because the relative firmness, plasticity and conductivity of a half-empty steel tower are obviously different compared to those of surrounding solid granite rock.

The rest you can conclude yourself.

Now we come back to the question – why the Twin Towers were reduced to such fine dust before their collapse? And why the Twin Towers' collapse seemingly initiated from their tops, while logically it should have been from beneath?

I think the drawing above satisfactorily answers the second question: the Twin Towers' collapse was only seemingly initiated "from above". In reality, it was initiated from beneath. The "crushing wave" that was created by the pressure of the underground nuclear explosion propagated from the lowest parts of the building towards its highest parts and there must be no doubt as to this obvious fact. In the process of traveling upwards, this crushing wave did its job: it reduced steel and the rest of materials into fine dust (that was still sticking together, for a while, though). However, the crushing wave had not enough energy to reach the top of the tall Tower. It fell short of reaching the top by some 70-80 meters or so. The first outer wave (let us call it "damaging wave" that was pushing the boundaries of the outer "damaged zone") was travelling ahead of the "crushing wave", however; and it was more "successful" in propagating – it reached the higher floors of the Tower compared to the "crushing wave". The "damaging wave" fell short of reaching the Tower's top by some 40-50 meters only. Thus, the upper parts of the Tower were left intact – heavy and undamaged. Immediately beneath these there was a layer representing the "damaged zone" (shown in green at the above drawing). And everything below that was "dustified" by the "crushing wave" – representing the "crushed zone" (shown in blue in the above drawing). I hope you understand that in those "blue" parts the secondary "crushed" zone has overlapped the former "damaged" zone, while in the "green" parts – only the "damaged" zone alone is present. Understandably, the heavy upper parts of the Tower (shown in grey color) always press down under the forces of gravitation and in the process of their pressing down they disintegrated the "damaged" (green) and "dustified" (blue) layers and fell down to the ground with almost the speed of freefall. Thus, no one who is friendly with common sense (except the paid shills, of course) could continue to maintain that the collapse of the Twin Towers was allegedly "initiated from above". It was obviously initiated from beneath.

Now there is a question, of course: why the "crushing wave" and the "damaging wave" were not able to reach the very tops of the Twin Towers?

Well... It is difficult to answer this question. As I have said in my last disclaimer in the previous chapter, I am not acting here in a capacity of the "nuclear demolition expert", but merely in a capacity of a petty witness who just happened to know about the fact of the nuclear demolition scheme existence and nothing more than that. However, I will try to answer this question to the best of my modest abilities.

Initially, I guessed it was because the 150 kiloton of the underground nuclear explosions was not enough and maybe some 200 kilotons or so was required, while charges mightier than 150 kilotons could not have been used due to the legal limitations (the U.S.-Soviet Treaty on the Peaceful Nuclear Explosions provided that a single explosion could not exceed 150 kiloton). However, now I think that it was not the main cause. This trouble of the “insufficient dustifications” of the Twin Towers was most probably caused by the “injuries” inflicted to the internal Towers’ structures by the impacts of the “terrorist planes” (there were no physical planes, of course, do not get me wrong; but there were explosions of the hollow-shape cutting charges designed to cut “planes silhouettes” in the Twin Towers’ perimeters to imitate the impacts – so the injuries to the perimeters were inflicted anyway). Another possibility is that the “imperfect” Twin Towers’ collapse might have been also due to a certain engineering miscalculation (since nobody had ever demolished any skyscraper by nuclear explosions, it is understandable that no one has any experience in this particular field).

Anyhow, as everybody could see in various video clips available on the Internet, the WTC-7 that had not been damaged by any “plane” (and that was much shorter compare to the WTC-1 and -2) had indeed collapsed very neatly – exactly as planned by the demolition engineers.

Now let us imagine the possible demolition scenario. What exactly happened with the WTC when each of the underground nuclear demolition charges had been set off? And what might have been the possible engineering miscalculation (I am only talking about WTC 1 and 2, but not about the WTC 7, which was much lower in height and also spared by any “terrorist plane”)?

1) A nuclear explosion under the Tower began to develop and the underground cavity began to be created and to expand to every direction. Since it was a normal deep underground nuclear explosion, there was neither air-blast wave, nor usual fireballs emitting thermal radiation, nor Electromagnetic Pulse, nor ionizing radiation that could reach the earth’s surface, nor any sound. The underground nuclear blast itself went largely unnoticed by anyone around, except that some people in the immediate vicinity felt some unexplainable shaking of the earth – similar to an earthquake. Indeed, the earthquake was noticed and reported by many firefighters, who claimed in their testimonies that before the Towers had begun to collapse from above, they had definitely felt some earth shaking, and only then the collapse started¹³⁵.

2) What comes next – is the effect of Towers’ “dustification”. It was caused by the “crushed zone” which is always immediately adjacent to the actual cavity, which expands itself in the middle. The thickness of such a “crushed” layer would be at minimum as big as the diameter of the cavity itself or even it could be at maximum as much as twice or even three times as big as the diameter of the actual cavity – especially by its vertical measurement.

We need to take into consideration that Manhattan was built on granite rock, which is apparently harder than the Twin Towers. If the “crushed zone” would extend itself by the vector of the Tower itself, a thickness of the “crushed zone” layer by that vector would be apparently “thicker” than its thickness by any other direction towards the remaining rock environment. What I mean is that if the “crushed zone” was estimated to be 100 meters thick in a typical solid rock environment, then towards the direction of the Tower (which is not “solid”, but contains a lot of emptiness, and, moreover is composed of steel that has different plasticity and conductivity than rock) it might have likely extended by double or even triple that distance.

The “damaged” and “crushed” zones are being expanded in every direction with roughly the same speed as the actual cavity expands itself in the middle, but the “damaged zone” reaches any object on its way first, because it is the outer layer.

Evidently, the border of the outer “damaged” zone would reach the underground foundations of the Tower first. Upon reaching them, it would continue to propagate by the Tower structure upwards in a form of a certain “wave” (let us, for the sake of simplicity, call it a “damaging wave” that pushes the boundaries of the “damaged zone”). This “damaging wave”, in the case of the Twin Towers, reached an altitude of some

http://www.cooperativeresearch.org/timeline.jsp?day_of_911=aa77&timeline=complete_911_timeline&startpos=2400 ; http://graphics8.nytimes.com/packages/pdf/nyregion/20050812_WTC_GRAPHIC/9110200.PDF

350 meters. In the process of its almost instantaneous travelling upwards, this wave instantly transformed these 350 meters of the above-ground Tower's body into the "damaged" state, matching the properties of the typical "damaged zone" – i.e. into pieces of broken material of various sizes.

Then it came turn of the second, the inner layer – the "crushed zone". The expanding border of the "crushed zone" reached the lowest underground foundations of the Tower immediately after the "damaged wave" had passed that road and the so created "crushing wave" had continued in the same direction by the Tower's body. In reality, it took only a split of a second for both waves to chase each other, but for the sake of better understanding we consider these two processes separately.

Thus, when the developing upward front of the expanding "crushed zone" had reached the lowest Tower's foundations – it sent up through the Tower the tremendous pressure (we could call it a "pressure wave" or a "crushing wave" – whatever you like). This pressure wave passed up to an altitude of some 300 meters, overlapping the former "damaged zone" and "crushing" the materials on its way, and so these 300 meters of the Tower's body became a part of the "crushed zone".

Now we could have a final picture of the "layered" structure of the Tower's damage:

Approximately first 300 meters of the Tower's structure became the "crushed zone": all steel and concrete in the structure (not to mention the furniture and the rest of the stuff inside, including remaining people, of course) were completely "dustified". I.e. they were reduced to a special condition that is typical for any deep underground nuclear explosion – when the matter has been crushed already, but still looks like "solid" (but only to be crushed to the actual microscopic dust a few seconds later).

Then approximately another 70 meters of the Tower's structure above the 300 meters were also crushed to something very small, but not actually "dustified". This second degree of structural damage began to represent the "damaged zone" – which in any underground nuclear explosion is the third inner layer – immediately surrounding the "crushed zone".

Finally, the last upper 50 to 70 meters of the Towers were damaged to a much lesser extent, or were not damaged at all because they were located quite far from the actual hypocenters of the underground nuclear explosions.

This is exactly why, when the Twin Towers had just begun to collapse, they first scattered some relatively big pieces of debris from their upper levels, and then – roughly 30-40 meters downwards – the falling tops continued to scatter only the fine fluffy dust. Everybody could see this on any available TV footage.

3) The last thing that went obviously unexpected (and I now believe it was the main problem) was this:

The upper parts of the WTC Towers were not only damaged to a much lesser extent in comparison with the lower parts of the Towers because travelling upwards "crushed" and "damaged" waves might not be able to reach some farther distances because of the supposed insufficiency of the 150 kiloton nukes. It was also due to the "injuries" inflicted to the steel structures of the Towers by the two "planes impacts". Since the aluminum "terrorist planes" (or to be more precise – cleverly positioned hollow-shaped charges that should produce a hole matching that of the plane's silhouette) had obviously severed some of the perimeters' structure, they created an "unexpected" gap between the lowest parts of the Towers (below the spot of the impact) and their upper parts (above the spot of the impact).

This "gap" had apparently played a vital role in decreasing the propagation of the "damaged" and of the "crushed" zones. You can clearly see it in available TV footage: visible "separation points" (at which the collapse of the Towers' tops visibly began) coincided with the "impact spots". They were also at visibly different altitudes in the case of the North Tower and in the case of the South Tower.

As you probably remember, the first aluminum "plane" penetrated the North Tower at the spot in between 94th and 98th floors, while the second "plane" penetrated the South Tower at the spot in between 78th and 84th floors. I think this could be illustrated by one of many available diagrams purporting to represent the "planes" impacts. One of such diagrams was found on Wikipedia¹³⁶. Here it is:

¹³⁶ http://lb.wikipedia.org/wiki/Fichier:World_Trade_Center_9-11_Attacks_Illustration_with_Vertical_Impact_Locations.jpg

The “impact spots” shown on the above diagram almost exactly corresponded to the patterns of both the two Twin Towers collapse. The “separation points” that separated the heavy undamaged tops of each Tower (that were to reach the ground) and the rest of the Towers’ bodies beneath (that were to be disintegrated into dust) were, indeed, at the very impact spots. This phenomenon, by the way, greatly eased the otherwise unachievable task of the clowns from the infamous “9/11 Commission” and those from the NIST. You can understand what I mean from the official illustration of the official claims shown below:

Above – one of many contemporary diagrams that strives to explain the U.S. Government’s claims in regard to their “Official Conspiracy Theory”. The diagram was published by the “Sydney Morning Herald”.

As you can see from the shameless official drawing above, the said phenomenon indeed allowed the spin-doctors to concoct the story that the collapses of the Twin Towers were due to the “burning fuel” and that they were indeed initiated at the impact spots.

It shall be understood that while the Tower's structures below the impact spot were either "dustified" or "damaged" almost completely, parts of each of the Towers above the impact spot remained more or less rigid and heavy pieces of the structures.

It shall be also understood that the time the "damaged-" and the "crushed zones" traveled all their way along the Towers' bodies was less than a second. It is because the speed of waves travelling in metals is supersonic – exceeding speed of sound in air (sound is a wave, in case you don't know) by several times. (You can check this postulate by repeating a well-known illustrative experiment: place your ear next to a railway track at a distance of, let's say, 300 meters from your partner who supposes to strike the rail with a hammer – and you will hear the impact sound twice: it will reach you almost instantaneously by the metal rail and after about a second it will reach you in a "natural" way – i.e. by the air.)

However, some 11-12 seconds after the underground nuclear explosion, but before the Tower's collapse, were spent on heating and vaporizing the rock and also on creating a certain "breaking point" – i.e. the point where materials surrounding the cavity of primary size yielded under the pressure of the gases trying to expand the cavity. Once this "breaking point" had been created, the actual "crushed" and "damaged" zones had been born, too, and their corresponding waves began their journey upwards at the supersonic speed.

It is very important to understand this, because many people realize that there was about an 11-12 seconds time-gap between the moment of the underground nuclear explosion (which could be determined by the Tower's shaking and by the earthquake felt by people around) and the moment the Tower started to collapse. Though, many people, who have this observation, can not comprehend why the Tower's top "waited" almost 12 seconds for the entire Tower's body to be "dustified", instead of going down under the gravitational forces in the very first second after the nuclear explosion underground. It shall be understood that these 11-12 seconds were not spent on "crushing" and "damaging" waves of the corresponding zones traveling slowly upwards. These 11-12 seconds were in reality spent on creating the breaking point below the surface, while the actual process of "dustification" of the Tower's body took a few milliseconds only – considering the supersonic speeds of the waves travelling in metals.

The abovementioned 11-12 seconds gap between the strong earthquake that preceded the Twin Towers' collapse and the beginning of the Towers' tops moving down could be easily seen in a couple of videos that are available on YouTube (at least, the author of these lines knows two of such videos showing a strong earthquake measuring well over 5.5 on the Richter scale that took place 12 seconds before the collapse of the North Tower).

One of such videos, by not unknown Etienne Sauret, of relatively high resolution, clearly showing the earthquake, can be found on YouTube here: <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=CM88xJX5FsA> or here: <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=xGAofwkAOIo>

The second of such videos under the name "NIST FOIA WTC1 Collapse (WNBC Dub10 54)" was relatively recently released as a part of the NIST files after a famous legal suit brought against NIST by several 9/11 researchers under "freedom of information" laws. This one is an exceptionally high quality footage that shows the very same strong earthquake 12 seconds before the North Tower's collapse, but filmed from a different viewpoint. You can find this unprecedented video on YouTube here: <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=MXeAPcsD3-o> or here: <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=0OPASIJm7Is>

Now, considering that we understood the mechanics, described above, we could proceed to understand the rest. We have already established that in only about 11-12 seconds after the nuclear demolition charge under each Tower had been set off, the pressure propagating upward has transformed the Tower structure to the "dustified" state – typical to the "crushed zone", with the smaller part of the Tower transformed to the "damaged" state – typical to the "damaged zone". That one extended, more or less, up to the spot of the impact of the "terrorist plane". Thus, the Tower, even though it still looked like a "rigid" structure, in reality had totally lost its rigidity and became just a formed pillar of dust.

To be exact, we could say that the Tower was actually not the "dust" yet; in reality it was still a bar of the "dustified matter" which was still sticking together, but it was as fragile as a completely dried-up "sandy castle" that was about to become disintegrated under its own weight.

Immediately, the heavy upper part of each Tower (relatively intact) began to fall under the gravitational forces, pressing and spreading around firstly some big and small debris (from the slimmer layer of the “damaged” zone) and then – only spreading microscopic dust (from the “crushed zone”) to all around Manhattan.

Another interesting observation is this: in both cases the upper parts of the Twin Towers (it was especially clearly noticeable in the case of the South Tower, but even in the case of the North Tower it was still noticeable) before they had started to collapse, had tilted, but both had tilted to the “wrong” side.

Above – the top of the South Tower tilts to the “wrong” side (i.e. to the side opposite the façade impacted by the “plane”) at the beginning of its collapse. Nonetheless, the “knuckle line” in this case matched more or less the altitude of the impact of the “terrorist plane” – the Tower began to tilt on about the same level.

Intuitively, it seems that the directions of their tilting should have been towards the gaps, created by the “impacts”. However, both Twin Towers’ tops tilted to the opposite side.

Why did that happen? Apparently, this phenomenon took place because the “crushed” and the “damaged” zones had both expanded to the undamaged façades of the Towers unhindered, while expansions of both zones by the façades that featured the structural damage, by the alleged “impacts” had been hindered (at least, to a certain extent). I think it is self-evident that the cuts in the steel bars (I mean those intended to represent the silhouettes of the aluminum planes) indeed constituted “interrupts” on the way of propagation of the “damaging” and “crushing” waves. That is exactly why the façade that had been damaged by the impact was damaged to a lesser extent by pressure waves sent by the underground nuclear explosion. This was the reason, why the Tower’s upper parts have tilted the “wrong” way before starting to crush down the “dusty” structures of the former Towers...

There was another interesting observation. During the collapse of the North Tower, its falling top (due to its “tilting” to one side”) managed to miss some lower parts of the Tower’s perimeter structure on its way down. Therefore, for a little while this “surviving” steel perimeter assembly (that was dubbed “spear” in the 9/11-truthing jargon) managed to stand on its own. However, in only a few seconds this seemingly “solid” steel assembly was reduced to steel dust without any seeming reason – as if it was wind that finished off the job, skipped by the falling North Tower's top. Below there are a few screenshots from one of the videos showing the details of the North Tower's collapse. Here you can see that phenomenon in detail.

Above – series of unique screenshots from a video of the North Tower's collapse showing the disintegration of the “dustified” steel perimeter assembly that occurred without any seeming reason.

The same moment, but shot from a different angle, could also be seen in the abovementioned NIST videos of the North Tower's collapse that showed the strong earthquake 12 second before the beginning of the collapse¹³⁷. You can see the moment of the disintegration of the “dustified” steel “spear” starting at about the 59th second from the beginning of the clip (the earthquake could be seen at the 19th second from the beginning; while the top of the Tower started to move down at the 31st second on that video).

I can't resist placing here a diagram I found on some 9/11 research site. It shows how small was a typical particle of the WTC steel dust (a black circle) in comparison with an approximate diameter of a typical human hair (a big outer circumference):

Coming back to the Twin Towers demolition ideas. As you could understand from the description above, instead of “sucking in” the entire Tower's structure, both cavities in both cases were able to consume and melt down only some relatively minor parts of the former Twin Towers. Their major parts were reduced to a fine dust that was thrown everywhere around Manhattan, instead of going into the cavity.

Dust covers an abandoned produce stand in lower Manhattan.

The photo above shows an example of that microscopic steel dust that covered all over Manhattan after the WTC demolition.

Many people mistakenly believed that it was allegedly "concrete dust". No, it was not. It was "complete" dust – but mainly pulverized steel. Despite common misconception, the WTC structures did not contain much concrete. Concrete was used only in limited quantities to make very thin floors slabs in the Twin Towers construction. It was not used anywhere else above the ground level. Even vertical walls around the elevator shafts were made of drywall plaster and not concrete. This was very unusual as plaster board or drywall did not give good fire resistance, but they had no choice – because buildings are supposed to sway due to winds and the concrete would be damaged in the process; some more flexible material must have been used in this case. This is just to confirm, that the major part of the WTC Twin Towers was indeed steel, not concrete. So this finest dust was in its major part represented by steel dust accordingly. You can even see that its color was indeed a "steel color" – it is clearly visible on the photo above; concrete dust would have a very different color – much whiter. Though, the WTC dust was not only "steel dust" alone – it was also "wood dust", "furniture dust", "carpet dust", "computer parts dust" and even "human dust", since people remaining in the Towers were pulverized in the same manner as the steel, computers, wood, and furniture.

Moreover, the expected "natural" sarcophaguses above the spots of the nuclear explosions had never been realized since the very materials that had been expected to be used in the creation of such "natural" sarcophaguses had been simply missing.

That is how a seemingly smart – "brave and modern" engineering solution, has resulted in a total fiasco.

The only thing that could be considered "fortunate" in this case is that you can be sure that not a living being was any longer alive at the time when the Tower began to collapse. Every man inside was instantly reduced to the same "dustified" state and later – to the fine dust; so nobody suffered too long. That is exactly why rescue workers at "Ground Zero" were so surprised that they were not able to find even one part of a body, nor even a piece of furniture – but only the fine dust. Only a passport of one of the alleged hijackers of those aluminum planes managed somehow to escape being pulverized (as well as it managed to escape being burned by the "blazing inferno") and was found relatively intact.

Thus, as opposed to the abovementioned "conspiracy theory No.6" (which suggests that all people and their remains were allegedly "vaporized"), all people and their remains were indeed "dustified". It happened because those people occurred within the typical nuclear “crushed zone” and so they were instantly crushed to that special “dustified” state by the “crushing wave” we studied above.

However, those people who happened to be in the upper floors of the Towers that represented the “damaged zone”, which was above the “crushed zone”, were not “dustified”. They were, instead, crushed to very small pieces. A horrible confirmation of it came 5 years later – when on the rooftop of the former Deutsche Bank building, during its pre-demolition cleaning, some “human remains” were discovered¹³⁸. They were mostly pieces of men’s bones as small as only 1/16 of an inch (or 0.15 cm). As you probably remember, the buildings’ parts immediately beneath the heavy tops of the Twin Towers were not completely pulverized and there was some small debris thrown around as only the tops of the Towers’ began to press downwards (while the fine dust had begun a little bit later – as the Tower’s tops proceeded farther downwards). Some of this debris obviously landed on rooftops of several neighboring buildings. It should be presumed that the abovementioned tiny pieces of the bones (that were obviously bigger than particles of that well-known microscopic dust) belonged to those remaining people who were above the totally “dustified” or “crushed” zone, but beneath the undamaged tops of the Twin Towers – i.e. exactly within the zone that in the nuclear jargon is called the “damaged zone”.

Interestingly, a similar effect has been noticed during atmospheric nuclear explosions. Standing animals (used as live targets) that happened to be struck by the air blast-wave, while being not very far from a hypocenter, resembled not usual stiff corpses, but sacks of skin filled with completely crushed bones. If some man is killed in such a way, you won’t be able to take his corpse by its hands and legs in order to load it to stretchers – because it will be so devoid of any rigidity. It seems that during an underground nuclear explosion, those who happened to be within the “damaged zone” also suffered a similar effect.

Above – remaining perimeter- (square) and core- (rectangular) columns of the Twin Towers at “ground zero” (amidst deadly radioactive vapors ascending from under the rubble).

For those who forgot how the actual core and perimeter columns of the Twin Towers looked like, there is a reminder in a form of the above photo. Just to remind you: each wall of these columns was thicker than a front armor of a tank. Imagine that the same kind of columns that belonged to the lower and middle parts of each of the Twin Towers (as well as to the entire length of the WTC-7) were instantly reduced to complete, fluffy microscopic dust that allowed the upper parts of the Twin Towers to reach the ground at freefall speed – as if under them were not remnants of any steel columns but merely air alone. By the way – the fact that these particular columns shown on the above photo were not pulverized should not mislead you into believing that the entire steel structure of the WTC managed to survive the pulverization. The thick columns shown on the above photo apparently belonged to surviving corners of the Twin Towers that occurred within a “dead space” because the demolition devices were positioned slightly “off-center” (this will be explained in more detail in the next two chapters), while thinner sections of perimeter assemblies visible in the pile obviously belonged to the undamaged tops of the Towers.

Top – The North Tower’s top just began to collapse a moment ago. Below – two photos showing details of the North Tower’s transformation into the fine dust during the collapse. A brownish building is the WTC-7.

The set of three pictures above shows the North Tower collapse (it collapsed second, despite being hit first). From the first photo we could easily notice that the “knuckle line” separating the upper (undamaged) and the lower (“damaged” and further – “dustified” or “crushed”) parts of the North Tower was the level of the impact of the “plane”. In this sense it repeated the pattern of the South Tower collapse – as you remember, in the case of the South Tower the “knuckle line” separating the “undamaged” and “damaged/crushed” parts of its structure also coincided with the impact zone of the “plane”.

From the two photos above it is clearly seen that the North Tower was reduced to the same fine fluffy dust as the South Tower was.

In the down right corners of the two photos above it is clearly visible that the WTC-7 (a glassy shining brownish building) was not damaged at all. On the right picture the WTC-7 appears to be a little bit "shorter" than on the left one, but this was not because the WTC-7 was "collapsing" in any way. It happened because a helicopter with the photographer was on the move and the second picture was taken from a slightly different angle and with the photographer himself being at that moment slightly farther from the WTC spot. The WTC-7 had not collapsed in reality until 7 hours later.

Notice:

Perhaps, you might need to watch my video presentation in order to understand more about the mechanics of the Twin Towers collapses. The video is more illustrative than the text here since real 9/11 video clips were used in that video presentation of mine. From the original videos of the WTC collapse it is much easier to grasp the demolition dynamics. Moreover, my video presentation contains comprehensive animated graphics that explain the physical effects of the underground nuclear explosions in general and in relation to the WTC demolition in particular. After watching this video presentation you will have a much better understanding than from reading this chapter.

The video presentation could be found on the Internet by searching for "Dimitri Khalezov video" or for "Dimitri Khalezov video download links" or for "9/11thology video" or for "Dimitri Khalezov DVD". Seek and ye shall find.

An improved version of the DVD with this 9/11thology presentation updated with latest information as of August 2013 will be available as a separate item, hopefully, by September-October 2013.

You will be able to find how to obtain the DVD on my website <http://www.911thology.com> or on rest of the "911thology" web sites.

An initial version of this DVD with the "9/11thology" presentation (as well as separate video files of it) was released totally free of charge and was available for download on the Internet from March 2009 till very recent. I didn't want to charge anything for it, because I hoped that more people could watch it if it was free. However, those who wished to support my research were urged to donate something, since I have spent a lot of time and efforts to obtain all necessary materials for it and to create that video presentation. However, not too many people actually donated (which I did not like, to be frank). That is why I decided to make an improved edition of the DVD to be available on a commercial basis. I guess that 15 US dollars is not a big money for working people in the West nowadays and they could easily afford paying for it.

Anyone is welcome to obtain this DVD of mine with an improved "9/11thology" presentation. It is probably even more impressive than this book, because it explains everything that happened on 9/11 in a little bit different way that uses more animated graphics and more references to contemporary 9/11 footage.

Barbarian truth: technicalities of the WTC-7 collapse from the “nuclear” point of view.

WTC7 would have always been a nagging problem for me, not its falling, except for at least one news report I heard that day, while standing in an airport. I don't know which station it was on, but it was most likely ABC, CBS, NBC or CNN on the airport TV. The news report claimed, “At least WTC7 is going to have to be brought by experts because it was in danger of falling ‘also.’” I included the ‘also’ because that is what is stuck in my memory banks. I just assumed that to be true, and got on down the road. Meanwhile, I'd suggest the truthers check who got ‘paid’ or ‘rewarded’ by insurance and/or the government for the destroyed buildings.

Texas Vet, Electrical Engineer, Physicist and Mathematician.

Unlike the WTC-1 and -2, the steel-framed WTC-7 was not damaged by any aluminum “terrorist plane”. Moreover, it was not as high as the Twin Towers, so its entire length managed to fit into the “crushed zone” alone (I mean in this case the “damaged zone” was completely overlapped by the “crushed zone”). That is why in the particular case of the WTC-7's demolition its physics were slightly different. There was no any heavy and relatively undamaged part above the main “dustified” structure – which might crush downward, spreading dust underneath itself as it falls down. That is why immediately after Mr. Larry Silverstein has permitted “to pull it” and the third 150 kiloton thermonuclear charge under the WTC-7 has gone critical, in about 11-12 seconds the entire length of the WTC-7 building has been transformed into a kind of a dried-up “sandy castle”. The building was completely “dustified” from its foundations up to its top and then it simply disintegrated under its own weight. That is what exactly happened with the WTC-7.

Why the collapse of the WTC-7 and that of the Twin Towers looked so much different could be easily understood from the below drawing that shows distribution of damaged and undamaged zones along these structures related to their absolute height:

This drawing shows distributions of “damaged” and “crushed” zones along the WTC Twin Towers’ and the WTC-7’s bodies. It is easy to understand that the entire length of the WTC-7 fit into the “crushed zone” alone and so there were no any undamaged part on top of it that might cause an effect of falling tops as shown in the Twin Towers’ collapse.

Two pictures above show the “unexplainable” WTC-7 collapse at about 5.21 EST. The first photo shows the very beginning of the collapse; however, there has been dust already created – it is clearly seen as beginning to ascend from the building’s footprint. The second photo shows the building’s top that has already fallen by about 25% of the entire WTC-7 Tower’s length.

An interesting observation (especially visible on the second photo) is that the dust over the WTC-7 top was not able to catch up with the rest and was obviously delayed. In several available movies the “delay” of the dust is especially noticeable. Thus, on the second photo the two distinctly different sources of the dust cloud could be observed – one is the dust that began to ascend from the WTC-7’s footprint, and the second one – is the “delaying” dust that remained from the WTC-7’s top, which has moved down too fast.

This picture shows that, unlike in the case with the WTC-1 and 2, the entire WTC-7 structure was reduced to dust, even the very top of it – hence the “delaying” dust. There was no separate “damaged zone”, but only the “crushed zone” alone that extended by the entire WTC-7’s height.

Someone might, of course, ask this question: but if the WTC-7 was completely “dustified”, as I claim, why then it was falling down in a relatively “neat” state? Why it was not disfigured during its fall? It looks like a pretty ordinary “conventional” demolition, isn’t it?

No. It did not look like an “ordinary conventional demolition”. The building 7 was as strong as the Twin Towers were. Therefore it was technically impossible to bring it down by any conventional means (you can re-read my explanations in a chapter dealing with conspiracy theories – where the “Conspiracy theory No.1” was duly disproved – considerations applied to the Twin Towers are equally applicable to the WTC-7). Secondly, the WTC-7 fell down not so “neatly” in reality. It looked more or less like a “building” only during the first 2-3 seconds of its collapse. After that, it no longer looked like a “building” – it looked like a pile of mess. You can review available videos of the WTC-7 collapse and you will surely notice it.

Other people might probably (and the skills will surely) ask: but why the collapse of the Twin Towers was initiated from above, while the collapse of the WTC-7 was obviously initiated from below?

Well. People who keep asking this silly question did not bother to study my explanations in detail. Please, re-read the previous chapter and make sure to watch my video presentation that is mentioned at the end of it. It is all explained there in the most comprehensive manner possible. The Twin Towers collapse was initiated from beneath. The WTC-7 collapse was initiated from beneath either. These three buildings were “dustified” by the pressure waves that originated from underground and travelled upwards. Thus, there was no difference in regard to the “initiation” of the collapse of either the Twin Towers, or the WTC-7.

The mechanics of their actual collapse was different, though. In the case of the Twin Towers there were heavy undamaged tops that began to press down, thus, spreading the debris and crushing the dust. In the case of the WTC-7 there was only more or less homogeneous “pillar of the sticking dust”. Of course, in this case the entire “pillar” was pressuring down under the gravitational forces. Therefore, the weakest parts that sustained the most pressure in the case of the WTC-7 were the lowest parts of the abovementioned “pillar of dust”. Therefore, the WTC-7 began to crumble from beneath and this crumbling continued till it consumed the entire length of the WTC-7. That made the visible difference between the collapse of the WTC-7 and the Twin Towers. However, the true causes of their collapse were the same.

Here is a bit of the WTC-7 history (taken from official sources):

The World Trade Center Building #7 (alias the Salomon Brothers Building) was the dark flat-topped 47-story skyscraper immediately north of the World Trade Center super-block, across Vesey Street. The WTC Building #7 was 300 feet from the plaza and its construction did begin only in 1985. It was the latest addition to the WTC complex.

Building #7 was a 100% steel frame building. Like the most modern skyscrapers, it had a series of columns ringing its perimeter, and a bundle of columns in its core structure. Its perimeter columns numbered 58 and its core columns numbered 25, according to the rather vague description provided in FEMA's “WTC Building Performance Study”.

The 23rd floor of the Building #7 had received 15 million dollars' worth of renovations to create an Emergency Command Center (EMC) for the then-Mayor of New York Rudolf Giuliani. The features of the command center included:

- Bullet- and bomb-resistant windows;
- An independent, secure air and water supply;
- The ability to withstand winds of 200 mph [meaning that these EMC windows were virtually anti-atomic – they were designed to withstand an overpressure of ~6.5 PCI – a very typical one for air-blast wave of an atomic explosion].

However, the fate of this Emergency Command Center was to be never used in a real emergency...

The official theory for the WTC-7 collapse, as published in Chapter 5 of FEMA Report¹³⁹, is this:

- At 9:59 AM (after the South Tower collapse), electrical power to the substations in WTC 7 was shut off.
- Due to a design flaw, generators in WTC 7 started up by themselves.
- Debris from the collapsing North Tower breached a fuel oil pipe in a room in the north side of the building. [This means the debris had to travel across the WTC 6 and Vesey Street – a distance of at least 355 feet, then – penetrate the outer wall of the WTC 6, and smash through about 50 feet of the building, including a concrete masonry wall.]

¹³⁹ http://911research.wtc7.net/mirrors/guardian/WTC/WTC_ch5.htm

- This, and other debris [that also made the journey across the WTC Building 6 and Vesey Street], managed to start numerous fires in the building. [Unfortunately, this event did not prompt anyone to turn off the generators.]
- The backup mechanism (that should have shut off the fuel oil pumps when a breach occurred) failed to work, and the fuel oil (diesel) was pumped from the tanks on the ground floor to the fifth floor where it ignited. The pumps emptied the tanks of all 12,000 gallons of fuel.
- The extant fires raised the temperature of the spilled fuel oil to the 140 degrees F required for it to ignite.
- The sprinkler system malfunctioned and failed to extinguish the fire.
- The burning diesel fuel heated trusses to the point where they lost most of their strength, precipitating a total collapse of Building 7. [This, in addition to the notion that the burning of kerosene could allegedly weaken structural steel, enriched the contemporary engineering science with another notion – that the burning of diesel fuel could allegedly achieve the same result.]

Probably, since the authors of the abovementioned claim felt a little bit ashamed, they decided to finalize their report as follows:

“...The specifics of the fires in WTC 7 and how they caused the building to collapse remain unknown at this time. Although the total diesel fuel on the premises contained massive potential energy, the best hypothesis has only a low probability of occurrence. Further research, investigation, and analyses are needed to resolve this issue....”

The abovementioned one was the only official document, published in regard to the WTC-7 collapse.

The 9/11 Commission Report did not mention the WTC-7 collapse – as if the unprecedented collapse of the modern, steel-framed 47-stories skyscraper was not worth any mentioning. Neither a final report of the NIST did mention anything in this regard.

Thus, the collapse of the WTC-7 on September 11, 2001, late afternoon, officially remains a mystery, which no official organization dares to mention (not to say to explain).

Even the seismic specialists from the Lamont-Doherty Earth Observatory of the Columbia University preferred to depict the WTC-7 collapse on their notorious seismogram as only a “conventional” seismic event that allegedly caused a seismic signal of only 0.6 on the Richter scale – as if such a process of disintegration of a pillar of fine dust (which very much resembled a kind of a soft snow) could cause any seismic signal whatsoever.

A certain Mr. William Tahil, B.A. in his notorious book also preferred not to place any “clandestine nuclear reactor” under the WTC-7; he oddly limited his scientific fantasies to claiming that there were only two nuclear explosions – under the WTC-1 and WTC-2.

Actually, it was only Larry Silverstein, who publicly admitted that the WTC-7 was indeed demolished intentionally. However, he prudently withheld the technical details and preferred not to specify by which means the last piece of his property was “pulled”...

Since my video-presentation appeared on the Internet on March 2010, I have received many questions from people who have watched it. Many asked me why did I claim that the building 7 was completely pulverized, while it was clearly visible that it was reduced to a huge pile of debris and that pile of the WTC-7 debris was, in fact, about 5 stories high?

In opinions of many, this was allegedly a proof that I was wrong and the WTC-7 was not pulverized by a nuclear explosion, but simply demolished by some conventional explosives – as any other building would.

I have no choice than to address this point now – otherwise, it might create an impression that I avoid vexed questions. Surely, I do not avoid anything. I am always ready to answer any question and to defend my claims from any suspicion, from any assault, or even from some genuinely innocent interest. Therefore I decided to make this latest addition to this Chapter.

First of all, let us remember that the WTC-7 was an extremely strong hollow-tube type steel-framed 47 stories high modern skyscraper of the latest generation. Actually, it appeared “small” only because it was standing near the 415 meters high Twin Towers. If the WTC-7 would stand as a separate structure, you would be surprised to see that it was indeed a skyscraper of its own. It was a very tall building; and a very strong one. Indeed, the WTC-7 was more rigid than even its two elder twin sisters. Therefore it was NOT TECHNICALLY POSSIBLE to demolish it using conventional controlled demolition methods – due to the same set of considerations discussed in the above Chapter dealing with debunking of various conspiracy theories in regard to the WTC demolition (see debunking of the Conspiracy Theory No.1 there for your reference).

Secondly, let us consider if the 5-stories tall pile of the WTC-7 debris was indeed “high”, taking into account that it was all that remained of the 47-stories tall skyscraper. Just to make it more illustrative I placed here a couple of photographs:

The above photo on the left shows the pile of debris that remained from the WTC-7 (the pile oddly emits vapors that are clearly visible). It indeed seems to be quite “high”. At least, so it appears for a naked eye (or, to be more exact, so it appears to a lay person, who is not an architect or a demolition expert).

However, you will surely get rid of this optical illusion – suggesting that the merely 5-stories high pile of the debris of the 47-stories high skyscraper is allegedly “a huge pile”, if you only look at the picture to the right – where the WTC-7 is depicted. Just imagine that if it were demolished by conventional means (if it were only technically possible), then the pile of the WTC-7 debris should have been at least 20-25 stories high. It is self-evident that near the entire body of the WTC-7 was pulverized and very little remained of that building.

Still, one more question remains – why this approximately 5-stories high pile of the WTC-7 debris did remain whatsoever and why the building was not pulverized completely – as it supposed to be from the above diagrams showing distribution of the “crushed zone” that seems to embrace the entire building? Why some relatively undamaged parts of outer walls with clearly visible window-frames seem to lay on top of the pile in the above photo?

This is indeed a good question; so, we need to find a good answer to it. Let us read first about the WTC-7 actual design. As it has already become a tradition, let us go to Wikipedia.

I am quoting: “The structural design of 7 World Trade Center included features to allow a larger building than originally planned to be constructed. A system of gravity column transfer trusses and girders was located between floors 5 and 7 to transfer loads to the smaller foundation. Existing caissons installed in 1967 were used, along with new ones, to accommodate the building. The fifth floor functioned as a structural diaphragm, providing lateral stability and distribution of loads between the new and old caissons. Above the seventh floor, the building's structure was a typical tube-frame design, with columns in the core and on the perimeter, and lateral loads resisted by perimeter moment frames."

A diagram is also provided by the Wikipedia article that shows how the transfer trusses that were used on the 5–7th floors to redistribute load to the foundation actually looked like:

In case if you did not get the point, I will explain in lay man terms what that Wikipedic explanation means. It means that the WTC-7 foundations were smaller in size than its actual enlarged footprint. It means that if you project the WTC-7 outer walls onto the Earth's surface, a perimeter that such a projection would draw on the Earth's surface would be bigger in size than the actual foundations of the WTC-7.

The WTC-7 bearing structure was peculiar – as appears from the above explanation, starting from its floor No.7 up, the building rested upon the abovementioned “system of gravity column transfer trusses and girders”. This means that the WTC-7 outer walls below that point (i.e. its outer walls 7 stories high) were merely decorations – i.e. a kind of “false walls”. They did not bear any loads and they were not connected to the WTC-7 foundations in a structural sense. I think it is quite easy to imagine now how the WTC-7 was actually designed.

Therefore these “false” outer walls that were 7 stories high were not pulverized. Because the “crushing wave” (caused by the “crushed zone” of an underground nuclear explosion propagating upwards) began its way upward the WTC-7’s body after hitting its lowest underground foundations first. And then it was conducted through the bearing structure of the WTC-7 till it reached the top of the building. However, such a “crushing wave” could only travel forward. It could not travel back. That is why it could not affect those 7 stories high “false” outer walls that were not connected to the deep foundations of the WTC-7. That is why these 7 stories high walls remained more or less intact and when the WTC-7 core and its entire body from the 7th floor upwards were completely pulverized and so disappeared, these remaining 7 stories-high perimeters fell inwards creating that about 5-stories high pile of the debris visible on the photograph. You could even see that the outer walls lying on top of the pile appear to be about 7 stories high (if you count their rows of windows). This is the explanation to this phenomenon.

In fact, a similar explanation is also applicable to another phenomenon – why some lower parts of the WTC Twin Towers’ perimeters managed to remain intact despite the fact that entire upper parts of their bodies were completely pulverized? You will encounter this explanation in the next chapter of this book.

In any case, you don’t have to doubt that the entire WTC-7 building was reduced to microscopic dust – this 5 stories high pile of debris should not deceive you. Ground zero responders who worked on the site of the WTC-7 were surprised that they could not find any piece of furniture, any mouse, any computer part, any telephone, or any other thing that could tell it was a 47-stories high office building. Apart of those “false” walls lying on the piles of debris and apart of some number of steel beams (apparently supporting those “false” walls) nothing could be found in that debris; except only peculiar microscopic dust – which was not different from the microscopic dust produced during the Twin Towers’ collapse.

Technicalities of the WTC-7 collapse and the rest of the WTC collapse from the logical point of view. Unproven suspicions.

I would like to start with a certain disclaimer: I am not going to bear any responsibility for anything I suggest in this chapter, and I will not accept any arguments intended "to disprove my claims" in the future, as well as any accusations that I might lie here, by stating in advance: I do not know for sure about anything I say in this chapter and I am only guessing by using logic.

I will begin this chapter reminding you of one "interesting" fact already mentioned in the beginning of this book. This is about the on-site construction manager for the World Trade Center – Mr. Frank Albert De Martini. He was the one who gave the peculiar interview on January 25, 2001, talking about the WTC Twin Towers' resilience, comparing it with a "mosquito net", and the Boeing – with a pen, which could do nothing to such a net.

In case you wish to watch that unprecedented and so "timely" interview, you could watch it here on YouTube (there are, perhaps, more than one link, because this video is quite popular among 9/11 researchers and critics and therefore many people might have published it on YouTube – just search for keywords "Frank Albert De Martini interview" and you will find at least a few more links):

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=sO1JxpVb2eU>

As you probably remember, this person managed to disappear (he is presumed to be "dead") during the WTC North Tower collapse. (Do you sincerely believe that it was possible for such an insider as the WTC on-site construction manager to remain there after the South Tower's collapse, by the way?)

It shall be presumed that Mr. De Martini knew more than others about the nuclear demolition scheme of the WTC and that is exactly why he "disappeared". I think it would be difficult to find anybody alive who could still remember exact details about that WTC demolition idea. Apparently, a majority of those who knew anything exact about it, disappeared as well.

Another suspicious fact has to be duly considered here. As you probably remember from the chapter at the beginning of this book that hosted the 9/11 timetable, an unprecedented encounter took place around 10.08 AM at the lobby of the abandoned WTC-7. I paid attention to this unprecedented video, thanks to YouTube user named "WTCNUKED" who pointed it out to me when the final edition of this book was almost ready and was about to be published; the actual video on YouTube is available here (I hope the so-called "good guys" would not remove it by the time my reader is reading these lines; if it is removed – please, contact me and I will upload somewhere its spare copy that I saved):

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Pp2SC_aduTA

I will remind you of this most important piece of the 9/11 evidence:

September 11, at approx. 10.16 AM: CBS camera-man, who is constantly filming the events, runs into the abandoned WTC building 7's lobby. His move is being accompanied by strange signals of a certain sound alarm (that could only be heard inside the WTC-7, not outside of it). The actual alarm sound (long beeps followed by two short beeps constantly repeated) is distinctly different from alarm signals of fire-engines and ambulances that are heard outside. In the WTC-7 lobby he encounters a certain Mr. Bennette – the most suspicious personality who is dressed in a “Secret Service’s” vest and wears a VRU hood over his head (the VRU hood is intended as a means of breath protection against bio- and chemical- hazards and could be as well used for protection against radioactive dust and radioactive vapor).

Mr. Bennette in a remarkably calm and composed manner (considering the unprecedented collapse of the South Tower only 15 minutes ago that supposed to horrify everyone, servicemen inclusive) urges the man to leave and says that everyone has already gone from the building 7 and only he remained there to control that nobody goes downstairs. Since he urges the CBS man to leave the WTC-7 and the way to leave the lobby of the building is apparently down the escalator, it should be presumed that by saying “that nobody goes downstairs” Mr. Bennette obviously means some underground premises, not simply the way down out of the WTC-7 lobby. Mr. Bennette refuses to elaborate, but tells the CBS reporter his surname and admits to be from the Secret Service.

Four screenshots from the Raw CBS footage (from the NIST FOIA Raw CBS 9/11 WTC Footage¹⁴⁰; never actually shown on the TV) shot at approx. 10.16 - 10.18 AM. Above: Mr. Bennette is removing the VRU hood from his head in order to start the conversation in the lobby of the abandoned WTC-7. Below: Mr. Bennette during the conversation. Note the construction helmet in his left hand.

Mr. Bennette holds in his right hand the breath-protection VRU hood (which suggests that something was very badly wrong concerning either bio-, chemical- or, most probably, radioactive hazard at that moment). However, the VRU hood does not constitute any incriminating evidence – since we could presume that Secret Service might have kept stocks of such VRU sets for emergency cases and one of such VRU sets was issued to Mr. Bennette because such emergence indeed occurred at that moment. So, what is the most suspicious in this scene is not that breath-protecting hood.

The most suspicious (if not to say outright incriminating) is that in his left hand Mr. Bennette holds a typical construction helmet – a highly unusual thing to be worn by the Secret Service personnel (especially considering that the supposedly “unexpected” collapse of the South Tower has occurred only 15 minutes ago, while the collapse of the North Tower was yet to happen).

While we could easily imagine that during a certain emergency situation (let’s say, a nuclear explosion nearby or merely a cloud of hazardous dust that has suddenly appeared) a serviceman could grab a VRU hood from a special emergency storage, we would have difficulties to imagine the same thing in regard to a plastic construction helmet...

Why on earth would you grab the construction helmet amidst the unprecedented events preceding the supposedly unexpected collapse of the first of the two Twin Towers?

Moreover, where from would you grab it? While I could imagine that the breath-protecting VRU hoods were kept by the Secret Service or by the FBI in a certain emergency storage, I could not imagine the Secret Service or the FBI creating emergency stocks of plastic construction helmets. A stock of steel combat helmets – probably “yes” – in case of some shoot-out with “bad guys” they might be used along bullet-proof vests; but the stock of the construction helmets? By the Secret Service? Or by the FBI? For what??? Sorry, but it is simply unimaginable. Try to analyze this possibility on your own. Do you see any logic in keeping construction helmets in the premises of the Secret Service and issuing them to their staff?

When it comes to the humble author of these lines, I see that the only logical conclusion is this: Mr. Bennette did not grab the construction helmet in panic. He was issued the construction helmet as a part of a certain procedure...

We could only guess for what reason Mr. Bennette (who was by no means a construction worker) might have been issued the construction helmet at that moment...

Judging by elementary logic, it should be presumed that Mr. Bennette was a part of the WTC demolition team – considering the fact that he was issued the construction helmet (do you know that members of demolition teams typically wear construction helmets?)

It would be against logic to surmise that Mr. Bennette managed to grab some third-party construction helmet “somewhere” in panic following the South Tower’s collapse, considering that it collapsed merely 15-16 minutes ago (I mean 15-16 minutes prior to the moment the incriminating CBS video was shot). It is pretty obvious that he was issued the helmet prior to the South Tower’s collapse and the issuance of the construction helmet was a conscious decision – most probably, the issuance of the construction helmets to the nuclear demolition team was prescribed by a certain instruction guarding the demolition procedure.

There is yet another suspicious fact that apparently needs to be considered here. As it was reported¹⁴¹ later, the exact account of events shortly before the WTC South Tower began to collapse was as follows:

“...In the lobby of building 7 of the WTC, EMS Division Chief John Peruggia is in discussion with Fire Department Captain Richard Rotanz and a representative from the Department of Buildings. As Peruggia later describes, “It was brought to my attention it was believed that the structural damage that was suffered to the [Twin] Towers was quite significant and they were very confident that the building’s stability was compromised and they felt that the North Tower was in danger of a near imminent collapse.” Peruggia grabs EMT Richard Zarrillo and tells him to pass on the message “that the buildings have been compromised, we need to evacuate, they’re going to collapse.” Zarrillo heads out to the fire command post, situated in front of 3 World Financial, the American Express Building, where he relays this message to several senior firefighters. He says, “OEM says the buildings are going to collapse; we need to get out.” (OEM is the Mayor’s Office of Emergency Management, which has its headquarters in WTC-7.) Fire Chief Pete Ganci’s response is, “who the f___ told you that?” Seconds later, they hear the noise of the South Tower as it collapses...” (I have to mention also that Fire Chief P. Ganci was killed by the falling debris.)

As you remember from the previous chapters, according to the U.S. regulations (at least, according to those that were in force prior to 9/11), every skyscraper must have its demolition scheme (not necessarily nuclear, of course). These regulations are being enforced and controlled by the Department of Buildings.

You do not have to doubt that the nuclear demolition scheme of the WTC Twin Towers, which existed since the beginning of the '70s, however awful or "illegal" it might sound, was duly registered in the Department of Buildings. Of course, there must have been a certain procedure of how to cooperate with the Department of Buildings' officials when such a demolition scheme was supposed to be implemented.

What was the abovementioned "representative from the Department of Buildings" doing there? And why is there no exact name of that "representative" provided to the 9/11 inquiry?

Just imagine: there are unprecedented events unfolding in regard to the terrorist attacks, there are fires in the Twin Towers; even the WTC-7 had been already evacuated a long time ago – including even its Office of Emergency Management. No one supposed to remain inside the WTC-7, perhaps, with only an exception of some firefighters who did not care about orders of the Office of Emergency Management and who just found it convenient to establish a temporary command center of their own in the immediate vicinity of the burning Twin Towers. This is understandable, indeed. But what was the "representative from the Department of Buildings" doing inside the abandoned WTC-7? Please, try to find any reasonable explanation.

When it comes to me, I initially thought that a certain accomplice of the 9/11 perpetrators had concocted a story that the WTC-1 and -2 were allegedly going to collapse due to their "weakening" core structures and so he advanced an idea that the Twin Towers had to be demolished using their in-built demolition scheme in order to anticipate their uncontrollable collapse. The abovementioned discussion in the WTC-7 lobby actually matched my initial guess – as you read carefully the words of John Perruggia above, you will get the same impression. That is why the alleged "WTC structural damage" was offered as a possible pretext of the WTC demolition in the very first edition of my book. However, later I was corrected by some knowledgeable folks from the FBI. They confided to me that the actual reason for the WTC demolition was another concocted story. It was not because of the "alleged weakening of the core structures", but because of the "alleged thermonuclear warheads that allegedly were loaded into the terrorists planes and that allegedly stuck in the upper floors of the Twin Towers and were about to incinerate the entire New York".

In fact, once I heard that idea from the abovementioned FBI's folks, I almost immediately discovered an important piece of contemporary evidence confirming the above suggestion in one of the contemporary NBC videos. It was published by someone on YouTube in 2008. It no longer exists, of course, but there are a few newer links to the same seditious thing. As of January 2012, you could find this unprecedented piece of the NBC video on YouTube here:

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=TTYMzTH_ZPc (high quality)

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=NHYrWTxDbdw> (high quality)

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=CsUvQLkmVqA> (low quality)

I have to tell you that this particular piece of the 9/11 video evidence appears to be the most seditious. The original NBC 9/11 footage that supposed to contain the statement of Albert Turi was removed from any and every publicly accessible on-line archives. That particular hour with the NBC footage (known as "NBC Sept. 11, 2001 11.17 AM - 11.59 AM") is conspicuously missing in any dedicated video collection, even in the fullest and the most "independent" one. All former YouTube pages that used to host this excerpt prior to 2010 were removed either (the three links above are new, recently uploaded). Therefore, it is possible, that you would not be able to find that video: the YouTube links mentioned above may exist or may not by the time you are reading these lines. In anticipation of such a development, prior to publishing this book, I attempted to circulate the abovementioned seditious NBC video under this file name:

"911_NBC_Albert_Turi_on_'secondary-devices'_planted_in_the_buildings_and_on_the_planes" with a few different file's extensions: ".avi", ".flv", ".mov", ".wmv", ".mpeg", ".mp4", ".mp3", ".3gp" on various web sites, and also urged people to continue distribution of this file via file-sharing services such as e-mule, torrent, etc. Therefore, you could try finding the abovementioned file somewhere on the Internet in case it is no longer available on YouTube – try to search the Internet by the abovementioned file-name, or try to find this file via torrents or through other similar services. I am certain that you must watch this most important piece of video evidence before continuing reading this book.

Here is the verbatim from that seditious NBC reportage (it has been already mentioned once in the timetable of the 9/11 events at the beginning of the book, but since it is an extremely important piece of evidence, I mention it here one more time in full):

Soon after the North Tower collapse, NBC reporter Pat Dawson discusses the comments of Albert Turi, the Chief of Safety for the New York City Fire Department. He says:

"...The Chief of Safety of the Fire Department of New York told me that...er...shortly after 9 o'clock here had roughly 200 men in the building trying to effect rescues of some of those civilians who were in there...er... and that basically he received word of the possibility of a secondary device, another bomb going off. He tried to get his men out as quickly as he could but he said that there was another explosion which took place and then an hour after the first hit here, the first crash that took place, he said there was another explosion which took place in one of the towers here. So obviously he, according to his theory, he thinks that there were actually devices that were planted in the building. One of the secondary devices he thinks that took place after the initial impact was, he thinks, may have been on the plane that crashed into one of the towers. The second device, he thinks, he speculates, was probably planted in the building...er... so that's what we have been told by ...erm... Albert Turi who is the Chief of Safety for the New York City Fire Department, he told me that just moments ago."

"...the bottom line is, that according to the Chief of Safety of the New York Fire Department, he says that he lost a great many men in those secondary explosions and he said that there were literally hundreds if not thousands of people in those towers when the explosions took place. He said everything above the 60th floor was extremely difficult to get to as you can imagine."

From this statement of Albert Turi (coupled with the statement of John Perrugia that we reviewed shortly before that) we can conclude at least four important things:

a) It is clear that that the so-called "secondary devices" (that were used to collapse the Twin Towers) were planted in the buildings.

b) That the decision to demolish the Twin Towers had something to do with certain "secondary devices" that were supposedly loaded into the terrorist planes (at that moment Albert Turi, as many other officials, did not have time to apply his critical thinking to the suggested armor-piercing capabilities of aluminum aircraft, and, as anyone else, sincerely believed that the aluminum terrorist planes indeed stuck in the upper floors of the steel Twin Towers);

c) That the nature of the so-called "secondary devices" that were used to collapse the Twin Towers and the so-called "secondary devices" that were supposedly loaded into the "terrorist planes" was the same. It is clear, because both were referred to by the same name: "secondary devices".

d) There was almost no coordination between those who decided to demolish the first of the Twin Towers and the firefighters. It is clear that the decision to demolish the South Tower had been taken no later than at 9.40 AM, perhaps, even earlier – may be around the time NORAD detected the missile that flew into the U.S. airspace (the one that would later hit the Pentagon). Yet, until the time of the actual collapse of the South Tower, even the most senior firefighters hadn't had a clue about what was going on. The most senior uniformed firefighter of New York – Fire Chief P. Gansi, for example, got the message only a few seconds before the actual collapse, when it was too late. Moreover, he did not get that belated message over the radio from some appropriate security officials; he got it in a rather old-fashioned way – by a messenger, who delivered it in such a format that it was difficult to distinguish the important warning from a ridiculous hearsay. Considering that those, who pressed the "red buttons" (and those, who permitted the latter to do so), had at least 15-20 minutes at their disposal to warn the senior firefighters before the collapse would take place, their performance indeed resembled a conspiracy. If you add here that someone had disabled the WTC-7 alarm system earlier that morning (and that "someone" apparently belonged to either the OEM team, or, most probably, even to the actual demolition team) you will see how sinister the setup actually was. It seems that the 9/11 perpetrators indeed planned to kill as many people as possible – if not the actual Twin Towers' tenants, then, at least, the firefighters...

Anyhow, irrespective of the actual reason/pretext for the demolition, we have to understand that such a demolition was apparently designed to be initiated from the WTC-7. Then, it is logical to surmise that the representative from the New York Department of Buildings was summoned to the WTC-7 either to be consulted, or to be informed, or to sanction the demolition of the Twin Towers according to the prepared in advance demolition procedure. Or, we could even presume (considering that the apparent lack of time for that official to get to that spot especially in those circumstances) that the mysterious "representative from the Department of Buildings" was permanently attached to the actual WTC demolition team and he was always on duty somewhere in building 7, together with other members of the team on duty.

That is exactly why that odd "representative" oddly appeared at that odd spot at that odd moment. I simply do not see any other reasonable explanation. If that “representative” were be there for some other business, except for his direct involvement in the Twin Towers’ demolition, let’s say, he wanted to participate in some emergency meeting of the city officials, or to meet with the WTC new owners, then, considering that the WTC-7 had been long ago abandoned, this “representative” would proceed, instead, to the contemporary command post of Mayor R. Giuliani – which was established at 75 Barclay Street.

While it is more or less understandable why the U.S. officials decided to collapse the Twin Towers at that moment, it is not so clear when it comes to the possible causes of the demolition of the WTC-7. Their motives (in regard to the demolition of the WTC-7 I mean) are unclear either in case we presume that the 9/11 perpetration was designed by those who performed the Twin Towers’ demolition, or in case we presume that those who performed the Twin Towers’ demolition were merely victims of the actual 9/11 planners. Why those folks decided to “pull” the WTC-7 afterwards? Wasn’t the spectacular demolition of both Twin Towers shocking enough to impress gullible citizens and to convince them to surrender their last liberties to the so-called “good guys” and to their cops? Weren’t the first two 150-kilotons thermonuclear explosions in the middle of New York enough, so that they needed to add another 30% to both – to the actual damage and to the radiological consequences alike?

Honestly, I do not know the exact reason behind the demolition of the WTC-7. I am certain about everything that I claim in my book – in either part before this chapter, or after this chapter; but I do admit, that in this particular chapter I am merely speculating. It could be true what I am guessing here, or I could be wrong as well. My opinion, however, is that I do not believe that both nuclear charges had been permanently placed under the WTC Towers 1 and -2 and always stayed in their respective zero-boxes.

There are two reasons for thinking so:

1) Any nuclear charge shall undergo some technical maintenance from time to time, because there are a lot of sensitive things in such a precise devise as a modern nuclear charge, which are to be cleaned, changed, or just being subject of making sure that they are still OK and ready to be used. This is particularly true for thermonuclear charges that suppose to undergo special maintenance in regard to their thermonuclear fuel – deuteride of lithium – that has to be maintained in certain specific conditions. For this reason, I think, these demolition nukes were not designed to be always positioned in their zero-boxes, but, instead, they had to be kept somewhere – where they could be easily observed and maintained. I guess that only shortly before their intended use those charges had to be lowered into their respective boreholes (but actually, not even “lowered”, but delivered by horizontal delivery tunnels to these zero-boxes in this particular case).

2) As everybody could understand now, any underground nuclear explosion will create not only a cavity, the size of which is easy to calculate in advance, but also two zones around the cavity – one “totally crushed” or “pulverized” zone and another one – a still seriously damaged zone. Those professional guys, who have experience in detonating underground nuclear charges, knew very well that when a simultaneous detonation of more than one nuclear charge is planned, those charges must be detonated precisely simultaneously. Because if not so, then a destructive wave from a charge which was detonated first, traveling with an approximate speed of over 2.5 km/sec (if not faster), would damage the second charge (which has not been detonated yet). Due to this reason, it was apparently impossible to keep one of the charges in its zero-box while detonating the other charge nearby – such an action might damage the “stand-by” charge.

Due to the above considerations, I think that none of the three nuclear charges – intended to demolish the WTC-1, WTC-2 and WTC-7 – could be kept in their “ready-to-use” positions always (I mean in “zero-boxes” of their respective boreholes). I am sure that all these three charges had to be kept in a certain secure room, where it would be easy to maintain them and there should exist some automatic systems of their quick deliveries to the assigned spots.

I think the delivery systems in this case constituted some special heavily fortified tunnels, probably as strong as a typical ICBM’s silos, and each equipped with some mini-rail road. Most probably, such a room (where also these delivery tunnels supposed to begin from) was under the WTC-7 – since it was exactly the WTC-7 which served as the head-quarters of the WTC-property management starting from 1987.

Moreover, I am sure that there was a certain special pre-designated scenario of the WTC-1 and WTC-2 demolitions: someone of the two Twin Towers was apparently scheduled to be demolished first and that order could not be otherwise. Logically, everybody could feel it – simply because the North Tower should have been demolished first and it would look “logical” – since the [steel] North Tower was penetrated by the aluminum terrorist plane first and fires there were burning apparently longer period of time. However, as everybody could see, it was the South Tower which was demolished first – contrary to any logic.

However, there was some logic indeed in the pre-scheduled order of the Twin Towers demolitions. The South Tower necessarily had to be demolished first, and only then – the North Tower.

Why?

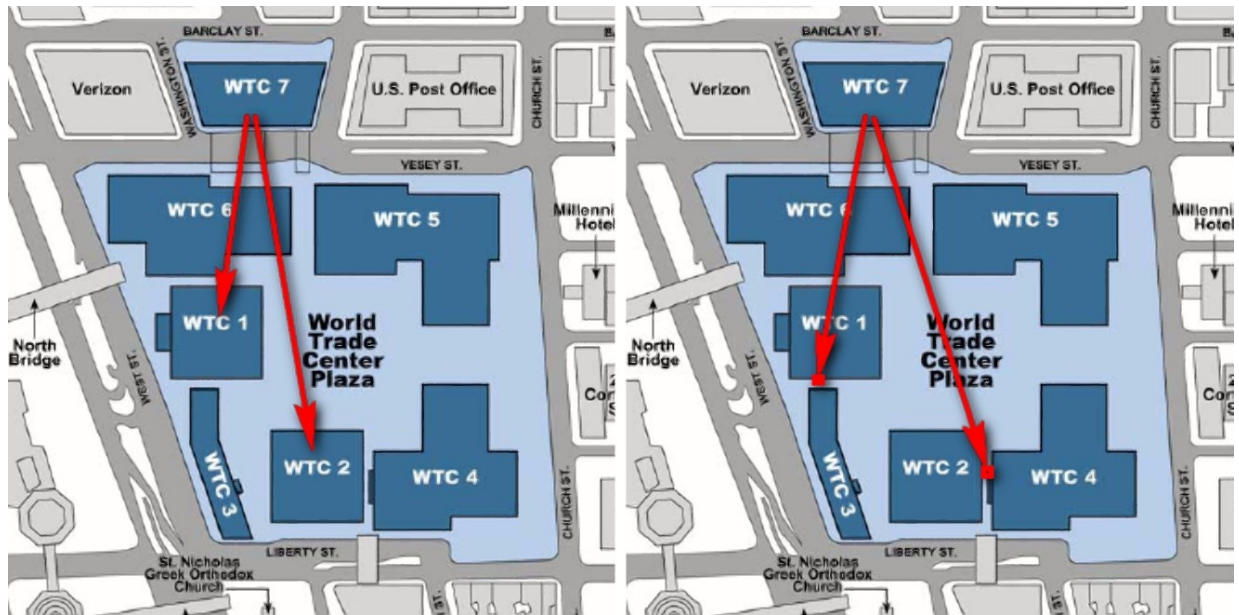

The problem is that the South Tower was farther from the WTC-7, and the North Tower was closer to it. Thus, the mini-rail ways intended to deliver the demolition charges to their respective zero-boxes were supposed to be of different lengths – the one leading to the underneath of the South Tower was the longer one, and to that of the North Tower – the shorter.

Now imagine what would happen if you detonate the nuclear charge in the shorter location first: it might (and most probably would) damage the delivery tunnel leading to the farther zero-box which passes nearby.

That is why it was designed that the farthest from the beginnings of those two delivery tunnels Twin Tower must be necessarily demolished first, and only then – the “closer” Tower. It could not be otherwise. This is exactly why the South Tower was demolished first and only after it the North Tower.

Apparently, those who violated the logic were not the demolition engineers who designed the actual nuclear demolition scheme and set it off finally. It was the so-called “terrorists”, who made the wrong plan. They supposed to direct the first “plane” into the South Tower, and the second – to the North Tower, but they did vice-versa...

Look at the sketch below and you will probably understand why the North Tower (which was the WTC-1) could not have been demolished first:

Possible directions of delivery tunnels in an “ideal” case are on the left. On the right are the real positions of the zero-boxes and suspected positions of delivery tunnels.

Look at the two drawings above. Obviously, the designers of that nuclear demolition scheme had to position the nuclear charges as far from each other as possible, so that when the first charge explodes it won't damage the zero-box and the delivery tunnel of the second charge. By making the directions a little bit “divergent” from each other (as shown on the right drawing above), the designers managed to win at least an extra 30 to 40 meters, which might be a crucial gain in a sense of safety (I mean safety of the second nuclear charge, of course, not of the people). In any case – whether you chose the “ideal” direction on the left, or the real one on the right, in both cases it is clear that the WTC-2 (the “South Tower”) must be demolished before the WTC-1 (the “North Tower”) and it could not be otherwise – because an explosion of the “nearer” charge first would be too risky for the “longer” delivery tunnel.

It is important also to remember this fact: at 6:47 AM, September 11, 2001, the WTC Building 7's Alarm System was placed on the "TEST" status for a period due to last eight hours. This ordinarily happens during maintenance or other testing, and any alarms received from the building are generally ignored¹⁴².

Why was it done so? Just read the paragraph below and you would probably guess why: there should be some alarm signals produced and transmitted towards WTC Twin Towers when the actual demolition scheme was about to be implemented. It should be logically presumed of being designed so... I am sure that such alarm signals should have been also transmitted towards another dangerous zone – the subway station, whose tube was crossing the WTC site under the South Tower's footprint.

I always thought about such an alarm system – since the time I began contemplating this book in 2006. I was certain that this alarm system must have been in place as the matter of "must". However, besides the abovementioned NIST report on the fact that the alarm system was placed on the "TEST" status prior to the 9/11 events, I haven't found any other evidence of the actual alarm system in any open source until very recently. With the recently found CBS video from the NIST collection, named "NIST FOIA Raw CBS 9/11 WTC Footage" (the one showing Mr. Bennette with the construction helmet in his hand), I have found that additional evidence, at last.

If you watch this video¹⁴³, you will certainly pay attention to the strange alarm sound that could only be heard inside the WTC-7, but not outside of it. That alarm sound was distinctly different from the alarm sounds of fire-engines and ambulances that could be heard outside. Considering that the CBS footage was shot a few minutes after the collapse of the first (the South) Twin Tower, i.e. before the collapse of the second Tower, it is almost certain that the alarm signal that was recorded at that moment inside of the WTC-7 was the very signal of the nuclear demolition I am talking about. The fact that for some not so clear reason this alarm signal was limited only to the WTC-7, i.e. cut from being transmitted to the Twin Towers and to the rest of the WTC complex prior to 9/11 events (as reported by NIST) is a clear indication that someone responsible for the WTC security was directly involved with the 9/11 perpetrators. It is because the alarm signal was so "timely" put on the "test" status and it happened prior to the "terrorist planes" impacts. Logically, the one, who placed the alarm system on the "test" status, must have known for sure that:

- 1) the Twin Towers were scheduled to be hit by an act of so-called "terror";
- 2) the Twin Towers were scheduled to be demolished as a result;
- 3) the implementation of the actual demolition must kill as many people as possible (by warning as few of them as possible); hence the action of placing the alarm system to the "test" status, cutting its transmission towards the Twin Towers and the rest of the WTC complex (most probably, the underground train station inclusive).

Do not make any mistake in your judgment: the one who did it was an accomplice to the 9/11 project. He worked with the so-called "good guys" who had instructed him to do so. He was an important member of the gang of the 9/11 perpetrators who was tasked with doing a very important part of the 9/11 project. Unfortunately, I do not know what the name of that person was, because the NIST report does not mention it. However, I am certain that this man must be arrested and made to speak by every means possible, considering the gravity of the offence and the importance of finding the rest of the 9/11 gang members.

I guess discerning 9/11 researchers would surely notice that from the moment the decision to demolish the Twin Towers had been taken by appropriate officials until the actual moment the doomed Tower started to collapse, around 30 minutes or so had passed. So, the question would be this: why the targeted building could not be destroyed immediately after pressing the "red button"? Why did almost half-an-hour have to pass first?

Let us think about it. Probably, the first thing that would slightly delay the implementation of the demolition is the necessity to arm the nukes. Though, they could have been kept in a relatively "ready-to-use" condition, still, to arm them, and to remove all protections might take a few minutes, at least. Some more time would be required to send each of the nukes by their mini-rail ways towards their intended targets – even though these roads were not so long (150-250 meters only), for the nuke to pass all that way would still take some time. Apparently, the nukes were moved by the corresponding mini-rail ways in a careful manner, perhaps, at a speed of a few centimeters per second, considering that the nukes in general are very dangerous things, and because each nuke had to be followed by an attached cable.

The second thing that could delay the actual explosions was that those engineers who designed the initial nuclear demolition scheme of the WTC were themselves neither sadists, nor criminals. They were probably normal responsible specialists who knew for sure what kind of danger was represented by any building's demolition in general and by any nuclear explosion in particular. For this reason they must have in-built into the nuclear charges deployment scheme and into their set-off procedures some extra double (or possibly even triple) overprotection. This is very typical when it comes to nuclear charges in general: every nuclear device is normally "overprotected" several times – so that even if a bunch of morons would fool around by pressing different buttons and tinker it up with pen-knives, it won't explode.

The second thing, which also suggests the same idea, is the fact mentioned above (I repeat it in full, one more time, because it is extremely important):

"...at 6:47 AM, September 11, 2001, the WTC Building 7's Alarm System was placed on "TEST" status for a period due to last eight hours. This ordinarily happens during maintenance or other testing, and any alarms received from the building are generally ignored." (National Institute of Standards and Technology, 6/2004, pp.28: http://wtc.nist.gov/progress_report_june04/chapter1.pdf).

What are they talking about? What kind of "alarms" from the WTC-7 to the Twin Towers? Please, try to employ your imagination and to reckon out some possible nature of those mentioned "alarms" – what kind of alarms could they be?

Even if my own imagination is quite rich, I can not figure out any reasonable alarm which could have been logically initiated from the WTC-7 and transmitted towards the WTC-1 and WTC-2. If inside the WTC-7 there was headquarters of NORAD tasked with detecting upcoming aerial attacks and transmitting commands to surface-to-air missile batteries positioned on the roofs of the WTC-1 and the WTC-2, than it would be OK; that would be a logical and understandable solution.

However, considering that both structures – the WTC-7 and the Twin Towers – were civilian, what kind of alarms could be in their case necessarily transmitted from the WTC-7 towards the Twins? Could you figure out any reasonable cause for such a solution?

I think if I would not know about the WTC demolition scheme, I could not find any reason at all. However, since I knew very well about the nuclear demolition scheme, I could suggest an idea: the so-called "WTC Building 7's Alarm System" might have been designed to transmit only one kind of alarm: a warning that the nuclear demolition scheme of the Twin Towers is being implemented and nothing else than that. Of course, I could be mistaken, but I am sure that I am not.

Besides the mentioned above alarm, in my opinion, there was some built-in totally unavoidable feature in the nuclear demolition scheme of the WTC: you could set the demolition scheme to finally work-out, but it won't actually explode until at least 30 minutes of an extra delay.

Why? It is because an underground nuclear charge of 150 kiloton is quite dangerous stuff and you must have given chances at least:

1) To make sure that the people who work with you on the actual demolition and remained within the most dangerous area would have a chance to escape if they for some reason did not clear the area yet at the moment you press the "final" red button.

2) You must also have at least 30 minutes to make away after pressing the button. I do not think it was really designed that you, who press the button, have to sit in an underground bunker just some less than 200 meters away from a hypocenter of the 150 kiloton underground nuclear explosion. Apparently, you must run away and hide at a much farther distance or, at minimum – ascend to the level of the Earth's surface and hide inside the WTC-7 building. It was especially dangerous to remain in the underground premises of the WTC-7 because the delivery tunnels were leading from there. Even if the tunnels were duly sealed, nobody could guarantee that the products of the underground nuclear explosions would not break into the premises after crashing through the seals. Nobody stands opposite sealed entrances of the tunnels or on top of the lids of the boreholes during underground nuclear testing – you can be doubly sure about this. In this consideration, the staff must get out of the underground WTC-7 premises in any case, at least temporarily. They could only come back into these premises after the explosion and not earlier than the actual radiological situation inside the premises is verified and confirmed to be safe.

Why am I talking about exactly 30 minutes? Well, I will try to explain: it was ~30 minutes that had passed between the collapses of the 1st (WTC-2 or “South Tower”) and 2nd (WTC-1 or “North Tower”). While we have already presumed (and I am sure that we are not mistaken in that particular sense) that the nuclear charge intended to demolish the second Tower, could not have been delivered to its zero-box before the nuclear explosion of the first charge, since it would be too risky. The second charge could have been damaged by the first charge’s nuclear explosion, sending crushing waves under the surface. This means that only after the first explosion, the second demolition charge could have been sent by its mini-rail way under its targeted Tower and since then it would be needed 30 minutes more to get it actually exploding. This is very logical.

Another consideration is this: those people who normally work with nuclear charges (and particularly with their underground testing), always count on the worst possible scenario: someone, who remained within the most dangerous zone shortly before the nuclear explosion had already become imminent, must be able to leave this dangerous zone on foot – even in case if his vehicle gets broken. This is just a kind of over-insurance. In the particular case of the WTC-7 the same consideration was applicable – a person, who pressed the “red button”, must have enough time to ascend the 50 meters from the deep underground premises by climbing up the stairs, presuming that lifts might be broken (and no one in sound mind would use the lift in this case anyway, because it would be unacceptable – to take a risk of getting stuck in the underground lift in anticipation of the imminent underground nuclear explosion in close proximity).

The 30 minutes since the final alarm is about the right time – one should be able to get away on foot at least 2.5 - 3 km from a hypocenter of such a nuclear explosion, which is quite a safe distance (or to climb up the stairs to the ground level in the case of the underground demolition premises under the WTC-7). To make such an “extra-time insurance” less than 30 minutes would not be really safe, while to make too long (let’s say, an hour) would not be reasonable. That is exactly why 30 minutes is a standard “extra time” since such a final alarm of an imminent nuclear explosion and before the actual nuclear explosion or “H-Hour”.

Apparently, some “extra-time insurance” was implemented in the WTC nuclear demolition scheme. It could not have been otherwise. Of course, we have to presume that starting from this count-down (or, most probably, even before the count-down begins), there should be those alarm signals that supposed to be transmitted from the WTC-7 towards the WTC-1 and the WTC-2. This seems to be the main purpose of that otherwise unexplainable abovementioned “WTC-7 Alarm System”, which was put on its “TEST” mode at 6.47 AM September 11, 2001, and which supposed to be “off” for as long as 8 hours – according to the above-mentioned NIST report.

Considering all of the above, there are some hard reasons to believe that:

1) Even after the “final” red button was pressed, the actual nuclear explosion won’t happen until the next 30 minutes or so – in the case of the second demolition charge; while in the case of the first demolition charge, such an “over-insurance time” could have been even longer, conditioned by the necessity to arm the nukes and, possibly, to start the alarms – that would enable people remaining in dangerous areas (for example, in the underground shopping mall and in the underground PATH station) to escape for safety.

2) Immediately after beginning the demolition procedure (which supposed to last at least 30 minutes more before the actual nuclear explosion), most probably, even before you could reach to the “final” button, some unavoidable alarm signal would be transmitted towards the most dangerous area. Definitely such signals supposed to be transmitted to such dangerous area also after you pressed the “final” button. And, logically, such alarm signals should be continuous and should be transmitted for as long as the entire remaining time before the nuclear explosion (i.e. they should have been transmitted continuously for the entire remaining 30 minutes). Of course, I could be mistaken, but I am sure that in this case I am not.

P.S. Interestingly, I figured out what I wrote above back in 2007 (the above words in this chapter were indeed written almost 5 years ago). However, only a few weeks ago I discovered (thanks to one of my friends) that seditious CBS-NIST footage where Mr. Bennette is shown with the construction helmet. In that video clip a certain continuously repeating alarm sound inside the WTC-7 could be heard indeed. This is one of a few confirmations that even though I guessed, I was apparently right in my guessing.

Above there was an estimated turn of events from the “conspiratorial” point of view, below (irrespective of the above) there is an estimated turn of events from the merely technical point of view.

The estimated turn of events was like this: when the decision to “pull” the Twins was eventually made – the first nuclear charge went on its rail-way towards its target (such a “travel” of the first charge towards its target was obviously a kind of a fully automated procedure, which has been designed to be initiated by a simple press of a button). Then the charge has arrived into its zero-box under the South Tower (which apparently has been pre-scheduled to be demolished first) and then (after some pre-designated “over-insurance” period of time, which could have been 30 minutes or so) – went off. Also it should be noted that the delivery tunnel had to be sealed off first as a matter of “must” (I would bet that it was designed to be sealed at least three times, perhaps, even four times).

After the South Tower had collapsed, a specialist, responsible for the demolition, should have estimated damage (if any) sustained by the delivery tunnel, by control cables, and by the zero-box intended for the second charge – under the North Tower (most probably, it was not even a person, but some automatic device that had performed such a checking). Add here that the demolition staff could only have returned to the underground premises after checking the radiological situation there – i.e. after making sure that radioactive gases from the first nuclear explosion did not break seals in the tunnel and did not seep into the premises. When everything was found to be OK, and the staff returned to their underground control room, the second nuclear charge went by its mini rail-way underneath its target (while the people had again to climb up the stairs to the ground level for safety). Then the second nuclear charge went off.

In the second case the explosion followed in less than 30 minutes. The point is that the South Tower collapsed at ~9:59 AM, while the North Tower was knocked down at approximately 10:28 AM. However, we have to take into account that a couple of minutes must have been spent on recovering from shock caused by the first explosion and by the South Tower collapse, another couple of minutes – on checking the radiological situation in the underground premises, and yet another 5-6 minutes, at least – on returning to the underground premises – perhaps, by the lift. I presumed above that the “protection time” was 30 minutes, but it might have been in reality 25 or even 20 minutes – calculated as just being enough for the staff who pressed the “red button” to climb up the stairs to the ground level for safety.

In the view of the above considerations, it will be very interesting to reexamine that important encounter in the abandoned lobby of the WTC-7 in only a few minutes after the South Tower’s collapse.

I hope you still remember (we came back to this encounter several times) that in that case the CBS cameraman ran into the abandoned lobby of the WTC-7 building following the South Tower collapse. Inside the lobby he heard the strangest sounds of a certain alarm that were constantly repeated. These alarm sounds were distinctly different from the sounds of the fire engines and those of the ambulances heard outside. In the lobby the CBS man encountered a certain Mr. Bennette, who was dressed in the Secret Service’s vest and worn the VRU breath-protection hood over his head, while holding the highly unusual for the Secret Service item – the plastic construction helmet – in his one hands, along with an electric torch. Mr. Bennette admitted that he was from the Secret Service and that he was there to control that no one is going downstairs.

Please, make sure to watch this unprecedented video evidence. I remind you one more time: it is the video clip named “NIST FOA Raw CBS footage”. It was released by the NIST as a result of the legal suit brought against it by the group of the 9/11 truthers under the “Freedom of Information Act”. Now this important clip is available on YouTube here: http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Pp2SC_aduTA

It was discovered by the YouTube user named “WTCNUKED” (one of the supporters of my research) who actually drew my attention to this piece of evidence by sending me an invitation to watch the clip and to duly appreciate that conversation in the WTC-7 lobby (if not this man, I would probably never had a chance to notice that important encounter).

The full “NIST FOA RAW CBC footage” video is quite long, but the most interesting part (the said encounter in the WTC-7 lobby accompanied by the sounds of the strange alarm) is shown at approximately 6th minute from the beginning of the clip, while the statement of Mr. Benette that he was there to control that nobody was going downstairs is voiced at approximately 07.25. To make it easier for you, I created a shortened version of the video (that only includes the WTC-7 encounter, though in the same high quality 720p). It is available here: <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=JyYms4J5s98> or it could be found in my web hosting 911-truth.net or via searching in Google or in file-sharing services for this file-name:

_15min_after_South_Tower_collapse_in_WTC-7_lobby.mp4

The North Tower's collapse on that CBS-NIST video is shown at the 18th minute from the beginning of the long clip (precisely at 18.11). Considering that the North Tower in real time collapsed at ~10:28 AM EST, it is possible to calculate more or less exact time of that encounter with Mr. Bennette in the WTC-7 lobby.

Here it is: $18 - 06 = 12$; means the encounter with Mr. Bennette took place 12 minutes before the North Tower's collapse, or, in the real time: $10.28 \text{ AM} - 12 \text{ minutes} = 10.16 \text{ AM}$. The abovequoted conversation with Mr. Bennette took place in between 10.16 and 10.18 AM EST. The first, South Tower collapsed at approximately 09:59 AM EST, so that means the encounter in the WTC-7 lobby occurred about 17-18 minutes after the South Tower's collapse and 11-12 minutes prior to the North Tower's collapse.

Why was it Mr. Bennette said he was there to guard the way "downstairs"? I hope that from our considerations above you could understand why... It should be presumed that by the time of that encounter, the men from the demolition team had already pressed the "red button" sealing the fate of the North Tower, and have already run upstairs for their own safety. It is very much possible that it was not too many men who run those errands. You don't need too many hands to press the single button, do you? Perhaps, it was only one man who did the final job; though, possibly, there could have been two-three of them – it would be more secure in that case. That is to say that our Mr. Bennette is rightly suspected to be one of them. I guess it would not be a mistake to call him a "nuclear demolition man".

By the way, if you pay careful attention to the above video (that shows the encounter with Mr. Bennette in the WTC-7 lobby), you will notice one more interesting (if, again, not an outright incriminating) detail: at 7.30-7.32 from the beginning of that clip Mr. Bennette (with the construction helmet in his hand) says in regard to the South Tower collapse:

"...I haven't seen outside the building yet..."

This particular statement of his has to be judged, taking into account the following circumstances:

1) The WTC-7 was abandoned by everyone because of the evacuation order; the evacuation order embraced all the FBI's and the Secret Service's personnel and even personal of the OEM (Emergency Management Office); nonetheless, Mr. Bennette for some not so clear reason violated the evacuation order and remained in the abandoned building.

2) He was using the VRU hood that in general was intended for breath protection from bio-, chemical- and other similar hazards (the radioactive contamination apparently inclusive); he supposed not to know anything about the South Tower's collapse, because he admitted he did not go outside of the WTC-7 yet; nonetheless, he knew about the South Tower collapse quite well (he discussed the details of the South Tower's collapse with the CBS reporter), despite the actual collapse happened merely 15 minutes prior to this conversation.

3) He was holding the construction helmet in his hand.

4) He spoke with the CBS reporter in a suspiciously composed manner (while he supposed to be shocked if the supposedly "unexpected" South Tower's collapse caught him unaware); his manner of speaking clearly revealed that he was in control of the situation and knew perfectly well what was going on (if you watch that video, you will get this impression).

5) He admitted that he was there to control that nobody was going "downstairs", while according to logic, he should have prevented people of going upstairs (since the WTC-7 was evacuated). Moreover, Mr. Bennette urged the CBS man to leave and the actual way to leave the WTC-7 lobby was down the escalator. Thus, in the mouth of Mr. Bennette the word "downstairs" apparently did not mean the "way out of the WTC-7 lobby down the escalator"; it obviously meant something else – most certainly, his words must be interpreted as if he was guarding the way down to some underground premises of the WTC-7.

Considering all of the above, the statement of Mr. Bennette that he hasn't seen outside the building yet indeed reveals a lot...

I hope now you lost your last doubts as to the real role of William Bennette in those events.

Now again, here is an estimated turn of events from the "conspiratorial" point of view:

The job has been done. Then those “big” guys, who did the job (I mean those higher than Mr. Bennette), apparently faced a dilemma – what if an inquiry (and, of course, there would be an inquiry – what do you think?) would come into the WTC-7 to investigate what exactly had happened? And what if that inquiry would find all that peculiar nuclear stuff intended for the WTC-1 and WTC-2 demolitions – such as the special room for the nukes, the control center, those unexplainable delivery tunnels, remnants of strange cables leading towards the no longer existing Twin Towers by these tunnels, etc.?

For this reason, after apparently some long hours of hesitation, they had eventually decided to “pull” the WTC-7 as well by using the last remaining nuclear demolition charge.

They had probably realized that there would be a lot of questions in regard to the WTC-7 “collapse” without any seeming reason at as late as 5.30 PM, which would be very hard to answer. However, they realized it too that if the WTC-7 were left intact, there would be even more questions that would not be possible to answer at all.

That is why these “big” guys obviously preferred the lesser of the two evils and finally decided to demolish the WTC-7 as well and so to destroy all evidence completely.

That is my own opinion. Of course, as I have admitted above, I could be mistaken. I do not know for sure why they demolished the WTC-7, and I do not know exactly about technical details of how the three nuclear charges had been arranged in a sense of their maintenance and their delivery to the zero-boxes. Only those involved in designing and maintaining of the actual WTC demolition scheme could give you the exact answer in regard to its details.

However, I know for sure that the WTC-7 was demolished by an underground nuclear explosion – in the same way as its two elder twin sisters – the WTC-1 and WTC-2. Considering all technicalities described either in the previous chapter, or in the beginning of this book, one could be pretty sure that the WTC-7 could not have been demolished (“pulled”) by any conventional stuff. Typical consequences of a poorly contained underground nuclear explosion under the rubble of the WTC-7 have been also as clear as those under the rubble of the WTC-1 and the WTC-2. They were evident for weeks and even months after September the 11th. Please, look at the pictures of the WTC-7 below.

Above – the pile of the WTC-7 remains soon after its collapse.

On the above photo you could see the “pile” of the WTC-7 debris soon after its collapse. It clearly emits vapors, not smokes.

It shall be presumed that the photo was taken not on the very day of September 11, 2001, but at least a couple of days after that. The levels of gamma-radiation were simply too high for the first day (to be more precise – for the same evening, since it was demolished after 5 PM) to allow people to approach the pile. You don’t have to doubt that the dosimetry control was in place and the area was duly cordoned off for the most dangerous hours – at least, till the initial high gamma-radiation levels subsided to tens milliroentgens per hour (during the very first hours the levels measured hundreds of Roentgens per hour and people would accumulate a mortal dose of gamma-radiation in only two-three hours).

Anyway, note crowds of totally unprotected people who were freely inhaling those highly radioactive vapors (the vapors in this case were dangerous not because of gamma-radiation, but because of alpha-radiation – since particles of the vapor could carry alpha-radioactive particles). Later, in a year or two, all of these unfortunate people would develop leukemia, myeloma, and other “interesting” kinds of cancers that are typical “by-products” of chronic radiation sickness.

Above – the pile of the WTC-7 debris a few weeks after its collapse.

Note that the pile of the WTC-7 of the photo above even after a few weeks continues to emit the same kind of vapor (radioactive vapor, to be exact) as does the pile of debris of the WTC South Tower that is seen on the photo below. There is no difference in this sense between the WTC-7 and the Twin Towers.

Here is the third photo, showing, besides radioactive vapors, some interesting evidence of the strangely surviving corners of one of the Towers:

Perimeter columns of the South Tower that managed to survive pulverization.

There are even some more questions remaining – why did those adjacent to the ground level parts of the Twin Towers perimeter steel core columns were left to stand even after the Towers' total collapse – like those shown on the photo above which shows standing perimeter columns of the South Tower as on October 3, 2001?

This effect is also clearly visible on the next big photo of “ground zero”. It seems, when you carefully analyze the big photo below, that those actual nuclear charges have been indeed positioned not right under the footprints of each of the Twin Towers, but a little bit outer – across their corners – to make the positions of the two charges as far as possible from each other.

On this picture is “ground zero” on September 17, 2001. Here are clearly seen intense streams of radioactive vapor emanating not only from spots of the former WTC 1 and 2 in the middle of the picture, but also from the fairly remote spot of the former WTC-7. In between the Twin Towers and the remnants of the WTC-7 are clearly seen remnants of the WTC-6 and 5 which do not release any vapor at all. The WTC-3 (then the Marriott Hotel – formerly Vista Hotel) on the right is completely demolished. Those parts of the WTC-4, adjacent to the South Tower (the WTC-2), are completely demolished. The WTC-5 and 6 are still standing. However, the WTC-7 is completely demolished.

I marked there with yellow arrows suspected directions of displacements of the demolition charges from the exact centers of the Twin Towers’ footprints. I guess only this little intentional displacements of the demolition charges might have caused those effects: the farthest (from the suspected positions of the charges) corners of ground-level perimeters steel columns have been “spared” by the crushed zone, because it was propagating upwards not exactly vertically, but under slight angles.

Those opposite corners might occur within some kind of a “dead space”. In the next big photograph are clearly seen damaged zones within “Ground Zero”. With yellow arrows and red digits there are shown suspected hypocenters of the three underground nuclear explosions and with green lines – remaining walls. Below there is a diagram that shows how such an “off-center” underground nuclear explosion might spare the opposite lower corners of the targeted Tower:

Now, please, look at the top of the NOAA picture that is below and note where was the exact hypocenter of the 3rd nuclear explosion that leveled the WTC-7. It was evidently not under the middle of the WTC-7, but closer to its longest outer wall facing Barclay Street. This was quite logical – considering the almost trapeziform of the footprint of the WTC-7 (if you want to properly demolish a semicircle-shaped structure you obviously have to position your demolition charge in the middle of an imaginary full-circle.).

On this NOAA picture green outlined contours of the former buildings show those parts of the structures that managed to survive the WTC demolition, at least to a certain extent. Besides, this particular photograph clearly shows the most damaged areas, which could help us to understand where exactly the hypocenters of the underground nuclear explosions were. Apparently, they were not in the exact centers of the Twin Towers' footprints. Yellow arrows with red digits "1", "2" and "3" show suspected hypocenters of the three underground nuclear explosions, capable to inflict that damage – while leaving relatively intact opposite corners of the WTC-1 and WTC-2 with some remaining walls of steel perimeter structures.

Now a logical question arises – what happened with a building situated just across the Barclay Street on the other side at the WTC-7 “collapse” (that building is not embraced by the above NOAA photo)?

Luckily, that building stood a little bit farther in a sense that it might constitute a second “semi-circle” completing the abovementioned “full-circle” together with the actual WTC-7. It wasn’t within the full “circle” due to the building’s little bit farther position; otherwise, this opposite building should have been also pulverized – in the same manner as the actual WTC-7. Still, that building must have been damaged by the underground nuclear explosion beyond repair. Do not even doubt it.

The name of that building behind the WTC-7 across Barclay Street was “30 West Broadway” or “Fiterman Hall”. Fate of this building was not mentioned in any official 9/11 report. However, we can easily check it out in the Internet.

Here is some excerpt from later news¹⁴⁴ (try to read between the lines, please):

“...City University of New York has taken steps to demolish a contaminated building damaged in the World Trade Center disaster and will present its plans to the Environmental Protection Agency as early as this week. Fiterman Hall, a 15-story Borough of Manhattan Community College building, has stood shrouded in black, with large gaping holes torn into its southern façade, since 9/11...”

This University building had to be demolished later, because it can not be used anyway, due to both: its apparent structural damage and its admitted [radioactive] contamination. Make your own conclusions.

Above – destruction zone around the WTC-7 according to my calculations.
Below – Fiterman Hall’s actual damage to compare.

Note that the Verizon Building (to the left of the WTC-7) and the U.S. Post Office Building (to the right of it) were not damaged to the extent that would require their demolitions. They were both repaired and are both operational now. However, the degrees of the actual damage to these two buildings were officially different. While the U.S. Post Office building was officially “damaged”, the Verizon building was officially “seriously damaged”.

Note, that on the official diagram below the Verizon building is marked as “blue” and the U.S. Post Office building is marked as “yellow” – these colors represent various degrees of damage sustained. You can see why it so happened: because the Verizon was dangerously close to the border of the destruction zone – it is clearly seen on my drawing above (the one that shows the imaginary full-circle around the hypocenter). Please, look one more time at that drawing with the imaginary full-circle above and you will get my point.

Above – the official diagram showing different degrees of damage sustained by various buildings in lower Manhattan as a result of the WTC collapse.

The picture above purports to show various degrees of damage sustained by lower Manhattan at 9/11.

The grey area is represented by the WTC-7 plus the Twin Towers and the WTC-3 (a/k/a Marriott Hotel – formerly Vista Hotel), and probably hidden from us a corner of the WTC-4 – all of them being completely pulverized.

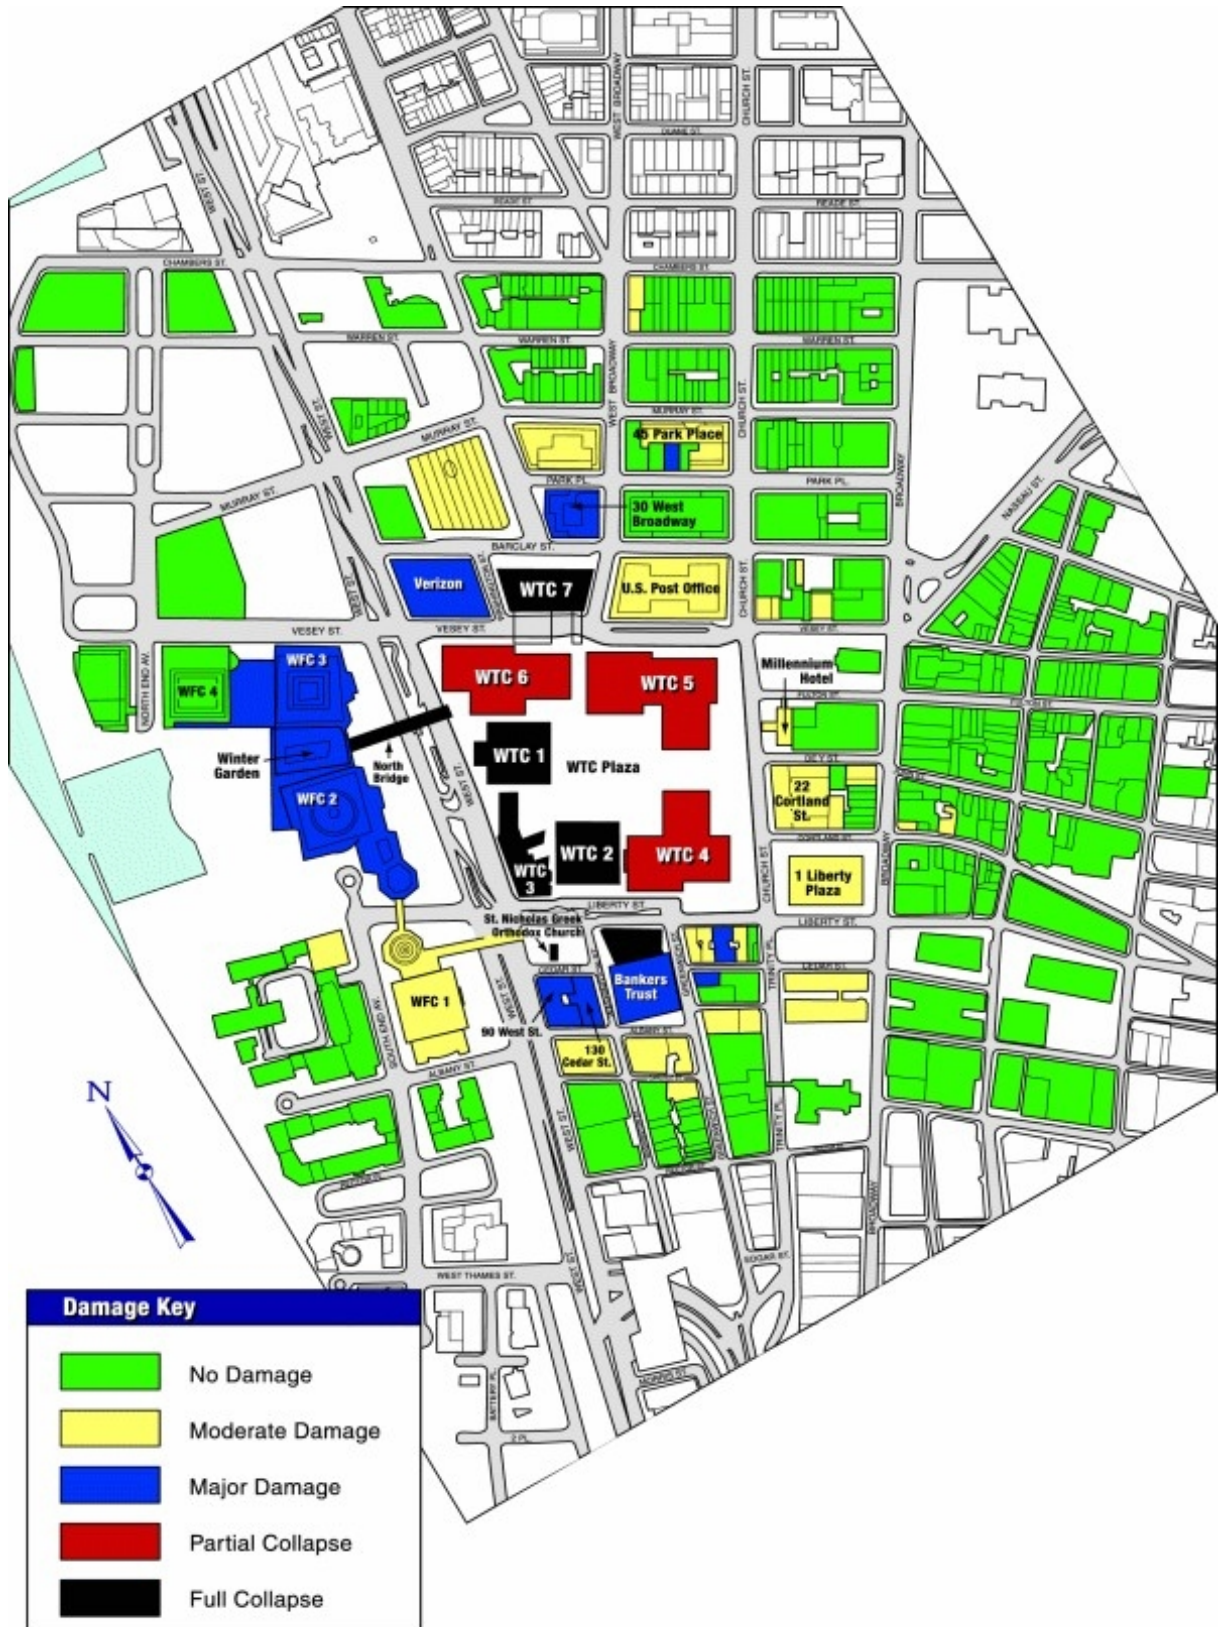

The red area – represented by the WTC-5, the WTC-6 and the WTC-4 – is the area of buildings damaged by falling debris beyond repair (in fact, in this picture the left half of the WTC-3 must have been made grey and its right half – red; but those who produced this diagram failed to observe this particular detail).

The blue area – shows buildings damaged by either falling debris or by a subterranean shock, or by both, but still repairable. Though, not necessary either of these was repaired in reality: after 9/11 some of these “blue” structures were quietly demolished. It is especially true in regard to a relatively short “blue” building that is slightly visible behind the WTC-7 – this is the abovementioned “Fiterman Hall”.

The yellow area – shows the area affected only by the dust cloud (to which almost 80% of the steel Twin Towers and the WTC-7 have been reduced).

Just to confirm the above drawing representing various degrees of damage to lower Manhattan’s buildings, here is another official drawing dealing with the same matter (I discovered it on one of the countless 9/11-related web pages, but now that page seems to no longer exist):

Above – another official diagram showing different degrees of damage in lower Manhattan.

From the second drawing it is also clear that the “major” damage was suffered by the buildings that were closest to the three underground nuclear explosions hypocenters.

I can’t resist placing here another very illustrative photograph of “Ground Zero”, this time an aerial one. It clearly shows the three sites of the destroyed buildings – the WTC-1, the WTC-2 and the WTC-7. (The inscriptions in red were added by some people who were apparently acquainted with my claims in regard to the 150 kiloton nukes.) This particular photo is especially valuable because it clearly shows the three buildings that were immediately surrounding the former WTC-7: the “Verizon” building (above the WTC-7 on this photo), the “U.S. Post Office” Building (below the WTC-7), and the “Fiterman Hall” (to the right of the WTC-7 – marked “FH” on this photo). I have to mention, that there are not too many photos available that clearly show the “Fiterman Hall”. This photo is indeed of the rare kind.

Above – aerial photo of Ground Zero showing three sites of the destroyed WTC buildings and three buildings surrounding the WTC-7: the Verizon building (above), the U.S. Post Office building (below) and the Fiterman Hall (to the right of the WTC-7). This photo was taken presumably around 21-22 of September, 2001.

This photo helps to understand why the Verizon building was “seriously damaged” (yet, still reparable), in contrast to the U.S. Post Office building that was only “damaged”. This photo also makes it clear why the Fiterman Hall, which was seemingly the “farthest” building from the actual WTC-7, was damaged beyond repair and had to be demolished afterwards. The streams of radioactive vapors could also be seen on the above photo – ascending from both sides of the Twin Towers, as well as from the site of the WTC-7.

There is another question that logically falls within the scope of this chapter of “unproven suspicions” (meaning that I have to address this question, while not being 100% sure about the answer):

What was the composition of the WTC nuclear demolition team? And whom did they used to report to?

To answer the first of these two questions:

I am not sure, of course, about the exactness of my answer, but I am almost certain (since it would be logical to presume so) that the WTC demolition team must have been composed of the following people:

- a) Some demolition specialists from the “Controlled Demolition Inc.” – those who understood about the mechanics of demolitions in general, and who were especially trained to understand the mechanics of the nuclear demolition in particular;
- b) Some officials from the Department of Buildings of New York (since it was apparently in their domain – to control the in-built demolition schemes of skyscrapers and to eventually permit the actual demolitions);
- c) Possibly, but not necessarily, some representatives from the WTC owners / WTC administrators;

- d) Some officials from a certain U.S. counter-terrorism unit in whose power was to evaluate potential threats of nuclear weapons that could have been brought by the so-called “terrorists” into the Twin Towers, and to make corresponding decisions to demolish the Towers if the threat is confirmed; you probably remember that I have mentioned at the beginning of this book a certain “nuclear-terrorism-related” unit – the Department of Energy’s “nuclear bomb squad”, known as the “Nuclear Emergency Search Team” (“NEST”), which on 5 of September 2001 was dispatched to Europe on the pretext of participation in the exercise called “Jackal Cave” (this allowed the unit to be absent in the United States when it was most needed); I presume that the abovementioned officials in the WTC demolition team might have been from this particular “nuclear bomb squad”; though, I am not 100% sure about it, and they might have been from some other similar counter-terrorism unit;
- e) Some specialists in either the nuclear weapons (from the U.S. military) or in underground nuclear testing (from an appropriate U.S. nuclear scientific institution) – whose duties were to arm the demolition nukes, to send them to their “zero-boxes”, and to seal off the delivery tunnels, as well as to observe the general safety in regard to the underground nuclear explosions [most probably, the corresponding alarm signalization was in the domain of that group, though, I am not sure];
- f) Perhaps, some specialists/officials from either the Civil Defense or from Environmental protection agency (or from both) whose duty was to monitor potential dangers caused by the underground nuclear explosions;
- g) Either the group under “e)” or the group under “f)”, as a matter of “must”, must have included a sub-division of dosimetrists;
- h) Possibly, but not necessary, some specialists from the Office of Secure Transportation (“OST”) whose duties were to safe-guard the nuclear charges;
- i) Almost certainly, some folks from the U.S. Secret Service – who might provide an extra security by controlling or supplementing the group under “h)”, or, possibly, sharing the task with the group under “h)”; it is possible that there was a special interdepartmental team under the aegis of the Secret Service (our discovery of Mr. Bennette from the Secret Service and with the plastic construction helmet in his hand testifies to the possibility of the last option);
- j) There must have been a certain (perhaps, a “non-resident” one) group of specialists in technical maintenance of the nuclear charges (in this case, particularly the “thermonuclear” ones); these must have come from time to time to take care of the demolition nukes and to maintain in certain conditions their thermonuclear fuel (deuteride of lithium has property to degrade in the course of time and its condition must be duly monitored and the quality must be maintained); the last group might belong to either the U.S. military or to the U.S. Department of Energy; however, I would bet on the latter because it is more probable.

Was the WTC nuclear demolition team staffed with full-time workers/officials, or was its composition of “honorary” staffers who performed some other duties most of the time?

It is difficult to say for sure, but I would bet on the second option. Since the nuclear demolitions of the World Trade Centers do not usually happen too often, it would not be reasonable to maintain the full-time staffers in such a team who would sit doing nothing for decades while receiving their salaries and service promotions. That would be too much of a mockery of firefighters (the firefighters, at least, have fires from time to time). I guess that the members of the nuclear demolition team in their daily lives used to perform some other duties. However, a few of them (most probably those from the Department of Buildings, from the Controlled Demolition Inc., and from the “anti-nuclear terror unit”) could have performed their assignments with the team from time to time, on the “on-duty” basis, while those who were providing the immediate guard to the nuclear charges might have been on more or less permanent duties, probably, rotating in shifts. This is what I think because to presume this kind of arrangement would be logical.

To whom such demolition team could have reported?

It is difficult to say, but we could guess.

In my humble opinion, since the WTC demolition team was, most probably, the interdepartmental entity, it should not have reported to any particular department. Though, it is possible, still, that it might report to the Department of Energy, because both – the NEST and the OST belonged to that Department, and, most probably, the technicians responsible for the maintenance of the nukes belonged to the Department of Energy either.

Nonetheless, when it comes to my opinion, I believe that the demolition team used to report to the so-called “counter-terrorism coordinator” (popularly known as the “counter-terrorism tsar”) – a position occupied at the time of the 9/11 events by a certain Mr. Richard A. Clarke¹⁴⁵.

Thus, I presume that the actual order (or the “last-instance permission”, might be) to demolish the Twin Towers came from Mr. Clarke and not from the Department of Energy.

An additional confirmation of this suggestion is that it was no one else than Mr. Clarke who ordered evacuations of the Sears Tower in Chicago and of the UN Building in New York, while his evacuation orders were enforced before the collapse of the first of the two Twin Towers. You will see the true meaning of the Sears Tower’s and of the UN building’s evacuations in the following chapters of this book.

However, when it comes to the source of the order (and that of the “last instance permission”) to demolish the WTC-7 late afternoon – I am not sure who of the U.S. officials took personal responsibility for that action.

As you probably understand, it was not Larry Silverstein who gave the permission to set off the third nuke. He merely gave a formal permission to demolish the remaining part of his WTC-7 property to some concerned U.S. official, whom he did not want to name and whom he vaguely referred to as “the, er., fire department commander” in his infamous interview¹⁴⁶. In that interview Mr. Silverstein stated it quite clear (I quote):

“...and I said, “We’ve had such terrible loss of life, maybe the smartest thing to do is pull it...” And they made that decision to pull and we watched the building collapse...”

Who were “they”?

Clarke? Rice? Bush? Cheney?

I do not know. It is yet to be investigated.

However, I could assure you that the unjustified cowardly decision to demolish the WTC building 7 by the third 150 kiloton thermonuclear explosion has added its 30% to the actual radiological consequences at Ground Zero. And the corresponding share – to the amount of cancers among the gullible ground zero responders. And the corresponding share – to the pile of debris and to the amount of recovery works required. And the corresponding share – to the amount of lies required covering it up. And the corresponding share – to the amount of needed cash that had to be paid to the ground zero responders, to the doctors who would treat them, and to the spin-doctors who would treat you, the gullible taxpayer.

P.S. In the very last moment I discovered one more intriguing detail. It was about our Mr. Bennette, who is suspected to be one of the “nuclear demolition men”. A cursory search on the Internet for his surname revealed the following article dated by April 20, 2004: “9-11 Hero Cop arrested for stealing cars”¹⁴⁷
I am quoting:

“New York - Ex-cop William Bennette of Bayside survived the terror attack on the World Trade Center and helped people flee the collapse of the towers. For that he got a valor award.

But investigators think it was more than bad memories that the retired police sergeant took away from Ground Zero.

Bennette, 53, was arrested early Tuesday on charges he stole five U.S. Secret Service vehicles that were part of the agency's fleet at the trade center site. Using phony documents, Bennette, who had been

¹⁴⁵ http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Richard_A._Clarke

¹⁴⁶ Larry Silverstein’s interview in the PBS documentary “America Rebuilds” aired on September 10, 2002.

¹⁴⁷ <http://www.assatashakur.org/forum/prison-police-industrial-complex/8021-9-11-cop-hero-car-thief.html>

working as a support technician for the Secret Service, diverted the vehicles and transferred some of them to his family, officials charged....”

“...According to the criminal complaint, Bennette was involved in the maintenance of the Secret Service's fleet of 179 vehicles at the World Trade Center complex. After the attack, he took part in an inventory of the agency vehicles which had been damaged, destroyed or recovered from the vicinity of the trade center complex.

Secret Service officials determined that some vehicles listed in the inventory as having been disposed of or "crushed" were showing up as having been sent to Larry's Auto Collision shop in Whitestone, the complaint stated. Bennette used a fictitious sales receipt that purported to sell three of the vehicles to the auto shop which actually went to his family members, officials said. Two other vehicles were given to an employee of the shop, according to officials.

In a search of Bennette's desk at the Secret Service office in New York, officials said they found a June 2003 receipt for the sale of three vehicles--a 2001 Chevy Impala, 2001 Ford Taurus and a 1998 Mercury Sable-- to the Whitestone body shop. But officials said the transaction was never authorized and that no money was ever received by the Secret Service, the complaint stated....”

In the context of the events the abovementioned criminal action of William Bennette could only be interpreted as follows (two options, depending on the exact date and time he did that, which was not mentioned in the article and are yet to be established):

- a) William Bennette knew about the upcoming “aerial attacks” by aluminum “terror planes” on the steel WTC buildings well in advance and he knew well in advance that as a result of those aerial attacks the Twin Towers would be destroyed by a nuclear demolition team of which he was a member. Therefore he decided to make a little business of his own by hiding several service cars entrusted to his care (he soundly reasoned that they would be crashed anyway).
- b) William Bennette did not know about the Twin Towers demolitions in advance; however, he got to know about the upcoming demolition of the WTC-7 a few hours in advance (do not forget that the WTC-7 was demolished after 5 PM that evening). Since the WTC-7 was hastily evacuated and all cars that were left in its parking area would be destroyed anyway, Mr. Bennette decided to save a few cars and to hide them somewhere, and, after the WTC-7 collapse – to sign them off as being allegedly “destroyed”. And so he did.

To presume that Mr. Bennette knew in advance about the whole 9/11 plan (i.e. to presume the option “a” listed above) would be too much, in my humble opinion, since this blabbing ex-sergeant did not look serious enough to be initiated into such a serious thing as the 9/11 project (though, this possibility could not be discarded, of course, and is yet to be investigated).

Thus, I would bet on the option “b”: while most of the shocked servicemen were desperately searching for survivors in the rubble, with some others being busy to “half-burn” cars around with blow-lamps in order to imitate the consequences of the explosions of Osama bin Laden’s mini-nukes, the “9/11 hero cop” William Bennette (who knew about the dangers of radiation during the first hours after the 150 kiloton thermo-nuclear explosions) preferred to spend the precious hours remaining, before the WTC-7 collapse, on something more beneficial...

Anyway, to be fair to this poor ex-sergeant, I have to mention that it was not only Mr. Bennette who decided to make some gains out of the WTC collapse. Some other folks apparently did the same thing (or even bigger than that – for example, trying to steal gold bullions, instead of cheap used police cars), but, unlike the unfortunate William Bennette, they have never been caught.

I would like to end this chapter with the same disclaimer I have began it: I am not going to bear any responsibility for anything I suggested in this particular chapter, and I will not accept any arguments intended “to disprove my claims” in the future, as well as any accusations that I might lie here, by stating in advance: I did not know for sure about anything I have said here and I was only guessing, though based on some reasonable observations and on some elementary logic. However, this disclaimer concerns only the current chapter. Neither before, nor after this chapter have I allowed myself any speculation: all what I claim in the rest of the book, I know for sure.

Nuclear Madness 1

Here, at last, we have to come back to that suspicious book by a certain Mr. William Tahil, B.A. – named: “Ground Zero: The Nuclear Demolition of the WTC ...” – which is downloadable from the following Internet address: http://nucleardemolition.com/GZero_Report.pdf).

As you probably remember, we have already discussed several points of his book while disproving the last conspiracy theory (the “Conspiracy Theory No. 7”) at the corresponding chapter of this book. It was suspected then that Mr. Tahil apparently knew about the exact details of the WTC nuclear demolition scheme. Now you will be surprised when I prove to you that he indeed knew about it even more that you could initially expect. Look at one of his most incriminating drawings below, taken out of the abovementioned book, and compare it with the aerial photograph of the WTC actual demolition site (courtesy NOAA) which is above. Comments in green and in red, and green and red arrows were added to the below drawing by me.

I do not have much comment. All, what I could say is that Mr. Tahil is suspiciously “too clever”. It was quite a task – to figure out the exact depth and the exact orientation of the position of that nuclear “reactor” – capable at once to destroy (he even used the word “pulverized”) both buildings – the WTC-1 and the WTC-3 (Vista Hotel; formerly Marriott Hotel).

Do not forget, that Mr. Tahil’s book was released in 2006 (and, perhaps, written during the previous year). This means that all of his supposedly “innocent”, and yet so brilliant calculations came amidst an atmosphere of almost universal delusion – by then shared by even qualified construction engineers. I hope you still remember that in the year 2006 almost all 9/11 critics and researchers, genuine construction engineers inclusive, were under the impression that the WTC was demolished by either conventional explosives, by thermite, or at best case – by “mini-nukes”... He appears to be so prominent in his brave way of free thinking and so much ahead of the crowd, this Mr. Tahil, that we should compare him with some geniuses – like Einstein or Newton. He truly deserves such a comparison, this “genius” of nuclear and engineering thought...

Now there is a logical question:

How come, that such an apparent genius,

- who perfectly knows what kind of radioactive isotopes could be found after a nuclear explosion, who knows the exact fission sequence of Uranium-235,
- who claims to know how different seismic waves propagate and what kinds of seismic waves are typical after an underground nuclear explosion,
- who was even able to so brilliantly calculate the exact depth and the exact horizontal orientation of the hypocenter of that particular explosion, which has “pulverized” both – the WTC-1 and the WTC-3 simultaneously, how could such a “genius” claim that a nuclear “reactor” could allegedly “explode”, while it is known even to a school-boy that it is impossible and that only a nuclear charge, especially designed as such, could cause a nuclear explosion????

Just try to be realistic: Mr. Tahil attempted to cheat us and he did so in the most cynical way – much more cynical if compared to the “plebeian” or even “patricians” versions of the “truth” concocted by the poor U.S. Government. Such a cynical and shameless attempt shall not be forgiven, in my humble opinion.

Well, I myself could easily answer a possible question – from where did I get that particular knowledge of the secret nuclear demolition scheme of the WTC? I got it from the Soviet Special Control Service – a/k/a military unit 46179. My name you know, everybody could check it and find out that I indeed had served there for almost 5 years. Moreover, I have already proven that my knowledge was not about the exact details; the supposedly exact details I managed to figure out merely by some logical thinking and by calculations based on my definite advanced knowledge of the existence of the WTC nuclear demolition scheme.

What about Mr. Tahil? From where has he gotten his suspiciously exact knowledge of such a secret scheme? If he supposes not even to know that such a thing could exist? Try to guess from where.

Mr. Tahil ends his introductory word to the abovementioned book by this phrase: “Where will be the next target of this Nuclear Madness if they are not stopped?”

It is difficult to answer your question, dear Mr. Tahil... You probably know better than us where will be their next target... And even if you do not know yet, you could easily ask them, because with them you are acquainted for sure. But, at least, this “nuclear madness” towards us shall be stopped right now. Especially the important part of your notorious “nuclear madness” which claims that a “nuclear reactor” could allegedly cause a nuclear blast.

Actually, Mr. William Tahil supposes to represent a certain interest to the FBI – and such an interest in him supposes to be much more serious than in those who have merely speculated on the stock market prior to 9/11, apparently counting on those imminent terrorist attacks¹⁴⁸. The problem, however, is that the

¹⁴⁸ It is well-known that there were some peculiar speculative purchases made prior to September 11 events on the stock-market, which could not be explained by anything else than by the exact advance knowledge of the upcoming acts of “terrorism”; it is also known that the FBI attempted to look into those irregularities very seriously – however, they had never published any results of their inquiries and it is unknown if any of such stock-market speculators has ever been arrested in connection with September 11 attacks or not; it is unknown also if any of such suspected 9/11 stock-market speculators has ever revealed to the inquirers any important information – as to the exact source of this unprecedented advanced knowledge...

FBI knows about the WTC nuclear demolition scheme probably even better than Mr. Tahil and that is why those FBI guys won't be interested in it anyway...

I think, I have done a good job – I have saved the “barbarians” from a very serious attempt to cheat them. It is better than nothing.

Thanks, Mr. Tahil, anyway, for your nice book – because I liked and even loved your new term “Nuclear Madness” – and I will definitely add it to my arsenal.

Independent confirmations of the nuclear demolition. Molten rock, thermal maps, “Ice Age glaciers” and “hard evidence”.

One might ask probably another question – are there any independent sources that could confirm that there were indeed three underground nuclear explosions in Lower Manhattan, apart from the ravings of the author of these lines and other “conspiracy theorists” of similar kind – such as abovementioned Mr. Tahil?

Firstly, I would like to state that Mr. Tahil claims that there were only two underground nuclear explosions, not actually three. This is, by the way, yet another clear indication that he might be closely related to those culprits from the WTC demolition team. If he were an honest researcher, then, considering his supernatural shrewdness, he would never fail to notice the third nuclear demolition event – in regard to the WTC-7. To answer the actual question – yes, there are some independent sources, which indirectly testify to the same effect as the author of these lines.

An unprecedented article titled “Pictured: The 40ft ‘pothole’ that shows Ground Zero was once the site of an Ice Age glacier” appeared simultaneously in several newspapers, for example, in the UK “Mail”, published online¹⁴⁹ on September 23, 2008.

The article featured quite an interesting photograph showing the excavated “bathtub” at “Ground Zero” along with an odd, giant, so-called “pothole” in the spot of one of the former Twin Towers. Edges of the “pothole” appeared to be covered in molten rock. There were actually three pictures of the so-called “potholes” – two of them inserted into the abovementioned article, and one more photo of the same series was used in another news article dealing with the same issue. Below is one of the first two:

Proof of ice: The giant 'pothole', seen in the lower half of this picture, is proof the World Trade Centre towers stood on what was once ground covered by an Ice Age glacier

You could really appreciate the description under the above photo... I mean, you could really appreciate the level of the desperation of the U.S. Government officials and their spin-doctors, who were tasked with the near impossible task – to say something comprehensible in regard to the incriminating cavities that had nothing to do with either the "kerosene", nor with the supposed "mini-nukes".

Yet, an even more seditious picture was leaked to the public at about the same time; it belonged to the same series of the so-called "potholes" photos. This one came with the Associated Press' article published by "Science on NBCNEWS.com". The article was named "Ice Age geology revealed at Ground Zero. World Trade Center dig uncovers 20,000-year-old, 40-foot-deep pothole". The actual article could be found on this MSNBC news web page¹⁵² (at least, it was still there in the last days of December 2012).

The below one is that seditious photo showing the smooth edges of the molten rock I am talking about. The direct link to the original JPEG file of it on the Internet is here¹⁵³. However, as with the photo above, instead of saving the original file, I preferred to make a screenshot from the web page that allowed me to capture the original description below the photo as it was in the article:

David W. Dunlap / The New York Times via Redux Pictures

A construction worker at the World Trade Center Tower 4 site is framed by the otherworldly landscape of glacier-age bedrock in lower Manhattan on Friday. The landscape—including plummeting holes, steep cliffsides and soft billows of steel-gray bedrock—is basking in sunlight for the first time in millennia.

These utterly seditious pictures were apparently taken illegally, since it was strictly prohibited to bring any photographic equipment into "ground zero" area, even when these words were still spelt with low-case letters, and when there were thousands of ground zero responders clearing enormous piles of the debris and searching for survivors.

It would be even more illegal to make such pictures of "Ground Zero" when the majority of the initial responders were banned from the site¹⁵⁴ and only less than a hundred of the highly trusted people remained there to fix the unexplainable underground cavities.

¹⁵² http://www.msnbc.msn.com/id/26844329/ns/technology_and_science-science/t/ice-age-geology-revealed-ground-zero/

¹⁵³ http://msnbcmedia.msn.com/j/msnbc/Components/Photo/_new/080922-world-trade-glacial-hlg-7p.hmedium.jpg

¹⁵⁴ On November 2nd, 2001, NY Mayor Giuliani suddenly and without any seeming reason has ordered city officials to limit the number of rescue workers trying to recover victims' bodies to 25 each from the Port Authority police, NYPD and FDNY, and an additional 10 firefighters for fire suppression – which caused deep resentment among the firefighters and even some scuffles with the police – deployed to protect "Ground Zero" from those unwanted firefighters.

It could probably be said that taking and, moreover, publishing such pictures was the most cynical action – tantamount to a slap at the face of the U.S. Government. Perhaps, it could only be more cynical by publishing an actual blueprint of the WTC nuclear demolition scheme or by publishing a patent registered in this regard.

As you could probably imagine, the U.S. Government was caught by these pictures with its pants down and had to say at least something in explanation for what that so-called "pothole", at that moment incompletely filled with concrete, might mean from the technical point of view.

It is not surprising, therefore, that the description under the first photograph was claiming that it was allegedly the "Proof of ice..." and that allegedly it is "...proof the World Trade Centre towers stood on what was once ground covered by an Ice Age glacier".

Here are some quotations from the first of the two abovementioned articles:

"...Proof that Manhattan was once buried underneath an Ice Age glacier has been uncovered at Ground Zero..."

"...A 40-foot 'pothole' is the most arresting feature. However reports described a world of rocky colour basking in the New York sun for the first time in thousands of years: underground cliffs, layers of steel-gray bedrock, and thousands of cobblestones in a muted rainbow of reds and purples and greens - as smooth as those found by the sea..."

As you could probably understand, they are talking about molten edges of the rock.

They had no chance of explaining this "phenomenon" because it couldn't have been caused by anything else than extremely high temperatures. Moreover, these high temperatures must have been much higher than those of burning kerosene that allegedly "melted steel" into fluffy microscopic dust, and even higher than those that could pertain to burning thermite (if thermite could melt steel, it does not mean that it could also melt rock, does it?). Therefore, the spin-doctors resorted to the most desperate lie – by claiming that the rock was "smooth" allegedly because of the alleged "Ice Age glacier".

However, for those who are friendly with common sense, these unprecedented photographs by no means constitute the "proof of ice", as claimed in the abovementioned articles. For the thinking people they constitute the incontrovertible proof of the underground nuclear explosions that demolished the Towers.

On the first photo above you can clearly see that the underground cavity was in the process of being filled with concrete and by the time the photo was taken, the cavity was almost completely filled with concrete – because even a concrete floor is clearly visible in a relatively shallow depth there.

Here are a couple of quotations from the second article (the one that belonged to the Associated Press):

"... Exposing the solid rock beneath at the Ground Zero site in lower Manhattan is critical for supporting what will be Tower 4 of the new World Trade Center, being built by Silverstein Properties..."

"You want to make sure you're not perching something on a ledge," said Anthony Pontecorvo, a supervising structural engineer at Mueser Rutledge Consulting Engineers, which is working on the project..."

"...While removing the overlying soil is an engineering necessity, the digging has given scientists a rare window into the deep past and formations like the huge pothole..."

"...Moss [senior geologist at Mueser Rutledge] and Pontecorvo plan to deliver a lecture about the geology of the site Wednesday at the Tribute WTC Visitor Center, next to the Ground Zero site..."

"...The reminders of the power of glaciers won't be around for long. The pothole and other features are being covered, filled in or blasted away. "It's nice to look at, but it's all got to go," said Robert B. Reina, a supervising structural engineer at Mueser Rutledge..."

As you could see from the above quotations, these "engineers" and "geologists" have easily reconciled themselves with the allegation that the former WTC Twin Towers (as well as the WTC-7) had "perched" on the slippery so-called "potholes" for several decades. Now they are only concerned that this should not be repeated with the newer buildings, built in their stead. Plus, of course, they are concerned that the "the reminders of the power of glaciers” have to disappear as soon as possible. You have to appreciate their approach, indeed... They are not even ashamed to deliver lectures on “geology” to entertain simpletons...

In a manner of “by the way”, or as the smallest lyrical digression, the humble author of these lines feels obliged to mention that he personally does not even believe that any so-called “Ice Age” or “glacial epoch” has ever occurred on Earth as claimed by the impudent “geologists” exploiting the public gullibility in such a shameless manner as demonstrated in this case. You can read about technicalities of the so-called “Ice Age” a/k/a “Glacial Period” in a separate, free portion of this book titled “Philosophy”, which is highly recommended, especially if you wish to update your education when it comes to the basics of the Freemasonic cheating of modern “secular” slaves.

Here are three more revealing photographs of the underground cavities under the former WTC buildings.

These three are the most seditious, because they reveal not only the molten rock and the direction to which it has flown, but also sizes of the actual cavities. Thanks to these photos, it is now possible to estimate how many kilotons of nuclear munitions were needed to melt and to vaporize that amount of granite rock. This, in turn, allows us to establish whether this job was done by the alleged “mini-nukes” of less than 1 kiloton that supposedly belonged to Saddam Hussein and Osama bin Laden, or it was rather done by huge thermonuclear charges that belonged to the United States’ own government... Do not forget that 1 kiloton of nuclear munitions (the maximum size of a mini-nuke) could vaporize only 70 tons of dry granite rock and to melt another 300 tons of it.

These most valuable images – the one above and the two more below, appeared on the so-called “Glacial Rock Formation”-related web page: <http://www.wtc.com/media/images/s/archive-glacial-rock-formation-at-wtc-site> at WTC site set in the archive gallery <http://www.wtc.com/media/images/archive>. It is notable that this killing evidence was provided by no one else, but by the company of a certain Mr. Larry Silverstein. It looks like Mr. Silverstein was indeed trying to create serious trouble for the embattled U.S. Government, because his “courtesy” of publishing such incriminating photos can not be interpreted otherwise. We will talk about Mr. Silverstein and his possible motives later, in a separate chapter devoted entirely to him.

In fact, many more photographs showing undeniable consequences of nuclear explosions at "Ground Zero" could have been available today for our research, if not for the sad fact, illustrated in the below picture by recalcitrant official FEMA photographer Kurt Sonnenfeld, who testified¹⁵⁵ as follows: "Immediately after the attacks on the World Trade Center, the entire area in lower Manhattan was sealed off to the public and to the news media. All cameras were prohibited inside the secured perimeter and any "unauthorized" cameras were immediately confiscated". One could only wonder – why? What was so "secret" in the three piles of assorted debris from the three office buildings, that photographing them was strictly prohibited?

The sign shown on the photograph reads: 'WARNING! No cameras or video equipment permitted! VIOLATORS will be prosecuted and equipment seized!'

Of course, despite this warning and despite the prospect of being readily prosecuted, the ground zero responders continued to secretly bring compact photo cameras with them. That is why now we have quite a few "Ground Zero" images published on the Internet. However, this number of images could have been hundreds of thousands, moreover, made by high-class professional cameras, if not for that prohibition...

In general, you have to understand one obvious thing: you simply can not demand that "hard evidence" must be provided (meaning published in a publicly available form) that clearly points to the WTC nuclear demolition. Such a demand is clearly ridiculous, and those folks, who do not realize it and still stubbornly put this demand forward, do not deserve any answer whatsoever (I mean, instead of trying to satisfy the unreasonable, ridiculous demands of a moron, it is better to ignore the moron).

You have to realize that when you encounter such an unprecedented, well organized cheating, that involves not even billions, but, perhaps, trillions of dollars, that involves almost all serious secret services (and not only those from the U.S., but from several other countries that connived), you can not expect that anything really "revealing" would be left available for you. Do not be so naïve. Those professional folks know very well how to prevent any leakage of sensitive information and how to promptly stop such a leakage if occurred. Add here, that in the most part, the real 9/11 evidence was also duly classified (and it remains classified, meaning you can not demand it through the legal means), and you will get the point.

To put forward a claim that I allegedly “had a duty” to provide a blue-print of the WTC nuclear demolition scheme to prove my points (as some folks attempted to demand after watching my video-presentation) is not just simply unfair, especially considering the circumstances. It clearly points that those who demand such a thing are either complete morons, or, most probably, they are paid shills whose duties are to discredit any revelations dangerous to their masters and to smear those who might dare to tell the truth.

One has to understand that such thing as “hard evidence” exists and works only in a purely judicial environment – when both parties are required to swear to The Most High that they would say the truth, the only truth and nothing but the truth (and also providing that the judge sitting in the case has reasons to believe that either of the parties who swears as such indeed sincerely believes in God and therefore would fear to lie to the court). Except in this particular case, the so-called “hard evidence” does not exist.

Try to be realistic when considering this scenario: what “evidence” could you expect to obtain if you are merely a private person and your opponent is a powerful government, which, among other things, has power to classify anything it deems expedient, and also has power to force any potential eye-witness to sign non-disclosure contracts? And it even has power to re-print post-9/11 dictionaries? Be honest with yourself: you have absolutely no chance to obtain any “hard evidence” in this situation (except, maybe, by comparing the pre-9/11 “ground zero” definition with the post-9/11 one).

Therefore, in the world of secret services, there is no such thing as so-called “hard evidence”. All intelligence services are obliged to obtain (and to sift through) their information mostly from various rumors, from various shady (and not necessarily trust-worthy) informants, from various slips of tongues of officials – accidentally published in censored media, and so on. It is a very rare occurrence when some intelligence service is so lucky that it could get hold of a stolen or a copied real secret document of its adversaries. However, even in this case such a lucky secret service could never be 100% sure that such “luckily obtained” secret document is indeed genuine and is not merely a part of a disinformation game played by a shifty adversary. In any case, analysts who work in intelligence organizations always rely more on their own common sense and elementary logic, than on any obtained classified information about an adversary, because the latter could be intentional disinformation. It is not surprising, therefore, that well over 90% of classified information routinely obtained by intelligence services is being obtained via analyzing of non-classified (and, moreover, heavily censored) publications in common newspapers, magazines, etc. (and not through bribing the enemy’s officials, not through hacking their safes or computers, and not through eavesdropping on their communications).

Considering this common approach, and especially in this particular situation when the U.S. Government classified everything related to 9/11, to demand from the humble author of these lines the blueprint of the WTC nuclear demolition scheme or some published chart of radioactivity measurements on Manhattan “Ground Zero” is nothing but ridiculous. And the above picture by Kurt Sonnenfeld is the best explanation of what I mean.

Thus, the most seditious photographs of the deep underground cavities on the WTC spot that clearly show molten rock, but claim to be the alleged “proof of ice”, represent one of the rarest opportunities to obtain any real 9/11 proof whatsoever. Therefore, instead of criticizing such proof, you have to appreciate it. Especially, considering that it is the really hard proof. Do not even doubt, that only the shills could (and would) criticize this particular evidence, trying their best to diminish its importance.

In fact, the shills that infested all important Internet discussions related to 9/11, do their best to create an impression that the “general public” allegedly “believe” the notion of the so-called “proof of glaciers”. If you need a proof of my words, please, try to make the following experiment. Spend a couple of hours posting the above images of the “potholes” and the molten rock in some important 9/11-related Internet forums and start corresponding discussions. You will surely notice an immediate influx of trolling activities – the shills will be there at once to counter your claims and to smear you personally. You will be surprised, indeed, to see how powerful the shills actually are in such situations.

As a variety, you could try to publish excerpts from some pre-9/11 dictionaries showing the “ground zero” definitions and to start corresponding discussions in the same Internet forums. You will be surprised to see what the shills will do with you in this case.

I feel that I am indeed obliged to increase the public awareness in regard to the shills, so, please, do not be annoyed by the fact that I mention the shills and their possible actions from time to time. The shills and their “opinions” are very dangerous for the innocent people; however, they lose all their magical power at once if you are able to recognize them as skills. Thus, I feel it is my primary duty to remind my reader that the skills are there and “they are watching you” – so that my reader could sustain an adequate level of vigilance of his own, being able to unmask and to counter the skills.

To continue with the above question – are there any independent sources, which could indirectly testify to the same effect as the author of these lines?

Besides the unprecedented photographs showing the underground cavity with molten rock on its edges, there was a serious study undertaken in regard to the thermal “hot” spots at Manhattan’s “Ground Zero”.

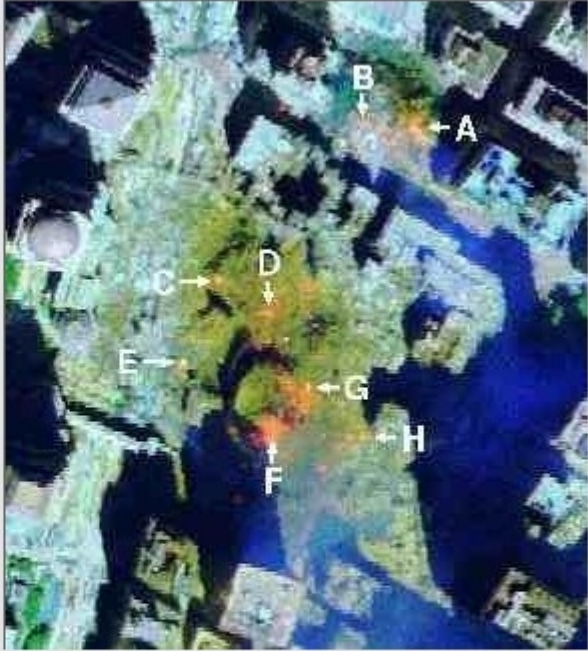

Some results of this study were published here: http://www.whatreallyhappened.com/wtc_hotspots.html (the seditious web page, understandably, no longer exists today) – in an article named “Thermal Hot Spots: Fingerprint of a WTC Demolition”.

Interestingly, its authors did not talk about a nuclear demolition, just about a “demolition”. It appears that those people who undertook that study were not quite sure what has really happened and were inclined to suspect some incendiaries – like thermite – supposedly used in the WTC demolition.

The actual WTC Thermal Spots photograph used to be published on the abovementioned website. It refers to its source <http://pubs.usgs.gov/of/2001/ofr-01-0429/thermal.r09.html> – which is a governmental source USGC Spectroscopy Lab. Instead of placing here the original official JPEG file of the photograph “as is”, I decided to make a screenshot from the former, no longer existing web page, because it, for some reason, embraced a few lines of important words just beneath the actual photograph. Here it is:

Above – a screenshot with USGC Spectroscopy Lab’s 16 September 2001 WTC thermal map from no longer existing web page http://www.whatreallyhappened.com/wtc_hotspots.html (red underlining in the text below was added by me; the Fahrenheit degrees conversion was added by me; the rest is the original screenshot).

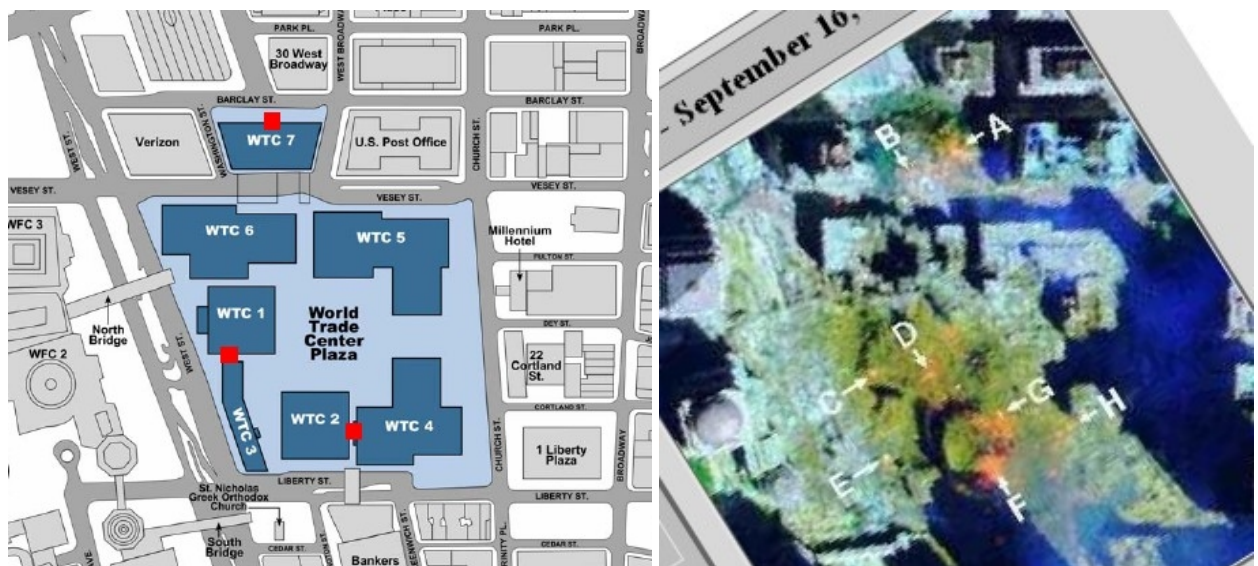

Please, make sure to notice the quotation by the “American Free Press” below the above photograph (a certain surname that I underlined with red). We will come back to these words and to this surname in the next chapter. For now, however, we will concentrate on the actual thermal spots, their positions, and the stated temperatures.

We can easily orientate the above thermal map by the distinct image of the WTC-6 with a black hole in its middle (in between letters “B” and “D”), as well as by distinct outlines of the U.S. Post Office building (to the right of the letter “A”) and those of the relatively intact WTC-5. The unfortunate Fiterman Hall building, with the damaged corner, is also distinctly visible on that thermal map – above the letter “A”.

An arrow with the letter “A” (the second “hottest” spot) points to a “hot spot” under the WTC-7 (about its middle but under its farthest from the Twins wall). An arrow with “G” (the first “hottest” spot) points to a “hot spot” between the corner of the South Tower and the WTC-4. An arrow with “C” (the third “hottest” spot) points to a “hot spot” between the North Tower and the WTC-3 (the defunct Marriott Hotel). These three hottest spots – featuring 727°C (1340°F), 747°C (1376°F) and 627°C (1160°F) respectively – are positioned exactly in the suspected spots of the three hypocenters of the three suspected underground nuclear explosions.

I also would like to brag a little – I made my own calculations of the exact spots of the zero-boxes for the three nuclear demolition charges without first seeing the above thermal map. I used in my calculations only two available sources. One of these was the aerial photograph that somehow revealed the three potential hypocenters by explicit direction of damage (I am talking about the aerial photograph by NOAA available in the above chapter on the “unproven suspicions” – closer to the end of the chapter where building contours are outlined with yellow and green). The other was the photograph that showed the two corners of each of the former Twin Towers with some remnants of adjacent walls somehow managing to survive. When I eventually encountered this thermal map, it only confirmed my own calculations: apparently, I did not make any mistake and calculated everything exactly.

Please, compare my claims in regard to the positioning of the demolition nukes with the relevant part of the above thermal map (that I rotated to match); just to remind you, the hottest spots are “A”, “G” and “C”:

Above left – the Low Manhattan’s map with three red dots – my original calculations regarding the actual positions of the demolition nukes (these were based only on analyzing the damage and I figured them out without seeing the thermal map). Above right – the USGC Spectroscopy Lab’s “hot spots map” rotated to match the map on the left.

You could notice that the third demolition nuke was apparently positioned not exactly in the middle of the longest wall of the WTC-7. It was a little bit “of-center” – shifted to the right, towards the U.S. Post Office building. Therefore the hypocenter of the third thermonuclear explosion occurred opposite the closest corner of the Fiterman Hall building. This is clearly visible from the thermal map; the schematic drawing on the left might not be exact, while on the right is the aerial photo that is precise.

Why was the nuke shifted slightly towards the U.S. Post Office building, you might ask? I think the answer is obvious: because they needed to position it as far as possible from the Verizon building that was too dangerously close to the WTC-7 on the other side. Those people, who planned the demolition scheme, must have calculated the nuclear explosions effects very carefully. Thus, they indeed managed to save the Verizon building (although, still, it was “seriously damaged” compared to the U.S. Post Office building, which was merely “damaged”). However, they were not able to save the Fiterman Hall – the underground foundations of the latter (at least, those on the closest point) were damaged beyond repair; and, moreover, the underground premises of the Fiterman Hall were apparently “contaminated” – exactly as it was stated in the official reports advocating the consequent demolition of that unfortunate building. In any case, the Verizon building was incomparably more expensive than the short and relatively unimportant Fiterman Hall, so the choice of those who calculated the demolition scenario was obvious.

In this thermal map, besides the hottest three (that exactly match the three supposed spots of the nuclear explosions calculated by me), there are more hot spots – “B”, “D”, “E”, “F” and “H” – featuring various temperatures of less than 600°C (< 1112 °F).

At first, I could not find any reasonable explanation for the rest of the hot spots. However, after thinking for a while, I thought I could explain them. Apparently, the “hot” products of the underground nuclear explosions managed to propagate by some underground tunnels or by some other adjacent cavities, and so they reached these secondary destinations, creating the additional “hot spots” around, and, in the same time, diffusing the picture of the original “hot spots”, and also slightly decreasing the temperatures in the latter.

Let us take a closer look at the above thermal map.

The first of the “secondary” hot spots in question was the spot “B” (featured temperatures 557°C / 1034°F as on September 16, 2001). It was situated next to the hottest primary spot “A” (727°C / 1340°F) that was almost at the middle of the longest wall of the WTC-7 – i.e. at the middle of the imaginary full circle around the WTC-7 we discussed above.

What kind of a pre-existing cavity could have been located under the WTC-7 (so that such a “secondary destination” for the hot products of the third thermonuclear explosion was readily available)?

Oh, we almost forgot, under the WTC-7 there was a certain underground facility to keep the three demolition nukes and from it there must have been two underground delivery tunnels leading to the “zero-boxes” under each of the Twin Towers.

If you remember Mr. William Bennette (the man from the Secret Service with the construction helmet in his hand that had been encountered by the CBS reporter in the abandoned WTC-7 lobby a few minutes after the first Twin Tower had collapsed), you should also remember that he told the CBS reporter and his cameraman that he was left there to control that “nobody was going downstairs”.

Look again at my drawings in the previous chapter where the suspected delivery tunnels are depicted. It is funny, but it seems that I managed to make the second successful guess: without even seeing this thermal map first, I guessed that the delivery tunnels must have been leading from that part of the WTC-7 that is marked by the letter “B” on the thermal map (indeed, I miscalculated a very little – perhaps, the actual rooms where the nukes were kept was not exactly under the middle of the WTC-7, but closer to the left corner of the building, while in my former drawings I presumed they were almost at the middle).

How big could have been the size of that underground facility under the WTC-7?

I do not know exactly, of course, because I have never been there, but we could guess again. Perhaps, it was not too big. I mean it was not the size of a typical underground shopping mall or the size of a typical underground train station, but much smaller than that. The underground facility under the WTC-7 might have been composed of several adjacent rooms with a combined volume comparable to the size of the actual underground cavity created by the nuke. It might have been, perhaps, several hundred square meters, might be a thousand square meters or so, or even slightly more than that. You can multiply the presumable area by a digit of the presumable ceiling height in meters and you will get the presumable volume of the underground premises in cubic meters. I am sure its size was somewhat comparable with the size of the actual cavity left by the nuke that demolished the WTC-7.

Obviously, the explosion of the third nuke under the WTC-7 created the cavity that overlapped with the abovementioned underground premises. Thus, the hot products of the explosion (primarily gaseous-, and later – also liquid ones) got into the adjacent premises and remained there. Hence the picture we could see in the thermal map in regard to the WTC-7 spot.

Note also that the “hot spots” under the WTC-7 are indeed the hottest: the spot “A” is the hottest of the three primary spots, and the spot “B” is the hottest among the secondary hot spots. I think the highest temperatures here were conditioned by the fact there were no large pre-existing underground premises under- (or very close to) the WTC-7. The “nukes bunker” under it was not too big, while the delivery tunnels were very narrow, and, moreover, they were properly sealed in at least several spots, so they could not contribute anything in a sense of “empty volume where the hot products could go” (unlike the tunnels of the underground train system, for example, that would undoubtedly contribute a lot in this sense).

It was not so, however, with either of the WTC-1 and WTC-2. There were lots of voluminous underground premises under each of the Twin Towers and lots more of them in the nearest proximity. Look, for example, at these two pictures (both of them are official drawings):

Judging by the two diagrams above, you could imagine how voluminous the underground premises under the Twin Towers were. You could see here also how the “tube” of the PATH train was positioned relative to the WTC-1 and to the WTC-2. When it comes to the first 1993 WTC bombing, we will come back to it later – in a chapter, dedicated to that important so-called “car-”bombing; so for now I only used that 1993 drawing to show the actual underground premises and their approximate size.

Now we could use these two diagrams for trying to figure out what might cause the “secondary” hot spots that were marked on the above USGC Spectroscopy Lab’s thermal map by letters “E”, “F” and “H”.

Please, look again at the thermal map and you will surely notice an imaginary line that could connect the spots “E”, “F” and “H”, and is most probably the tunnel (or the “tube”) of the PATH train, while the spot “F” is obviously the voluminous underground PATH station. It also explains the sizes of the thermal spots and their temperatures. The spot “F” is much bigger in size, because it was the spacious premises of the station. The spots “E” and “H” are very small because they represented merely a narrow tunnel of the PATH train; but the temperatures there were, nonetheless, higher than those at the spot “F”. It could be explained by physics: temperatures would always drop faster in larger volume areas.

The only thing remains now is to explain the last “hot spot” shown by the letter “D”. The two diagrams above do not provide us with any explanation of what was behind the North Tower – towards the middle point of the former WTC compound. For this reason we will use another two diagrams, also official ones – from an original brochure titled "THE MALL AT THE WORLD TRADE CENTER"¹⁵⁶. The brochure was printed by The Port Authority of NY & NJ in the better times. Here it is:

underground level (called “Concourse Level”). You can understand from these pictures, that the inner WTC yard to the right of the North Tower and above the South Tower (as on this orientation of the map) was empty on the street level. However, it featured lots of spacious facilities underneath the street level. According to a rather laconic description by a corresponding Wikipedia article¹⁵⁷:

“...The Mall at the World Trade Center was a shopping center located in the concourse area of the World Trade Center before it was destroyed on September 11, 2001...”

Now, at last, we have an explanation of the last secondary “hot spot” marked on the above thermal map by the letter “D”: it occurred because the “hot products” of the two underground thermonuclear explosions in the primary “hot spots” “C” and “G” obviously managed to get into the adjacent underground premises of the former Mall. This fact also explains why the actual temperatures at the hypocenters of the first two thermonuclear explosions (those under the Twin Towers) were lower than the temperatures under the WTC-7. It is because the energy was disseminated in a much smaller volume in the case of the WTC-7 (since there were no spacious underground facilities under- or around the latter).

Fortunately enough, shortly before completion of the final full edition of this book, one of my friends has drawn my attention to yet another thermal map of particularly the WTC-7. This one was published by the government of New York on its official web site. Looking at this thermal map, I was stunned by the near perfect roundness of the “hot spot” in regard to particularly the WTC-7. If in the cases of each of the Twin Towers, the thermal pictures were fuzzy, showing the diffuse distribution of temperatures, in the case of the WTC-7 it was indeed near perfect – with only a minor imperfection towards the area where we have suspected the additional underground premises. This is how the screenshot of the abovementioned web page looked like:

Please, compare two photos below – one “as is” from the abovementioned web site and the second one – with added by me colored rings showing purported zones: 1) of the highest temperatures, 2) of the presumable underground destruction, 3) of an imperfection betraying some underground premises.

As you can see, the primary thermal zone under the WTC-7 (if not counting the imperfection shown by an additional small pink oval) is perfectly round and it exactly fits within borders shown by a red ring. A zone of the greatest underground damage (I mean the presumable zone, of course) is shown by a concentric green ring. I could not have made a diameter of that green ring any larger than shown above, because we know for certain that although the Verizon building (seen on the right) was badly damaged, it was still possible to repair it. That is why I limited the diameter of the green ring by the closest wall of the Verizon building. However, as you could see from that thermal photo, the damage inflicted to a part of the Fiterman Hall was indeed greater than that inflicted to the Verizon and therefore unlike the latter, the “irreparably damaged” Fiterman Hall was later demolished. This photo (as well as the suggested distribution of the damage caused by the third underground nuke) one more time explains why the U.S. Post Office building (to the left of the WTC-7) was damaged to a much lesser extent than the Verizon building.

Another point is that now it shall be deemed that the fact the WTC-7 was indeed demolished by the third underground thermonuclear explosion and not by any “beams from the space”, not by any “mini-nuke”, not by any so-called “nano-thermite”, and not by any alleged conventional explosives. The two thermal maps from two different sources, one of which being the very government of New York, reveal this fact to us with the dead certainty. Thus, if from now on any person who has seen the above thermal maps would continue with his silly claims regarding the “conventional demolition” of the WTC-7, it will mean either that: 1) he is a paid shill; 2) he is an incurable imbecile.

I think these thermal maps did us a good service. They helped us to solve a lot of problems. Moreover, the fortunate discovery of particularly the USGC Spectroscopy Lab’s “hot spots map”, led me to create an additional chapter that is to follow.

Nelson Rockefeller, “Controlled Demolition Inc.,” Mark Loizeaux, and his intriguing sayings in regard to the WTC collapse.

I had almost completed the second edition of this book at the moment when I accidentally encountered the thermal map mentioned at the end of the previous chapter – so I have decided to insert this small addition (I mean the thermal map) at the very last moment.

However, when I looked at the screenshot with the thermal map again, I noticed a familiar name – a certain “Mr. Loizeaux” was for some reason mentioned right below the actual map (please, look carefully at the above picture and you will notice his name in its lower part). Once I had remembered that person, I decided to add here a little bit more intriguing information.

Does anyone know who this Mr. Loizeaux is?

Well, I will enlighten you if you do not know.

Mr. Mark Loizeaux is a president of a certain famous company. This company bears the intriguing name: “Controlled Demolition, Inc.” It is considered to be the most experienced company in the world when it comes to demolitions, and especially when it comes to demolitions of skyscrapers. In this particular connection (I mean a reason why his name was mentioned under the above thermal map) Mr. Loizeaux was quoted as saying that his workers at “Ground Zero” have encountered some oddly molten pieces of steel.

Here is the entire quote, visible on the above screenshot of the thermal map:

“...Molten steel was found “three, four, and five weeks later, when the rubble was being removed [from WTCs 1 & 2],” Loizeaux said. He said molten steel was also found at 7 WTC, which collapsed mysteriously in the late afternoon...”

What was particularly interesting in this case was not the opinion of Mr. Loizeaux (the top expert in demolitions, just to remind you) in regard to the supposedly “mysterious” nature of the WTC-7 collapse; and not even the fact that molten steel was encountered at “Ground Zero” (and at the spot of the WTC-7 inclusive). The point is that one could sincerely expect molten steel to be found after underground nuclear explosions and should not be surprised when it was indeed found. The intriguing part was the fact that molten steel was encountered at “ground zero” by no one else, but the workers of “Controlled Demolition Inc.”.

You might ask this reasonable question: but what did the workers of “Controlled Demolition Inc.” do at the site of the former WTC at the first instance?

The answer: they were hired by the U.S. Government to clear “Ground Zero” from the debris left after the World Trade Center collapse.

Another question: but why would you hire qualified highly-paid workers from the top-ranking demolition company to clear the debris when an actual demolition job had been already done by others? Is it logical?

It shall be understood that demolition specialists are being so highly paid not because they are capable of removing debris, but because they are able to perform a certain very difficult and very dangerous job – controlled demolition. Everybody is capable of removing debris – this is a very easy job, indeed. However, not everybody is capable of calculating precisely how to demolish a skyscraper without damaging surrounding structures. The latter one is a really exclusive engineering job and probably there are only a few people on the entire planet Earth who could claim to be real professionals in this particular field.

With this understanding, let us take a look at the WTC demolition site. You have a picture: the WTC site full of debris and there is nothing else to be demolished, because everything has been already demolished by kerosene and by diesel fuel. All that remains to do is to only remove the debris.

Would you hire those top-class demolition professionals to remove debris? Why? What for? Won't it be better to hire poor Mexican immigrants and let them earn something also? And thus also to save the American taxpayer's money – by employing unqualified people to do a simple job which does not require any high qualification? Just think about it.

Again – why did the U.S. Government hire those guys from the very expensive company of Mr. Loizeaux?

Try to answer this question. Do you think it was just because there was still some little demolition job to be done – to demolish those remnants of WTC-4, -5 and -6 that were left unfinished by the so-called “Al-Qaeda”?

I don't think so. To demolish those low-rise buildings was not a difficult job and not a big job. The really big job was to remove the debris. It shall be understood that in this case the major part of the payment went to those who removed the debris, and definitely not to those who performed a little easy job – demolitions of the remnants of WTC-4, -5 and -6 (moreover, standing amidst piles of garbage, not amidst a populated area).

The question remains – why the Government hired to remove the debris those highly-paid professionals from the top-ranking demolition company named “Controlled Demolition Inc.”?

Do you have any reasonable answer? I also do not have any. Except only two:

The “Controlled Demolition Inc.” could have been hired to remove the debris of the World Trade Center because of either of two reasons (or, most probably, because of both reasons together):

1. The “Controlled Demolition Inc.” was always entitled to perform this job of the debris removal after the WTC demolition because it was a party of a certain long-term contract which existed for many years before 9/11 in regard to the WTC [nuclear] demolition scheme. Guess why? Because it designed it.

2. The “Controlled Demolition Inc.” was a primary designer of the actual nuclear demolition scheme of the WTC and when this very scheme had proven to be a total disaster, the U.S. Government has simply forced this company's executives to deal with those awful consequences of their crazy engineering ideas.

Do you agree with this logic? Or you could offer an alternative explanation of why would the U.S. officials hire the most expensive “Control Demolition Inc.” to simply remove the debris while the actual demolition job has been already successfully performed by the supposed “Osama bin Laden & Saddam Hussein Mass Murder Co.”?

By the way – the words of Mark Loizeaux under the above thermal map were not only his words said in regard to the WTC damage. There are a few more of his sayings available in the wilderness of the Internet in regard to the WTC demolition and “Ground Zero”. Let us review some of them.

To begin with, let us make a brief study about his actual company: “Controlled Demolition Inc.”.

The company was founded in remote 1947 by Jack Loizeaux, and now it is being run by the third generation of successors. Let us visit the company's website:

<http://www.controlled-demolition.com/default.asp?reqLocId=2> (this is a sub-page named “About Us”)

I am quoting:

“A two thousand ton skyscraper collapses like a house of cards, crumbling in on itself - a waterfall of well-fractured steel and concrete debris. It lasts only seconds, and buildings within a few meters stand untouched.”

This is the very first phrase on that page. Do you like this colorful description? I have to confess – I could hardly suppress a strong temptation: to hack their website in order to slightly modify the above phrase – by changing definition of “a waterfall” from “well-fractured steel and concrete” debris – to “totally pulverized” ones...

Here is the third paragraph from the “About Us” web page:

“...Having imploded, worldwide, more buildings, chimneys, towers, bridges, and other structures than our competitors combined, Controlled Demolition, Inc. has the technical expertise and track record to take on projects of any magnitude.”

It is obviously a serious company – the most serious demolition company in the entire world. It absolutely rightfully boasts to perform more demolition jobs, than all remaining demolition companies in the world – combined together. And it claims to take on ANY kind of projects.

What do you think now: if you were Nelson Rockefeller (who with his brother David was the moving force behind the Twin Towers project in the '60s) – who needed to convince the Department of Buildings to permit the Twins construction by submitting them your demolition proposals – where would you go first?

Just put yourself in Rockefeller's shoes: you are proposing to erect an absolutely unique pair of the tallest skyscrapers in the world (do not forget we are talking about the end of the '60s); but in order to obtain a formal permission, you must submit an equally unique demolition project to the Department of Buildings. Otherwise, they would not permit you to build the Twin Towers – even if you were Nelson Rockefeller.

I guess you would not think for too long in such a case. You would pick up the phone and ring right to the "Controlled Demolition Inc." – simply because it is the most famous demolition company in the world and because it bravely takes on projects of ANY magnitude – exactly as stated today on the company's website. Would you look for any other demolition company in such a case? Try to be realistic when considering such a possibility...

Don't you think that Nelson Rockefeller went straight to that very company in order to obtain a unique demolition scheme for his unique construction project? And don't you think that since those times the "Controlled Demolition Inc." was a party of a certain long term contract that concerned the future demolition of the Twin Towers? And that is exactly why it was no one else, but the very "Controlled Demolition Inc." appointed by the U.S. Government to remove the WTC debris from "Ground Zero", after the actual demolition job has been done. Or you would prefer to believe that this suspicious "appointment" of "Controlled Demolition Inc." was just a mere "coincidence"? Just think about it.

Now let us review, at last, some other famous sayings of Mr. Mark Loizeaux in regard to "Ground Zero".

"If I were to bring the towers down, I would put explosives in the basement to get the weight of the building to help collapse the structure" (<http://911review.com/errors/wtc/seismic.html>)

In this statement of his there is nothing special. Here Mr. Loizeaux is saying something simply because he was obliged to express some "expert opinion" in regard to the steel Twin Towers' collapse "from kerosene". Of course, at that moment many serious people rightly suspected that it might have been a controlled demolition, and, understandably, a leader of the most experienced demolition company in the world was expected to express his opinion. And indeed he expressed his opinion, though a little bit ridiculous (considering that the steel Twins were extremely rigid) and strangely abound in words pertaining to subjunctive mood such as "if", "were", and "would".

Here are some more of sayings of Mr. Mark Loizeaux, in connection to the WTC collapse as published on <http://911research.wtc7.net/disinfo/retractions/index.html> I am quoting (words in bold marked by me):

"...A similar example involves Mark Loizeaux, the president of Controlled Demolition Inc., a key company in the Ground Zero cleanup operation. An article published two days after the attack quotes demolitions expert Loizeaux mischaracterizing the collapse of the South Tower (whose top only began to topple like a tree, but then rapidly disintegrated) and expressing perplexity at the way the North Tower's top telescoped down.

Observing the collapses on television news, Loizeaux says the 1,362-ft-tall south tower, which was hit at about the 60th floor, failed much as one would like felling a tree. That is what was expected, says Loizeaux. But the 1,368-ft-tall north tower, similarly hit but at about the 90th floor, "telescoped," says Loizeaux. It failed vertically, he adds, rather than falling over. "I don't have a clue," says Loizeaux, regarding the cause of the telescoping¹⁵⁸. Massive Assault Doomed Towers Construction.com 9/13/01¹⁵⁹

Later, in an interview published in New Scientist magazine, Loizeaux suggested that he knew from the beginning that the towers would pancake straight down.

"When I saw what hit, that it was an airliner, that it was loaded with jet fuel, I remembered the long clear span configuration from the central skin to the outer skin of the World Trade Center from the report I did. And we had just taken down two 40-storey structures in New York.

I still had some cellphone numbers so when the second plane hit I said: "Start calling all the cellphones, tell them that the building is going to come down."

And I sat there watching, I picked up the phone and I called a couple of people on the National Research Council Committee involved in assessing the impact of explosives. They said "What do you think this is, that they're going to fail, that they're both going to fail?" The expression around was they're going to pancake down, almost vertically. And they did. It was the only way they could fail. It was inevitable¹⁶⁰."

Just read all of these with your eyes OPEN. Do you think that such a top-ranking demolition expert as Mr. Mark Loizeaux sincerely believed that aluminum planes could penetrate the steel Towers? And that the steel Tower could "pancake" or "telescope", and that such a "pancaking" or "telescoping" was inevitable?

Here is some more seditious information about those odd activities and odd statements of Mark Loizeaux – in accordance with the "complete 9/11 time-table" published here:

http://www.historycommons.org/timeline.jsp?timeline=complete_911_timeline&day_of_9/11=complete_911_timeline_world_trade_center

The fact that this information is indeed seditious could be confirmed by the mere fact that a few web-links where it was initially mentioned no longer exist and these web pages could only be found these days as automatically saved web-archives on the <http://web.archive.org/> site. I quote:

"Immediately after seeing the attacks on the the World Trade Center on television, Mark Loizeaux, the president of leading building demolition firm Controlled Demolition Inc. (CDI), tries to contact government officials to warn them that the Twin Towers will probably collapse. [US News and World Report, 6/22/2003¹⁶¹; New Scientist, 7/24/2004¹⁶²]

Loizeaux will later recall his initial reaction to the crashes in New York. After the first tower is hit, he will say, "I told Doug [Loizeaux, his brother] immediately that the tower was coming down, and when the second tower was hit, that it would follow." According to US News and World Report, "Horried, the Loizeaux brothers watched first responders streaming into the doomed towers and tried frantically, and unsuccessfully, to phone in warnings." [US News and World Report, 6/22/2003¹⁶³]

Mark Loizeaux will recall, "I still had some cell phone numbers, so when the second plane hit I said, 'Start calling all the cell phones, tell them that the building is going to come down.'" However: "It was frenetic, nobody could get through even with speed dialling.... Of course, building number 7, where the emergency management headquarters was, was on fire. I'd been in that office two months before." Loizeaux then phones a couple of people on the National Research Council committee involved in assessing the impact

I hope you are not as naïve as to take these silly statements ascribed to Mark Loizeaux at face value. However, these statements of his are not entirely false – there are some particles of truth in them, still. You will see it as a result of our considerations below.

Of course, Mr. Loizeaux himself was not involved with the 9/11 perpetrators. Please, do not get me wrong. Mark Loizeaux was merely a top-ranking demolition expert and the head of the company that used to perform demolitions and nothing more than that. Even though it was apparently his company that designed either wholly or at least partly the actual nuclear demolition plan for the Twin Towers, this fact does not make Mr. Loizeaux guilty of any wrongdoing. Moreover, it was obviously not Mr. Loizeaux who made that decision to actually "pull" the Twin Towers and later – also the WTC-7 during the 9/11 events.

Nonetheless, you could be sure that Mr. Loizeaux was informed at once (probably, in the next minute, if not faster) after the decision to demolish the first of the Twin Towers was made. It is logical to presume that those officials from the Department of Buildings and the concerned security officials on the spot must have contacted Mr. Loizeaux over the question of the WTC demolition, since he was the chief designer of the actual demolition project. And so they did. Considering that it occurred during working hours, Mark Loizeaux, along with his brother Doug, was in his office. Another possibility is that the implementation of the in-built WTC demolition scheme would trigger a certain alarm in the office of the "Controlled Demolition Inc." and Mr. Loizeaux was alerted by it and called back to ask what was going on. Yet another possibility is that some men from the field "demolition team" in the WTC-7 were staff of the "Controlled Demolition Inc." and they felt obliged to inform their boss of such an unprecedented development. In either case, Mr. Loizeaux got an advance warning of the imminent WTC collapse. You don't even have to doubt it, because to think otherwise would be to sin against logic.

You could imagine also that at the moment of being informed of the decision to demolish the first of the Twin Towers, Mr. Loizeaux, of course, was watching his TV – as were most other American citizens, in the middle of the unprecedented 9/11 events. And, of course, once Mr. Loizeaux has been informed that the decision to demolish the WTC had been taken, he, being a demolition expert, envisaged what would happen next and how the Tower would "telescope" down. Thus, there is nothing really contradictory in his account of events.

Of course, after getting information that the Twin Towers were doomed, Mr. Loizeaux was horrified by seeing on his TV some firefighters still going into the buildings instead of getting out. In order to do something, Mr. Loizeaux grabbed his telephone, remembered some numbers – exactly as he said in the quotation above – and "...tried frantically, and unsuccessfully, to phone in warnings..."

Considering all of this, you can not blame Mr. Loizeaux for any wrongdoing during the actual 9/11 events – quite the contrary, you have to appreciate that he was trying to save people to the best of his abilities (though, his abilities were limited to only calling some numbers that he managed to remember at that moment...). However, you have to clearly distinguish two personalities of Mr. Mark Loizeaux: 1) pre-9/11 Mark Loizeaux – the outstanding demolition expert and the respectable president of the top-ranking demolition company; and 2) post-9/11 Mark Loizeaux – the consummate liar who had to cowardly observe the convenient non-disclosure contract and to maintain for the rest of his life that aluminum could allegedly penetrate steel and that kerosene could allegedly “telescope down” steel-framed skyscrapers. We could only wonder – if after 2001 Mr. Loizeaux’ company still uses old-fashioned explosives to demolish buildings, or it switched to using kerosene – since the latter proved to be so successful in demolition tasks?

Here is some more information in regard to Mr. Loizeaux sayings, but this one pertains to his post-demolition activities:

“On September 22, 2001, a preliminary cleanup plan for the World Trade Center site was delivered by Controlled Demolition, Inc. in which Mark Loizeaux, president of CDI, emphasized the importance of protecting the slurry wall (or “the bathtub”) which kept the Hudson River from flooding the WTC’s basement.” (Engineering News Record, October 1, 2001)

This statement of Mark Loizeaux has quite a specific meaning... Of course, he was absolutely right about the Hudson River and the basement of the demolished WTC, this perspicacious Mr. Loizeaux...

He was wrong only in one sense – he sent “his” workers to work at “Ground Zero” without issuing them lunar-looking haz-mat suits... And therefore now rank-and-file workers of the “Controlled Demolition Inc.” suffer from the same kind of leukemia and other disorders as the rest of the ground zero responders...

Or you prefer to believe that such a top demolition expert as Mr. Mark Loizeaux “did not know” about the three thermonuclear explosions at “Ground Zero”? Because he sincerely thought it was kerosene that collapsed the WTC-1 and -2, and that it was diesel fuel that collapsed the WTC-7? Blessed are those who believe...

Someone might wonder – if only the WTC Twins had the in-built nuclear demolition scheme, or there were some more skyscrapers that had something to do with brave engineering ideas of Mr. Loizeaux?

Hmm... I do not know it for sure. Though, I have one suspicion. Moreover, I heard some rumors that the Sears Tower in Chicago too had a similar emergency nuclear demolition scheme also designed by the “Controlled Demolition Inc.” Besides, I heard (again: h-e-a-r-d) that the Building Code of Chicago was identical to the Building Code of New York in that sense and it too did not permit the construction of skyscrapers unless some satisfactory demolition scheme was provided in advance.

However, these were only the rumors. But here are the facts: the first 9/11 victim “telescoped” (if to use the word from the vocabulary of Mr. Loizeaux) at 9.59 AM. Less than only 3 minutes later – at 10.02 AM – it was ordered to immediately evacuate The Sears Tower in Chicago (meaning that the actual order was prepared and transmitted at least a few minutes prior to the South Tower collapse). Make sure to notice that it was not ordered to evacuate The Empire State Building¹⁶⁸ in New York at that moment, but The Sears Tower in Chicago.

Just think about it.

Additional confirmation of my suspicions came relatively recently, when I was preparing a new edition of this book. An interesting slip of the tongue by the former U.S. President G.W. Bush (perhaps a kind of Freudian syndrome?) was published on September 11, 2010, by the Chinese Xinhua agency in an article “Bush worries 9/11 may fade into distant memory”.

The article reads¹⁶⁹ as follows:

“CHICAGO, Nov. 11 (Xinhua) -- Former U.S. President George W. Bush expressed his concerns that the ¹⁶⁸ I know for sure that the shells will not miss this opportunity and will accuse me of lying because the Empire State Building was, in fact, evacuated too on 9/11. However, its evacuation had nothing to do with any centralized order – it was merely a matter of precaution taken by the building’s management and it was in no way connected to the fact of the WTC South Towers demolition. By contrast, the evacuation of the Sears Tower was related to the demolition of the WTC South Tower, and, moreover, it was ordered by the U.S. Government officials. The evacuation of the Sears Tower was the 9/11 event. While the evacuation of the Empire State building was not. Therefore you can not compare the two.

¹⁶⁹ http://news.xinhuanet.com/english2010/world/2010-11/12/c_13602724.htm

9/11 terror attacks could become a distant memory, while promoting his memoir here on Thursday, according to Chicago Tribune.

Bush worried that the September 11th, "a scar of heart" will become a distant memory, just like the Pearl Harbor day. And he also reminded Chicagoans that they should not forget that the Sears Tower in Chicago, now known as the Willis Tower was also on the list of possible targets for the 9/11 hijackers."

As we know that there were no "9/11 hijackers", and, accordingly, no "lists of possible targets of the [non-existent] 9/11 hijackers", and, in the same time, we know about the fact of the existence of the nuclear demolition schemes of skyscrapers, this allusion of Mr. Bush Jr. sounds particularly sinister...

CNN Live screenshot at 10.04 AM EST on 9/11.

There was also a quite interesting development during the time I was writing these lines. After my video-presentation appeared on YouTube in March 2010, I received a lot of comments. One of the most shocking ones came from one American journalist – Mrs. Rayelan Allen¹⁷⁰ of the "Rumor Mill News". She was told by her former CIA husband Gunther Russbacher years ago that a nuclear device was built into the United Nations building's foundation for its eventual demolition. Mrs. Allen used to personally work in the United Nations building for several years before that.

This information was posted first on her web site¹⁷¹ (I am quoting):

WAS THE UNITED NATIONS BUILDING BUILT WITH A NUCLEAR BOMB IN ITS FOUNDATION?

Posted By: Rayelan <Send E-Mail>
Date: Saturday, 3-Apr-2010 21:02:51

The following arrived from a friend:

Rayelan, do you remember years ago you mentioned that Gunther told you that a nuclear device was planted underneath the United Nations for its eventual demolition. That it was built into the structure.

Listen to this Russian guy, because he corroborates what Gunther told you, but in a different way. He says large structures like the World Trade Center, that the builders knew how to build them, but not how to take them down. So it became standard policy agreed with a demolition company in the U.S. to construct into the foundation of these large buildings nuclear devices which would be triggered to demolition these large buildings at a future date. So you can bet the lavish buildings being built in Dubai have nuclear devices built into their foundation.

The youtube video is here:

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=XZFoLRkg-K0&feature=related>

Bye

I was not surprised much, because even though I did not hear before that that there was such a nuclear demolition arrangement in regard to the United Nations building, I heard that there was one in the Sears Tower in Chicago. Therefore, as long as it was not only in the WTC alone, but elsewhere, it should be considered as not anything unique and peculiar to the Twin Towers, but merely a standard approach in the United States.

Just because the Sears Tower was promptly evacuated in connection with the South Tower's collapse and this action apparently had some hidden meaning, I decided to check in the published 9/11 timetable if the United Nations building had been evacuated at that moment or not. This was what I found:

"...September 11, 10.13 AM – CNN reported on The United Nations building in New York City evacuation. Counterterrorism "tsar" Richard Clarke apparently began arranging this evacuation a short time before¹⁷² this..."

The word "before" in the above quote could mean that the UN building was evacuated on personal orders of Clarke about the same time as the Sears Tower in Chicago – i.e. at the moment the South Tower collapsed, but most probably, a little bit earlier than that.

Just to make sure that abovementioned information was not a "canard", I asked Rayelan Allen via an e-mail if she was a person who claimed that her former CIA husband allegedly told her about the nuclear demolition charge under the United Nations building. This was her reply to my question:

"Yes I am that person.... But my husband was the second person to tell me this. The first person was a UN worker in UNDP. He said this in front of the head of security... who nodded his head in agreement. After I married Gunther I asked him if it was true... he said it was."

Everyone is welcome to make his own conclusions.

P.S. I believe I have to draw the attention of my readers to one interesting publication on the Internet. It is available here: <http://www.reformation.org/ground-zero.html> (at least, it was available in the last days of December, 2012). The copyright statement on the page reads: Copyright © 2007 by Niall Kilkenny, so it shall be presumed that the author of this material is a certain Mr. Niall Kilkenny.

This publication is unique. The web page with this intriguing information was dated by the year 2007. This means that this publication had nothing to do with me and with my claims: I had not gone public with my explanations about the nuclear demolition of the WTC by 150 kiloton underground nuclear explosions till the year 2008. I can also confirm that I personally saw this web page before I published my own claims.

Where else could Mr. Kilkenny get his ideas? Mr. Tahil (the author of the PDF book we reviewed above twice) had indeed published his book before 2007, but, as you remember, he claimed that the WTC was demolished by the "intentional nuclear explosions" of the two "clandestine underground nuclear reactors". So, it could not be from Mr. Tahil. When it comes to the rest of the "nukers"¹⁷³ of the time, all of them were sure that the WTC was demolished by 1-kiloton or so "mini-nukes", and their views did not leave room for facts that the actual yields of their "mini-nukes" could have been well over a hundred kiloton.

Considering the state of the contemporary school of 9/11 thought, the 2007 publication by Niall Kilkenny is indeed unique. Its perspicacious author talks not about "mini-nukes" hidden in the underground parking lot. And not about "intentional nuclear explosions" of the "clandestine nuclear reactors". He talks about HUGE nuclear charges buried DEEP below the Twin Towers. Moreover, he claims that the nukes were intended for demolition, and that they existed since at least the '70s. It means he knows the truth.

I have no clue where Mr. Kilkenney got this information from (surely, it was not from me, because he published that page before I published the first preliminary edition of my book and released my video presentation). Moreover, I do not agree with his views on the alleged conspiracies published on that particular web page and on the rest of his web pages (I myself am not a conspiracy theorist and I do not approve of conspiracy theorists and their theories in general since I feel that it is an irresponsible behavior – to take advantage of the gullibility and/or lack of education of one's listeners). I can not agree with his interpretation of the religion and with his views on religious institutions either (I am a true believer in God and my understanding of the religious matters is the same as with the conspiracies – you have to either tell people the Truth, or to stay silent). That is to say, do not get me wrong – I do not promote his views, because I strongly disagree with the most of them.

Besides, I can not agree with Mr. Kilkenney about some technical details he alleges. Particularly – about the alleged depth the demolition nukes were buried under the Twin Towers (he claims that it was 30 meters, while I state it was 50 meters). Neither could I agree with him regarding the alleged “weakness” of steel used in the Twins’ construction or regarding the alleged “intentional flaws” in their design.

Nonetheless, I cannot resist sending my reader to take a look at Mr. Kilkenney’s web page¹⁷⁴.

It is not a big deal that he noticed that “ground zero” was defined in the pre-9/11 language as the spot of an explosion of a nuclear weapon (the nuclear definition of “ground zero” in red font is the very first thing you will encounter on Mr. Kilkenney’s web page – exactly as it is the case with the book by Mr. Tahil).

The big deal is this unprecedented drawing he placed there:

Above – a depiction of the demolition nukes under the WTC Twin Towers from Mr. Kilkenney’s web page.

Judging by the mere forms of the supposed nuclear demolition charges under the Twin Towers depicted by Mr. Kilkenney, he is by no means talking about any “mini-nukes”. Here we see the typical forms of huge nukes. This is exactly how those thermonuclear charges look like during their underground testing. Typical “mini-nukes” look nothing even close to these. Moreover, the supposed depth (30 meters below the foundations) of positioning of these nukes additionally confirms that Mr. Kilkenney could not imply here any “mini-nukes” – according to his logic, it must have been huge thermonuclear charges.

¹⁷⁴ <http://www.reformation.org/ground-zero.html>

As I have said, I do not support Mr. Kilkenny's conspiracy theory in regard to Nelson Rockefeller that is mentioned on that web page. I am sure that the nuclear demolition features were built into skyscrapers because of the requirements of the contemporary "Building Code" and not because Rockefeller intended to start WWII by exchanging massive thermonuclear strikes with the Reds and was looking only for a pretext to start doing so, as suggested by Mr. Kilkenny (especially considering that the actual Reds had been extinct since 1953). Nonetheless, I found Mr. Kilkenny's knowledge of the size and the presumable depths of positioning of the WTC demolition nukes intriguing enough to draw your attention to this fact.

Explaining to the shills the “unexplainable”: the alleged “absence of damage” to “the bathtub” and to PATH.

Since my video presentation appeared on YouTube, it was received differently. About 95% of “innocent” people just loved it, with, perhaps, ~5% of skeptics. However, it was not so with the “professional” 9/11 auditorium. Only a few from among the professional conspiracy theorists accepted my explanation at once. The majority of them ignored my presentation whatsoever, pretending not to notice either my video, or the “ground zero” definition in the pre-9/11 dictionaries, which I, at last, drew the public attention to. However, a minority of the “professional” conspiracy theorists lashed out at my version with quite a spiteful criticism.

The most spiteful of these critics were supposed “followers of Judy Wood’s theory” – the so-called conspiracy theory No.5 (or “DEW” theory) which we have already disproved in the corresponding Chapter of this book. Actually, these folks from “Judy Wood creed” bear striking similarities to a typical cult, but in reality it seems they are just a well-organized group of shills who pretend to behave as if it were a indeed a “cult”. These folks attempted to “debunk” my “theory” (thus, clearly ignoring my statement that I am not a “theorist” but a “witness” and therefore my supposed “theory” is not actually a “theory” and therefore can not be treated as such) by claiming that I allegedly could not explain why “my” “alleged” “underground nuclear explosions” did not damage the so-called “bathtub” and why they did not damage PATH (the underground train system).

These shills from the little army headed by Judy Wood pretended not to notice the definition of “ground zero” in pre-9/11 English language, they preferred not to notice high temperatures that unexplainably persisted underground for almost 4 months, and they preferred not to notice leukemia and other radiation-related cancers strangely endemic among the ground zero responders.

They continue to stubbornly insist that the WTC was demolished by mysterious “laser beams from space”, which, in their opinions, should successfully explain both – “dustifications” of the Towers and the underground fires (along with “ground zero” name). Moreover, they claim that I was allegedly hired by the U.S. Government to “dissolve” their alleged “truth” (supposedly provided by Judy Wood) with a certain “plausible lie” – because, they claimed, I could not satisfactorily explain why “my” underground nukes did not damage the “bathtub” and PATH trains and stations.

Well. It seems that I am obliged to address this spiteful criticism.

First of all, these nukes were not “mine”. I merely happened to know about them while serving in the Soviet Special Control Service and I wanted to report my knowledge as any other witness would do in such a case. Unlikely I have any obligation to explain their exact positions, their exact yields and their detailed effects. While knowing for sure that there were nukes under the WTC, I attempted to calculate their yields and positions and I presented my findings here. If you do not like them – do not take them. Make your own calculations instead. Do not forget that it is not an obligation of a witness to provide technical explanations. A witness is obliged only to report what he knew or what he saw with his eyes. And that’s it. Obligation to explain technicalities lies with experts and with culprits, not with witnesses. I hope everybody familiar with law and logic agrees with that.

If you want to know more details about the WTC nuclear demolition scheme, do not ask me – ask Mr. Loizeaux from “Controlled Demolition Inc.” Or ask Mr. Leslie Robertson, who was responsible for the WTC design. Or ask responsible officials from the Department of Buildings of New York. Oh, you do not know their names? Do not worry. Ask their names from Mr. Rudolph Giuliani – the former Mayor of New York. He knows the names for sure.

Coming back to the disputed point – “whose” nukes were under the WTC since they were definitely not “mine” despite being so suggested by the spiteful shills of Judy Wood’s army? Well. It is difficult to answer this question. Perhaps, this question should be asked from either the Department of Buildings of New York or from “Controlled Demolition Inc.” Or from a certain office that issues patents. Do not even doubt that the actual WTC nuclear demolition idea however outrageous it might be was duly patented. I was unable to discover that patent (and I am certain that you will be unable to discover it either, because the “good guys” apparently took care of that seditious patent making it publicly unavailable after 9/11). However, while searching for that patent I discovered another, quite a relevant one – issued within the same time-frames that the suspected nuclear demolition patent was issued – i.e. at the beginning of the ‘70s.

It was the United States Patent- 3693731. Issued: September 26, 1972. The name of the patent: METHOD AND APPARATUS FOR TUNNELING BY MELTING. According to a rather vague description, it had something to do with “nuclear reactors” that should be the source of the heat enough to melt rock.

The assembly of its inventors and their places of residence are quite revealing: Armstrong; Dale E. (Santa Fe, NM), McInteer; Berthus B. (Los Alamos, NM), Mills; Robert L. (Los Alamos, NM), Potter; Robert M. (Los Alamos, NM), Robinson; Eugene S. (Los Alamos, NM), Rowley; John C. (Los Alamos, NM), Smith; Morton C. (Los Alamos, NM). Appl. No.: 05/104,872. Filed: January 8, 1971.

No, it is not the patent for the nuclear demolition of skyscrapers’ method. Do not get me wrong.

However, I am certain that these people from Los Alamos, mentioned as the “inventors” in the abovementioned patent, definitely know very well about the second “Manhattan project”. Perhaps, if a court of law would summon them – along with Mr. Leslie Robertson and Mr. Mark Loizeaux – a lot of interesting details would be revealed in their testimonies...

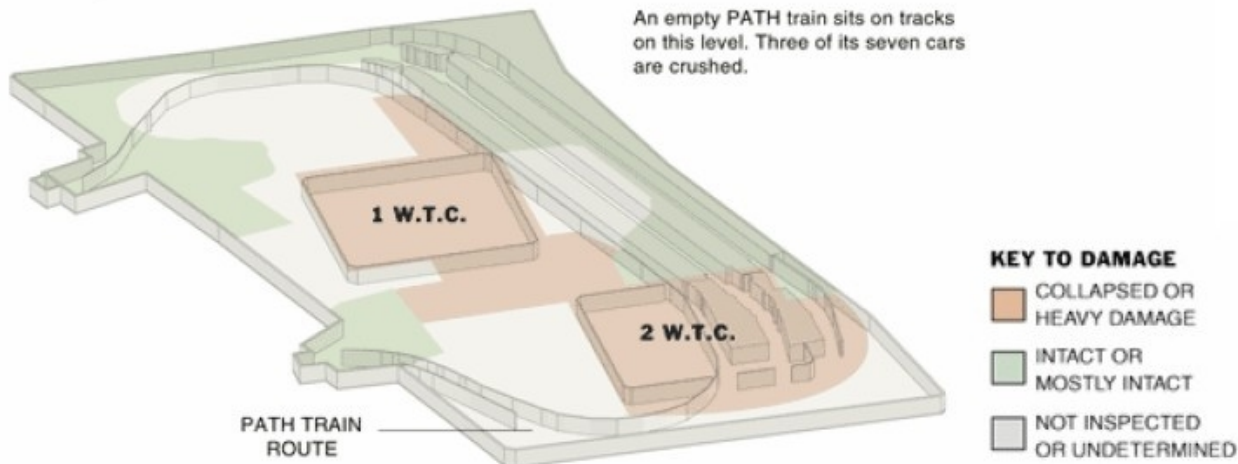

Coming back to the question of the skills – why PATH was not damaged?

But are they sure that it was “not damaged”? Let us take a look at the two pictures below:

Damage patterns on basement levels 4 and 5 are nearly identical to basement level 6.

It is clearly stated in the text visible on the above drawing that three out of seven cars of the PATH train were “crushed”. And I am inclined to believe that. I am not quite sure, though, that it was an “empty PATH train” as the New York Times suggests and I would rather doubt this particular claim. Later you will see one quotation where the word “death” is mentioned in regard to the PATH.

My considerations are based on logic and are as follows: if there were an alarm signal warning that the area would be soon destroyed and anyone needs to promptly get out, it would be logical to expect that the train would be driven to another station as soon as possible instead of forcing everybody out of the train right at the station that is about to be destroyed. Do you agree with this logic?

And in any case why should you leave a train, even an empty one, in an area where it will be soon destroyed if you have a chance to drive it away and have enough time for it? Do you see any logic in such a claim? I don't.

It appears to me that there was no any alarm signal whatsoever transmitted towards the PATH station. Do you remember one nice guy who disabled the alarm in the WTC-7 by placing it on the “TEST” status prior to the “plane impacts”? Therefore, the train with unsuspecting passengers just arrived to the station when the underground nuclear explosion occurred. It, of course, killed everyone irrespectively of whether he or she happened to be within the “crushed” zone, within the “damaged” zone, or just not very far away from the latter.

However, when it comes to the stated number of the crushed cars – three – it sounds very reasonable to me. Apparently, the radius of the “crushed” zone underground was not too big, because its horizontal radius was decreased on the account of the much further propagation of this blast zone upwards. What I mean is that if you take a sphere and squeeze it trying to change its form to a form of an egg with the longest and the sharpest end facing upwards, this will automatically decrease its horizontal radius. Do you agree with that logic? Therefore it is reasonable to believe that only the three cars of the train were crushed. Perhaps, it depended on the exact position of the train underground: while the three cars were within the “crushed” zone, or partly within the “crushed” and partly – within the “damaged” zones – the rest of the train could have been farther away from the hypocenter of the nuclear explosion, because the train is actually quite long.

In any case, I do not see anything wrong that the three cars of the train were crushed while the other four were not. The Twin Towers were not crushed in their entirety either – as everyone could see, their very tops were not crushed because of being very far from the source of the “crushing wave” propagating upwards. Why should the train behave differently in this sense? Especially considering that the “crushing wave” was propagated mostly by the vertical vector and its propagation by the horizontal vector was insignificant.

The most important point is that there was strangely no witness account published from among those witnesses who were in the PATH station. The mere absence of such witnesses says a lot.

I guess I have successfully refuted one of the most spiteful accusations by Judy Wood's skills-army who claimed that I allegedly “could not explain the absence of any damage to the PATH trains”. I think I explained that damage quite well. But if someone insists that the three crushed cars of the PATH train is allegedly the “absence of any damage” than it is indeed difficult to argue further...

Coming to the second accusation by Judy Wood's “cultists” – the alleged “absence of any damage to the bathtub” and my alleged inability to explain such a “phenomena”.

First, I am obliged to briefly explain what the “bathtub” is because many readers might not understand what we are talking about.

“The bathtub” was a unique engineering solution, peculiar to Manhattan, which was represented by an underground slurry wall that kept the Hudson River from flooding the WTC's basement.

You can have a clue of what it was by looking at the picture below. It shows the ready wall (in this case, I guess, the eastern wall) of the “bathtub”, when the soil inside of the actual “bathtub” has been already removed and the foundations of the Twin Towers were made to stand right on the granite rock (that was the natural bottom of the bathtub).

By the way, looking at this picture, you have a chance to appreciate one more time how thick were the steel perimeter columns that would be later penetrated by aluminum planes of the so-called “terrorists”...

Above – a “naked” wall of the bathtub (with the soil removed from the bathtub at that moment) during the earlier stage of the Twin Towers’ construction, as seen from inside (it is, presumably, an eastern wall of it).

The bathtub was created prior to the WTC construction by excavating large quantities of soil and erecting these walls. Thus, the WTC complex was actually built from the bottom of “the bathtub”.

The spiteful “followers” of Judy Wood insist that “the bathtub” was allegedly “not damaged” and that I can not explain this phenomenon. The supposed “inability” of mine to explain it constitutes, in their opinion, a “proof” that I am a dangerous liar hired by the U.S. government to claim about the “alleged underground nukes” and so to mislead the “honest 9/11 researchers” (who knew a long time ago that the WTC was demolished by either “laser-beams-from-the-space” or by the so-called “nano-thermite”). The shills are inventive, in fact, in mounting their various assaults on the truth and on those who tell people the truth.

Well. I will try to address that spiteful criticism of the shills by asking this question – are they sure that “the bathtub’s” walls were allegedly “not damaged”? Silence in response...

Let us read some appropriate news articles in order to establish the amount of truth behind the claims of Judy Wood’s cult.

Here is, for example, one of such articles:

DISASTERS:
Half of WTC ‘Bathtub’ Basement Damaged By Twin Towers’ Fall
By Nadine M. Post

You can download a PDF version of this article from here:

http://static.911digitalarchive.org/REPOSITORY/MISC_COLLECTIONS/national_guard_bureau/CRRDB/data/documents/1424.pdf

I hope you could read “between the lines” and understand on your own even though the authors of the article do not want to tell you everything frankly. At least, I hope, you could realize on your own that “deeper holes” do not occur deep underground because of the collapse of some buildings on the surface.

I quote:

“Visual surveys indicate roughly 50% of the seven-level basement structure of the World Trade Center is now rubble as a result of the impact of the collapse of the twin 110-story towers. Outside the tower footprints, the section of greatest concern within the so-called 1,000 x 500-ft bathtub is along its south side. There, a 200 x 30-ft hole from 40 to 70 ft deep sits between the tub's perimeter slurry wall and the remains of Two WTC.

“A significant part of the south tower fell in and collapsed everything,” says Joel L. Volterra, an engineer with Mueser Rutledge Consulting Engineers, the city's local engineer on the bathtub.

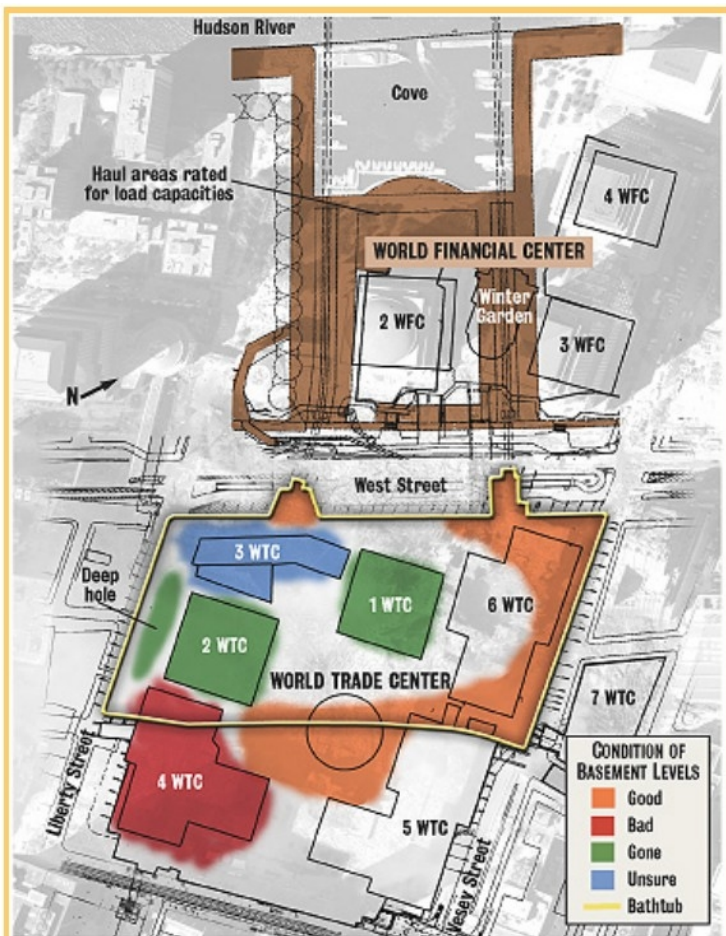

Engineers are busy drawing up emergency tieback, bracing and shoring schemes so that contractors can start mobilizing tieback rigs this week or next to anchor the south perimeter of the 70-ft-deep slurry wall.

Roughly 40% of the bathtub's reinforced concrete diaphragm slabs and steel columns are in “pretty good shape,” says George J. Tamaro, the Mueser Rutledge engineer leading the foundation repair team. “We've pretty much completed surveys of below-grade areas,” says Tamaro, adding that engineers have not been inside the footprint of either tower.

Volterra adds, however, that a view into Two WTC's core from the street shows debris held by somewhat intact core columns is packed so tightly that it is “unrecognizable”. Core walls and slabs are gone.

On the east side of the bathtub, some 30 to 40 ft in from the perimeter, the collapse demolished the plaza level slab. West of that, the slab drops off. North and northeast areas of the basement structure appear to be in the best shape. Under the remains of Five and Six WTC, replacement tieback anchors to support the 70-ft-deep perimeter wall may not be necessary, says Tamaro. However, some internal vertical cross-bracing to stiffen the existing frame may be necessary, he says.

The condition of the area under Three WTC, a Marriott hotel, is still unknown. “We haven't gotten in from under the south tower to West Street,” says Tamaro...”

MAPPED OUT South section of World Trade Center basement is in the worst condition.

The above is a diagram that was included in the quoted article. This diagram could provide us with certain interesting details. Let us have a careful look at it.

Make sure to notice that a certain part of the “bathtub” wall is marked with green. It indicates the status of nothing less than being “gone”. While another part of it enjoys the blue “unsure” status.

Note also that the status “gone” is awarded to the basement levels of the Twin Towers. It clearly indicates that something destroyed the Towers from beneath, rather than from above.

It would be really hard for the skills to explain the damage to (to be exact “complete annihilation of”, considering the green status “gone”) the basements of the Twin Towers based on any alternative conspiracy theory – be it the “kerosene-pancake-collapse” theory, or the so-called “thermite/nano-thermite” theory, or Judy Wood’s infamous “laser-beams-from-the-space” theory.

But, perhaps, Judy Wood and her followers did not notice that article (or, most probably, they preferred “not to notice” it). In general, skills have no habit of explaining to you anything or that of trying to address any difficult issues. The skills’ typical modus operandi is to ask questions and to demand explanations from you and not listening to any questions of yours. Thus, it is understandable that the abovementioned article was ignored by Judy Wood and her cultists, as well as by the skills of other denominations.

There is one more article that is even more revealing (it also hosts a corresponding video file describing the same thing) by NY1 News named “Workers Rush To Repair Huge Hole In WTC 'Bathtub'” published online¹⁷⁵.

I quote:

“Crews at the World Trade Center site are rushing to fix a 90-foot-wide hole in the retaining wall that keeps out ground water.....The collapse of the south tower tore the large gash in the wall September 11”

Doesn’t the 90-foot-wide (nearly 27.5 meters-wide) hole in the wall sound like a kind of “damage” to you?

Surprisingly, to the cult of Judy Wood it does not sound so. Though, it is not surprising, actually, because the three cars of the PATH train crushed underground do not seem to be “damage” for them either...

Since many people might not believe me, thinking that the 90-foot-wide hole would allow the place to be flooded immediately, I am obliged to explain more.

The problem is that many people do not understand what actually the “bathtub” is and what it is holding. It might appear to them that right next after the wall of the “bathtub” there are waters of the Hudson River.

It is not so. Outside the slurry wall there is merely soil saturated with water and nothing more than that. Look at the contemporary official diagram below titled “THE RISK OF FLOODING”. It clearly shows that the waters of the Hudson River were quite far from the actual wall. There was a substantial layer of soil in between them.

That is why when the bathtub wall was damaged, the water from the Hudson River was not “flowing in”, as might appear to many people unfamiliar with the actual problem. The water was merely “seeping in” at the rate of 100 to 200 gallons a minute (the combined volume), which was not too much, and these amounts of water could still be relatively easily dealt with. All water that seeped into the “bathtub” (along with the water that was poured into the cavities by the firefighters) was constantly pumped out at the corresponding rate.

Once you understand this particular, it would be much easier to understand what really happened with the “bathtub” and whether or not it was really damaged. Of course, it was damaged. And the article above does not cheat us.

¹⁷⁵ <http://www.ny1.com/?SecID=1000&ArID=20029>

If you want to understand why the South Tower’s collapse tore “the large gash” in the wall of “the bathtub”, you can look at this picture that shows the actual outline of its walls in relation to the rest of the WTC complex:

I hope you remember that the position of the demolition nuke was in between the North Tower (WTC-1) and the Marriott Hotel – which was dangerously close to the nearest bathtub wall. Hence the abovementioned “large gash” – comparable in size with the three crushed cars of the PATH train.

When it comes to the South Tower (WTC-2) (the one standing on Liberty Street – i.e. in the lower part of the above drawing), as you remember, the position of the nuclear charge intended to demolish it was in between the South Tower (WTC-2) and the WTC-4. This means that the closest wall of “the bathtub” must have been damaged also. In order to confirm this, just look at the first drawing in this chapter (the one from the New York Times) that deals with damage to “the bathtub” and PATH.

On that drawing brown color represents what is described as “collapsed or heavy damage”. You could notice that the brown area around the South Tower extends into the nearest wall of “the bathtub” to the right. This perfectly corresponds to the expected damage inflicted by the second nuke (taking into consideration its actual position).

Now we have found at least two confirmations that “the bathtub” walls were heavily damaged in at least two different spots – and so disproved the basic premise of Judy Wood and her followers.

However, as it is normal in judicial proceedings, one witness is not enough. We need one more witness.

Here is another interesting article:

“Trouble With the Water, Engineer: Site can't be rebuilt without new wall” by Graham Rayman Staff Writer. February 7, 2002¹⁷⁶.

I quote:

“The World Trade Center “bathtub”, which keeps out the Hudson River, suffered so much damage on Sept. 11 that a new wall will have to be added before permanent rebuilding can occur, the engineer who designed the wall and leads the repair project said yesterday.”

And one more quote¹⁷⁷:

*“The terrorist attack that destroyed the World Trade Center's subway station on the 1/9 line and shut down Port Authority Trans-Hudson commuter train service from New Jersey exacted a terrible price in death and destruction...

...The attack closed three stations: Cortland St., within the World Trade Center; Rector St., a few blocks south of Ground Zero; and South Ferry, which provides access to the Staten Island Ferry Terminal at the southern tip of Manhattan. “We had 1,800 ft of subway line completely destroyed,” says Nagaraja.”

Please, make sure to note that while the very first quoted diagram from the New York Times (showing damage to the PATH train) claims the crushed train was allegedly “empty”, the above quoted article uses expressions such as “a terrible price in death and destruction” while describing the subway station under the World Trade Center.

Anyone capable of logical thinking is welcome to make his conclusions.

Now I think to quote all of these should be sufficient – to address all the criticism directed at me and at my claims by the desperate shells hired by the desperate U.S. officials.

And, finally, please, think once again – how could you explain the fact that the abovementioned “1.800 ft of subway line completely destroyed” can be based on an official interpretation of the Twin Towers' collapse, which is the infamous kerosene-pancake collapse theory, in case you forgot it?

I hope from now on all doubts regarding the underground nuclear explosions were completely removed.

¹⁷⁷ Extra Effort Speeds Repair of Train Systems. September 9, 2002 Issue. By Andrew Wright and Debra K. Rubin. <http://www.hudsoncity.net/tubes/engineeringdowntownstation.html>

Some interesting testimonies of the 9/11 witnesses.

I hope it is clear to everybody now how the Twin Towers and the WTC-7 have been demolished and no more technical questions remain. They have been demolished by three well-calculated underground explosions of huge thermonuclear charges and not by any terrorist “mini-nukes” as the second so-called “truth” for “patricians” claims. However, I think we are lacking some witnesses’ accounts to confirm our third and the ultimate truth without quotation marks from the legal point of view (any legal proceeding requires testimony of witnesses and no one, as you remember, can be accused unless two witnesses will point on him). Thus, to conclude with the WTC nuclear demolition we need to hear some witnesses.

Witnesses are subdivided into several groups and we have to be careful when considering their testimonies, because the witnesses themselves are just common people, who are prone to beautification of facts. Moreover, some witnesses could also be ordered to lie by the FBI, which forced them to do so after they have signed certain non-disclosure contracts. It must be also presumed that the U.S. Government had instructed the FBI to provide appropriate “witnesses” to support its second “truth” for patricians – such as to procure those who would testify regarding the “half-burned” cars around the WTC, for example; or those, who would concoct those fake seismograms that we have already considered above.

All important witnesses in the case of the WTC collapse could be divided into the following groups:

1) Those who claim that they allegedly “survived” the collapse of the North Tower. This group of the alleged “witnesses” is, in fact, well-known to the 9/11-truth-seeking community and the claims of this group are being widely publicized and discussed. The actual claim surfaced in 2006 with the release of the movie named “The Miracle Of Stairwell B”. The film was professionally made (which means that the so-called “good guys” must have been behind both – its plot and its production).

Could we believe this claim? Well... It is difficult to say, but I am inclined to think that this group of the alleged “witnesses” (moreover, promoted by the professionally-made film) is by no means more reliable than those “witnesses” who are trying to convince us about the “laws of cartoon physics” – i.e. those who claimed that aluminum planes could allegedly slice in their entireties into the tank-armor-like thickness of steel at the full cruise speeds and that they allegedly saw such an event with their very eyes.

Let us look at this photo that shows the surviving Twin Towers’ corners (you know now why they managed to survive), with the surviving part of the staircase (known as “Stairwell B” – that is marked with the red arrow):

Above – the surviving “Stairwell B” located close to the surviving perimeter corner of the WTC North Tower.

These “witnesses” claim that they allegedly survived while being in this surviving “Stairwell B” of the North Tower’s staircase while the actual Tower collapsed.

Could it be true? Well... In theory – yes, it could be true. However, I do not believe in miracles, unless in those coming directly from God Almighty, which should not be the case with those blasphemous symbols of ungodly capitalism that were, moreover, built in the blasphemous neo-egyptian freemasonic tradition (I am talking about the Twin Towers from the religious point of view). Thus, in this particular case we should presume that the Most High did not interfere on behalf of the alleged “survivors” and so we have to stick to strictly three-dimensional metaphysical technicalities of the claim.

Judging from the metaphysical point of view, we should presume that the alleged “survivors” of the surviving “Stairwell B” are liars. Most probably, they are professional actors, or, perhaps, ordinary greedy individuals (ready to exchange their false testimonies for hard cash) hired in the course of the 9/11 cover-up. Their claims are obviously designed to insinuate that the Twin Towers were not intentionally demolished, but rather sustained a certain “natural collapse” (that presumably allowed some lucky souls to survive).

Thus, I strongly suggest treating these alleged “survivors of the Stairwell B” as liars. This will be the best approach to this issue.

Such an approach deems to be proper because of another observation: the claim that “certain people allegedly survived the North Tower’s collapse while being trapped in the surviving Stairwell B” is the favorite argument of paid shills who infested various Internet forums and work hard to derail all positive (thus, dangerous to their masters) 9/11 discussions. It is clear – if something is used (and especially intensively used) by the shills in their argumentation, the very thing must be lie.

If you wish to study this subject deeper, here is the said movie “The Miracle Of Stairwell B” available on YouTube (cut into 7 parts):

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=aWiCxz5ki80>
<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=9JggwEI0BCw>
<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=xfP-6jj1wGc>
<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=tnkR7AxmQN4>
<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=feieYv5xO-c>
<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=tAVTyyMp3Zw>
<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=x9NYAFZPq0I>

Make sure to notice that this movie is professionally made. The mere fact that it is a professional work, suggests that the so-called “good guys” must have been responsible for its production. Always remember – every video that is professionally made must be presumed to be a part of the official propaganda. I think it would be a very fair approach to the “professionalism” in the video industry. All genuine 9/11 critics and researchers are amateurs, rather than professionals (at least, when it comes to the video production). Even if some of the genuine 9/11 critics are good in video-editing and are skilled in handling sophisticated video-editing software (like famous Ace Baker¹⁷⁸, who produced excellent works disproving the alleged “WTC planes”, for example), they are still amateurs and you can feel that they are amateurs when they publish their works on YouTube or elsewhere.

If you watch the abovementioned “Miracle Of Stairwell B” video, you will surely notice that those alleged “survivors” of the “Stairwell B” behave unnaturally. When you look at the faces and the body language of these “survivors” in the above videos, you will see that they are acting. Their claims do not sound like testimonies.

Moreover, according to the article “The Miracle Survivors” published by the New York Magazine here: http://nymag.com/nymetro/news/sept11/2003/n_9189/ an alleged survivor – one in the abovementioned group of the 16 survivors – a certain Mr. “Pasquale Buzzelli, a brawny 34-year-old “structural engineer”, allegedly managed to survive while being at the 22nd floor at the beginning of the North Tower’s collapse.

I quote:

“...Then, as he reached the 22nd floor, the building shook, stairs started to heave. It sounded to Buzzelli like heavy objects were being dropped right above his head. The sound got louder, closer. He dove into a corner. “I felt the walls next to me crack and buckle on top of me,” he says. Suddenly, he seemed to be in free fall, and the walls seemed to separate and move away from him. Maybe two hours later, he regained consciousness on a slab of concrete 180 feet below the 22nd floor. (He may be the source of the rumor that someone surfed the collapse and lived.) He was atop a hill of rubble in the midst of an endless field of rubble, smoke, and fire, sitting as if in an armchair, his feet dangling over the edge. His bag was gone. He felt numb. The air was thick with smoke and dust. He heard explosions...

Do you seriously believe that someone could survive the nuclear demolition of the North Tower while being at the 22nd floor? Considering that everything above the relatively short surviving corners of either of the Twin Towers was reduced to complete microscopic dust (the actual steel inclusive)? You must be very naïve if you believe this claim. Add here that this guy allegedly fell 180 feet (~55 meters !!!) from the height of the 22nd floor right into the “hill of rubble” (not soft rubble, don’t make any mistake, but the rubble represented by twisted steel beams). Moreover, this “fortunate survivor” allegedly “heard explosions”...

I guess with this unprecedented piece of the evidently false testimony we could successfully debunk both false claims at once:

1.1. There were NO SURVIVORS in the infamous “Stairwell B”. All those alleged “survivors” are liars who exchanged their honesty for cash.

1.2. There were NO EXPLOSIONS that anyone could hear in reality. It is quite logical – if some proven liar claims something, it is safe to presume that the “thing” is nothing but lie. This particular realization will help us to properly treat testimonies of the next two groups of the alleged “witnesses” who claimed to “hear the explosions”.

2) Those who claim that they allegedly “heard explosions on every floor” of the Twin Towers before and during their collapse. This group is probably innocent (in the most part, at least). Such “witnesses” simply could not abandon the “Conspiracy Theory No.1” (that the Towers were brought down by multiple charges of conventional explosives – allegedly positioned on every floor) and such a pre-occupation with this “theory” apparently forces them to fantasize. Even though these witnesses are presumably innocent, we do not need to listen to their fantasies. Some other witnesses said that sounds during the Towers’ collapse indeed resembled sounds of an avalanche rather than sounds of explosions. This is much more reasonable and therefore – much more believable.

The Tower’s structures were reduced to that special “dustified” state. When the tops of the Tower’s were falling down, crushing such a finely pulverized material (particles of which were mostly not exceeding 100 microns in size), sound of such a process would most likely resemble a sound of an avalanche (a real avalanche crushes snow, which is quite a similar “fluffy” stuff). Here is, for example, one eye-witness’ account:

Journalist Pete Hamill is describing how the South Tower begun to collapse:

“We heard snapping sounds, pops, little explosions, and then the walls bulged out, and we heard a sound like an avalanche.”¹⁷⁹

It seems that in this particular statement expressions such as “snapping sounds”, “pops” and “avalanche” are all genuine, but those “little explosions” are apparently added out of a fantasy. These were, perhaps, some “cracking” sounds, and not “explosions”. You can easily imagine that when the Tower’s tops were falling down, first, they passed that part of the Twin Towers’ bodies that were representing the “damaged zones” (source of debris), and then – they continued along the “crushed zones” (the source of fine dust). It matches the description by Pete Hamill above, because it is obvious that when the tops were passing zones of debris, there should not be a “sound like an avalanche” yet, but rather various “snapping”, “cracking”, and “popping” sounds. However, later, when the falling tops reached the “dustified” structure, the sound supposed to change – to resemble that “sound of an avalanche”. At least, it would be logical to presume so.

3) Another group of witnesses claims that they allegedly “heard explosions somewhere in the basements” of the Twin Towers before they started to collapse.

¹⁷⁹ <http://www.petehamill.com/nydnews91101.html> ; Published in: New York Daily News, 9/11/2001.

Statements of the “witnesses” from this particular group should be treated with a maximum of precaution. It shall be suspected that such claims could only be in support of the “confidential” so-called “truth” of the U.S. Government intended for the “patricians” – namely its “mini-nukes” theory. When it comes to my humble self, I simply suspect that such “witnesses” have been hired by the FBI to claim such a thing – in the same manner as those “seismic specialists” from the Lamont-Doherty seismic station were hired.

Normally, a deep underground nuclear explosion (such as in the case of the Twin Towers demolition) does not produce any sound of explosion, so there was nothing like that in reality. Since we have already established by all our observations and considerations in the previous chapters that the Twin Towers were indeed demolished by deep underground explosions, we have to presume that there must have not been any “sound of explosion” whatsoever. Then, it is logical to presume that those who claim to hear the sounds of explosions in the Twin Towers’ basement are liars – who are not different in their essence from those liars who claim to see with their very eyes how aluminum planes cut through the steel of the Twin Tower’s without even decreasing their full cruise speed.

Anyhow, it is a matter of choice – if someone wishes to believe these “witnesses” – it is up to him. However, do not forget, that some “witnesses” also claimed to see with their very eyes how some Arabic Ace – Hani Hanjour – managed to direct his “Boeing-757” on a hedge-hopping flight into the Pentagon...

4) Yet another group of witnesses claims to see even fireballs of explosions, allegedly bursting out of the basements of each of the Towers shortly before they began to collapse. These claims are particularly suspicious because they again could be concocted in support of the second so-called “truth” (a/k/a the “mini-nukes” theory), while everything that is suspected being in support of lie shall be automatically presumed to be lie of itself. Some of the witnesses even claimed to escape these fireballs while the flames were “chasing them”.

Here is, for example, one of the witness’ accounts about those fireballs:

“Ronald Di Francesco is the last person to make it out of the South Tower before it collapses. As he is heading toward the exit that leads onto Church Street, he hears a loud roar as the collapse begins. According to the Ottawa Citizen, “Mr. Di Francesco turned to his right in the direction of Liberty Street, to see a massive fireball – compressed as the South Tower fell – roiling toward [him].” He bolts for the exit, before being knocked unconscious and blown many yards across the street.”¹⁸⁰

Let us consider these claims about fireballs, particularly in a sense that if it could be true that those fireballs were caused by an explosion of a “mini-nuke”. What could be a nature of these alleged “fireballs”? There are only 2 answers:

4.1. it was allegedly fireballs from a “mini-nuke’s” explosion;

4.2. it was allegedly fireballs from a diesel fuel’s explosion (because it is believed that some huge stock of diesel fuel intended for emergency reasons has been kept somewhere in the basements of the WTC Twin Towers).

There are no other explanations (considering that an explosion of any ordinary explosives should not be in the list of options whatsoever, while so-called “nano-thermite”, allegedly “found” by Prof. Steven Jones, presumably belonged to the group of “incendiaries”, rather than “explosives”, and so it could not explode at all).

Let us talk about “mini-nuke’s” fireballs first. Was there any Electromagnetic Pulse (EMP) noticed? No. Were there immediate multiple deaths from radiation injuries? No. Were there multiple cases of acute radiation sickness reported? No. Were there any cases of heavy burns from such nuclear fireballs reported (a lot of people supposed to have been burned over like 45% of their bodies or to have at least some Beta-burns)? No. Were there any cases of photo-materials being overexposed? No. Were there any cases of temporary blindness reported (since nuclear fireballs supposed to outshine our Sun by several folds and to seriously damage eyesight of many)? No. Would anyone be really capable of running away while fireballs from a nearby nuclear explosion are chasing him? No.

Our final answer to it: a claim (or "an innocent suggestion") that it might have been "fireballs" from an alleged "mini-nuke" explosion is a lie.

Let us consider a second possibility – these alleged "fireballs" were from an explosion of those stocks of diesel fuel kept in the basement. What could cause an explosion of such a diesel fuel?

Let us imagine that it was the crushed zone which with a speed of over 2.5 km/sec propagated upwards and instantly reduced the entire Tower's structure into a "dustified" state. Would such a thing cause an explosion of diesel fuel (since tanks with it that were supposedly kept in the basements also underwent a process of "dustification" by the "crushing wave")?

I do not know. It is difficult to imagine. It could be true, however, because the diesel fuel is known to be self-inflammable when it is in the conditions of high-pressure. Actually, it is the very principle¹⁸¹ of a diesel-type engine. Thus, it could be true that diesel-fuel kept in the Tower's basement after being pressurized by a tremendous pressure of the underground nuclear explosion has instantly inflamed and this resulted in those visible fireballs suddenly bursting out of the Tower's basement and even chasing some people on the adjacent streets. This sounds believable. However, I can not be sure about it, still. Specialists apparently have to study this claim and this suggested phenomenon deeper.

Here are, for example, some witnesses' accounts:

*"...People inside the South Tower felt the floor vibrate as if a small earthquake were occurring.... The vibration lasted for about 30 seconds. The doors were knocked out, and a huge ball of flame created by the exploding diesel fuel from the building's own supply tank shot from the elevator shaft and out the doors of the South Tower, consuming everything in its path. Minutes later, at 9:59 a.m., the tower collapsed..."*¹⁸²

What could we say about it? It sounds plausible, with only exception of two things: it should not be "minutes later", but "seconds later" the Tower collapsed after the "shaking". And it could not have been felt by the people inside the South Tower, because they would be instantly killed by the "dustification". They would have no chance to escape to tell us what they have actually felt – do not even doubt this. Even if you do not believe the author of these lines concerning this "dustification" – which only in milliseconds "dustified" everything up to the upper floors of the Tower, at least, use your logic and think about exploding diesel fuel "consuming everything on its path" as claimed in this quotation.

What do you think – what material should have been that tough guy made of – if he, while being inside the South Tower's lobby, miraculously managed to escape both deadly factors – an instant "dustification" that actually destroyed the very Tower, and, in addition, also survived an explosion of the diesel fuel, which claimed to burst out of the doors of the South Tower "consuming everything on its path", and now is still alive and kicking and telling us what he felt? I wish to be a superman also made from the same kind of stuff as that tough guy, since I am really envious... As you could see, witnesses' accounts are not always reliable. You have to treat them with a great amount of caution.

However, something in that account sounds reasonable: probably, if it was the people inside the North Tower's lobby (not the South Tower's lobby) who felt and saw those things; then it sounds believable. Particularly reasonable in that account of events is that a "small earthquake" was felt, but what is the most important is that "the doors were knocked out".

Here we at last caught those liars from the Lamont-Doherty Earth observatory of the Columbia University at the pay of the FBI, who attempted to cheat us with their false seismograms. Those "doors knocked out" is nothing else than an indication of a certain magnitude. As you remember, those cheaters from the ¹⁸¹ Diesel-type engine does not have a spark plug, unlike a carburetor-type engine: diesel-fuel is being injected into a combustion chamber where the highest pressure has been just achieved (with a piston in the highest position at that moment); the portion of injected diesel-fuel immediately inflames of itself, just because of the pressure.

¹⁸² Jenkins and Edwards-Winslow, 9/2003, pp. 16

<http://transweb.sjsu.edu/mtiportal/research/publications/documents/Sept11.book.htm>

Columbia University drew a magnitude of the first seismic event in connection with the South Tower's collapse at 2.1 on the Richter scale.

It is known that a feeling of an earthquake with the magnitude 2 is this: “A few people might notice movement if they are at rest and/or on the upper floors of tall buildings.” It could be said that an earthquake with magnitude 2 goes largely unnoticed by men, even by those who are inside.

This is how people feel an earthquake with the magnitude 3: “Many people indoors feel movement. Hanging objects swing back and forth. People outdoors might not realize that an earthquake is occurring”. Thus, it could be said that an earthquake with magnitude 3 goes largely unnoticed by men who are outside.

Note, that 2.1 is much closer to 2, than to 3, so noticeable effects of an earthquake 2.1 in magnitude would not differ much from the first description. However, even an earthquake with the magnitude 3 could still be unnoticed by many people who are not inside their rooms and can not hear their swinging objects. Those cheaters from Lamont-Doherty put the seismic event of the North Tower's collapse at 2.3 and the South Tower at 2.1, on their bogus seismogram, as you remember. Make your own conclusions.

Here is what people usually feel when an earthquake with the magnitude 4 occurs: “Most people indoors feel movement. Hanging objects swing. Dishes, windows, and doors rattle. The earthquake feels like a heavy truck hitting the walls. A few people outdoors may feel movement. Parked cars rock.”

But still even this one falls short of the above description.

Here is what people feel when an earthquake of the magnitude 5 occurs: “Almost everyone feels movement. Sleeping people are awakened. Doors swing open or close. Dishes are broken. Pictures on the wall move. Small objects move or are turned over. Trees might shake. Liquids might spill out of open containers.”

Now, at last, we get to the “doors swing open or close”.

And, to complete it, here is a description of an earthquake with the magnitude 6: “Everyone feels movement. People have trouble walking. Objects fall from shelves. Pictures fall off walls. Furniture moves. Plaster in walls might crack. Trees and bushes shake. Damage is slight in poorly built buildings. No structural damage.” (Source¹⁸³)

See the difference? Those “doors knocked out” is a little bit stronger effect than “doors swing open or close”. You could be sure that before the South Tower's collapse an earthquake was definitely stronger in magnitude than 5 and could have been even close to the magnitude 6.

We have already discussed this subject in the beginning of this book while disproving “Conspiracy Theory No. 6” and those falsified seismograms published by the Lamont-Doherty Earth observatory of the Columbia University. You could probably remember that a fully contained deep underground explosion of a nuclear charge of 1 kiloton in TNT yield would cause a seismic signal (and corresponding feelings of an earthquake) of the magnitude 4.

Even if judging by the abovementioned witness' testimony alone, it is clear that it could not have been a “mini-nuke”. A fully contained (i.e. with a maximum of the possible energy communicated to the earth) 1 kiloton explosion would never cause “doors to swing open or close”, not even to say about the “doors knocked out”. Add here that “terrorists” would never be able to conduct a really contained explosion of their alleged “mini-nuke”. A maximum of what they could do is to hide the “mini-nuke” somewhere in the underground parking. In this case there will not be any seismic event (that one could feel) at all, because the energy of its explosion would be largely decoupled by empty spaces available around the mini-nuclear charge and nearly nothing will be communicated to the Earth.

Here are two more witnesses' accounts concerning the beginning of the South Tower's collapse:

¹⁸³ <http://www.seismo.unr.edu/ftp/pub/louie/class/100/mercalli.html> (this web page has been removed by the U.S. authorities after the author's of these lines video presentation referring to it appeared on YouTube in March 2010)

“Port Authority Police Officer Will Jimeno is in a corridor leading toward the North Tower. “Suddenly the hallway began to shudder,” and he sees “the giant fireball explode in the street,” when the South Tower begins to collapse.”¹⁸⁴

As you can see, everybody here is talking not only about the fireballs, which are not actually proof of an underground nuclear explosion, but also about the ground shaking, hallways shuddering and other signs of an apparent earthquake – which is very hard proof of an underground nuclear explosion. For this reason, let us consider another group of witnesses.

5) The most important group of witness for our particular case are those whose testimonies are consistent with the real causes of the Twin Towers demolitions – i.e. those, whose testimonies could confirm that the two huge underground nuclear explosions have indeed taken place a moment before the upper parts of each of the Twin Towers begun to fall down.

I hope you understand, after all extensive explanations above regarding the nature of deep underground nuclear explosions, that such an underground explosion is not really noticeable: because, there are no visible factors of a nuclear explosion: neither fireballs, nor air blast-wave, nor sound of explosion, nor radiation in visible or invisible spectrum, nor Electromagnetic Pulse. There is only one thing that you could notice: a shaking of the earth. If this explosion was so powerful that it even managed to send the “crushing zone” several hundred meters upwards and the “damaged zone” – even higher than that, it would be reasonable to presume that people in the immediate vicinity to the WTC should feel something like a major earthquake with a magnitude of at least 5.5 – considering that the charge was 150 kiloton.

One witness account, which proves that it was apparently much more than 5 in magnitude we have just encountered in the previous section. Here are some more witnesses’ accounts to the same effect.

“EMT Joseph Fortis is heading across West Street, when, he says, “the ground started shaking like a train was coming.” He then looks up and sees the South Tower starting to collapse.”¹⁸⁵

What we could say? A feeling of a passing train is a sign of an earthquake stronger than 5 in magnitude – probably, close to 6.

“Lonnie Penn, another EMT, is outside the Marriott Hotel, which is adjacent to the North Tower. He and his partner “felt the ground shake. You could see the towers sway and then it just came down.”¹⁸⁶

“Bradley Mann is at the EMS staging area on Vesey Street. He says, “Shortly before the first tower came down I remember feeling the ground shaking. I heard a terrible noise, and then debris just started flying everywhere.”¹⁸⁷ [Please, note that Bradley Mann would testify in regard to both – the South Tower’s and the North Tower’s destruction – and in both cases his testimony contains mentioning of the earthquakes.]

When CNN producer Rose Arce reported from the WTC site at 10.30 AM EST how the North Tower has collapsed, she mentioned some extremely important information: the top of the Tower before its collapse “suddenly started to shake”.

Here is one more interesting account of events:

“Battalion Chief Brian O’Flaherty is walking into the lobby of the Marriott Hotel. He says, “I hear a noise. Right after that noise, you could feel the building start to shudder, tremble, under your feet.” He then hears the “terrible noise” of the South Tower collapsing.”¹⁸⁸

Now it is very clear that the earthquake was definitely over 5 in magnitude, because when you feel a building shudder and tremble – this is an indication of an earthquake close to 6 or even over than that. Note, that the Marriott Hotel (the WTC-3) has not been pulverized at the moment of the South Tower’s collapse. So at the moment described above the building has not suffered any explosion intended to demolish the actual Marriott Hotel, but another explosion intended to demolish the neighboring building, the South Tower. It was the second charge under the North Tower that would finally destroy the Marriott Hotel 30 minutes later.

Here are some more witnesses' accounts describing the earth's shaking prior to the North Tower's collapse.

"Fire Patrolman Paul Curran is in front of the US Customs House (WTC 6), next to the North Tower. He says, "all of a sudden the ground just started shaking. It felt like a train was running under my feet... The next thing we know, we look up and the tower is collapsing."¹⁸⁹

"EMS Lieutenant Bradley Mann is heading toward the EMS staging area on Vesey Street. He'd felt the ground shaking prior to the first collapse. He says, "The ground shook again, and we heard another terrible noise and the next thing we knew the second tower was coming down."¹⁹⁰

The unexplainable shaking of the top of the North Tower moments before its collapse is distinctly visible on video footage made by professional cameras fixed on tripods and riveted to the top of the North Tower. Several movies of this kind are widely available on the Internet – particularly the famous 9/11 footage by Etienne Sauret, which is available, for example, on YouTube here¹⁹¹.

Below is an official table¹⁹² describing seismic events, their magnitudes according to the Richter scale, and corresponding TNT yields required to achieve such events (those of our interest are in bold font).

Richter Magnitude	TNT for Seismic Energy Yield	Example (approximate)
-1.5	6 ounces	Breaking a rock on a lab table
1.0	30 pounds	Large Blast at a Construction Site
1.5	320 pounds
2.0	1 ton	Large Quarry or Mine Blast
2.5	4.6 tons
3.0	29 tons
3.5	73 tons
4.0	1,000 tons	Small Nuclear Weapon
4.5	5,100 tons	Average Tornado (total energy)
5.0	32,000 tons
5.5	80,000 tons	Little Skull Mtn., NV Quake, 1992
6.0	1 million tons	Double Spring Flat, NV Quake, 1994
6.5	5 million tons	Northridge, CA Quake, 1994
7.0	32 million tons	Hyogo-Ken Nanbu, Japan Quake, 1995; Largest Thermonuclear Weapon
7.5	160 million tons	Landers, CA Quake, 1992
8.0	1 billion tons	San Francisco, CA Quake, 1906

- 10.0 1 trillion tons (San-Andreas type fault circling Earth)
- 12.0 160 trillion tons (Fault Earth in half through center, or Earth's daily receipt of solar energy)

There are only two lines here mentioning nuclear explosions – those of 1 kiloton (1.000 ton) – which has magnitude of 4.0 (exactly as we presumed before, based on the explanation from the U.S. Governmental web site); and another one – that of the 32 megaton thermonuclear explosion – which causes seismic event with the magnitude 7.0.

However, even there is no exact mentioning of particular nuclear weapons in those lines against magnitudes 5.5 (equivalent to 80 kiloton in TNT yield) and 6.0 (equivalent to 1 megaton or 1.000 kiloton in TNT yield), we could easily estimate that nuclear charges used to demolish the WTC Towers 1 and 2, supposed to cause seismic events with magnitudes definitely over 5.5, but less than 6.0.

Now, if you read again those testimonies of the witnesses above and try to analyze what kind of magnitudes they were talking about when referring to the feelings of “coming train”, “building shuddering” and “doors knocked out”, you will probably understand that it was very close to 6.0, but probably a little bit less than that, while definitely more than 5.0 and obviously more than even 5.5. Thus, it is about the right estimation: it was charges of over 80 kiloton used to destroy the WTC Twin Towers and by no means could it have been the laughable 1-kiloton “mini-nukes”.

In fact, besides the above table, there is more important data published by specialists, moreover, on the very same web site, in a form of a PDF document¹⁹³. On the page 27 of this document a seismic magnitude of 5.89 is ascribed to a 120 kiloton underground nuclear explosion. I am quoting:

“...The yield of this explosion, based on its seismic magnitude of 5.89 was about 120 kt.¹⁹⁴ ...”

This particular measurement (5.89 -> ~120 kt) slightly improves understanding of the above table and might give a clue as to how powerful the actual nuclear demolition charges under the WTC could have been...

Do you still believe those cheaters from the Lamont-Doherty Earth observatory of the Columbia University who implied that it were two “mini-nukes” on their laughable “seismogram”?

There are also interesting witnesses’ testimonies in regard to “Ground Zero”. Here are some:

Ken Holden, who is involved with the organizing of demolition, excavation and debris removal operations at “Ground Zero”, later will tell the 9/11 Commission:

“Underground, it was still so hot that molten metal dripped down the sides of the wall from [WTC] Building 6.”¹⁹⁵

William Langewiesche, the only journalist to have an unrestricted access to “Ground Zero” during the cleanup operation, describes:

“...in the early days, the streams of molten metal that leaked from the hot cores and flowed down broken walls inside the foundation hole.”¹⁹⁶

A nice account of events is available in the November 2001 LiRo report, originally placed on the LiRo web site <http://www.liro.com/lironews.pdf>, but removed from there and now only available somewhere in the web archive: <http://web.archive.org/web/20050520232345/http://www.liro.com/lironews.pdf>

Remarkable in this document is not only mentioning of red hot metal, but also the fact that the term ground zero is still used in it's text with low case letters and without any quotation marks – despite the document being dated by November 2001. I quote:

“...Having worked closely with LiRo on other City projects, Tully called upon the firm to provide demolition support, structural engineering, scheduling, accounting, and interface with the City's primary engineering consultants, LZA/Thornton & Thomasetti, and Mueser Rutledge. In response, LiRo is supplying Tully with a broad range of personnel: structural engineers, architects, construction managers, accountants, and safety inspectors. Over a dozen of LiRo's top personnel – including the firm's president, John Lekstutis – now spend most of their time at ground zero. The tasks have been difficult and varied.

Red Hot Debris. The removal of debris from the collapsed areas requires the safe lifting and maneuvering of very heavy steel beams, often twisted and tangled from the force of the collapse. Some beams pulled from the wreckage are still red hot more than 7 weeks after the attack, and it is suspected that temperatures beneath the debris pile are well in excess of 1,000°F.”

I could only wonder if the person who composed this report had any clue what ground zero used to mean in the then English language and why the beams pulled from the wreckage were still red hot even after more than 7 weeks after the attack... Though, I have no doubt that all those people supplied by the abovementioned company to work on ground zero worked there without any lunar-looking haz-mat suits...

One of the most famous “Ground Zero” photographs that shows a red-hot chunk of metal being removed from the North Tower rubble amidst streams of radioactive vapors eight weeks after September the 11th.

By the way, we need, perhaps, one more witness, in addition to John Walcott mentioned in the beginning of this book, who could testify that some people indeed wore full haz-mat suits at ground zero. In proper judicial proceedings a minimum of two witnesses is required to testify to every important point.

A very nice article titled “40 Hours in Hell” by a certain Katherine E. Finkelstein is published here: <http://ajr.org/article.asp?id=2381> in the American Journalism Review web site.

The article is dated by November, 2001. Though, unlike in the LiRo report mentioned above, in this one Ground Zero is used with capital letters, which by then apparently became a “politically correct” option. However, something is not “politically correct” in that article, which is actually an eye-witness account; because Katherine E. Finkelstein was trapped at ground zero from the very beginning and was forced to spend the night there, before being banished from the site the next morning.

In fact, it is a very interesting account of events, but, fortunately, we need only one paragraph from it – particularly what Ms Finkelstein saw at ground zero (by then still in low-case letters) early in the morning:

“More rescue workers had come with the light: men in those lunar-looking hazmat suits, K-9 units with their dogs, military uniforms from many divisions, parajumpers with equipment strapped around their legs. Men everywhere, alive and dead.”

This is all we needed. Now we have two eye-witnesses who could testify that they saw people wearing full protection gear at ground zero; and this is enough from the judicial point of view.

Let us continue to hear witnesses who could testify in regard to molten metals and high temperatures:

"The rubble pile was so hot in places that it melted the soles of work boots. Companies donated supplies of work shoes, and construction workers laboring on the hotter parts of the rubble pile reportedly went through a pair a day. A boot wash was established where workers could cool their feet." (This most shameful statement comes from an official document named: *"Protecting Emergency Responders"*¹⁹⁷)

Vance Deisingnore, OSHA Officer at WTC, reported the following¹⁹⁸ to Jim McKay, Post-Gazette Staff Writer, on September 11, 2002:

"...a fire truck 10 feet below the ground that was still burning two weeks after the Tower collapsed, its metal so hot that it looked like a vat of molten steel..."

Firemen and hazardous materials experts stated¹⁹⁹ that, six weeks after 9/11,

"There are pieces of steel being pulled out [from as far as six stories underground] that are still cherry red" and "the blaze is so 'far beyond a normal fire' that it is nearly impossible to draw conclusions about it based on other fires."

Leslie Robertson, the structural engineer responsible for the design of the WTC, describes *fires still burning and molten steel still running 21 days after the attacks.*²⁰⁰

(Though, you have to realize that Leslie Robertson, being "responsible for the design of the WTC" knew perfectly well about the in-built nuclear demolition scheme of his actual brain-child, and, even though he mentions the very truth here, which could be counted as an eye-witness testimony, his moaning implying an intentional WTC demolition sounds no more sincere than the "sincere" bumbling of Mr. Mark Loizeaux, abound in words pertaining to subjunctive mood such as "if", "were", and "would", that was described in one of the previous chapters).

Alison Geyh, who heads a team of scientists studying the potential health effects of 9/11, reports, *"Fires are still actively burning and the smoke is very intense. In some pockets now being uncovered, they are finding molten steel."*²⁰¹

Ron Burger, a public health advisor who arrives at ground zero on September 12, 2001, said that *"feeling the heat" and "seeing the molten steel" there reminded him of a volcano.*²⁰²

According to a member of New York Air National Guard's 109th Air Wing, who was at "Ground Zero" from September 22 to October 6,

*"One fireman told us that there was still molten steel at the heart of the towers' remains. Firemen sprayed water to cool the debris down but the heat remained intense enough at the surface to melt their boots."*²⁰³

Five months after the attacks, in February 2002, firefighter Joe O'Toole sees a steel beam being lifted from deep underground at "Ground Zero", which, he says, *"was dripping from the molten steel."*²⁰⁴

Steven E. Jones, a physics professor from Utah, later will claim this molten metal is “direct evidence for the use of high-temperature explosives, such as thermite,” used to deliberately bring down the WTC towers.²⁰⁵ He will say that without explosives, a falling building would have “insufficient directed energy to result in melting of large quantities of metal.”²⁰⁶

(The testimony of Prof. Steven E. Jones does not have actually any value in a sense of bringing us any closer to the truth, because being a nuclear scientist, he knew for sure what “ground zero” used to mean before 9/11 and his claims about so-called “high-temperature explosives” such as “thermite” are no more sincere than the moaning of Leslie Robertson described above, or that of Mark Loizeaux from “Controlled Demolition Inc.”; however, the mere fact that such a prominent 9/11 scholar as Prof. Steven Jones voices the “molten metal” being available at “Ground Zero” could be counted towards accumulating necessary evidence anyway.)

I hope the reader understands, at last, that nothing could cause those unexplainably high temperatures persisting for several months underneath “Ground Zero” – neither any thermite, nor any so-called “nanothermite”, nor a laughable 1 kiloton “mini-nuke” would ever be able to cause such an effect. Though, a thermonuclear charge (at least 8 times the size of that used to bomb Hiroshima²⁰⁷) detonated deep underground would be about the right thing.

Usually, after an underground nuclear explosion, people do not undertake any immediate studies, due to it being too dangerous to their health. Normally, a place where a recent underground nuclear test had taken place is being sealed and also some warning sign is set: “Do not open! Nuclear hazard!” Usually, the earliest time when scientists begin to study the underground cavities etc. left by such a nuclear test is 3 years (the very minimum – 2 years). It is known, however, that in one instance there was an attempt to send people in haz-mat suits to study effects of an underground nuclear test of about 100 kiloton in TNT yield after only 6 months since the time of the explosion. The people reported that temperatures inside the cavity were still too high even to approach it, and levels of radiation were still too high to remain there even for a few minutes, so the attempt was abandoned. The temperatures in that case were registered as several hundred degrees Celsius (200°C = 392°F; 300°C = 572°F; 400°C = 752°F – in case you need a clue about the conversion of Celsius to Fahrenheit). It was six months after the 100 kiloton explosion.

There is a very revealing article named “SH&E at Ground Zero”. It was originally available here²⁰⁸, on the web site of The American Society of Safety Engineers, but has been since removed. Luckily, it was saved by some 9/11 researchers and re-published on their own web site²⁰⁹. I am quoting:

“The debris pile at Ground Zero was always tremendously hot. Thermal measurements taken by helicopter each day showed underground temperatures ranging from 400°F to more than 2,800°F. The surface was so hot that standing too long in one spot softened (and even melted) the soles of our safety shoes. Steel toes would often heat up and become intolerable. This heat was also a concern for the search-and-rescue dogs used at the site. Many were not outfitted with protective booties (Photo 13). More than one suffered serious injuries and at least three died while working at Ground Zero. The underground fire burned for exactly 100 days and was finally declared “extinguished” on Dec. 19, 2001.”

There is actually one very interesting piece of information from the same “prohibited” article above. It is not about the molten metal, but about some safety measures implemented at ground zero (actually it is merely a description of a photograph in that article that shows a truck being intensively sprayed with streams of water under high pressure from several directions simultaneously):

²⁰⁷ According to various sources the exact yield of the Hiroshima atomic bomb varies. According to the President Truman’s 1945 official declaration it was allegedly 20 kiloton. According to official digits provided by the US own nuclear weapons manufacturers it was designed to explode at 18 kiloton; while according to some other sources – at only 15 kiloton. However, all observers (including the US military ones) agreed that in reality the Hiroshima bomb achieved a yield of only 13, perhaps even 12 kiloton. Therefore it is difficult to say how many times more powerful than the Hiroshima bomb a single 150 kiloton thermonuclear charge used in the WTC demolition was. It could be at minimum 8 times as powerful, and at maximum – 12 times as powerful as the Hiroshima bomb.

²⁰⁹ http://911research.wtc7.net/cache/wtc/analysis/asse_groundzero1.htm

You do not have to doubt that this “precautionary measure” – to wash all trucks thoroughly before they could be allowed out of ground zero – was indeed very important. It was much more important than to issue lunar-looking haz-mat suits to the gullible ground zero responders. The point was that the trucks could carry radioactively contaminated soil out of the restricted area and some of it could accidentally fall to the streets. In this case it could have been collected by vicious 9/11 researchers who could later use it in legal proceedings. Those live men in capacity of the ground zero responders were not dangerous in this sense – they were simply too gullible... And even later when their chronic radiation sickness would become apparent and they would suffer from leukemia and other kinds of radiation-related cancers, it would be still easy to convince them that they are suffering because of “benzene” and “asbestos dust”... It was not so with the unambiguous samples of radioactive soil that could be extremely dangerous if they fell into the wrong hands. Therefore, the vehicles must be washed, of course.

There is yet another important quotation from the above “prohibited” article. All you have to do is to read it “between the lines” and you will get the point (an abbreviation “OSHA” stands for “Occupational Safety and Health Administration”):

“For the most part, normal worksite OSHA compliance was not possible or even feasible at the WTC. The fundamental principles that form the basis for OSHA rules, regulations and standards certainly helped the team analyze hazards, perform evaluations and make decisions. However, strict “compliance” with OSHA requirements simply was not an option at this stage of the emergency effort. We encountered hazards that no rule, regulation or standard had ever addressed. The entire site could have been considered “immediately dangerous to life and health,” but the work had to be performed. The SH&E group’s task became one of real-time hazard identification, analysis and control. Team members had to quickly evaluate the hazards and associated risks of a pending task and attempt to determine the safest possible way to perform what was often an unsafe task.”

And it appears that the utmost danger for those shameless folks who attempted to justify their own cowardice and treachery with the above statement was to allow the unwashed trucks out of ground zero. Therefore the trucks were thoroughly washed.

Another danger was that some unauthorized people could enter ground zero and collect some samples of debris or soil directly from there. Therefore ground zero area was heavily guarded. It would be easier for an unauthorized person to enter a secret military base than to sneak into ground zero in Manhattan those days.

As a result of these tough measures no 9/11 researcher has in his hand any piece of radioactively contaminated soil or any radioactively contaminated piece of the WTC debris that could be used as solid evidence. The shills could clap their hands and gladly state: “you see these nutty proponents of the “nukes theory” could not bring even the smallest piece of any radioactively contaminated material from Ground Zero!” Unfortunately, the shills are right: the only remaining evidence in this regard is apparent chronic radiation sickness strangely endemic among the ground zero responders, and the very nuclear name: ground zero...

Another important piece of extremely seditious information was published on January 15, 2002 online by an organization named “Florida Division of the International Association for Identification” here:

http://www.fdiai.org/some_world_trade_center_victims_.htm under the title: “Some World Trade Center victims were ‘vaporized’”. The article claims to be from “USA Today”.

Let us read a few statements from that article (where “ground zero” words were used, by the way, still in the low-case letters – as if “ground zero” in Manhattan was not the Proper Noun yet, but merely the well-known Civil Defense’s designation). All you have to do is to read this unprecedented statement “between the lines”:

“NEW YORK (AP) — Three months after the World Trade Center attack, victims’ families are being forced to face the ghastly possibility that many of the dead were “vaporized,” as the medical examiner put it, and may never be identified. So far, fewer than 500 victims have been positively identified out of the roughly 3,000 feared dead. Sixty were identified solely through DNA.

The city and state have allowed victims’ families to obtain death certificates without proof of a body, but many families place great importance on an ID based on actual remains....”

*“...Many victims will undoubtedly be identified. Nearly 10,000 body parts have been pulled from the mountains of mangled metal and matchstick-size splinters at ground zero.

*But Dr. Charles Hirsch, the chief medical examiner, triggered an angry response two weeks ago when he told grieving relatives that many bodies — no one is sure how many — had been "vaporized" and were beyond identification.

Hirsch declined to be interviewed. But spokeswoman Ellen Borakove said he meant that bodies were consumed by blazing fuel from the two crashed airliners, or "rendered into dust" when the 1,100-foot skyscrapers collapsed, one concrete slab floor onto another..."

*"...Dr. Michael Baden, the state's chief forensic pathologist and a top expert in the field, said in September that most bodies should be identifiable because the fires — while hot enough to melt steel — did not reach the 3,200-degree [1760°C], 30-minute level necessary to incinerate a body.

Borakove said her office agrees with Baden's calculation — as applied to a full body. "But when the planes hit the buildings, the bodies that were in the planes as well as some of the bodies that were in the buildings were fragmented upon impact, and those fragments burn more quickly," she said.

The combination of fire and compression from tons of rubble could reduce a human body to a small amount of tissue and bone, said Dr. Cyril Wecht, a top forensic pathologist in Pittsburgh. And finding such small samples of DNA in 1.2 million tons of rubble spread over 16 acres is a difficult proposition.

"There are pieces," he said. "But how do you identify and extract it from other similarly appearing pieces at the site — bricks, mortar, rubble?" ..."

I hope that everyone capable of "reading between the lines" got the point. They are talking about the fact that people at ground zero were reduced by a certain "pressure" to complete dust hardly identifiable from similarly sized particles of brick/mortar/rubble (they prudently avoided mentioning "steel") dust. It can not be interpreted otherwise because if chunks of "human bodies" were bigger than the particles of dust (let's say, if pieces of "human flesh" were sized in the order of centimeters) they could have been easily distinguished from similarly sized chunks of bricks or mortar, couldn't they?

Would you mistake a piece of flesh with a piece of concrete in such a case? Apparently the answer is "no". You won't be able to recognize people's remains from bricks or mortar only when they are reduced to dust. I think this is a self-evident presumption. Especially because we knew from various statements and photos considered in the previous chapters that the actual Twin Towers were reduced to complete microscopic dust, we can understand now that the top forensic pathologist Dr. Cyril Wecht in the above article talks particularly of the "human remains" that were reduced to the same microscopic dust as was the rest of materials. Another important thing that is good to remember from the above statement is the fact that "kerosene" fires were not hot enough and were not long enough to incinerate a body – that requires the at least "3,200-degree, 30-minute level" (1760°C = 3.200°F).

Many people even after reading my book, and even after seeing the abovementioned thermal map that showed high temperatures under the spot of the WTC-7, still expressed doubts – as to the fact that the WTC-7 was indeed demolished by the third underground nuclear explosion. Many of the readers who read the first edition of this book continued to express their suggestions that while the Twin Towers were obviously demolished by the nuclear explosions, the WTC-7 was allegedly demolished by "conventional means".

I think I need to remind them one more time that the WTC-7 could not have been demolished by any "conventional means" (even if to imagine the unimaginable and to presume that it were possible from the technical point of view) due to the fact that those who actually demolished that building had no sufficient time to prepare a traditional controlled demolition. I.e. they had no time to make all necessary calculations and to position multitudinous charges of conventional explosives (along with a complicated wiring system designed to detonate the charges in a certain particular sequence). Can you just imagine that these preparations would require a few months time and it was simply impossible – to complete this type of job in only a few hours, amidst the greatest panic and amidst fires burning inside the building?

Add here yet another argument that has been already discussed at the beginning of this book – that it is IMPOSSIBLE to demolish a steel-framed building of a new type (that came into existence only in the '70s) with conventional explosives from the technical point of view (even if disregarding the time required to prepare such a hypothetical job). Just to support this further, here are a couple of testimonies (I quote²¹⁰):

“...Describing this mysterious piece of steel more fully, an article entitled “The ‘Deep Mystery’ of Melted Steel” in WPI’s magazine, said: “Steel - which has a melting point of 2,800 degrees Fahrenheit [1538°C] - may weaken and bend, but does not melt during an ordinary office fire. Yet metallurgical studies... reveal that... a eutectic reaction... caused intergranular melting capable of turning a solid steel girder into Swiss cheese... A one-inch column has been reduced to half-inch thickness. Its edges - which are curled like a paper scroll - have been thinned to almost razor sharpness. Gaping holes - some larger than a silver dollar - let light shine through a formerly solid steel flange. This Swiss cheese appearance shocked all of the fire-wise professors, who expected to see distortion and bending - but not holes...”

“...The thinning and the holes even suggested that the steel had vaporized. Explaining as early as November 2001 why fire could not account for this mysterious steel, Glanz paraphrased one of the three WPI professors, Jonathan Barnett, as saying that it “appeared to have been partly evaporated in extraordinarily high temperatures. Another New York Times story reported that the same phenomenon was described by Professor Abolhassan Astaneh-Asl of the University of California at Berkeley, who had received a National Science Foundation grant to spend two weeks at Ground Zero studying steel from the buildings. According to reporter Kenneth Change, Professor Astaneh-Asl, speaking of a horizontal I-beam from WTC 7, said: “Parts of the flat top of the I, once five-eighths of an inch thick, had vaporized...”

Do you think that ordinary explosives such as TNT could really melt and even vaporize structural steel? The WTC-7 was demolished by the third thermonuclear explosion. You have seen so much proof of it in the above chapters that I felt that it is unnecessary to continue to prove this self-evident point.

Of course, the skills will continue to stubbornly maintain that the WTC-7 was demolished by “conventional means” (without being able to provide any plausible scenario how would the actual “conventional” demolition be arranged in terms of timing and in terms of the technical implementation). However, you have to understand that the skills get money for their work (from your pocket, just to remind you) and therefore you do not have to fall a victim for their “arguments”. Moreover, this book was not written to entertain the skills and to provide them with new topics to argue. I intended this book for the thinking people, for those who tend to use their own brains and to analyze the reality on their own; so, I hope, the thinking people got the point: the WTC-7 could not have been demolished by any conventional means and therefore it was not demolished by any conventional means.

There could be another question – how quickly had the New York City officials learned that the demolition of the Twin Towers was indeed a nuclear demolition, not just an ordinary one?

It is difficult to answer exactly, because those officials also might have learned about it from the mysterious representative from the Department of Buildings (mentioned in the Chapter of “unproven suspicions”) even before the actual demolition charges had been set off.

Anyhow, even if you prove that the New York City officials (as well as the U.S. security officials) knew for sure about the fact of the nuclear explosions, they could unlikely be held responsible. They would simply defend themselves by claiming that they are firstly not construction engineers, secondly, they are not specialists in nuclear explosions – so they simply do not understand what a “big” nuclear charge is and what is “small”, what a dangerous underground nuclear explosion is and what a safe one is. You can not hold responsible those who are not specialists.

Actually, it appears that everybody who approved the demolition of the WTC whether directly or indirectly would be able to defend himself. All of them, including those from the Department of Buildings, the actual WTC security, the WTC owners, the on-site construction managers and engineers, the OST personnel, and even the New York City officials, would jointly defend themselves by simply stating that even if it were really a crazy idea to demolish the WTC by nuclear explosions, it was not their idea. They have simply set going the long-existed demolition scheme which had been a long time ago approved by some respectable specialists who apparently understood what they were doing. You can blame none of these folks, unfortunately. Perhaps, the only person who was caught red-handed in this case is the one who put the Alarm System in the WTC-7 on the “TEST” status early morning September 11, 2001. This one could be arrested for sure, since his complicity with the 9/11 planners is self-evident. However, when it comes to the rest – it seems that all of them would be able to get away with what they did.

Still, the first question remains – how soon had the New York City top officials learned that it was underground nuclear explosions?

I do not know. However, there is a piece of information which could shed some light.

I am quoting (words in blue and red were marked by me – the blue part is irrelevant for now, but it is worth to notice anyway, because later we will come to this point when considering the Pentagon strike – in that case the cruise missile that hit the Pentagon arrived from the sea-side, so more “seaborne attacks” were expected by the responsible U.S. officials at that moment; but what we need now is marked in red):

“...As New York Daily News columnist Stanley Crouch later describes²¹¹, [Deputy New York Mayor Rudy] Giuliani also finds “heavy machinery to get downtown for the cleanup and got the Navy to guard against a seaborne attack. He evacuated City Hall, which shook like crazy when the second tower fell. He gathered people who could give medical help, gave the order to find lights that could be used at Ground Zero and worked out new phone communications, since power was being lost. Accompanied by city engineers, he went into the streets around the fallen towers, testing the ground to make sure it would hold when the heavy equipment came in...”

One might ask this reasonable question: why would someone need to “test the ground” in Manhattan, which is known to be granite rock, for a reason of whether it would “hold” the heavy equipment, while this very Manhattan’s ground is known to hold a big number of skyscrapers that are apparently millions of times heavier than the heaviest possible equipment?

The answer is indeed very simple and only one answer is logical:

A huge underground nuclear explosion, the cavity of which supposed to reach as high as the underground foundations of the WTC, supposed to produce not only the cavity alone, but also some totally and partly crushed zones, surrounding the cavity (do you still remember the “crushed-“ and “damaged-“ zones?). This state of the ground could seriously complicate any deployment of the heavy equipment. Let’s say, a heavy bulldozer could simply fall through the thin remaining soil layer (and through the crushed zone under it, which could not hold anything at all) into a blazing inferno beneath left by a recent nuclear explosion.

For such a reason (and only for such a reason, there would be simply no other reason), strength of the ground in various spots around and in the WTC site should have been estimated first by engineers – before allowing the heavy equipment to move in. Try to employ elementary logic: if not because of the known underground nuclear explosions (huge nuclear explosions) there would be no reason to proceed with such a peculiar measurement job.

This is the answer to the first question: yes, they knew it and they knew it immediately: huge underground nuclear explosions (3 ps) have occurred in the WTC site and these 3 huge explosions had nothing to do with any “mini-nukes” – as they switched to claim later. Apparently, after a mini-nuke’s explosion you won’t need to measure strength of a soil.

Let us hear some more witnesses, because there are some more of them waiting to testify before our inquiry and some of these are indeed very important witnesses due to their high-ranking positions.

There is one remarkable article titled “Rudy Tuesday” published by The New York Magazine online²¹².

Rudy Tuesday

It's a long way from 9/11/01 to 11/04/08. New Yorkers may be surprised by how far Rudy Giuliani has come already. But that's only because we know him.

Above – screenshot from the web page <http://nymag.com/news/features/28517/> showing the beginning of the “Rudy Tuesday” article.

This article is not only remarkable because the term ground zero in relation to Manhattan’s “Ground Zero” used in it “as is” – i.e. without any quotation marks and without any capitalization – as if it would in any civil defense manual, but because of the actual statement of the former Mayor of New York Rudolph Giuliani.

I think it is such a masterpiece of the important 9/11 evidence and such an important witness’ testimony from the point of view of psychology, that I have to quote here the entire part of the article “as is”. The important things that should not miss your attention are, however, made in bold by me.

Make sure to notice that in the aftermath of the unprecedented WTC kerosene-pancake collapse the Mayor of New York for no apparent reason “went nuclear” and began his speech with silly comments about nuclear reactors and continued it with his claims that he KNEW on top of WHAT the ground zero workers (whom he sent to clean ground zero without issuing them lunar-looking haz-mat suits) were actually standing:

“Right, 9/11. Out in the dining room, after the salads are served, Delaware congressman Mike Castle takes the microphone. He talks about Rudy and the squeegee men. BlackBerrys continue scrolling.

But then Castle tells of the ground-zero tour the mayor gave him and other congressmen in the days after the terror attacks.

People start to pay attention. “He attended most of the funerals; he was there in every way possible,” says Castle. “I don’t think we can ever thank him enough for what he did.”

Now Rudy strides to the podium. The room rises. Suits at the cheap tables stand and a banker type sticks his fingers in his mouth and gives a loud whistle.

Initially, Giuliani squanders the goodwill. A bit on immigration lands with a thud. He notes that China has built more than 30 nuclear reactors since we last built one. “Maybe we should copy China.” What? You can see the thought bubbles forming over people’s heads: Can this be the same guy we saw on television? The guy who was so presidential when our actual president was MIA?

But then Rudy finds his comfort zone. Along with McCain and Mitt Romney, his best-known fellow Republican presidential contenders, Giuliani is out on the thin, saggy pro-surge limb with the president.

But Rudy can spin the issue in a way McCain and Romney, not to mention Hillary and Barack Obama, cannot.

And now he does just that: Iraq leads to 9/11, which leads to the sacred image of construction workers raising the flag over ground zero.

"I knew what they were standing on top of," Giuliani says. "They were standing on top of a cauldron. They were standing on top of fires 2,000 degrees that raged for a hundred days. And they put their lives at risk raising that flag."

The room is silent. Not a fork hits a plate, not one gold bracelet rattles. "They put the flag up to say, 'You can't beat us, because we're Americans.'" The mayor pauses and, as if on cue, an old woman sniffles.

He continues. "And we don't say this with arrogance or in a militaristic way, but in a spiritual way: Our ideas are better than yours."

O yes, witness Giuliani. The jury believes you. The jury does not even doubt that you knew for sure about the "cauldron" with the 2,000 degrees [$^{\circ}\text{F}=1093^{\circ}\text{C}$] fires that raged for a hundred days.

The jury does not doubt either that you knew about the actual physical nature of this "cauldron" on top of which the gullible ground zero responders were standing. And the jury does not doubt that you knew it for certain – that those workers, indeed, put their lives at risk while standing on top of the "cauldron" and raising that flag – exactly as you stated in your testimony (and as you may sincerely expect to be the case when gullible people visit the location of a fresh nuclear explosion without wearing any protective gear).

The jury even believes that it was correct – to spell ground zero with the lower case letters when recording your speech – as it should be in any document dealing with nuclear weapons effects.

The jury believes everything you stated – even that you believe about the 9/11 Iraqi lead; and the jury will definitely count your testimony as the most important 9/11 evidence.

Thank you, witness Giuliani.

To complete our witnesses' hearing, let us listen to one of the most interesting witness' testimonies:

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW
LIEUTENANT RICHARD SMIOUSKAS
Interview Date: November 27, 2001

"...All of a sudden there was this groaning sound like a roar, grrrr. The ground started to shake.... It looked like an earthquake. The ground was shaking. I fell to the floor. My camera bag opened up. The cameras went skidding across the floor. The windows started exploding in.... [pp. 8-9]

...I didn't know exactly what was going on outside. I'm thinking maybe the building snapped in half. I'm thinking maybe a bomb blew up. I'm thinking it could have been a nuclear...." [p. 9]

The fact that Lieutenant Richard Smiouskas made a seemingly "accidental" allusion to "a nuclear" bomb should not deceive you. Unless you are a specialist in nuclear explosions and knew it for sure that there were nuclear charges under the WTC, you would never ever make such an allusion to a nuclear explosion just because the ground started suddenly to shake.

Try to use your common sense. If you are merely a Fire Department's Lieutenant, how much do you know about underground nuclear explosions? And why on earth should you think about an alleged "nuclear bomb" if the ground suddenly starts to shake and it feels like a strong earthquake? Wouldn't you just think that it is an earthquake? An underground nuclear explosion produces no sound whatsoever. It produces only an earthquake. Logically, a person could get an impression that it might be an explosion of a bomb only if there is a combination of the shaking and the sound.

Therefore Lt. Smiouskas by no means could get a sudden idea that it might have been a bomb merely because he felt the ground shaking without any sound of explosion (the "groaning sound" described by him does not sound like the sound of a bomb, does it?). So, why should he make any allusion to a "bomb" and why should he make any allusion to a "possibly" nuclear bomb if the occurrence had any and every property of a typical strong earthquake? Try to guess why...

It is because he was close to some high-ranking people in the Fire Department as appears from his actual testimony. It appears from his testimony that Smiouskas was not a typical "Lieutenant" who commands firemen, but a photographer in the Fire Department. Apparently, due to his specific position, he was very close to the leadership of the Fire Department (it also appears from his actual testimony that he was on friendly terms with at least some Fire Chiefs).

That is why he learned from his high-ranking friends that the explosions were nuclear. Apparently, he had no right to testify as if it were indeed "underground nuclear explosions", because he was obliged to keep this secret. But it does not prevent him from making allusions as described above. Obviously, anyone has right "to believe" it was a "bomb" when he falls to the floor because of a sudden strong ground shaking. Don't they? And anyone has the right "to believe" that such a "bomb" might have been "nuclear" because the ground shaking was indeed very strong. Wasn't it? That is why the eye-witness Lieutenant Richard Smiouskas "thought" that it might have been a "bomb", and the bomb, perhaps, was a "nuclear" one. He did not say to us the entire truth, and, moreover, he attempted to "beautify" his account of events, but we still got the point...

This was just an example of how to treat a witness's testimony properly.

Actually, many eye-witnesses are prone to this fault. Instead of plainly saying the truth, the only truth, and nothing, but the truth – and to leave making conclusions to inquirers and to judges – the majority of eye-witnesses will try to adjust "what their eyes saw" to an already established version of events or even to rumors.

That is why many of them "saw" how aluminum planes penetrated steel perimeter columns of the Twin Towers and completely disappeared inside. It is because this peculiar trend of lay commoners to "beautify" their witness accounts is well-known to professionals specialized in mass-cheating. It was enough therefore to plant only a couple of actors who would shout that they "saw the planes" during the explosions in the Twin Towers and the rest of gullible flock will immediately claim that they "saw" the "planes" too – because they want to appear "important witnesses". Even worse, after that they can not retract their claims and confess that they did not actually see any planes disappearing inside the steel Towers, because these so-called "important witnesses" would be ashamed to admit that they lied in the first instance – thus greatly complicating any future inquiry. They would maintain that they "saw the planes" even later, even when the rest of the people would eventually realize that aluminum can not penetrate steel and the king was indeed naked...

Lieutenant Smiouskas did the same – he adjusted what he "thought" to the already established version of events. He got to know that the bombs were nuclear therefore he "thought" they were "nuclear".

Thank you, witness Smiouskas. Even though you attempted to present to the jury a slightly “beautified” account of events, instead of plainly saying what you saw and what you felt, the jury, nevertheless, accepts your testimony and will treat it as one of the most important pieces of 9/11 evidence anyway.

Here is another piece of information that could also serve as documentary evidence – comparable with witnesses’ testimonies. An interesting article under an odd name “ISRAELI EMBASSY IN NYC A RADIATION HOT SPOT” was published on Saturday, Oct. 14, 2006 at 1:05 PM on this web page: <http://cleveland.indymedia.org/news/2006/10/22798.php>

Among other interesting statements in that article there were these (I hope you understand that you have to be able to “read between the lines” in order to truly appreciate this unprecedented information):

“...WASHINGTON -- Anti-terrorism officials conducted a helicopter survey of New York City's radiation sources in preparation for a so-called "dirty bomb" attack - and discovered a Staten Island park with dangerously high levels of radium, a new report found.

Federal authorities found 80 unexpected "hot spots" around New York City, according to the Government Accountability Office, the investigative arm of Congress...”

“...New York is the first and only U.S. city to conduct a complete aerial radiological survey, having paid the U.S. Department of Energy $800,000 for the 2005 study.

*“...At the Staten Island park, sensors detected large quantities of radium in the soil. Long-term exposure to radium increases the risk of developing lymphoma, bone cancer and leukemia.

National Park Service spokesman Brian Feeney said the area is a one-acre piece of the 570-acre Great Kills Park, which is part of the larger Gateway park.

Feeney said experts assured them after the August 2005 study that the area posed no public health risk, and said visitors do not go into that area anyway because of dense vegetation. He did not know if any warnings had been placed around the site.

The radiation apparently comes from "some piece of industrial equipment, pieces of old rusty metal. Whatever this equipment used to do, it picked up radioactivity," he said.

"We keep people out of that area. It's a non-accessible area of the park, no one can get in there," said Feeney. "There's no health hazard now, there was never a health hazard to the public."

He said the agency has applied to the Department of Energy for funding to further survey the site.

Staten Island's congressman, Rep. Vito Fossella, said the contamination was a surprise to him and residents near the park, and he demanded more information.

*"It is essential for the government to act immediately to fully understand the extent of the contamination," said Fossella, who was trying to arrange a meeting Friday with federal and city officials to discuss further testing and possible removal of the contaminated soil...”

“...New York City is the only major city to conduct a full-scale Aerial Background Radiation Survey to identify "hot spots," though such work has been done in the nation's capitol, according to the report...”

I hope you got the main point. The Staten Island was the very place where all that “old rusty metal” from the WTC rubble was initially deposited (before they finally disposed of it by sending it to China as scrap metal). Besides, from all the U.S. cities only the city of New York was afforded a peculiar honor of the “complete radiological survey”... And, as you may conclude from this article, it is by no means “benzene vapors” that cause the development of “lymphoma, bone cancer and leukemia”, but radioactive isotopes...

Barbarian truth: legal aspects of the Twin Towers collapse from the “nuclear” point of view. Legal “Nuclear Madness”.

The above picture, taken on September 22, 2001, still shows streams of those radioactive vapors; the “hot” spot of the former WTC-7 is on the right – between two seemingly undamaged buildings. Separate streams of vapors in the WTC-7 spots are clearly distinguishable from those ascending from the Twin Towers’ spots.

I hope I satisfactorily answered the very first question that I promised to answer at the very beginning of this book: why those cowardly FBI agents wore full haz-mat suits at “Ground Zero”? As the reader of this book no longer wonders why, I think it is reasonable to explain some truly shocking legal technicalities of the WTC nuclear demolition.

The most shocking fact concerning these underground nuclear explosions under the World Trade Center in the middle of New York City, that seems to represent the very “Nuclear Madness” – was that legally and technically all of these three were nothing else than “Peaceful Nuclear Explosions, Conducted in the Interests of the National Economy”... The thermonuclear charges under the WTC were not weapons (i.e. they were not intended to kill enemy) and due to this reason they could only be classified as “peaceful”. Interestingly, in the United States there are no legal provisions that might prohibit making nuclear explosions in populated areas. The only exemption is Utah State, which boasts one ancient law according to which any atomic explosion within boundaries of a city is an offence punishable by a 500 USD fine.

The only legal violation was that these three explosions were badly miscalculated and they released into the Earth’s atmosphere radioactive materials in quantities hundreds of thousands of times exceeding norms stipulated in applicable Treaties governing underground nuclear explosions.

One could only wonder – how the U.S. Government managed to convince governments of other countries not to make any noise concerning these poorly contained nuclear explosions (since all serious states such as Russia, China, France, Japan, Brazil, India, etc. have efficient services that detected all these abnormal amounts of radioactivity being released into the atmosphere from Manhattan’s “Ground Zero”, and all of them undoubtedly complained to IAEA about this). This consideration is just one more confirmation of the fact that the U.S. Government has indeed concocted the double story – one for the general public consumption, and the second – to “confidentially” feed to the top leaders of other countries, to IAEA inspectors, as well as to the United States’ own top political figures and to other “patricians” and so to convince them to “understand” the U.S. Government’s sensitive situation and not to make any noise concerning those unprecedented illegal amounts of radioactivity

The above is a satellite picture taken September 12, 2001, which shows how these unprecedented streams of radioactive vapors ascending from the former spot of the WTC were visible even from space.

The above picture was taken at “Ground Zero” on October 17, 2001 – i.e. 5 weeks after the main events. Here are clearly seen separate streams of radioactive vapors emanating from the spots of the former Twin Towers and the WTC-7.

Levels of radiation and personal radiation doses received at “Ground Zero”.

Some readers might wonder – how high were the levels of radiation at “Ground Zero” in Manhattan and how heavy were personal radiation doses received by the people who worked on those grounds. It would be indeed quite a reasonable question to ask. Though, I have to disappoint you with the answer: I do not know. It is simply too late to go there today to measure radiation, since more than seven years have passed since [being said in 2008] and radiation has properties to subside in the course of time (not to mention that a protective sarcophagus has been created over the spots of the three nuclear explosions at the end of the clean-up operation).

However, I am certain that the levels of radiation at “Ground Zero” even today, in December 2012, exceed the normal radiation background by at least several folds. I read in one Internet discussion in 2010 that it was reported by New Yorkers that an attempt to bring a dosimeter onto “Ground Zero” could lead to serious legal actions against an offender (though, I don’t know whether it is true or not, because I do not live in New York and have no chance to check if the guards would confiscate my dosimeter upon entering “Ground Zero” or not).

We could only guess today what the true levels of radiation were during the clean-up works at “Ground Zero”. Unfortunately, we have no other choice than to guess. So let us guess. It is better than nothing: apparently no U.S. official would ever publish the exact measurements of radiation that those guys dressed in “lunar-looking” haz-mat suits were exposed to...

It is extremely difficult, not to say practically impossible, to calculate exact levels of radiation in that case, but still, we could try to figure them out at least approximately, by comparing to other similar events where levels of radiation were measured.

As in several other instances before this Chapter, we need some basic data to base our guessing upon. Let us find some comparable examples. Actually, it was not easy to find these examples, I would say... Do not forget that almost all data on nuclear explosions is classified. It simply does not exist in the wilderness of the Internet or in any public library...

Anyhow, maybe I was lucky. After an extensive search, I managed to find one comparable event. It was an underground nuclear test of exactly 150 kiloton; and it was exactly in granite rock – so its main basic features coincided with our particular demand. The explosion took place on July, 23, 1973, at the Hole No. 1066, Balapan Test Site, at Semipalatinsk nuclear testing ground, the then Soviet Union. A nuclear device with a 150 kiloton yield was detonated at a depth of 465 m in granite rock. The depth was sufficiently deeper than in our case (since three nuclear explosions under WTC buildings 1, 2 and 7 all occurred at depths of only 77 meters), but it was actually only the one property (the depth) that differed from the three 9/11 explosions. However, this particular property, that differed, elevated the status of that explosion to “contained” – meaning that it met official safety standards. Here I simply site the report²¹³:

“...Radioactive gases escaped into the atmosphere 25 hours after the shot. In the first hours after radioactivity was noted in the atmosphere, slow free-flow discharge of radioactive gases was observed, mainly through annular cracks formed on the periphery of the subsidence crater²¹⁴. Filtration of gases ended after about a day. During filtration of radioactive gases, levels of radiation [at the surface] were 200-300 mR/h. After filtration had ended, the radiation background within the confines of the subsidence crater and on the crest of the upheaval mound was 10-50 mR/h for the first few days...”

What could we see from here? First of all, this nuclear explosion formally met safety standards, unlike the 9/11 explosions in Manhattan. It was detonated sufficiently deep underground and the mentioned escape of the radioactive gases occurred not immediately, but after some time (25 hours later). It was because those gases had to find their way to the earth's surface first, being filtered on the way by the relatively thick layer of soil remaining above the cavity left by the explosion at the depth of 465 m. These radioactive gases had not been released into the Earth's atmosphere "as is". They were filtered first. And this fact sufficiently decreased the amounts of radioactivity. Still, even "200-300 mR/h" (meaning "milli-Roentgen per hour") is quite a serious level of radiation. Note, that mR/h is $1/1000^{\text{th}}$ of R/h. 200 - 300 mR/h is nothing else than 0.2 - 0.3 Roentgen per hour, which is a lot, I would say.

²¹³ “The Containment of Soviet Underground Nuclear Explosions” – by Vitaly V. Adushkin, Institute of Dynamics of Geospheres of the Russian Academy of Sciences Moscow, Russia.

As I have mentioned before, in the former Soviet Union it was 25 Roentgen maximum allowed radiation dose for combat conditions, and 12.5 Roentgen – for non-combat conditions, irrespective whether the said digits of Roentgens were acquired instantly (for example, as a result of being hit by a front of penetrating radiation of a nuclear explosion), or accumulated in installments during any given year (for example, as a result of being subjected to certain levels of residual/induced radioactivity for prolonged periods of time). It should be kept in mind that the doses of over 50 Roentgen cause acute radiation sickness. Although, radiation sickness caused by the doses of slightly over 50 Roentgen will be in light forms, not in life threatening forms, such doses cause immediately noticeable sickness. This means that you will feel really sick if you get over 50 Roentgens either at once as a result of penetrating radiation, or as an accumulated dose during a relatively short period of time (let's say, during a couple of months).

Based on this knowledge, you can calculate how many hours you need to stay there (I am talking about the spot above the 1973 150-kiloton Soviet underground nuclear explosion from the above sample) to get acute radiation sickness in a light form. 50 R / 0.3 R/h = 166 hours. If you spend only 7 days in that area, you will get twice as much as the maximum allowed radiation dose set for combat conditions (or 4 times as much as the maximum allowed radiation dose for peaceful life) and that would be enough to have light radiation sickness. If you spend there only three weeks, you will get over 150 Roentgen which is enough to develop acute radiation sickness with the life-threatening condition (probability of death is around 50% during one month since first hospitalized). If you spend there 5 weeks you will get > 250 Roentgen (probability of death is well over 90%). If you spend there 6 weeks, you practically have no chance to survive, unless you get a bone marrow transplant.

Make your own conclusions – whether the above-mentioned 200-300 mR/h levels of radiation are dangerous levels or not.

However, as you can see from the above report, these levels did not persist for a long time. "Filtration of radioactive gases" continued in the abovementioned case only one day. After that, the levels of radiation subsided to a maximum of 50 mR/h, which is 6 times less than in our former calculation. Then the radiation levels subsided to even less than that – only 10 mR/h, which is 30 times less than in our former calculation.

Now we can make a new calculation – how much maximum could a person obtain in that case, if he really wishes to catch absolutely all possible doses available in that location. During the first 24 hours – when levels were 0.3 R/h, he could get a maximum of 7.2 R. During the second two days he could get a maximum of, let's say, 0.05 R/h X 48 hours = 2.4 R. During the next 10 days he could get another, let's say, 0.01 X 240 hours = 2.4 R. These are rough estimations, as you could see, because I presumed that levels of 0.05 R/h sustained only 48 hours, and then sharply fell to only 0.01 R/h, while in reality it was not so – levels fell first to 0.04 R/h, then – to 0.03 R/h, then – to 0.02 R/h, and so on. That means a maximum of what a person, who spent there around two weeks, could accumulate is only 7.2 + 2.4 + 2.4 = 12 Roentgen; this is quite a reasonable dose – only a half of the formal "safe" dose set for combat conditions in the former USSR.

Considering that no person would be crazy enough to pitch his tent right at ground zero in order to spend there the entire 2 weeks, no one could accumulate even those maximum available 12 Roentgens in reality. That is exactly why the abovementioned explosion was considered "contained" – which meant that it met safety standards of the former USSR. However, the above was only a rough estimate – merely an example to base our future calculations upon.

The problem with the nuclear explosions in Manhattan was that they were not conducted at the depth of 465 meters like in the above sample. They were conducted at depths of only 77 meters. You remember that the radius of the cavities created by these explosions was roughly 50 meters. Thus, it was only ~25 meters of remaining soil in between the upper end of the cavity and the Earth's surface. While in the abovementioned example it was well over 400 meters of remaining soil. The thickness of it has crucial importance in our case, because it is nothing else than the thickness of the very "filter" that would filter radioactive gases before they reach the surface. Now you could imagine that a quality of filtering offered by the 400 meters and that offered by the 25 meters of remaining granite rock is different.

Levels of radiation at ground zero (or “Ground Zero” in the capital letters if you wish) would be very much higher in Manhattan’s case. Moreover, the problem was that even these supposed 25 meters did not really remain above hypocenters of the three explosions in Manhattan. These 25 meters above the spots of the nuclear explosions were nothing but the “crushed zone” (a/k/a “dust”) – as well as the Tower’s structures above it for another 300 meters or so. These 25 meters of fine dust did not provide any filtering at all – they simply fell into a blazing inferno underneath and melted there at once. The orifices of the actual underground cavities in Manhattan were only visibly covered by huge piles of assorted debris; in reality, they were not covered at all. Therefore, from only a next second after the Twin Towers/WTC-7’s collapse, all radioactive gases were released into the atmosphere above “Ground Zero” unfiltered. That is why the above method of estimating radioactivity levels is obviously invalid for the Manhattan’s case.

What other data is available as to radioactivity levels after nuclear explosions? Here is some other data. It pertains to a well-known atmospheric nuclear blast during the only known atomic military exercises that involved Soviet regular army units – who acted as if in a real nuclear war during those unprecedented exercises which took place on September 14, 1954, at “Totskoe” training grounds, the then USSR. An aviation atomic bomb of 40 kiloton in TNT yield exploded in the air 380 meters above the Earth’s surface. A radiation reconnaissance platoon arrived at ground zero after one hour (to send them there before 1 hour would be simply too dangerous for its personnel).

The levels of radiation at ground zero after the 40 kiloton airburst were measured as follows:

- 1 hour after the explosion – 50 R/h; (note, it is not “milli-Roentgen-”, but “Roentgen per hour”)
- 6 hours after the explosion – 26 R/h;
- 21 hours after the explosion – 10 R/h;
- 33 hours after the explosion – 6 R/h;
- 48 hours after the explosion – 3 R/h;
- 73 hours after the explosion – 850 mR/h (but this one is already “milli-Roentgen per hour”).

From the above table you could get not only the actual digits, but also an idea as to dynamics of how the levels of radiation typically subside in the course of time. However, unlikely we could use these digits, because they pertain to a nuclear explosion of 40 kiloton which occurred 380 m above ground zero, while in Manhattan there were 3X150 kiloton explosions that occurred 77 m below Ground Zero. Besides, we have to note the following: an underground nuclear blast causes much more radioactive contamination compared to an airburst; and such a radioactive contamination after an underground nuclear blast lasts considerably longer too – compared to that caused by an airburst. It is obvious, because in the case of an airburst winds will always contribute to the subsidence of the radioactivity levels – by blowing away at least some radioactive particles.

Still, it will be very interesting to get some digits concerning radiation levels belonging to poorly contained underground nuclear explosions. Actually, it is near impossible to get these digits, because all materials of this kind are traditionally classified and only in the case of a really good luck could you accidentally encounter some of them. Perhaps, we have good luck: during a relatively lax period (when new Russian secret services after the USSR’s disappearance have not imposed any strict security regime yet) – in the early ‘90s – there were quite a few books published by former Soviet nuclear scientists and some of these books were even translated to English.

Here is one of them: “A Review of Nuclear Testing by the Soviet Union at Novaya Zemlya, 1955--1990” by Vitaly I. Khalturin at al. This book in a PDF format is available for download from here:

http://www.ldeo.columbia.edu/~richards/my_papers/khalturin_NZ_1-42%20.pdf

Let us open its chapter “ACCIDENTS AND RADIOACTIVE CONTAMINATION” (page 26). I am quoting:

“...The first accident occurred on 14 October 1969, when two nuclear charges totaling 540 kt (the announced yield) were detonated in separate adits at Matochkin Shar (A-7 and A-9). This was the most serious accident of the UNT program at NZTS. A gas-stream jet burst to the surface one hour after the test from a tectonic fault on a mountain slope at some distance from adit A-9. The level of gamma radiation jumped to several hundred roentgens per hour. For some 40–50 minutes, many test personnel were exposed to the resulting radiation hazard. Most were subjected to a radiation dose of about 40–80 roentgens...”

Now we have some comparable digits, at last. The two charges with a total yield of 540 kiloton described above were, of course, more powerful than those used to demolish the WTC, but still comparable. Do not even doubt that when the Twin Towers and the WTC-7 collapsed it was only piles of debris (and not any soil layer) that were actually separating the underground cavities filled with radioactive materials and the atmosphere above. So, the situation was quite comparable with that described above. You can be sure that in Manhattan's ground zero (at that moment still not in Capital Letters yet) the radiation levels were several hundred Roentgens per hour. In addition, when it comes to the dynamics of the subsidence of the radioactivity levels, you can use the abovementioned table (pertaining to the 40 kiloton airburst) – just to have a general idea of how quickly the levels of radiation usually subside.

Now you have at least some basic data to base your guessing upon and now, at last, you can make your estimations as to the possible levels of radioactivity after the WTC demolition and during various stages of 9/11 rescue efforts and Ground Zero clean-up operations.

More information about radiation sickness: why not too many cases of acute radiation sickness were noticed among “Ground Zero” responders?

It might sound strange, but indeed not too many cases of acute radiation sickness were reported after the extensive clean-up operation that involved thousands of totally unprotected responders who worked without any “lunar-looking haz-mat suits” and often even without any respirators on Manhattan’s Ground Zero. Intuitively, it might appear that any and every worker who spent some time at Ground Zero should end-up with some acute radiation sickness (ARS) and such a development would be unavoidable. Contrary to the “intuitive presumption”, it was not so in practice. In reality, the Ground Zero responders and local residents suffer from chronic radiation sickness, rather than from an acute one. Why did that happen?

In order to understand this phenomenon, you have to understand first, what is the actual difference between acute- and chronic forms of radiation sickness. .

Let us consider acute radiation sickness first. In order to develop an acute form of radiation sickness (noticeable one) you have to receive at least a 50 Roentgens dose of ionizing radiation (in this particular case we are talking only about its gamma-rays component and penetrating neutrons component, while practically disregarding its alpha- and beta- components). You could receive this minimum of 50 required Roentgens by either means:

- 1) Because of being instantly struck by a hard front of penetrating radiation of certain strength (measuring in Roentgens) that momentarily comes from a nuclear explosion’s hypocenter simultaneously with its initial flash and propagates to every direction with a speed of light. Let us call it “Factor 1”.
- 2) Because of being exposed for some periods of time to ionizing radiation (represented by residual radiation, or by induced radiation, or by both) in radioactively contaminated areas (in this case radiation levels are being measured in Roentgens/per hour, rather than in Roentgens). Let us call it “Factor 2”.
- 3) Because of the combination of the two (means that number of acquired Roentgens would be a sum to which both – Factor 1 and Factor 2 have contributed).

Examples: some one has been struck by a 500 Roentgen penetrating radiation front because of standing in the open some 350 meters away from a mini-nuke’s explosion hypocenter. He will develop the heaviest condition of acute radiation sickness and would die in a maximum of 10-11 days without any chance to recover.

Another example: someone has been struck by a 100 Roentgen-strong penetrating radiation front because of standing several hundreds of meters away from the above hypocenter. He will develop acute radiation sickness of a medium form in which his chances to die will be not too high, but still, cannot be discarded: some people might die even after receiving only a 100 Roentgens dose.

Third example: someone got only 30 Roentgens after being struck by a 30-Roentgen-strong penetrating radiation front because of standing very far from the above nuclear explosion hypocenter. He will not feel sick at all, because even though a 30 Roentgens radiation dose does harm his body to a certain extent, this harm will not be noticeable. However, if someone who had already obtained this 30 Roentgens dose from the penetrating radiation front has decided to visit ground zero in an immediate aftermath while levels of radiation there were, let’s say, 10 Roentgens per hour, and he spends 3 hours there, he has additionally obtained another 30 Roentgens due to residual/induced radiation at ground zero. These newly acquired 30 Roentgens will be added to the first 30 Roentgens he has had already, and his summary dose will be now 60 Roentgens. To feel sick one needs to have over 50 Roentgens. The 60 Roentgens is more than enough to feel sick right away (but not enough to die). This person would feel sick on the 2nd-3rd day and unlikely in such a situation he would continue visiting ground zero to accumulate more radiation doses. He would rather prefer to stay in bed or to visit a doctor trying to seek some medical treatment for his current illness.

Let us now imagine that there is someone who was NOT subjected to a penetrating radiation front from any nuclear explosion (which is the easiest way to instantly obtain a huge number of required Roentgens) – i.e. he escaped being subjected to the abovementioned Factor 1. This person in our sample would try his best to obtain a number of required Roentgens exclusively from Factor 2 – i.e. on account of some radioactive contamination. Let us imagine that such a “clean” person visits ground zero for the first day and spends there 14 hours, going here and there, while levels of radiation are 10 Roentgens per hour (do not forget that these levels are not equal – somewhere they could be 10 R/hour, somewhere – 7 R/hour, somewhere – 5 R/hour, and so on).

What will happen with him? He will obtain 80 (or may be even 100) Roentgens during the first day. The next day he might likely feel sick, because what he got corresponds to medium acute radiation sickness. Thus, unlikely he would continue to work at ground zero in these circumstances – he will be rushed to see a doctor. But if he did not feel sick on the very next day (this is possible if he accumulated the previous dosage during evening hours and by the morning he did not feel sick yet) and attempted to work there again the next day and spent there another 14 hours and got another 70-80 Roentgens, in addition to what he got during the first day, then this person has a good chance to die. He would definitely feel very sick on the third day but by then he would have accumulated an extremely dangerous dose of radiation. Though, this sample of mine was rather extreme. Let us consider some other realistic example.

Let us imagine that someone works at ground zero while approximate levels of radiation are 2 Roentgen per hour and that person spends there two days, 14 hours a day. By the end of the second day he will acquire a radiation dose enough to feel sick, but not enough to die. So, at the worst case, even if he attempts to work there during the third day and he will get, let’s say, another 20 or 30 Roentgens, without any doubt, he will not be there on the 4th day, because he will by then definitely seek medical treatment being unable to work. His chances to acquire a really dangerous dose of radiation would not be too high considering the circumstances.

Considering all of this, as well as information available at the end of the previous chapter, we can try to figure out what kind of people might have been subjected to extreme doses of residual radiation in a very short time that would lead to acute radiation sickness.

Above – a famous 9/11 photo that shows a man immediately after the Twin Tower’s collapse.

The most dangerous levels of radiation, of course, were during the very first hour after each of the Twin Towers’ collapse, and that of the WTC-7 collapse (see info at the end of the previous Chapter for guidance).

Presumably, levels of radiation during the very first minutes after the Towers’ collapse, in areas close to their footprints, might likely exceed 300 Roentgen per hour, these levels would relatively quickly drop to be somewhat over 100 Roentgen per hour. This would be our rough estimation for the very first hour. Anyone who was there from the moment of the Towers' collapse and did not run away immediately might likely get a dose exceeding 100 Roentgen or even more than that (it depended on how many minutes this person actually spent there and also depended on how far he or she was from the Towers' footprints). That should be the first and foremost group of risk, because these people would develop the heaviest condition of acute radiation sickness which was in their case absolutely unavoidable.

On one of the most famous 9/11 photos shown above there is an example of the "first and foremost" group of risk. This man stood not too far from one of the Twin Towers footprints soon after its collapse (it should be presumed that at least 30 minutes have past since its actual collapse, because the WTC dust was no longer airborne at that moment). He might get at minimum 20-30, and at maximum – 200-300 Roentgens of acquired radiation dose (the exact digit depended on how far he was from the Tower's footprint while waiting for the dust to descend, and also – on how fast he ran away after the moment this picture had been taken). The photographer who took this picture should have received some comparable digit of Roentgens (also depending on where he was hiding while the dust was still airborne and depending on how long a time he spent there in total).

The next groups of risk are those who spent several hours after entering ground zero on the 2nd hour or so after the Towers' collapse – when levels of radiation subsided and were measured in tens of Roentgens per hour, rather than in hundreds of Roentgen per hour like in the above case. These groups were represented by professionals rather than casual passersby – i.e. by firefighters and other rescue workers who attempted to search for survivors in the immediate aftermath of the Towers' collapse. These groups might miss the most dangerous first minutes (in this sense they were somehow "saved" by dust that was still airborne and so severely decreased visibility preventing any rescue efforts). By the time the dust had descended, the most dangerous initial levels of radiation had subsided, too.

Above – another famous 9/11 photo showing New York firefighters entering “ground zero” in the immediate aftermath of the Twin Towers’ collapse – about 1 hour following the collapse.

On the photo above you can see an example of the “second” group of risk. This is one of the most famous 9/11 photos – from the same set as the above photo, i.e. it was apparently taken by the same photographer. Firefighters enter area close to one of the WTC Towers’ footprint almost immediately after the dust descended. While a man on the above photo unlikely remained at ground zero for long, these firefighters apparently spent several hours there at a minimum, after this picture had been taken.

We can also presume the following – that these initial groups who entered ground zero after one or two hours, were prevented from visiting the most dangerous areas of it by some “knowledgeable guys” from the ABC service (who supposed to appear in their “lunar-looking haz-mat suits” in that area as soon as all Geiger counters around simultaneously began to bark, so alerting them that something truly awful had just happened in the WTC area). You do not have to doubt that it was exactly like we presume here, since it would be just logical to presume so. These initial rescuers groups who entered ground zero in search of survivors would unlikely approach areas that were too close to the original sources of radiation (since their areas were most probably marked as “no go zones” immediately by dosimetrists).

That is why these groups were most probably subjected to ionizing radiation levels measuring, let's say, from 10 to 80 Roentgens per hour or so (our rough estimation). The problem, however, was that these groups were not in a hurry to leave – they were eager to do all they could to find all survivors, as well as to retrieve dead bodies. That is why spending time at ground zero was long enough to accumulate summary radiation doses comparable with those received by the first abovementioned group during the first minutes and first hours – i.e. the doses that likely exceeded 100 Roentgens. This was more than enough to develop acute radiation sickness ranging in seriousness of the condition from medium to heavy and, probably, even to very heavy.

The third, probably the most unfortunate group of the highest risk were, of course, those who were trapped under debris or knocked down unconscious by falling debris and regained their consciousness in a few hours (if ever at all). By the time these people were found and taken out of ground zero, they most likely managed to catch all radiation that was available – i.e. a maximum of what could be obtained by the first group, plus a maximum of what could be obtained by the second group.

The people from the third group might easily get a few hundreds of Roentgens doses – likely some of them exceeding even nominally lethal doses of radiation. It shall be presumed that some of these were badly injured by ionizing radiation with no chance to recover and they indeed succumbed to their radiation injuries, but it would unlikely be reported as the cause. As you might sincerely expect, their deaths that were caused by acute radiation sickness were officially blamed on either mechanical injuries caused by debris, or on the supposed suffocation, or, where available – on their burns.

These were the three main groups that were subjected to huge doses of radiation over a very short period of time that could likely lead to acute radiation sickness.

There would not be any further large group with the risk to develop any acute radiation sickness, but only the chronic one. Partly it was because radiation by the end of the first evening had subsided even more (please, review information at the end of the previous Chapter for comparison), and partly – because along with the radiation levels, the initial panic and chaos at ground zero had subsided too, and some sort of order and control, at last, was restored.

Beginning from the second day of this disaster, radiation safety measures were apparently (although discretely) implemented by the U.S. authorities at ground zero preventing as much as possible any further cases of acute radiation sickness. However, before we move to consider these “apparent-but-discreet” measures, let us find some confirmation as to acute radiation sickness definitely suffered by the abovementioned groups.

There is one utterly seditious document named “THE WORLD TRADE CENTER DISASTER: HEALTH EFFECTS AND COMPENSATION MECHANISMS” published by certain John Howard, M.D., J.D. and available on the Internet for download in a PDF format:
http://www.brooklaw.edu/students/journals/bjlp/jlp16i_howard.pdf

Let us try to read this document. Of course, as you might expect, “politically incorrect” words such as “radiation” and “acute radiation sickness” would not be available in its text, but since we already know how to read between the lines, we will try to read this document between the lines too.

To begin with, we have to formally establish the fact that here we deal with a cheater, and so we have our right to read his concoction “between the lines”.

In order to prove that this is nothing but cheating, let us take a look at these words:

“The combustion of 90,000 liters of jet fuel at high temperatures led to the weakening of the WTC’s structural steel members and within two hours resulted in their dramatic collapse. The collapse of the towers pulverized the cement exterior of two of the largest buildings in the United States as well as much of their interior contents.”

I guess, this statement constitutes more than enough evidence to deliver our final judgment to this concoction: it is a deliberate and the most shameless lie. This apparently leaves us only an option to read it “between the lines” – in order to extract from this concoction at least some particles of the truth.

What we need to find is this: according to our presumption, based on our considerations above, a few hundreds of people (most of them firefighters) must accumulate dangerous doses of ionizing radiation during the first hours at ground zero. This would unavoidably lead to their suffering from acute radiation sickness that would be immediately noticeable. Thus, we could presume that these people should begin to seek medical treatment on the 2nd and 3rd day after being exposed to huge doses of radiation, since it would be logical to presume so. It shall be understood that people, who were subjected to heavy doses of ionizing radiation would not feel sick immediately. The actual feeling of sickness comes later – when their blood would not be able to regenerate in the same rate as it used to be when they were healthy; this will be only noticeable on the 2nd or even on the 3rd day, because the first couple of days their bodies continue to function somehow on the “old blood”. Let us try to find some confirmation of this presumption in the abovementioned report.

I am quoting (from page 72 of the report):

“...WTC exposures can best be understood as a temporal sequence of five exposure categories of varying intensity. The first exposure category occurred during the first 12 hours after the collapse, during the most intense exposure to rescuers, residents, commercial building occupants and people in transit and when they were exposed to the highest concentration of large and small particles and various gases. The second exposure category occurred twelve hours after the collapse up to the first rain on September 14, 2001 at which time WTC-affected groups were exposed to large and small particles that were periodically resuspended, as well as to gases which were emitted from intense fires at Ground Zero...”

We make here our first attempt to read “between the lines”. As you might sincerely expect, the author of this report “forgot” to explain to his gullible reader what “ground zero” really meant those days. This is understandable, indeed. Let us follow his advice and try to “understand” the WTC “exposures” using the abovementioned time frames.

Why did “the most dangerous” exposure occur during first 12 hours after the collapse? What do you think? To get an answer to this puzzle, please, look again at the dynamics of how, typically, radiation levels subside in the first hours after a nuclear explosion – mentioned at the end of the previous Chapter.

Why is the “second exposure category”, mentioned by this report, placed in a time-frame between September 11 and September 14? You can get an answer to this second puzzle from the same source – just look again at the digits available at the end of the previous Chapter and you will get the point. It is because during the first 3 days the levels of radiation are the highest – so the people exposed to these levels could likely develop some acute radiation sickness, while it is very unlikely that people would accumulate such large doses after the first 3 days have been passed. Still, this report mentions three more categories of “exposure”, but in our case we can neglect them (I mean neglect them for now only). Because here we are looking only for causes and available victims of acute radiation sickness, leaving chronic radiation sickness and its victims aside for a while.

I am quoting again (from page 73):

“During these five periods of exposure, WTC-affected populations sustained varying, but largely unknown, levels of exposure to a long list of toxic agents generated by the collapse of the WTC. Among these were asbestos fibers (from insulation and fireproofing materials); concrete and the crystalline silica it contained (made from Portland cement and used in the Towers’ construction); carbon monoxide (from fires and engine exhaust); diesel particulates (from vehicle engine exhaust); mercury (from fluorescent lights); heavy metals such as aluminum, titanium, chromium, zinc and manganese (from building materials and furnishings); hydrogen sulfide (from sewers, decomposing human remains and spoiled foodstuffs); inorganic acids; volatile and semivolatile organic compounds (“VOCs”); polynuclear aromatic hydrocarbons (“PAHs”); polychlorinated biphenyls (“PCBs”); polychlorinated dioxins (“PCDDs”) and furans (“PCDFs”); various pesticides; and other toxic agents.”

As you might sincerely expect, in our case we can disregard with a light heart all those alleged “toxic agents”, except only the very last one, vaguely defined in this shameless report as “other”.

"...Surrogates such as time of arrival at the WTC site, time exposed to the plume, distance from Ground Zero, and specification of activities involving exposure to debris, dust, and smoke could be used as semiquantitative determinants of exposure."

You do not have to doubt that this is exactly the case. The earlier you arrive at ground zero, the closer to ground zero you will be, and the longer you will be there, the more radiation you will be exposed to.

And, at last, on page 84 of this report we found what we were actually looking for. Here is a confirmation about acute radiation sickness:

"...In the first 24 hours after the WTC attacks, 240 FDNY personnel sought emergency medical treatment. Of these, 28 were hospitalized and 50 received treatment for acute respiratory symptoms caused by inhalation of airborne smoke and dust. Several firefighters had respiratory problems that started within hours of the disaster, and they were treated for serious, newly onset lung diseases. Others had respiratory symptoms that arose weeks or months after their work at Ground Zero began..."

In this statement, all figures and time-frames are quite believable and correspond to our estimation of radiation doses received during the first, the most dangerous hours. All you have to do here is to change words "respiratory symptoms" (note²¹⁵) to words "radiation sickness" while leaving the word "acute" in its place. You will then get about the right picture: 240 firefighters got serious doses of ionizing radiation – definitely exceeding 50 Roentgens (probably even exceeding 100 Roentgens in many cases), they felt sick and sought emergency medical treatment.

Some of them with the most heavy condition were hospitalized (and you could guess that some of them died), while some others might require only out-patient treatments – typical to light- and medium-light cases of acute radiation sickness (though, even they could die later).

Note also, that some unlucky souls mentioned in the above quotation felt the problems within hours (rather than in the first 24 hours) and they were treated for serious conditions (as opposed to those who felt sick in the first 24 hours and whose conditions were less serious). These unlucky souls belonged to the third – the most unfortunate group that we designated above. The point is that to feel sick from the acute radiation sickness in only a few hours (rather than in the next day or two), you must get a dose of ionizing radiation that is close to a thousand Roentgens or even more than that; because those who got "merely" a nominally lethal dose of 500 Roentgens would still feel themselves fine for the first 24 hours, without knowing that they are actually dead. That is to say that the abovementioned so-called "serious, newly onset lung diseases" that became apparent "within hours" of the disaster were useless to treat – they were untreatable anyway. Apparently, they are talking here of those unlucky people who were trapped in the immediate proximity of the WTC footprints and so managed to catch the highest radiation doses – that were in the first seconds and minutes much, much higher than during the first most dangerous one hour. If we presume that during the first "most dangerous hour" the levels of radiation were somewhat 300-400 Roentgens per hour, we have to presume that during the first "most dangerous minutes" (as opposed to "hours") the levels were in the order of thousands of Roentgens per hour. Thus, it is very likely that some people managed to accumulate even a thousand or two of Roentgens in this case – this, of course, will cause them to feel sick in a few hours and their conditions would be indeed "serious" – exactly, as mentioned by the above report (means, instead of dying on the 10th-12th day like those who got merely 250-300 Roentgens, these will die on the 2nd day).

You can add here that some civilians, who were trapped in the immediate vicinity of the Towers during their collapse and spent some time there before being able to run away (they could not run away when the WTC dust was still airborne because it severely decreased the visibility), also got their tens- and hundreds of Roentgen doses of ionizing radiation. These surely felt sick the next day, and they too sought the emergency medical treatment. However, these civilians were not embraced by the above report because they sought their treatment in a variety of hospitals around (or even far from the area) and nobody bothered to count all of them, unlike the FDNY, that had a more or less centralized approach

²¹⁵ I have to say that even though I denied "respiratory symptoms", suggesting to replace them with "acute radiation sickness", I still consider that some "respiratory illnesses" could indeed occur - being a part of "acute radiation sickness"; but more explanations on the technicalities of these you will encounter in the next chapter.

when monitoring health conditions of its staff.

Now we understand, at last, that it was not that “there were allegedly no cases of acute radiation sickness” at ground zero in Manhattan as claimed by the shills. There were indeed hundreds of cases of acute radiations sickness – exactly as expected, but they were not honestly reported as such. However, practically all those cases of acute radiation sickness occurred only during the first day; that is why there were only hundreds of them, rather than thousands.

Now let us imagine that the U.S. officials who knew for sure what happened at “Ground Zero” in reality were not completely ignorant when it comes to the effects of ionizing radiation. And even if they were ignorant, they would be advised by those ABC specialists who visited “Ground Zero” in the “lunar-looking haz-mat suits” – since those guys apparently knew about radiation and its properties very well.

Actually, you do not have to doubt that responsible, or to be more exact, “irresponsible” U.S. officials, by one way or another, knew it very well that if they let people wander at “Ground Zero” and around it without any control, it will soon (in only 2-3 days) result in multiple cases of acute radiation sickness, ranging from light- and medium- to heavy- and even very heavy ones. In any case, even light forms of such acute radiation sickness will be immediately noticeable. In only a couple of days thousands will feel sick and an awful truth about severe radioactive contamination of Manhattan would spread out. It is easily imaginable what would happen if some 5-6 thousands of the people would feel immediately sick and would be hospitalized with peculiar yet well-known symptoms after obviously obtaining their “sickness” at the place bearing the transparent name “Ground Zero”.

That is why we shall presume that some crafty U.S. officials were obliged to find some solution on how to prevent the Ground Zero workers and nearby Manhattan residents from being subjected to doses of residual radiation that could exceed 50 Roentgens and so to prevent them from feeling feel sick right away. How they did it in regard to the Manhattan’s residents is well-known – they simply evacuated them and did not allow them to return until dangerous levels of radiation had naturally subsided.

Once they judged that radiation levels were as low as not to allow anyone to accumulate the required 50 Roentgens in, let’s say, a whole year, the residents were allowed to return (and to continue to inhale deadly radioactive vapor that would in only a couple of years cause chronic radiation sickness rather than acute one). I think it is clear – how the U.S. officials managed to prevent acute radiation sickness among Manhattan residents. However, it was not so easy to prevent it among gullible Ground Zero responders, as you could probably imagine. Still, those crafty U.S. officials managed to do it – even in regard to the responders.

Here is an extremely seditious article from John Hopkins Public Health Magazine published on the Internet and named “Mobilizing Public Health - Turning Terror’s Tide with Science”²¹⁶. Of course, you have to read it as usual – i.e. “between the lines” (note what is in bold).

“Danger in the Dust

This project is “clearly among the most energy-draining experiences of their lives.”
- John Groopman

It is 4 a.m. in New York City as four researchers from the School enter the site of the World Trade Center disaster on foot. Each is lugging from 50 to 90 pounds of air-monitoring equipment onto Ground Zero. In the dark, the tangled pile of wreckage takes on a distinctly hellish cast.

“Fires are still actively burning and the smoke is very intense,” reports Alison Geyh, PhD. “In some pockets now being uncovered, they are finding molten steel.”

Geyh, an assistant scientist with the School’s Department of Environmental Health Sciences (EHS), heads the team of scientists sent by the School in response to a request by the National Institute of Environmental Health Sciences for a coordinated study of the disaster’s potential health effects to those in the immediate environment. By attaching personal air monitors to the workers and by placing stationary air sampling pumps outside the periphery of Ground Zero, Geyh (pronounced “Guy”) and her colleagues can determine the density of the particulate matter in the air, the size of those particles, and any short-term health effects to those at and around the site.

Julie Herbstman, MSc student in Epidemiology, attaches an air monitor to a Ground Zero worker.

Alison Geyh after 9/11

"This is an incredible situation," she reports. "The recovery and clean-up efforts are going on around the clock. Hundreds of people are at the site every day; and many of them have been there since Sept. 11. Workers at the site want to know what they are breathing and what to do to protect themselves."

Since the drivers and equipment operators are working in two 12-hour shifts, the researchers must start early and stay late. "None of the monitors can be left out overnight," says Geyh, "so around midnight we retrieve everything and take the equipment back to the hotel, where we recalibrate it before going to bed." The whole thing recommences at 4 a.m.

"People have been coming back really frazzled," says John Groopman, PhD. "It's clearly among the most energy-draining experiences of their lives." Groopman, Anna Baetjer Professor and chair of EHS, knows of no analogous research situation. "The fact that thousands of bodies are still hidden in the rubble makes the work very tense [and] changes the tenor of everything."

At every stage of the clean-up operation, plumes of dust and smoke are sent skyward. The Hopkins scientists are also gearing up to measure air quality in the nearby neighborhoods and to enter residences around Ground Zero to collect and study samples of the dust originally produced by the collapse, which has sifted into buildings throughout lower Manhattan. - Rod Graham"

No one shall be duped by this article.

There is no "air-monitoring equipment" that needs to be attached to each worker and, moreover, taken from him at the end of the day to be allegedly "re-calibrated". Just try to be realistic... There is a certain "radiation monitoring equipment" namely "individual dosimeters" that must be issued to everyone who is exposed to dangerous levels of radiation. And these individual dosimeters, of course, must be collected from the people at the end of each day in order to get their meter readings and to calculate each worker's total radiation dose he managed to accumulate on the last day + on all previous days.

It is pretty self-evident what kind of the so-called "air-monitoring equipment" they are talking about in this shameless article. They just used the complete ignorance and gullibility of the ground zero responders and used them more like cattle, than like humans.

Now, at last, you can imagine why not many ground zero responders were able to accumulate the required 50 Roentgens – in order to get sick immediately from light form of acute radiation sickness. It happened because some wily people – like Julie Herbstman or Alison Geyh – were appointed to clandestinely monitor their personal acquired radiation doses. Once they saw that a total radiation dose of a certain worker was getting close to the dangerous digit and his acute radiation sickness would be noticeable, probably tomorrow if he only gets a few more Roentgens, they quickly took some measures to prevent him from working at "ground zero".

For example, they either permanently or temporarily shifted such a person to some other location – for example to the Staten Island Landfill where levels of radiation were supposed to be negligible. That was, by the way, the very reason why so many ground zero responders were routinely shifted from one location to another – seemingly without any valid reason. But there was a reason, apparently. And the folks like Julie Herbtzman and Alison Geyh, as well as those “good guys” behind them, knew that reason very well. Apparently, they performed their clandestine duties very diligently. They only “forgot” to explain to their gullible patients, whom they treated like cattle, that acute radiation sickness was just one part of ground zero dangers, while the other part was chronic radiation sickness – which no “secretly” issued individual dosimeters would be able to prevent...

What is chronic radiation sickness, why it occurs, and what is the difference between chronic and acute radiation sickness?

First of all, when we talk about “radiation exposure”, we usually mean only a momentary exposure to a hard front of penetrating ionizing radiation that in its most dangerous part is represented by gamma-rays and high-energy neutrons, plus long-times exposure to residual and induced ionizing radiation while being in radioactively contaminated environment – and here again we only count gamma-radiation, while totally disregarding beta- and alpha- radiations.

When we talk about the threshold of 50 Roentgens that is the minimum required dose to begin to feel sick immediately, what we mean is 50 Roentgens of gamma-radiation only. We do not count alpha- and beta-radiations in this case.

Why it is that alpha- and beta-radiations are always discarded? It is because only gamma-radiation has enough penetrating capability to penetrate our entire body and to strike cells of internal organs in order to cause them to dysfunction. Why do we always disregard alpha- and beta- radiations? It is because neither of them could cause any radiation injury to our internal organs, irrespective of their actual intensities.

Alpha- particles, although extremely dangerous, can not penetrate our skin – they are all stopped by a thin layer of dead skin tissue that always covers every man as his “outer skin”. Since alpha-radiation is not penetrative enough to get to inside our bodies, we simply ignore it.

Beta-radiation is more penetrative and it can penetrate the outer “dead” layer of our skin and cause burns to inner “live” layers of our skin. These skin burns (called “beta-burns”) could be quite serious if this beta-radiation was intense enough. Still, we usually ignore even beta-radiation, along with alpha-radiation. We ignore it because even though beta-radiation in huge quantities could cause “beta-burns”, still, it can not get deep inside our bodies and so to cause any damage to the cells of our internal organs. Besides, beta-radiation can not penetrate our thick clothes, so one who wears enough clothing is protected from beta-radiation anyway. In this sense, it is comparable to sun-radiation – from the latter we too are protected by our clothing, while we could get a sun-burn if we offer to the Sun our bare skin.

That is why, since we feel protected from both – alpha- and beta- radiations, we do not even count them when we calculate “safe” and “dangerous” radiation doses in general. During such calculations only gamma-radiation levels are counted.

However, the above consideration is true only for the case when you are subjected to alpha- and beta-radiations and these radiations originate from outside of our bodies. It is not the case when you inhale or ingest some radioactive materials that emit these alpha- and beta- radiations. In the latter case, these alpha- and beta- radiations would originate from inside your body, and not from outside of it. You will no longer be protected from the most dangerous alpha-radiation by your skin, since you are being irradiated from inside. Neither will you be protected from still very dangerous beta-radiation, because you are being irradiated by it from inside your body.

Here is an example: let’s say that there is a radioactively contaminated area – a/k/a “ground zero”. You have to perform some job on it and you have to calculate a safe radiation dose. You send there a dosimetrist first (in lunar-looking haz-mat suit) who reports that levels of radiation in that area are, let’s say, 10 Roentgens per hour. I don’t know what an acceptable radiation dose in the United States is, so I will use here a former Soviet standard. In the Soviet Union it was believed that even though only doses of 50 Roentgens up could cause noticeable radiation sickness (i.e. do visible harm to one’s body), doses in between 20 and 50 Roentgens could still cause harm to one’s body (although invisible one).

That is why it was the following “safe” radiation doses (per gamma-radiation, of course, because only gamma-radiation is counted in such case) established in the Soviet Union for the cases of emergency: 25 Roentgen maximum summary doses for combat conditions, and half of it – i.e. 12.5 Roentgens – for non-combat conditions.

In this case, the “combat” and the “non-combat” conditions could be perceived as follows. Someone who received 12.5 Roentgens dose must be immediately taken away to prevent him from any further radiation exposure (even from a potential one) in the times of peace. However, in combat conditions – i.e. when there is an ongoing fighting, even the one who has already received 12.5 Roentgens, could be left on the front-line even though he could be subjected to some more exposure – let’s say, arising from radioactive contamination after nuclear explosions. Nonetheless, even in the combat conditions, someone whose acquired radiation dose gets close to 25 Roentgens must be removed from any further potential radiation exposure.

These “safe” doses were applicable for emergency cases – such as a necessity to stop some radioactive leakage immediately and at any cost, or to continue fighting, and so on. For non-emergency cases, though, these maximum acceptable radiation doses were often set much lower – let’s say, only 3-5 Roentgens – depending on the actual situation.

We come back to our sample above. Let us base it on the former Soviet standards, since we do not know the American ones for sure. We have: “ground zero” where levels of radiation are currently ~10 Roentgen per hour, according to our dosimetrist’s report. We have to establish first whether this work is really an “emergency” work or not. Regarding the removal of debris it is apparently not an “emergency” – because debris could be removed even a few months later, when the levels of radiation at “ground zero” would subside considerably. However, regarding rescuing people who might be trapped under the debris, it must be considered as an “emergency”. Thus, we decided that this is an “emergency” work. So, we have to stick to the maximum allowed radiation doses for emergency cases.

We know that levels of radiation are ~10 Roentgen per hour, while the maximum allowed radiation dose set as 12.5 Roentgens. Besides, we apparently have a lot of people at our disposal that could do the work, so it is not really necessary to expose each worker to the maximum allowed radiation dose. That is why, after some consideration, we decided that we will set the maximum allowed dose for 10 Roentgens, rather than for 12.5 – just to be on the safe side and not to abuse our emergency powers at the cost of the workers’ health. What we have to do in this case? We have to bring to the workers’ attention the following information and to act as follows:

- 1) We have to tell them that to work in this area is allowed for a maximum time of 1 hour per person – and no one and under no circumstances shall remain at ground zero any longer than 1 hour (because working longer than an hour in the area with the levels of radiation of ~10 Roentgens per hour would lead to exceeding the maximum allowed radiation dose).
- 2) Every worker must have an individual dosimeter attached to his body – so we will be able to measure his exact radiation exposure and able to take immediate measures if someone gets accidentally overexposed.
- 3) Every worker must be issued a full haz-mat suit that will limit his exposure to only outer radiation and will prevent deadly radioactive particles from being deposited on his hair and his skin, and, God forbid, from inhaling or ingesting such radioactive particles.
- 4) Every worker upon completing his 1 hour shift must be thoroughly decontaminated by specialists before allowed to remove his haz-mat suit – so to prevent him and other people around him from accidentally inhaling radioactive particles that were deposited on outer parts of his haz-mat suit.
- 5) Each worker who completed his shift must be forever (at least, for the next couple of years) removed from any work that contain even the slightest possibility to be exposed to radiation; and he himself must be well aware of it and he must be warned and acknowledge it in writing– not to seek any job that has anything to do with such things as radiation or radioactive materials.

As you probably understand, it is not enough to establish only a “covert” radiation control and to issue to each gullible worker an individual dosimeter in the disguise of the alleged “air monitoring equipment”. Unless each worker understands that radiation dangers are involved, this “secret” dosimeter will not save him. It will only save us and it will allow us to formally “observe” a certain “safe” radiation dose received by this worker in regard to gamma-radiation. What about the worker – he would indeed never exceed the 50 Roentgen (or whatever other dose we set as maximum) acquired radiation dose per gamma-radiation, but nothing more than that. He will still inhale and ingest not just “some”, but “all” deadly particles of radioactive dust and of radioactive vapor available at ground zero. While his dose per gamma-radiation (which we in this case “secretly” monitor) would not be enough to develop any acute radiation sickness and to feel sick right away, it does not mean that he will be “saved” from radiation by our “covert efforts”.

The problem is that this worker, whom we “forgot” to issue the full haz-mat suit (as well as a Manhattan resident when he eventually returns) would deposit inside his body some quantities (in some cases some absolutely enormous quantities) of deadly radioactive particles that would continue to irradiate him from inside by the most dangerous alpha-radiation (as well as by beta- and even by gamma- ones) for months and years to come. Depending on the severity of this internal irradiation, in a couple of years (or later, or sometimes, even earlier) a hidden (or “latent”) period of his chronic radiation sickness would end and his radiation sickness would be obvious. He would suffer from leukemia, various cancers, secondary infections, and eventually he will die. And that is what really happened in Manhattan.

I feel that I am obliged to place before my reader one more piece of extremely seditious information related to the abovementioned cover-up efforts in regard to chronic radiation sickness that would be a definite consequence to most of the ground zero responders. As you already understood, one of the main symptoms of chronic radiation sickness is leukemia. Leukemia could only be caused by two things:

1) ionizing radiation;

and

2) benzene vapors that one used to inhale for extended periods of time (such as people who worked for many years in gasoline stations or in oil refineries producing benzene, for example).

Thus, it would be logical to expect from those unscrupulous folks who were responsible for the cover-up measures at ground zero to prepare some advance story that would anticipate imminent multiple cases of leukemia among the gullible ground zero responders that would become apparent in a year or two.

Indeed we won't be cheated in our expectations. Such story was indeed prepared in advance. Here it is: an unprecedented article under the name “Toxic Poisoning Fears at Ground Zero” was discovered in 2008 here: <http://www.buzzle.com/editorials/2-7-2002-10159.asp>

Of course, as usual, this masterpiece of the lying art has to be read “between the lines” in order to get the main point:

“...Up to 750 firefighters working in the wreckage of the World Trade Centre in New York have taken sick leave with suspected toxic poisoning, according to reports in the US press today.

Many buildings ruined or damaged in the September 11 attacks contained lead, polychlorinated biphenyls (commonly referred to as PCBs), and asbestos, and there are fears that the dust from those buildings could have released dangerous levels of the toxins into the air around lower Manhattan.

One in four firefighters working at Ground Zero now have “World Trade Centre cough” or another respiratory complaint, fire department officials told USA Today.

Eight non-fire department staff working at the site were also found to have elevated levels of mercury in their blood.

New Yorkers have increasingly complained of tightness in their chests, sinus infections and bloody noses since the attacks.

On one day in the weeks following the attacks, the level of benzene, which can cause leukaemia and bone marrow damage with prolonged exposure, was measured at 58 times the official safety levels.

The US environmental protection agency is under fire from local politicians and health officials over failing to inform the public of the long-term risks from the toxins.

The agency insists that the air in lower Manhattan is not dangerous, except for low levels of asbestos in the restricted zone within a block of where the twin towers once stood.

© Guardian News & Media 2008
Published: 2/7/2002”

All what we actually need in this unprecedented article is what I made in bold. Scared U.S. officials, who understood perfectly well that sooner or later the effects of chronic radiation sickness – such as leukemia and bone marrow damage – would become apparent, began to prepare certain plausible stories capable of explaining these unprecedented events in the future...

Since the only other substance besides ionizing radiation known to be able to cause leukemia was benzene, the U.S. officials did not have much choice. That is why almost immediately after the events (in a “few weeks”, as the article states) they begin to “discover” the alleged “levels of benzene” [meaning “levels of benzene vapors in the air”] allegedly “58 times the official safety levels” at “ground zero”... And they were not even ashamed to make their ridiculous “discoveries” publicly available...

Let us look at the above claim with our eyes OPEN. Feeble ravings about the alleged “levels of asbestos” we could simply ignore – because these are very common for the ground zero propaganda campaign and no one could be 100% certain now if asbestos was indeed used in the Twin Towers’ construction or it was the latest post-9/11 concoction aimed to justify health problems caused by radiation. We have to take into the most serious consideration the claims about alleged “benzene levels” that could cause “leukemia and bone marrow damage”.

Do you remember poor detective John Walcott described at the beginning of this book who got bone marrow transplantation as a result of working at ground zero and who became actually the very source of the inspiration to the author of these lines to create this book?

According to the above article, it should be presumed that poor Mr. Walcott was affected by those alleged “levels of benzene 58 times the official safety levels”. Doesn’t it?

This most shameless lie can be easily disproved, as you might expect. First of all, there were not any big quantities of benzene kept in the WTC. While those little volumes of benzene in fuel-tanks of cars parked at the Twin Towers car-parking could be easily disregarded in our consideration. Firstly, because it was simply too little benzene in these cars to even talk about it. The potential quantity of the alleged benzene was indeed negligible. Secondly, even if there were some benzene in those cars it should have been burned out immediately due to extremely high temperatures under the rubble. If those temperatures were able to melt thick steel bars, what do you think would happen with benzene in thin fuel tanks of thin cars? And, lastly, I hope you can imagine that benzene vapors couldn’t persist in the air longer than a few minutes in the open because all these vapors would be simply blown away by wind. Thus, it is technically impossible to create any “high concentrations” of benzene vapors above “ground zero” as alleged. I hope you agree with this logic?

Add here that “ground zero” according to pre-9/11 dictionaries is not a “place where leukemia is caused by high concentration of benzene”; it is a place where a nuclear explosion occurs – which too could cause leukemia, and you will get the entire picture. The desperate U.S. officials, who sent gullible ground zero responders to their certain deaths, were concocting stories about “benzene vapors” in advance because they knew in advance that in a year or two their victims would suffer from chronic radiation sickness.

Ironically (or, perhaps, “suspiciously enough”), Mrs. Alison Geyh – one of those who admitted to collect every evening those so-called “personal air-monitors” from the gullible ground zero responders, managed to die from cancer too, or at least it was so reported.

In an obituary titled “Alison Geyh of SPH, 52, studied air pollution at ground zero”²¹⁷ published on March 7, 2011, it was reported that (I am quoting):

“...Alison Geyh, an associate professor at the Johns Hopkins Bloomberg School of Public Health, died Feb. 20 after a lengthy battle with cancer. She was 52...”

“...Geyh was widely known for her research on the health of cleanup workers at the site of the Sept. 11, 2001, attack...”

The keyword here is, of course, “known” rather than “research”. She was indeed widely known; way more widely known than it supposed to be, considering the sensitivity of the issue and the ridiculousness of her actual so-called “research”.

What was particularly surprising in this case, was that Mrs. Alison Geyh, a professor in chemistry, being one of those “initiated”, moreover, well-trained in handling such emergencies, perfectly understood the dangers involved. Therefore, unlike her gullible subjects of research, whom she treated like guinea pigs, she herself supposed not to inhale or ingest any radioactive particles. Mrs. Geyh was supposed to have been careful enough. To think otherwise would be to sin against common sense. Moreover, one of known 9/11 researchers, Jeffrey Hill, interviewed Geyh via telephone in May 2010 (an mp3 file with its recording is available for download here²¹⁸ and here²¹⁹) and as on May 19, 2010, she did not sound like any “terminally ill”, “waging a lengthy battle with cancer”, or “morally prepared to die soon”.

All these considerations, coupled with my usual cynicism, suggests to me that the announced “death” of Mrs. Alison Geyh had nothing to do with reality and it was not much different from the announced “deaths” of terrorist Osama bin Laden, nuclear terrorist Timothy McVeigh, bio-terrorist Bruce Ivins, or Pengaton missile’s passenger Barbara Olson. I presume that her “death” was merely a precautionary step made in order to make her unavailable for any future inquiry. Geyh, who apparently did not know how to keep her mouth properly shut, represented a major danger in this sense. She was very talkative and was too well known to various 9/11 researchers. Undoubtedly, she would have been one of the first to be summoned to such an inquiry in the future. Fortunately, her untimely “death” at the age of 52 made this no longer possible.

From now on, I hope you finally understand what really happened on Manhattan’s ground zero and why there were not too many cases of acute radiation sickness among the ground zero responders, but rather many cases of chronic radiation sickness...

Alleged “asbestos” and examples of chronic radiation sickness in the “Ground Zero” responders.

I was suggested to add this chapter at the very last moment by one of my friends who read the final edition of this book shortly before its publishing. In his opinion, many people might not believe that the “ground zero” responders indeed suffered from chronic radiation sickness.

Well... I am adding this Chapter, of course, according to the suggestion. However, I thought I have provided enough proof as to establish it for certain that the three buildings of the former WTC were indeed demolished by the three underground thermonuclear explosions of 150 kiloton each. If for someone it is still not enough and he is still in doubt as to the true meaning of “Ground Zero” when it was applied to the former WTC site, then it is probably too heavy a case for me to treat – it is akin to the situation where someone believes that two by two is five and he is not able to digest the illustrative example with the 4 green apples... You could do nothing in this case. So, if at this point there are still folks who are “not yet convinced”, then I could really do nothing more.

Anyway, here are examples from a few of myriads of publications that reveal apparent consequences of chronic radiations sickness suffered by those who were sent to clean “Ground Zero” (web-links or other references are in corresponding footnotes).

Let us begin with this relatively short excerpt from an article named: “Group Says 9/11 ground Zero Rescue Workers Dying From Unusually High Cancer Rates”²²⁰, by Vittorio Hernandez - AHN News Writer; May 8, 2008. I am quoting (words in bold font were highlighted by me):

“...At least 360 workers who volunteered to perform search and rescue operations at the World Trade Center directly following the September 11, 2001 attacks have since died; 80 of which suffered cancer-related deaths.”

The volunteers and rescuers worked at Ground Zero, nearby blocks, and at the Fresh Kills landfill on Staten Island. New York State health officials have identified the cause of death for 154 dead volunteers.

David Worby, who represents ill Ground Zero workers, said the 360 estimate is just the “tip of the iceberg.” Their group is made up of at least 10,000 sick volunteers, 600 of whom are now cancer stricken, allegedly caused by their exposure to toxic elements on the site....”

When reading the above information, try to understand that in general ground zero responders were relatively young and their time to die from old age had not come yet by the year 2008. Thus, when there is a stated proportion of 360 of them died, out of which “only” 80 died from “cancer-related deaths”, it should not dupe you into believing that the rest 240 died from the old age or from something unrelated to ground zero. Likewise, when you hear about 10,000 sick ground zero volunteers, 600 of whom diagnosed with cancer, it should not dupe you into thinking that the rest 9,400 sick ground zero volunteers have their illnesses unrelated to ground zero. To think so would be completely wrong, though the shills and the spin-doctors, the medical spin-doctors inclusive, would, of course, try their best to convince you into that type of thinking.

I will try to elucidate this point. To begin with, try to always remember that ground zero responders should not die at all. Neither in big numbers, nor in small numbers. The fact that they performed some dangerous or even hazardous work (in this presumption we abstract our minds from particularly ground zero as a place of three 150 kiloton thermonuclear explosions and presume some other, abstract dangerous/hazardous place) should not make the absolute majority of the workers sick and dying. Do you agree with this logic?

Try to imagine that tens of thousands of people work with asbestos. So what? Are they really dying at that rate? Are they really sick at that rate? Not at all. Try to imagine that hundreds of thousands of people work with benzene. So what? Are the majority of them sick with leukemia as the shills try so hard to instill on you? Of course, not. Hundreds of thousands of people work with benzene during all their lives, routinely inhaling hazardous benzene vapors for decades, yet only a minor percent of them develops certain sickness related to that “benzene exposure”. Hundreds of thousands of people continuously work in dusty areas, routinely inhaling various kinds of dust, including hazardous dust. So what? Do you think that the absolute majority of these people are sick and dying? You are badly mistaken if you think so.

There is simply NOT any such a dangerous place or work where the absolute majority of workers after working there for merely a few weeks would develop certain sicknesses that would lead to their quick death in only a few years to come. Such places of work could not exist and they do not exist – either in the United States, or in China, or in Russia, or in India, or in Nigeria, or in Papua New Guinea. Just imagine, that if any of such potentially dangerous place of work would ever appear in any country, responsible officials who created that “working place” would be surely arrested, charged with the premeditated mass murder, and, most probably – executed.

Do you think that there are no generally dangerous places of work and all places are safe, except only the Manhattan’s Ground Zero (I mean a “generally dangerous working place”, not a “place of mass slaughter”)? It is not so. There are many dangerous places: certain chemical plants, certain mines where they dig for Uranium, for example, or nuclear power plants and nuclear reactors on submarines and on other nuclear powered ships. One of the most dangerous and hazardous works is well-known coal mining, in case you forgot it. Even selling frozen fish and working with fish is considered a very dangerous job too. There are people who routinely inhale the most dangerous crystallized dust of silicate dioxide (SiO_2) at their work place. There are people who work with resins. There are people who work with benzene. There are people who work with acids (and routinely inhale acids’ vapors). There are people who work with hazardous paints and hazardous solvents. There are people who work with toxins and people who work with pathogens. There are people who work every day with dangerous pesticides and with dangerous insecticides, as well as people who work with dangerous fertilizers. There are people who work with chemical weapons and test either the actual chemical weapons or means of protection against them. There are asbestos mines, after all, and certain workshops that deal with asbestos products, and you can be sure that these dangerous works with asbestos are performed not by robots, but by live men. There are works that have something to do with talc, while talcum powder is by no means less dangerous than the asbestos powder, since the two share a common “destructive factor” – combined silicate dioxide. So what? Does it mean that people of those professions listed above should be all sick and be near to death? Of course, not. All of them work and live happily and are not bothered much by the fact that they perform hazardous work for years and sometimes even for decades.

Do you realize, at last, that the spin-doctors and their skills insult your intelligence when they inculcate a notion that it is supposedly “normal” for the ground zero responders to have such an unprecedented rate of sickness and mortality just because of alleged “toxic dust”, alleged “toxic fumes”, alleged “asbestos”, and alleged “benzene vapors”?

Coming back to the illnesses of the ground zero responders. As you can see from the variety of published materials, some of them quoted below, the majority of the ground zero victims suffered and died from so-called “respiratory diseases” – that are, of course, linked to the alleged “toxic dust” and to the alleged “toxic fumes”, and also to the alleged “asbestos dust”. The rate of what they call “cancer” is noticeably smaller in the ground zero responders in comparison with the rate of the so-called “respiratory diseases”.

Let us analyze these proportions based on our knowledge in regard to radiation sickness and in regard to the properties of radiation in general (I hope you read the previous chapters attentively enough and are now educated in those matters).

What would happen when people who work on ground zero without any respirators (or with crappy respirators that are, moreover, worn only part-time) when they enter into a cloud of vapor that is being ascended from under the debris? I think the answer is logical: they would, of course, inhale it. Would they feel bad about that immediately? The answer is: of course, not. Because it is just vapor. It does not give people any bad feeling upon inhaling. On the other hand, what would happen when people enter a cloud of apparently irritating “toxic fumes”? Or enter a cloud of “highly concentrated benzene vapors”? Or what would happen when people enter a cloud of certainly irritating dust (whether “toxic” or “non-toxic” it does not matter)? I think the answer is obvious: people would sneeze, cough, have tears running from their eyes, snivel running from their noses, they would immediately quit such a cloud, and would run quickly to the supervisor and complain to him that it is impossible to perform work in such conditions. Do you agree with this logic?

So, all the crap that is being published in regard to the ground zero illnesses creates an impression that the absolute majority of the ground zero responders who suffer from the “respiratory diseases” owe that to the supposedly “irritating/toxic properties of inhaled dust” or, possibly/partly to the “supposedly toxic properties of inhaled fumes”. I think, intuitively, the reader also got the same impression. However, as we saw it above many times, intuition and “intuitive impression” often do us a disservice. Try to understand, that people would NOT force themselves into continuously inhaling irritating dust or irritating/toxic fumes till they get really sick. They would simply run away from such an irritating occurrence at the very first moment.

The worst situation, when it came to inhaling enormous quantities of dust, had only occurred immediately after each of the Twin Towers’ collapsed. Masses of people were caught by this development without any means of protection whatsoever, the visibility was decreased to zero, people could not run away, and so they were forced to inhale the dust within at least 20 minutes or even more while waiting for the visibility to improve. Note, that in this case the dust was fine, microscopic, highly penetrative, and very irritating. And there were enormous quantities of that WTC dust flying around. So what? Everybody who was caught by that WTC dust cloud got sick as a matter of “must”? Everybody who inhaled enormous quantities of that highly irritating steel dust (as well as “dust of everything, asbestos inclusive”) for 20 or even 30 minutes without any respirator developed some obligatory “respiratory disease”? You are badly mistaken if you think so. Those, who got out of the WTC area, when the dust descended, cleared their throats, blew their noses, cleaned their eyes, washed their faces, and, thanking God for their being alive, departed from the area. Many of them might continue coughing for a few more days, but it did not lead to any aggravation. Their conditions certainly improved with the course of time. It shall be known that lungs are capable of cleaning themselves from any dust (and not only from dust, but even from resins) automatically and do so quite effectively.

In reality (I mean apart of what is suggested by the “intuitive impression”), people suffered from the respiratory diseases related to ground zero works because of an entirely different reason than the supposed “irritating” or “toxic” dust. During the first, the most dangerous hours, those who wandered on ground zero (then still spelled in low-case letters) were inhaling the “innocently looking” vapors; in the process, they inhaled big quantities of tiny beta-radioactive particles. These beta-radioactive particles, understandably, ended up in their lungs, and in a very short period of time subjected surrounding tissues to the intense radiation. (Do you remember what “beta-burns” are?) Understandably, large portions of their lungs were affected and this process was almost instantaneous (unlike the irradiation by the alpha-radioactive particles that would cause the adverse effects postponed by several years).

That is why those who were on ground zero during the first most dangerous hours, got the maximum dosage of the internal beta-radiation, and suffered from the “respiratory diseases” of the corresponding intensity. Those who were on ground zero during the first most dangerous days, were affected too, though to a lesser extent. Since radiation has the property to subside, the beta-radiation subsided along with the gamma-radiation. Nonetheless, those who inhaled radioactive vapors during the first days still ended up with corresponding “respiratory diseases”, though these were of lower intensity in comparison with the first group described above. I think it is understandable from the point of logic. As you could see, the actual clinical picture in regard to the “respiratory diseases” of the “first” and of the “second” groups of risk, that was provided in publications we have previously reviewed, perfectly corresponded to our considerations.

Above, we reviewed only short-time effects of radiation that quickly revealed itself in a form of “respiratory diseases” and only in the first and in the second groups of risk. Let us consider technicalities of the effects of radiation in the long-term. Alpha-radioactive particles are much more dangerous than the beta-ones, and people inhaled and ingested the alpha-particles along with the beta- when breathing on ground zero. Moreover, the alpha-particles retain their radioactivity for much longer periods of time compared to the beta-particles. Again, according to the general clinical picture drawn by all these publications, we see that the majority of ground zero victims suffer from particularly “respiratory diseases” in both – the short perspective, and in the long perspective, while the rest of the cancers and disorders were something like 20% or so from the total number of the illnesses. Why did it happen? I think it is very easy to answer.

People on ground zero were expressly prohibited by their supervisors to consume any unpackaged food and drinks (the supervisors, in turn, were advised by those knowledgeable folks who knew about radiation dangers very well). That prohibition, as you probably understand, was enforced in order to minimize the chances of the radioactive particles being ingested. In fact, there were corresponding precautionary measures in regard to inhaling the radioactive particles too – you don’t even have to doubt that the responders were expressly ordered to wear respirators all time. However, they did not realize that they were in the actual ground zero (as you remember, they were prohibited from using words “ground” and “zero” and were forced to call the place “The Pile” instead), so the responders did not take that order seriously enough and did not wear the respirators most of the time. Due to such an implementation of, let's call it, "radiation safety", the major part of the radioactive particles was inhaled by the gullible ground zero responders, and a minor part of the radioactive particles was ingested by them. Hence the seemingly "unexplainable" disproportion between the "respiratory diseases" related to ground zero and the rest of the disease related to ground zero.

You probably understand what the inhaled radioactive particles that ended up in people's lungs would do. They would primarily affect surrounding lungs' tissues: beta-particles in shorter time and more intensively, alpha-particles – in an "accumulative" manner, and in a longer term, i.e. "slowly, but surely". Outwardly, of course, such damage to the lungs would reveal itself in a form of various "respiratory diseases" that could be of a purely mechanical nature (due to the big parts of the lungs tissue being simply killed by radiation), or of "toxic" or even of "infectious" nature (first – due to degeneration of tissue cells thus breeding all kinds of tumors, second – due to weakened tissue cells thus making them an easier prey to various microbes). Of course, due to a variety of clinical presentations of these "respiratory diseases", shifty medical spin-doctors would always have a chance to concoct different stories, avoiding linking all these "various respiratory diseases" to the obvious common cause: chronic radiation sickness caused by inhaling of alpha-radioactive particles.

Of course, the alpha-particles that initially ended-up in the lungs would not remain there forever. As I have already mentioned above, our lungs have the in-built ability to clean themselves from the dust etc. From time to time those dust particles are supposed to be discovered and taken out. In most cases, unfortunately, it happens too late – when those radioactive particles have already done their job by irradiating the surrounding tissues. Moreover, the special mechanism that is responsible for the automatic cleaning of our lungs does not understand whether any particular piece of dust is "radioactive" or not. It simply perceives any extraneous piece of material as "a piece of dust" that has to be taken out of the lungs. The lungs-cleaning mechanism tries to take that piece of dust either by the way of pushing it into phlegm, or to pushing it into lymph. In the first case the radioactive particle could either be spit out (in good case) or swallowed and so – arrive to its secondary destination somewhere in the gastrointestinal tract. In the second case the radioactive particle ends up in some lymph vessel and so it will continue to affect the lymphatic system. Hence – "unexplainable" cancers of lymphatic glands, for example.

Despite the official prohibition to consume the unpackaged food and drinks while on ground zero, some of ground zero responders managed to swallow certain quantities of radioactive particles. I hope you realize that it was unavoidable when the matter was handled by the unsuspecting "commoners", and not by trained professionals dressed in full "lunar-looking" haz-mat suits and armed with the full understanding of radiation dangers. How could they "ingest" the radioactive particles, you might ask? It was very easy, indeed. Men breathe not only through their nostrils, but often through their mouths; some of them go for the second option only from time to time, while others do it more often – especially if they have a cold in their head. Therefore some radioactive particles, apart from going straight into lungs, will end up in the oral cavity. From there they have only two ways – either they will be spit out, or, most probably, they will be swallowed, since people from time to time swallow saliva.

What would happen with those radioactive particles that were swallowed rather than inhaled? I think you do not have to be a luminary of medical science in order to understand what would happen next. The ingested particle would do to the gastrointestinal tract a pretty similar job – comparable to that the inhaled particle would do to the lungs. It will irradiate the surrounding tissues with the corresponding radiation (alpha-particle – with alpha-radiation, and beta-particle – with beta-radiation). The beta-radiation will be more intense and its damaging effects to the body will be manifested in a very short period of time, while the alpha-radiation will do things as usual – "slowly, but surely".

Of course, the ingested radioactive particles will travel down the gastrointestinal tract. Some of them will eventually arrive to lower parts of the intestine, some other – to the urinary bladder. Some others will be absorbed through permeable walls of the intestine – right into the blood system. Of course, along their way, the alpha-radioactive particles would do their damage to the surrounding tissues. All of them would affect the larynx and the esophagus first; then – the stomach. After that, depending on their further way – they may affect the intestine, the urogenital system, the liver, the kidney, the blood, and, finally, through the blood – the brain as well as any other part of the body. These will manifest as either cancers of various kinds (brain tumors, blood cancers, throat cancer, cancer of esophagus, rectal cancer, testicles cancer, liver cancer, kidney cancer, etc. etc.), or as "unexplainable" and "rare" infections – since weakening of the affected tissues opens the way to infections, some of them, indeed, could be very rare or even "previously unheard of".

As you can sincerely expect, the variety of the manifestations of the abovementioned assorted cancers and of the secondary infections (or, speaking in the professional language, the variety of the "clinical presentations”) would again allow the spin-doctors of the medicine to feed you with various stories as to the alleged natures of those “various” and “unexplainable” diseases. However, you are no longer ignorant as to fall an easy victim to their stories, are you?

Let us continue listening to the spin-doctors’ stories.

Here is an interesting article named “The 8th Anniversary: “Cancer Findings in 9/11 Rescue Workers & Soldiers in Iraq””²²¹ by R. B. Stuart. Apparently, judging by its name, it was published in 2009.

Here are a few quotations from it (please, pay special attention to those marked in bold by me):

“...With the outpouring of volunteers, from New York and beyond, it was a month before the ARC called. They assigned a group of us for a week at a location blocks away from the WTC. We were immediately instructed that if anyone donated homemade sandwiches, brownies, or cookies - they must be destroyed because of contamination from the air - so only pre-packaged store bought foods were accepted.

Although Mayor Giuliani and former N. J. Governor Christie Todd Whitman, EPA Director under President Bush, assured New Yorkers repeatedly that “the air and water was safe and didn’t pose a health hazard.” But a contradiction was evident, that the exposure of food to the thickened, chalky white air - was toxic. Wary New Yorkers knew something was amiss - but it wouldn’t surface until years later. ...”

“...The then 34 year-old spent the next few years observing the mistreatment of his colleagues, peers and New York’s bravest, the FDNY and NYPD, who had worked for the city at Ground Zero in an eight month clean-up effort. He witnessed their abrupt illnesses, and since 2004 a steady climb of rescue workers being diagnosed with cancer...”

“...“Seventy percent have some sort of 9/11 illness,” Feal stated from his L. I. office. “A lot of these men and women are paying for their heroic actions eight years ago. Over 800 have since died from a variety of illnesses, and probably thousands have been diagnosed with cancer.” ...”

“...FDNY, John McNamara was diagnosed with stage IV colon cancer resulting in the removal of his entire colon. In August 2009 the 44 year-old lost his life to cancer, ...”

“...If you were a uniformed rescue worker, you were fortunate to have pension and health care. But those non-uniformed workers who became sick and lost their jobs, are losing their homes and going bankrupt reported Feal. “September 11th was unprecedented, none of the doctors have ever seen these illnesses,” he exclaimed. “The full effect won’t be felt for another 10 to 20 years.”

“The truth be told, Whitman without an environmental background - lied. She said that the air and water was safe because the White House told her to - but it wasn’t true. She bears no responsibility - but God will judge her,” he fumed.

“There has been no Federal legislation passed to ensure the welfare and healthcare of the men and women who risked their life without prejudice eight years ago,” Feal argued. “To quote Abraham Lincoln, ‘Any nation that does not honor its hero’s - will not long endure.’ ”

One of those forgotten hero’s, FDNY Corona, Queens Ladder 289, Kenny Specht spent weeks at the WTC in 2001. By that December he developed respiratory ailments, in 2005 severe gastrointestinal problems followed. “In 2006 I experienced a burning pain in my chest that radiated downward. Upon going to the ER, the doctor said my gallbladder was four times the size it should be, describing it “as rotten.” They removed it immediately,” he informed...

Then on a fateful day in May 2007, Specht of Ladder 133 was injured in a fire and taken to L. I. Jewish Hospital. Still in his gear, covered in black smoke and drenched in water, they took a CT scan of his neck. The doctors found two nodules in the thyroid area, one the size of a nickel, the other a dime. He was referred to an endocrinologist, who commented that Specht didn’t fit the criteria for thyroid cancer....and sent him home with the neck pain.

²²¹ http://www.huffingtonpost.com/r-b-stuart/the-8th-anniversary-cancer_b_278914.html

The next day while at work he was reading an article in the New York Post about thyroid cancer. His breath became shallow as he read the symptoms - they were his. Specht urged the specialist for immediate testing. After a needle aspiration the results were neither positive or negative. Baffled, the doctor sent him to another specialist. And after three opinions - the 37 year-old was diagnosed with a stage I thyroid cancer on one tumor and stage II on the other. "I bawled like a girl," he admitted. "My body felt like I was 57." With surgery they were both removed.

Specht, whose family isn't predisposed to cancer, nor has he ever picked up a cigarette, did some research online. He discovered that radiation exposure came up as one of the causes for his cancer. "I was a guinea pig," he confided. "I strongly believe that my cancer diagnosis is a direct result to my six weeks of work at the WTC."

"Now I'm 40 and in the last three years I've been a medical mess. And the 17th firefighter to be diagnosed with thyroid cancer post September 11th. With a work force of 11,000 we don't fit the criteria of the national average," he concluded...."

Here is another article named: "Kaye: Why are Ground Zero workers getting sick?"²²² by Randi Kaye, CNN. It was dated by September 12, 2006. I am quoting:

"...Could this be a coincidence? Is this for real? How will we ever know? Those are just some of the questions I asked myself when writing about workers and emergency responders from Ground Zero who now claim they're sick from the toxic cocktail to which they were exposed.

I got to know two guys in particular. They are former New York Police Department detectives Rich Volpe and John Wolcott, partners for 11 years in the narcotics division.

They worked together on the pile at the World Trade Center site for nine months. Now Wolcott has leukemia and Volpe has double kidney failure. Both blame their illnesses on the toxins at Ground Zero, like benzene and dioxin.

Doctors at Mount Sinai Hospital in New York City are operating the largest screening program of its kind for 9/11 responders. We spoke to Dr. Stephen Levin, who heads the program.

He acknowledges seeing a rise in respiratory ailments and concludes that is from the dust and the poisonous air at the site. But Dr. Levin will not go so far as to say there is a direct link between cancers that are developing in responders and their work at Ground Zero five years ago..."

"...So what are we to make of this? Could this be some horrible coincidence? Could these people have been predisposed to these cancers? One attorney I interviewed, David Worby, said he has 8,000 clients who got sick at Ground Zero. More than 60 of them are already dead, he said..."

Former Deputy Mayor Joe Lhota told CNN: "The city repeatedly instructed workers on the pile to use their respirators." The city says it supplied more than 200,000 respirators to responders...."

Here is another one: "9/11 CANCER COPS. Blood Diseases develop in young WTC responders"²²³ by Susan Edelman. It was published on May 31, 2007. Here are a few excerpts from it:

"...A group of 9/11 responders has contracted blood cancers at an unusually young age..."

..."The kind of thing that worries us is that we have a handful of cases of multiple myeloma in very young individuals . . . a condition that almost always presents late in life," said Dr. Robin Herbert, co-director of the program at Mount Sinai Hospital...."

...The mounting cancers, Herbert said, represent a "third wave" of sickness stemming from Ground Zero exposure. First came immediate breathing problems, then chronic lung diseases.

"We're worried about a third wave, which is the possibility of cancer down the road," she said.

The Post has published several reports on the growing number of 9/11 responders with cancer...

Here is another article, this time about our old acquaintance – NYPD detective John Walcott: "9/11 Cop in 40th Month of Cancer Fight"²²⁴ by Chris Francesceni, ABC News Law & Justice Unit. Dated by September 8, 2006. Here are a few excerpts:

"...For Detective John Walcott, the trouble began in the spring of 2003...

...He was diagnosed with acute myelogenous leukemia (AML) and was told that without a bone marrow transplant he would die...

...Walcott said he was approaching his 40th month in remission.

Like hundreds of police and firefighters who responded to the call for help on Sept. 11, Walcott believes his cancer is related to his work on "the Pile," as ground zero is known to the men and women who volunteered there.

He is part of a class-action lawsuit alleging that the city, state and federal government did not adequately protect ground zero workers. ..."

One more article, this time from CNN: "9/11 firefighter dies of cancer linked to toxic dust"²²⁵ by Dana Garrett, CNN Senior Producer, published March 3, 2011. I am quoting:

"New York (CNN) - Firefighter Randy Wiebicke who, like so many New York City firefighters, toiled in and around ground zero in the months after 9/11, died Wednesday following a nearly three-year battle with multiple myeloma, an aggressive and fatal blood cancer.

Wiebicke underwent an experimental stem cell transplant procedure last summer, when his cancer was in remission. But just two months after the transplant, he developed viral infections that, ultimately, his weakening body could no longer fight..."

"...Hundreds of firefighters and other ground zero workers have died of cancer in the years following the attack on the World Trade Center, according to New York state health officials. So far, however, doctors have been reluctant to link those cancers to 9/11, saying that most cancers take longer than nine years to develop..."

Note that some special doctors were appointed to treat the gullible "ground zero" responders and these "special doctors" must have signed non-disclosure contracts that would oblige them to lie for the rest of their lives. Thus, from the respectable medical doctors they were, at once transformed into contemptible spin-doctors who are now "reluctant" to link apparent chronic radiation sickness to the place called "ground zero"...

"Firefighters who recovered bodies at Ground Zero are developing cancer at a faster rate than those who worked before the atrocity, medical officials have revealed.

A seven-year study by the New York Fire Department has claimed that there are 'unusual rises' in the number of cancer cases among firefighters who worked in the aftermath of 9/11.

Some types of cancer among 9/11 firefighters are even 'bizarrely off the charts', according to sources who have seen the as-yet-undisclosed federal-funded study..."

"..Al Hagan, head of the fire-officers union, told the New York Post: 'I'm led to believe that the numbers for those cancers across all ranks in the Fire Department of people who worked at Ground Zero is up significantly, and we're all very concerned about it, as are our families.'

Steve Cassidy, president of the firefighters union, said Ground Zero's 'toxic stew' has proven lethal.

He said: 'It's a fact that New York City firefighters are dying of cancer in record numbers.

'We have buried 10 firefighters in just the last 15 weeks, seven with cancer. On Sept. 10, 2001, they were young, healthy firefighters.'

In 2007, doctors at Mt. Sinai Medical Center, which monitors World Trade Center rescue workers, noted blood cancers like multiple myeloma, which normally strikes in the 60s or 70s, were being found in relatively young officers..."

Another article: "9/11 Responders Left With Lung Problems, Asthma, Cancer"²²⁷, January 4, 2009 (ENS). This shameless article deals mainly with "asthma", mentioning the "rest" of typical "ground zero" diseases in a manner of "by the way". I call it shameless, because it contains information revealed by the "special doctors" from the "special hospital" that was specialized on cheating the gullible "ground zero" responders by explaining to them that their bone marrow damage allegedly comes from "benzene". Here are a couple of quotations:

"In addition [to the asthma], multiple myeloma, a form of cancer whose time of onset is usually after 50, has been detected in a small but significant number of World Trade Center responders under age 45, Mount Sinai researchers reported in August 2009.

They believe is too early to say whether a higher cancer risk exists among personnel who worked at Ground Zero.

"..While it is too soon, and the numbers are too small at this juncture, to state unequivocally that a risk of multiple myeloma is truly increased among WTC responders, the program felt it important to report these cases, particularly since this type of cancer is unusual in persons under 45," said lead author Jacqueline Moline, MD, director of the WTC MMTP Clinical Center at Mount Sinai.

"Physicians who may be caring for 9/11 responders should be alert for diseases occurring at unusual ages or other emerging conditions among WTC responders," said Dr. Moline.

There are no other published studies evaluating the potentially carcinogenic effects of exposure to a complex mixture of substances comparable to that sustained by WTC responders. But it is known that many of the potential exposures at the World Trade Center, including benzene, paint and solvent vapors, aromatic hydrocarbons, polychlorinated biphenyls, dioxin, pesticides, engine exhaust and metals, have been associated with increased rates of multiple myeloma in other studies..."

²²⁷ <http://www.ens-newswire.com/ens/jan2010/2010-01-04-092.asp>

Here is one more article: "9/11 Responders May Be At Raised Myeloma Risk"²²⁸ by Amanda Gardner, HealthDay Reporter, August 10, 2009. I am quoting:

*"...Preliminary findings suggest that responders to the attacks on the Twin Towers on 9/11 may be at higher risk for multiple myeloma, a cancer of the blood.

Notably, half of the cases identified among law enforcement officers were under the age of 45. Multiple myeloma is usually a disease of the elderly.

"The concerning thing," he added, "is it makes biological sense. There is certain data that multiple myeloma is associated with an increased exposure to certain chemicals. It has never been shown with inhaled chemicals but this amount of exposure probably did get into the blood." Smith was not involved in the study..."

You have to appreciate the level of "honesty" of the above claims that are abound in words such as "may be", "preliminary", "suggest", "certain", and "certain chemicals". Do you really believe that the medical doctors who push all that crap are as stupid in reality as they pretend to be? When it comes to my humble self, I do not believe. I am too cynical to fall for that. The doctors (and especially these doctors, who are directly involved with the gullible ground zero patients) are not so stupid. They know very well what is leukemia, what is myeloma, what is chronic radiation sickness, and what are their true causes. Do not even doubt that they know what the term "ground zero" used to mean in the pre-9/11 English language. The majority of medical doctors underwent a certain military training as well, because in case of war they would become military doctors. Thus, they know very well what a nuclear explosion is and what its effects are ("ground zero" designations inclusive). What I mean here is that you have to train yourself to be a little bit cynical too – like the author of these lines. In this case you will be able to distinguish the true gullibility of the truly innocent morons from the feigned "suggestions" of the paid shills and spin-doctors.

Here is another shameless article dealing with the so-called "third wave" of disease in the gullible "ground zero" responders (the term "third wave" shall be understood as the vague description of visible effects of chronic radiation sickness that elevated from its hidden stage to its visible stage in a few years after the exposure to radiation): "9/11 responders suffer from rare blood cancer"²²⁹, June 1st 2007 by Jonathon Morgan. I quote:

"In what's been described as a possible "third wave" of illnesses for those exposed to toxic dust post-9/11, the World Trade Center Medical Monitoring Program is expressing concern over the number of WTC site workers with lymphatic and blood cancers"²³⁰.

While New York City's health commissioner has said there is no evidence linking dust exposure to cancer, the Medical Monitoring Program reports a "handful of cases of multiple myeloma in very young individuals." They add, "multiple myeloma is a condition that ... almost always presents later in life."

However, because the disease may take years to develop in some individuals, proof of a correlation most likely won't emerge for decades. This is all in addition to the confirmed respiratory illnesses found in 70% of the nearly 40,000 ground zero workers."

Another article, talking about "epidemics" of cancers: "9/11's Delayed Legacy: Cancer for Many of the Rescue Workers. A spate of cancer-related illnesses among New York's rescue services who worked at Ground Zero sparks fear of an epidemic"²³¹, by Ed Pilkington in New York (try to read it as usual "between the lines", please):

“A spate of recent deaths of New York police and fire officers who took part in the emergency operation at Ground Zero after the 9/11 attacks have heightened fears that it could be the start of a delayed epidemic of cancer-related illness.”

*Five firefighters and police officers, all of whom were involved in the rescue and clear-up at the site of the collapsed Twin Towers, have died of cancer in the past three months, the oldest being 44. Three died last month within a four-day period.

Those three were Robert Grossman, a Harlem-based police officer who spent several weeks at the emergency site and died of a brain tumor aged 41; fellow police officer Cory Diaz, 37; and firefighter Richard Mannetta, 44.

In addition, John McNamara, a 44-year-old firefighter, died in September; and Renee Dunbar, a police officer in her late 30s, died in August.

The cluster of cancer deaths comes as Congress is under pressure to pass legislation that would provide federal help to emergency workers who have contracted illnesses since 9/11...”

“...No official tally is available for the number of those who have died as a result of the 9/11 clear-up. The New York state health department has recorded 817 deaths of emergency workers but it cannot confirm categorically how many of those were directly linked to the site...”

*“...The 911 Police Aid Foundation, a group run by and for sick police officers, says it is helping more than 100 officers who worked at Ground Zero and who now have cancer. Here is one of the most recent obituaries, titled: “Roy Chelsen, 51; saved the lives of New York City firefighters on Sept. 11”²³², by Al Baker, New York Times, January 15, 2011. Here is its last paragraph:

“...Mr. Chelsen, 51, first got sick about five years ago. He died after a five-year battle with multiple myeloma, a cancer that the New York Fire Department, his relatives, and others consider linked to his service on 9/11 and his work in the ensuing weeks searching the rubble for lost colleagues. When he retired in December 2006 (he joined the force in April 1985), he received a World Trade Center disability pension, officials said.”

Here is one more intriguing article (it is to be read “between the lines”, of course, as it is the norm in such cases): “New Study Links Blood Cancer To Ground Zero Toxins. Mt. Sinai: ‘Third Wave’ Of 9/11 Illnesses Appear”²³³ by CBS 2’s Magee Hickey. I am quoting:

*“...A new study has emerged that raises serious concerns about 9/11-related illnesses. For years, scientists reported that it was too soon to link cancers to the toxins that workers were exposed to at Ground Zero after 9/11. But new research is finding a link between Ground Zero toxins and certain types of cancers.

They’ve already suffered from the World Trade Center cough and from chronic lung diseases. Now doctors say 9/11 responders could face debilitating blood cancers from breathing the toxic air.

The scary reality hit retired firefighter Lee Ielpi hard when he was told he had a rare blood cancer. “I didn’t have any words, I was speechless,” said Ielpi, who spent nine painstaking months at Ground Zero

The brief article that is quoted below was considered "seditious" and I remember that it was even taken down by the U.S. authorities at one moment. "Rare blood cancer plaguing 9/11 survivors"²³⁴

"...As if being involved in the 9/11 attack on the World Trade Centers wasn't horrific enough, it's now appearing as if people present at the WTC on that world-changing day have higher than normal rates of lymphatic and blood cancers, as reported on our sister site, That's Fit. This comes as a particularly harsh blow, since it's also been shown that 70% of this group also suffers from respiratory illnesses. But the true impact of this correlation won't be evident for years to come, when the disease may become present in many not currently affected..."

Yet another intriguing Associated Press' article, published on MSNBC web site: "Surprising cancers seen in young 9/11 officers"²³⁵ dated by the year 2010. A brief quotation:

"...Researchers say a small number of young law enforcement officers who participated in the World Trade Center rescue and cleanup operation have developed an immune system cancer ..."

Another "nice" article that has to be read "between the lines". Please, pay particularly good attention to this one: "A Decade of Concern: Assessing the Health Impacts of 9/11"²³⁶ by Barbara Feder Ostrov, September 06, 2011. I am quoting:

"...A decade later, some are still trying – and failing – to get the help they need, although the politically contentious James Zadroga 9/11 Health and Compensation Act, passed in 2010, aims to provide that medical care for first responders. Still, the $4.2 billion Zadroga legislation will not cover cancer treatment for first responders, although that position may be rethought as research finds more evidence of a link between firefighters' exposure to Ground Zero and cancer..."

I cannot resist inserting a comment right here. Please, try to analyze the last sentence, made in bold, and think – how ignorant modern people must be if they still need so-called “research” to “find more evidence” in regard to a “link” between “exposure to ground zero” and “cancer”... The “research” could be as simple as this: take any big, genuine (not fake-backdated, I mean) pre-9/11 English dictionary, open it on an entry “ground zero” (or on an entry “ground-” and sub-entry “-zero”) and check what “ground zero” used to mean in the pre-9/11 English language. And you will no longer need to make any “research” in order to find the “link” between the exposure to ground zero and cancer...

The next passage from the above article you must surely read, although “between the lines” as usual, but with the full understanding of technicalities, i.e. remembering the dynamics of subsidence of radiation levels in general, the approximate dosage of radiation required to develop acute radiation sickness, and the fact that acute radiation sickness could be sub-divided into its light, moderate, heavy, and very heavy forms; keep in mind also that swallowing/inhaling radioactive particles during first hours after the explosion, and doing so during first weeks after the explosion is not the same – the severity of chronic radiation sickness in these two cases would surely differ:

“...An overview in the Lancet's new special issue on 9/11 health spelled out the profound implications of a decade of post-disaster health research and treatment:

Studies have shown persistent health effects in WTC rescue and recovery workers who first attended the WTC site, and in those with high exposure to the environment at the site, as well as those with more moderate exposure. We now know that, in one of the largest WTC rescue and recovery cohorts, health effects have persisted for almost a decade. These latest findings leave no doubt about the necessity of continuing health monitoring, treatment, and research for WTC rescue and recovery workers.

The persistent physical and mental health effects in some WTC rescue and recovery workers have resulted in an unprecedented societal burden in caring for those who gave so much of themselves in a time of unspeakable tragedy.

Ironically, the BBC, not American media, recently took a long look at the more than 18,000 documented cases of illness from toxic dust at Ground Zero. But American news outlets are finding other ways to cover 9/11 health issues in depth...

I hope you are educated enough as to become completely “propaganda-resistant”, so you won’t be duped by imbecile clichés such as “toxic dust at ground zero” and by other similarly idiotic expressions.

I believe that we have to seriously address the matter of “asbestos”, since the notion of the “asbestos danger” is widespread, along with the notion about the alleged “asbestos in the WTC”. As you probably realize, the wide spread of both notions is directly related to the propaganda efforts within the frames of the massive 9/11 cover-up. To be more precise, the notions of “asbestos dangers” in general and that of the alleged “asbestos in the WTC” in particular, are being boosted by the spin-doctors and their skills in order to sidetrack chronic radiation sickness in the gullible ground zero responders and so – to hide the fact of the radioactive contamination on ground zero.

Since we are the Barbarians, we should safely presume that there was NO ASBESTOS in the WTC at all and the entire “asbestos story” was invented. Even if we are wrong in this presumption and there was some asbestos there in reality, the alleged “importance” of this story was exaggerated in the ensuing 9/11 cover-up to such an extent, that the mere fact of its exaggeration gives us a moral right to discard the entire argument about asbestos. It means that when the skills and the spin-doctors attach too much importance to the question of the alleged “asbestos”, we should neutralize the liars by downplaying the alleged “importance” of the alleged “asbestos” – exactly as we do in the case of exaggeration of the alleged “importance” of the alleged “high concentrations of benzene vapors in the open space blown through by all winds”. I do not think we will make a big mistake if we implement such an approach. Of course, in the WTC some little quantities of asbestos might have been present, as it could have been in any other building constructed in the earlier ‘70s and in the ‘60s. But this shall not dupe you into believing that those negligible quantities of asbestos (if there was any at all) could have contributed anything to hazardous properties of the WTC dust.

First of all, let us understand the obvious: asbestos was widely used in civil infrastructure during the entire 20th century, and well beyond it – it is still being widely used today, in 2013. Of course, in the late ‘70s and especially in the late ‘80s there were attempts to limit the asbestos’ usage in the civil infrastructure; these attempts were primarily originated from the so-called “civilized” countries – such as the United States, for example. However, it shall be understood, that the attempts to limit the asbestos’ usage in those so-called “civilized” countries were not related to the supposedly “better medical science” in those countries that supposedly managed “to spot the mortal danger of asbestos”.

They were related rather to the more ridiculous implementation of civil law that allows anyone to sue anyone for anything in those “civilized” countries. I hope you understand that only in the United States and in a handful of other similar countries is it possible, for example, to sue a department store into bankruptcy because someone pretended to slip his foot and fell on its wet floor. Fortunately, such a “legal” trick would not work in most countries of our globe. The point is that when it was discovered that prolonged inhaling of asbestos dust (the term “prolonged” in this case meant something like 20-30 years) could cause a lung disease, some workers began to sue their employers who supposedly subjected them to “asbestos dangers”. Later, some shifty folks, through exploiting of the abovementioned peculiarities of the “civilized” implementation of civil law, began to sue not only the employers who might subject them to the alleged “asbestos dangers” in some workshop, but even developers who might use asbestos in buildings’ construction. Because of the endless stream of such lawsuits (in the most cases ungrounded, as you may sincerely expect), legislators were obliged to enforce regulations limiting or even totally prohibiting asbestos usage in the so-called “civilized” countries. Hence all that blather about the alleged “asbestos dangers” that we got used to hearing. However, it was not a final verdict to poor asbestos yet. As a result of the 9/11 affair, the alleged “dangers” of asbestos were exaggerated once again; this time to such an extent that they began to be inconsistent with common sense.

Try to use your common sense and you will understand that asbestos was indeed widely used during almost the entire 20th century. If it were dangerous to any extent, as alleged, by the time of the WWII (or even by the time of the WWI), the population of the developed part of the world would suffer from cancers and other lung diseases on the same rate as do the poor ground zero responders. This supposes to mean that the majority of us would not be even born – because our parents and our great parents would die at such a rate that could only correspond to that of untreated cholera.

It shall be known also that the factual dangers of inhaling of asbestos dust (again, only regarding the prolonged exposure to it) were known to medical science since the ‘20s. By the ‘40s, the potentially dangerous effects of asbestos were duly studied, corresponding safety recommendations were figured out and ensuing safety standards were widely implemented by the late ‘40s - earlier ‘50s. Yet, even in the mid-‘70s, even in the most “civilized” country such as the United States of America, asbestos was still used in civil infrastructure and nobody seemed to bother prohibiting its usage. Do you think that asbestos has mutated since the ‘70s and through the end of the ‘90s it became more dangerous to the health than it used to be 15 years ago? Of course, not. It was not asbestos that mutated since then – it was the United States’ legal system. Please, use logic and common sense in order to understand the obvious.

Let us make a brief overview of the alleged “asbestos dangers” reading a few relevant articles. As it has become our tradition, let us start with the Wikipedia article on asbestos²³⁷. I am quoting:

“...Asbestos use in England dates back to the 1700s, but did not become widespread until the Industrial Revolution during the late 1800s.

The Industrial Revolution represented a huge boom for the asbestos industry. Factories were opening everywhere and new uses for the miracle mineral were being devised on a regular basis. Commercial asbestos mines sprung up in the late 1800s and entrepreneurs recognised that asbestos could perhaps make them rich. The U.S. asbestos industry began in 1858 when fibrous anthophyllite was mined for use as asbestos insulation by the Johns Company, a predecessor to the current Johns Manville at a quarry at Ward's Hill on Staten Island, New York. Asbestos became more widespread during the industrial revolution; in 1866 it was used as insulation in the U.S. and Canada. Development of the first commercial asbestos mine began in 1874 in the Appalachian foothills of Quebec. By the mid 20th century uses included fire retardant coatings, concrete, bricks, pipes and fireplace cement, heat, fire, and acid resistant gaskets, pipe insulation, ceiling insulation, fireproof drywall, flooring, roofing, lawn furniture, and drywall joint compound.

In Japan, particularly after World War II, asbestos was used in the manufacture of ammonium sulfate for purposes of rice production, sprayed upon the ceilings, iron skeletons, and walls of railroad cars and buildings (during the 1960s), and used for energy efficiency reasons as well. Production of asbestos in Japan peaked in 1974 and went through ups and downs until about 1990, when production began to drop severely...."

Just read the above with your eyes OPEN. Do you realize, at last, that the alleged "dangers" of asbestos were unreasonably exaggerated; otherwise the three-four previous generations of bipeds would have been killed or, at least, severally crippled by various diseases?

Wikipedia article on asbestos continues:

"...Discovery of toxicity...

...The first documented death related to asbestos was in 1906. In the early 1900s researchers began to notice a large number of early deaths and lung problems in asbestos mining towns. The first diagnosis of asbestosis was made in the UK in 1924. By the 1930s, the UK regulated ventilation and made asbestosis an excusable work-related disease, followed by the U.S about ten years later. The term mesothelioma was first used in medical literature in 1931; its association with asbestos was first noted sometime in the 1940s.

Approximately 100,000 people in the United States have died, or will die, from asbestos exposure related to ship building. In the Hampton Roads area, a shipbuilding center, mesothelioma occurrence is seven times the national rate. Thousands of tons of asbestos were used in World War II ships to wrap the pipes, line the boilers, and cover engine and turbine parts. There were approximately 4.3 million shipyard workers in the United States during WWII; for every thousand workers about fourteen died of mesothelioma and an unknown number died from asbestosis..."

I can't resist interrupting the Wikipedia narration and inserting a comment here. Of course, the "seven times the national rate" is quite a significant increase, which clearly points to the typical "occupational hazard"; though, I do not see anything really extraordinary here. There are other typical occupational hazards, in regard to other hazardous materials and corresponding diseases; and, perhaps, rates of other occupational diseases' occurrence is even more than "seven times the national rate". So what? Does it really mean that asbestos is "extraordinarily dangerous" while other hazardous materials are just "normally dangerous"? Of course, not. Asbestos is just very "normally hazardous" material and nothing more than that. Note also in the above quotation the phrase about "fourteen for every thousand". Do you think that it is really much? It is merely 1.4%. Merely 1.4% among the professional people who were subjected to prolonged inhaling of concentrated asbestos dust (just to remind you: "prolonged" stands for "during a couple of decades"). How does it correspond to the overwhelming percentage of terminally ill ground zero responders who were supposedly inhaling of distributed asbestos during a few weeks only?

The Wikipedia article continues (try again to read it with your eyes OPEN):

"...The United States government and asbestos industry have been criticized for not acting quickly enough to inform the public of dangers, and to reduce public exposure. In the late 1970s court documents proved that asbestos industry officials knew of asbestos dangers since the 1930s and had concealed them from the public.

In Australia, asbestos was widely used in construction and other industries between 1945 and 1980. From the 1970s there was increasing concern about the dangers of asbestos, and its use was phased out. Mining ceased in 1983. The use of asbestos was phased out in 1989 and banned entirely in December 2003. The dangers of asbestos are now well known in Australia and there is help and support for sufferers from asbestosis or mesothelioma..."

I hope you got the point. The "dangers of asbestos" become well known only now. I would add that they become particularly "well known" not even because of the ridiculous legal suits of the late '70s, but because of the 9/11 affair, where the alleged "asbestos' dangers" were shamelessly used by the spin-doctors of medicine as a pretext to justify the unparalleled rate of cancers in their gullible ground zero patients.

Now, please, try to imagine, that there was indeed NO ASBESTOS on Ground Zero – neither in high concentrations, nor even in lower concentrations. The point is that even if there were some little asbestos used as coating in some parts of the WTC construction, the total quantity of that asbestos was so little, that it was negligible compare to the number of other WTC materials. This means that in no case any "high concentration" or even any "concentration whatsoever" of asbestos could have occurred either on Ground Zero or around it. I hope you agree that even if there were some little asbestos used in the Twin Towers' piping and thermo-insulation as alleged, this asbestos after the "dustification" of the Towers could only exist as a distributed component of that fine WTC dust. Look at the available videos showing the Twin Towers' collapse. You will see that the major part of that dust was blown far beyond the actual Ground Zero area and ended up elsewhere around Lower Manhattan. It is pretty self-evident, that on the actual Ground Zero there was only the minimal part of the entire WTC dust. Moreover, the bigger part of that minimal part of the WTC dust particularly on Ground Zero was immediately melted down because of high temperatures there and so it ceased to be "dust" when it comes to its aggregative state. There was also rainfall and millions of gallons of water poured, saturating the area. Therefore, the ground zero responders could encounter actually less of the WTC dust compared to people in farther distances from the WTC site.

Now let us find some relevant materials that might reveal to us how "big" were the actual concentrations of asbestos in the WTC dust. There is an interesting official document titled "Analysis of Aerosols from the World Trade Center Collapse Site, New York, October 2 to October 30, 2001". You can download it in a PDF format from here: <http://www.tandfonline.com/doi/pdf/10.1080/02786820490250836>
A brief abstract dealing particularly with asbestos exists on this web page: <http://www.tandfonline.com/doi/abs/10.1080/02786820490250836>

I quote:

"...The collapse of the World Trade Center (WTC) buildings #2 (South Tower), #1 (North Tower), and #7 created an enormous collapse pile which emitted intense plumes of acrid smoke and dust until roughly mid-December, when the last spontaneous surface fire occurred. We collected particles by size (8 modes, ≈ 12 to 0.09 micrometers diameter) and time (typical resolution of 1 to 3 h) from October 2 until late December at the EML 201 Varick Street site roughly 1.8 km NNE of the collapse site and 50 m above ground level. Here we show some of the 70,000 mass and elemental data from the time period October 2 through October 30. Identification of a WTC collapse pile source for aerosols seen at the receptor site were based upon the simultaneous presence of finely powdered concrete, gypsum, and glass with intense very fine combustion mode mass episodes concurrent with winds from the southwest quadrant. The results, derived from seven independent beam-based analytical techniques, showed that while PM10 and PM2.5 24 h values rarely, if ever, violated federal air quality standards, WTC-derived plumes swept over lower Manhattan Island, resulting in intense aerosol impacts of duration a few hours at any one site. The WTC plume resembled in many ways those seen from municipal waste incinerators and high temperatures processes in coal-fired power plants. The size fractions above 1 micrometer contained finely powdered concrete, gypsum, and glass, with sootlike coatings and anthropogenic metals, but little asbestos. Composition in the very fine size range ($0.26 > D_p > 0.09 \mu\text{m}$) was dominated by sulfuric acid and organic matter, including polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons (PAHs) and their derivatives, and glasslike silicon-containing aerosols. Many metals were seen in this mode, most, but not all, at low concentrations. The concentrations of very fine silicon, sulfur, and many metals, as well as coarse anthropogenic metals, decreased markedly during October, probably in association with the cooling of the collapse piles. Values of very fine elements seen in May, 2002 at the WTC site were only a few percent of October values...."

From the above passage it could be easily concluded that the actual report was concocted with a view to diminish the overwhelming presence of pulverized steel (vaguely referred to as "...as well as coarse anthropogenic metals" and "...most, but not all, at low concentrations") and to exaggerate the alleged presence of "finely powdered concrete". It is obvious, because in those days, the U.S. officials were primarily concerned with hiding the mechanical properties of the WTC – they did not want to remind people that the Twin Towers were made of "anthropogenic metals" (a/k/a "steel") and not of concrete. Otherwise, it would be very hard for them to explain the true causes of their collapse, as well as to explain unprecedented armor-piercing capabilities of the aluminum planes. In October 2001, it had not been figured out yet that alleged "asbestos concentrations" could provide so much help to the spin-doctors when chronic radiation sickness in ground zero responders would pass the latent period and its symptoms would become apparent. It would be much later when the spin-doctors would put to use the alleged "high asbestos concentrations" on Ground Zero. That is why the otherwise fraudulent "study of the WTC dust" quoted above did not mention the "little asbestos" as anything significant at all.

Let us, for the sake of clear conscience, review a few articles dealing with the purely medical aspect of the alleged asbestos dangers. Let us begin with the Wikipedia article on “asbestosis”²³⁸. I quote:

“...Asbestosis is a chronic inflammatory and fibrotic medical condition affecting the parenchymal tissue of the lungs caused by the inhalation and retention of asbestos fibers. It usually occurs after high intensity and/or long-term exposure to asbestos (particularly in those individuals working on the production or end-use of products containing asbestos) and is therefore regarded as an occupational lung disease. People with extensive occupational exposure to the mining, manufacturing, handling, or removal of asbestos are at risk of developing asbestosis...”

Here are a couple of quotations from an article on asbestosis published on the UK governmental health service web site²³⁹:

“...Asbestosis is a chronic (long-term) lung condition caused by prolonged exposure to asbestos...”

“...Breathing in asbestos dust can scar the lungs which can lead to:

- shortness of breath
- cough

These symptoms usually begin many years after the initial exposure to asbestos. In most cases, the symptoms do not become apparent until 15 to 30 years after exposure...”

“...People with asbestosis have a higher risk of developing other serious conditions, such as those described below.

- Lung cancer – one of the most common and serious types of cancer
- Mesothelioma – a type of cancer that affects the membrane that covers the lungs, heart and gut...”

Here is another web article on asbestosis – from A.D.A.M. Medical Encyclopedia²⁴⁰. It is also published on a governmental health web site named “U.S. National Library of Medicine - The World's Largest Medical Library”²⁴¹. I quote:

“...Asbestosis is a lung disease that occurs from breathing in asbestos fibers.

Breathing in asbestos fibers can cause scar tissue (fibrosis) to form inside the lung. Scarred lung tissue does not expand and contract normally.

How severe the disease is depends on how long the person was exposed to asbestos and the amount he or she breathed in. Often, people do not notice symptoms for 20 years or more after the asbestos exposure.

Asbestos fibers were commonly used in construction before 1975. Asbestos exposure occurred in asbestos mining and milling, construction, fireproofing, and other industries. Families of asbestos workers can also be exposed from particles brought home on the worker's clothing.

Other asbestos-related diseases include:

- Pleural plaques (calcification)
- Malignant mesothelioma -- can develop 20-40 years after exposure
- Pleural effusion -- a collection that develops around the lung a few years after asbestos exposure

Workers today are less likely to get asbestos-related diseases because of government regulations...”

I think, this should be enough. I hope you realize, at last, that there wasn't any significant asbestos on the WTC site at all – to enable the spin-doctors to claim any adverse health effects on account of asbestos. And even if the Twin Towers and the WTC-7 were made entirely out of asbestos, instead of structural steel, even then, the ground zero responders would not develop any mesothelioma until at least 20 years after.

Note also that even though the prolonged exposures to asbestos dust theoretically could cause a certain type of lung cancer (only “mesothelioma” and not any other type) after some 20-30 years, no asbestos could cause the rest of the cancers, so strangely endemic to ground zero...

I think it would do no harm if we make yet another lyrical digression and look at a couple of seditious photos that pertain to the alleged “asbestos” dangers at “ground zero”. As you probably remember from the previous chapters, the main pretext of thorough cleaning of the rubber tires of the trucks leaving “ground zero” loaded with debris was the alleged “asbestos danger”. I.e. the shifty folks who directed the ground zero clean-up operation wanted to dupe the gullible responders by creating an impression that the main danger on “ground zero” was represented by “asbestos” and not by the very words “ground zero”. It is notable that not only the tires of the trucks were thoroughly washed, but shoes of the gullible ground zero responders as well. Look at this unprecedented photo that I copied from one of Jeff Prager’s PDF magazines promoted by Jim Fetzer²⁴². Please, make sure to read also my footnote²⁴³:

²⁴³ Please, note, that the author of these lines does not agree with Jeff Prager and with his conclusions in regard to the WTC demolition. Moreover, I have all reasonable grounds to believe that Prager’s conclusions in regard to alleged “mini-nukes” allegedly used in the WTC destruction are by no means his “sincere delusion”, but rather his shilling activity which he is being paid for. The point is that Prager started his activities because he was acquainted with my works and was impressed by them. His initial publications were merely development of my texts with improved grammar and therefore they represented the major danger for the so-called “good guys”. Later, however, for “not so clear reason”, Prager switched to developing the ridiculous mini-nukes theory. Do not miss the point: by no means could he “sincerely believe” that the Twin Towers might have been demolished by “mini-nukes” after he learned that they were demolished by the 150 kiloton thermonuclear charges along with my points debunking the “mini-nukes conspiracy theory”. Interestingly, new Prager’s theories on “mini-nukes” are being promoted by no one else but by James H. Fetzer – a co-chair of Prof. Steven E. Jones in the main-stream 9/11 “truthing” community. I have to mention also that Prager’s PDF magazines are made in a highly professional manner and they contain lots of seemingly interesting, yet destructively misleading information, thus representing a “high-end quality” cheating. This is to make clear my personal attitude towards Prager’s shilling activities. Nonetheless, Prager was supplied by “someone” with unprecedented high-quality photos that could be found nowhere else except in his PDF magazines. Therefore, I find Prager’s published works as useful for acquiring several seditious photos.

The photo above was downscaled by me, because in the original PDF file I copied it from, it was too a high quality to be used here. We could only guess where Jeff Prager could get such a high-quality photo from, considering that there was the strictest prohibition from bringing any unauthorized photo equipment, especially a professional one, to Ground Zero, and considering this photo does not exist on any free access on the Internet.

Anyway, on this photo we can see the most shameless episode depicting “the gullible” versus “the initiated”. The “initiated” supposedly remove “asbestos” from the shoes of the “gullible”, while the white tent on the background bears a striking resemblance to those used in the Soviet Army for making cloakrooms and shower-baths on the borders of radioactively contaminated zones.

However, our main point here is not the white tents, but the yellow suits. Do you have any clue regarding the true origins of those strange yellow outfits “the initiated” folks dressed in on this photo? Do you think they were a certain “anti-asbestos” suits? Well. You are badly mistaken if you think so. Look at the below screenshot:

Sponsored by DoD's Defense Threat Reduction Agency (DTRA) and hosted at F.E. Warren Air Force Base, this CAPEX was considered the most comprehensive nuclear response exercise ever held on U.S. soil. Don Daigler of NNSA's Office of Emergency Response briefed the delegates about the DOE/NNSA's stewardship role for the scientific resources that developed and maintain U.S. nuclear Exercise, or CAPEX, at F.E. Warren AFB in Cheyenne, Wyo.

CAPEX delegates watched at the simulated accident site as NNSA's Accident Response Group experts first X-rayed the transporter to learn the exact location of the weapon. Then a liquid abrasive cutter opened access to the inside. Finally, an explosive ordinance disposal team packaged the warhead for transport by NNSA. Standoff monitoring, using a portable integrated video system, facilitated the effort. Contaminants were contained with a contamination control station. A day earlier, participants viewed several static displays showcasing responder assets housed indoors, where participants could get up close and ask questions of technical personnel. NNSA's assets included the Aerial Measuring System; the National Atmospheric Release Advisory Center; the Accident Response Group; the Federal Radiological Monitoring Assessment Center; and the Radiological Emergency Assistance Center/ Training Site.

Above – a screenshot from the scrolled-down to “page 5” of the actual PDF document NNSA’s web page http://nnsa.energy.gov/sites/default/files/nnsa/newsletters/10/nl_2006Sep_NNSA_News.pdf

From the above screenshot from the web page of the U.S. “National Nuclear Security Administration” (a/k/a “NNSA”) you can see a description of a certain show-off nuclear emergency exercise. Two show folks on the corresponding photo wear exactly the same yellow outfits, even with the same duct tape leg-bandages, albeit without plastic construction helmets (that deem to be peculiar only to the Ground Zero in Capital Letters, not to the rest of ground zeros and places of nuclear accidents). By the way, the actual NNSA document file of which was named “nl_2006Sep_NNSA_News.pdf” starts with a rather intriguing statement on its front page that reads as follows:

“Remembering 9/11 NNSA: Working To Prevent Nuclear Terrorism”

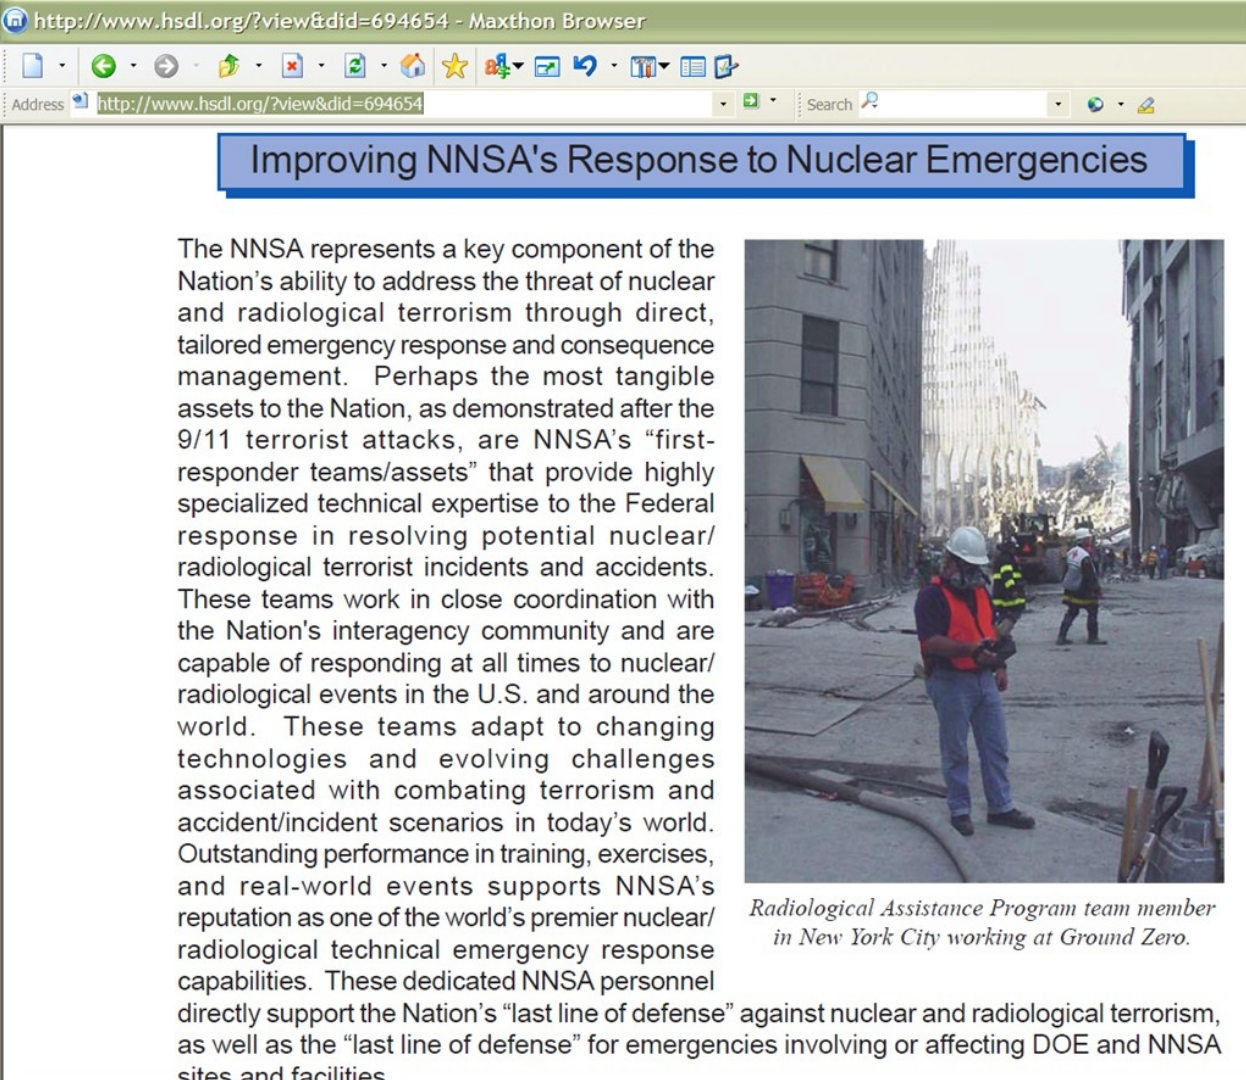

Still do not believe that the NNSA was indeed operating on Manhattan’s Ground Zero?

Well. You will be surprised to learn that the “initiated” National Nuclear Security Administration’s folks were not only involved in washing off the alleged “asbestos” from the shoes of the gullible ground zero responders and not only for washing the tires of the lorries carrying the WTC debris from Ground Zero to the Fresh Kills landfill. They were involved in something else, in addition.

One of my friends drew my attention to one unprecedented document published by the NNSA on its web site. The document was named “DOE-NA 0010. The National Nuclear Administration Strategic Plan” dated by November 2004. Its text was packed into a PDF file named “nps60-121611-08.pdf”. This highly seditious (and yet absolutely shameless) document no longer exists on any official web site; however, it is still possible to find it on some open resource web site here: <http://www.hsdl.org/?view&did=694654>

In addition, I decided to upload it (along with the previous NNSA PDF file) onto my own web hosting here: http://www.911-truth.net/nps60-121611-08_DOE-NA_0010_The_National_Nuclear_Administration_Strategic_Plan.pdf and http://www.911-truth.net/nl_2006Sep_NNSA_News_National_Nuclear_Security_Administration_Remembering_911_NNSA-Working_To_Prevent_Nuclear_Terrorism.pdf and I encourage everyone to download and to re-distribute this seditious document as widely as possible.

The actual document is full of such barefaced imperialist agenda, moreover presented in such a frank manner, that it would have caused even the most impudent U.S. imperialist blushing for shame if such a thing were made publicly available during the pre-9/11 era. Though, today, such a brazen presentation apparently no longer shocks anyone either inside the United States, or even outside of it. However, in our particular case we are less interested in the lack of shame in those folks who stood behind the undisguised schedule of American imperialism, but more in the seditious contents of the above document, particularly in those on its page No. 26. Here is a screenshot of the most seditious part of it (I had to shrink a few toolbars of my web browser in order to fit the entire content into the single screenshot, therefore the browser’s window might look a bit different than on the previous picture; but it does not point to any supposed “falsification” – just to tell you this in advance):

Improving NNSA's Response to Nuclear Emergencies

The NNSA represents a key component of the Nation's ability to address the threat of nuclear and radiological terrorism through direct, tailored emergency response and consequence management. Perhaps the most tangible assets to the Nation, as demonstrated after the 9/11 terrorist attacks, are NNSA's “first-responder teams/assets” that provide highly specialized technical expertise to the Federal response in resolving potential nuclear/radiological terrorist incidents and accidents. These teams work in close coordination with the Nation's interagency community and are capable of responding at all times to nuclear/radiological events in the U.S. and around the world. These teams adapt to changing technologies and evolving challenges associated with combating terrorism and accident/incident scenarios in today's world. Outstanding performance in training, exercises, and real-world events supports NNSA's reputation as one of the world's premier nuclear/radiological technical emergency response capabilities. These dedicated NNSA personnel directly support the Nation's “last line of defense” against nuclear and radiological terrorism, as well as the “last line of defense” for emergencies involving or affecting DOE and NNSA sites and facilities.

Radiological Assistance Program team member in New York City working at Ground Zero.

I hope the reader is discerning enough to understand that those NNSA’s “radiological team members”, addressing “nuclear and radiological terrorism threats” while working at Ground Zero (irrespective of whether the latter was spelt with Capital Letters or with the low-cased ones), had nothing to do with any alleged asbestos? And neither their “highly specialized technical expertise” mentioned in the above text of the screenshot, especially in relation to the “NNSA Response to nuclear emergencies”, had anything to do with the alleged “asbestos” either. So, I hope that now, at last, even a consummate moron has gotten the point: there was NO ASBESTOS at ground zero. There was radioactive contamination at ground zero – exactly matching the latter’s dictionary definition.

In addition, the seditious photo of the “member of the Radiological Assistance Program team” working at New York City’s Ground Zero with an obvious dosimeter in hands (and in a professional respirator, distinctly different from those [sometimes] worn by the gullible ground zero responders) could give us another service. It could serve as a response to the continuous questions of the shills that roughly sound like this: “but why that Russian guy [i.e. the humble author of these lines] could not show us anyone who measured radioactivity on the spot of the former WTC?” As you see, now I could, at last, show to the shills “someone” (from the very U.S. National Nuclear Security Administration’s radiological team) who indeed measured radioactivity there.

Let us come back to the main point of this chapter and review a few more of the articles dealing with the ground zero responders’ health issues. Though now, you already know that on Ground Zero there wasn’t any alleged asbestos (that could, in theory, explain mesothelioma) and neither any alleged “high concentration of benzene” (that could, in theory, explain leukemia, that otherwise could only be caused by ionizing radiation), so it would be much easier for you to appreciate the cheating.

Here is another article: “Cancer Hits 283 Rescuers of 9-11”²⁴⁴ by Susan Edelman, Editorial Staff; Courtesy of New York Post. This is one of the earliest articles on that issue. It was published on June 11, 2006.

You have to read “between the lines”, of course, especially when you encounter words such as “benzene”, “asbestos”, “toxic dust”, and similar – designed to cover up the main cause of blood cancers and that of the rest of cancers known to pertain to chronic radiation sickness. The same could be said in regard to expressions such as “doctors say” or “doctors believe”. In the latter case, I think, it would be fair to replace the word “doctor” with the word “spin-doctor”, and you will immediately get the main point – especially when you encounter asinine phrases, which imply that “burning jet fuel” [that is known to be kerosene] is allegedly “benzene”. Here it is:

“...Since 9/11, 283 World Trade Center rescue and recovery workers have been diagnosed with cancer, and 33 of them have died of cancer, says a lawyer for the ailing responders.

David Worby, a lawyer for 8,000 World Trade Center responders, including cops, firefighters and construction workers, said the cases blood-cell cancers such as leukemia, lymphoma, Hodgkin's and myeloma.

Doctors say the cancers can strike three to five years after exposure to toxins such as benzene, a cancer-causing chemical that permeated the WTC site from burning jet fuel.

“One in 150,000 white males under 40 would normally get the type of acute white blood-cell cancer that strikes a healthy detective,” said Worby, whose first client was NYPD narcotics cop John Walcott, now 41. Walcott spent months at Ground Zero and the Fresh Kills landfill. The father of three is fighting leukemia.

“We have nearly 35 of these cancers in the family of 50,000 Ground Zero workers. The odds of that occurring are one in hundreds of millions,” Worby said.

²⁴⁴ <http://www.firehouse.com/node/42199>

Others suffer tumors of the tongue, throat, testicles, breast, bladder, kidney, colon, intestines, and lung, said Worby, of Worby, Groner, Edelman, & Napoli, Bern, which filed the class-action suit.

WTC workers who have died of cancer include paramedic Deborah Reeve, 41 (mesothelioma); NYPD Officer Ronald Weintraub, 43 (bile-duct cancer); and Stephen "Rak" Yurek, 46, a Port Authority emergency technician (brain cancer). The families say they were healthy before 9/11.

Dr. Robin Herbert, a director of WTC medical monitoring at Mount Sinai Hospital, said some of the nearly 16,000 responders screened to date are getting cancer.

"We do not know at this point if they are WTC-related, but some are unusual cancers we see as red flags," Herbert said.

Dr. Iris Udasin, principal investigator for the Mount Sinai screening of 500 in New Jersey, said the 9/11 link is "certainly a possibility," she said. "It's what we worry about, and what we fear."

I hope that in the process of reading this book you have already grown cynical enough to duly appreciate the ostensibly "silly" statements of medical doctors appointed to treat gullible ground zero patients – such as, for example, the last quote above where a certain "Doctor Iris Udasin" pretends to be an imbecile while talking about "certain possibilities" when linking chronic radiation sickness to the place that is designated as "ground zero".

Here is another article, even more shameless than the above one – in it they did not even bother to Capitalize the Proper Noun "Ground Zero" and use the 'ground zero' term without quotation marks and in small-case letters – as if it were in medical- or in civil defense manuals dealing with consequences of the nuclear weapons' usage. It was published on the NBC news website. The article bears a very intriguing title: "Cancer question complicates 9/11 deal. Linking disease to exposure to toxic dust from WTC site proves elusive.", written by David B. Caruso, Associated Press, the exact date of the original publication is unknown, since the NBC news web page specifies only that it was updated on 3/27/2010. This unprecedented concoction was still available on the NBC's page²⁴⁵ as of February 3, 2013.

In fact, this one is such a masterpiece of lying art that I had little chance to abridge it. I am obliged to quote almost 30% of its text, despite the prohibition of the Associated Press to re-print its materials. The lie published by the AP constitutes documentary evidence of lie, while the concept of the "copyright" could not be extended to embrace purely judicial evidence. In any case, you could consider that I am quoting here a big part of the AP article for the sole purpose of criticism – the reason that it is permitted by the concept of "fair use" under the corresponding copyright laws²⁴⁶.

lawmakers working on a 9/11 health bill in Washington have faced a tough question: Do they dedicate the bulk of money to people with ailments where there has been stronger evidence of a tie to ground zero, like asthma and other respiratory diseases? Or, do they set aside more for people with deadly, but common, cancers that may or may not be related to the attacks?...

"...New York's state health department, which tracked fatalities for several years among the roughly 40,000 ground zero workers, confirmed at least 250 cancer-related deaths through June 2009. Analysis of other deaths is ongoing..."

Doctors note, however, that cancer causes nearly one of every four deaths in the U.S. and is a frequent killer even among people in their 40s and 50s. And a woman's average lifetime risk for breast cancer is one in eight.

"In any population of 40,000 people over an 8 1/2-year span, there is going to be cancer. That is a known fact," said Dr. Philip Landrigan, who oversees the World Trade Center Medical Monitoring and Treatment Program at Mount Sinai Hospital, one of the three major efforts to study the health of the workers.

Mount Sinai has found no notable spike yet in cancers among the 27,000 ground zero workers it has been tracking, Landrigan said.

Top doctors for the Fire Department, who are conducting a second big study involving 15,000 firefighters, have said they also found no clear increase in cancers. The third and biggest effort, being conducted by the city's health department also hasn't found elevated cancer rates among 71,000 Lower Manhattan residents.

That doesn't mean there is no danger, Landrigan said.

One defendant in the case, the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey, had asked the judge to order the plaintiffs to provide more proof of a link between cancer and the trade center dust..."

Copyright 2010 The Associated Press. All rights reserved. This material may not be published, broadcast, rewritten or redistributed..."

As I have said in the little disclaimer prior to quoting this masterpiece of lying art, the Associated Press may not claim that I allegedly violated its copyright, because parts of its article were quoted for the sole purpose of criticism. From it, the discerning reader could easily understand the vector of the development: the U.S. officials do not want to be charged with the premeditated mass murder. Therefore they ordered their lackeys – both in the judicial system and in the medical system – to avoid at any cost linking chronic radiation sickness to the place of the three thermonuclear explosions (each exceeding that of the Hiroshima bomb by at least 8 times) where they sent the unprotected responders to.

The above article mentions three so-called "efforts" to "study" causes of cancers. It would be safe to say that those shameless medical doctors (who mutated into spin-doctors in the process) indeed undertook "three major efforts" – exclusively in order to hide the truth about chronic radiation sickness and to convince the gullible ground zero responders that their cancers and other leukemias and myelomas had nothing to do with radiation, and, at the worst case, had something to do with alleged "benzene" and with alleged "asbestos". In this case, the advice would be, probably, this: forget about the medical spin-doctors, and try to contact doctors in linguistics – try to find some of them who were not bought over by the U.S. Government yet, and inquire of them: what was "ground zero" before the 9/11 attacks?

In any case, you have to understand that the U.S. Government does not mind paying a few billions of green papers to the several thousands of sick ground zero responders (or even to all the 90 thousands of them). It is not a big deal, really. What is a few billions USD for a big, rich country like the United States of America? It is really a very minor amount – just try to calculate for comparison how much costs a modern tank or a modern jet-fighter, not to mention a modern stealth bomber or a modern aircraft-carrier. Or how much are the costs each day of a ridiculous war against useless Afghanistan or that against the “oil-rich” Iraq. What is a couple of billions of dollars in comparison with the usual U.S. military expenditures? You have to understand that the U.S. Government is not greedy – especially considering that it will not pay to the dying ground zero responders from its own pocket, but from the pocket of the gullible taxpayer.

The point here is not the implied lack of money or the suggested lack of good will to pay off this money. Do not miss it. The point is that those cowardly U.S. officials who sent the gullible ground zero responders to their certain deaths on ground zero, without issuing them proper haz-mat suits and without providing them with the adequate advance training on how to behave on radioactively contaminated areas, fear that they could be charged with premeditated mass murder.

The demolishing of the Twin Towers and killing a few hundreds souls in the process might be justified by providing evidence that the U.S. officials made that extraordinary decision in corresponding extraordinary circumstances. The unnecessary demolishing of the WTC-7 by the third 150-kiloton thermonuclear explosion could be hardly explained, but, at least, nobody was killed in the process, so that cowardly action (intended in reality only to hide the evidence of the nuclear demolition scheme) could be somehow downplayed and hushed up. However, the intentional slow murder of almost 90 thousands gullible ground zero responders could not be as easily forgotten as the “unexplainable” WTC-7 demolition. The responders are still dying. And their plight can not be explained by anything except by personal cowardice of those who did not dare to honestly tell them that they were being sent to the radioactively contaminated grounds and should behave there accordingly.

Thus, the abovementioned “three efforts”, as well as many other “efforts” that followed the three, were not actually intended to deprive dying ground zero responders of their mediocre financial compensation – by enabling the defending parties to win the abovementioned legal suit. The ground zero responders will get their money anyway and I heard that they have got their money already – the legal suit was somehow settled in their favor.

Actually, the U.S. Government is rich enough and it could easily allocate any amount of needed funds to treat the dying responders and do so without any pressure applied through the court. Do not even doubt it. However, if the U.S. Government would so easily pay off, it would be tantamount to undersigning its own guilty plea. Understandably, this, the Government could not afford. Hence – all that ballyhoo in the puppet mass media around the legal suits and “cancers from asbestos” and “from benzenes”, but not from radiation. I have urged you a few times already to be cynical when analyzing potential motives; here I call for that position once again: try to be a little bit cynical when reading these type of articles and you will surely notice that the main point of the guilty U.S. officials and their flunkies is not to save the money due to be paid as compensation, but to save their precious skins from the imminent charges of premeditated mass murder.

Here is one more article dealing with the compensation topic: “City agrees to settlement with more than 10,000 Ground Zero WTC responders worth at least $575M”²⁴⁷, by Alison Gendar, Michael McAuliff and Bill Hutchinson / DAILY NEWS STAFF WRITERS, March 11, 2010. This article is quite interesting because it reveals certain intriguing details, as well as some shocking digits. I am quoting:

“...The city hammered out a settlement worth at least $575 million with more than 10,000 rescue and cleanup workers sickened or injured at Ground Zero, ending a massive legal battle.

The pact - which must be approved by a judge and 95% of the plaintiffs - creates a point system for payouts based on the severity of each person's illness.

The minimum payout is expected to be $3,200 for someone who is not sick but has a "fear of cancer," said a source familiar with the deal announced Thursday night.

Terminal cancer patients could get $1 million. Families of those who died due to their work after the 9/11 attacks could get $2 million or more, the source said.

²⁴⁷ <http://www.nydailynews.com/new-york/city-agrees-settlement-10-000-ground-zero-wtc-responders-worth-575m-article-1.175120>

Glen Klein, 50, a retired cop with lung scarring and gastrointestinal problems, isn't sure he likes the arrangement.

"A million dollars is not a lot of money if you have cancer and need chemotherapy," Klein said. "What's going to be left for your family after you die?"...

...The money will come from a $1 billion federal grant to the WTC Captive Insurance Co.²⁴⁸, created to indemnify the city and its contractors against the flood of lawsuits.

If only 95% approve, the total will be $575 million. If 100% approve, the settlement goes up to $657 million.

Victims' lawyers could get up to one-third of the money, based on contingency agreements with their clients. The city has spent $200 million from the fund defending itself against accusations it sent workers into a toxic wasteland without proper equipment...

...Victims must prove they were at Ground Zero and that their illness was caused by their work there. They will get more points the longer they were there - and pre-9/11 conditions, smoking and age will be taken into account, insiders said..."

In the above article I was particularly impressed by three facts:

1. That the victims' lawyers (who supposed to simply bring to the court-room a free edition of my book on the WTC nuclear demolition, that was quite popular by that time and easily available for free download on the Internet, along with a good big pre-9/11 dictionary, and so to completely annihilate the poorly entrenched defense, but, instead, preferred to sign non-disclosure contracts and to merely grimace in the court-room – playing roles approved by the U.S. Government) would get incomparably more money than the actual victims who are dying from terminal cancers now or would do so in the nearest future. Moreover, in addition to the one third (one third !!!) of the money(+/- $200 Million) that these lawyers are entitled to from the actual pay-off, they, without any doubt, must have gotten some initial "hush-money" that must have been numbered in an at least 6-digits order, considering the seriousness of the case in particular and the notorious avarice of American lawyers in general.

2. That the so-called "$1 billion federal grant to the WTC Captive Insurance Co." was available, "created to indemnify the city and its contractors against the flood of lawsuits". Hmm... I am struggling to find the right word to comment on this... This was the first time I knew about such a thing. Before that I thought that the U.S. Government, of course, should have indemnified defrauded insurance companies as well as those intermediate city officials who bore the brunt of the complaints and lawsuits that should have been directed at the very Government, but I thought that these payoffs must have been made secretly or at least discretely. Now I have just learned that the U.S. Government was not ashamed to allocate such funds openly.

3. That the city has spent $200 million from the abovementioned fund defending itself against accusations of the dying ground zero responders...

It shall be understood that the U.S. Government, although, in reality, it has nothing to do with the U.S. citizenry since the times of the end of the Civil War, on paper, still, is the "people's government"²⁴⁹. It still ²⁴⁸ <http://www.nydailynews.com/topics/WTC%20Captive%20Insurance%20Co>.

²⁴⁹ I do not want to mislead my reader by making him to believe that the modern government of a typical capitalist country such as "The United States of America" is indeed the "people's government", but in the same time I do not want to distract his attention from the main point of the book by making long excursions a/k/a "lyrical digressions" to various side-topics. Thus, for the sake of simplicity, I used the term "people's government", especially because it is popularly known and perceived as such. However, in reality, when it comes to the United States, every Member of Congress, Federal Judges, and the entire Executive Branch knows and understands that They operate under the Corporation's Constitution of 1871 and not the Original 1789 Constitution (if we talk about purely judicial technicalities, disregarding the actual ideology behind the existence of capitalism). You can read more on this technicality here: <http://www.usavsus.info/>, here: <http://cafr1.com>, here: <http://pragmaticwitness.com/the-united-states-isnt-a-country---its-a-corporation/> and here: <http://www.barefootsworld.net/admiralty.html> (the last one is pretends to be “elected by citizens”, it still pretends to work for the “citizens’ good”, and it still holds the funds that, at least formally, belong to the citizens in whole. Thus, to spend the 200 million (two hundred million !!!) dollars of the citizens’ money on the insatiable lawyers, defending itself against the rightful claims of the very citizens, logically, could not be called by any other word but “embezzlement”, or to be more precise: “the most cynical embezzlement”. I guess, in the former Communist countries, that used to have a more or less humanistic (or “human-like” if you prefer the latter definition) approach to such matters, these folks from the city administration who authorized that “legal” expenditure would be put on trial and almost certainly executed as a result of such trial. 200 million is just too much to be simply imprisoned – so these folks must have faced the firing squad for such an embezzlement, especially considering its insulting “legal” cynicism. Though, in the capitalist world the understanding of the concept of the “people’s government” and that of the “people’s money” might differ, of course, and those “public servants” who “legally” spent that public money could continue to enjoy both – their private lives and even their public lives, in addition.

Here is one of the most recent articles published in connection with this issue – on the 11th anniversary of 9/11. “9/11 Health Toll Still Hazy After 11 Years”²⁵⁰ by Roxanne Palmer from the International Business Times. This one is particularly interesting not only because it shows the most recent digits, but also because it mentions local residents, in addition to usual responders. A couple of quotations from it:

“...It’s still unclear just how many emergency workers and New York City residents were afflicted by respiratory illnesses caused by breathing in some of the vast plume of ash released by the towers’ collapse. The dust cloud kicked up from the Twin Towers was a mixture of toxic debris: pulverized concrete, jet fuel, plus tiny bits of glass, lead and asbestos, to name but a few ingredients.”

The potential pool of people afflicted by 9/11-related health problems is large. Between 40,000 and 90,000 emergency workers and volunteers spent time sifting through the remains at Ground Zero, and were exposed to toxic materials. That doesn’t even count the number of residents in the reach of the ash plume....”

Of course, you have to discard notions that “dust” supposedly contained the “jet fuel” (considering both – a physical nature of the actual fuel that by no means could have been a component of dust and alleged armor-piercing capabilities of aluminum planes) and the “pulverized concrete” (considering that the Twin Towers were made of steel, not of concrete). What is interesting here, nevertheless, is the numbers. We could only guess how many gullible Manhattan residents, in addition to the gullible responders and the gullible volunteers, might have been affected by such “dust”... The point is that while the health of those who officially worked at Ground Zero was monitored in a centralized manner, nobody cares to do the same thing in regard to the health of the potentially affected residents.

The article continues:

*“...One 2010 study published in the New England Journal of Medicine examined 13,000 FDNY rescue workers that worked at the WTC sometime in the first two weeks after the attack. The researchers found that rescue workers’ lungs performed about 10 percent worse in the year after the attacks. Their lungs also failed to recover....”

It shall be noted in this regard that those medical spin-doctors knew very well that when lungs are affected in a purely mechanical manner – such as by dust – they do recover in the course of time.

“...A more recent scientific study paved the way for the addition of more than 50 kinds of cancer to the list of illnesses that can be covered by the World Trade Center Health Program, which was created by the Zadroga bill.

Researchers from the Albert Einstein College of Medicine in New York examined nearly 10,000 men that highly recommended). Note, though, that all these sources deal only with judicial technicalities; they disregard the practical ideological things, the actual implementation of any particular law/legislation, or even the difference between the concepts of the “Law” and the “legislation”. In some later chapters of this book I will try to make up for this deficiency and explain about the ideological basis of capitalism; so the reader would surely have a clue – when it comes to the true ownership of any so-called “people’s government”.

²⁵⁰ <http://www.ibtimes.com/911-health-toll-still-hazy-after-11-years-782635> were employed as firefighters on 9/11. They reported in the Lancet in September 2011 that they found a modest increase in the number of cancers among the firefighters exposed to material from the World Trade Center versus non-exposed firefighters.

However, the researchers wrote that they "remain cautious in our interpretation of this finding because the time since 9/11 is short for cancer outcomes, and the reported excess of cancers is not limited to specific organ types."...

These "cautious researchers" apparently have no shame...

Yet another unprecedented piece of information, this time of a purely judicial character, is provided by this article: "Lies to Ground Zero Workers Not Sufficiently Shocking, Second Circuit Holds"²⁵¹, published by a certain Barry Barnett, apparently a lawyer by profession, on April 20, 2007. I quote:

"...The Second Circuit yesterday affirmed dismissal of claims that the federal government deliberately misrepresented the safety of working at Ground Zero without respiratory equipment. The five plaintiffs performed search and rescue operations after the 911 attacks. They alleged that exposure to asbestos and other hazardous substances injured them or put them in reasonable fear of harm. The government's false statements exhibited deliberate indifference to their health and safety, they asserted, and constituted violation of their substantive due process rights under the Constitution. Lombardi v. Whitman, No. 06-1077 (2d Cir. Apr. 19, 2007) (available at <http://www.ca2.uscourts.gov/>).

The court of appeals applied a "shock the conscience" standard to the complaint. The government's conduct didn't shock the "contemporary conscience" because, the court ruled, the Environmental Protection Agency director and other officials sought to "avoid panic, keep order, restore services, repair infrastructure, and preserve the economy" during a time of profound uncertainty and upheaval. That the officials could have protected these selfless people by providing them with respiratory equipment (or even telling them they needed it) didn't alter the court's conclusion...."

Actually, it sounds brutal and utterly unfair, but it is true. If the U.S. officials had announced, at that moment, that the three WTC buildings were demolished by three 150-kiloton thermonuclear explosions (each 8 times the yield of the Hiroshima bomb), this would undoubtedly cause such a panic and such an Exodus (not from the slave-owning Egypt, but from one of its provinces to another only) that the entire U.S. economy would collapse at once. It would collapse without any chance to ever recover, because the modern economy is simply too fragile. It is no longer based on gold and silver, but merely on bogus values of shares' quotation and on declared value of the green paper with dead presidents (and with the Egyptian pyramid, in addition). The U.S. officials (or to be more precise, more or less thinking advisors of the latter) were apparently aware of how fragile the modern economy actually was and what would happen with it if scared to death population of New York would run away from this city. The judges in the U.S. Second Circuit Court were apparently reasonable enough to understand this also. Hence their ruling exonerating the embattled U.S. officials. Considering the circumstances, yes, perhaps, the U.S. officials did the right thing – by not informing fearful plebs (whose unneeded "nuclear awareness" they advanced by stirring up the nuclear hysteria during 1986 Chernobyl production) about the REAL nuclear explosions, this time right in the middle of New York City.

However, as you probably understand, after doing such a right thing as "preserving the U.S. economy", as well as "avoiding panic and keeping order", at such a cost as sending almost 100 thousand gullible souls to clean ground zero without even issuing them haz-mat suits, the responsible U.S. officials should have done another obviously "right thing". Namely – draw their pistols and shoot themselves to avoid the dishonor. However, the Second Circuit Court's ruling does not blame the responsible officials for failing to perform the last "right thing". Thus, the gullible ground zero responders (as well as some unfortunate Manhattan residents) would continue to die from myriads of cancers supposedly caused by "asbestos", while the brazen U.S. officials would continue to run for elections and to screw their subjects by claiming the alleged necessity to fight the so-called "terror".

I think that those articles I referred to above are more than enough to establish the obvious. From now on only a paid shill or a complete moron could refuse to believe that the "ground zero" designation was indeed awarded to the spot of the former WTC because it indeed suffered the nuclear explosions (hence the cancers). If you wish, you could find hundreds of similar articles by searching the Internet for the proper keywords (such as, for example, “ground zero cancers” or “ground zero health” or “ground zero hazards”).

However, to formally complete this optional chapter, and to provide a kind of “bridge” to the chapter that is to follow, let me introduce to you the last article. It was named “Hundreds of 9/11 first responders die of cancer”²⁵², and published on August 24, 2009.

I am quoting:

“Around 100 ground zero recovery workers have died of cancer, with a further 600 diagnosed with the disease.

The 9/11 rescue workers are falling victim to a higher than average rate of life threatening diseases. They blame it on their time spent in the giant dust clouds...”

“...City, state and federal officials have not acknowledged a direct link between the cancer cases and ground zero toxins. Congress has yet to approve 9/11 health legislation calling for federal financial coverage of health costs for rescue workers....”

“...Retired police officer Mike Valentine has had four biopsies for a precancerous tumor in his throat and has to take 15 pills a day. He calls 9/11 America’s Chernobyl.

“The people that will die from illnesses will surpass the number of people that were killed on 9/11. I am talking about thousands, tens of thousands of people that will come down with cancers,” forecasts 9/11 first responder Valentin.

Valentin says he worked roughly 200 hours at ground zero, wearing only a bandana around his face – because U.S. officials said the air was safe.

Mike says that “when they made the decision that after two weeks I’d be digging on that pile for a further four months... that wasn’t about saving lives. That was about greed. Wall Street needed to reopen.” ...”

The web page²⁵³ also features an interesting video (a part of the actual article), in which abovementioned Mike Valentine says that “9/11 is the America’s Chernobyl”.

Mr. Valentine says this, most probably, not in full realization of how close his expression is to the reality, and, certainly, without realizing how much worse the Manhattan’s “ground zero” was in comparison with the safe Chernobyl’s grounds (where the strictest Soviet standards of radiation safety were, nonetheless, observed to the letter...)

We will review the actual situation in Chernobyl in the next chapter.

Comparing the 1986 Chernobyl “nuclear disaster” with the 2001 Manhattan thermonuclear catastrophe.

I believe that a reader who has read this book as far as up to this Chapter, has had to become a little bit more educated – when it comes to nuclear weapons, nuclear demolitions, “mini-nukes”, radiation doses, and other related stuff. Therefore I think it would do no harm if we compare here the 1986 so-called Chernobyl “nuclear catastrophe” with the infamous triple thermonuclear catastrophe without quotation marks – that began on September 11, 2001, in Manhattan, and, continued, possibly, for at least a couple of years after that. Somewhere at the beginning of this book, I have already mentioned that the alleged “explosion” of the nuclear reactor No.4 at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant was not actually an explosion of a “reactor”, but that of a “mini-nuke”. I think it would be beneficial for this book and for its reader if we talk about that important event a little bit. That is why I decided to add this educational Chapter.

Unfortunately, no exact data (not even to say about honest information) is available today in free access in regard to the Chernobyl “catastrophe”, so we have no choice than to simply disprove the only available dishonest data. Thus, we will disprove the official “conspiracy theory”. In any case, it is better than nothing. I think the best source in our case is Wikipedia – it usually diligently publishes relatively comprehensive digests of officially approved versions of events. In general, when you need to learn about some event in its officially approved interpretation – simply go to Wikipedia. You will get the exact official version plus all necessary references to the stated official claims. I will not quote here the entire Wikipedia article, but only its parts that are inconsistent with elementary logic – this means I will mostly mention only those ravings, which we are going to disprove.

Before we go to read the Wikipedia article, I will try to make an overview of events on my own, so it would be easier for a reader to understand any further information attributed to the 1986 Chernobyl events. I have to warn in advance, however: as it is the case with many other claims of mine in this book, this account of the Chernobyl “nuclear catastrophe” will be definitely “politically incorrect”; though, it will be correct in every other sense – either technical or logical.

Chernobyl nuclear “catastrophe” (also referred to as a “disaster”) was planned with actually two reasons in mind, though the second reason also somehow additionally contributed to the first reason, in its turn:

- 1). It was one of a few other main mortal blows (along with provoking the Soviet leadership into sending its army to Afghanistan, Korean Flight 007, a so-called “Perestroika”, skillfully orchestrated sharp decline in oil prices, an “anti-vodka campaign”, and some other blows) delivered to the then weakening Soviet Union, in order to precipitate its complete collapse—Because, “someone” simply hated the Soviet Union.
- 2). It was a skillful frame up intended to discredit the civilian nuclear industry in general in the eyes of the gullible general public, as well as in the eyes of the gullible politicians. “Someone” simply hated nuclear power plants and wanted them to become extinct. A sharp decline in the development of the civilian nuclear industry that followed the Chernobyl event, additionally contributed to the tremendous economic losses suffered by the Soviet Union that were caused by the sharp decline in the world oil prices, and as such it also contributed to the first reason as explained above.

Though the Chernobyl “disaster” was apparently designed to primarily target the former Soviet Union, it delivered near a mortal blow to France, which before that event spent enormous efforts on her nuclear research and on development of her peaceful nuclear industry. As a result of that “disaster”, France lost practically all her former customers from among “civilized” countries. If any country still craves today to buy French nuclear reactors – it would be most probably a so-called “rogue” state, akin to North Korea or Iran, which only wants to use such a reactor to accumulate weapon-grade Plutonium for its atomic bomb. Most of the so-called “civilized” countries have completely ended up any long-term developments of their national nuclear power programs, and have dismantled most of their pre-existing nuclear power plants.

The actual “catastrophe” occurred as follows: on 26 April 1986 at 01:23:44 AM (local time) a tremendous explosion of an “unexplainable” nature ripped through a building housing the nuclear reactor No. 4 of the Chernobyl nuclear power plant, located only 110 km (68 miles) from Kiev, the capital of Ukraine.

The power of the explosion was truly enormous: it managed to completely destroy a huge reactor building – including “blowing off” a 2,500 ton concrete lid designed to effectively protect the reactor from a direct impact of the largest available airliners, as well as from the largest available artillery shells. As a result of the explosion, the reactor simply ceased to exist. Its lower parts, including its near entire nuclear fuel, were apparently reduced to the plasmatic condition (that fact effectively put an end to the chain nuclear reaction in that remaining fuel), while its upper parts (represented mainly by graphite blocks) were blown away by the power of explosion and ended up in the area in the immediate vicinity of the destroyed building 4.

Remnants of a building housing the former reactor No.4 at the Chernobyl nuclear power station as destroyed by a mysterious explosion of unknown physical nature.

Some of these graphite blocks (which were combustible) ended up on the roofs of two nearby buildings – including the roof of a neighboring building housing the reactor No.3 – and started fires on their roofs. Upon hearing the sound of the explosion, all people who were on duty in the night shift and felt quite relaxed, immediately got outside of their control rooms and ran outdoors to see what happened. The night shift of the reactor No. 4 also ran outside to see what happened, because it did not expect anything unusual at all. All eye-witnesses were unanimous in their testimonies:

- 1) they saw that the entire building housing the reactor No.4 was completely destroyed (it simply ceased to exist);
- 2) they saw no reason whatsoever of why it might happen;
- 3) they did not notice any dangerous levels of radiation (and you better believe them, because all of them were qualified nuclear engineers, unlike ourselves, and they obviously possessed all necessary radiation measurement instruments – so do not even doubt that they took measurements of radiation immediately – considering that it was something a little bit “unusual” in a usual handling of nuclear power reactors).

Soon two firefighting brigades arrived. The firefighters, who did not expect anything wrong, quickly climbed up the roofs of the two buildings, where the graphite blocks were thrown by the power of the explosion, and began to extinguish the fires. Most of them would die later because of radiation sickness, caused by the graphite blocks, which proved to be highly radioactive. Some of those who came near these graphite blocks scattered about, and especially those who touched them with hands, would also develop serious radiation sickness that would result in the deaths of some of them.

Altogether 47 people would die as a result of the Chernobyl “disaster”, but not all of these 47 would die from the radiation causes. Some would be killed during various operations undertaken in regard to the “disaster” – for example, three would drown in the plant’s water reservoir trying to drain water, a few were killed in a helicopter crash, and so on. Moreover, all causes of death as a result of radiation sickness in Chernobyl’s case could be attributed only to those unlucky people who arrived to that area immediately and who were not properly informed about the real dangers of these graphite blocks scattered around. When the next day specialists would arrive to handle the Chernobyl accident, there would be no new cases of radiation sickness anymore.

In total, according to all available Soviet/Russian sources, only 29 (or 28) people died from radiation sickness related to the Chernobyl accident. It was mostly the firefighters, who were extinguishing fires caused by the graphite blocks on the roofs of two neighboring buildings, which died from radiation causes. The remaining firefighters who did not climb up the roofs and remained on the ground did not suffer from any radiation sickness at all. Most of them are still alive today and are available for comment.

None of the members of the Chernobyl nuclear power plant’s night-shift who were in their control rooms during the explosion, and ran outside to see what happened, developed any serious condition caused by radiation, and not even a cancer related to radiation. They continued to work at the three remaining reactors of the Chernobyl nuclear power plant, and the most of them are still alive and kicking even up to this day (as on 2012). Most of them are available for comment today.

However, a few responsible men out from the night shift of the 4th reactor, including the chief of the shift – Alexander Akimov, and the responsible operator – Leonid Toptunov, indeed died from acute radiation sickness. Though it happened not because they went out to see what happened with the reactor in the abovementioned instance, but because of an entirely different reason. Much later, Akimov and his men were INTENTIONALLY sent to their certain deaths into the zone of very high radiation in the immediate vicinity of the destroyed reactor. They were sent there to their certain death, but without any plausible reason whatsoever by a certain Anatoly Diatlov (also spells “Dyatlov”), the then deputy chief engineer of the Chernobyl nuclear power plant, who strangely appeared at night time on the spot of the accident. Precisely for this particular crime (for sending Akimov and his subordinates to their certain death without any plausible reason whatsoever) Diatlov was later sentenced by the Supreme Court of the USSR to ten years of imprisonment (the maximum term he could get for such an action in accordance with the contemporary Soviet penal laws).

Presently, Diatlov is considered to be “late” (though, there are reasonable doubts in regard to his being “late”). There was also his self-acquitting book published titled “Chernobyl. How it was”. There is no reason to believe this book, since it in many points contradicts elementary logic and is otherwise full of nonsense (at least, the author of these lines doesn’t see any reason to believe it). However, judging by the text of his self-acquitting book, there are abundant reasons to suspect that Diatlov was one of the perpetrators directly responsible for the actual explosion. His actions at the control panel of the 4th reactor of the Chernobyl plant a few minutes before the explosion (described by him in detail in his own book) were more than suspicious. It seems that Diatlov was intentionally guiding all actions of the reactor’s crew trying to time their actions to a certain particular moment, a certain “H-hour”, the exact time of which was known to Diatlov in advance, moreover, known with a precision of a second.

The point is that at that night, the reactor No.4 was scheduled to be shut-down for maintenance. Diatlov was also the person responsible for such schedule. It was him, Diatlov, who actually scheduled to shut-down this particular reactor on that particular Saturday night (while it would be logical to schedule its shutting down during a day time on a week day). Moreover, Diatlov used this event as a pretext to arrive there at night (ostensibly “to supervise” the scheduled shut-down). While there, Diatlov blatantly interfered in the actions of the reactor’s crew. In addition, he harshly and without any seeming reason, rejected several well-grounded requests of a few technicians to postpone the shut-down procedure. Those technicians arrived from another city to undertake some measurements of the reactor’s equipment and they requested to postpone the shut-down for merely a few minutes because they needed to have some extra time to adjust their measuring equipment; however, Diatlov was strangely inexorable.

Though, it was none of his duties, and it was otherwise against the established practices, Diatlov personally commanded the chief of the night shift Alexander Akimov to press the shut-down button at a certain very precise moment – not the second before and not the second after. Surprisingly, this very precise moment Diatlov commanded Akimov to press the button precisely coincided with the moment of the “mysterious” explosion that took place only a second later and that at once destroyed the reactor.

If you read the abovementioned book by Diatlov with this consideration in mind, it will be clear to you that Diatlov definitely knew that at a certain moment – a certain “H-hour” – the reactor would explode and he could not postpone this event. The clockwork had been set up and the count-down has already begun. Thus, all Diatlov was actually doing at the control panel of the reactor – he was ensuring that the shut-down button of the reactor would be pressed right at the previous second before the scheduled explosion. And so he did. It is very obvious if you read his book keeping this particular in mind. And it is even more obvious in the context of the events in general.

Moreover, it is pretty clear (even from his own explanation in his own book) that Diatlov intentionally sent to their certain deaths the chief of the night shift of the reactor’s crew Alexander Akimov and a few of his subordinates because they were dangerous eye-witnesses. Otherwise, they would definitely testify during the imminent inquiry and point out that Diatlov was apparently timing all their actions to a certain moment of time, a certain “H-hour” perfectly known to him in advance. In addition, they would apparently testify in regard to the technical conditions of the reactor prior to the explosion and it would become clear that the reactor exploded for no reason at all. Of course, as dangerous witnesses all of these people had to be eliminated. And so they were – Diatlov using his power as the highest ranking official on the spot sent them to their certain deaths into the zone of the highest radiation.

Yet another reason to suspect that Diatlov belonged to the so-called “good guys” and was indeed directly responsible for the explosion is this. At the present time none of the mass-media (all of it controlled by the “good guys”, as you might guess), not even the Wikipedia article we are about to review, contains any accusations against Anatoly Diatlov; moreover, his name is scarcely mentioned nowadays. It is especially strange, because in accordance with the results of the official inquiry, as well as in accordance with the sentence of the Soviet Supreme Court on this case, it was no one else than Mr. Anatoly Diatlov, the deputy chief engineer of the Chernobyl nuclear power plant, which was named the main culprit. He was named as the “main culprit” because of both reasons. From the technical point of view, he allowed the explosion to take place while being the highest technical official who was giving orders to the crew at the control panel of the 4th reactor. From the moral point of view, he was the main culprit as well because he abused his power by sending his subordinates to their certain death without any reason whatsoever.

All of it forces us to seriously contemplate the true role of Anatoly Diatlov in the Chernobyl accident, but it seems that so far no one has paid any serious attention to this particular man and his role in the events.

The Chernobyl operation was brilliantly planned – it was Sunday, and no top official was available for any immediate action on the governmental level. All immediate decisions were made by some mid-level CPSU official, who was on duty on Sunday. But what was the most important – no high-ranking nuclear scientist was available for consultation. You simply could not find anybody on Sunday in Russia those days. There were no mobile phones in 1986 yet (and neither pagers), and only a few had telephones in their dachas.

However, two high-ranking guys, who were apparent accomplices of the perpetrators, were waiting to be found quickly on that Sunday. One of them was Academician Valeri Legasov. He was not actually a specialist in nuclear reactors, he was a chemist specialized in a specific branch of that broader science which had some remote relation to the nuclear fission stuff. Do not even doubt that Legasov did not have any relevance to nuclear reactors, or to any particular scientific discipline related to the nuclear power industry. He was simply a chemist, who knew about nuclear stuff as any other chemist would do. However, the problem was that no other high-ranking scientist of any profile was available at that moment in Moscow or anywhere else, while Legasov was readily available. He was simply waiting to “be found”.

So he was “found” and he himself volunteered to head recovery efforts. Legasov was appointed a leader of the governmental emergency commission set to deal with consequences of the Chernobyl “accident”. Since then, he became a sole “authority” in regard to the Chernobyl accident and he preferred to remain in the commanding position till the very end of the entire so-called “liquidation” operation. He simply refused to surrender his post to any appropriate scientist ever since despite the alleged “radiation dangers”. He was politely requested many times to hand over his position to some real nuclear scientist, considering both – the “apparent radiation dangers” (since it was apparently dangerous for one person to remain in that area for many months), and his own irrelevant scientific profile (which had absolutely nothing to do with nuclear reactors or even with the nuclear science in general).

Interestingly, Legasov refused to give up his position – claiming that he “was not afraid of radiation”, and that he already “understood everything on the spot”, while it would obviously take some time for his would be replacement to become familiar with the situation. Thus, Legasov practically usurped the leadership over the entire Chernobyl operation and he used his unique position acquired in such a manner quite efficiently – as you will see later.

The second high-ranking accomplice waiting to be found quickly on that Sunday was General Vladimir Karpovich Pikalov – the then Commander of the Soviet Chemical Forces. He too was found almost immediately and immediately included into the same commission practically as the second-in-command. General Pikalov was found unbelievably quickly on that Sunday morning – even taking into consideration his specific and high military position. He was found simply too quickly, even considering that he was the Commander of the Chemical Forces.

General Pikalov occurred at the site of the Chernobyl power plant before 11 AM the same day, which was Sunday. Immediately, he became the undisputed supreme military commander in the Chernobyl area, considering both: his military rank (three-star General) and his actual specific position in the Soviet Armed Forces – the Commander of the Chemical Forces – then a Soviet analog of a standard ABC service.

These two strangely quickly found top-ranking “specialists” that would do practically all required jobs to ensure the nuclear hysteria that would follow very soon.

Upon his arrival to the disaster area, Legasov first expressed his “scientific” opinion that alleged “reactor nuclear fuel” had remained in the area of explosion and it must be “neutralized at any cost”. He proposed to the Government to bombard that spot with enormous quantities of lead and boric acid in sacks, which, according to his ideas, should be thrown down from helicopters overflying the remnants of the building No.4. However ridiculous, his proposal was accepted, because Legasov was considered to be a “specialist”, while the rest were simply lay people. It was estimated that it was over one fifth (!) of the entire Soviet strategic reserve of lead was spent in that ridiculous effort. Later Legasov would also propose to build an enormous protective “Sarcophagus” made of concrete over the remnants of the building No.4 for reasons that were insane from the scientific point of view, but nonetheless, his proposal was accepted.

In the meantime, General Pikalov did his part of the job. To begin with, he declared to the soldiers and officers of the military chemical reconnaissance unit, that was already in the area before his arrival and was about to undertake a measurement job in regard to the radioactivity levels, something like this: “I am an old man, and you are still young. I have to die soon anyway, so let me do the measurement job alone, because I want you, guys, to live long lives, while the levels of radiation seem to be too high to allow you to live long if you venture there.” General Pikalov was indeed an old man, born in 1924, moreover, he was a decorated WWII veteran (also twice wounded during the WWII), and a highly respected military commander of the later times. You do not have to doubt that none of his younger subordinates even dared to suspect any foul play when that highly-respected three-star General came up with such a proposal. You simply can not suspect a hero (it is just a psychological problem), and he acted apparently like a hero.

This allowed General Pikalov to board a special chemical reconnaissance vehicle alone and with only its Kazakh driver (Kazakhs in general are very brave people) to go into every “dangerous” area around the Chernobyl power plant – to conduct the alleged “mapping” of “dangerous” radiation levels. When he arrived back, he brought a nice map with dutifully outlined “most dangerous” areas of “radioactive contamination” – stating alleged levels of radiation ranging in “less dangerous” zones from 14 R/h to 140 R/h, and in “more dangerous” zones – from 300 R/h to 2,300 R/h (“Roentgen per hour”, not “milli-Roentgen per hour”). That is why by the time the main chemical military units would arrive to the Chernobyl area, they would have actually nothing else to do, because all “dangerous areas” have been already reconnoitered by brave General Pikalov. Moreover, these maps concocted by him could not be doubted by any inferior officer of the Chemical Forces, as you might expect – simply because it would be a disrespectful conduct towards his respectable commander...

Unfortunately, resisting ionizing radiation has nothing to do with personal bravery, or with any personal skills, or with a personal experience, or with a military valor. It only has something to do with the primitive mathematics, and with one’s ability to make elementary arithmetic calculations. If you receive less than 50 Roentgens you would have no visible problem to your health (although you might have certain invisible problems, especially if your dose is above 15 Roentgens). If you receive more than 50 Roentgens – you would feel sick right away. You receive more than 100 Roentgens – you might die. You receive more than 150 Roentgens – you most likely die. You receive more than 200 Roentgens – you most surely die. You receive more than 250 Roentgens – you die with a probability of near 100%. You receive more than 300 Roentgens – you have no chance to survive (unless you get bone marrow transplantation). You get over 3,000 Roentgens – you will fall into coma right away and die in only a couple of days without coming back to your senses. You receive over 8,000 Roentgens at once – you will be killed right on the spot.

General Pikalov spent well over an hour in those various “contaminated areas”, and supposedly received himself a dose of ionizing radiation enough to kill him at least 5-6 times over. Considering the sheer digit of Roentgens he should have obtained during that “reconnaissance mission”, he was expected to die in a maximum of 2-3 days time or may be even to do so right on the spot. Surprisingly, General Pikalov did not die from any radiation sickness (and neither did his brave driver). He was healthy enough to continue commanding simpletons in the Chernobyl area for quite a long time – several months, at least. Besides, he continued to serve as the Commander of the Chemical Forces of the USSR till at least 1991 and died from his old age only in 2003 – so he managed actually to survive another nuclear catastrophe, this time without any quotation marks – the 9/11 affair.

All above information is easily verifiable concerning both: the exact life span of General V. K. Pikalov and the exact levels of radiation “measured” by him during that unprecedented and “heroic” reconnaissance mission conducted without any witnesses (his driver could not be counted as a witness, since he was inside the driver’s compartment and did not participate in the actual measurements). Anyone who is familiar with Russian language, could easily find proof of what I said by simply searching the Internet by keywords.

The “radiation map” concocted by General Pikalov became a trump-card of Legasov, who used the map, with stated on it the unprecedented levels of alleged “radiation”, to convince the Soviet Government to begin an immediate evacuation of the nearest town of Pripyat – populated mostly by the people related to the actual Chernobyl power plant.

After some period of hesitation (actually caused by attempts of some reasonable nuclear scientists who sincerely doubted the ridiculous claims of charlatan Legasov and tried to convince the Government to the contrary), the Soviet Government decided to proceed with the evacuation of the town. The evacuation began at 14:00, April 27, 1986. From that point the nuclear hysteria had started inside the Soviet Union.

Meanwhile, those, who organized the Chernobyl “accident”, did not wait for that decision of the Soviet Government. Apparently, they needed to unleash the nuclear hysteria not only inside the Soviet Union, but outside of it as well. Besides, it was important for them to discredit the Soviet Government by accusing it of allegedly “hiding” the “nuclear catastrophe” from the international community (as well as from the Soviet population).

For this reason, an unprecedented trick was invented: some workers on duty at the Forsmark Nuclear Power Plant in Sweden upon being replaced by a new shift, were “routinely measured” for radioactivity. This odd “routine measurement” oddly revealed some odd “radio-nuclides” on them. It was “presumed” first that the radioactive contamination of the workers resulted from some unnoticed leak in the Forsmark Nuclear Power Plant, and some alleged “extensive checking for possible leaks” has been “undertaken” at the Forsmark facilities.

As you may sincerely expect, this “extensive checking” “did not reveal” any leaks. It was presumed that odd “radio-nuclides” came from somewhere else. More “checking” “revealed” that the “radio-nuclides” were “blown in by the wind” – in a process popularly known as a “radioactive fallout”. Some strangely “discerning” people quickly pointed to the Chernobyl “nuclear disaster” as the possible source of that alleged “radioactive fallout” in Sweden. It happened despite an obvious fact that the very “Chernobyl nuclear disaster” had not been announced yet at that time; it was known only to the top Soviet leadership, to the actual Chernobyl nuclear power plant workers, and, of course, to the actual perpetrators of that “disaster”. That is why the question from where those hysterical Swedes got a clue that something wrong had allegedly happened with the Chernobyl nuclear power plant – remains a mystery up to this day, which no one dares to explain.

From that point, the Soviet Government was promptly accused by the hysterical Swedish media of “hiding the truth” about the alleged “nuclear catastrophe” – which allegedly sent “radioactive fallout” to as far as Sweden. Actually, about that time the Soviet Government was obliged to publicly announce the accident anyway, because it was convinced by Legasov, at last, to begin the evacuation of the town of Pripyat. But outwardly it looked like the Soviet Government was “forced to admit” the “nuclear catastrophe” after the Swedes unleashed their nuclear hysteria based on the alleged “radioactive fallout”.

As you may guess, the nuclear hysteria quickly gushed over the borders of Sweden and spread all over Europe, and soon reached as far as the United States, Canada, and even Australia. Many European countries began “to discover” traces of alleged “radio-nuclides” in their territories, all blamed on the Chernobyl events. It was badly aggravated by peculiar “revelations” of General Pikalov who “honestly” confessed that it might have been two alleged “cyclones” that “apparently” brought an alleged “radioactive cloud" first to Germany, and then, through it – to Bulgaria.

To shock simpletons completely, General Pikalov came up with the most incredible notion: he stated that the Europeans should have expressed their thanks (to whom he did not specify) that an alleged "thermonuclear" explosion did not take place in Chernobyl. Because, he claimed, it was allegedly "very close to a thermonuclear blast" (implying automatically that at least a "nuclear" blast must have taken place for sure – since it is well known that a nuclear explosion is a pre-requisite for a thermonuclear one). Then he proceeded "to prove" that alleged concentrations of "thermonuclear fuels" (such as heavy water etc.) in the 4 reactors of the Chernobyl nuclear power plant might allegedly "fuel a thermonuclear blast" of an "unprecedented yield". (Ironically, the initial nuclear blast implied by General Pikalov in his ravings – that was supposed to serve as a "trigger for a thermonuclear blast" has indeed taken place, but that "mini-nuclear" blast under the reactor No.4 had nothing to do with either peaceful nuclear industry in general, or with the Chernobyl nuclear power station in particular – a "mini-nuke" that caused it was brought in from outside.)

The public hysteria that followed all these "revelations", "levels of radiation", and other ravings was, in fact, so intense and so well organized that practically no nuclear scientist would even dare to express his humble opinion in those circumstances. Most of the nuclear scientists preferred to simply remain quiet in regard to the Chernobyl events – giving the floor to hysterical journalists who quickly "proved" to the gullible plebs (who were even more hysterical than the scribblers) that any and every nuclear reactor (and especially a Soviet-made one) was nothing but a source of the extreme public danger that had to be disposed of as soon as possible.

It came as no surprise, that it was only French officials who dared to step forward and to state firmly that the so-called "Chernobyl catastrophe" had no adverse effect on Europe at all. French nuclear scientists even attempted to provide explanations that by definition a nuclear reactor could not result in a nuclear explosion (and neither in a conventional explosion) – apparently thinking that it was possible to bring to reason the hysterical plebs. Of course, as you may expect, their opinions were nothing but a voice crying in the wilderness... The well orchestrated nuclear hysteria continued. Practically all European countries managed "to find" at least some alleged "radio-nuclides" allegedly caused by the "radioactive fallout" that was "resulted from Chernobyl". The hysteria was unstoppable. The very concept of a nuclear power plant was made "evil". And that was exactly what the perpetrators of the "Chernobyl nuclear catastrophe" had planned: it was the beginning of the demise of the peaceful nuclear industry, and that of the Soviet Union.

I think it is good for a reader to take note about those unsuccessful attempts of the French nuclear scientists to stop the Chernobyl hysteria in 1986. It is important to remember their attempts. Later you will see why – when you see how the French would behave in response to Manhattan's Ground Zero – i.e. to the 9/11 nuclear catastrophe that was without any quotation marks whatsoever.

You do not have to doubt also, that the odd "radio-nuclides" in different isolated spots of Europe were indeed "found" and these "radio-nuclides" were indeed "genuine". Though it was absolutely not necessary that they were "blown in by wind" (as alleged) and not simply brought in by hand (as rightly suspected). Try to imagine: you organize such a serious operation – that involves "mini-nuking" of a nuclear reactor in a highly-protected facility deep inside an adversary's territory, and you are even engaging two high-ranking traitors enlisted from among those adversary's top military and scientific leadership – hitherto kept in a strategic reserve, that could only be used once. What do you think – to arrange just a few smaller guys who would bring a little of necessary radio-nuclides to a few necessary spots in Europe – would be a really big deal? Obviously, it would not be a big deal. Of course, some "good" guys simply brought the necessary radio-nuclides to the necessary places and then some hysterical officials were "innocently" called in to check what that was. Do not even doubt that it was the true cause of alleged "radioactive fallouts" everywhere they were claimed to occur.

In the meantime, "liquidation" works on the Chernobyl nuclear power plant continued. By September (!!!) 1986 there were discovered several people working there since the 2nd day of "disaster" who managed to accumulate, at last, 25 Roentgen doses in summary – the maximum allowed doses of acquired radiation set in the USSR for combat conditions. These people were promptly sent away from the Chernobyl grounds and should not come even near to any source of potential radiation for at least a couple of years. However, there were not really many of workers who managed to accumulate such doses and those folks apparently acquired the "illegal" 25 Roentgens due to some negligence or due to some unfortunate accident. The majority of the "liquidators" did not receive even 10 Roentgen during their entire shifts at that area that could easily last from two to four and sometimes even up to seven months.

These digits in regard to actual radiation doses acquired by the people working there were in a sharp contrast with enormous levels of alleged “radiation” “measured” by General Pikalov. Unfortunately, but understandably, nobody has challenged his ridiculous concoction neither in 1986, nor even today, in 2012. Therefore, those unprecedented levels of alleged “radiation” “measured” by him during that “heroic” reconnaissance mission, which ranged from tens and hundreds to thousands (!) of Roentgens per hour, remain nothing else than official digits even up to this day...

I guess that probably at the very first stage of the Chernobyl production there must have been at least a few honest nuclear scientists who attempted to challenge ridiculous claims of its main actors – Legasov and Pikalov. However, everybody around was in such a shocked and confused state that exhortations of the real scientists were first ignored. Legasov and Pikalov had both drawn such a grim picture of events, that, logically, every honest official had to react in accordance with the worst possible scenario, rather than to indulge listening to the “mild” alternative opinions. I think it is quite understandable from the psychological point of view. But later, with the further development of the Chernobyl production, it became simply too late to express opinions that might contradict the officially approved interpretation of the events (and that of the exact digits as well).

It is quite easy to imagine why it was so if you compare it with the 9/11 events. What do you think: is it easy for a scientist to state openly that an aluminum plane would never ever be able to penetrate the enormously thick, double-walled Twin Tower’s steel perimeter structure that was twice as thick as the typical front armor of a tank? Believe me, it is not easy. Even for a scientist... That is why nobody even tries to claim such a thing today in regard to the 9/11 “aerial attacks” on the Twins. At first, everybody was simply in too a shocked state of mind to recollect the obvious: that no subsonic (and not even supersonic) aluminum projectiles could penetrate steel, but then, when this obvious truth came back to everyone’s mind, it became simply too late to challenge the officially established version of events. You could probably imagine that during the Chernobyl production in 1986 there was something very similar – because psychological reasons behind silence of the professionals were exactly the same.

Anyhow, the most dangerous job during the so-called “liquidation” was to remove those graphite blocks, which were the actual source of the radioactivity, to some isolated spots and to safely bury them. That was the only important job, because the rest was nothing but useless efforts spent in accordance with ridiculous claims of the charlatans Legasov and Pikalov. How was that most dangerous and most important part of the job done? The radioactive debris was removed by “liquidators” wearing heavy protective gear (dubbed “bio-robots” by the military).

In accordance with very strict Soviet radiation safety standards, all levels of radiation caused by these graphite blocks were properly measured first and “safe” periods of handling them were established, based on standard norms. These workers could only spend a maximum of 40 seconds at a time working on the rooftops of the surrounding buildings – in order to observe the strict radiation norms. Practically, one worker, dressed in an extremely heavy protection suite (that was so heavy, in fact, that it was very difficult to move wearing it) could only reach the dangerous place, take one piece of radioactive debris (remaining of the upper part of the blown off reactor No.4) – either a piece of graphite block, or any other piece, throw that piece into some collection vessel set nearby, or simply throw it off the roof to the ground, and run away as fast as he could. Every one who once performed such a task could not be used in any clean-up again, because he supposedly received a near maximum of the allowed dose of radiation. All these people after performing a single 40-seconds “shift” on the roofs were later used only in works that had nothing to do with any radiation dangers, or simply sent back home.

Based on these observations, you could probably imagine why those firefighters who climbed these roofs immediately after the initial explosion to fight the fires, died from acute radiation sickness. It is because they remained in such a dangerous area for as long as four hours, while it was only officially allowed to safely remain there for 40 seconds, even if wearing the heavy protective gear.

However, these particular difficulties were encountered only when it was necessary to remove the highly radioactive debris from the rooftops of the neighboring buildings. It was far easier to deal with the radioactive debris lying on the ground. Inventors from among “liquidators” quickly invented devices that allowed using remote-controlled bulldozers to remove the debris and to scrap soil contaminated by them without endangering any people’s health. The major part of the following clean-up work was performed, indeed, by various construction- and other equipment used in a “drone” mode. In less than 2 months time no graphite- or other debris of the reactor had remained on the site. Thus, the very source of the potential radiation ceased to exist.

But it was not so in regard to the hysteria. The hysteria continued. It continued even despite the fact that by December 1986 an enormous protective “Sarcophagus” was erected on top of destroyed reactor No.4

– in accordance with ridiculous demands of charlatan Legasov.

Actually, the main point (and the only point) of Legasov for his unprecedented demands was this ridiculous claim – stating that alleged “nuclear fuel” of the destroyed reactor allegedly “survived” the explosion, “melted down”, and continued to allegedly “remain in the melted state”, moreover, allegedly maintaining a “chain nuclear reaction within itself”. However ridiculous, this claim of his was the very basis of absolutely all actions undertaken in Chernobyl in regard to the “liquidation of the disaster” (save only for the removal of the really radioactive graphite blocks that should have been removed and buried anyway – irrespectively of Legasov’s ravings).

Practically all nuclear scientists doubted these claims of Legasov in regard to the allegedly “remaining nuclear fuel”, but nobody was going to pay any attention to the opinions of these scientists, because it was Legasov, who usurped the commanding position and dictated his crazy ideas to all decision-makers on all levels – including the Soviet Government and the leadership of the CPSU.

However, as you might probably expect, eventually it was discovered by some real nuclear specialists that there was no nuclear fuel remaining at the spot of the destroyed reactor. The “strange” hypothesis of Legasov was effectively proven to be wrong, at last. Thus, the very basis for Legasov’s claims and demands ceased to exist. Nonetheless, even this particular discovery was not able to change the official interpretation of events. The official interpretation of events, despite the fact that ridiculous pseudo-scientific claims of Legasov were at last, disproved, unfortunately, remains the same up to this day. Along with all ridiculous digits and irresponsible claims of the alleged “radioactive contamination” allegedly caused by the so-called “Chernobyl nuclear disaster” in as far as Belorussia, not to mention its alleged “radioactive fallout” that allegedly reached even Norway, Italy, and the United Kingdom...

The author of these lines, by the way, at the moment of that “1986 Chernobyl catastrophe” was not yet a commissioned officer, but a last year military cadet in a military college in Leningrad. Since military cadets technically remain just simple infantry soldiers, rather than qualified military officers, they retained their typical soldier’s specialties (such as a rifleman, a machine-gunner, an RPG-man, etc.). My own soldier specialty was quite unique – I was a specialist in radiation reconnaissance, officially named “dosimetrist” – whose job was to scout and to measure levels of radioactivity during a nuclear war.

Once the abovementioned nuclear hysteria has begun, particularly claims that there was some alleged “radioactive contamination” allegedly caused by the Chernobyl events occurring in Sweden and especially in Finland, all available dosimetrists in the Leningrad area were immediately dispatched to measure radioactivity in various spots of the city in order to find out if the city of Leningrad or its surroundings were affected to any extent. I went with my dosimeter around many areas of Leningrad city, as well as outside of it – as far as almost to the border with Finland – in order to find any radioactive contamination. I was not able to find anything abnormal at all (and neither were the rest of my colleagues). After that I was also sent on several occasions to measure suspected abnormal levels of radiation on fruit and vegetable shipments from Ukraine to Leningrad, but I never discovered anything abnormal either (and have never heard that any other dosimetrist was able to find any radioactive contamination in any products originating from Ukraine). This was just my little personal experience in regard to the Chernobyl “disaster” in 1986.

After finishing the military college in 1987, I was first sent to the 12th Chief Directorate, and then – to the Special Control Service (this Service had direct relevance to nuclear explosions, among other things). While in that service, I had spoken with many of its officers who were sent to deal with the consequences of the “Chernobyl disaster” a year earlier. All of them claimed that there were no dangerous radiation levels-- even on the site of the actual nuclear plant, not even to say about its surroundings. Moreover, the three remaining nuclear reactors of the Chernobyl nuclear power plant were continuing to operate on a normal schedule and without even any additional precautionary measures – as if nothing happened at all with the reactor No.4.

All of these people from among my colleagues at the Special Control Service were healthy, and did suffer neither from any radiation sickness, nor from any cancer – despite spending in the Chernobyl area at least four months each. However, in regard to a mysterious “nuclear explosion” that did the job in the reactor No.4, all these people had no doubt – it was a nuclear explosion. And it was especially strange because it is known to everybody that no nuclear reactor could result in a nuclear blast – either accidentally or otherwise. Only a nuclear weapon especially designed as such could cause a nuclear explosion. However, even a nuclear weapon especially designed as such could not explode accidentally. A nuclear weapon could only explode when its operator wants it to produce a nuclear explosion and especially sets it off to do so. And so it was in the Chernobyl’s case.

Interestingly, Academician Valeri Legasov, who had never had any relevance to nuclear reactors, after the “Chernobyl disaster” embarked on criticizing the particular design of the reactor “exploded” in Chernobyl. He began to claim that the design of it allegedly had “some flaws” – as if he, himself being a chemist, had any knowledge about nuclear reactors whatsoever. His irresponsible ravings were widely publicized by hysterical media and no honest nuclear scientist could effectively challenge them, because Legasov was considered to be a “national hero”, who spent the entire seven months on the “dangerous” Chernobyl grounds, and who was supposed to have a “first-hand understanding”. These ravings of Legasov tremendously contributed to the demise of the peaceful nuclear industry in the USSR and elsewhere.

As you may guess, once he did his job, it became a real necessity for him to die some “unexplainable” death – in the same manner as Generals Lebed and Rokhlin would do later, after revealing the “truth” about the allegedly “stolen suitcase nukes” that allegedly ended up in the hands of Al-Qaeda and would be used in nuking the U.S. Embassies in Kenya and Tanzania on the anniversary of the Hiroshima bombing and in some other acts of the so-called “nuclear terrorism”. In fact, it proved to be not so difficult for Legasov to find a nice pretext for such an “unexplainable death”. As you may sincerely expect, the personality of Legasov was not really welcomed in scientific circles, despite his being an apparent “Chernobyl hero”. For true scientists, Legasov was nothing but a Doctor Quack, who was obviously at the pay of enemies of the then USSR. It was clear to any unbiased person that Legasov was merely a traitor hired to murder the then flourishing peaceful nuclear industry and to denigrate the honest nuclear scientists and their opinions. Practically, no self-respected scientist would even say “hello” to him at that time. While “Chernobyl hero” Legasov was glorified among simpletons, he was ostracized by his former colleagues.

Considering the circumstances, Legasov (or, most probably, not even him, but his handlers) decided that the best way to “die” was not an “air accident” like in the cases of Gagarin and Lebed, but a plain suicide. Legasov proceeded to “commit suicide” in the most “believable manner” possible: he made his “last will” first – i.e. he dictated on a tape his idiotic considerations about the alleged “flaws” in Soviet nuclear reactors’ designs (as if it was not enough that his ravings had already been published and were available in scientific publications anyway). He hid this tape somewhere where it could be easily found. On April 27, 1988, (exactly the 2nd anniversary of the “nuclear disaster”) he placed his pistol along with bullets into a drawer of his desk (so that various conspiracy theories would have grounds to arise later – why would Legasov prefer to hang himself rather than to shoot himself?), and imitated his suicide by “hanging”.

Of course, he had some accomplices who helped to nicely certify his “death” and to be “buried” in a believable manner. And it was quite plausible from the logical point of view that he decided to commit suicide – because other Soviet scientists clearly despised him. On the other hand, it gave a rise to many conspiracy theories – where simpletons think that it was KGB that “hanged” Legasov because of his apparent criticism of the Soviet nuclear reactors design (because if he would sincerely commit suicide, he would prefer to shoot himself with the pistol available in his drawer).

In any case, his alleged “suicide” added to the otherwise doubtful credibility of his ridiculous claims about the alleged “flaws” in the nuclear reactors and as such it contributed to the common cause – the murder of the peaceful nuclear industry in general. Former Soviet Academician Valeri Legasov apparently did a “good” job. It is believed that he lives now in the United States under a new name within the frames of the notorious U.S. “witness protection program”.

His main accomplice General Pikalov was obviously less scandalous and, apparently, to change a place of residence at his old age was not an option. Pikalov simply continued to live in the then Soviet Union, and then, after its demise – in Russia. And until his death he continued to maintain his ridiculous claims about the enormous radiation levels, as well as about the near-possibility of the alleged “thermonuclear” explosion at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant.

Pikalov also continued to maintain that he was the main force behind the campaign for closure of the Chernobyl power plant whatsoever (actually, nobody even doubted this). General Pikalov also greatly contributed to a chemical disarmament of the Soviet Union and then Russia – to the extreme pleasure of his colleagues from the United States. Nevertheless, despite his role in the treasonable disarmament of the chemical weapons, General Pikalov enjoyed a life of a hero during his post-Chernobyl days. Actually, unlike Legasov, who was a very unpleasant person, General Pikalov had an apparently nice personality, and, besides that, he was truly a professional when it came to his job.

Even the humble author of these lines had personal encounters with him and could also confirm that he was indeed a nice person and a true professional. Ironically, one of my encounters with General Pikalov was exactly about radiation measurements. I was then an officer on duty in some remote command post, along with a few others. Suddenly, our Geiger counter came to life and began to show that something was wrong with radiation levels (it was in a very different location, so it had nothing to do with Chernobyl – it had something to do with some burial grounds for nuclear reactor waste that were located not very far away). Our regular “chemical-officer” – who also happened to be on duty on that day – took a dosimeter and went around measuring the exact levels of radiation.

When he returned he was in a state of shock – because the levels he just measured were something like 20 R/h – more than enough to burn all secret documentation in our command post and then ran away as soon as possible. Since it was something a little bit extraordinary, we decided to report it first to a duty operational officer of the Chemical Forces. In only 3 minutes General Pikalov (then still the Commander of the Chemical Forces) telephoned to me and expressed his doubts that the levels could be that high. He suggested that an idiot, who measured the radiation levels, might have used a wrong scale of his dosimeter and so – mistook “milli-Roentgen” for “Roentgen”. In fact, it was exactly the case. Our “chemist” mistook “milli-Roentgen” for “Roentgen”. This, at minimum, proves that General Pikalov was quite a good specialist in his job. At least, he could not do any mistake of a similar kind in regard to those unprecedented radiation “measurements” he undertook in Chernobyl.

Actually, unlike many other Soviet Generals, this one was truly a professional. He knew exactly what he did. And for this very reason he enjoyed a very high respect among the Soviet military officers. I have never heard from anyone saying a bad word about him. Everybody liked him. Still, the fact remains: it was no one else, but General Vladimir Karpovich Pikalov, who did half of the job in regard to the Chernobyl production along with the other actor – now “late” Academician Valeri Legasov. Facts are stubborn things. Stated by General Pikalov ridiculous levels of radiation of “thousands Roentgen per hour” are still quoted today along with his ridiculous claims about “radioactive fallouts in Europe”, and along with his pseudo-scientific notions of possible natural “thermonuclear” explosions in nuclear reactors...

Anyhow, maybe because of the Chernobyl performance, maybe because of his pleasant personality and apparent professionalism, General Pikalov was considered a hero. In fact, he was considered a “hero” to such an extent, that after his death in 2003 a special medal “General Pikalov” was instituted intended for awarding servicemen of the Russian Chemical Forces for their outstanding achievements in the military service... Instituting of such a medal elevated the name of Pikalov to the same rank with Suvorov, Kutuzov, Ushakov and Nakhimov – the only four Russian military leaders (all of pre-20th century era) hitherto related to the Soviet military awards named after them. General Pikalov became just next to them. Probably, he “deserved” it. He obviously did the “good” job. In regard to both: the chemical weapons and the peaceful nuclear industry...

Since no one has ever been able to come up with any reasonable explanation as to the physical nature of the enormous blast that was powerful enough to blow off a 2,500 ton concrete lid, this particular question remains open even up to this day. Apparently, no one wants to honestly admit that it was an explosion of a “mini-nuke” smuggled into the plant by a traitor and hidden under the reactor. There were some feeble attempts to blame the mysterious blast on an alleged “explosion of vapor” in the reactors’ cooling system, but they were not even remotely plausible. The mystery of the Chernobyl “nuclear catastrophe” remains officially unsolved.

However, in an attempt to make the conspiracy theory about the alleged “vapor’s explosion” to be believable, the Chernobyl power plant workers were ordered by some high-ranking officials that time “to admit” that they allegedly conducted a certain alleged “experiment” with the reactor emergency shut down – which allegedly resulted in the “vapor explosion”.

You do not need to believe this particular claim about the alleged “shut down experiment”, because this ridiculous claim originates from an old and unsuccessful cover-up attempt – akin to the alleged “Boeing-757” attack on the Pentagon on 9/11 that was merely designed to cover-up the missile attack for the general public consumption.

There was not any “experiment” whatsoever on that night. Experiments are not conducted on working nuclear power plants. I hope you agree with this logic. Moreover, these experiments are not conducted on Saturday nights – when there are no chief engineers present, but only night shifts. The reactor simply “mysteriously” exploded – a mysterious “mini-nuke” caused the “mysterious” explosion under the reactor No.4, reducing its major part to the plasmatic condition, and throwing its upper parts – mainly graphite blocks – to the roofs of the two neighboring buildings. The rest you already know.

This was an unofficial, and obviously “politically incorrect”, explanation about the Chernobyl “accident”.

Now, let us, at last, review an official and “politically correct” version as provided by Wikipedia. As agreed, we will consider only the main arguable points in order to disprove them, not the entire Wikipedia article – which represents a good specimen of a classical genre of a “politically correct”, seemingly “honest”, and seemingly “unbiased” anti-Soviet propaganda.

(The author of these lines is not an ardent supporter of the defunct Soviet regime, by the way. He was quite critical of that regime, in fact, especially of that existing in the latter times of the Soviet Union. For example, during my entire 10 years service in the Soviet Army, I refused to join the Communist Party, though it was essentially a pre-requisite for anyone’s successful career. Moreover, in my particular Service, and especially considering my actual position, it was simply an obligatory matter – to be a member of the CPSU. In fact, I had no right to occupy my actual position in the Service and I was appointed to it merely as a matter of exception – in the hope that I would join the CPSU to formally comply with the pre-requisites for occupying such a position. Still, I refused to join it despite its being obligatory in my case. I was only one of two non-Communist servicemen of that entire Service, which numbered well over 2.000 commissioned officers; which means that I am from a rare 0.01%. Thus, when I say that something is apparently “anti-Soviet”, it does not mean that I personally feel injured by that thing because of being a former Soviet citizen, or because of other sentiments of this type. It is simply because I am a truly unbiased person – unlike unscrupulous scribblers who parasitize on various “hot” topics, but, unfortunately, only on those “hot” topics that are approved by their masters.)

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Chernobyl_disaster Chernobyl disaster. From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia.

NOTE: this is an article of 2008, because originally this Chapter was written in 2008 and therefore it was based on the contemporary Wikipedia article. I noticed that in 2010 the former Wikipedia article was somehow updated and currently its contents might differ from those being on-line in 2008. Nevertheless, I could provide an original, 2008, article, if necessary, because I saved it in 2008 “as is” in a form of a CHM file – which replicates the original article exactly. Feel free to contact me if you need to get that 2008 article for verification or for any other reason.

I am quoting (words in bold are marked by me); the actual quotes are in italic, my comments – in a normal font:

“The Chernobyl disaster was a nuclear reactor accident in the Chernobyl Nuclear Power Plant in the Soviet Union (now Northern Ukraine). It was the worst nuclear power plant accident in history and the only instance of level 7 on the International Nuclear Event Scale, resulting in a severe release of radioactivity into the environment following a massive power excursion which destroyed the reactor...”

“...Two people died in the initial steam explosion, but most deaths from the accident were attributed to fallout...”

– Actually, nobody was killed in the initial “steam” explosion, except, possibly two nuclear bombers who now probably reside in the United States – those who brought in the “mini-nuke” must have been listed “dead”; it would be logical. And the “most deaths” were not attributed to the alleged “fallout” – they were attributed only to the reactor’s debris, mainly those graphite blocks that emitted the high levels of radioactivity in their close proximities (and apparently they emitted radiation not too far away).

“On 26 April 1986 at 01:23:44 a.m. (UTC+3) reactor number four at the Chernobyl plant, near Pripyat in the Ukrainian SSR, exploded. Further explosions and the resulting fire sent a plume of highly radioactive fallout into the atmosphere and over an extensive geographical area...”

– lie. There were no “further explosions”, but only the one. About the alleged “fallout” and “extensive geographical area” you already know.

“...Four hundred times more fallout was released than had been by the atomic bombing of Hiroshima...”

– it is possibly true. Considering that an airburst in Hiroshima happened sufficiently high above ground zero and thus caused no radioactive contamination whatsoever, and neither had it caused any consequent radioactive fallout elsewhere. Even the smallest radioactive contamination in any case would exceed that in Hiroshima by thousands and even by millions of times. That is why you can easily cheat simpletons in such a manner, without even technically “lying”. You can tell them the “truth” – like in the above sample.

“...The plume drifted over extensive parts of the western Soviet Union, Eastern Europe, Western Europe, Northern Europe, and eastern North America...”

– lie. Especially because even “North America” is added here. But you do not have to doubt that the alleged “fallout” was indeed “found” in “eastern North America” – since the very concept apparently came from that side. But it does not mean that the radio-nuclides that were the very “fallout” were “drifted” by air and not by vehicles of the perpetrators who simply delivered the needed radio-nuclides and scattered them in necessary locations.

“...Large areas in Ukraine, Belarus, and Russia were badly contaminated, resulting in the evacuation and resettlement of over 336,000 people. According to official post-Soviet data about 60% of the radioactive fallout landed in Belarus...”

– true. Thanks to Legasov’s and Pikalov’s efforts, it was so. They managed to convince the Soviet Government to evacuate quite large areas brandishing their ridiculous “radioactivity maps”. What about the “official post-Soviet data” – it is because the most ridiculous ravings of charlatans Legasov and Pikalov (especially those that were totally inconsistent with common sense) were not taken seriously in the Soviet times. However, in “post-Soviet” times they were published. Despite their still being totally inconsistent with common sense.

“...The accident raised concerns about the safety of the Soviet nuclear power industry, slowing its expansion for a number of years...”

– do not even doubt that this is true. That was exactly the intention of the planners of the actual “disaster”.

“...while forcing the Soviet government to become less secretive...”

– may be... Who knows if it remained less or more secretive ever since? Did they measure the level of its “secretiveness” before and after?

“...The now-independent countries of Russia, Ukraine, and Belarus have been burdened with the continuing and substantial decontamination and health care costs of the Chernobyl accident...”

– do not even doubt that this is true. Everybody who worked in Chernobyl would never ever fail to demand any kind of benefit that was promised to him in 1986, and nobody would fail to demand free medical treatment from the government for any kind of disease he may develop later, irrespective of the true cause of such a disease. Just imagine yourself in his shoes. Would you forgo some apparent benefit? Neither would he. However, the second part of the above claim – about “continuing decontamination” – is a lie. Nobody would spend a cent of their money today on any ridiculous work. The times of Pikalovs and Legasovs are over. In order to spend any money they would apparently measure radiation first. But there is nothing to measure.

“...It is difficult to accurately tell the number of deaths caused by the events at Chernobyl, as the Soviet-era cover-up made it difficult to track down victims. Lists were incomplete, and Soviet authorities later forbade doctors to cite “radiation” on death certificates...”

– of course, it is “difficult” to tell the exact number of deaths. Because the number of those that died particularly from radiation was as little as “29”. And the total number – only “47”. About the same as numbers of people that are routinely being killed in traffic accidents in any big modern city per day. And, of course, it is “difficult to track down victims”. Due to their sheer absence...

Lists were complete, by the way. To list people was quite an important task for the then Soviet bureaucrats that they would never fail to perform. What about the alleged “prohibition” to doctors to write “radiation” in death certificates – this is the most blatant lie. Everyone who died from acute radiation sickness was mentioned in his death certificate as such: “died from acute radiation sickness”. Do not even doubt it. All 29 persons (mostly firefighters who climbed the roofs and came too close to graphite blocks) who were known to die from acute radiation sickness, were registered in hospitals as “patients with acute radiation sickness”, were treated as such, and, upon their deaths, certified as such. Their list is available – therefore you can check it easily in hospitals or with their relatives concerning this alleged “prohibition to the doctors”.

“...The 2005 report prepared by the Chernobyl Forum, led by the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) and World Health Organization (WHO), attributed 56 direct deaths (47 accident workers, and nine children with thyroid cancer), and estimated that there may be 4,000 extra cancer deaths among the approximately 600,000 most highly exposed people...”

– possible. But you have to use elementary logic, along with elementary mathematic when analyzing this particular claim.

First of all: the International Atomic Energy Agency is not as “independent” a body as you may probably believe. It apparently belongs to some serious “good” guys and it will sing exactly that kind of song, which it is ordered to sing.

Just for example – IAEA did not ring any alarm concerning events at “Ground Zero” in the middle of New York City. Do you think they “did not notice” the three underground thermonuclear explosions that leveled the Twin Towers and the WTC-7? Or do you think they had no clue what the term “ground zero” used to mean before the 9/11 events? Or do you think IAEA office in New York did not feature any Geiger counter that would come to life after the WTC collapse? Or do you think that IAEA “did not notice” the intense streams of radioactive vapors that were ascending from Manhattan’s ground zero in Capital Letters for at least four months and were visible even from space? Or do you think that the IAEA and the WHO do not know why ground zero responders suffer from leukemia and other radiation-induced cancers?

Do not be so naïve. Unlike you, those guys who work in IAEA knew very well what happened on Ground Zero in Manhattan and they knew very well how many different definitions the term “ground zero” used to have in pre-9/11 English dictionaries. Still, it did not make any noise in regard to the 9/11 nuclear events in the middle of the city of New York. The problem is that IAEA is not a real nuclear watchdog as the so-called “good guys” are trying hard to present to you. It is a pocket nuclear watchdog. I hope you can realize the difference.

Coming back to the above claims: 4,000 “extra cancer deaths” among ~600,000 “highly exposed” – what do you think, is it a really big number? It only means that out of every 600 people, who worked on the “liquidation” efforts, approximately 4 (f-o-u-r) eventually developed some cancer. What do you think about “normal” people, who did not work in Chernobyl, how big is the percentage of cancer among them? Just think about it.

In any case, one has to understand the awful truth: radiation safety standards in the former Soviet Union were exceptionally high and these standards must have been undeviatingly observed at all times, and, especially in such a notorious case as the Chernobyl so-called “disaster”. And, believe me, these safety standards were duly observed: nobody (except the unfortunate firefighters) has ever accumulated any radiation dose that exceeded 25 Roentgen (the maximum allowed for the times of war), and only a few accidentally exceeded the “peacetime allowance” – and ended up with doses in between 12 and 25 Roentgens. The majority of the “liquidators” did not acquire even 10 Roentgens.

Every worker in Chernobyl had his personal dosimeter and every worker every day was duly checked for an acquired radiation dose – without any exception. While high-ranking charlatans did their part of job, mid-ranking field commanders did theirs – they simply did not allow anyone to exceed any officially approved safe radiation dose. In addition, the majority of the “liquidators” after 1986 were held under exceptional medical supervision. They were thoroughly checked for any potential health damage – in an obligatory manner they used to undergo the full medical checkup at least once a year. That is why actual levels of cancer among them are noticeably lower than among the rest of the people...

What about the 9 “children with thyroid cancer” – who supposes to increase the poor total digits by at least another 9 – it is very improbable that they might get this cancer from causes related to the Chernobyl “accident”. Children have never been allowed to go to the nuclear power plant – I think it is obvious. Neither were they allowed even near to it after the “accident”. I think it is self-evident too. Near 600,000 adults used to work on- or near to the Chernobyl nuclear power plant grounds after the “accident” and none of them has developed any “thyroid cancer”. Why should the 9 cases of thyroid cancer among these children be attributed to the Chernobyl events? Especially considering that thyroid cancer is a commonly occurring disease? It is simply ridiculous if you judge this attempt from the point of view of logic.

“...Although the Chernobyl Exclusion Zone and certain limited areas will remain off limits, the majority of affected areas are now considered safe for settlement and economic activity...

– do not even doubt that this is true. However, even the so-called “Exclusion Zone” and the “certain limited areas” are safe as well (and they always were). You can buy a one-day tour in Kiev from any local tour-operator and venture into these zones as a tourist. You also can take a dosimeter with you if you wish and to undertake radiation measurements there (unlike in Ground Zero in Manhattan where dosimeters are strictly prohibited, in the Chernobyl Exclusion Zone nobody cares if you bring one with you and use it to measure radiation). And you will be surprised to notice that the levels of radiation today remain exactly the same as they were in 1986 immediately after the “disaster” – in other words, they are just normal.

The above was only a preface to the main article. Here is the article’s first paragraph. Try to read it with your eyes OPEN and think – whether or not these ridiculous claims could be true from the technical point of view:

“...On 26 April 1986 at 1:23:45 a.m., reactor 4 suffered a massive, catastrophic power excursion, resulting in a steam explosion, which tore the top from the reactor, exposed the core and dispersed large amounts of radioactive particulate and gaseous debris, allowing air (oxygen) to contact the super-hot core containing 1,700 tonnes of combustible graphite moderator. The burning graphite moderator increased the emission of radioactive particles. The radioactivity was not contained by any kind of containment vessel (unlike in Western plants, Soviet reactors often did not have them) and radioactive particles were carried by wind across international borders. Although much of the nuclear fuel in the reactor core did ultimately melt, it should be noted that the disaster was not a "nuclear meltdown" in the usual sense; the fuel melting was not a significant contribution to the radiological consequences of the accident, and the accident was not caused by a loss of coolant...”

Simply try to read between the lines of the above statement. They admit that “catastrophe” was not a so-called “nuclear meltdown” in a common sense (meaning not a “China syndrome”). In the same time they admit that nuclear fuel “did ultimately melt”. And, in the same time, they admit that even though, the fuel melting did not make any significant contribution to radiological consequences. And, moreover, they say that an actual accident was not caused by a loss of coolant.

What conclusions could be made from all of these? Taking into consideration a “politically incorrect” account of events previously made by me? Basic points for our consideration are these:

- 1) There was no radiation in Chernobyl. Whether you like it or not. All cases of radiation sickness were caused exclusively by the highly-radioactive blocks of graphite scattered around. The blocks were radioactive while the territory was not. That only means that no smaller radioactive particles were available that could contaminate the territory and to be “blown by the wind” to as far as to “across international borders”. I guess you realize that no wind and not even a hurricane could “blow” those graphite blocks.
- 2) Much of the nuclear fuel in the reactor core (as well as the much of the reactor itself) melted; this is the confirmed fact, but in the same time it was not a commonly feared “nuclear meltdown”.
- 3) The usual “nuclear meltdown” in common sense could only be caused by a loss of coolant, while in Chernobyl it was not the case. The article confirms it was not caused by any loss of coolant.
- 4) Ravings that an alleged “vapor explosion” could allegedly destroy a reactor to such an extent as shown in the above photo, should be discarded as a ridiculous speculation. Vapor simply has not enough potential explosive power to inflict such unprecedented damage. Could you imagine a “vapor explosion” that could blow off a 2,500 ton (!) concrete lid and to completely destroy a huge, heavily reinforced building? Which could not have been destroyed even by an explosion of TNT or by a direct hit of the Boeing-747? Try to be realistic when considering such a possibility – it is even more ridiculous than a claim about “kerosene” that “melted” the Twin Towers’ steel into fluffy microscopic dust... The alleged “vapor explosion” had simply no reason to occur, because there was no primary cause for an initial overheating that may lead to such an explosion – even the article above clearly states that the accident was not caused by any loss of coolant.

Based on these points and on the above statements, we could easily conclude that it was nothing, but a “mini-nuke”, that did the job. It exploded, everything that came within its fireballs radius was reduced to plasma (which eventually set in a form of lava, or volcanic glass, as you may expect); in the same time it effectively disrupted all chain reactions in the remaining fuel that came within the fireballs radius; and the upper parts of the reactor were simply thrown upwards by the power of explosion. It was as simple as that.

Of course, because the mini-nuke's explosion was truly enormous, it near completely destroyed the building housing the reactor No.4. Since all chain reactions within the remaining fuel were interrupted by reducing the very fuel to the plasmatic condition, the fuel could no longer contribute to any "radiological consequences" – exactly as the above Wikipedia article claims. All "radiological consequences" were caused exclusively by graphite thrown upwards by the power of explosion – that landed in the close proximity to the building.

All we need to do is only to discard the ridiculous claims about "wind", "fallout" and the "international borders". Once we get rid of that garbage, which had nothing to do with reality, the rest is quite easy to understand. I hope I made my explanation clear enough. It was the "mini-nuke", simply because it could not have been anything else. It was a nuclear explosion, without any doubt. Every babblers, including charlatan Pikalov (who claimed that it might serve as a trigger for an alleged "thermonuclear explosion"), confirmed it that time. Thus, it was an acknowledged nuclear explosion. Moreover, that was actually the main cause of the hysteria... However, it is well-known that a nuclear reactor technically can not end up in a nuclear explosion.

You are welcome with your own conclusions.

Here is an official "drama" as claimed by the "plebeian" version of the "truth" – as provided by Wikipedia:

"...During the daytime of 25 April 1986, reactor 4 (51°23'22"N 30°05'56"E) was scheduled to be shut down for maintenance as it was near the end of its first fuel cycle. An experiment was proposed to test a safety emergency core cooling feature during the shut down procedure...."

"...At 1:23:04 a.m. the experiment began. The extremely unstable condition of the reactor was not known to the reactor crew...."

"...With reactor output rapidly increasing, the operators pressed the AZ-5 ("Rapid Emergency Defense 5") button at 1:23:40, that ordered a "SCRAM" — a shutdown of the reactor, fully inserting all control rods, including the manual control rods that had been incautiously withdrawn earlier. It is unclear whether it was done as an emergency measure, or simply as a routine method of shutting down the reactor upon the completion of an experiment (the reactor was scheduled to be shut down for routine maintenance). The SCRAM may have been ordered as a response to the unexpected rapid power increase..."

"...At 1:24, 20 seconds after the SCRAM was ordered, the first steam explosion took place. It blew the 2,000 ton lid off of the reactor, damaged the top of the reactor hall, and ejected fragments of material..."

[the lid, by the way, weighed not 2,000 tons as claimed, but 2,500; however, it is a minor correction only; much more important corrections are yet to come]

"...A second more powerful explosion occurred about two or three seconds after the first..."

"...The second explosion was caused by the hydrogen which had been produced either by the overheated steam-zirconium reaction or by the reaction of red-hot graphite with steam that produce hydrogen and oxygen. According to observers outside Unit 4, burning lumps of material and sparks shot into the air above the reactor. Some of them fell onto the roof of the machine hall and started a fire. About 25 per cent of the red-hot graphite blocks and overheated material from the fuel channels was ejected. ... Parts of the graphite blocks and fuel channels were blown out of the reactor building. ... As a result of the damage to the building an airflow through the core was established by the high temperature of the core. The air ignited the hot graphite and started a graphite fire...."

"...Contrary to safety regulations, a combustible material (bitumen) was used in the construction of the roof of the reactor building and the turbine hall. Ejected material had ignited at least five fires on the roof of the (still operating) adjacent reactor 3. It was imperative to put those fires out and protect the cooling systems of reactor 3. Inside reactor 3, the chief of the night shift, Yuri Bagdasarov, wanted to shut down the reactor immediately, but chief engineer Fomin would not allow this. The operators were given respirators and potassium iodide tablets and told to continue working. At 05:00, however, Bagdasarov made his own decision to stop the reactor, leaving only those operators there who had to work the emergency cooling systems...."

Just try to imagine how “evil” was that “chief engineer Fomin”... He did not want to shut down a nuclear reactor amidst the fires ravaging on the very roof of the reactor’s building... Do you seriously believe that the entire Soviet peaceful nuclear industry was represented by such evil guys as Fomin? Does it sound reasonable for you that such mad people could exist in reality? But for a lay Western reader it apparently sounds believable – otherwise, the Wikipedia article would be ashamed to publish such a poor claim...

Please, make sure to notice uncertainties: it is still “unclear” until now if the alleged pressing of an “AZ-5” button was done as a part of the alleged “experiment”, or as a last-ditch attempt to save the reactor from not so clear “unexpected power increase”. Do not even doubt that this is a lie. The reactor simply exploded and disappeared at once and there was no reason whatsoever to press any button after it ceased to exist. Still, all commentators try to be consistent with the officially approved cover-up attempt... Up to this day.

By the way – there is an alternative version – that the “AZ-5” button was pressed ostensibly in response to the alleged “first explosion”, but even this measure was unable to prevent the alleged “second explosion”. This theory is also being widely circulated. However, the problem is that there was neither any “second explosion”, nor any alleged “experiment”. The reactor simply “exploded” without any seeming reason whatsoever. Though, certain Anatoly Diatlov (who knew the “H-hour”) made sure to command the chief of shift to press the shutdown button of the reactor just a second before the scheduled explosion (at least so it appears from Diatlov’s own book²⁵⁴). This is the “politically incorrect” truth...

“...The radiation levels in the worst-hit areas of the reactor building have been estimated to be 5.6 röntgen per second (R/s) (0.056 Grays per second, or Gy/s), which is equivalent to 20,000 röntgen per hour (R/hr) (200 Gy per hour, or Gy/hr). A lethal dose is around 500 röntgen over 5 hours (5 Gy over 5 hours), so in some areas, unprotected workers received fatal doses within several minutes. However, a dosimeter capable of measuring up to 1,000 R/s (10 Gy/s) was inaccessible due to the explosion, and another one failed when turned on. All remaining dosimeters had limits of 0.001 R/s (0.00001 Gy/s) and therefore read “off scale”. Thus, the reactor crew could ascertain only that the radiation levels were somewhere above 0.001 R/s (3.6 R/hr, or 0.036 Gy/hr), while the true levels were much higher in some areas.

Because of the inaccurate low readings, the reactor crew chief Alexander Akimov assumed that the reactor was intact. The evidence of pieces of graphite and reactor fuel lying around the building was ignored, and the readings of another dosimeter brought in by 4:30 a.m. were dismissed under the assumption that the new dosimeter must have been defective. Akimov stayed with his crew in the reactor building until morning, trying to pump water into the reactor. None of them wore any protective gear. Most of them, including Akimov, died from radiation exposure within three weeks. ...”*

Let us consider these claims.

Note first, that a lethal dose of 500 Roentgens is in accordance with the U.S. standards, while in accordance with the then Soviet standards it was 250 Roentgens that was considered nominally “lethal”.

Do you know what will happen with a man who was hit by, let’s say, 10,000 Roentgens penetrating radiation front that could result from a neutron bomb explosion (and only from it, because other nuclear munitions could not offer such a high level of penetrating radiation)? That lucky person would not suffer long. He would be killed instantly – right on the spot. By the time his head will hit the ground, he will be dead already.

Another lucky person who would be hit by a front of 5,000 Roentgen would be also knocked down immediately – never to stand up again, because he would instantly lose his consciousness – never to regain it. And he would die without coming back to his senses in about 2 hours.

Less lucky people who receive doses of, let’s say, 3,000 Roentgens will feel first some unusual feelings like the desire to vomit, some headache, and other immediately noticeable signs of illness. However, soon they will “recover” for a while – and could even walk for a few hours and do some work, but only to fall into a coma by the latest the next day and to die in a maximum of a day or two.

²⁵⁴ Anatoly Dyatlov, "Chernobyl. How it happened"; available here: <http://accidont.ru/memo/ChNPP.pdf> and here: <http://www.lib.ru/MEMUARY/CHERNOBYL/dyatlow.txt> (unfortunately, it seems that nobody has bothered to translate his book into English – both links above contain its Russian text).

People who receive doses of 1,000 R would suffer more – they might become noticeably sick by the next day or two and they will die in another day or two, but probably do so while in full consciousness.

Those who got just several hundreds Roentgens, would develop only classical clinical acute radiation sickness in a heavy form – they will feel bad on the 2nd-3rd day and die – on the 10th-11th day. Those few presents of them who manage to survive the 12th day will not die; they will slowly recover – maybe in a year or two. But there will not be too many of them – not more than 10%, or even less; it largely depends on how many Roentgen they have received – 200 or 250.

Based on the above data – what do you think will happen with a person who does not suspect anything wrong and remains in an area with radiation levels that are as high as 5.6 Roentgen per second (not per hour, but PER SECOND) – as claimed in the above article? In only about 15 minutes this unsuspecting person would accumulate over 5,000 Roentgens. We might guess what would happen first, and what next – whether he would feel sick first, fall down of sickness and lose consciousness then, or lose conscience first, and fall down – next. I am not quite sure about this (I mean I am not quite sure if he will lose consciousness first and fall second or the other way around – i.e. fall first and then – lose his consciousness). But I am sure that in 15 minutes, in any case, that person would lie unconscious on the ground or on the floor and he would continue to accumulate his dose and he would die in the next minute or two; a maximum – in three minutes.

Let us read once more the above ravings quoted from the Wikipedia article.

It is claimed that a dosimeter capable of reading levels up to 1000 Roentgen per second was not available, while the available one was capable of reading a maximum of “3.6 R/hr”, but since the “true” levels were apparently higher, that dosimeter read only “off scale”.

Are they sure about that? All existing dosimeters were intended to read quite “combat” levels of radiation – up to hundreds of Roentgen per hour at minimum. There is simply no need to manufacture a dosimeter that can not read above 3.6 R/h. What do you think?

On the other hand, there is no need to manufacture a hand-held dosimeter measuring in a scale of “hundreds of Roentgens per second” as alleged above. Apparently, you would not have a chance to use such a hand-held dosimeter or, at least, to make any use of knowledge acquired through its means. You would simply die right on the spot without being able to tell anyone about the actual levels of radiation you have just measured. Do you agree with that logic? Imagine that only 5,000 Roentgens will knock you down in an unconscious state already. What is the point for a mortal of measuring levels such as hundreds of Roentgens per second and up to 1,000 R/sec??

Of course, there are dosimeters capable of reading levels of 1,000 R/sec, but they are not hand-held. They are very specific devices that use remote sensors. They are stationary instruments that are not intended “to be brought in” – like claimed in that article.

It is claimed that a professional nuclear specialist who was a chief of night shift was simply too naïve – to measure radiation in the manner described above. Do you seriously believe that someone who holds a diploma of higher education in nuclear physics (which is a pre-requisite to secure any job at any nuclear power plant, not to say to grow up to the chief of its shift) could be ignorant to the extent claimed in the second part of the article?

Judge yourself whether it could be possible for the chief of shift to “assume” that the reactor was allegedly “intact” after seeing with his very eyes all the damage as shown on the above photograph? And whether it was possible for him to “assume” that the reactor was allegedly “intact” considering that he had his control room where all reactor’s sensors ended up and where instruments showed him any and every condition of the reactor? Don’t you think that all instruments in his control room showed him that the reactor did not exist any longer?

Considering all of it, don’t you think that above information could be “mildly” called “untrue”?

The Wikipedia article continues:

“...After radiation levels set off alarms at the Forsmark Nuclear Power Plant in Sweden, the Soviet Union did admit that an accident had occurred, but still tried to cover up the scale of the disaster. In order to evacuate the city of Pripyat, the following warning message was reported on local radio, “An accident has occurred at the Chernobyl Nuclear Power Plant. One of the atomic reactors has been damaged. Aid will be given to those affected and a committee of government inquiry has been set up." This message gave the impression that any damage and radiation was localized, although it was not. ..."

– no comments.

"...The government committee formed to investigate the accident, led by Valeri Legasov, arrived at Chernobyl in the evening of 26 April. By that time two people were dead and 52 were hospitalized. During the night of 26 April / 27 April - more than 24 hours after the explosion - the committee, faced with ample evidence of extremely high levels of radiation and a number of cases of radiation exposure, had to acknowledge the destruction of the reactor and order the evacuation of the nearby city of Pripyat. ..."

– if you look at the above photograph of the destruction and consider the true details of the destruction, what do you think: would it be appropriate to use terms such "had to acknowledge the destruction of the reactor", or it would be a little bit strange to use these particular words, considering the evidence – totally destroyed building and the no longer existing reactor it used to house? But those "good guys" who unleashed that hysteria thought that such definition would be just OK – to match the vicious image of the then Soviet Government, who must be "forced to admit" or, at best case, "had to acknowledge".

"...In the aftermath of the accident, 237 people suffered from acute radiation sickness, of whom 31 died within the first three months. Most of these were fire and rescue workers trying to bring the accident under control, who were not fully aware of how dangerous the radiation exposure (from the smoke) was (for a discussion of the more important isotopes in fallout, see fission product)..."

– possible.

Though, note the cunning indirect cheating: actually, you can not die from acute radiation sickness if you survive the 32nd day. You can only recover. (Though it is not the case with chronic radiation sickness – like one endemic to "Ground Zero" in Manhattan – more and more patients will die from it as time passes by.) It is known that 29 people died from acute radiation sickness within one month, 2 more might die from other causes making it 31. But the article above leaves a strong impression on a lay reader that during "only first three months" 31 died, implying that the rest would die later. Lie. They would recover.

Moreover, it is doubtful that the "237" people suffered from acute radiation sickness as claimed. It is very improbable. It was possible that as a measure of precaution 237 people were indeed hospitalized for observation, from among those who were suspected of being subjected to the radiation exposure shortly after the "accident", before strict radiation control was implemented on the site.

Do not forget that none of the firefighters who extinguished the fires during that night had individual dosimeters. Therefore, it was not possible for the doctors to establish if any of them received any dose of radiation or not, and therefore, it was reasonable that all of them were hospitalized for observation – as a matter of precaution.

However, it does not mean that all of those hospitalized really "suffered" from acute radiation sickness – judging by both – logic and mathematic. You could make your own calculations. We suppose 237 people suffered from radiation sickness of various degrees, of whom 31 died. Then you can logically expect that out of remaining 236 patients should be at least 110-115 who suffered from moderate radiation sickness, and the rest – maybe from milder forms. It is well-known that 50% of those who suffer from moderate radiation sickness die on 30th-31st day of a disease. You may logically expect at least another 50 to 60 deaths (at least 30), in addition to the first 31.

Nevertheless, there were no more deaths. It happened because radiation sickness in Chernobyl was very specific. Those who spent a long time near the highly-radioactive graphite blocks received lethal doses of radiation. The rest – did not receive any doses high enough to cause any radiation sickness at all. However, if any radioactive contamination of territory were really involved as claimed, the picture would be very different: there would be a lot of cases of heavy, moderate and light radiation sickness – the exact condition of the patients could be determined by their being at certain places and at certain distances from a hypocenter of a disaster – which is typical for any nuclear explosion and for radioactive contamination/fallout caused by it. But it was not so in Chernobyl.

"...Most domestic animals were evacuated from the exclusion zone, but horses left on an island in the Pripyat River 6 km (4 mi) from the power plant died when their thyroid glands were destroyed by radiation doses of 150–200 Sv. Some cattle on the same island died and those that survived were stunted because of thyroid damage. The next generation appeared to be normal...

– let us consider these ravings.

One Sv (sievert) is equal to 100 Rem, or rudely – to 100 Roentgens. Meaning that poor horses managed to accumulate 1,500-2,000 Roentgens in total – being at a distance of 6 km (4 miles) away from the site. While men working right on the site were scarcely able to accumulate 25 Roentgens starting from last days of April and until September (and it was not all men – but just only a few of them, while the rest did not accumulate any significant doses whatsoever). Does it sound believable? And does it sound believable that some other animals “on the same island” were allegedly able “to survive”, and, moreover, were even able to breed further – despite the enormous doses of thousands of Roentgen that killed the very horses, and despite their own alleged “thyroid damage”? Try to be honest with yourself when judging this information.

“...With the bubbler pool gone, a meltdown was less likely to produce a powerful steam explosion. The molten core would now have to reach the water table below the reactor. To reduce the likelihood of this it was decided to freeze the earth beneath the reactor; this would also stabilize the foundations. Using oil drilling equipment, injection of liquid nitrogen began on 4 May. It was estimated that 25 tonnes of liquid nitrogen per day would be required to keep the soil frozen at -100 °C...”

– do not even doubt that this is true. It was another crazy proposal of charlatan Legasov based on his ridiculous claims of the existence of the alleged “remaining nuclear fuel” that allegedly “could melt its way down the earth” – the claims, which later were found to be entirely false and totally ungrounded from the scientific point of view.

“Many of the vehicles used by the “liquidators” remain parked in a field in the Chernobyl area to this day, most giving off doses of 10-30 R/hr (0.1-0.3 Gy/hr) over 20 years after the disaster.”

– a possible “truth”.

These vehicles were used by the “liquidators” exclusively in a “drone” mode, not manually (the fact that is “prudently” omitted by the above article) to remove highly-radioactive reactor debris from the ground. The remote-controlled bulldozers were used to rake up those graphite blocks scattered on the ground (as well as those thrown from the roof-tops by “human-robots”). Of course, because the reactor debris were highly radioactive, they apparently caused a certain induced radioactivity in the equipment that was used to contact the debris physically, moreover, for prolonged periods of time (because these vehicles were not live, nobody extended any safe radiation doses on the vehicles during their actual “exposure”). It is quite possible that these vehicles indeed retained their induced radioactivity and might emit 10-30 Roentgen per hour for many years to come.

However, it would not be appropriate for scribblers who wrote the Wikipedia article to dupe simpletons by simply stating this “grim” fact as “honestly” as the article does.

Firstly, the abovementioned induced radioactivity has absolutely nothing to do with any radioactive contamination which is “honestly” implied for a lay reader who is presumed by the scribblers not to have any clue about radiation and expected not to understand the difference between “ionizing penetrating radiation”, “induced ionizing radiation”, “radioactive dust/vapor”, and the most scary “radioactive fallout”.

The high levels of induced radiation of 10-30 Roentgens per hour on the parts of the abandoned drone machinery that the Wikipedia article so “honestly” mentioned only had something to do with those highly radioactive graphite blocks scattered around. I mean the very same graphite blocks that caused all, without exception, cases of acute radiation sickness among the unsuspecting firefighters. Since the drone vehicles were in physical contact with these graphite blocks while scrapping them off the grounds.

Secondly, even these vehicles indeed emit those allegedly dangerous levels of induced radioactivity, they could not send the actual rays too far like atomic bombs. They emit dangerous levels of radioactivity only in the close proximity – which is even shorter distance when compared to the very graphite blocks that initially caused it. You can measure these levels of radioactivity only when you make a sensor of your dosimeter to physically touch the metal of the vehicle. However, when you stand only 10 meters away you will measure nothing, simply because it is not penetrating radiation like one after a typical atmospheric nuclear explosion. It is induced radiation, which does not travel too far away from its source.

Nevertheless, the shameless scribblers who concocted the Wikipedia article do not explain this particular technicality to a lay reader they intended to scare.

I am quoting further from the same article:

“...Possible causes of the disaster.

There are two official theories about the main cause of the accident: the first, ‘flawed operators theory’, was published in August 1986 and effectively placed the blame solely on the power plant operators. The operators violated plant procedures and were ignorant of the safety requirements needed by the RBMK design....

...The second ‘flawed design theory’ was proposed by Valeri Legasov and published in 1991, attributing the accident to flaws in the RBMK reactor design, specifically the control rods....”

I think that should be enough. Please, note that even up to this day, in 2008, i.e. well over 22 years after the Chernobyl “disaster”, there is no officially established true cause of the actual “accident”. The Soviet Government ended up with official “theories”, and not with one, but with two. They are not even ashamed to openly call both of them “theories”. Still, the Government’s theory(s) has nothing, but official value – explaining a position of the very Government in regard to the alleged causes of the “unexplainable” explosion in a nuclear reactor that is known to be unable to explode, but able to only melt down in the worst case...

I think that by all above considerations, we effectively disproved, by not leaving a stone standing, of both of the governmental “theories”, though neither of them being actually a “conspiracy” one – since both blamed the “disaster” on either a stupidity of the designers, or on a stupidity of the operators.

However, mine is a “conspiracy” one – I blame a “mini-nuke”. Though, mine is not a “theory”. It is practice. Do not forget that I was an officer at the Soviet Special Control Service – whose primary duty was to detect nuclear explosions. Don’t you think that some officers from my former Service have also visited that site to see what exactly happened there? Of course, it was a nuclear explosion – and that is exactly why they came there.

Oh, I almost forgot it – three seismic posts of the Soviet Special Control Service located in Ukraine also managed to detect some unusual seismic activity in connection with the “accident” under the reactor No.4 of the Chernobyl power plant. Seismograms showed a unique peak with magnitude slightly over 3 on the Richter scale right at the moment of the “accident” – representing nothing else than a mini-nuclear explosion of about 0.1 kiloton (100 tons) in TNT yield. It revealed that the mini-nuke was hidden not sufficiently deep underground to cause the full 3.5 magnitude (exactly as it was in the case with the infamous Oklahoma bombing in 1995 which produced also exactly 3.0 on the Richter scale because the 0.1 kiloton mini-nuke was hidden in shallow sewage opposite the building rather than deep underground).

The abovementioned seismic evidence that shows something truly “unexplainable” in connection to the Chernobyl “nuclear catastrophe” is widely available in nowadays Ukraine, as well as in Russia. However, the above article in Wikipedia does not enlighten its reader about that unexplainable particular. Do you think that it was a “natural earthquake”? That had never ever occurred in that area either before, or after the alleged “accident”? And that rare “natural” event managed to strangely coincide (to a second) with the alleged “experiment” so “timely” conducted by the night shift of the reactor No.4? Where it was officially claimed that the reactor crew chief allegedly pressed the “AZ-5” button – in the course of the alleged “experiment” that caused the alleged “vapor explosion”? Which so timely coincided with the “earthquake” of unexplainable nature? That oddly occurred right under the very reactor No.4?

Do you seriously believe in such “coincidences”?

Or may be you sincerely believe that the actual “small earthquake” was also caused by the alleged “experiment” that was involved in an emergency shut-down of reactor by pressing its “AZ-5” button?

Do not believe any suggestions of the abovementioned kind. There are no “coincidences”, and seismic signals that pertain to mini-nukes’ explosions are caused by nothing else than the very mini-nukes.

It was quite a simple occurrence. The “mini-nuke” brought in by the two traitors (who were reported “killed”, but who are presumably alive and kicking in the United States), that was set on 0.1 kt yield and put under the reactor No.4 got critical and exploded – in a sense of a “nuclear explosion”, not in a sense of a “vapor explosion”. This “peculiar” occurrence caused the abovementioned “unexplainable”

“earthquake” of 3.0 in the Richter’s magnitude. It simultaneously destroyed most of the reactor (primarily its lower parts and most of the nuclear fuel by reducing all of that to plasma) and threw the upper parts of the reactors by the power of the actual explosion. While two high-ranking Doctor Quacks suspiciously waited at that time to be quickly found in Moscow, despite that day being Sunday.

The rest you already know. It is also possible, of course, that the official explanations sound more believable to you. But do not forget then that the “official explanations” in regard to the Twin Towers’ collapse from kerosene and those in regard to the WTC-7 collapse from diesel fuel also sound believable to many simpletons. However, this book is not intended for them. It is intended for those people who prefer to use their own brains.

Now we have a kind of general overview on what happened in 1986 in Chernobyl and how the matter was handled. Let us compare it with the nuclear disaster (to be more precise “thermonuclear disaster”) that happened 15 years later across the Atlantic Ocean – and with the practical handling of that disaster.

	Chernobyl	Manhattan’s gROUND zERO
Approximate radiation levels on the work site	milli-Roentgens per hour or less	tens and sometimes hundreds of milli-Roentgens per hour; and tens of Roentgens per hour during the first few days
Number of dead from acute radiation sickness	29	not reported; probably not too many; may be tens
Number of dead from chronic radiation sickness	none	thousands, but the exact numbers are not reported
Patients died from radiation causes certified as such	Yes	No
Observance of safe radiation doses	strictly observed	secretly “observed”
Workers wore protective gears when necessary	Yes	only those from the FBI
Population properly evacuated	Yes	only partly and for an insufficient period of time
Population properly informed	Yes	No
People who might endanger their health due to potential radiation exposure were provided with adequate medical observations in later times	Yes	Yes, but “secretly”
People who encountered any potential radiation dangers were paid salaries and bonuses in accordance with potential radiation dangers	Yes	No
Workers were officially entitled for earlier retirements irrespective of their actual health condition	Yes	No

Everyone is welcome to make his own conclusions.

It appeared at first that the humble author of these lines was the only person in This World who dared to openly challenge the most blatant lie of the 20th century – the so-called “Chernobyl nuclear disaster”. And in that capacity I had a good chance to acquire a reputation of a lunatic, especially among those zombied folks who permanently keep their brains in a “switched off” position and who believe everything that is said in a TV-box or printed on paper.

Of course, I was not too happy with this state of affairs. I do not care what zombies, who believe that aluminum could penetrate a tank’s armor or that a nuclear reactor could allegedly explode, might think about me. But still, I felt a little bit uncomfortable with being alone in such a situation.

However, in 2010, other articles criticizing the Chernobyl affair began to appear on the Internet which made me much happier. And this time the articles were published by the real professionals. One of them was published by Polish scientists (note, not by Russians and not by French, who, in theory, could be interested in protecting the peaceful nuclear industry from the current Freemasonic assault, but by the Polish, who have no interest at all in the peaceful nuclear industry and therefore can not be suspected of being biased). One of such articles in both – Spanish and English – is available here²⁵⁵.

It seems that the article was originally available in Spanish, rather than in English, and the English one was only the secondary translation of it, therefore its nicely sounding Spanish title goes first:

Chernobyl - El Fraude Mas Escandaloso del Siglo 20

The English translation of the title and the article's authors as offered by the above web page:

The Biggest Bluff of The 20th Century by Marcin Rotkiewicz in collaboration with Henryk Suchar and Ryszard Kamicki Polish weekly WPROST, no 2 (14 January) 2001 from WONUC Website²⁵⁶

Let me quote some parts of it:

"..Whereas, in fact, the accident in Chernobyl nuclear reactor does not represent one of the largest 20th century tragedies, the explosion did not kill thousands of people, nor did it heavily contaminate for hundreds of years enormous areas of land. Moreover, radiation doses to which the populations in Russia, Ukraine and Belarus have been exposed, had nearly no impact on their health these people do not suffer more frequently from leukemia, nor do they give birth to more children with genetic defects.

Those are the conclusions from the recent UNSCEAR²⁵⁷ (United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation) report, which has been prepared by 142 most prominent experts from 21 countries. But after 15 years since the accident, it is clear that this event has been put to a very good use mainly by environmental and antinuclear organizations.

"Thanks to" the "Chernobyl disaster" the nuclear power program development has been delayed by several decades..."

"...According to the UNSCEAR report authors, only 134 people from nuclear power plant staff and emergency teams members have been exposed to very high ionizing radiation doses and subsequently suffered from acute radiation sickness. Twenty eight of them died from irradiation and two from scalding. Those were the only fatalities..."

"...The examinations of people engaged in elimination of accident consequences indicate that those people are even healthier than the non-exposed individuals says Professor Zbigniew Jaworowski from Central Laboratory for Radiological Protection, one of the report coauthors, who since 1973 is representing Poland in UNSCEAR..."

"...As stated in UNSCEAR report:

"Fourteen years after the Chernobyl accident there is no scientific evidence of increased cancer incidence, increased mortality or the occurrence of other diseases attributable to radiation." On the other hand, a significant increase in the incidence of psychosomatic disorders concerning the respiratory, digestive and nervous systems has been observed. But these disorders are caused not by radiation but by fear. People are afraid that they have been exposed to radiation or that they live on contaminated land and that any day they will develop cancer..."

"...Immediately after the disaster, thousands of Ukrainian and Belarusian pregnant women decided, or were persuaded by the physicians, to undergo abortion. The number of abortions in those two Soviet republics during 1986/1987 was equal to one third of the number of children born in Eastern Europe as a whole. In some regions the number of natural miscarriages jumped up by 25%. Why? Women were afraid that they will give birth to mutants. Meanwhile, after the disaster, the number of children born with serious defects in Ukraine has not risen maintains Dr. Herwig Paretzke from the Institute of Radiation Protection in Munich....”

“...The resettlement has been implemented swiftly and on a large scale. Within 11 days (from 27 April until 7 May 1986) 116 000 people were forced to change their place of residence. "The decision on resettlement has been taken with no notice of the opinion of Russian scientists, who suggested that the majority of people living in the NPP neighborhood should be left alone" says Michael Waligyrski, the head of the Health Physics Department in Oncology Center in Cracow. "Resettled people did not die from lethal radiation doses, but from high stress. We observed similar reactions to stress also in Poland, during the flood of 1997. Many people died then not from drowning but e.g. from heart attack" adds Waligyrski. The town Prypiat and a large part of the closed 30km zone are in fact habitable! ...”

“...How the Chernobyl lie came into being...

...In May 1986 the American press reported that the reactor explosion killed 80 people immediately, that further 2 thousand died on the way to hospitals and their bodies are buried not on the cemeteries but in a place called Pirogovo, where a nuclear waste disposal site is located. The enormous headline in New York Post threatened: "Mass grave in Kiev 15 thousand human bodies pushed down by bulldozers into the waste pits", while National Enquirer described a mutant chicken 2 m high, caught by the hunters in the forests close to Chernobyl. The interesting point is that equally absurd stories appeared in the press not only in the times when Soviet authorities prevented gathering of reliable information on the disaster, but also afterwards...”

“...Chernobyl, or environmental international's great mystification

From the very beginning, the disaster in Chernobyl became the main weapon used by the environmental organizations in their war against nuclear power. The accident and its supposedly horrible consequences were to be a warning to all who plan nuclear power plants construction. This campaign has been successful and very much so! In Germany, the parliament dominated by Social Democrats and Green Party members decided to dismantle all nuclear power plants. In France, previously free of antinukes phobia, the ecologists push a similar demand. Meanwhile, the environmentalists who wage such fierce battle against nuclear power plants, are accused by the nuclear lobby of getting funds from oil and gas industry, interested in closing the existing nuclear power plants and delaying the construction of the future ones. "Ecological organization Greenpeace has in its disposition more money than the budgets of some African countries. From where this money comes?" asks Professor Lukasz Turski from the National Academy of Sciences Center for Theoretical Physics and College for Sciences in Warsaw. "Greenpeace is one of the most active organizations fighting against nuclear power" reckons Professor Ziemowid Sujkowski, director of the Institute for Nuclear Problems in Warsaw...”

I think it should be enough to get the main point.

Those hysterical so-called “Greenpeace” organizations, which are officially non-profitable, but which are oddly richer than some African countries, may, of course, accuse the authors of the above article of being “proponent of the nukes”, as it is their modus operandi. But guess why these “Greenpeace” organizations do not accuse the United States Government for not properly handling the triple thermonuclear disaster in Manhattan?

Do you think those guys and gals from “Greenpeace” do not know what “ground zero” is and what this term used to mean before 9/11?

Do not be so naïve... They know everything. The so-called “Greenpeace” has never fought for any actual “peace” or for anything “green” (except, perhaps, only green papers with the Egyptian pyramid and an eye of Satan on them).

All these “Greenpeaces” and similar organizations were created with the only reason in mind – to finally enslave you and to force you to live in a global concentration camp where so-called “carbon taxes” will be levied on you, in addition to so-called “VAT” and property taxes (which by now have already began to seem “normal” to many), and where you will be deprived not only of your former rights to spank your children, but of your former rights to grow up any children whatsoever. The “good guys” will take care and grow up your children in your stead. And they will educate your children in the proper manner...

After my “9/11thology” video-presentation along with my comments on the Chernobyl disaster appeared on the Internet, many people began to ask me what do I think about the recent “disastrous” oil leak in the Gulf of Mexico and what do I think about President Barak Obama’s hesitation to deal with the oil leak – particularly in regard to using an underground nuclear explosion for stopping the oil leak based on the Soviet experience.

My answer: I do not think that there is any “disastrous oil leak” whatsoever. Not that the alleged “leak” in the Gulf of Mexico is less dangerous than they are trying hard to present now to the hysterical plebs. I mean that there is no oil leak at all. It is just a new show – a new hysterical globalization project.

They want to scare you with an alleged prospect of the “extinction” and then – to enslave you after “saving you from the extinction”. They will “salvage you” first and force you to live in a global concentration camp – second. Where they will rivet GPS sensors to your ears and you will be grateful for that. This is what I mean.

If the Chernobyl so-called “disaster” was primarily intended to get rid of the then main enemy – the Soviet Union, the new “ecological disaster” of the alleged “extinction magnitude” is intended to get rid of the rest of sovereign countries and to install a supranational dictatorship that will enforce so-called “international laws” on the entire world without any respect to the former sovereignty of the formerly independent states.

[The above phrase was written in June 2010, right at the height of the hysteria caused by the alleged “oil leak” of the alleged “extinction magnitude” in the Mexican Gulf. However, after several statements of me and of a few other whistleblowers who claimed nothing less than there was NO LEAK whatsoever and the entire production was staged by the Freemasonry as a new globalization project, the entire affair with the alleged “oil leak” died out in only a couple of months and today nobody wants to talk about that “extinctional event” anymore.]

Yet another recent event has caused a new round of similar public hysteria – the alleged 2011 Fukushima Dai-ichi nuclear power plant “disaster”. And again many people began to ask me questions – what do you think about the Fukushima affair?

My answer is the same: the so-called “Fukushima disaster” is a new Freemasonic globalization project. There was not any accident there, whatsoever. There was no explosion of vapor. There was no explosion of a “mini-nuke” there. There was no radiation. There was only a fence built around the area – so that no one could catch those actors red-handed. The entire production in Fukushima was staged and the affair exists only in a form of bogus videos and bogus photos, as well as in a form of skillfully orchestrated hysteria in both – the “main-stream” mass media, and in “alternative” media (which is run by full-time “conspiracy theorists” who in reality are skills at the pay of the so-called “good guys”).

Besides, you have to remember always: those folks who push for the New World Order and for the Global Concentration Camp on this Planet hate the nuclear power industry. With the Chernobyl production in 1986 they were not able to murder the nuclear power industry completely. While hysterical “greenpeaces” in Germany and in few other countries managed to shut down existing power plants, in countries like Korea, Japan, France, USSR, and many other states, nuclear power stations managed to survive. However, with the latest Fukushima production, the New World Order folks sincerely hope to finish the nuclear power industry off. The so-called “good guys” badly need to get rid of the nuclear power plants on this Planet. These nuclear power plants make too many countries independent and thus the nuclear power stands as an obstacle on the road to the so-called “globalization”.

Below: the two Chernobyl heroes – Legasov and Pikalov. The so-called “humanity” must remember its heroes...

Academician Valeri Legasov

General Vladimir Pikalov

Many people also asked me if the two chief actors in the Chernobyl production – Legasov and Pikalov – were indeed the CIA agents, as I implied. Well. I will answer this. No. They were not from the CIA. They were from the Freemasonic Order, which is far more powerful than the CIA. And which hated both – the former Soviet Union, and the peaceful nuclear industry. And which hates your freedom and which wants to “salvage” you from the “extinction” and to force you to become a slave in a global concentration camp.

Powerful “ultra-violet absorbers” and the longest-burning “structural fire” in history.

On 03 December 2001 a unique article was published on-line by the NewScientist.com. It still existed in the Internet²⁵⁸ as of December 2012, but I am afraid that it might be removed after I publish this book. In order to preserve this unprecedented publication for both – history and maybe even for a future inquiry – I decided to place 2 screenshots of that article – as it appeared in my browser. Obviously, I would need permission to reproduce the entire article here, which I might not get. However, it is very unlikely that anyone could prohibit me from photographing my own computer (with whatever contents) and from using my own photos in any way I wish. Here is the article (sorry, not actually the “article”, but only two photos of my computer with its Internet Explorer browser loaded – with some odd webpage it shows):

Ground Zero's fires still burning

Jonathan Beard, New York

Almost 12 weeks after the terrorist atrocity at New York's World Trade Center, there is at least one fire still burning in the rubble - it is the longest-burning structural fire in history.

Deputy Chief Charles Blaich of the New York City Fire Department would not predict when the last fire might be extinguished. But compared to the situation at the end of September, when aerial thermal images showed the whole of Ground Zero to be a hot spot, conditions today are much safer for the workers clearing the rubble.

This is in part due to the use of a special foaming agent called Pyrocool FEF. On 27 September, the officials ordered 2000 gallons of the liquid, which when added to water produces a slippery, low-viscosity foam.

When untreated water meets a greasy or painted surface it forms beads. "But FEF is a blend of surfactants that reduce the surface tension of water," explains Robert Tinsley of Pyrocool.

This makes the water in the foam much "wetter" so that it flows over and coats surfaces.. Paul Berger, a chemist at Pyrocool told New Scientist: "Pyrocool-treated water is able to develop a high surface area relative to total mass, permitting a very rapid heat transfer from the hot object to the water."

The above is a photograph of my computer with the upper part of odd contents of my Internet Explorer.

water."

Ultra-violet absorbers

And while normal detergents create foams with long-lasting bubbles, FEF foam collapses in seconds or minutes. This allows the liquid to coat and quench burning surfaces.

Berger adds that "Pyrocool also contains two powerful ultra-violet absorbers." These chemicals absorb the high-energy emissions from the fire, which are most able to spread the fire to other materials, and re-emit the energy at a longer, lower-energy wavelength.

The use of FEF foam began on 28 September, with thousands of gallons being pumped into the rubble. One target was the large Freon tanks that had served the WTC air-conditioning system and might have exploded. Blaich told New Scientist: "The foam also extinguished the fires in World Trade Center No 7, the wreckage of a 40-story office tower."

Another strategy that can be used to put out difficult fires is pumping an enclosed area full of the inert gas nitrogen, starving the fire of oxygen. But Ground Zero is thought to be too large and porous for this to be effective.

Rescue operation

Tinsley says there are several reasons for the longevity of the fire: "First, this is not a typical fire by any means. The combustible debris is mixed with twisted steel in a mass that covers 17 acres, and may be 50 metres deep. This is the one all future fire scenes will be measured against."

The other reasons are human. For nearly three weeks, Tinsley says, city officials insisted that work at Ground Zero was a rescue operation, meaning it would have been inappropriate to flood the rubble with water. As a result, he says, "the fires had a 17-day head start when we arrived."

And there is the issue of human remains. These are still being found and removed and, since the fires are not threatening any property or lives, they are being allowed to burn on.

End of the webpage, I mean, the end of the photograph.

I do not have much to comment. I guess a reader, who reached this Chapter, already knows how to read between the lines. Please, only read all of the above carefully – about the "50 meters deep" certain "combustible mass", about odd "underground" fires still lasting as on December 3, 2001, about two powerful "ultra-violet absorbers", designed "to absorb high-energy emissions from the fire" – that were mixed into the water used by the unsuspecting firefighters, and also about the alleged "terrorist atrocity".

Please, do not miss to notice also that the "underground fires" were roaring not only under the WTC-1 and -2, but under the WTC-7 as well – since the latter also required the two so-called "powerful ultra-violet absorbers" to be used against it. Just read it all.

And make your own conclusions. I hope now, at last, you can properly compare "Ground Zero" works with the Chernobyl "nuclear catastrophe" and with the way it was handled by the Soviet specialists. This time I am abstaining from helping you to conclude. Just do it yourself. But try to be unbiased when concluding.

P.S. The most seditious diagram from old good days...

The diagram below was discovered by one of my readers in May 2010 on the Wikipedia web site in an article describing nuclear tests here: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Nuclear_weapons_testing
The actual picture was published here: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/File:Types_of_nuclear_testing.svg
The picture file was originally named: 591px-Types_of_nuclear_testing_svg.png

I loved this silly drawing and couldn't resist adding it to my book:

The diagram apparently represents four types of nuclear explosions conducted in various environments: 1) atmospheric; 2) underground; 3) exoatmospheric; 4) underwater.

Guess why should they position a certain tall structure on top of an underground nuclear explosion (2)? I mean – above the one that creates certain (((“waves”))) around itself?

This was a classic diagram of the '70s. Those days nuclear explosions were not “evil” yet and they were widely discussed. And it was not a big secret, yet, in those days – that underground nuclear explosions could be successfully used for demolishing skyscrapers...

Defending Larry Silverstein against accusations in the 9/11 culpability.

I have to mention that, exactly as anyone else, from the beginning of my 9/11 research I was under a strong impression that the new WTC owner – a certain Mr. Larry Silverstein – was one of the important culprits; perhaps, even one of original 9/11 planners. At minimum, I was sure Mr. Silverstein must have been an accomplice to the perpetration. His supposed culpability was so “obvious” to me, indeed, that I began to seriously contemplate that Silverstein might have been innocent not earlier than at the end of 2012 (just to let you know, I am adding this new chapter in the very last moment to the final 3rd edition of my book, shortly before its completion).

Maybe I could put it this way: Mr. Silverstein appeared “guilty” to me because he appeared as such to any other member of the crowd; while the only “proof” of his supposed guilt was that infamous “intuitive impression” that has proven to be completely wrong so many times before. At the last moment, however, it luckily occurred to me that the crowd is not always right, so an honest researcher must be above the crowd and has to treat that sense of “intuitive impression” of his own with the utmost caution. Just to remind you: many people were under the “intuitive impression” that the aluminum planes could penetrate steel Twin Towers; that ordinary explosives (or even so-called “nano-thermite”) could allegedly reduce steel to microscopic dust; and even that inhaling of the alleged “asbestos dust” could allegedly lead to quick deaths from a myriad of various cancers.

Of course, now I am looking forward to how would the shills and other bitter opponents of mine lash out at the humble author of these lines when they get to know that I voluntarily deal them such “a trump card to debunk me” on my decision to defend such a universally hated personality as Larry Silverstein. I am sincerely anticipating these types of attacks: “What? This Russian liar – Dimitri Khalezov? Now he started to defend Larry? Larry, who admitted to demolish the WTC-7? Larry, who insured the WTC against the “terror attacks” just a few weeks before 9/11? Larry, who claimed the double-amount of the WTC insurance? Larry who is Jew? Larry, who is Zionist??? No, sorry, people, this Khalezov is the 100% disinfo agent and we always told you this – even in 2007; but now Khalezov has, at last, shown his true face!” I could even predict that some genuine supporters might feel pity for that decision of mine, and they might ask: “Why, Dimitri, did you give the shills such a chance to criticize you? Why didn’t you leave Silverstein aside?”

Well, I will try to address this point. First of all, I do not really care if some folks would criticize me or not. I am not afraid of their “criticism”. Secondly, I do not care about the crowd and its opinion. I could easily go against the crowd (and, in fact, I always did so, during my entire life). Yes, indeed, by deciding to defend Larry Silverstein I am giving to the shills the valuable trump card that they will surely use against me. So what? Does it mean that I have to cowardly lie to my reader? I am not a coward, after all, and not a liar.

Here is an example: try to understand that today, in December 2012, the majority of thinking people and all sincere 9/11 researchers realize that aluminum could not penetrate steel and the “terrorist planes” were digital. However, it was not so before. Just two years prior to that, in 2010, you could not dare to express an opinion that there might have been “no physical planes”. The shills, who infested all 9/11-truth seeking communities and all related web-forums, would eat you alive. Moreover, the shills in that case would be surely supported by the majority of the crowd that was trained to reject the politically-incorrect “no-planes” claims at once and to banish the actual “no-planers”. And it was so, indeed: the “no-planers” were ridiculed, ostracized, and banished for good. They were pariahs in 2010 that no “self-respecting” 9/11 “truther” would even speak to. Speaking in Orwell’s Newspeak, the “unplaners” were reduced to “unpeople” and their politically incorrect ideas – to “unideas”, correspondingly.

Therefore, to include the “no-planes” claim into the published study on the nuclear demolition of the WTC was a very controversial decision of mine. It could endanger the actual testimony of mine in regard to the nuclear demolition scheme of the WTC, to seriously undermine my personal credibility, and, in addition – to immediately scare away from me the biggest portion of the potentially interested “truthers” who were trained to “intuitively” reject and banish the “nutty no-planers”. It was not surprising therefore, that 99% of my sincere supporters warned me not to touch the “planes versus no-planes” argument and concentrate only on the fact of the WTC nuclear demolition. So what? Do you think I was really afraid of being rejected, banished and declared a “disinfo agent” or “nuts”? I was not. That is why not only I included the “no-planes” claim in my written book and in my video-presentation; I dared to place it before the explanation of the actual nuclear demolition.

Indeed, it was quite a risky decision. Indeed, the shills attempted to make a good use of it – they were quick to “debunk” my nuclear demolition “theory” (they called it “theory”, of course), based on the fact that I was that nutty “non-planer” from the then pariahs’ camp. Moreover, quite a few zombies from among the main-stream “truthers” refused to watch my video presentation whatsoever – because it was only from its fifth part that I began to explain the WTC nuclear demolition idea, while the “non-planes” question was discussed in the second and the third parts (so, those zombies could not reach any further than the first two parts of my video after which they concluded that I was “nuts” – exactly as they were trained to do). Nonetheless, the final result exceeded any expectations, as you probably remember. The shills suffered a catastrophic defeat. Not only were they not able to successfully undermine my credibility; they lost almost all of their former flock who were formerly against those ostracized “no-planers”. It took only a couple of months for my videos circulating over the Internet, and the “no-planers” camp went from the former miserable pariahs and turned into a formidable force, supported by the majority and respected by the rest.

Coming back to the necessity of defending Larry Silverstein. I believe that the Truth must be established at any cost – even at the cost of defending such an unpleasant and hated personality as Mr. Silverstein, and even at the cost of defending the disgusting U.S. Government (I mean defending it in those counts of alleged offence where the U.S. Government was not really guilty or where its supposed guilt could not be established for certain; I am not defending its cowardly decision to send to their certain deaths gullible ground zero responders, for example). Why, you might ask? Why don’t we just skip defending the U.S. Government and defending Larry Silverstein and to leave things as they are? Is it really a big deal if they continue to appear “guilty” to people? Apparently, they deserve it!

Yes, I think it is a really big problem – when innocent appear “guilty”. Firstly, it is not fair. Secondly, it is against the Truth – the Truth is naked, after all, and you don’t have to bother dressing or “beautifying” it in any manner. The Truth is the Truth. It must be clean, clear and naked, without any cosmetics. Thirdly, leaving Larry Silverstein (as well as the U.S. Government in some counts) looking “guilty” is dangerous: it will distract attentions of potential truth seekers. Instead of looking for the real, true 9/11 perpetrators, they would be satisfied thinking that it was Larry Silverstein or/and the U.S. Government who did the job. As a result of this approach, the real 9/11 schemers will be able to get away unpunished and even unnoticed – because those blinded with the supposed “Silverstein’s guilt” and with the supposed “U.S. Government’s guilt” would not be even able to even notice the actual 9/11 planners and perpetrators.

Have you ever tried to contemplate, by the way, why all those shills who cry about so-called “nano-thermite” and about those alleged “remotely controlled” planes (that supposedly obtained armor-piercing capabilities on account of being “remotely controlled” despite being aluminum-made) always blame the U.S. Government for the 9/11 perpetration? Doesn’t it look illogical to you – when the shill that supposes to defend the U.S. Government barks so furiously at the very U.S. Government, which pays the shill his monthly salary? The answer is indeed very simple: no, there is nothing really illogical in the shills’ behavior. By accusing the U.S. Government in such a manner, the shills do no harm to it. If they accuse the Government of what it really did – i.e. accuse it for sending to their certain deaths the gullible ground zero responders – to clean “ground zero” without haz-mat suits – this will be a very different story. Such an accusation will be extremely dangerous and very damaging to the Government. Instead, the shills accuse it for demolishing the WTC with so-called “nano-thermite” or/and for organizing the aerial attacks against the Twin Towers and the Pentagon. Neither of the latter accusations could be successfully proven; that is why the U.S. Government could not care less about the barking of the shills. However, the main-stream 9/11 “truthers” are not cynical enough to realize this simple logic. Therefore many innocent people are genuinely attracted by the shills’ efforts and so their own energy is spent in vain. In the same time, the shills effectively shield the true 9/11 perpetrators – those who are behind the curtain, because the latter could not be any happier when seeing how the gullible “truthers” spend their time and energy “investigating” the supposed “guilt” of the evil U.S. Government, evil Jews, evil “Zionists”, and the evil Mossad.

Considering the above thoughts, it comes as no surprise that when I defend the U.S. Government, by explaining that it had no logical reason in planning to demolish the WTC in such a spectacular manner, neither had it any logical reason to conduct the hardly coverable-up Pentagon missile strike, my efforts cause an extreme displeasure of the shills. The shills, of course, immediately seize on this opportunity and accuse me of being the “governmental disinfo agent”. However, I hope that the reader is discerning enough to be able to see the real reasons behind these accusations.

You have to realize, that 9/11 was the most beautiful scheme that was brilliantly conceived, near perfectly planned, and almost faultlessly executed (I say “almost faultlessly” considering its baffling complexity – it could not have been executed any “smoother” than we saw in September 2001 – the perpetrators have really done their best). This is to confirm that 9/11 was perpetrated by very-very-very serious people who were very-very-very well organized and who were, of course, very highly disciplined. Moreover, those who perpetrated 9/11 were brave. You could not deny them their bravery – not everyone is capable into venturing into a criminal project, especially, of such a magnitude. Committing a violent crime (and 9/11 was a violent kind of crime) in cool blood requires personal bravery – it is self-evident. Do not even doubt that silly, sloppy, cowardly U.S. Government (that moreover changes every few years) was not technically capable of conceiving, planning and executing the 9/11 project. It simply lacks all necessary qualities for such a feat: it includes neither brilliant thinkers (who might conceive such an unprecedented project), nor serious diligent planners (who might thoroughly plan an execution of such a complicated project), nor sufficient numbers of brave, highly-disciplined, absolutely reliable, well-trained, and in the same time – tight-lipped rank-and-file (who might carry out such a project in a perfect manner).

Do you realize, at last, that even if the U.S. Government in whole or a few vicious individuals within it would conceive of such an ambitious project as 9/11, they could not proceed with it beyond dreaming due to the complete lack of necessary capabilities?

Who else? The so-called “Neo-cons”? It is indeed a very popular notion – that the sect of the so-called “neo-cons” allegedly planned and carried out 9/11. But are you serious, dear reader? What “neo-cons”? Look at their faces first. Look at the face of George Bush Junior. Look at the face of Dick Cheney. And try to establish whether any of them (or even all of them together) is capable of:

- developing brilliant ideas (the 9/11 was the most brilliant idea; you can not deny the obvious);
- making diligent thorough planning of the most complicated scheme ever conceived on Earth;
- being absolutely reliable, highly responsible, and disciplined enough as not to fail in any single smallest part of the enormous project and not to blab out the entire thing;
- allocating tremendous funds required for the preparation and for the execution of such an immense scheme;
- selecting, convincing, casting, and training of several thousands of required rank-and-file, in the same time strictly observing the secrecy over the project;
- being personally brave enough to actually venture into such a thing.

I think the answer is obvious. Neither one of the so-called “neo-cons” personally, nor all of them in whole meet even a single criteria listed above. The so-called “neo-cons” are stupid, lazy, greedy, blabbing, narrow-minded, drug- and alcohol-addicted, lacking necessary discipline, absolutely irresponsible, totally unreliable, and cowardly, in addition. The actual “neo-con” sect resembles more a den of sexually-perversed drug-addicts, than a highly disciplined militant order capable of carrying out a project of the 9/11 magnitude.

Try to contrast personal qualities of the so-called “neo-cons” against the requirements listed above. Do you still think that such type of folks as Bush Jr. or Cheney fit the role of the “evil 9/11 perpetrators”?

The same thing that was said about the U.S. Government in this regard could be said about the Israeli Government. The latter is, of course, a bit more serious and bit more dedicated to its cause than its U.S. counterpart, but, still, even the Israeli Government lacks almost all necessary qualities listed above.

What about the Mossad? Hmm... Of, course, the Mossad was an obvious part of the 9/11 production and only the blind might fail to notice it. Moreover, I could personally confirm it because its longest serving deputy chief – not unknown Mike Harari used to be my friend and he indeed celebrated on 9/11 and I was an eye-witness thereof. However, the suspicious thing is particularly this: the Mossad was an “obvious” (again: O-B-V-I-O-U-S, don’t miss the point) part of the 9/11 performance. Doesn’t it look suspicious to you? It was the obvious 9/11 perpetrator. Due to its being obvious, it should be suspected right away, that the very small (and thus hardly capable of performing even one tenth of all necessary works required to successfully execute the 9/11 project) Israeli Mossad was merely “taken for a ride” by the far more serious real 9/11 perpetrators. Try to think about it.

The Mossad is indeed a very small organization. It hardly exceeds 1000 heads of the entire personnel, while the number of its actual capable operatives, called “catsas”, does not exceed 100. The Mossad clearly lacks all – the number of needed field personnel, and the amount of needed funds – in order to plan, prepare, and carry out the entire 9/11 project. Can you just imagine how much funds were needed to prepare and to execute 9/11 in reality? Do you think that the Mossad could have such tremendous funds? Or do you think that the Israeli Government could allocate such tremendous funds to the Mossad? Or do you think that the required funds were donated by the infamous “sayanim” – the voluntary Mossad’s helpers enlisted from among Jews living all around the world? It is simply ridiculous to even think so. The “sayanim” could, perhaps, help the Mossad (in a real emergency situation) with a few hundred thousands bucks, but not with a few billions required to finance the 9/11 affair. Do you know, by the way, how stingy the Mossad actually is? Just to let you know: its famous operatives could not get a refund even for petty cash spent on a taxi, if they could not bring back to their headquarters a corresponding slip from a taxi-driver. And we are talking about the billions of dollars? Are we serious? It is pretty self-evident that neither the Israeli Government, nor the Mossad alone, nor even a team of these two would ever be capable of conceiving + planning + financing + preparing + executing the 9/11 project. Do you agree with this observation?

Nevertheless, the Mossad, which was clearly an auxiliary in the case of 9/11, was allocated that little, yet visible part of the auxiliary job, that now it appears to everyone who is not completely blind as the obvious 9/11 perpetrator. Add here, that the main visible (again V-I-S-I-B-L-E) 9/11 beneficiaries were the state of Israel and the Israeli Mossad. You can not deny the obvious. Nobody got more [visible] benefits from the 9/11 proceeds than Israel and the Israelis. Well. I could say that those who actually planned 9/11 were indeed very clever folks.

Now, try to imagine that as a result of such an approach, the true 9/11 planners, performers and financiers (as well as its true “invisible” beneficiaries) managed to remain in the shade. Every 9/11 “truther” easily swallowed the bait. Here is the list of the most often blamed 9/11 “culprits”:

1. The U.S. Government;
2. The U.S. secrets services (CIA, military intelligence, etc.);
3. The U.S. enforcement tools (FEMA, FBI, etc.);
4. The Israeli Government;
5. The Israeli secret services (Mossad, Shin Bet, Sayaret Matkal, etc.);
6. Jews in general;
7. So-called “Zionists” in general;
8. So-called “Neo-cons” in general (or even in particular – in persons of Dick Cheney & Bush Jr.);
9. Larry Silverstein (as a Jew and a “Zionist”, and the WTC owner, and a visible 9/11 beneficiary);
10. Several various combinations of the above.

The true 9/11 perpetrators and the true 9/11 beneficiaries are not in the list, of course. Moreover, the true 9/11 perpetrators could not be even suspected as such by the majority of thinking people. While for the majority of the general populace, the true 9/11 perpetrators do not exist at all (the Freemasons, actually, organized things in such a way that they supposedly “do not physically exist”, and any thinker who claims to the contrary, on an “intuitive” level is being perceived as a lunatic by the majority). In any case, the above list of the suggested culprits successfully screens the true perpetrators of 9/11 from the attention of the crowd. And this is exactly why this list exists. However, I wish that the reader of this book will not identify himself with the crowd. Therefore, Mr. Silverstein, as the one who occupies the valuable position No.9 in the above list, intending to shield the true 9/11 perpetrators, must be exonerated from the 9/11 complicity.

The point is that once we clear every position in the above list (i.e. no more suggested “9/11 perpetrators” would remain), the screen that is being currently provided by that list, will become transparent, and so those who hide behind it, will become visible, at last.

I hope that by my considerations above I explained the necessity to defend the hated personality of Larry Silverstein, the Jew and the so-called “Zionist”, clearly enough.

To begin with, let us recollect what we do actually know about Larry Silverstein in general and what we know about Larry Silverstein in connection with the 9/11 affair in particular.

As it has already become our tradition, let us begin with the relevant Wikipedia article²⁵⁹. I am quoting:

“...Larry A. Silverstein (born May 30, 1931) is an American Merchant, and real estate investor and developer in New York City...”

“...Silverstein was born in Bedford-Stuyvesant, in Brooklyn in 1931 into a Jewish family. Growing up, Silverstein enjoyed classical music and played the piano. He attended the High School of Music and Art in New York, and then New York University, graduating in 1952. During college, Silverstein worked at a summer camp, where he met his wife, Klara. The couple married in 1956, and had three children: Lisa,

²⁵⁹ http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Larry_Silverstein

Roger and Sharon. His wife worked as a school teacher, supporting the family on her salary for the first few years of their marriage while Silverstein attended classes at Brooklyn Law School...”

“...Silverstein has been involved in his alma mater, as founder and chairman emeritus of New York University’s Real Estate Institute, and as a trustee of the New York University Medical Center and Health System. Silverstein also has served as chairman of the United Jewish Appeal in New York, the Realty Foundation, trustee of the Museum of Jewish Heritage, and treasurer of the National Jewish Medical and Research Center in Denver. Silverstein is also a governor of The Real Estate Board of New York...”

Just read the above lines with your eyes open. Unlikely those so-called “good guys” behind the curtain could find any other person to better fit the role of a universally hated villain than Larry Silverstein. He is a Jew, he is rich, he is a musician, he is a lawyer, he is a trustee, treasurer and chairman of everything that is “Jewish”. He clearly has all necessary qualities to be hated by the crowd. And look at his face – wow! A person with such type of a face could only be a consummate villain (as per our infamous “intuitive” impression). In addition, Mr. Silverstein perfectly corresponds to the stereotype of a so-called “Zionist” (a so-called “Zionist”, in a perception of the crowd, is basically any and every Jew who is more or less rich or more or less politically active; of course, every Jew supports Israel – exactly as every Polish supports Poland or every Irish supports Ireland; so that means that every Jew is a “Zionist” by definition). Please, answer yourself honestly: if you were that serious 9/11 planner who needed to put some Jewish/“Zionist” “villain” as a front in order to distract attention from the real villains, would you ever be able to find any better candidate than Larry Silverstein? When it comes to me, I don’t think so. Larry is just the perfect one.

Let us continue reading the Wikipedia article:

“...Silverstein became involved in real estate, together with his father, Harry G. Silverstein, and then friend and brother-in-law, Bernard Mendik. In 1957, they established Silverstein Properties, as Harry G. Silverstein & Sons, and bought their first building, in Manhattan...”

“...In 1980, Larry Silverstein won a bid to lease and develop the last undeveloped parcel from the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey, to build the 47-story building 7 World Trade Center...”

Perhaps, before reading the above info, you might think that Larry Silverstein had nothing to do with the WTC and with Manhattan prior to his acquisition of the Twin Towers a few weeks before the 9/11 attacks? If so, now you could see that you were mistaken. In reality, Larry was in Manhattan since 1957, and on the WTC site – from 1980. It was actually him, who built the WTC-7 (of course, he knew about the nuclear demolition device under it, do not even doubt it; but in this case I am not talking about this particular – I am just establishing the fact that Silverstein was not “new” to the WTC by the year 2001).

Now, please, try to imagine: if the Port Authority of New York decides to get rid of the Twin Towers’ burden by privatizing them (as it was the case in reality), who would be the first and foremost candidate to buy/lease them? Of course, it would be Larry Silverstein, who already owns the WTC-7. Who else could it be? I hope it no longer looks “suspicious” to you that it was not any one else, but Larry Silverstein, who obtained the Twin Towers when they were put on sale? However, the shills and the crowd of simpletons, who followed the shills in step, try to present this fact as if Larry Silverstein moved to acquire the Twin Towers shortly before the 9/11 attacks in the most “suspicious” manner, being an “apparent” perpetrator.

There is another notion, quite popular. It suggests that the Twin Towers was a “burden” for its previous owners with its alleged “low occupancy rates” and with its alleged “asbestos problems”; correspondingly, it must have been a “losing bargain” for the new owner. Of course, this suggestion implies that there must have been some complicity between the evil Port Authority of New York and New Jersey and evil Larry Silverstein who supposed to have jointly benefited from such a “fortunate” destruction of the entire WTC complex that took place on 9/11. In order to disprove this suggestion, I refer the reader to an interesting article named “Losing money at the WTC?”²⁶⁰ I recommend you reading the entire article, of course, but I think it would do no harm if I place here a few quotations from it:

“The story...

Why would they want to demolish the WTC? It had been losing money for years. It's the most valuable piece of real estate in the world, but the buildings themselves were a disaster. Undertenanted, beset by asbestos problems, the owner, the NY Port Authority, had received warnings that it was sitting on a legal and financial timebomb.

²⁶⁰ http://www.911myths.com/html/losing_money_at_the_wtc.html

Gerard Holmgren http://www.assassinationscience.com/911_Manufactured_Terrorism.pdf

Our take...

The claim that the WTC was losing money and a very poor buy doesn't find much favour with leading researchers, but others still persist with it, and the idea is sometimes cited on Internet forums as a motive for demolition. Here's another example:

The Port Authority of New York and New Jersey had been losing money on the towers for years because of low tenancy. The financial loss was the real issue. There was also another vital issue – asbestos! The towers had become an albatross sitting on the most valuable piece of real estate in the world. The Port Authority had three choices: sell or lease them, pay for expensive asbestos removal or demolish them. The Authority had tried for years but were unable to sell the buildings – after all, what fool would take on the liability of asbestos? They couldn't demolish it. The health hazard of asbestos powder blanketing New York was legally unthinkable and totally out of the question. Expensive asbestos removal seemed to be the only option. <http://www.newswithviews.com/Spingola/deanna39.htm>

In this version of the story, Larry Silverstein must be a "fool" to take on something that's losing money, and would require such "expensive asbestos removal". But then the article goes on to tell us that actually the WTC was a bargain:

"Silverstein Properties, Inc., and Westfield America, Inc. will lease the Twin Towers, completed in 1972 at a cost of $370 million, and other portions of the complex in a deal worth approximately $3.2 billion – the city's richest real estate deal ever and one of the largest privatization initiatives in history." The cost of this lease was for a fraction of their real value.

(referencing <http://www.whatreallyhappened.com/silverstein.html>)

<http://www.newswithviews.com/Spingola/deanna39.htm>

The idea that Silverstein paid only "a fraction" of the real value for his lease, and so got the WTC cheaply, hardly seems compatible with the suggestion that the complex was a loss-making, asbestos-ridden white elephant. But is there any evidence for either claim?

Let's take the idea of "low tenancy", for instance. The New York Times didn't appear to think there were problems on May 31st 1998, when it produced an article titled "Commercial Property/Downtown; At the World Trade Center, Things Are Looking Up":

"...As the market for office space in midtown has tightened and rental rates increased, tenants have been looking to downtown as a cheaper alternative. Over the last year, those seeking large blocks of space have been finding them at the trade center, which had many vacancies as a result of the 1993 terrorist bombing and the shrinkage of the financial industry in the early part of the decade..."

"In January 1997 we had about an 80 percent occupancy rate," said Cherrie Nanninga, director of real estate for the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey, which owns the complex. Twenty percent of 10.5 million square feet of space is 2.1 million, which would be a substantial building by itself.

But as a result of the last year's work, Ms. Nanninga, said the complex is over 90 percent occupied and expects to it reach the 95 percent mark by the end of the year. That, she said, would be about as full as the center is likely to get, since there is almost always someone moving in or out. "Ninety-seven percent occupancy would be full," said Ms. Nanninga...

I think it is enough to quote. You can read the entire article yourself. However, now you could see that, luckily, the Internet is not inhabited by the loony conspiracy theorists alone; sometime you are fortunate to encounter on its wilderness thinking authors who are not devoid of common sense as well.

Coming back to Larry Silverstein as the suggested "perpetrator". Here are a few examples of how this notion is being presented by various conspiracy theorists:

A web article named "Israel did 9/11 - ALL THE PROOF IN THE WORLD"²⁶¹, dated by March 1, 2011, though, it no longer exists on the web – perhaps, it was hunted down by pro-Israeli shills and forced to be removed on the grounds of being “anti-Semitic” or something like that. The article used to begin with these words (try to read it carefully, paying a special attention to what was highlighted by me):

“...Figuring out exactly how 9/11 was done is the work of crime investigators or conspiracy hobbyists who will endlessly go on discussing and debating every minuscule and intricate detail of the event to no avail...”

I can't resist inserting here my comment saying that I totally agree with the above passage. Those “conspiracy hobbyists” indeed spent almost 10 years “endlessly discussing and debating” every detail of the 9/11 affair, without any result whatsoever. Though, I can not fully agree with the continuation of the author's thought that is quoted below:

“...It doesn't take a structural engineer to tell you that two 110 story buildings and a 47 story steel skyscraper plummeting to the ground at nearly free-fall speed requires the assistance of explosives. All you need is two eyes that can see and a brain that thinks to come to that sound conclusion. This is why it is of my opinion that more emphasis should be placed on the "who" instead of the "how". It should be obvious to anyone that discovering who did 9/11 is infinitely more important than discovering how they did it...”

It looks that the author of the above is right by saying that it is more important to discover “who” did the job than discovering “how” he did it. In the same time, of course, he makes the typical mistake of those who have a superficial knowledge of 9/11 – claiming that it is allegedly “self-evident” that the Twin Towers were collapsed at near free-fall speed through the use of the “explosives”. If he would only bother to look at some enlarged photos of the WTC steel perimeter- and core-columns, showing their thickness, he would no longer think that the notion of the “explosives” is allegedly “self-evident”. This is just as an example of how much the “intuition” supported by the “two eyes” could fail people – especially if these people have superficial knowledge of the subject, or, worse, when they are pre-conceived with some wrong ideas and are not completely free-minded. As you have probably concluded from the context of this book, it is impossible to establish “who” did the 9/11 job, without being able to understand “how” the actual job was done from the technical point of view.

Let us continue reading the above article in order to get acquainted with its author's thoughts on “who” did the 9/11:

“...The first step in the preparation of the 9/11 attacks was to secure the control of the WTC into private hands. This was crucial to the success of 9/11 because without complete control over this complex there would be no opportunity or possibility of setting explosive charges in place as the coup de grâce in bringing the towers to the ground...”

Oh, really? Stupid me... I thought it was exactly the other way around: that it would be much easier for the appropriate state security officials to set off the nuclear demolition scheme when the WTC was the state property and more complicated – when it was someone's private property... Don't you forget that they were obliged to formally ask Larry Silverstein's permission to deal the “coup de grace” to the WTC-7 (that was graciously permitted, though, by cooperative Larry)? Don't you think that if the WTC-7 were a state property, the U.S. officials would not need to bother asking any permission and could demolish it at their own discretion?

Someone, of course, could offer this suggestion: but it must have been Larry Silverstein who permitted the perpetrators to rent offices on those floors that corresponded to the “planes” impacts, and so to enable them to install the cutting charges and to bring in required pyrotechnic stuff? The answer will be this: why do you think that it must have been Larry Silverstein? Do you know that he only entered the ownership of the Twin Towers on 25 of July 2001? And do you think that all preparations for the “planes impacts” have started only since the last days of July? It is ridiculous to even think so. Calculations, preparations, rehearsals, and coordination of that unprecedented operation must have taken a few months, at least, if not a couple of years. It is pretty obvious that by the time Larry Silverstein became a formal owner of the doomed Twin Towers, the cutting charges had been already in place. This means that the office spaces around the “planes impacts” were rented out to the perpetrators long before the moment the Twin Towers were transferred to Silverstein’s ownership.

²⁶¹ <http://israeldid911notmuslims.blogspot.com/> (no longer exists)

I continue quoting (here the author of the article lists the 9/11 perpetrators, Larry Silverstein enjoying the position No.1 in the list):

“1) Larry Silverstein -- Larry is a Jewish American businessman from New York. Larry obtained a 99 year lease on the entire world trade center complex on 24 July, 2001. The towers were nearly worthless, being filled with asbestos, yet Larry “felt a compelling urge to own them”. Larry had breakfast in “Windows on the World” restaurant (107th Floor North Tower) every single morning. Larry was absent from this routine meeting on the morning of September the 11th. Larry’s two children, who also worked in the WTC, conveniently decided to take the day off as well. Larry Silverstein scored more than $4.5 Billion in insurance money as a result of the destruction of his complex. Silverstein was personal friends with Zionist media-magnate Rupert Murdoch, former Israeli president & infamous Zionist war criminal Ariel Sharon, as well as Israeli PM Benjamin Netanyahu. Silverstein was such good friends with Benjamin Netanyahu that he would speak with him on the phone every single sunday...”

As you can see from the abundance of the words “Jew” and “Zionist”, the author of the above text is clearly preconceived with the quite common notion that “all problems come from the so-called “Zionists” and from the Jews”. It is not surprising, because this notion is indeed very common even among the general populace, not to say that it is prevalent among all sorts of conspiracy theorists (or “conspiracy hobbyists” as the author of the above put it). However, the apparent pre-occupation with the thought that “Jews/Zionists are guilty of everything”, does not bring the author of the abovementioned article any closer to understanding the truth. Look: he obviously believes that it is possible to use explosives to cause the incredible strong steel-framed building to collapse at free-fall speed. He obviously believes that the WTC were indeed “filled with asbestos” and therefore they were allegedly “worthless” (means that he swallowed the concoction of the spin-doctors, who invented the story about “asbestos” only to be able to defend their masters against the complaints of the ground zero responders regarding their cancers).

Let us conclude: the author of the above “establishes” the alleged “guilt” of Larry Silverstein in regard to the Twin Towers destruction (and, by extension – in regard to the entire 9/11 perpetration, obviously, including also the Pentagon attack and the aerial attacks by the digital planes against the Twin Towers) based on only these facts:

- 1) Larry Silverstein is a Jew;
- 2) Larry Silverstein is rich (that’s supposed to mean that he is surely a so-called “Zionist”);
- 3) Larry Silverstein bought (or leased for 99 years which does not make any difference in principle) the rest of the WTC complex (the author does not mention that Larry owned WTC-7 from the very beginning) just shortly before the attacks;
- 4) Larry Silverstein acquired the Twin Towers despite their being “nearly worthless” being allegedly “filled with asbestos” because he suspiciously “felt a compelling urge to own them”;
- 5) Larry Silverstein insured the Twin Towers against the terrorist attacks shortly before the actual attacks and, as a result of the 9/11 attacks, he obtained a huge sum of money;
- 6) Larry Silverstein, along with his two children, who used to be in the Twin Towers every morning, on the morning of 9/11 all strangely changed their schedules and did not appear in the WTC;
- 7) Larry Silverstein was on friendly terms with other rich or politically active Jews – apparent “Zionists”;
- 8) and (the article above did not mention it, so I add it on behalf of its author), of course, Larry Silverstein has effectively “proven his guilt” by “pulling” the WTC-7 – exactly as he admitted in that infamous interview²⁶²

Let us imagine that we are serving the Justice and are about to deliver the judgment on the case of Mr. Larry Silverstein who is arraigned before our court, standing accused of perpetrating 9/11 for his supposed personal benefits as well as for the supposed benefit of his fellow “Zionists”. Now we will review the 8 abovementioned points one-by-one.

- 1) Larry Silverstein is a Jew. So what? Does this fact make him guilty of anything?

²⁶² Larry Silverstein’s interview in the PBS documentary “America Rebuilds” aired on September 10, 2002.

2) Larry Silverstein is rich. So what? Does it make him guilty? Larry Silverstein is a so-called “Zionist”. So what? (And why didn’t he migrate to Israel, by the way, if he is a “Zionist”? Do you know that Zionists by definition advocate migration of Jews to Israel?) Do you see how this suggestion could help us to establish his alleged “guilt”? I do not see it.

3) Larry Silverstein acquired the WTC complex shortly before the attacks. So what? Does it make him guilty? He was offered the Twin Towers shortly before the attacks, so he bought them shortly before the attacks. Do you see any inconsistency in this? When it comes to me, I do not.

4) About the “asbestos”, the Twin Towers “being nearly worthless”, and the “suspicious” “compelling urge to own them”, nonetheless. I think the suggestion that the WTC were “worthless” is an exaggeration. In reality, Silverstein managed to acquire the Twin Towers at a much lower price than they were supposed to cost (he got them for only $3.2 billion, while the WTC cost supposed to be $8 billion). Therefore he was indeed happy with the deal and had no reason to feel sorry for acquiring the allegedly “worthless” property.

Regarding the question of the alleged “asbestos”. I hope you still remember from one of the chapters above about the notion of the “WTC asbestos” that was concocted from scratch.

Thus, the entire argument about “asbestos” shall be void in the case of Larry Silverstein. Moreover, I am 100% certain that there were no questions of “asbestos removal” prior to 9/11 and Silverstein did not feel that he was buying “contaminated buildings” when he bought the Twin Towers. Therefore the “compelling urge to own” the Twin Towers (we are talking about Silverstein’s feelings quoted in the above article) could not be linked to the alleged “asbestos question” in any manner. It shall be understood that Larry Silverstein genuinely “felt a compelling urge to own” the Twin Towers simply because he owned the WTC-7 by that time and because the Twin Towers (as a symbol of American capitalism, after all) were indeed a coveted property, moreover, occurring within a domain of his interests. At least, I, personally, could not see anything suspicious in this matter. For me everything looks quite genuine and logical.

5) The fact that Larry Silverstein insured the Twin Towers “shortly” before the 9/11 attacks. Does this fact look really “suspicious” to you? Why? In my humble opinion, it is just normal to insure a newly bought property. Silverstein acquired the 99-years lease on the Twin Towers on July 24, 2001 (according to the abovementioned Wikipedia article). So, it seems pretty normal that after acquiring the lease, he undertook to insure his new property. Do you really see anything wrong in it? When it comes to me, I do not. The conspiracy theorists (and the shills, of course) cry loudly that Silverstein insured the Twin Towers “shortly before the attacks”. But look – if his lease was only approved on 24 of July, 2001, while the attacks took place on 11 of September, 2001, how long time did he have at his disposal to insure them? How could he have insured them “long before the attacks” if he has acquired them less than 7 weeks prior to the attacks only?

There is another well-known argument of the conspiracy theorists that is also being widely used by their gullible followers: Silverstein “made sure to include into the insurance contract a clause about terrorist attacks”. In their opinions, this constitutes nothing less than the “solid proof” of Silverstein’s culpability. Do you think so, dear reader? But what about common sense? Don’t you forget that in 1993 there was an attempt by the “terrorists” to topple one of the Twin Towers, known as the “first WTC car-bombing”? And don’t you think that Larry Silverstein had also heard of that event? And don’t you think that he was careful enough and should have presumed that another terrorist attack might happen in the future? Targeting particularly the Twin Towers as the tallest buildings of New York, moreover being a symbol of American Capitalism for one half of the world and that of the American Imperialism – for another half of it? Add here that by his profession Larry Silverstein was a lawyer. And even if he were not, he would be advised by other lawyers to include the “terror clause” into the insurance contract. Add here that Mr. Silverstein was on friendly terms with many top figures from Israel. It is logical to presume that his Israeli friends (who are preoccupied with the “terror” full-time, as you could probably imagine) would too advise him to include the clause of “terror” into the insurance contract.

Considering all of the above, does it still look “suspicious” to you that Larry Silverstein insured the Twin Towers “shortly before the 9/11 attacks” and that he “made sure to include the “terror clause” into the actual contract”? When it comes to me, I do not see anything suspicious at all.

6) The fact that Larry Silverstein and his children changed their usual schedule right before the 9/11 attacks (that allowed them to be absent in the Twin Towers during the events) indeed looks “suspicious”.

However, if you are fair and logical person who is to judge the case, you would not hold this “suspicious fact” against the Silversteins. Just use your common sense: if the Silversteins were an integral part of the 9/11 conspiracy, as suspected, then it would be logical to presume that they knew about the pending WTC destruction long before 9/11, wouldn't it? If so, it would not be logical for them to act as suspiciously as to change their schedule at the very last moment. Because by doing so they attracted a lot of attention of the primitive people.

I think it is pretty self-evident: if the Silversteins (or even only the eldest of the Silversteins alone) were indeed a part of the conspiracy to demolish the WTC, they would plan their own alibi long in advance. Do not even doubt that they would create a certain ironclad alibi (for example, by establishing their property office outside of the Twin Towers) and so they would not need to hurriedly adjust their morning schedule in the very last moment in such a suspicious manner.

Don't you think that Larry Silverstein and both of his children were interrogated by the FBI's folks, which repeatedly asked them why, why, why and why did they change their morning schedule right prior to the “planes” impacts? And don't you think that the Silversteins had to answer something that would not look suspicious to the FBI's interrogators? And don't you think that they indeed answered so that the FBI's interrogators were indeed satisfied as to their alibi?

I personally have no doubt that their answer was very simple. The Silversteins were Jews, after all. It is well known that all Israelis, and all Jews were warned in the earlier hours of that morning by the paging company named “Odigo” that there would be some major terror act expected, so the Jews were advised to stay clear of the WTC site. And so they did: no Jew and no Israeli was killed during the 9/11 events, because none of them has reported to work that morning. The Silversteins were obviously covered by the same case. Thus, they know what to answer to the FBI.

In my opinion, the fact that Larry Silverstein did not prepare his “alibi” in advance and decided not to go to the WTC in the very last moment (and so did his two children), is the most compelling proof of his innocence in this regard.

7) Larry Silverstein was on friendly terms with other rich or politically active Jews – apparent “Zionists”. So what? Do you see anything contradicting logic? A Jew is friendly with other Jews. Is it really wrong? A rich and influential man is on friendly terms with other rich and influential men? Is it really wrong? A rich Jew is friendly with other rich Jews. Do you see any inconsistency in this? When it comes to me, I do not. And neither could I see how this fact could contribute to establishing the alleged “guilt” of Larry Silverstein.

8) Larry Silverstein admitted to “pull” the WTC-7. Well. This is more interesting than the rest. Let us look into it more carefully.

As you probably understand, Silverstein did not actually “pull” the WTC-7, and he did not make that decision “to pull” it. He merely permitted someone else to demolish the last remaining piece of his WTC property. Moreover, the said permission of Mr. Silverstein could not be deemed as the “final permission to detonate the 150 kiloton thermonuclear charge in the middle of the populated city”. It was merely a formal permission of the WTC-7's owner (who submitted to the necessity of the “War on Terror”) to take over and to demolish his property; in other words, Mr. Silverstein merely agreed to sacrifice his property (that was insured anyway) to the cause. It was not Larry Silverstein who gave the permission to set off the third demolition nuke. Do not even doubt it. In his infamous interview²⁶³ he stated it quite clearly (I quote):

“...and I said, “We've had such terrible loss of life, maybe the smartest thing to do is pull it...” And they made that decision to pull and we watched the building collapse...”

Perhaps, we have to parse the above quotation in order to understand it properly. I repeat it in parts:

²⁶³ Larry Silverstein's interview in the PBS documentary “America Rebuilds” aired on September 10, 2002.

"...and I said, "We've had such terrible loss of life, maybe the smartest thing to do is pull it..."

If you are able to read "between the lines", you will understand that in the first part of his statement Larry Silverstein merely echoed someone else's request to allow him to "pull" the WTC-7. Now it will be much easier to comprehend the second part of his statement:

"...And they made that decision to pull and we watched the building collapse..."

I hope you realized, at last, that there is no guilt of Larry Silverstein in demolishing the WTC-7?

Of course, there are some additional questions in regard to the true role of Larry Silverstein in the post-9/11 performance. The question No.1 would, probably, be this:

Q.1. Why would Mr. Larry Silverstein make it as bold as to publicly admit that the WTC-7 was demolished on purpose, moreover, presumably with his personal permission?

A. Because Mr. Silverstein did not really care. After all, it was not him who made that stupid decision to demolish the Twin Towers that effectively deprived him, their legitimate owner, of his valuable property. Why should Larry Silverstein bother defending the stupid U.S. Government in this situation?

Moreover, it was not Larry Silverstein who made the decision (the unnecessary and unjustified decision, just to remind you) to demolish the WTC-7. It was the desperate U.S. Government who needed to get rid of the WTC-7 in order to hide the evidence of the existence of the nuclear demolition scheme. Silverstein did not actually need to demolish it. However, of course, he, being its owner, was asked if he would not object that the WTC-7 would be demolished too? And Mr. Silverstein has graciously permitted the U.S. Government to finish off the WTC-7. I hope you got the point. Now Mr. Silverstein does not play the role of the suspected 9/11 perpetrator who behaves so impudently that even partly admits his "guilt" – contrary to the expectations of the majority of observers who are driven by that "intuitive impression"... Mr. Silverstein rather plays the role of the deeply offended (by the stupidity of the U.S. officials) owner of the expensive and prestigious property. Hence his behavior and his seemingly "irresponsible" statements.

Other possible questions and answers:

Q.2. Wasn't Mr. Silverstein ashamed to make such a claim about the intentional demolition of the WTC-7 (if he personally were a part of the 9/11 scam)?

A. No. He was not ashamed; because he was not a part of the 9/11 scam (at least, not a proven part of it, judging by our inability to establish his guilt by all above considerations).

Q.3. On the other hand, wasn't Mr. Silverstein afraid of possible reprisals by the U.S. Government for publicly revealing such a seditious thing as the WTC-7 demolition?

A. Apparently, not. It is not that guilty Mr. Silverstein is afraid of the powerful U.S. Government. It is the other way around. It is the desperate, guilty, cowardly U.S. Government who is actually afraid of innocent, yet powerful Mr. Silverstein. While Mr. Silverstein could easily blackmail the U.S. Government, by threatening to reveal the truth of the nuclear demolition, the U.S. Government could do nothing to him. Moreover, the U.S. Government is definitely obliged to compensate Mr. Silverstein for the damage caused by its stupid action, and also to additionally award Mr. Silverstein for being so cooperative as to even graciously permit the U.S. Government to unnecessarily demolish the WTC-7.

Q.4. Wasn't Mr. Silverstein afraid that the U.S. Government could legally prosecute him for his violation of a non-disclosure contract?

A. Apparently, not. Moreover, I am pretty certain that Larry Silverstein did not sign any non-disclosure contract. While all smaller guys and gals who were privy to the awful secret of the WTC nuclear demolition were surely forced to sign some non-disclosure contracts, Mr. Silverstein presumably refused to do so. He was big enough. And he played the role of the "offended owner of the expensive property". He simply told those folks who dared to bring the non-disclosure contract for him to be signed something like this: "F___ off, guys. I will not sign anything. Got it?" And the guys got it. What they could do?

You have to understand, that it is possible to get someone's signature on a non-disclosure contract only in these situations:

- a) when you could threaten that person into signing it because the person is weak or guilty of something;
- b) when you can force that person into signing it because he is your subordinate and he values his position in the service more than a potential limitation of his future rights;
- c) when you could promise to that person a substantial salary/reward, so that he would be interested to limit his future rights in exchange for the money;
- d) when you deal with an idiot, who might sign such a non-disclosure contract merely because he is an idiot.

As you might guess, in the situation with Mr. Larry Silverstein none of the four potential provisions were applicable:

- a) he could not have been threatened (because he was obviously innocent),
- b) he could not have been bought with money (he was rich enough),
- c) he could not have been forced because he was not a government's employee,
- d) and he was apparently not an idiot.

Why should he sign such a non-disclosure contract, then?

Q. 5. And, yet, wasn't Mr. Silverstein afraid that such an unprecedented admission of his (I mean about "pulling" of the WTC-7) would cause a severe detriment to his own legal suit against insurance companies (where he impudently demanded nothing less than the double amount of insurance, by boldly claiming that the two aluminum planes impacted the two steel skyscrapers allegedly constituted two separate insured accidents, not just one)?

A. Apparently, not.

When it comes to demanding the double amount of the insurance, I could say that Mr. Silverstein obviously has a good sense of humor. He, being the owner of the steel Twin Towers that were built to sustain multiple impacts of the airliners, is told by the U.S. Government that they were penetrated by the aluminum planes? And not even by one, but by two??? What? And you want Larry to believe this crap? Do you sincerely believe that Larry Silverstein is as stupid as your gullible citizens who swallowed the Report of the 9/11 Commission? Well, Larry will believe you if it is so important for you; but then, folks, be so kind, to pay to the legitimate owner of those steel buildings the double amount of the insurance: exactly in accordance with your own claims.

You can not deny Larry Silverstein his sense of humor. I think in this case Mr. Silverstein was right. Considering that he played the role of the "offended owner with a good sense of humor", it would be fair to demand the double amount of the insurance. If I were him (I also have a good sense of humor), I would surely demand the double insurance as well, and, possibly, will try to find some solution to link the third "plane" (that penetrated the six capital walls of the Pentagon) to this case too and to demand even more on this account.

When it comes to the point whether the public admission of Mr. Silverstein about his permission to "pull" the WTC-7 could be detrimental to his legal suit or not, I am sure that he was confident that the guilty U.S. Government would force the court and through it – the insurance companies to pay anyway, so he did not really care.

Besides, I have some reasons to suspect that Larry Silverstein, who was apparently not a blubbing idiot, but rather a very serious businessman, moreover, with a judicial education, could not have mentioned the WTC-7 "pulling" in that interview accidentally. He must have done it on purpose. Perhaps, at that moment there was some "misunderstanding" between him and the U.S. Government in regard to some payment, so Larry used this opportunity to "politely remind" the Government that he was the person to be reckoned with. And, apparently, it worked out. Eventually, Larry Silverstein would get the insurance.

In this light, it is also interesting to reconsider another controversial step of Larry Silverstein. Whether you like it or not, it was him, Mr. Silverstein, who published those highly seditious photographs showing the craters left by underground nuclear explosions, edges of which showed evidence of molten rock on the WTC official web site²⁶⁴. It was because of him, because of Larry Silverstein, that the U.S. Government and its spin-doctors and shells were put into the most awkward situation and were obliged to hurriedly publish the most ridiculous story about the so-called “Ice Age glaciers”.

In fact, we have to be grateful to Larry Silverstein for that he made available to us the photographs that were used by me as evidence in the above Chapter of this book named “Independent confirmations of the nuclear demolition. Molten rock, thermal maps, “Ice Age glaciers” and “hard evidence””. If not Larry with his photos, some skeptical folks might not believe my claims about the underground nuclear explosions, perhaps.

Why would Larry Silverstein publish those incriminating photos? I do not know. It could be, however, that shortly before that the U.S. Government was intractable, or maybe it attempted to go back on some promise made earlier in regard to the compensation, so Mr. Silverstein decided either to “politely remind” the U.S. Government of its actual position, or to merely “teach it a certain lesson”. His “courtesy” of publishing those photos unlikely could be interpreted otherwise.

I do not like to indulge so much in guessing. I prefer to either state plain facts that are known to me, or to operate by irrefutable logic in order to establish such facts. However, just for the sake of intrigue, let me place here a couple of interesting excerpts from contemporary articles dealing with the WTC insurance claims.

To begin with, let me remind you, that according to the information available in the abovementioned Wikipedia article, Larry Silverstein acquired the 99-year lease of the WTC property (cost of which was approximately $8 billion) for only $3.2 billion. After that he insured it for $3.5 billion. After the WTC destruction, he attempted to claim the double of his actual insurance policy – i.e. $7 billion. Judging from the point of logic, there was nothing really wrong in it (even though above I referred to the apparently good sense of humor of Mr. Silverstein). To attempt getting only $7 billion (in new value of money) in order to be able to rebuild the property cost of which (in outdated prices) was $8 billion, was by no means a “rip-off”. It was a fairly reasonable demand (at least, my own in-born sense of justice suggests me so).

I hope the reader understands that when Larry Silverstein was a happy owner of the Twin Towers and the WTC-7, and of the entire WTC complex (including its shopping mall and the rest of its facilities) that cost $8 billion, it was one situation. He owned the most prestigious property, after all, that he could get good use of, depending on his approach. Moreover, he was simply proud of owning it. By contrast, when he owns radioactive Ground Zero, even though spelt in Capital Letters, and merely $7 billion in green papers, it must have given him a very different feeling. Add here that Larry Silverstein is a human, after all. And it is highly unlikely that he is pleased by the feeling of general hatred by the plebs around him. Just try to imagine yourself in his shoes?

Now coming back to the amount stated. But are you really sure that Larry Silverstein indeed got the “double amount” of the actual insurance policy as it is popularly “known”? I mean are you really sure that he got the $7 billion? To be honest with you, I was thinking so until very recently. The notion that Larry Silverstein has “defrauded” and “ripped off” the poor insurance companies and allegedly got the double amount of the [initially exaggerated] insurance policy was so widespread that I used to take it at its face value. And, of course, I was wrong. Because before you believe some rumor, although widespread, you have to study the actual subject.

Here are a few articles that I discovered on this issue.

Let us begin with this one, bearing quite an interesting name: “Larry Silverstein's *coveted deal went down in dust. Vows to rebuild twin towers. Jewish Magnate had just signed $3.2 billion deal on WTC towers”²⁶⁵, by Ernesto Cienfuegos; La Voz de Aztlan, dated by September 22, 2001.

“Los Angeles, Alta California - September 16, 2001 (ACN) A Jewish Real Estate Magnate won a coveted 99 year lease on the World Trade Center from the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey less than two months before they were leveled to the ground by terrorists. ...”

“...Silverstein, past president of the United Jewish Appeal in New York, received a very sweet deal for the World Trade Center from the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey. He received the 99 year lease worth $8 billion for a mere $3.2 billion..."

"...Silverstein wants to start rebuilding the structures according to Steve Solomon, his spokesman, however four employees of Silverstein's company who worked in the firm's management office on the 88th floor of the tower known as 1 World Trade Center have not been accounted for..."

When reading this, try to imagine, that Larry Silverstein, even though he is almost universally hated, is still a person who have corresponding personal feelings, and that his coveted deal indeed went down to dust – exactly as states the title of the abovementioned article.

Here is another informative article, "WTC Leaseholder Silverstein Loses Insurance Battle"²⁶⁶, by Amy Westfeldt, Associated Press writer, dated by April 29, 2004:

"...NEW YORK - World Trade Center leaseholder Larry Silverstein suffered a court defeat Thursday that means he won't get his $3.5 billion insurance policy paid twice over. In a partial verdict, a federal jury found that the majority of the insurers, who hold more than $1 billion of the policy, are bound by a form that defined the Sept. 11 terrorism as one event..."

And who, do you think, was that judge who denied "Zionist" Jew Larry Silverstein his rightful claims? You would be surprised to know that it was another infamous "Zionist" Jew, who, according to the logic of the loony conspiracy theorists, supposed to be Silverstein's fellow (I continue quoting the above article):

"...Judge Michael Mukasey decided to accept the findings [of the jury] and to send the jury back to resume deliberating..."

Do you remember who is Michael Mukasey? Well, if you don't, I am reminding you (citing from a corresponding Wikipedia article²⁶⁷):

"...Michael Bernard Mukasey (pron.: /mju:'keɪzi/; born July 28, 1941) is a lawyer and former judge who served as the 81st Attorney General of the United States..."

"...Mukasey was the second Jewish U.S. Attorney General..."

So, you can not deny the obvious: Michel Bernard Mukasey is a notorious so-called "Zionist", at least, judging by the contemporary standards of conspiracy theorists.

Could you imagine how deeply offended his fellow "Zionist" Larry Silverstein was, when he was denied the insurance claim?

Here is one more article, dealing with the insurance issue: "Insurers Agree to Pay Billions at Ground Zero"²⁶⁸, by James Estrin, The New York Times. This one was published on May 24, 2007. I am quoting:

"...The Spitzer²⁶⁹ administration announced the settlement of all insurance claims at ground zero yesterday, ensuring that $4.55 billion will be available for rebuilding the World Trade Center site.

The agreement, which the insurers described as the largest single insurance settlement ever undertaken by the industry, ended a protracted legal battle with insurers over payouts related to the terrorist attack..."

"...The insurance money is critical to the rebuilding effort, but it can cover only about half of the $9 billion cost of building five towers, retail space and possibly a hotel.

"The train is now moving down the tracks," said Larry A. Silverstein, the 76-year-old developer who had leased the World Trade Center complex six weeks before the Sept. 11 attack.

The Port Authority of New York and New Jersey, which owns the land at ground zero and built the trade center, will get about $870 million from yesterday's settlement, which is to go toward the cost of erecting the $3 billion Freedom Tower, the tallest and most symbolic skyscraper planned for ground zero, as well as the retail space at the complex.

Mr. Silverstein will get the remaining $1.13 billion for three large office towers to be built along Church Street, between Vesey and Liberty Streets.

As part of the deal, the Port Authority and Mr. Silverstein had to relinquish their claim that the companies owed more than $500 million in interest resulting from delays in making the payments..."

"...The insurance battle has been complicated from the start by the circumstances of Mr. Silverstein's lease of the trade center and the destruction of the complex by terrorists six weeks later. At that time, two dozen insurers had signed binders pledging to provide $3.5 billion in insurance coverage, but had not finished the documents.

An ugly dispute developed over which insurance policy was in effect at the time of the attack. Mr. Silverstein argued that since two jetliners had slammed into the two towers, he was entitled to a double payment on the $3.5 billion policy. But many of the insurers countered that they had agreed to a different policy that did not permit double claims.

In the sparring, the insurers attempted to paint Mr. Silverstein as a rapacious developer interested only in profiteering, while he asserted that the companies were being tight-fisted and shirking their moral and legal responsibilities.

At the end of two lengthy trials in 2004, a federal court found that the insurers owed a maximum of $4.6 billion, less than the $7 billion that Mr. Silverstein originally claimed but more than the $3.5 billion limit of the policy. Ever since, state, city and Port Authority officials have called on the insurance companies to make their payments in full..."

I think, this should be enough. As you can see, Larry Silverstein, in reality, has never got the alleged "$7 billion". Moreover, he was forced to relinquish his claims for several hundred millions USD in interest resulting from delays in making the payments. What he actually got, was not enough to rebuild anything even close to what he supposed to own as of September 10, 2001. Add here that he was supposed to get his due payments for rentals in all the WTC buildings, the underground shopping mall inclusive – during all these years – from September 11, 2001, till now. Instead of getting these due payments, he spent his money for protracted legal battles. Can you just imagine how much money he actually lost during all those years??

Let us make a few simple calculations based on the available digits of costs and insurance sums paid and based on our common sense. Here we would compare the state of affairs of Larry Silverstein as of 23 of July 2001 (when he only owned WTC-7 alone and not yet – the rest of the WTC complex), that as of 10 of September 2001 (when he was lucky possessor of the entire WTC complex, moreover, insured against the so-called "terror"), that as of 12 of September 2001 and during the next few years when he was engaged in legal battles trying to get at least some money and to rebuild at least the WTC-7, and the state of affairs, of his, as of today (December 2012) – when he got all the insurance pay-offs that he could squeeze from them and managed to rebuild the WTC-7. Of course, this comparison is rather simplified, but it will give you a clue, nevertheless:

Situation 1. On July 23, 2001, Larry Silverstein owned the WTC-7 that was his brain-child and his property from the very beginning, and he had a steady income from rentals in that building. In addition, he had, I presume, roughly $4 billion in cash (that would later be spent on acquiring the Twin Towers, on very much possible kick-backs, and on the insurance costs).

Situation 2. On September 10, 2001, Larry Silverstein owned the WTC-7 and the Twin Towers, in addition; though, he no longer had the approximate sum of $4 billion in cash that has been apparently spent. Of course, he had continued to have the steady income from rentals in the WTC-7, plus, he had started getting an income from rentals in the Twin Towers and, obviously, he was hoping for the best in this sense. Certainly, he had some projects in mind that would increase the efficiency of exploiting the office space in the newly acquired Twin Towers (otherwise, he would not buy them in the first place).

Situation 3. On September 12, 2001, and beyond that date, Larry Silverstein was reduced to the state of a "lucky" possessor of unprecedented piles of debris on radioactive ground zero; he no longer had any income even from his original WTC-7 (that was demolished without any valid reason, just to remind you); nor did he have the $4 billion in cash that supposed to give him some interest in any case. In addition, he was obliged to spent lots of money and nerves, and a few years of his precious time trying to get his due insurance. However, what he got, as a result of those prolonged legal battles with the insurance companies, was scarcely enough to rebuild the WTC-7 only (do not forget that costs as of, let's say, 2005-2006 were strikingly different compared to those in 1985-1986). In addition to this, Silverstein, who before those events had an image of a kind Jewish philanthropist and that of a self-made man, has acquired an image of the "rapacious merchant", plus a label of the potential (or even "the 100% proven") "evil Zionist 9/11 perpetrator" that seems to stick on his forehead forever.

Situation 4. Today (being said in December 2012), Larry Silverstein (still holding the title of the "100% proven Zionist perpetrator") possesses the new WTC-7 (that has a smaller footprint and correspondingly less leasable office space compare to the old WTC-7) plus little remaining money from the insurance pay-offs. And nothing else.

How much could Silverstein get from the rentals in all those buildings? We could only guess, because I was not able to find any mentioning of those sums in any publication, except only one piece of info; I quote (it was mentioned in the same Wikipedia article on the WTC-7):

"...In June 1986, before construction [of the initial WTC-7] was completed, Silverstein signed Drexel Burnham Lambert as a tenant to lease the entire 7 World Trade Center building for $3 billion over a term of 30 years..."²⁷⁰

I hope you are reasonable enough to understand that rental prices in general have apparently increased comparing the situation of the year of 1986 and the situation of the year 2004, for example? (By the way, I strongly suggest the reader, for the sake of general education, take a closer look at how the actual paper money has devalued, keeping in mind that the so-called "increase of gold prices" is merely an indication of the devaluation of the green paper, by comparing, for example, the "prices for gold" in 1986²⁷¹ with those in 2012²⁷².) In any case, it shall be presumed that the old WTC-7 (in the "old" prices) was giving to Silverstein an approximate income of $1 billion per decade, or $100 million per year. In the "new" prices it should have been more than that. This should mean that he lost at minimum $600 million (I would dare to presume that he lost more than that – may be around $800 million) from the rentals in the WTC-7 alone during the five years – from 2001 till 2006, before the new WTC-7 came into existence.

Let us now make an approximate computation regarding the insurance sums. Initially, as you remember, Larry Silverstein got only $3.5 billion that by the end of 2004, after prolonged legal battles, was increased to be $4.55 billion. In addition, in 2007, he got the last what he could get: another $1.13 billion.

How much was to rebuild the WTC-7? I do not know it for sure, but a Wikipedia article²⁷³ on the WTC-7 mentions the cost of new WTC-7 construction as only $700 million. I quote:

"...Construction [of the new WTC-7] was completed in 2006 at a cost of $700 million²⁷⁴. Though Silverstein received $861 million from insurance on the old building, he still had $400 million remaining in mortgage to pay off²⁷⁵. Costs to rebuild were covered by $475 million in Liberty Bonds²⁷⁶, which provide tax-exempt financing to help stimulate rebuilding in Lower Manhattan and insurance money that remained after other expenses..."

To me, the stated sum of "$700 million" allegedly required to re-build the WTC-7 looks hardly believable, considering that re-building of the much smaller Fiterman Hall cost $325 million²⁷⁷, while repairing (not rebuilding) of the damaged Verizon Building cost $1.4 billion²⁷⁸ (both digits are stated in the same Wikipedia article, by the way). Another consideration is this: it is known that even in the “old” prices as of 1986, the old WTC-7 was giving to Silverstein an income from rentals at the rate of roughly $1 billion per decade. This digit alone suggests that the cost of the actual WTC-7 building must have been much higher than the alleged “$700 million”; at least, it is logical to presume so. Note also, that according to the above quotation, Larry Silverstein was in a deep debt – he still had to pay the $400 million in mortgage, and no one was going to relieve him from that debt on account of the unprecedented 9/11 events. In any case, he was not able to start rebuilding the WTC-7 entirely at his own expense and had to go into another debt, still – by using $475 million in the so-called “Liberty Bonds”. Although the latter was the so-called “tax-exempt financing helped to stimulate etc.”, it was still not Larry’s own cash, as you probably understood; it was still a kind of loan that had to be returned. This means that, technically, Larry Silverstein is not the 100% owner of the WTC-7 today – because he still owes something for it.

Therefore, I think, it is safe to presume that after re-building of the WTC-7 and paying off the said mortgage and other debts, the remaining insurance money was roughly equal to that sum of cash, which Larry Silverstein spent on acquiring the Twin Towers in July 2001 and on insuring them against the so-called “terror”.

Let us now make a brief summary of the abovementioned 4 situations, comparing only the first and the last:

Situation 1. Larry Silverstein has the old WTC-7 (1,868,000 sq ft or 173,500 m² of office space) that gives him a steady income plus ~$4 billion in cash that gives him an interest too;

Situation 4. Larry Silverstein has the new WTC-7 (1,700,000 sq ft or 160,000 m² of office space, which is less than it used to be in the old building, and, in addition, he completely lost the due income from it for a period of five years) plus he had ~ $4 billion in cash that he has gotten back only recently (which means that he lost the due interest from these $4 billion for at least 7 years).

Now you could see, at last, that contrary to the common misconception, Mr. Silverstein did not become any “richer” on account of the 9/11 affair. He clearly lost his income, his precious time, his nerves, and his reputation, in addition.

Add here, that unlike a gullible man from the street who swallowed both – the TV footage of the aluminum “planes” penetrating structural steel and the shameless Report of the 9/11 Commission, Larry Silverstein, being the actual owner of the WTC, knew the entire truth. He knew for sure that aluminum could not penetrate steel and the “planes” were digital; and, he knew for sure that decisions to demolish the Twin Towers and the WTC-7 (that effectively deprived him of his property and drove him into the state of bankruptcy) were taken by the cowardly U.S. officials. Just try to imagine, that, considering all of this, Larry Silverstein apparently felt that he was robbed of his valuable property by the stupidity and cowardice (if not by the evil intent) of the U.S. Government.

To add insult to injury, Silverstein would never be able to own the most prestigious U.S. property again. The new “Freedom Tower”, the ambitious project that supposes to supersede the former Twins as the “Symbol of American Capitalism”, would not be built by Silverstein, but by the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey either. The retail space in the new WTC complex would also belong to the Port Authority of New York, at least, according to the text of the above Wikipedia article. Silverstein clearly got only the leftovers.

Nonetheless, almost all America perceive him now, at the best case, as a “rapacious merchant, interested only in profiteering”, at the moderate case – as a notorious “Zionist” Jew who demolished the World Trade Center for a reason of swindling the insurance companies, and at the worst case – as one of the 9/11 perpetrators.

Try to imagine yourself in his shoes once again. Try to recollect also, that it was Larry Silverstein, who “understood” the position of the desperate U.S. officials and graciously permitted them to demolish the last piece of his property – the WTC-7, which he actually built from the beginning. Try to imagine also, that Silverstein was sincerely hoping for some reciprocity – i.e. for some concessions from the U.S.

Government. And you will probably understand why he did publicly mention the “pulling” of the WTC-7, as well as why he did publish the scandalous photographs of the craters left by the demolition nukes on his web site.

If I were him, I would go even further – and publish blueprints of the WTC nuclear demolition scheme.

Anyway, at this point I would like to close this Chapter.

I genuinely feel pity for Mr. Larry Silverstein. And if you still think that it was him who perpetrated 9/11, I feel pity for you.

Debunking the debunkers. Interesting argument: famous physicist Jan Zeman vs infamous impostor Dimitri Khalezov.

As I have sincerely warned in the beginning of this book the appearance of my revelations might cause the annoyance of “professional” 9/11 conspiracy theorists and their annoyance could be rather extreme. The reasons why it could cause their annoyance is explained in detail in the corresponding Chapter “Warnings” at the beginning of this book, but I will repeat it one more time here. This is what I have said in the special Warnings chapter of the second full edition of my book back in 2009:

“This book is not a pleasant surprise for some guys who have spent by now 8 years of their precious lives chewing on multiple 9/11 “conspiracy theories”. Since this book does not leave a stone standing of these former theories, it might deeply injure the “conspiracy theorists” – by implying they have spent these eight years for nothing. So, don’t be surprised when this book causes an extreme annoyance of many of them.”

I can’t afford to leave this issue unaddressed, because some people might get the wrong impression. The FBI-appointed skills, who claim to be “debunkers”, have to be debunked and the Truth has to be preserved from their encroachment.

Here is a classical example of how the “professional”, full-time 9/11 folks try to “debunk” the truth about 9/11 – the truth they tried so hard to hide from you during the past 9 years...

This was forwarded to me by my friend Daniel Estulin along with his e-mail letter addressed to me:

When I was in Prague, one of the listeners at my conference is a famous physicist. I told him about 9-11 and sent him your Nexus article. Here is his reply. If you care to reply, his email is below

Dear Daniel,

Please see the attached by me commented version of the Khalezov’s article text. My commentaries are marked by yellow and red -for the places where he is out of reality. It is not a detailed rebuttal, but I commented just the most ridiculous claims, showing on multiple occasions he makes his numbers up and that he is either a disinfo or not a friend with his brain.

With Best Regards

Jan Zeman

In fact, this “famous physicist” Jan Zeman did not limit himself to sending this e-mail to Daniel Estulin as a private correspondence. He was quick to publish his claims on a quite popular web site – 911blogger.com: <http://911blogger.com/news/2011-01-16/150kt-nukes-demolished-wtc-debunking-dimitri-khalezovs-ridiculous-claims> under the name: “150kt Nukes Demolished Wtc ? - debunking of Dimitri Khalezov’s ridiculous claims”

I indeed care to reply as suggested by Daniel, though I prefer to make my reply public as well – by just including it to my book as an additional chapter. Below you will see the accusations and my answers to them. And I leave it up to you – to judge whose claims are ridiculous and whose are not. Zeman’s words are highlighted with yellow, my answers are highlighted with green, my actual former explanations that Mr Zeman tries to debunk here are in Italic and highlighted with blue. I did not dare to change any original words of Mr Zeman and, therefore, I had no choice but to retain his original orthography; so, please, do not blame me for certain grammatical errors of his:

Zeman: Even a liquid water is able to penetrate steel when having a sufficient kinetic energy.

Khalezov: This „famous physicist” insists that water penetrates steel because of its „kinetic energy”????

I beg to differ, even though I am not a physicist, but merely a humble military officer with only basic understanding of physics...The water in the well known example “penetrates” steel (and rock alike) NOT because of its kinetic energy, but because of its abrasion ability – the water acts more or less like a fine sandpaper in this case (that is applied for extended periods of time), and not as a source of huge kinetic energy. The physicist, considering that he is a scientist, after all, should not be allowed to exploit the general public’s gullibility in such a shameless manner, I think. I know that the skills have no shame, but still...

Zeman: See: <http://science.howstuffworks.com/environmental/energy/question553.htm> The kinetic energy of the planes was much more than sufficient to go through the outer walls of WTC with almost half of the area covered by just windows, in case of the 2 planes their impact speeds were 430 and 510 knots respectively see: <http://science.howstuffworks.com/environmental/energy/question553.htm> . This is more or less impact speed of bullet. There is no doubt among the people having some education in physics that the planes would be able to go through the outer walls of the WTC -at the given speeds corroborated by multiple official sources.

Khalezov: I don’t have much to say actually... Especially when he mentions the “official sources” as if it were the best authority in this argument... Well. This so-called „physicist“ insists that an aluminum plane could penetrate steel if it has sufficient „kinetic energy“??? He disregarded the point described by me below [here Mr. Zeman prefers “not to notice” my illustrative example that is right below his actual comment that is omitted here for the sake of space] – where it is explained that whether the plane hits the stationary Tower or the moving Tower hits the stationary plane, the physics of this process is the same. This is the same as to insist that if you have a plastic swatter to kill flies and you hit a fly at an impact speed of 1 meter per second, then the fly will be flattened, but when if you increase the speed of hitting the fly by the swatter to let’s say 300 meters per second then the fly will go clean through the plastic of the swatter? It is utterly ridiculous. And if you add here his claims about 430 and 510 knots (he apparently meant “ miles per hour”, because “knot” is actually a “nautical mile per hour”, but we will forgive this to Mr Zeman, considering that he is a “famous physicist”, not a “famous seaman”), can you recall the Professional pilots who have said that 510 mph is the full cruise speed of an airliner and is impossible to achieve on such a low altitude as only a few hundred meters above the sea-level? This man does not possess even a basic understanding about physics (or he prefers to pretend so and thus to exploit the general public’s gullibility), so there is nothing to discuss with him further, actually. But I will continue, nonetheless. This argument must be concluded.

Zeman: [here Mr. Zeman continues my quotation: However, they do not have much understanding about demolition processes in general and of the World Trade Center’s actual construction in particular] The Architects and Engineers for 911 truth I’m a member thereof surely have.

Khalezov: Here we come closer to the sad fact. If this man is a member of such an organization, it could only serve as a proof he is either: 1) a paid shill tasked with cheating the gullible public by brandishing his scientific credentials (most probably), or 2) a complete moron (which is highly unlikely).

Zeman: Nanothermite is of course existing military grade thermite, and what was scientifically proven to be extensively present in the WTC dust along with its residues in form of the iron rich microspheres was actually a substance called Superthermite – a nano-size particles thermite mixed into sol-gel with a hydrocarbone to enhance the explosive properties with released energy way above the conventional thermite an in some cases significantly higher than conventional high explosives. See fig 30 here: <http://www.bentham.org/open/tocpj/articles/V002/7TOCPJ.htm?TOCPJ/2009/00000002/00000001/7TOCPJ.SGM> Who tries to convince readers the nanothermite is „a mystic substance“ and that the scientific finds published in the peer-reviewed journal is a „conspiracy theory“ and the renowned scientists who published the finds are „conspiracy theorists“ clearly spreads a disinfo.

Khalezov: My charges are still the same: the so-called nano-thermite DOES NOT EXIST (except in sick imaginations of gullible followers of Prof. Steven Jones). And those who „found“ this alleged non-existent substance in the WTC dust in 2007 (rather than in 2002) – right after I brought the first version of my book to the US Embassy here in Bangkok, by the way, are merely false-witnesses at the FBI’s pay. But look at what kind of “argument” Mr. Zeman is trying to use! He claims that “renowned scientists” published their “finds” in the “peer-renowned” journal and that is why you must believe them! Nice logic... And what do you think about the [in]famous 9/11 commissioners? Do you think they are not “renowned”? And do you think that the Report of the 9/11 Commission is not “renowned”? And do you think that the NIST report on 9/11 is not “renowned”? Or do you think that the NIST engineers who concocted that report are not “renowned”? All of them are “renowned”. So trust them! Trust that the WTC-7 did not collapse and is still standing there, because the “renowned” guys did not mention this fact to you. And trust them that the Pentagon was hit by Flight 77. And trust them that the WTC-1 and 2 collapsed because of kerosene delivered by Al-Qaeda’s pilots. So why should you doubt the 9/11 proceeds if the “renowned” guys have already told you the truth in the last instance??? Thanks, Mr Zeman... You have really convincing “logic”.

Zeman: I've actually never seen the D. Khlaezov's credentials.

Khalezov: Wow! I loved this particular argument and was waiting for it a long time, to be honest. So, here is my answer: I don't need to show „my credentials“ to the morons, and neither to the shills. These could live happily without seeing my credentials. My primary credentials are my ability to implement elementary logic and my ability to invoke the common sense of my listeners. When you prove to someone that two plus two is four and you have four apples to illustrate this obvious fact, you don't need to produce a diploma of a certified teacher of arithmetic, do you? Or when you show a pre-9/11 dictionary and let people read what "ground zero" used to mean before September 11, you don't need to produce a diploma of a certified teacher of linguistics, do you? And when you act as an eye-witness you don't need to produce a certificate stating that the Lord God has indeed endowed you with a pair of eyes located somewhere in the upper half of your skull – just beneath eye-brows, do you? So what "credentials" is he talking about? But don't worry, dear Mr Zeman. I have the credentials, despite the fact that I do not actually need them when I deal with people who are not totally devoid of common sense. And I will produce these credentials before the court of law if necessary. Don't even doubt it. I am really a former officer of the Soviet Special Control Service, the military unit 46179. And I will prove it easily. Moreover, I could even bring a few colleagues of mine along with me. You don't have to worry so much about this.

Zeman: This is a demagogy, the bone marrow transplantation is general cure for leukemia, which nevertheless must not be a result of irradiation.

Khalezov: "Must not be a result of irradiation"? Leukemia in adults results because of two main reasons: 1) if someone was subjected to ionizing radiation, or 2) if someone was continuously subjected (for years) to inhaling benzene vapors. And if someone says a person who worked on GROUND ZERO got leukemia, and this is not necessarily from radiation, or to be more precise "MUST NOT BE a result of irradiation" you can make your own conclusion where this person works and for whom this person works... Perhaps those poor ground zero responders got their leukemia from benzene? Or our Mr Zeman wants to imply that so-called „nano-thermite“ that allegedly remained in the WTC dust also causes leukemia??? I leave the final judgment up to you, dear reader.

Zeman: [here Mr. Zeman continues my quotation: However, it is pretty easy for dishonest doctors and health officials to give some plausible "explanations" in regard to these cancers. They can claim that it is due to "asbestos", "toxic fumes", "toxic dust particles" etc. But when it comes to bone marrow damage, these deceivers are caught out. The bone marrow damage could only be caused by ionizing radiation] This ridiculous categorical claim is made by which medical experts?

Khalezov: By all medical experts, dear Mr. Zeman. By ALL medical experts, without any exception (only except by those who are involved in the 9/11 cover-up as paid shills, of course). There is simply no doctor existing in This World who would dare to claim that the bone marrow damage is not caused by radiation...

Khalezov: I am dying to know why Mr Zeman avoided commenting on the above definition of „ground zero“ [I refer to the multiple definitions of "ground zero" in various pre-9/11 dictionaries right above this text that Mr Zeman wisely skipped]. Perhaps he could say something in this regard? And explain to us, ignorant folks, lacking scientific diplomas, what "ground zero" has to do with so-called „nano-thermite“?

Zeman: silence in response...

Zeman: Such multiple 150kt charges on lower Manhattan is absolutely ridiculous claim, because such charges so shallowly positioned and inevitably resulting in uncontained nuclear explosion of such a yield would inevitably destroy vast surroundings of the buildings – see:

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Chagan_%28nuclear_test%29 and create long lasting radiation hazard.

Khalezov: I used to have this type of argument with many shills and trolls on many 9/11-related forums. So this particular argument allows me to recognize a professional shill (who was not lazy to spend his precious time to search for various nuclear explosions on YouTube in order to „debunk my „theory““ at any cost). But you have spent your precious time in vain desperately browsing the Internet, dear Mr Zeman, because this method doesn't work with me. A shallow sub-surface nuclear explosion in soft soil (like in Nevada) is one thing. The Russian Chagan 1965 explosion was by a "dry lake bed" and designed to create the crater. While the still CONTAINED underground nuclear explosion in granite rock of Manhattan (moreover, well-calculated explosion) is another thing. This cheap demagogy doesn't work again.

Zeman: [Here Mr Zeman forgets he is a "physicist", a member of the "Architects for 9/11 truth", and by no means a military specialist in secret, officially prohibited mini-nukes. So he decided to go as far as to undermine my credibility by implying that I am an impostor who knows nothing of the mini-nukes... Good luck to you, dear Mr Zeman... Let's see if you will succeed on such a field totally alien to you... Here Mr Zeman continues quotation from my text: ... Other popular names for these Small Atomic Demolition

Munitions are "mini-nuke" and "suite-case nuke", though the second one is probably not logically correct. In reality most of SADM resemble big pots weighing between 50 to 70 kilograms that could be carried as back-packs - so it is very unlikely that they could fit into any suitcase.] See the last picture: <http://www.brookings.edu/projects/archive/nucweapons/madm.aspx> me think I see a suitcase...
Khalezov: Mr Zeman wants you to find this picture of a suit-case nuke at the suggested link:

Poor chap... He thought he would surprise me... But he did not even bother to notice that I used the very same picture in the current book of mine – in the above Chapter named "Barbarian truth: the WTC nuclear demolition scheme and what benefits could have been extracted out of it..." But why should we see that picture of his? Why don't we see another one, instead (see the 1st picture) that resembles exactly the big pot: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Special_Atomic_Demolition_Munition ????

But in any case this is again a cheap demagogy. It does not work with me. Because below (just read below) I said in advance (perhaps especially to anticipate such demagogy of the shills?) that there are newer mini-nukes made out of Plutonium that could fit into a suitcase... [These words of mine were just beneath Mr Zeman's above claim, but he preferred "not to notice" them (I quote myself): However, there are also modern "mini-nukes" made of Plutonium-239, rather than of Uranium-235, and due to a much lower critical mass of Plutonium, their size could be significantly decreased - some latest Plutonium-based "mini-nukes" could indeed fit into an attaché-case.] Well done, Mr Zeman. My congratulations :) I hope the reader has already understood who you are and what methods you use in your desperate argumentation...

Zeman: [here Mr Zeman continues my quotation: Despite common misconception, there were no steel-framed skyscrapers ever been demolished by an implosion anywhere in the world prior to the WTC towers. Primarily, because the most of skyscrapers are new buildings and their time to be demolished has not come yet. The tallest building ever demolished by an implosion was only 47-stories high - it was the Singer Building in New York City that was built in 1908 and demolished in 1968 due to its being obsolete. This building was a much weaker structure compare to incredibly strong hollow-tube type steel-frame skyscrapers being built today. So, despite common misconception, it is not possible to demolish a steel-frame building by a commonly known controlled demolition (implosion) scheme.] This is a ridiculous claim, of course it is possible to demolish steel-frame building using conventional explosives.

Khalezov: Ridiculous? Well. Could Mr Zeman show us a single example where conventional controlled demolition methods were used to demolish a modern steel-framed skyscraper? Akin to the WTC-7, the Twin Towers of the WTC, or the Sears Tower in Chicago? I am dying to see a real example supporting his claim that sounds like the "truth in the last instance"?

Zeman: silence in response...

Zeman: [Mr Zeman continues my quotation: In bygone days when buildings were brick-walled and concrete-panelled, their bearing structures used to be concrete supporting columns and concrete supporting girders. Sometimes these concrete bearing structures were reinforced by insertions of metal bars, but sometimes they were plain concrete.] Where there is „plain concrete“ in bearing structures of highrises? This guy must be joking...

Khalezov: Here Mr Zeman resorts to the outright cheating by misinterpreting me; he seeks to undermine my credibility by presenting me as a silly guy. But this cheap trick does not work with serious people, dear Mr Zeman... If you read my quotation carefully you will see that I did not mean that "bearing structures of high-rises" were made of plain concrete... I meant that bearing structures of OLD TYPE BUILDINGS IN BYGONE DAYS were [sometimes] made of plain concrete. Even though I am not a "building expert", like you and your colleagues, I still know about architecture slightly more than you know about mini-nukes. So you will have no chance to cheat me in such a cheap manner.

Zeman: [Mr Zeman continues my quotation: The Twin Towers featured load-bearing perimeter steel columns (square in cross-section) positioned one meter from each other on the Towers' facades to form an exceptionally rigid structure, supporting virtually all lateral loads (such as wind loads) and sharing the gravity load with the core columns. The perimeter structure contained 59 such columns per side.] In fact 60 columns – see eg http://911research.wtc7.net/wtc/evidence/plans/doc/pac1TowerA/A-A-142_2.png Khalezov: I opened the image proposed and calculated the number of columns in a lower horizontal row. There are 59. I counted twice. There are 59. Then I counted them in the vertical row and there were 59 again. Then I thought maybe I had a problem with my eyes, and so I printed the image on my printer in an enlarged form and I used a pencil to strike out each column as not to make any mistake in counting. There were 59 in the horizontal row and 59 in the vertical row. It is confirmed. Here is the disputed picture from the link suggested by Mr Zeman. You can make your own calculations:

Here Mr Zeman tried again to undermine my credibility by a very cheap trick. But he lost again. The shills who pretend to be members of the „Architects for 9/11 truth“ know less about the exact number of the WTC perimeter columns than a humble military officer from a distant country who has no clue about architecture in general... But even if I were wrong and the shills were right and the disputed columns were indeed 60 and not 59, would it change anything in principle? I doubt it. The WTC was demolished by the nuclear explosions and there is abundant proof of it – including the legal definition of “ground zero” in pre-9/11 dictionaries. What does it have to do with the exact number of the perimeter columns? Even if they were indeed 60 rather than 59, would it mean that “ground zero” means a “place where a building was demolished by so-called “nano-thermite””? This is again the cheap demagoguery intended to undermine my credibility at any cost, even by such disgusting tricks. But luckily to us, who stand for the 9/11 truth, the shills made a big mistake here – not a mistake in their counting the number of the columns, I mean, this is a small mistake. They made the big mistake of showing us their true faces by revealing their cheap disgusting methods of conducting arguments...

Zeman: [here Mr Zeman refers to my description of the photo used in this book where several remaining perimeter- and core columns found on ground zero are shown - which I suggested belonged to the upper parts of the Twin Towers and therefore they were spared by the general pulverization. Mr Zeman (perhaps not even "he" but his masters) has noticed that the rectangular core column on the disputed photo was too thick and it might belong not to the upper part of the Tower, but to its lowest part. Thus he gladly noticed my possible mistake and is quick to "debunk" my entire "theory" by jumping at this point] Considering the wall thickness, the pictured core column in forefront clearly belongs to the lowest part of the WTC core. See: <http://wtcmodel.wikidot.com/nist-core-column-data> -and who says otherwise apparently doesn't know much about the WTC core structure.

Khalezov: Well done, Mr Zeman. You have clearly lost all your previous points and this is the very first point that you appear to win. But don't be in a hurry to claim your supposed laurels of a winner of this entire argument. Yes, I checked the technical specifications suggested by you (or by your masters?) and I found that indeed due to its thickness the disputed core column most probably belonged to the lowest part of the Twin Tower, so my former suggestion (that it belonged to the Tower's top) might have been wrong. But does it change anything in principle? All you did here by accidentally winning this separate point in the argument you proved that your colleagues (professional architects) know about the details of the WTC construction more than the former Soviet military officer who knows nothing about architecture in general and has very little knowledge about the WTC construction in particular. But do you really think that in such a cheap manner you could really undermine my credibility when it comes to the rest of my claims? Ha-ha-ha... Poor Mr Zeman... How about "ground zero" dictionary definition? Well. I will adjust my claims now based on the newly discovered evidence as I always do (because I am quite flexible and can easily admit being wrong when I am really wrong). Now I will say that the disputed thick core column was spared by the general pulverization not because it belonged to the very top of the Twin Tower (that was undamaged at all), but to the lowest part of the Tower's corner spared by the general pulverization because of occurring within the "dead space" on the way of the crushing wave. Anyone who read my explanation in the book carefully enough has noticed that a single corner in each of the Twin Towers managed to survive and it is clearly seen in the photographs. And I explained in the precise detail why this particular phenomenon took place. Just read my book and see it yourself. So, what did Mr Zeman actually win here? He won nothing at all. Did he prove to us that the WTC Twin Towers were not pulverized? No. The WTC Twin Towers were indeed pulverized and everyone knows it – the steel Towers were reduced to complete, fluffy microscopic dust that allowed the heavy solid Towers' tops to fall at near freefall speed, because dust offered resistance no more than would air alone. So what has Mr Zeman proved here to us? That he knows about the actual details of the Twin Towers' construction more than the humble author of these lines does? But I did not even doubt it. I have never claimed that I knew about the WTC construction any better than a professional architect does. I only claimed that I know one small, but very important detail of the WTC construction: about its in-built emergency nuclear demolition scheme and nothing more than that. So, judge yourself – what Mr Zeman has won in this particular point. Nothing. He only demonstrated his actual spite one more time (and since he demonstrated his spite in the course of the previous questions-answers it is nothing new for us) and he proved one more time that his criticism is not constructive at all and it is driven by anything but the desire to establish the Truth...

Zeman: [here Mr Zeman is so happy with winning the abovementioned point that he can't stop:] The wall thickness of the core columns varied largely floor-by-floor – see: <http://wtcmodel.wikidot.com/nist-core-column-data> . The wall of the columns was really considerably thinner at the upper floors – like 0.7 inch at last floor of CC1001, but some lower floor columns had the wall as much as 6,75 inches thick. The Khalezov's „information“ again shows his lack of knowledge about the WTC core structure, he clearly simply makes the numbers up – this his numbers prove it and it is clearly no „typos“ - so this confirms behind reasonable doubt his credibility is zero.

Khalezov: As you can see that Mr Zeman now shows his true face. If his criticism were constructive to any extent he would accept some parts of my explanation where I am clearly right (such as my explanations about the dictionary definitions of "ground zero" for example, or my claims of being an eye-witness who due to his former position in the military service knew about the existence of the WTC nuclear demolition scheme) while correcting some minor points where I am indeed wrong (which is forgivable to me due to my limited knowledge of the actual WTC construction – I guess you realize that I am not the WTC architect, after all). If Mr Zeman could behave in such a manner it would be a fair approach that is being traditionally practiced during all types of arguments between the parties that respect each other and aim to find the Truth. However, here you can see exactly the opposite. Clear disregard to all points that were beyond any doubt established by an opponent, an unprecedented spite, an utter disrespect to the opponent, outright personal insults, and so on. And now Mr Zeman still hopes that with all his poor efforts he would "beyond doubt" undermine my credibility making it "equal to zero"?

Poor chap... I will leave the final judgment to you, of course, but I hope you will establish the true winner in this argument, dear reader.

Zeman: [here Mr Zeman continues my quotation: The Towers were simply too high and too rigid - their steel cores would have been simultaneously broken in too many spots on every floor, which no one could afford, and even if they could, still, such a solution would not lead to the desired effect - there would not be any guarantee that such a high-raised structure would fall strictly down to its foot print. It might just scatter its debris as far as a quarter of a mile, considering its mere height. So, it was impossible to bring the WTC Towers down by any kind of traditional controlled demolition] Again – a ridiculous claim, not supported by anything. Shape cut charges are able to cut steel of mere inches thick. Even just the thermite ones - see: <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=5d5iloCil8g>

Khalezov: Do you find my claim really ridiculous? As Mr Zeman and his colleagues do? He says that my claim is “not supported by anything”. How about the common sense and elementary logic? What if I say that my claim is supported by common sense and elementary logic? Would you argue? Could you just imagine that the Twin Towers were almost half-kilometer tall? And could you read the entire quote of mine that Mr Zeman comments on? And see yourself if my claims are supported by common sense or not? Just make your own conclusions. Do you know, by the way, what is the standard “safe distance” for making emergency exits of air-raid shelters? I mean how far from the walls of brick-walled buildings such emergency exits of the air-raid shelters must be in accordance with requirements established by the Civil Defense Service? In case you don't know I will reveal this small secret to you. The emergency exits of all air-raid shelters must be located not closer to brick-walls of neighboring buildings than the height of the corresponding wall divided by two plus 3 meters at minimum. Let's say that the tallest neighboring wall (brick-wall) is 25 meters high. Then the emergency exit of the air-raid shelter must be located not closer than: $25/2+3=15.5$ meters to the respective wall. Do you see logic in such a standard requirement of the Civil Defense Service? When it comes to me I see it. Because if the wall collapses due to being hit by a bomb its debris will in the worst case cover a distance of about half-height of the wall (true to brick-walls, while for steel-walls it would be obviously more than that). So what do you think now – how far the debris could fly around if a building with a height of over 400 meters is destroyed? Now at last do you see logic in my claim that Mr Zeman tries so hard to debunk by authoritatively calling it “ridiculous”? Of course, no one could afford such a tall building (especially steel framed, not even brick-walled) to be destroyed in such a manner. It must have been either melted completely or pulverized completely. Hence the WTC nuclear demolition scheme. So whom will you judge to be a winner of this particular point?

Zeman: [here Mr Zeman forgot that he is a physicist, not a specialist in underground nuclear explosions and so he decided to finally and totally undermine my credibility by competing with me in mathematical calculations; he continues my quotation: Just as an example: detonation of a 150 kiloton thermonuclear charge buried sufficiently deep in granite rock would result in creation of a cavity measuring roughly 100 meters in diameter] This is completely ridiculous claim which shows Khalezov is not even able to interpret the above table he cites. [here Mr Zeman refers to my table that shows volumes of vaporized and melted materials of various kinds by one kiloton of underground nuclear explosion] -It clearly shows 1kt of yield can evaporate 69 ton of granite – this means the 150 kt can evaporate $150 \times 69 = 10350$ ton of granite according to the table. Granite has the density of $<2800 \text{ g/dm}^3$ so the volume of the 10350 ton of granite is $10350/2.8$ means 3696 m^3 of granite, which if it would be in a shape of ball would have the diameter of ~ 9.5 meters. The ball of 100 meters diameter would have the volume of 4188790 m^3 (four millions one hundred eighty eight thousand seven hundred ninety cubic meters!!). So the claim about the 100 meter in diameter cavity in granite created by 150kt nuke is more than 3! orders of magnitude out of the actual physical possibility -just according the above by Khalezov cited table. This alone shows Khalezov is unable even of a basic math and it again shows clearly his „nuclear intelligence“ is a mere idiocy.

Khalezov: Mr Zeman has again demonstrated his unprecedented spite – by both – his methods and his terminology (I mean usage of words such as the “idiocy” would be unlikely counted fair in a constructive argument between the two respecting parties). However, even leaving aside his spite and terminology, unbecoming to a “famous scientist”, we could still successfully argue with the actual point of Mr Zeman. The problem of Mr Zeman is that he again attempted to appeal to the supposed gullibility of his listener by cunningly avoiding mentioning the fact that when I talked about 100 meters diameter cavity I am talking about the SECONDARY size of the cavity. But when I talked about the vaporized and melted rock (Mr Zeman wisely “forgot” about the melted rock) I said that the diameter of the cavity would be SMALLER than that. The point is that the final size of the cavity results not only from the actual disappearance of the former rock, but also from the expansion of the cavity from its “primary” size to its “secondary” size due to the high pressure of the gases inside the cavity at the expense of the neighboring areas of the still solid rock. This was, by the way, the very point that my entire explanation of the WTC pulverization was based upon. However, Mr Zeman preferred “not to notice” it and he wants you, dear reader, not to notice it either. But this cheap trick does not work with me, dear Mr Zeman... If you would only watch my video carefully you will notice that in the part 09 (of 26) of the video on the 0.29th second from the beginning of the clip my interviewer asks this question: “and in the case of 150 kiloton it will be a hundred meters [the size of the primary cavity that results from the disappearance of the vaporized rock]?” and my answer to this particular question is (on the 0.32th second): “hundred meters is a final size of the cavity, the secondary size; the primary size will be a little bit smaller”. Moreover, if you read the entire explanation of mine in this book you will surely notice that when I talk about the 100 meter diameter of the cavity left by the 150 kiloton nuclear explosion in granite rock I always refer to the final, secondary size of the cavity. And, finally, what does Mr Zeman think about the size of this strange hole under the WTC that appears to be covered with molten rock (see a picture below)?

This image appears at WTC site set in the archive gallery <http://www.wtc.com/media/images/archive> in the Glacial Rock Formation related web page: <http://www.wtc.com/media/images/s/archive-glacial-rock-formation-at-wtc-site>

Does Mr Zeman want to say that the above cavity is only 9.5 meters in diameter? Or does he want to say that I badly miscalculated the actual explosive yield of the demolition charge and the real explosion under this Twin Tower was in the order of Megatons, rather than the 150 kilotons? Or he would rather prefer to claim that this cavity was made by so-called “nano-thermite” – to support his own school of “thought”?

Zeman: silence in response...

Khalezov: Don't worry, Mr Zeman. I did not make any miscalculation. The cavity shown at the above photograph has been indeed made by the 150 kilotons nuclear explosion, despite your claims that the cavity left by the 150 kilotons should only leave a cavity of “~9.5 meters in diameter”. Any person who has basic knowledge about underground nuclear testing knows that a 150 kiloton charge detonated in granite rock would leave a final cavity of 100 meters in diameter. On the other hand you can't claim that the above cavity was left by a megaton-yield nuclear explosion. Even if you don't want to be “a friend with mathematics”, as Mr Zeman puts it, you can still be “a friend with logic”. And logic should tell you that if in accordance with the “1976 Peaceful Nuclear Explosions Treaty” the maximum yield of nuclear explosions for civil industry purposes could not exceed 150 kiloton, then it was exactly the 150 kiloton nuclear charge used to create the above cavity.

Khalezov: Since Mr Zeman has been noticed taking an unfair advantage by manipulating the digits (that I tried my best to avoid doing in this book – since I did not want to scare away my reader by formulas and calculations) I have no choice than to unmask the unfair practices of Mr Zeman who apparently uses the gullibility of his listener and does so in the most shameless manner. One time I have already caught him lying when he offered to calculate the exact number of the perimeter columns claiming that they were allegedly 60 while they are in fact only 59. Now I will catch him lying for the second time. In the last of his most spiteful accusations above he claims (I quote): ...means 3696m³ of granite, which if it would be in a shape of ball would have the diameter of ~9.5 meters. The ball of 100 meters diameter would have the volume of 4188790 m³ (four millions one hundred eighty eight thousand seven hundred ninety cubic meters!!) Mr Zeman even repeated his alleged digits in words so that it might add the credibility to his cheating and he even added a couple of exclamation marks at the end of his claim... Let's see if this "famous scientist" is really honest in his play with the digits. I guess it is well-known to everybody that the volume of a sphere is being traditionally calculated by this formula:

$$V = \frac{4}{3} \pi R^3$$

where V is a volume, R is a radius (not a "diameter", but a "radius", please, don't miss to notice this detail) and π is a well-known constant roughly equal to ~3.14159... Now let's make our own calculations. For those who are lazy to calculate there is a very nice on-line calculator of sphere volumes that is located on this web page: http://www.webmath.ru/web/prog41_1.php Let's check first if the sphere with the diameter of 9.5 meters would indeed have a volume of 3696 m³ as claimed by Mr Zeman. If the diameter of the cavity is 9.5 meters that means its radius is exactly the half of it. Meaning that the radius of the cavity with the volume of 3696 m³ should be equal to 4.75 meters. Let's check if it is true or not. $4/3=1.33333333...$ while $4.75^3=107.171875$; and π is known to be ~3.14159... Now we multiply the three = the resulting volume is ~449 m³ only. Quite far from 3696 m³ claimed by Mr Zeman. Isn't it? Let's double check using the abovementioned on-line calculator where for our convenience we only need to enter the radius in meters. We enter 4.75 and click "Calculate" button and the resulting volume according to the on-line calculator is: 448.9205 m³ which is roughly the very same ~449 m³ we calculated manually. Here we caught Mr Zeman trying to cheat us. Let's check his second claim – that a "ball of 100 meters in diameter" would allegedly have a volume of 4188790 m³. The abovementioned sphere would have a radius of 50 m. Doesn't it? Since the radius is known to be a half of a diameter. Let's calculate what volume will have such a cavity. $4/3=1.33333333...$ the $50^3=125000$; and π is still ~3.14159... We multiply the three = 523598 m³. Let's for the security sake double-check the result with the on-line calculator. We enter the radius of 50 meters, and the volume is 523598.7756 m³ – the result by the on-line calculator is roughly the same we have calculated manually. Thus we got only five hundred twenty three thousand five hundred ninety eight – compare it against the "four millions+" calculated by Mr Zeman. Can't we say now that is the cheap trick implemented by Mr Zeman who intentionally "mistook" a diameter for a radius in both cases? Do you think that Mr Zeman does not know the difference between the "diameter" and "radius"? Don't be so naïve... Mr Zeman claims to be nothing less than a scientist. Moreover, he was able to even discover the density of granite in order to make these calculations. Do you really believe that after all of that he "inadvertently mistook" the diameter for the radius? Which resulted in his final digits being just only 10 times bigger than the true digits? Well. I don't believe he made this by any honest mistake. Mr Zeman did that on purpose – he just wanted to debunk the Truth at any cost, even at the cost of cheating your supposed gullibility, dear reader. To be honest with you I hate digits and I hate them even more because I know that the absolute majority of my readers will hate me for these formulas. But you see – it was not me who decided to play this game. It was the FBI-appointed shills who try their best to debunk my "theory". So, I had no choice than to defend the Truth... Anyway, once we are already here, why not make just one more calculation – to close this case once and forever. Thanks for our dear Mr Zeman who has kindly provided us with the exact digit of the density of granite which he claims to be <2800 g/dm³, now we could calculate how much granite would disappear in one way or another during a 150-kiloton thermonuclear explosion deep underground. As you remember from the table used at the beginning of this book one kiloton of nuclear explosion will vaporize 69 tons of granite and melt roughly 300 (±100) tons of granite, in addition. So, as a result of the nuclear explosion of 1 kiloton ~370 tons of granite rock will disappear. If a nuclear explosion has a yield of 150 kiloton then the mass of granite that will disappear in one way or another will be 370 X 150 = 55500 tons. Now let's calculate how many cubic meters it will be (using the same method as used by Mr Zeman above) $55500 / 2.8 = 19821 \text{ m}^3$. Using the same on-line calculator in a reverse manner (calculating the radius when the volume is known) we will have the radius ~17 meters. Meaning the diameter of the primary cavity in this case is ~34 meters. Add here that the actual density of granite is actually 2.65 g/dm³ which is less than 2.8 we have used, and note that the nuclear explosion could melt not 300, but in certain cases even up to 400 tons (note the "±100" amendment). Now add here that the actual cavity will be additionally expanded by the pressure of the gases from its primary size to its secondary size and you will get the full picture. And this picture will be in perfect compliance with the abovementioned photograph showing the strange hole under one of the former WTC buildings. Now make your own judgment – who won this argument: me or Mr Zeman who calls my claims a “mere idiocy” while “slightly” exaggerating his own digits just by only 10 times...

Zeman: Again, see what in fact ONE real 140 kiloton nuke did in the case of the Chagan test – it was positioned 200m deep (not just Khalezov's 77 meters deep) and it nevertheless created a crater of 400 meters in diameter and 100 meters deep – which clearly means there would be a lake now at WTC site if there would be only one 150kt nuke exploded on 9/11, not speaking about three nukes of such a yield...

Khalezov: This is because in Chagan the nuke was intended to excavate a lake in a soft soil and not to demolish a steel skyscraper built on granite rock. Hence the difference. Add here that in addition to the soft soil in Chagan (that is incomparable to the granite rock in Manhattan) the two nuclear explosions were earmarked for distinctly different purposes. In Chagan it was intentionally (again INTENTIONALLY) designed to excavate the crater in order to create an artificial lake and so the position and the required yield of the nuclear charge were calculated accordingly. While in Manhattan it was intentionally (again INTENTIONALLY) designed to demolish a single skyscraper and to cause as little damage as possible to the surroundings, and so the position and the yield of the nuclear charge were calculated according to the task. And, of course, those who made these calculations undoubtedly took into consideration the actual strength of surrounding rock. The shells lost this argument again. And this is not for the first time. I used to have this argument in various forums with variety of shells. They just love the above example, but they always lose this type of argument.

Zeman: [here Mr Zeman continues my quotation: ...nuclear demolition schemes of the WTC building # 7 and that of the Sears Tower in Chicago were calculated in the same way.] By whom? By the mathematicians of Khalezov's grade?

Khalezov: Mr Zeman still makes it so bold to imply that he is a better “mathematician” than me... Please, review the calculations of the cavities' volumes above just to refresh your memory when it comes to the renowned mathematical abilities of “scientist” Zeman and compare them with those of the humble author of these lines. Or, better, try to remember how he counted a number of the perimeter columns according to his own proposal – he can't even count to 60 and can not make a proper calculation of a volume of a sphere using the well-known formula. And after all of that Mr Zeman dares to use passages such as “mathematicians of Khalezov's grade”... This man has no shame, indeed. To answer his actual question: No, Mr Zeman, these were calculated not by “the mathematicians of Khalezov's grade”. And not even by mathematicians of Zeman's grade. They were calculated by mathematicians employed by “Controlled Demolition Inc.” And these mathematicians were professionals when it came to calculating the effects of underground nuclear explosions.

Zeman: [here Mr Zeman decided to go for the outright demagoguery in order to debunk my claims at any cost – even by such cheap tricks. He continues my quotation: However, we have considered above the physical processes which are true to an “ideally deep” underground nuclear blast. When a nuclear charge is buried not sufficiently deep, a picture will be slightly different] It will be not „slightly different“, but completely different. -If the energy of the blast would be sufficient enough, it will create a crater, because the pressure created by the blast will uplift the rock layer above the blast and blow it aside

Khalezov: Mr Zeman speaks so authoritatively that one might presume that he is a specialist in nuclear explosions. But in reality, as you might guess, our Mr Zeman has got his first ever knowledge about the nuclear explosions from Wikipedia articles and from watching a few clips published on YouTube. I have to disappoint you (and those who stand behind you), dear Mr Zeman. There is a HUGE difference between a shallow sub-surface nuclear explosion that is especially intended to create a crater and another nuclear explosion – that occurs not so deep, but is still fully contained because it is well-calculated as NOT to reach the earth's surface and so NOT to produce any crater.

Zeman: – exactly as it happened in the case of Chagan test where a 140kt nuke buried 200 meters deep created after the blast a crater of 400 meters in diameter and 100 meters deep. Similar thing would inevitably happen at WTC site if a 150kt nuke would explode there just 77 meters deep.

Khalezov: This one was addressed shortly before. See my answer above. I don't want to repeat myself.

Zeman: [here Mr Zeman continues to debunk my “theory” by jumping at my quotation: “Damaged” and “crushed” zones will not be exactly round in the latter case. They would be rather elliptic - with their longer ends directed upwards - comparable with an egg] Yeah, but actually the egg shape would be upside down, because the cavity after the blast will expand almost only upwards, because a rock – either solid or liquid - is almost incompressible and only way where the cavity could expand - if we respect the laws of physics - is in the direction of the lowest resistance – so the cavity will expand upwards, eventually reaching the surface and blow all the rock in its way aside. I made a sketch:

<- this is the sketch by Mr Zeman

The picture Khalezov is drawing by the „egg shape facing upwards with its sharper end' defies basic physics. Every shallow underground blast -either conventional or nuclear, big or small - shows the same. And this again shows clearly the Khalezov doesn't have a slightest understanding of basic physics...

Khalezov: This is the cheap demagogy. I still insist that I am right. The „egged shape“ of a not so-deep underground nuclear explosion (not to be mistaken with shallow sub-surface one in soft soil) will be the other way around – its sharper end will face upwards. Since Mr Zeman and those who stand behind him apparently like anything “authoritative”, “reputable” and “renowned” I can offer them to look at this picture (which was by no means concocted by me, but merely copied from an authoritative resource known as: “The Containment of the Soviet Underground Nuclear Explosions” downloadable from a very official US web site that features .gov domain name: <http://geology.er.usgs.gov/eesteam/pdf/USGSOFR01312.pdf>)

The vertical lines labeled “B” are the post-test exploratory boreholes.

Doesn't the picture above look to you like an “egged” structure with its sharper end facing upwards? Now you can judge yourself who of the two of us is right – I or Mr Zeman.

Zeman: [here Mr Zeman continues his claim presuming that his abovementioned argument about the “egged structure” facing with its sharper end downwards has been allegedly accepted. Poor chap... He does not expect that it has been successfully debunked and the truth that the sharper end of the “egged structure” would face upwards has been just established. So, based on his false presumption Mr Zeman tried to imply that I am wrong because according to his view if the “damaged” and “crushed” zones would propagate as far as along the Twin Towers’ bodies (crushing their structures) that would automatically mean that the these “crushed” and “damaged” zones would also pulverize not only the Towers, but also ground around them] So according to this Khalezov's numbers everything around of hundreds of meters would be crushed and blown aside by the tremendous blast pressure below – but not just the building, but the ground below it of course as well. What will remain would be a smouldering crater of hundreds of meters in diameter, simimilarly as in the case of Chagan test...

Khalezov: Not so, because Mr Zeman here preferred „not to notice“ that I rejected his initial argument above about the „egged shape“ would be allegedly upside down. I still insist that the „egged shape“ must be directed by its sharper end upwards. That is why the cavity beneath will be huge, while it will reach the earth's surface by a relatively narrow diameter of a hole. Hope you understand what I mean. Just imagine an egg facing upwards with its sharper end. If you slice this egg by horizontal cuts at equal vertical intervals you will get a few rings. And each next ring will have a smaller diameter compare to the previous ring beneath it. Actually it is true even for an ideally “round” sphere, not only for an egg – because if you cut a ball in the same manner the biggest ring will be around the ball's “equator” and each next ring will be smaller and smaller and smaller in diameter. Now let's come back to the “egged structure” of the underground cavity and “crushed” and “damaged” zones around it as proposed by me. Let's say that the horizontal diameter of the underground cavity in its maximum is (for example) 95 meters. But this maximum diameter is only at the depth of 77 meters. However, at 60 meters depth its horizontal diameter is only 85 meters. And at 50 meters its horizontal diameter is only 80 meters. And at 40 meters depth its horizontal diameter is only 75 meters. And at 30 meters depths (that is close to the WTC foundations that were 27 meters below the earth's surface) its horizontal diameter is only 70 meters. And so the horizontal diameter gradually decreases towards the surface. As closer to the surface as smaller is its horizontal diameter. Upon reaching the zero-level (the surface) the horizontal diameter of the cavity will be even smaller – it will be less than the actual Twin Towers' footprint (that was only 66 by 66 meters, actually) – so such a process would not create any “smoldering craters” of huge size around the footprints of the WTC buildings as suggested by Mr Zeman. You can have an additional confirmation of what I mean if you look at the photograph above that shows the actual underground cavity under one of the WTC buildings along with clear evidence of molten rock. Look at this photo and you will see that the horizontal radius of the cavity indeed decreases towards the Earth's surface. It is clearly visible on that photo. Mr Zeman has clearly lost here again. He presumed that his former argument about the Chagan test has been allegedly accepted. But it was not accepted at the first place – it was rejected and the rejection was well-grounded. Thus anything based on that false presumption of his would be rejected by default, because Mr Zeman was not able to successfully instill his basic premise in the first place.

Zeman: [here Mr Zeman resorts to yet another “authoritative” cheating. He continues my quotation where I refer to this picture:

Dust covers an abandoned produce stand in lower Manhattan.

Photo © Aris Economopoulos / The Star-Ledger

The picture above shows an example of that fine microscopic dust that covered all over Manhattan after the WTC demolition. Many people mistakenly believed that it was allegedly “concrete dust”. No, it was not. It was "complete" dust – but mainly pulverized steel] No „pulverized steel“ was found in the WTC dust. There was found only almost pure iron which went through boiling point - in form of microspheres - which is absolutely consistent with use of vast amounts thermite. Agai, khalezov is making it up, because to my knowledge there is not a slightest proof of a „pulverized steel“ at WTC site and around.

Khalezov: I would dare to claim that Mr Zeman blatantly lies to you and he does so in a vain hope that due to your supposed gullibility you will take his claims for granted because he claims to be a “famous physicist”. I state that the WTC structural steel was pulverized in almost its entirety (especially for the shills – do not fail to notice that I used the word “a-l-m-o-s-t”). Only a minor volume of steel beams was not pulverized. What Mr Zeman tries to do here is the cheapest demagogy possible. Everyone could review videos of the Twin Towers' collapse. It is clearly seen that their tops were falling down without meeting any resistance whatsoever – as if under them were not the „pure iron“ allegedly „went through boiling point“ as claimed by Mr Zeman and Co, but rather fluffy microscopic dust of the finest degree that offered resistance not more than would air. And, in addition to this, try to look carefully at the photograph above that is the actual subject of this dispute. Don't you see that the powder which covered the fruits on that photo is clearly steel powder, judging merely by its color? Don't you know that concrete powder is white rather than grey? Don't believe me? Well. Make a small kitchen experiment. Take a piece of iron and file it using a corresponding tool into a powder. Then do the same thing with a piece of concrete. And then – compare colors of either of the two types of the powders you get against the color of dust on the disputed photo above. And you will get my point. The picture above clearly shows pulverized steel of the finest degree. While all videos that show the Twin Tower's collapse at free-fall speed clearly indicate that there was no piece of hard structure beneath the falling heavy tops of the Towers. Because otherwise all that alleged debris would considerably decrease the speed of the Towers' collapse. And after all of this Mr Zeman would dare to claim so blatantly and so “authoritatively” that the pulverized steel was “not found” in the WTC dust??? I am dying to know if it was not the steel that constituted the major part of the strange WTC dust, than what was the name of that material that was mainly found in the WTC dust by Mr Zeman's colleagues? Maybe it was “concrete” (that was practically not used at all in the Towers' bodies above the ground)? Or maybe it was the so-called “nano-thermite” that was the main component of the WTC dust? So, what was it, dear Mr Zeman, if not steel?

Zeman: silence in response...

Zeman: [here Mr Zeman continues to comment on my quotation: Despite common misconception, the WTC structures did not contain much concrete. Concrete was used only in some limited quantities to make very thin floors slabs in the Twin Towers construction] This is ridiculous, in fact there were vast amounts of concrete in WTC towers, mainly in the floor slabs, which were indeed relatively thin but still 10 inch=25cm thick see: <http://911research.wtc7.net/wtc/arch/floors.html> which means only in this floor slabs there was amount of concrete in order of many tens of thousands cubic meters of concrete in each of the towers.

Khalezov: This is the cheap demagogy again. I did not say that there were „no concrete“ at all in the Twin Towers used. I only said that those shills who intentionally exaggerate the alleged „importance“ of the pulverization of concrete do it on purpose – in doing so they want you not to pay any attention to the fact of the pulverization of steel. I did not mean anything further than that. Yes, concrete (in limited quantities) was indeed used in the 25-cm thin (or “25-cm thick” – depending on your perception of the thickness) slabs that were used as floors. However, the volume of concrete used in the Towers' construction above the ground (I am not talking about concrete used below the ground – because underground it was indeed a huge volume of concrete used) was negligible compare to the volume of steel used. But the most important point that Mr Zeman and those behind him failed to notice is not that I said that concrete was not used. The most important point of mine is that I stated that those professional, full-time 9/11 folks who intentionally (again INTENTIONALLY) exaggerate an alleged importance of the pulverization of concrete do it on purpose. They want to cheat you in this way. By exaggerating for your consumption an alleged importance of the pulverization of concrete they sincerely hope that you will not notice the most important phenomenon – the pulverization of structural steel. Because the pulverization of steel is the most dangerous point to the shills. They can not explain the pulverization of the steel with their so-called “nano-thermite” theory. That is why the shills do not want you to know about the fact the structural steel was pulverized. They are ready to implement any and every possible trick to distract your attention from this seditious fact. And the above is just an illustration of their efforts in this particular field. That is what I actually mean. And that is why my claims annoyed the 9/11 shills so much. You can actually perceive the level of their exacerbation by the very spite of Mr Zeman that he is not able to hide during this argument.

Zeman: [here Mr Zeman continues my quotation: It [concrete] was not used anywhere else. The major part of the WTC Twin Towers was steel, not concrete. So this finest dust was in its major part represented by steel dust accordingly] Again -an utter nonsense, to my knowledge -based on the analysis made by multiple researchers- no trace of „pulverized steel“ was found in the WTC dust.

Khalezov: That is exactly what I mean. The fact of the pulverization of steel is the most annoying and the most dangerous point the 9/11 skills can't even bear smell of. Hence their verily heroic efforts to deny this obvious fact and to blacken the reputation of everyone who dares to voice such a thing. Actually you can feel by the very level of spite of Mr Zeman how annoyed he is with this obvious fact. But whether you like it or not, spiteful Mr Zeman, the fact remains: the WTC steel was in its major part instantly reduced to fluffy microscopic dust that allowed Towers' tops to fall down at near speed of free-fall meeting in their way down practically no resistance whatsoever. Anyone willing to educate himself more is welcome to watch various videos showing the WTC collapse in detail. Many of them are available on YouTube. Watch them and you will see the confirmation of what I say. Here is, for example, a screenshot from a video that shows one of the Twin Tower's collapse:

Actually, here the Tower's top has already collapsed to the ground, but some steel "spear" (that was just a part of the steel bearing wall at the Tower's perimeter) managed to survive for awhile, because it was missed by the falling Tower's top (since the top had tilted to a side and on its way down it managed to spare some parts of the Tower's perimeter structure). It is clearly visible here that despite the surviving steel "spear" not being reduced to dust by the falling Tower's top, it was almost immediately reduced to dust anyway, just because it was nothing else than a pile of the "dustified" matter which could not hold itself together anyway. And after all of this, Mr Zeman and those behind him would still dare to claim that "no pulverized steel" was found on ground zero? And if what you see in this picture is "not pulverized steel", then what is this? "Molten steel"? Or "pulverized concrete"? I guess it is clear to anyone that Mr Zeman has lost this argument again. But I leave a final judgment to the reader, of course.

Zeman: [here Mr Zeman completely forgot that he actually represents a school of "nano-thermitters" and not a school of "mini-nukers" and decided to indulge into an argument related to the "mini-nukes" theory. He apparently agrees to abandon his beloved "nano-thermite" theory in favor of another ridiculous theory – the theory of "mini-nukes" – just to be able to debunk my version at any cost. Even at the cost of such a temporary betrayal of his own "beliefs". It seems that Mr Zeman could agree with anything, but not with the Truth... He continues my quotation: Now as I presume the reader has already understood how strong were the Twin Towers that it was not even possible to bring them down by any conventional demolition, but only by huge underground thermonuclear explosions] Again, a ridiculous claim, the towers would surely fall down even if just a <1kt charge would be exploded in the basement – no need of 150kt which would most probably made the lower Manhattan a part of the ocean.

Khalezov: This is the cheap demagoguery again. First of all, 1 kiloton of a nuke detonated in the basement would collapse the Tower by „undercutting“ its foundation, and not by „dustifying/pulverizing“ its entire body. Thus the Tower would not fall down to its footprint. It would fall over and crash by its entire length. Don't forget that the Tower was extremely rigid. Here Mr Zeman, who actually claims to be the "famous physicist" now appeals to the potential gullibility of his listener, which is an utterly unscientific approach. Mr Zeman hopes that the gullible listener will remember Hiroshima (where a less than 20 kiloton atomic bomb was used) and will intuitively draw conclusions that the 150 kilotons blast would be indeed „enough to make Manhattan a part of the ocean“. But don't be so gullible, dear reader. Everything submits to laws of mathematics (and Physics, too). 150-kiloton nuclear explosions are not an exception – they too submit to the laws of mathematics. It has nothing to do with the „intuition“, and the shameless physicists who now appeal to your „intuition“, (read: to your gullibility) know this fact very well. This cheap trick will not work here. The 150 kiloton nuclear explosion detonated in granite rock will leave a final secondary (again especially for the skills „FINAL, SECONDARY“) size of the cavity ~100 meters in diameter. Not enough to make Manhattan a part of the ocean as claimed, but quite enough to demolish a building with a footprint of ~64x64 meters – i.e. comparable to the cavity's size (especially considering that the cavity will be „egged form with longer face facing upwards“). Mr Zeman has clearly lost this point as well.

Zeman: [here Mr Zeman comments on my quotation: First of all, to make this understanding easier, let's briefly come back to the point I started this article with: since the Twin Towers collapsed not because of "kerosene", but because of huge underground thermonuclear explosions, moreover, they collapsed in the "wrong order", and, in addition to that, the WTC-7 that was not hit by any "terrorist plane" also collapsed, we could presume that the planes were not actually needed. They were redundant, because they have no contribution whatsoever to the actual collapse of the World Trade Center. Since the planes were redundant it would be safe to presume that the 9/11 perpetration could have been performed even without any planes involved] But then the important story about the 19 hijackers with the boxcutters would not be an option.

Khalezov: I don't understand what Mr Zeman is trying to say here. In order to be able to defend yourself from an accusation, you must be able to understand the accusation. This is a universal judicial principle: the prosecutor has a duty to prepare the charges in such a manner that the defendant will understand them. Here the indictment is obscure and even after trying hard to understand it on several attempts I could not do so. Since I could not get the point of Mr Zeman I can't address it. Sorry. What "hijackers", anyway?

Zeman: [here Mr Zeman comments on my quotation: Many researches exist now on the Internet (especially famous video presentations "September clues" and "FOXED OUT" available on YouTube) that include analyzing of various contemporary 9/11 footage showing the "planes" and proving in the most satisfactory manner that the "planes" were merely digital.] Even throughout the 9/11 truth community this claims are considered ridiculous by vast majority of the people.

Khalezov: I have no doubt. This particular point is true. The shills who run all these so-called „truthing“ communities and their zombied followers incapable of critical thinking indeed consider these claims ridiculous (and yet, Mr Zeman did not dare to state that these claims are considered ridiculous by 100% of the 9/11 truthers – he was rather careful to use the term „vast majority“ instead). However, the Truth will reach more and more normal people capable of critical thinking and these people will make their own conclusions, independent of the shills and their zombied flocks. So, let's wait and see what will happen when the general public, at last, will wake up.

Zeman: ... actually the Boeing 767 is not made from aluminium, but from its very strong alloys like duraluminium, steel and titanium Khalezov: Thank you for this valuable clarification, dear Mr Zeman. I will add this extremely valuable info so kindly provided by you to my small luggage of personal knowledge. But I guess the passenger planes are not made from solid Wolfram or from solid depleted Uranium? Like those artillery armor-piercing shells? Those that fly to their armored targets at speeds between Mach3 and Mach4? And I guess the fact that those "armor-piercing" Boeings 767 are indeed made from "very strong alloys like duraluminium, steel and titanium" does not automatically mean that those classical anti-tank rounds are too made from similar "very strong alloys" such as "duraluminium, steel and titanium"? I could only wonder why those stupid military men want their anti-tank rounds to be made from Tungsten or from depleted Uranium and not from duraluminium-steel-titanium? I think those silly military folks would save a lot of energy lifting and carrying duraluminium anti-tank rounds instead of overstraining themselves by lifting and carrying heavy ones made from depleted Uranium?

Zeman: [here Mr Zeman continues my quotation: Some people, understandably, could ask this question: since the planes, even though aluminum made, were flying at almost 500 mph, due to their tremendous mass and speed they had enough kinetic energy to penetrate the Twin Towers even if the Twin Towers were made of steel.] Exactly this is true and can be quite easily calculated.

Khalezov: That is exactly what scientists who appeal to the gullibility of the man on the street, in disguise of appealing to his „intuition“, try to do. But it will not work. Especially if you remember my illustrative sample – that a fly could never penetrate a swatter irrespectively of how fast it flies towards the swatter. Because it is the same physics as if you hit the stationary fly with the moving swatter – you will always flatten the fly and it does not matter how fast will be the movement of your swatter: 1 meter per second or 1 mile per second. The gullibility in disguise of the "intuition" should not be exploited in such a shameless manner as attempted here by the "famous physicist" Mr Zeman.

Zeman: [here Mr Zeman tries to debunk my claims that the thickness of the WTC steel perimeter columns was comparable with the front armor of the WWII tanks] No, it definitely wasn't thick as the front armor of the tank. Actually throughout the floors where the planes have hit the towers the thickness of the walls of the steel perimeter columns facing outwards was just 0,25 of inch and even in the lowest parts of the towers it was just 0,875 inch. See: <http://911research.wtc7.net/wtc/arch/perimeter.html>

Khalezov: I visited the page mentioned by Mr Zeman and found out that the columns' thickness near the „impact“ spot was 2.5 inches, not 0.25 inch as Mr Zeman claims. (In addition, it was mentioned on the same page that it was 59 perimeter columns in each façade of the Twin Towers, and not 60 as claimed by Mr Zeman somewhere above).

Zeman: If a tank would be armored by 0.25 inch thick structural steel it would be penetrable by sniper rifle....

Khalezov: That is exactly why the tank is armored by 2.5 inch thick armor, and not by 0.25 inch thick one as claimed by our dear Mr Zeman.

Zeman: This again shows Khalezov has no clue about the actual facts about the WTC structure.

Khalezov: I don't need to have any clue about the actual facts of the WTC structure, because I am not an architect in general and not the WTC's architect in particular (though it seems I know even more than certain people who think they are professional architects, as you can see from this argument). However, I have a clue about the in-built WTC emergency nuclear demolition scheme. The existence of which I got to know from my former military service. Besides, I have a clue in regard to the pre-9/11 definition of „ground zero“.

Zeman: [here Mr Zeman comments on my quotation: Many people who at first did not pay any close attention to the actual Twin Towers' construction and thought first that outer façades of the Twin Towers were simply made from huge glass panes alone (which would, understandably, allow planes to break in) later, to their utter dismay, found out that the Twin Towers in reality were made of some thick steel columns – not different from its steel core columns] Not different? Again, the Khalezov knows apparently nothing about the WTC structure.
